Debates in Committee of the Whole on

BILL OF RIGHTS

(Article I)

Chairman: CHARLES H. SILVA

JUNE 1, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: The committee will come to order. The subject at hand is Standing Committee Report No. 20. What is the pleasure of the committee? Will the chairman of the Committee on the Bill of Rights care to proceed at this time to explain the report to the Convention?

MIZUHA: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Mizuha is recognized by the Chair.

MIZUHA: I'm not going to take too much time. I believe it is proper at this time, with deference to all the attorneys in the Convention here, that it is well for us to review the thoughts of our Founding Fathers at the time they established the Federal Constitution. At that time there were 13 colonies, who were afraid of a strong central government, and because of their fear of the central government overrunning the rights of the people in the states, they drew up a list of prohibitions against the Federal Government which was incorporated into the Bill of Rights, the first ten Amendments of the Constitution. And we must be keeping that in mind as we discuss our Bill of Rights at this time; that the Bill of Rights of the Federal Constitution was a prohibition against the Federal Government; and the 13 colonies when they organized themselves into states had their own Bill of Rights which was a prohibition against the state government. We in Hawaii, over the past 50 years, had our Organic Act which served as our Constitution, but all the prohibitions against the Federal Government listed in the ten Amendments of the Constitution were prohibitions against the government of the Territory of Hawaii.

We have often heard the remark made that why should we have a Constitution enumerating certain rights? The reason is that when we become a state it must be written into our State Constitution certain prohibitions against state actions in behalf of the people. Over the years the Federal Government has found that it must limit state action, and as a result of that, after the Civil War we had three basic amendments, the Thirteenth Amendment, the Fourteenth Amendment, and the Fifteenth Amendment. The Thirteenth Amendment, as you know, abolished slavery. The Fourteenth Amendment contains three basic prohibitions against state action. First of all, that the rights and privileges of the citizens of the various states shall never be abridged by the state; second, that life, liberty and property shall not be taken away without due process of law by the state; and third, that no state shall deny equal protection of the laws. Then we come to the Fifteenth Amendment, which states that no person shall be denied the right to vote because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

With that background, your Committee on the Bill of Rights endeavored to write into the Constitution of the future State of Hawaii certain rights which would accrue to all of the people of Hawaii, and they are presented to you in Committee Proposals No. 3* and No. 4.

*For draft of CP No. 3 here under discussion, see Appendix.

At the outset it is proper for the spokesman of the committee to say that if there is any argument as to form or style your committee is willing to acquiesce to the "supreme court," or any other court here, that the Style Committee shall rewrite it, as we feel that perhaps that distinguished body will be able to present it in a form that will be satisfactory to all of our authors here. So if you have any objections on the basis of form or style, please state your objection, that it does not refer to substance at all, and then we can just have that in the record for the Style Committee to consider, and save a lot of time on argument.

Likewise there are some points here which the Committee on the Bill of Rights would like to add to the various sections and, when the time comes in the consideration of the individual sections, certain additions as suggested will be brought forth, brought before the Committee of the Whole. At this time, Mr. Chairman, in order to start the ball rolling, I move for the adoption by the Committee of the Whole of Section 1 of the Bill of Rights.

HEEN: I rise to a point of information. I note that this matter is pending on a committee proposal, together with the report upon the committee proposal. Just wondering whether or not the record shows that this committee proposal passed first reading.

CHAIRMAN: Will the Clerk -- It has passed first reading, as been informed by the Clerk. It's on second reading now, Senator.

HEEN: Very well.

MIZUHA: In order -- I withdraw that motion temporarily. I will move that the Committee of the Whole consider Committee Proposal No. 3 by individual sections.

DELEGATE: Second that motion.

NIELSEN: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair suggests that Standing Committee Report No. 3, Section 1, that that first section be discussed, then if it's immediately approved we go on to the next section. Will the members of this Convention turn to Committee Proposal No. 3, Exhibit A, Partial Committee Proposal on the Bill of Rights, Article -- Bill of Rights, Section 1. Any discussion on Section 1?

MIZUHA: I move for the adoption of Section 1.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion has been made and seconded that we adopt Section 1 of Exhibit A, Bill of Rights. Question? All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Unanimous.

We'll now go on to Section 2.

MIZUHA: I move for the adoption of Section 2, and at this time I would like to ask that the Chair recognize Delegate Larsen of the Bill of Rights Committee, who has certain thoughts to express to the delegates as a whole, and who has a proposed amendment. And I move for the adoption of Section 2.

NIELSEN: I'll second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion's been made that we adopt Section 2. Will -- Delegate Larsen is not present.

LARSEN: No, right here, right here.

CHAIRMAN: Oh. You care to have the floor, Delegate Larsen? Because after all you'll speak for yourself.

LARSEN: No, I'm speaking for the committee. Yesterday when the committee met I said I didn't want to make this amendment to Section 2 unless we had the majority of the committee with us, and the majority of the committee asked me if I would not speak for myself, but speak for the committee.

CHAIRMAN: I mean you gained the floor.

LARSEN: Why, thank you.

CHAIRMAN: Someone suggested that you be given the floor.

LARSEN: This has been discussed at some length, the question of how can we maintain rights. And the question of maintaining these rights was what we are all after. In going back over many constitutions, we called attention for instance to the early constitutions wherever rights were mentioned, and also recognized the thought that unless there were obligations with these rights they became lifeless. And the threat today was that we forget the simple principle that with rights, in order to maintain them and keep them, we must have obligations. I'll just read one of these early -- the State Constitution of Massachusetts. In three of its sections, it calls attention, but in this one that's more like Section 2 than any other, I read as follows: "Each individual in society has a right to be protected by it in the enjoyment of life, liberty, property, according to standing laws." He is obliged," in the same section, "consequently, to contribute his share to the expense of this protection, to give a service, and equivalent when necessary," and so on; and another section that tells about how he shall maintain temperance, industry and frugality for the good of the state.

In one other, I just want to mention just a report that I think you all have, but I just want to remind you how this growing tendency has been upsetting the rights which maintain freedom. In society, there are disquietingly large number of groups and people who look upon the state as a kind of fairy godmother. Rights cannot last unless people make a corresponding contribution of obligations and responsibilities on which rights must be built and maintained.

The committee, therefore, felt it would actually enhance what we mean by Section 2 on rights if we add this sentence at the end, "However, these rights cannot last unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities." And I would like to move that we have that as an amendment to Section 2.

CHAIRMAN: I would suggest -- the Chair suggests that you make the amendment and discuss the amendment after you make the amendment.

DELEGATE: I'll second that amendment.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Has the amendment been read?

HEEN: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen's recognized.

HEEN: I have a printed copy of this proposed amendment before me. "However, these rights cannot last unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities." Just wondering whether the word "endure" instead of "last" would be a preferable word. Our rights cannot endure unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities.

CHAIRMAN: Wouldn't it be a matter for the Style Committee, I mean as far as that's concerned, the word "last" and "endure"?

MIZUHA: The committee's willing to accept Senator Heen's suggestion. I believe it's a more appropriate word after consideration here and we'll defer to the Judge's recommendation.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of accepting the word "endure" in preference to the word "last" signify by saying "aye."

CASTRO: Point of information, please. This is the first time I've heard of this amendment, and I'd appreciate it if it were read again slower so I could write it down before we discuss it.

CHAIRMAN: You'd like to be recognized before you do that? The Chair recognizes Mr. Castro.

CASTRO: I'm sorry, I thought you recognized me.

MIZUHA: I shall be happy to read the amendment, as suggested. "However, these rights cannot endure unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities."

DELEGATE: Again.

MIZUHA: "However, these rights cannot endure unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities."

CHAIRMAN: The only change is the word "last." Delete the word "last" and insert in lieu thereof the word "endure."

MIZUHA: I move the previous question.

ASHFORD: I move to amend the amendment by striking out the word "However" and the comma following it.

PHILLIPS: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Well, there's a motion made to delete the word "However," and insert in lieu thereof --

MIZUHA: Will the -- Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask Miss -- delegate from Maui, a question. Isn't this a question of style?

ASHFORD: I think it is, but I also think "endure" as a substitute for "last" is a question of style.

MIZUHA: That is correct, but in order -- the delegate from fourth district did not think it was a question of style, That is why the committee did acquiesce to his suggestion. However, inasmuch as the delegate from Maui believes it is a question of style, we are willing to just acquiesce to her remarks and let the Style Committee handle the matter.

TAVARES: Before you move the previous -- before the previous question is seconded, I'd like to ask another question. It is my understanding, and if I'm wrong I'd like to be corrected, that the expression "all persons are born free from political oppression," which is a rather unusual wording for that clause, means really that they're born with the right to be free. That's the way I read it. Is that correct?

LARSEN: If I may answer. That was discussed at length, and the words "all men are born free and equal" is so obviously wrong, and what the meaning of this clause was, they are born free of political oppression, was the reason for trying to get the words into what the meaning had become. That was the reason for the change.

FONG: Taking up from there, I'd like to ask the committee why did they put the word "from political oppression"? Now, I can visualize that persons may be free from economic oppression, from social oppression, why do we restrict it just to political oppression? I'm afraid that if you put this word "political," it more or less excludes economic, social and other things.

LARSEN: Well, the committee, after considerable discussion, felt the only thing a state can promise is freedom from political oppression, and we didn't want to put in the statements that had been made so many times about being born free and equal. A child born into a drunkard's home or into a feeble-minded home is certainly not born free and equal. And the idea was to put into our State Constitution only those things that a state can be responsible for. And I think that has become the general meaning of this section.

FONG: Well, it may be the general meaning of it, but I'm afraid that by putting political oppression in here and not mentioning the other things which probably -- I feel that we should be free from economic oppression, I feel that we should be free from social oppression. Now by putting in just political oppression, I'm afraid we're limiting it a little too much. Now, what is the committee's thought on that?

LARSEN: Well, the thought, of course, was that's the only thing a state can promise. However, if you read the next, "They shall remain equal in their inherent rights," that a state can only promise certain -- a state can't promise that you're free of economic oppression.

FONG: Now if we're going to limit it just to political oppression why put it in?

LARSEN: Because that's the only thing a state can promise, and if we are free of political oppression, the other things become natural.

FONG: To me this seems like a curtailment of our rights, a curtailment of other freedoms.

LARSEN: May I ask the speaker what other things a state can promise?

PORTEUS: It can promise freedom from religious persecution.

LARSEN: That's already promised down below.

CHAIRMAN: That would be political.

LARSEN: They're not born free of religious, economic, or other oppressions; but they can be born free from political oppression. I don't believe there is anything else you can be born free of as far as the state's concerned.

MAU: I wonder if the chairman or the last delegate who spoke in behalf of the Committee of the Bill of Rights is announcing a political philosophy when he states that people may not be born free of economic oppression. As I understand it, the present national administration is charged in some quarters as sponsoring what they call the welfare state. Some of the more vigorous opponents call it the trend towards socialism. Is that thought in the minds of the members of the Committee on Bill of Rights when they explain that those of us who are citizens born in this state are only free from political oppression, and not from economic oppression?

MIZUHA: Certainly the Committee on the Bill of Rights did not have the kind of thoughts expressed by the delegate from the fifth district.

MAU: Well, then, if that is the answer to my question, why not leave out --

CHAIRMAN: Everybody born a millionaire.

MAU: Why not leave out the word, the expression "political oppression," and have it carry its general meaning as it is in the Federal Constitution?

MIZUHA: In defense of the Section 2 as it stands at the present time, I believe it was the belief of my committee that the words "political oppression" were not intended to limit it entirely to the political field. It is, if we study the section in its entirety, is a section on inherent rights, and the expression "political oppression" was inserted, and we could consider it as being mere surplusage in this statement of political -- of this section on inherent rights. Certainly the Federal Constitution has that famous phrase, "all men are born free and equal," or something to that effect, and the expression "political oppression" here was added for emphasis maybe, but primarily to show, as Delegate Larsen has expressed, that today because we are -- some of us are born in homes that are handicapped and feeble-minded and other illnesses, that perhaps we are not born free, to the general term expressed, and equal.

LEE: Mr. Chairman.

MAU: Mr. Chairman, I have not yet --

CHAIRMAN: Senator Lee.

MAU: Mr. Chairman, this is an answer to my question, I have not yet completed my --

LEE: Yes, will Delegate Mau yield to an expansion on that same point. I'd like to state that the committee was not unanimous on this particular clause, but as far as I was concerned, on several of these I had been absent, as you know, in going to Washington. I'd like to state that, however, I understand the philosophy back of this clause, which is inherent particularly in the mind of one of our delegates on the committee, Delegate Larsen, on the feeling, from a medical standpoint, from other personal standpoints, I suppose, that the idea that men are born free and equal is a fiction. However, I had pointed out to the committee that it is a philosophy that is expressed, an ideal which the U. S. Constitution has propounded and has proved to be one of the shining lights characterizing our American democracy as compared with the other nations. I, myself, can see the point raised by Delegate Fong. I think it would be a limitation. And I believe that the section on the -- on this section here on the inherent rights, which the subcommittee of the Statehood Commission had proposed, would be more satisfactory. I'd like to state that at this particular time that I believe those points raised by Delegate Fong and Delegate Mau are -- could be answered by the adoption of the clause contained in the Model Constitution.

DELEGATE: [Part of speech not on tape.] . . . free and equal, free and independent.

KELLERMAN: May I speak to that point please?

MAU: I have not quite finished my -- I wonder whether it be wise to go to another portion of it or to stick to this one sentence. Would the Chair desire to rule on that matter? It would be less confusing, I think, if we stuck to this first sentence in Section 2 of the proposal.

CHAIRMAN: Right now there's nothing before the Convention but discussions.

MAU: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: No motion has been put as yet.

MAU: That's correct. But I want to get to the Chair this thought. I have some other questions - -

WIRTZ: Point of order.

MAU: - - to ask about other sentences.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

WIRTZ: My point of order is: the motion has been put to adopt Section 2, and that motion has been amended, I mean the section has been amended by another motion. There is a motion before the house.

MAU: What is the - - If the amendment is to add a new sentence to the - -

CHAIRMAN: One motion is to delete the word "last" and add the word "endure," and another motion to amend that motion was to delete the word "however."

MAU: Well, I would like to leave it to the Chair which is the best procedure to follow, so that we won't be all confused. Shall we take up these amendments and then later on ask questions on other portions of Section 2?

CHAIRMAN: Well, what is the pleasure of the Convention?

A. TRASK: I move that we take this first sentence first and then come to the second sentence, and I ask at this time that the movant for the amendment, Doctor Larsen, defer his motion until we've first dealt with the first sentence. I do think with the other delegates who have talked that the first sentence is charged with a lot of matters that should be explained.

I for one want to know whether or not there's been any judicial determination of the word "political oppression" and its implications. We've heard from the learned doctor say and cite the Constitution from the colony of Massachusetts, but we have not heard whether there has been any judicial determination of the word "political oppression" which Delegates Fong and Mau are bothered with.

CHAIRMAN: Would Delegate Larsen desire to withdraw his motion?

MIZUHA: With the consent of the chairman I'd like to have Delegate Kellerman from the Committee on the Bill of Rights make a point here, and then the Chairman of the Committee of the Bill of Rights will make a statement which will clarify the whole situation.

CHAIRMAN: Well, the Chair will suggest that we continue as we've done. Kellerman is recognized.

KELLERMAN: I would like to speak to you just a moment on the reasoning back of changing the words "free and equal" to "free from political oppression and equal." As you all know, when the Federal Constitution was adopted, it was very largely based upon the philosophy expressed by Rousseau's Social Contract. That philosophy was based upon the premise that men lived free and individually in a totally unorganized society, in fact they did not live in a society. The world apparently in its beginning, or whatever original organization was ever created, was made up by the voluntary consent of a detached, unorganized group of individual human beings; each having his complete freedom and independence; each agreeing with each other to renounce certain of those complete freedoms and independence for the benefit of obtaining the protection and security of others in a group. The words "free and equal" relate directly to that philosophy and that premise.

But in denouncing or in giving up certain of those complete freedoms of the individual for protection and security, they were giving up politically, they were forming a political organization. They were not forming just an economic organization or a social organization. As we saw it, they were giving up certain of their - - a certain degree of their inherent rights for the greater protection and security from the group. They organized themselves politically. Therefore, we thought the Constitution itself is not an economic document, it is not a social document, it is a political document. And it declares in a political document that men are born free. It seems to me a natural conclusion that it means free politically. It is expressed in a political instrument, not in a social or economic instrument.

In order to make it clear that we felt the intention was political and also to make it clear that we do not believe that all people are as a matter of fact born free—we have seen them not born free and equal in too many circumstances—that we were simply clarifying the meaning of a general term which has been held up as an impossible statement of a dream, and very far from actuality, if you mean freedom in all respects. It was for that reason that it was defined, "freedom from political oppression," and that's what we understood in the actual fact the freedom to mean.

Now if you are adverse to putting in that definition, on the feeling that it may be misconstrued, or will not have this explanation, will not know what we're driving at, or feel that we may be taking away from a basic tenet of American political thought, I don't think the committee would feel, well I don't think they would insist upon putting it in. I don't think they feel the matter that strongly. It was an attempt to be realistic and to define the term as we saw its historical, philosophical and political background.

MIZUHA: I believe that Delegate Kellerman has expressed the philosophy of the committee. It was - - there was nothing in recommending Section 2 to change the basic, American philosophy with reference to inherent rights, and we are agreed that it's a question of style, and anything that the Style Committee wishes to bring forth with reference to this language as to what our inherent rights are, that all men are born free and equal, the committee will be willing to acquiesce to that point, and I make that point very clearly for the record, for delegates from the fifth district, both Mau, Fong and Trask, that we are not changing that basic philosophy upon which our government was founded, as to the rights of human beings. I think you should be agreed on that point.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any other delegate?

MAU: I think that the subject matter we are discussing is not just merely a matter of form or style. It goes right to the heart of a very, very important situation; of a very important provision in the Constitution of the future State of Hawaii, so that we could not very well agree with the Chairman of the Bill of Rights Committee that this phrase "political oppression" could be left to the Style Committee to change. I think it is so fundamental that this Convention must deal with it. As my understanding, the explanation made by Delegate Kellerman, the committee itself would have no particular objection if the Convention felt that if the phrase might be misinterpreted, that that clause be left out. Am I correct in that explanation?

MIZUHA: That is clear.

MAU: Is that so?

MIZUHA: That is clear.

MAU: Then I would suggest that we amend the first sentence of Section 2 to read as follows: "All persons are born free and equal in their inherent rights." Now, if that is satisfactory with the committee, I suggest that after we dispose of the motion and two amendments before the Committee of the Whole, that we go into the first sentence later. That is just a suggestion.

Now, I want to make this clear that I don't believe that the explanation made as to the effect of the Federal Constitution being purely a political document is completely correct. From all the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States they have, out of interpretation, dealt with the economic and social life of the nation. And in that respect has taken it out of the field of purely politics, and I mean science of government.

And also, as I understand, all the constitutional authorities have made the statement time and time again that the Federal Constitution is a living document, so framed that it can meet all of the changing times; and so when we go back to explanations to the time when the Federal Constitution was drafted, and to the time when they, some of the proponents at that time of the then first draft of the Constitution, in stating that it was a purely political doctrine, that philosophy has changed and broadened as we have come down through the years.

MIZUHA: Mr. Chairman, we have to answer Delegate Mau - -

MAU: Very well, I - -

MIZUHA: - - and, I believe all this delay in that matter need not be confined to speechmaking on the Federal Constitution itself. We have to answer him, and we'll have, and I ask at this time for, a short recess to prepare Section 2 for the - -

CHAIRMAN: Well, the Chair would suggest, I think the amendment that Mau suggests is only the deletion "from political oppression" and remain. Delete those words and you have "all persons are born free and equal in their inherent rights." Is that the amendment?

MAU: Yes, but we'd be happy to get together with the - -

MIZUHA: Yes, I believe that the five minute recess in order - - until - -

DELEGATE: I second the motion to recess, Mr. President.

CHAIRMAN: Recess is declared for five minutes.

(RECESS)

[Part of the debate was not taped. Delegate Heen moved to defer Section 2. A motion was made to adopt Section 3.]

ROBERTS: As I got the statements made by the previous two speakers, the meaning of the term "by the law of the land" is the same as, or indentical with, "due process of law." Would there be any objection to using the term "due process of law"? It's a question as to - - KELLERMAN: It's a matter of history largely, using the two terms. We have - - they're both taken from the Federal Constitution.

CHAIRMAN: Will you yield the Chair, Mr. Roberts, to Mrs. Kellerman?

KELLERMAN: I was answering, trying to answer Mr. Roberts' suggestion. The "law of the land" is a - - it's a historical term used in connection with that provision in other constitutions. "Due process of law" is the historical term used in the Federal Constitution in connection with the deprivation of life, liberty and property. They mean the same. I presume they could be put together, and you'd get exactly the same constitutional result. It's just a matter of style plus the historical reference. They are both terms that are used in practically every constitution.

DELEGATE: Mr. Chairman, I would - -

CHAIRMAN: If there is no amendment offered, the Chair would suggest that I put the motion. All those in favor of Section 3 as written say "aye." Contrary minded. Section 3 is passed.

DELEGATE: Of course, Mr. Chairman, that's with the understanding that the "e n" is eliminated from the final draft.

CHAIRMAN: This is for approval, only for approval. Section 3 has been approved by the committee.

BRYAN: I'll move the adoption of Section 4.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion's been made that we adopt Section 4. Open for discussion. Hearing no questions, the - - I'll put the motion. All those in favor of adopting Section 4 say "aye." Contrary minded. Section 4 is carried, unanimously.

Now proceed to Section 5.

BRYAN: Mr. Chairman.

WOOLAWAY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Bryan is recognized, he's the motion maker for this committee.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 5.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion's been made that we adopt Section 5.

AKAU: In number five here, I'd just like to say that, very briefly, there has been some discussion through the press that President Truman may possibly recall the representative of United States, the missionary, or whatever you call the person who represents us, from the Vatican. Now, in view of that, whether that means anything or not I'm not here to say, but I'm wondering, in this particular section, has there been any delineation of the church and the state? And I'd like very much for one of the members of the committee to clarify that.

MIZUHA: In answer to the delegate from the fifth district, the Section 5 incorporates the first clause of the first amendment of the Federal Constitution, and I believe the separation of the state and the church has already been clarified by decisions of the Supreme Court, and it would be well for this future State of Hawaii to follow that clarification.

LEE: I might add to that that this speaks merely to the establishment of a religion, not to the matter of separation of state from church, which is an entirely different subject.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of approving Section 5, adopting Section 5, say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried unanimously.

Section 6.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 7.

VOICE: No, no, Section 7. Section 7, Mr. Chairman.

MIZUHA: Section 7, Section 7.

DELEGATE: I second the motion to adopt Section 7.

TAVARES: I -- this went so fast on the last section, I didn't get a chance to speak. I do not want to be understood --

CHAIRMAN: On Section 6?

TAVARES: On the religion. I do not want to be understood, and I don't want this Convention to be understood as agreeing with the last speaker that it does not provide for the separation of church and state. I believe that's exactly what it does, and I don't think it should go down in the record unchallenged.

CHAIRMAN: Well, I think that was pointed out by the chairman of our committee.

MIZUHA: Definitely, we -- I believe the committee agrees with the point of view of delegate from the fourth district. The Supreme Court in its interpretation on all matters pertaining to religion has definitely, in interpreting the first clause of the first amendment, has brought that out in all of its decisions.

CHAIRMAN: It's not before the house, it's Section 7.

MIZUHA: Section 7.

CHAIRMAN: We now proceed with Section 7, No --

MIZUHA: Section 6 will come up tomorrow. Section 6 will come up tomorrow, inasmuch as it hasn't laid on the table for four days on Committee Proposal No. 4.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of adoption of Section 7 say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried unanimously.

BRYAN: If I may, I move the adoption of Section 8.

DOWSON: I second the motion to adopt Section 8.

CHAIRMAN: Motion's been made and seconded that we adopt Section 8. Now open for discussion. Hearing no discussion, the Chair will have to put the motion. All those in favor of adopting Section 8 say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried unanimously.

BRYAN: It's my pleasure to move for the adoption of Section 9.

DOWSON: I second the motion to adopt Section 9.

CHAIRMAN: Same motion, same second. All those in favor of --

MIZUHA: I would like to call on the delegate from the fourth district. A question was raised as to whether Section 9 would provide for prosecution of a felony by information, as it is now in the Territory of Hawaii. Delegate -- I would like to ask the Chairman to recognize Delegate Heen.

HEEN: I have grave doubts that you can prosecute a person by information, except in cases involving misdemeanors. I would like to have this -- action on this deferred until later.

DELEGATE: Second it.

HEEN: I think some thoughts really should be given to this particular section. I so move that action upon this section be deferred until later in the calendar.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

A. TRASK: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: All those in --

A. TRASK: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Speaking on the deferment?

A. TRASK: No.

CHAIRMAN: All those to have it deferred later on in the calendar say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

MIZUHA: May I make a statement with reference to Section 9? Section 9 is -- CHAIRMAN: Section 9 has been deferred to later on in the calendar.

MIZUHA: Yes, but, just a -- with the permission of the Chairman, in order -- the reasons for deferment.

CHAIRMAN: You're out of order, unless you would like to go on to Section 10.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule that --

A. TRASK: Mr. Chairman. I would like to have --

CHAIRMAN: -- Section 9 has been deferred.

A. TRASK: I would like to have a reconsideration of Section 8. There is a recent decision of the Supreme Court --

CHAIRMAN: You'll have to move for reconsideration first --

A. TRASK: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: -- and after it's been considered then you can discuss.

A. TRASK: Yes, I'd like to move for reconsideration of Section 8 at this time.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

DELEGATE: Don't you think we should go through it and get as many of these sections okayed, and then go back for any reconsiderations so we'll --

CHAIRMAN: I'll have to put the motion as put to the Chair. The motion has been made that we reconsider our action on Section 8. All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. The ayes have it. Section 8 is now open for discussion.

A. TRASK: There has been just recently what appears to be a reversal in the historic stand of the Supreme Court with respect to this case. It involves a question of search and seizures, and whereby a person need not have probable cause to even get a search warrant before a search is made. I would like -- like the request made by Senator Heen, to have Section 8 deferred, if you please.

BRYAN: I think that the reason that our rules call for this delay on the table for four days is to preclude any necessity for deferment when it comes up for the Committee of the Whole. I would ask the delegates in the future to --

CHAIRMAN: The deferment is only to later on in the calendar, is what you asked, the deferment?

A. TRASK: Yes. Deferred in the same manner that Section 9 has been deferred on the motion of Delegate Heen from the fourth district.

CHAIRMAN: Later on in the same day.

MIZUHA: Again I would like to speak to Section 8 and Section 9. Both sections were taken from the Federal Constitution and if incorporated in the State Constitution will naturally follow decisions of the Federal Supreme Court. Now - -

A. TRASK: Will the - -

MIZUHA: Now, if it is the desire of the delegates here to change the wording in the Supreme Court, in our - - the wording in the Federal Constitution to our State Constitution and then proceed from that matter, well it will take a long line of judicial decisions in order to settle the question of search and seizures and what is covered in Section 9. That is why I believe, and I think the committee believes so, that if we follow the Federal Constitution as far as the State of Hawaii is concerned, then we will not run into the kind of difficulty that will be involved in our courts for a long, long time.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair recognizes the fact. The Chair feels that since deferment has been asked on both of these sections, in all probability it will be accepted in its entirety, but for the courtesy of the members of this Convention who asked for deferment, that we extend the courtesy to them. Section 8 has been asked for deferment until later on in the calendar. All those in favor of having it deferred until later on in the calendar say "aye." Contrary minded.

We'll now go on to Section 10 - - 11.

VOICE: Section 11.

CHAIRMAN: Section 11.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 11 as written.

DOWSON: I move - - I second the motion for the adoption of Section 11.

CHAIRMAN: Same motion, same second.

MIZUHA: With reference to Section 11, we refer to judicial circuits. Of course that will be changed by the Style Committee perhaps to conform with anything that the Judiciary Committee reports out with reference to judicial circuits or districts here in the future State of Hawaii.

CHAIRMAN: Any questions on Section 11? All those in favor of Section 11 say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried unanimously. Section 12.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 12.

DOWSON: Mr. Chairman. I - -

CHAIRMAN: Same motion, same second. All those in - -

DOWSON: I second the motion to adopt Section 12.

CHAIRMAN: Any question on Section 12? Hearing no question, all those in favor of Section 12 - -

MAU: I just want to inquire of the chairman whether this is - - this language used is the same as in the Federal Constitution.

MIZUHA: If you will read the report, Delegate Mau, on page two of our committee report, it says in Section 12, "incorporates the eighth amendment of the Federal Constitution, with an additional sentence with reference to the detention of witnesses." And that is why we have committee reports.

FUKUSHIMA: I don't believe the committee report is too clear. It says - - the only thing it says about 12 is "incorporates the eighth amendment of the Federal Constitution, with an additional sentence with reference to the detention of witnesses." I would like to know - -

CHAIRMAN: Would you care to have that sentence explained to you, the additional sentences?

FUKUSHIMA: Yes. I would like to know whether that was inserted there to take care of the 48-hour law that we have at the present time.

MIZUHA: No. The 48-hour law on the law of arrests was the subject of several proposals introduced by Delegates Trask and Trask, and at that time the committee voted that it was a legislative matter. However, it also voted that the committee recognized that there were several instances where the law was abused, and perhaps this statutory law of arrest of the Territory, if we become a state, should be revised, and has so incorporated in this report, the last report.

A. TRASK: I'd like to have an explanation of that second sentence of Section 12, quote: "Witnesses shall not be unreasonably detained or confined." Now, why has the committee deemed that this second sentence was necessary?

MIZUHA: I would not like to be a one-man supreme court on the question here, but the unreasonable detention of witnesses specifically refers to witnesses who are picked up with - - in connection with a felony and are brought down to the police station and held there for a long time and then, with the promise on the part of the police department to go easy with them and so forth, they are finally released. And that is also associated with the law of arrest in Hawaii. You know you can arrest them for 48 hours on mere suspicion with reference to a crime. If a man is a witness to the crime, I - - the committee believes that he should not be kept at the police station for 24 hours, 12 hours, or 20 hours for that matter, under our law of arrest. And this is a recourse for such witnesses to bring action on whatever the legislature will see fit with reference to statutory laws on any course of action they may have if they are unreasonably detained or confined. Of course, our word "unreasonable" is subject to definition by our courts, and we do not attempt at this time to write that definition in the Constitution.

A. TRASK: I'd like at this time to have Section - - that second sentence, "Witnesses shall not be unreasonably detained or confined" of Section 12 stricken. And my reason for that is just plainly this. According to our law, a witness, as defined in our statute, is a person who is called to give testimony either for or - - for the plaintiff or for the defendant, or for the government or for the defendant in a criminal case. He has the right to refuse to come unless his mileage or money is paid to him at the time he is served with papers. This reference that the chairman of the committee gives is a type of securing evidence which is not sanctioned at all and is no part of the law of the land at all. The policemen have exercised their right of bringing people in, but people should get a good attorney and sue the police department. But that has no part in the Constitution as such. Counsel is referring perhaps to an honored practice on the island of Kauai, but as far as I know we don't have that in Honolulu much.

The question, therefore, is a substantial one of witnesses as defined by our law, which is "a person called," and he must be paid and he can defy the police or any other authority. So I do not see where this is pertinent.

The second reason is this: by having a witness who is -- who responds to a subpoena after he is paid, he comes to court. If you're going to leave that section in, that he's not unreasonably detained. "Unreasonably detained" may be considered from many angles. He may be wanted -- want to get married the next day. If he's going to be called in a suit that may reasonably go over three or four months, his marriage would have to be detained. I think that's unreasonable. Now, that's from the witness' standpoint.

From the litigant's standpoint, some cases may be -- may have interference with many other things. A juror, or several jurors, may be ill; the judge may be ill; counsel may be ill; the defendant may be ill. Now, what is unreasonable? You will be throwing a very unreasonable sentence, as I see it, into a very, very important part of the Constitution, which has to do with the question of his trial, with the question of detention, with the question of bail, with the question of fines. I think, therefore, that it has no, no, no reason to be in, and I renew my motion that the second sentence be stricken.

HEEN: I rise to a point of information. I'm wondering just what was intended by this sentence. Was it intended to apply to criminal cases where as I observed in other jurisdictions, witnesses have been arrested and detained, held for criminal cases?

CHAIRMAN: That's right. Felonies, misdemeanors.

HEEN: I don't think this was intended or is intended for civil cases at all.

MIZUHA: That is correct.

HEEN: By having it in the Constitution in this language, it implies that a witness may be imprisoned or kept in jail in order to secure his appearance, especially in criminal cases. Otherwise, you may lose a witness who leaves the jurisdiction and you cannot prosecute a person who is accused of crime.

MIZUHA: The last sentence here, it started off with the first sentence with reference to excessive bail, and we think of bail in terms of all criminal offenses. Delegate from the fifth district has raised a fine point. Perhaps that is a statutory matter that should be covered. However, it was in line with his thinking with reference to other matters, with reference to our laws of arrest and detention, that this sentence crept into the section.

There was also the thought that some of our criminal -- witnesses were confined together with criminals and the objection was raised to the practice on the part of the police to place them in cells with other criminals when they were not criminals themselves. I believe the Territory at the present time has a statute where witnesses in capital cases can be detained. I may be wrong on that point. Maybe some of the practicing attorneys here in town can verify that situation or that section in our law where witnesses in capital cases can be detained.

A. TRASK: I'd like to supply that bit of information. Many years ago, I think it was 1865, one of the early statutes was, there --

CHAIRMAN: I don't remember that far.

A. TRASK: -- shall be no writ ne exeat. Ne exeat means that you shall not detain any person for any trial, criminal or civil, as Judge Heen has suggested. That is a distinctive situation. If the committee, I think with reference to that principle of ne exeat being the state shall not detain, or any person has -- shall not have the power to detain any other person for any litigation. I think we should defer action on Section 2 until your committee would consider that collateral important right, together with Section 12. And so, I would move, therefore, perhaps at this time, in view of the remarks of the chairman, to defer action on Section 12.

ASHFORD: May I state my view of the writ --

CHAIRMAN: You may proceed.

ASHFORD: -- of ne exeat? The writ is ne exeat regno, and it used to be in existence here. It was forbidden by our Organic Act. That writ was not to detain witnesses, it was to forbid a man from leaving the realm.

CHAIRMAN: Senator Heen is recognized.

HEEN: We do have in the statute a provision which reads, "The Attorney General or other prosecuting officer may require of any judge of a court of record, at chambers, that witnesses material for the prosecution of any criminal indictment preferred, or about to be preferred, be bound by recognizance to appear and testify at the trial of such indictment, or that such witnesses be committed to jail for that purpose, and it shall be lawful for the judge so applied to, to make such order."

MIZUHA: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN: All the discussion? The Chair will now put the motion. Shall Section 12 be adopted as written by the committee?

HEEN: I think, for the purpose of clarity, that this sentence might be amended to read "Witnesses in criminal cases shall not be unreasonably detained or confined."

CHAIRMAN: Then probably deferment is in order, if someone second the motion for deferment, we'll be glad --

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion has been made to defer this section till later on in the calendar. All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

Now proceed to Section 13.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 6 -- 13 as written.

DOWSON: I second the motion to adopt --

CHAIRMAN: The motion, same motion, same second.

DOWSON: -- Section 13 as written.

CHAIRMAN: Section 13 is now open for discussion. Hearing no question, all those in favor of adopting Section 13 as written by the committee, say "aye."

ASHFORD: I have a question there. Why should we put in the provision, "and a reasonable amount of the property of individuals may be exempted from seizure or sale for payment of any debts or liabilities."

CHAIRMAN: To keep it from going broke.

ASHFORD: Isn't that properly a legislative matter, solely?

MIZUHA: Well, that is a reason why it was inserted for the -- as a basis for legislation that will exempt a certain amount of property from seizure. I believe there are states in the Union even at the present time that provide for imprisonment for debt and, likewise, it was felt that if a man had a judgment against him, he should have the kind of exemption continued as he has under present statutory law. And that would be the basis for this provision.

ASHFORD: Mr. - -

KAUHANE: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: She still has the floor, she just asked a question.

ASHFORD: May I call to the attention of the chairman of the Bill of Rights Committee that it is just an authorization, an authorization which would exist without its expression. In other words, a reasonable amount of the property of individuals may be exempted from seizure and sale. And is it not true that it could be exempted from seizure or sale without writing that into the Constitution?

MIZUHA: I don't believe so. I may be wrong. Probably if it was not so stated in the Constitution, the legislature might go ahead and make all property subject for attachment for the payment of debts. If the states in the Union, as we know, can provide for imprisonment of debts, certainly I believe in those states there's no exemption at all. And this is a constitutional basis for legislation. And I believe provision in the Constitution here would be a safeguard from any future legislatures from going astray. Of course, this is not a mandatory provision at all, but the provision as written would serve the basis for legislation to that effect.

KAUHANE: I'd like to ask the committee a question. Whether Section 13 protects an individual who appears before the divorce court and is ordered by the court to pay an alimony? Upon his refusal to pay an alimony, which I contend is a debt that he has to pay, the court then issues a contempt proceeding and sends the man to imprisonment for failing to pay a debt which is legally termed an alimony. Whether this section protects the individual?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair agrees with you. The Chair feels that in divorce cases a man is allowed to hang on to his shirt.

MIZUHA: The question was asked of the delegate from Maui, Judge Wirtz, the question raised by delegate from the fifth district. I believe we discussed that in the committee with you, at that time.

DELEGATE: A ruling from the bench.

KAUHANE: I couldn't understand the speaker, whatever he said was only heard by himself, and those who are around him. But I'd like to be enlightened as to the statement he made with reference to my request for an answer, whether the individual is being protected under divorce proceedings where he has to pay a legally termed debt classified as alimony. And I also feel that if and when he refuse - - fails to pay such alimony or debt, his property may be seized and the court shall issue such order of seizure of his property for failing to pay a legal termed debt under the definition of alimony, and his property is put up for sale for the payment of such debt.

TAVARES: I don't think that the question of a contempt proceeding to enforce payment of alimony is usually covered by this type of provision. In fact, I know it isn't. The theory of the contempt proceeding in a divorce matter is this: that married people have certain obligations to the family which it's in the interest of the state to protect and preserve and enforce. And that when people go into the marriage relationship, they cannot escape those - - some of those responsibilities by getting a divorce. And so when a man is required to pay alimony and doesn't pay it, he goes before the court and the question is not only whether he shall or can - - shall or shall not pay, but whether he can pay and refuses to do so unreasonably. And that is always the question before the divorce court.

Because that social obligation that he assumes from marriage is so great, so important to the state, that it has to be taken care of in a special manner. And it's not considered a debt, it is an order of the court, which he - - if he doesn't pay, he doesn't - - can't be punished for, unless he unreasonably refuses to do so. And if he does, and it's taken up on appeal and the Supreme Court finds that the court was wrong in saying that he could pay and refused unreasonably to do so, then it's reversed. It has no relationship to this type of provision, and I don't think that should be affected in any way.

SHIMAMURA: The courts have actually construed such a section, and have held that such a provision is not a prohibition against the court's imposition of a fine or imprisonment for contempt. However, I believe for clarity's sake that the committee report should include a statement to that effect, that it is not intended that this section shall prohibit imprisonment on contempt.

CHAIRMAN: Is that in your report?

MIZUHA: I believe the committee report originally stated that it was not intended to prevent imprisonment for contempt of court.

ANTHONY: As far as I am aware, there is only one state in the Union that has imprisonment for debt. Am I correct in that, Mr. Mizuha?

MIZUHA: I am - -

ANTHONY: Massachusetts.

MIZUHA: No, New Hampshire, I believe, is the state that has imprisonment for debt.

CHAIRMAN: Well, whatever it is, it's just one state.

ANTHONY: However, I agree with the delegate from Molokai in regard to her statement as to the inclusion of what would more appropriately be a rightful subject of legislation. Most states have a statutory provision for exemption against execution - - from execution of certain property. It arose chiefly in connection with the homestead laws. You'll find throughout the Union, particularly in the West, that homesteads are exempt. Now, it seems to me that we have never grown up in the tradition of homesteads such as they know them in the West, and we are perfectly safe in letting to the legislature the preservation of existing exemptions.

In other words, this particular language: "A reasonable amount of the property of individuals may be exempted from seizure or sale for the payment of any debts or liabilities," that I am quite sure is not necessary to deposit a grant of legislative power in the legislature to make such an exemption. Therefore, it seems to me that if the Convention wants to continue the prohibition against the imprisonment for debt, the section might very well end with the word "debt," putting a period after "debt." The legislature would then be free, as it is under existing law, to make such exemptions as it may choose, limiting garnishments, limiting the amount of attachment, providing that household furniture will be exempt. I don't think that this adds a thing to it, and it may result in some confusion.

CHAIRMAN: You ask for deferment that later on you may make the proper amendment?

ANTHONY: I would like to -- I would move that Section 13 be amended to read as follows: "There shall be no imprisonment for debt," eliminating the next two sentences and a half.

DELEGATE: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion's been made and seconded that the remaining -- "There shall be no imprisonment for debt;" the remaining sentence, following sentence be deleted. All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded.

Since there is some doubt in the Chair's opinion as to this amendment, I would suggest that deferment of this section be made to later on, and that the proper amendment be drawn for discussion by the Committee of the Whole.

MAU: So moved, so moved, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of having this section deferred till later on in the calendar say "aye." Contrary minded. The motion has been made. Carried. Deferred.

We'll now proceed to Section 14.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 14.

DOWSON: I second the motion to adopt --

CHAIRMAN: Same motion, same second.

DOWSON: -- Section 14.

MIZUHA: May I make an explanation of Section 14 --

CHAIRMAN: You may proceed.

MIZUHA: -- and the recommendation from the office of the Attorney General with reference to Section 14. The Attorney General's office has recommended that we eliminate the second clause of Section 14: "Nor shall the laws or the execution of the laws be suspended." They were afraid that in times of emergency, for instance, if there was the bubonic plague here in Honolulu, and the governor and the legislature ordered the people out of the district, and when the time came for them to return, the governor could suspend the law to enable them to return to a particular district; this would prohibit him from doing so. And I believe after discussion with the office there that it could be deleted from this section without any difficulty and without encroaching upon the intent of the writ of habeas corpus.

AKAU: I have read the report of the committee on Section 14, stating that it comes from the Federal Constitution, Section 9, Article 1. Now then, the way it's worded here, does this recognize or not recognize the right of a military government to impose military government or rule upon the civilian population, thus taking away the writ of habeas corpus? And then, in your last line, when you say "prescribed by the legislature," how far could the legislature go and how far would this power go?

MIZUHA: When the Attorney General raised the question as to the deletion of the second sentence, I did say at that time that we could delete the last sentence also, so that the section would read as follows: "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless in case of rebellion or invasion when the public safety requires it."

ANTHONY: I think it's essential to preserve the language that the committee has preserved, namely, "prescribed by the legislature" for this reason. Under the Federal Constitution that expression is not found, and it took 50 years to discover whether or not the executive or the legislature had the power to suspend the privilege of a writ. And it was only after Ex parte Merryman that it was found that President Lincoln did not have the power to suspend the privilege of the writ. This makes it perfectly clear that that power resides in the legislature, not in the executive.

Answering my friend in the turban on my left, this would not in any respect interfere with the power of the federal government in case of a national emergency operating under the appropriate section of the Federal Constitution to suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus by action of the Congress.

I have some doubt about the deletion of the committee's present language: "Nor shall the laws -- Nor shall the execution of the laws be suspended." You'll recall during the war period we enacted the Hawaii Defense Act, and that had a very questionable provision in it, authorizing the governor to suspend laws. Now traditionally that has been the great anathema of democratic processes. It went back to the reign of George the Third, where George the Third endeavored to and did in fact suspend acts of the Parliament. That's why that language is found in many of the constitutions, and I think we ought to go slow in eliminating that language from the committee's proposal.

I, therefore, think we should defer this until the delegates have had opportunity to consider the suggested amendments of the committee's own proposal.

MIZUHA: I presented this to the floor in deference to the office of the Attorney General. And if the delegate from the fourth district believes that this would not interfere with the kind of situation just mentioned, and prohibit the governor from acting in those cases as mentioned, in case of a dire emergency when there was a plague or something like that, where he could suspend the laws so that the people could return to a particular district, if it is his belief that this would not interfere with the governor's powers, then the committee would like to see the proposal as is. But in deference to the office of the Attorney General I thought I would -- we should present this for the delegates for consideration.

TAVARES: I believe that this section should be deferred because I think there are other angles that we ought to discuss, perhaps some of us, without taking up all the time of this Convention.

CHAIRMAN: Put in the form of a motion?

TAVARES: One of the things that occurs to me, I'd like to explain why, is this. In these days of the atom bomb it may be too late if you wait for actual invasion before you suspend the writ of a habeas corpus and do these other things. We ought to consider the other angle, too, it may be too late then. Under the Federal Constitution today, apparently there must be actual invasion or actual rebellion before you do this. Whether the danger of an atom bomb explosion or invasion here is such as to constitute invasion is an open question. I think we ought to discuss it a little further, and I move to defer.

DELEGATE: Second.

CHAIRMAN: The motion's been made and seconded for deferment. All those in favor say "aye." Carried.

We'll now proceed to Section 15.

BRYAN: It's my distinct pleasure to move the adoption of Section 16 -- 15.

DELEGATE: I'm afraid of a personal interest.

DOWSON: It is also my distinct pleasure to second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's my distinct pleasure to announce that the same motion has been made by the same members.

[Any] discussion, Section 15? All those in favor of Section 15 - -

TAVARES: I object to this railroading. This is a provision that I object to very violently. I think it's utterly unnecessary, and I have not yet been shown satisfactory authorities to the effect that under this provision we can regulate with safety or we can be sure that our present laws on regulating of firearms will be valid. I think there ought to be extended discussion and we ought to be shown this.

CHAIRMAN: Well, the Chair would like to remind the delegate that there is no railroading. The motion has been put and the Chair will have to put the motion for discussion. You care to discuss the motion, you may. The railroads of the territory have been dispensed with.

TAVARES: But, Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to be given at least about two seconds to get on our feet before the question is put.

CHAIRMAN: The proper procedure is to put the question, then you get up and get on your feet. Do you want to ask for deferment? You should ask for deferment, otherwise I'll have to put the question.

MIZUHA: Well, I think the chairman has been unfairly criticized on this matter.

CHAIRMAN: I - - well, you can have your thinking, I'll keep to my thinking.

TAVARES: Well, if I have unfairly criticized the Chair, I apologize.

CHAIRMAN: I accept your apology.

A. TRASK: Let's understand clearly. This thing, I don't say it's well greased, I think it's a slick job. But it should be done. The two militia men from Ewa over here are - - got their particular duty. Other people have got their particular duty. Lawyers, I think, are somewhat handicapped today in getting on their feet. So, let us understand, I think it's only by way of getting this thing fully - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair never asked for a vote. The Chair just put the question, and the privilege is up to any of the delegates to ask for deferment.

DELEGATE: I think there ought to be a little time, Mr. Chairman, to give the handicapped attorneys some time to get on their feet.

CHAIRMAN: Well, I see two of them on the floor, in fact 90 per cent of the time nothing but attorneys have been on the floor besides delegates, besides the other delegates, pardon me.

TAVARES: This is a serious question. It's not - - it is of great moment. We have on our books today a law requiring registration of firearms. I have asked a question. I am not sure that the provision as now worded will permit our legislature or will - - to continue such a law in effect or will not render that law unconstitutional. I have been shown some authorities which are not conclusive. And I think it's well worth considering, because I think that is a very proper and necessary law.

MIZUHA: I believe the delegate from the fourth district has raised a good point. I would like to read from the committee report on Section 15. "Section 15 incorporates the Second Amendment of the Federal Constitution. In adopting this language it was the intention of the committee that the language should not be construed as to prevent the State legislature from passing legislation imposing reasonable restrictions upon the right of the people to keep and bear arms." The committee had before it representatives of various clubs, rifle clubs, gun clubs and so forth, to express their opinions about the present registration laws of the Territory. It had before it the representatives of the Honolulu Police Department, the Attorney General's office, and the City and County Prosecutor's Office. And after careful deliberation on the subject, it felt that this provision in the State Constitution would not prevent the State legislature from passing reasonable restrictions on the right to keep and bear arms.

ANTHONY: I think the chairman of the committee is correct in that. In the case of Robertson vs. Baldwin, 165 U. S. 275 —that arose under the Federal Constitution, and an act of Congress had prohibited the carrying of concealed weapons—that was upheld as not an abridgment of the Second Amendment and I think there are many other authorities.

I think the only thing the delegate from the fourth district wants to do is wants to have sufficient time to look into the question, and satisfy himself, which I think we all should do. We shouldn't hurry this through until we are satisfied that this is a correct application of the law.

PHILLIPS: I'd like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. When you say "people" do you mean all the people or do you mean each individual in a state?

MIZUHA: Well, I believe it applies to all persons here in the territory.

PHILLIPS: To each individual or to them as a group?

MIZUHA: I did not understand the question.

PHILLIPS: Well, you say, well, "the militia," and then the - - after the comma, "the right of the people to keep and bear arms." Do you mean there the right of the individual or the right of the - -

CHAIRMAN: The individual; individual right.

PHILLIPS: - - of all individuals?

MIZUHA: All individuals.

PHILLIPS: All individuals.

CHAIRMAN: Individual rights, the Constitution is for individuals. What is the pleasure of the committee?

TAVARES: I'll be satisfied if I ask - - if perhaps get two or three more satisfactory answers in the record on this. It's my understanding that under this interpretation then, which we are to be considered as acting upon, if this amendment - - if this provision is approved the legislature can by law provide for a registration act such as we have today, at least in substance.

MIZUHA: That is correct. It was the understanding of the committee.

ANTHONY: Mr. Chairman. Just to fortify - -

CHAIRMAN: Do you yield to a - -

TAVARES: I yield.

ANTHONY: The State of Massachusetts has an elaborate statute regulating the carrying of weapons, arms. The Massachusetts Constitutional provision, Article 17, provides: "The people shall have a right to keep and to bear arms for the common defense, and as in time of peace armies are dangerous to liberty, they ought not to be maintained without the consent of the legislature, and the military power shall always be held in exact subordination to the civil authority and be governed by it." Under that constitutional provision, the Massachusetts General Court for years has maintained one of the most up-to-date statutes in regard to the registration and the carrying of firearms. I don't think there's any danger in that regard.

TAVARES: Well, Mr. Chairman, some of the authorities I have looked at say that the provision of the Federal Constitution and of many state constitutions was to be read in the light of conditions existing at the time the constitution was adopted. In those good old days, when they adopted these ancient provisions, many of which states do not even have them in their constitutions any more, the firearms were considered as the musket and the -- some other things like that, old-fashioned firearms. Today, is the word arms going to be considered that way or are we going to consider arms as machine guns and everything else? We don't -- we want to have our legislature empowered to prohibit entirely the possession of machine guns, except by government officials, police, and so forth. We want them to be able to prohibit entirely the possession of atomic weapons, and various other things. And that should be made very clear here, because it's not clear in the report as to what the word "arms" means. Does it mean we can only regulate the possession of atomic weapons or machine guns, or does it mean we can utterly prohibit those? That is not clear, and I would like to make it very clear if we vote on it that we have the right to prohibit entirely the use of that type of lethal weapons.

BRYAN: I think it would clarify the record a little bit. As I recall in the committee when we discussed this, it was pointed out that there is a federal regulation concerning automatic weapons and things of that nature that you spoke of. Also, that the committee felt in passing this that the present method of registration would be allowed, if the legislature so desired. Is that correct, Mr. Chairman?

MIZUHA: That is correct.

HEEN: In construing this particular section you might take into consideration Section 24.

CHAIRMAN: It so pleases this Convention.

HEEN: "The rights and privileges hereby secured shall not be construed to justify acts inconsistent with the peace or safety of this state." I'm wondering whether or not some thought has been given -- further thought has been given to an amendment of that Section 24 so that it might read: "The rights and privileges hereby secured shall not be construed to be absolute."

MIZUHA: That is a suggestion that was made to the chairman by the office of the Attorney General, and when we arrived at that section that recommendation was to be made, Senator Heen, and that was discussed with you previously I believe.

HEEN: That's right. I think if you use that language, "shall not be considered to be absolute" you've covered everything. In other words, you may have the right to bear arms, but that is not an absolute right, that right may be regulated by, say, the enactment of legislation prohibiting the keeping of machine guns, automatic rifles, and so forth.

CHAIRMAN: Tear gas.

TAVARES: If I am -- if I get an answer from the chairman of that committee that that is so and we are acting on that understanding, I will vote for the measure. I wanted to make it very clear because it's my understanding that the power of Congress to regulate these weapons depends somewhat on the Interstate Commerce Clause, and inside the state, intrastate, we might need that power. If the chairman says that is his understanding, I'm satisfied.

MIZUHA: That is my understanding.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair recognizes the Secretary of this Convention.

PORTEUS: Perhaps for clarity's sake, we might agree that if I'm in order, I'll make the motion, that when the Committee of the Whole report is written, that it be presented in such form as to show that it is the intent of this body to permit regulation and registration of firearms including the forbidding of the having of such weapons as bombs, machine guns and other automatic weapons of a similar nature. Now, if someone would second that motion I'm sure that we would perhaps dispose of this question.

ANTHONY: I move that the section pass on the understanding -- is that before the house?

CHAIRMAN: It's before the house.

DELEGATE: I second.

CHAIRMAN: On the approval of the -- Section 15 as approved as written by the committee. All those in favor of Section 15 as written by the committee say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried unanimously.

DELEGATE: No.

CHAIRMAN: No? You wanted to register your vote?

GILLILAND: I think that --

CHAIRMAN: Carried.

GILLILAND: -- from the reading of Section 15 that it's the purpose of everybody that joins the national guard, so he can carry arms with them. In other words, I take it from the wording here, the phraseology of this Section 15, if a man belongs to the national guard he can go around unmolested with a gun. Well, I think there should be some modification in section about that, whether or not everybody has a right or only members of the national guard have the right or who shall have the right to go around armed.

MIZUHA: I believe with reference to membership in the national guard, you are subject to military law as imposed by the national guard and they will limit the right of their men to bear arms.

SAKAKIHARA: During the 1949 session of the legislature a bill was sponsored by the Police Department of the City and County of Honolulu to regulate the possession of firearms and a method of registration of the same. Discussion was held in the Judiciary Committee of the House, finally the law was enacted. Subsequent to the enactment of that law, a judge of the court of record of this Territory made public statement in a public assembly holding that law to be unconstitutional, invalid, because it was in violation of Amendment Two of the United States Constitution, holding that the right of the people to keep and bear arms has been infringed.

Question of that nature was brought before the committee. Nevertheless, the Committee of the -- Judiciary Committee of the House felt in the interest of public welfare and a protection to the public from denying irresponsible people from bearing arms or having firearms in possession, enacted such law as the law of this Territory. It now dawns on me whether that question may not come before the courts of this Territory, any federal law to the contrary notwithstanding. I, therefore, move, Mr. Speaker, that Section 15 -- action on Section 15 be deferred.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will have to rule that Section 15 has been adopted by this Convention. But the Chair recognizes the fact that this being an informal discussion we've allowed two people to speak on the amendment, but the vote was taken - -

SAKAKIHARA: May I move that - -

CHAIRMAN: - - and I'll have to rule that the motion was put and it was carried, it was adopted unless you ask for reconsideration of that motion.

SAKAKIHARA: May I move for a reconsideration on the Committee of the Whole action on Section 15 on those grounds.

MIZUHA: May I state at this time - -

PHILLIPS: Second the motion.

MIZUHA: - - that the provisions of the first ten amendments of the Federal Constitution are only prohibitions against the federal government. If we write into the State Constitution a provision like this, it's a prohibition against the state, and we are not guided by the Second Amendment of the Federal Constitution, and if this committee, the Committee of the Whole, in its report states that it was not intended to deny the state legislature from imposing reasonable restrictions upon the right to keep and bear arms, then there is no question of unconstitutional - - unconstitutionality involved with reference to the type of legislation we have at the present time.

CHAIRMAN: The motion has been duly made and seconded to reconsider our action on Section 15. All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. The noes have it. Section 15 approved by this Conv - - by the Committee of the Whole.
We'll now proceed to Section 16.

DOWSON: Without any thought of deleting discussion, and without request from anyone, I move for the adoption of Section 16.

BRYAN: With an equally free mind, I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Same motion put in reverse. Section 16 is now open for discussion. All those - -

LARSEN: [Inaudible] but the order has been reversed.

CHAIRMAN: - - in favor of Section 16. All those in favor of Section 16 say "aye." Contrary minded. Section 16 has been approved. Carried.
Now proceed to Section 17.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 17.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion's been put in the proper order, as usual. All those in favor say - -

AKAU: I'd just like to ask a question. We state here "the military power"—would it be a little clearer for the - - for constitutional purposes 20 years hence to say "of the state"?

MIZUHA: I believe this is going to be a State Constitution and part of the Bill of Rights and we're referring to the state at all times. This [is a] question of style, if the Style Committee desires to put in the "power of the state," I believe the committee will acquiesce on that point.

A. TRASK: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Information has been asked.

A. TRASK: Is there, what provision, if any, has been made in the legislative branch, legislative committee, with respect to military power in order that - -

MIZUHA: I believe Senator - -

A. TRASK: - - the [inaudible] may be rounded?

MIZUHA: I believe the chairman of the Legislative Committee can answer that question.

CHAIRMAN: Senator Heen's recognized.

HEEN: There's no specific reference to any military power, but the proposed article on legislative power will have a provision that the legislative power shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation. Broad enough to cover everything.

ANTHONY: Point of information. What is the status - -

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

ANTHONY: What is the status of Section 15?

CHAIRMAN: Section 13 has been deferred.

ANTHONY: Fifteen?

CHAIRMAN: Fifteen? O.K. Carried.

ANTHONY: I'd like to move to reconsider. I voted to - - I'd like to move to reconsider Section 15.

DELEGATE: A move to reconsider was lost.

CHAIRMAN: The motion was made to reconsider the action of the committee - - Convention, and - -

ANTHONY: Well, at that time, I was then discussing a problem with two members of the Bill of Rights Committee, and I would like the consent of the body to - -

CHAIRMAN: Well, did you vote with those not to reconsider?

ANTHONY: I voted - -

CHAIRMAN: Well, you can reconsider.

BRYAN: Point of order. Isn't there a motion before the house?

CHAIRMAN: The only motion before the house now is that we adopt Section 17.

ANTHONY: I ask for unanimous consent to reopen.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the motion on Section 17 and ask that you extend the courtesy to the Chair and ask for reconsideration on Section 15 after 17. All those in favor of adopting Section 17 say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried. Section 17 is carried.
Now, Mr. Anthony.

ANTHONY: I ask the unanimous consent of the body to reconsider Section 15.

CHAIRMAN: You don't have to get unanimous consent.

ANTHONY: I move that that section be deleted from the proposal. The reason for it I'd like to - - unless - -

CHAIRMAN: I'll have to wait for you to ask. If you ask for reconsideration, someone'll second your motion. That'll put that motion first.

SAKAKIHARA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion has been made and seconded that we reconsider our action on Section 15. All those in favor say "aye."

ROBERTS: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Make it.

ROBERTS: I assume we had a question before on reconsideration. Can we put two questions on reconsideration on the same time after they've lost?

CHAIRMAN: The first question for reconsideration was put - -

ROBERTS: Question for the reconsideration of this section, which lost.

CHAIRMAN: - - was lost, and - -

ROBERTS: They're now making another - -

CHAIRMAN: - - anyone voting in the majority may ask for reconsideration.

ROBERTS: After a motion for reconsideration had lost prior?

CHAIRMAN: Having voted in the majority. The Chair will so rule. That's Fong, Fong, and Fong.

HEEN: Now in order to expedite matters, if there is no objection on the part of any delegate, may we reopen discussion on Section 15?

CHAIRMAN: Fifteen. All those in favor of reconsidering our action on Section 15 say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

Section 15 is now open for discussion.

ANTHONY: Thank you. Section 15 was originally incorporated in the early constitutions of the 13 states, and it found its way into the Federal Constitution at a time when there were Indians in the back yard, and people had to have rifles and muskets and whatnot in order to provide for the common defense. It has no relation to our modern conditions of living. Therefore, I think that it is an archaic provision.

Even though we do like to preserve the simplicity and the pattern of the Federal Constitution, this is one point in which I think we may well eliminate it. That would not mean that any rifle club would be prohibited, any person at all would be prohibited from bearing arms; it would simply mean that the legislature would be free in the exercise of legislative power to regulate the carrying of arms. And what harm can be done in that? We don't need them for our common defense. We've got an army and a navy and an air force that takes care of that.

It seems to me that with the ills of society such as there are today, interstate crime and local crime and machine guns and things of that nature, the legislature should be free, within reasonable limits, to pass legislation on that and this is not going to basically infringe anybody's civil liberties. If I want to keep a rifle or a shot gun, all I have to do is to go down to the police station and register it. Our legislature is not going to be silly enough to pass a law that'll prevent these duck shooters from carrying their shotguns around or anything else that is reasonable and proper. But it would afford complete legislative scope.

MAU: It may be true that we don't have Indians around here, but there're some people in this territory who believe that there are some different kind of reds under each bed in each house of the territory.

NIELSEN: I take exception with - - to some of the statements that've been made. Thirty-three states out of the 48 have the identical provision that's in the Federal Constitution. Another thing is the fact that you don't just go down and get the gun registered. The - - most policemen believe that they're the only ones that had - - should own a gun of any kind, and no one else should have any. And the proof that this is wrong is the fact that you have to go down and get a permit, subject yourself to a cross-examination as to where you're going to use this weapon, what you want to use it for, and everything else; then you have to go to the dealer, present this permit to get it, then you take it back down and it's registered. Then, until the last session, if you loaned it to a man, why, it could be taken over by the game warden or anyone else. There's all kinds of restrictions that are not reasonable.

Now, I think that our country would be a whole lot better prepared for the next war if our young men learn to shoot. We had some in the Hawaii National - - Hawaii Guards at our monitoring station [at] the volcano, and they shot holes in the roof of the ceiling just playing with their guns. Others had to be taught, and finally they had to put wires on the triggers so they couldn't play with them. Now, if our citizenry is educated to the use of weapons, we're in a whole lot of better way to defend ourselves, if they go into the army knowing something about a gun.

In addition to that, what happened in Czechoslovakia. The registration cards were all in the box, and when the communists moved in the first thing they grabbed was the registration of all the guns, and went out and took them away from the people, and they couldn't offer any resistance. I think it's only right that American citizens, the same as in all the other states in the Union, should be able to own a shotgun or a rifle, and if they want to carry it, certainly they have to get a permit. All police regulations are still in effect.

BRYAN: I'd like to speak briefly on that point. I think the reason that this is in here is because we don't want to see the legislature pass a law absolutely prohibiting the use or the ownership of firearms by the citizens. You'll find in history that it is the illegally armed minority that actually we're faced with as far as the trouble is concerned. The legally armed majority are the ones that should have the right to protect themselves and I believe that this provision gives it to them. I think lacking this it would be entirely possible for the legislature to pass a law saying that there should be no firearms in the territory, and in that case you know who will have them, the people that want to use them for lawbreaking.

I think that the law-abiding citizens of this territory are entitled to have firearms for their own protection, for sportsmanship, for target practice and so forth. That's why I would like to see this provision remain. I think that it's been so worded and, with investigation into the court action on similar provisions, it is so worded that the police will not be left with their hands tied on this subject. Regulation can be imposed.

CHAIRMAN: The original motion is still in order.

FUKUSHIMA: I'd like to speak to the retention of Section 15, also. There is this danger that we must observe. By including in our Constitution such a section, Section 15 will protect all the people from keeping and bearing arms, subject of course to reasonable restrictions. If we did not have such a section in, the legislature can very well go ahead and discriminate non-citizens from citizens. This has been attempted many and many a time. In fact in the last session of the legislature such a bill was introduced and after it was called to their attention that perhaps it may be unconstitutional, by the attorney general's office, then the bill was amended to include all persons. I feel that all aliens, all persons, regardless of whether they're citizens or aliens, should be entitled to bear arms if it is under a reasonable restriction and if it's used for sportsmanship. They desire the same type of sport as a citizen, and to prevent the legislature from enacting any type of bill of that nature, I feel that Section 15 should be well included in our Constitution.

CHAIRMAN: The original motion is still in order. The Chair will now put the question. Shall Section 15 be adopted as written by the committee?

DELEGATE: Question.

CHAIRMAN: Question. All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

MIZUHA: Mr. Chairman. I move for a five minute recess.

CHAIRMAN: Short recess has been asked for. All those in favor of a short recess say "aye." Subject to the call of the Chair. Declared.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Sergeant at Arms will please have the delegates brought before the Convention - - Committee of the Whole. Committee of the Whole come to order. We'll now proceed with Section 18.

ASHFORD: I move that Section 18 be deleted from the article.

BRYAN: Solely for the purpose of bringing it before the Convention, although I'm not in favor of the motion, I will second it.

MIZUHA: In presenting Section 18 on treason it was the intention of the committee, perhaps it wasn't clearly written into the report, that this section should be brought to the floor of the Convention, and if the delegates assembled here desire to delete same or adopt same, I believe I speak for the majority of the committee, that the committee does not have any objections.

TAVARES: Just so that the members of the Convention may know why we object to this clause, I should like to point out a few of the defects. First of all historically, the reason why this provision was adopted as shown by the history of it was that at that time under the common law of England and the statutes of England, there were 17 different acts constituting treason which were punishable by such barbarous methods, not so long before that, of hanging, drawing and quartering and so forth. And the colonists who were so horrified by those 17 acts of treason, and with that in mind, they limited the definition of treason and how treason could be proved. Actually they did not in any way limit the power of Congress to define any other acts without calling them treason. So actually even under the Federal Constitution today it is possible for Congress to pass other laws making acts that are not treason subject to the death penalty. So, therefore you are - - all you're doing is defining one crime when you have thousands of other crimes that you're not defining.

In the first place, it's illogical to just single out one crime. In the second place, remember, this thing was adopted in eighteen seventy something [sic] and was adopted with reference to the conditions then, and what has happened since? In those days you did not have atom bombs, you did not have guided missiles, you didn't have poison gas, you didn't have germ warfare. Levying war - - in order to levy war you had to actually send men to physically invade a country before there was war. So that it was quite possible and quite reasonable to wait till they got into your shore and started waging war before you could hold them guilty of treason. As this thing stands, if you adopt it, we cannot define treason against the state until somebody had landed and committed an overt act here, which may then be too late.

Secondly, it defines the punishment, or rather the proof - - the way you can prove treason in a manner that goes back to 1876 [sic] and around that time. In those days they hadn't thought of circumstantial evidence being very good. They didn't know about finger prints, they didn't know about the examination under the fluoroscope of different materials and so forth, all the different aids today that make circumstantial evidence more reliable than eye witness testimony today. If you adopt this thing, then, if somebody comes in here with an atom bomb and you find his finger prints on it, you find his clothes with it, you find his valise, you find everything there, but you don't find and nobody sees him with their own eyes, two people don't see him with their own eyes, you cannot convict him of treason. What's the sense of such a provision? Are we going to adopt a thing that's a 150 or 200 years old, a mode of proof and a definition, or are we going to take into consideration modern conditions and leave our legislature free with treason as you are leaving it free with murder and every other provision, any other crime, to define it as the people from time to time see fit. They are protected by the others, the due process clause, the jury trial, all the other safeguards we give in our Constitution, will protect those people and give them a fair trial. Why tie the hands of your legislature to the definition of one crime in a manner that won't meet the condition today.

I say the provision should go out and many states don't have it. I say it's utterly outmoded, it's utterly old-fashioned and should be dispensed with.

NIELSEN: More than half of our states have this in their constitution, thirty to be the exact number. And the latest one to put it in their new constitution is New Jersey in 1947, just three years ago. I think it's a good thing because this communist thing may develop here when we go to war with Russia; so we'll need something like this and need it quick and handy right here in the State of Hawaii. And I see that it's perfectly harmless not [sic] to have it in there, so we can take care of the situation when it develops.

KELLERMAN: I wanted to supplement Mr. Tavares' statement with respect to this clause. I don't see any need for having it in the Constitution because all the legislature has to do is to call an act by a different name—call it sedition, or criminal conspiracy and sedition—and can put any provisions in it that it sees reasonably justified to define the circumstances of a crime which otherwise would come under the definition of treason. So it's completely outmoded and it's just an artificial thing. I would agree in deleting it from the Constitution.

ANTHONY: I think what the delegate from Kona wants to safeguard against will be defeated rather than advanced by the inclusion of this section in the Constitution. As I gathered his remarks were to this effect, he wanted the legislature to be free to take care of the situation where our enemies might subvert us either covertly or openly. Now, if you have this treason provision in, it is a limitation. In other words you're doing just exactly what you don't want to do.

I should also like to point out, in addition to this being a rather old and antiquated provision, it does deal with a - - in a sphere in which the Congress, the national government is supreme. In other words treason in reality is treason against the United States. We have ample laws and we have the treason section of the Federal Constitution. We have the Smith Act, an act of Congress of unlawful conspiracies to overthrow the government of the United States. I see no occasion for including this in the Constitution, despite the fact that New Jersey as recently as 1947 has included it in the Constitution.

I might call the delegates' attention to the Massachusetts section on this which simply says "No subject ought in any case or in any time be declared guilty of treason or felony by the legislature." That's all the Massachusetts section says on it. Therefore, I agree with the previous speakers that the clause be might very well be deleted.

CHAIRMAN: The motion before the committee itself, Section 18 be deleted. All those in favor of deleting Section 18 and renumbering the rest of the sections say "aye." Contrary minded. Section 18 is now deleted. We will now renumber the rest of them I suppose and call --

Proceed to Section 21.

ANTHONY: Could we keep the same numbering for purposes of facility?

CHAIRMAN: Section 19. That's right.

ANTHONY: Could we keep the same numbering so the delegates will all know what we're talking about?

MIZUHA: That is why the sections were numbered. Section nine -- 18, 19.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section -- the section that is now numbered 19.

CHAIRMAN: Nineteen.

DOWSON: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Same motion, same second. Section 19 is open for discussion. Questions? Shall Section 19 be adopted? All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried unanimously.

Section 21.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 21 as written.

DOWSON: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Heard the motion. Open for discussion, Section 21. All those in favor of adopting Section 21 say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried unanimously.

BRYAN: I move the adoption -- [Laughter]

CHAIRMAN: I can't hear very well.

BRYAN: Little decorum please. I move the adoption of Section 22.

WOOLAWAY: Second.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Twenty-two is now open for discussion.

MIZUHA: The language in Section 22 contains the -- in the last phrase you might say "because of race, nationality, creed, or religion" may not be the kind of language that would be incorporated in other sections of the Constitution and that would be for the Style Committee to put it in its proper order. This proposal was submitted by a distinguished gentleman from the island of Hawaii and I believe he should be given an opportunity to speak in behalf of this section. Delegate Doi.

DELEGATE: Is he single or married?

DOI: I'd like to make a correction first before I proceed and that is, this proposal here was introduced by three men, all from the island of Hawaii. Two of the three men are married. I think we all agree that the statement made in Section 22 is a basic civil right of all citizens in a democracy. There has been some talk that this section should not go in the Constitution because in Hawaii there has been no abridgement of such a principle. In answer we might say that it is also the same case with freedom of speech, religion and other basic rights which we have already approved. There have been no abridgement of those rights.

I think there is, in addition to that fact, another reason why this section should go into the Constitution and that is, should we look at the fact as it exists in the world and as it exists in the United States of America. First, should we look to England, the mother country of our United States of America, we find the case of Seretse much talked about down in South Africa today. He's a Negro who is married to a white woman. There is a question of whether he should be seated as head of the Bechuanaland section of South Africa.

Then we come to America from whom we in Hawaii have borrowed our basic democratic principles, and we find that there are 25 states in the Union who have statutory provisions prohibiting the marriages -- marriage between different kinds of races. And we find in addition five states in the Union also having constitutional provisions prohibiting marriages between races. And two of those 30 states it a felony should they marry, and one makes it a gross misdemeanor.

DELEGATE: Gross cheat.

DOI: And in view of that fact, I think it is not a principle so well understood even in the democracies. And therefore I would like to see a restatement of this principle in our Constitution, not intended as an admission that this problem does exist in Hawaii, and also not intended that this is to cure an existing evil, but inserted with the intention that it is a statement of a -- affirming the present status as it exists in Hawaii. And I urge that we vote "yes" on this Section 22.

HEEN: I am just wondering whether it would be a good policy on our part to write this particular provision in the Constitution. This Constitution will go before the Congress of the United States for approval and I can see where these representatives from the southern states, senators from the southern states may not approve this provision and may not approve the entire Constitution and admit this Hawaii into the -- as a state because if they approve this Constitution then they will be approving this particular provision which is not in vogue in the southern states.

MAU: I think the elder statesman has a good point there from a practical standpoint. But I'm wondering, I understand that this provision is contained in the United Nations Charter. If that is correct, that is a national policy so far as our nation is concerned, and if that be correct, even from the practical standpoint I believe that this is one of the basic rights and should remain -- be a part of the Constitution of Hawaii. Will someone answer whether that is so?

ROBERTS: I'd like to speak in favor of the inclusion of this section in our Constitution. I believe it's fairly important that we obtain approval of the Constitution by the Congress. I think, however, there are some things that we have to take a chance on. There are some things we've got to stand for and it seems to me that the Congress, if it takes the position that they will not give us statehood because of this section, there might be some question as to whether we'd want it. I'd like to support very strongly the inclusion of this section in our Constitution.

MAU: I'd like to have my question answered. I asked for information - -

CHAIRMAN: You yielded the chair, you yielded when you sat - -

MAU: No, but I asked - -

MIZUHA: Will you state the question?

CHAIRMAN: The question was, "Will someone answer this question?" Then you sat down.

MAU: No, I didn't, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Roberts made an endeavor to answer your question.

MAU: Well, may I rise to a point of information then?

CHAIRMAN: You may.

MAU: I'd like to ask, if anybody can answer it, whether or not this provision is not in the United Nations Charter?

KAWAHARA: In answer to the question and as one of the fathers of this proposal, the answer is yes, it is. The principle is embodied in the preamble of the United Nations Charter.

CHAIRMAN: Maybe the preamble of the United Nations Charter had nothing to do with the Constitution.

ANTHONY: I think there's a good deal in what Senator Heen has said and I think we can accomplish what the proponents of the measure desire to accomplish if we include in the report a construction of Section 4. Section 4 says, "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor be denied the equal protection of the laws." Now, I don't believe that the miscegenation statutes have ever been upheld in face of an outright attack under the due process clause. And I venture the prediction that in such a case, there is a serious constitutional question as to the validity of those statutes.

Now why could not we accomplish what the proponents of the measure desire to accomplish, and with which I am in hardy accord, by having the committee, this Committee of the Whole, act upon this by deleting it, stating in the committee's report that we have never had miscegenation statutes here, we would never stand for it, and that this Convention goes on record that that would be a denial of due process of law within the meaning of the Section 4 of the Constitution. Would that not accomplish what the proponents of the measure seek to accomplish and still avoid getting us tangled up in this FEPC wrangle back in Washington?

KELLERMAN: May I answer that point please? House Bill 49 provides in part as follows: "The Constitution must be republican in form and make no distinction in civil or political rights on account of race, color or sex." It seems to me that that certainly points the picture against any discrimination, racial discrimination which of course is the essence of the miscegenation statutes.

In the second place, may I speak for my benighted brothers from the South. They are firm adherents to the principle of states' rights. If in those states they don't want to see races mixed in marriage they think it's their business, whether or not constitutional, but they would be the last, as I understand their political philosophy, to deny the people of this state the right to decide whether they want their races mixed or not. And I don't believe they would raise that question in the Senate at all. Not under states' rights. I am in favor of leaving the provision in the Constitution of Hawaii.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair recognized that fact. In Washington during the hearing Representative Larcade of Louisiana so stated that if the people of Hawaii saw fit to live the way we do here, it was our business. Leave them - - to let them live as they wanted down South and they'd leave us alone the way we wanted to live.

ASHFORD: May I call the attention of the delegates to the fact that in Section 6, which is covered by the later report and therefore is not before us, there is that provision requiring - - called for by HR 49 requiring that there shall be no distinction by reason of race, color, creed and so forth in civil - - the enjoyment of civil rights, and marriage is certainly a civil right.

A. TRASK: I would like to say that the section I think should be deleted. In the first place, it seems to infer that our life in Hawaii has more or less been ruled by a sense of miscegenation, that the races and people here have been opposed to mixed marriage, and such is not a fact. What we're concerned about writing a constitution is to seek to correct what may be a teaming misuse or misconduct or what might tend to be. We are evolving a civilization and as we all personally know, several years ago this group didn't want their children to marry into that group. We are breaking down practically all the barriers and there are none left.

What we should be also acquainted with, that this section should be read in connection with Section 2, namely second sentence: "Among these inherent and inalienable rights are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Some recent time ago Life Magazine presented quite a discussion forum on the expression, during the celebration of Jefferson's birthday last year, the question of pursuit of happiness. And one of the greatest things about that was personal life. I cannot go along with the learned counsel from Hawaii, Nelson Doi, that it's like freedom of speech. It seems to me marriage takes - - it's a dual situation. It's not only - - it's not left up to one person altogether.

I do think from the question of probably a very wise and more careful submission of this Constitution, that we should not be unaware, however rightly the lady from North Carolina says, we are aware certainly of certain forces that seeing this Section 22 there, their personal, emotional reaction may be more severe and we're not there to stop them. So I think this suggestion that there shall be no denial would raise in the minds of some people, well, there's a right - - is the marriage of the right - - the right to marry somewhat infringed in Hawaii, if not legally, at least by racial undercurrent reactions? I think we have succeeded in eliminating, and we have, and we're evolving a very happy situation. So I do not think it's necessary, even though the United Nations Constitution may have that provision. They're dealing with an utterly different situation. And so I'd like to be on the side of those who are voting to delete this provision.

LARSEN: If we're going to lose this Constitution because this sentence is in, we're going to lose it anyway for many other sentences. It seems to me here's one chance where we can show we're a little ahead of the parade, rather than behind it. Eventually all the nations and all the states, I think, will attain the United Nations Charter. But here's one place where I think we've shown by our actions that we already believe in it. It seems to be a basic right; I'm for keeping it in.

SHIMAMURA: Two speakers have referred to life, liberty and property in discussing this provision. We speak of the bonds of matrimony. I've always felt it was a surrender of liberty rather than an acquisition of it.

But joking aside, I believe that this provision is declaratory of a natural God-given right. And I think it is a very wholesome thing to have it in the Constitution.

HEEN: One part of the Bill of Rights refers to the right to own property. Now, the old view was when you marry your wife she was a piece of property and - -

CHAIRMAN: Now maybe the other way too.

HEEN: Well, I am in accord with what the delegate from Molokai stated a moment ago in Section 6. The second paragraph of that section which is in Exhibit A of Committee Report No. 24, " No person shall be denied the enjoyment of the civil rights nor be discriminated against in the exercise of the civil rights because of religious principles, race, sex, color, ancestry, or national origin." I think that particular paragraph will cover the whole situation.

DELEGATE: That's Section 2.

HOLROYDE: A point of information on the previous speaker's first statement. I wonder if he still considers that to be factual. I suggest you read paragraph 24.

HEEN: What I said, that was the old view, ancient view. Now I don't want to be misunderstood. I am heartily in accord with this particular section we are discussing at the present time. But from a matter of policy, I think if we point this out in the Constitution to those people who are against mixed marriages they might vote against the approval of this Constitution.

DELEGATE: I don't think so.

WIRTZ: I am likewise in accord with the expression stated by the last speaker and I'd like to move to defer action on Section 22 until we consider Section 6 which is in the Committee Report No. 24 and is Committee Proposal No. 4, which was slated to come up tomorrow, because I think the subject is - - can be covered by that section.

ANTHONY: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion to defer action on Section 22 until Section 6 is brought before this committee. All those in favor of that motion say "aye." Contrary minded. Still carried. Motion deferred. There's one or two yelling loudly, but it didn't carry. Section 23.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 23 as written.

WOOLAWAY: Second.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion made and seconded. Open for discussion, Section 23. No railroading at this or any time.

A. TRASK: May I ask Jack Mizuha whether or not any consideration was given with this section with relation to public sightliness and good order?

MIZUHA: Evidently, to be frank, no consideration was given with reference to public sightliness and good order as we did not know what the Committee on Health and Public Welfare will report. But if the Constitution does state that the power of the legislature will be such to pass reasonable regulations of private property in the interests of good - - of sightliness and good order, naturally the authority will be there under that provision in the Constitution and supported by this provision as well for legislative regulation of private property. The question will arise, perhaps, whether that regulation must be - - of private property must be compensated. That question is for the courts to decide on, not the Constitution.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of Section 23 say "aye."

FUKUSHIMA: I'd like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In taking up Section 23 did the committee take into consideration the question of excess condemnation?

MIZUHA: The question of excess condemnation was considered. I would like to have one of the proponents of this provision explain what the thoughts were back of this provision here and I will call on a delegate from the fourth district, the former Attorney-General Tavares.

TAVARES: I don't know whether I fully understand the - - May I have the question restated?

CHAIRMAN: You may.

TAVARES: I'm sorry.

CHAIRMAN: Fukushima.

FUKUSHIMA: In considering Section 23 I wanted to know whether the question of excess condemnation was considered.

TAVARES: I can say this. Being a member of the Committee on Taxation and Finance, the question was considered in that committee, and of course some members of that committee, including the chairman I believe of Bill of Rights Committee is in - - were members on the Taxation and Finance Committee. Now as originally proposed, this section provided for that "Private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation." The word " or damage" was pointed out to be a rather dangerous departure from the wording of the Federal Constitution and not having necessarily a very definite meaning, the states being sort of, well not fully - - the state courts not being fully agreed on the meaning of it. Therefore, the words " or damaged" were taken out and we've decided to rely - - the committee, I believe, decided to rely on the Federal Constitution's wording which is being gradually extended by interpretation of the courts to cover many of the matters which might be considered ordinarily to be covered by the word "damaged." In other words, we decided to adopt wording, or they decided to adopt wording that is, has been very well construed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Now as to question of excess condemnation, it was considered in the Taxation and Finance Committee very thoroughly and on the advice of the attorney general as I understand it, we finally deleted from the taxation and finance section all mention of excess condemnation on the theory as proposed, as stated by the attorney general that a reasonable amount of excess condemnation is implied in the general powers given the legislature, and which the legislature can confer in connection with a project, and that it was therefore not necessary to provide expressly for excess condemnation in the taxation and finance article or in the Bill of Rights. That's my understanding of what the attorney general's advice was. If I'm mistaken I wish that the chairman of the Bill of Rights Committee would correct me.

MIZUHA: That is correct. May I - -

AKAU: Excuse me. Mr. Chairman, I'm wondering in this particular section if the thinking had taken place regarding whether say a case like our recent Nuuanu-Marks case. Now then, the question wasn't of compensation with them, it was a desire not to take any compensation, not to sell the land, not to have the land condemned by the city and county. Is this something that would take care of that as -- from the constitutional point of view, or would something have to be added there?

TAVARES: It is one of the most ancient and honorable rules of government that private rights must be subordinated to the rights and needs of the public. Condemnation or eminent domain is one of those things in which private rights must yield to the public. The legislature has a reasonable discretion to determine within reasonable bounds what property and how much should be taken for a project. And I don't think you can lay down any rule other than that because I don't know how anybody can define it definitely enough to steer between exactly what's right and exactly what's wrong because no two people are going to agree on just how or where a project should go, just how much should be taken necessarily for the project and various other things. It's one of those things that has got to be left to the sound discretion of the legislature and if the legislature violates its discretion too strongly, too greatly, the courts then can be called upon to rule and prevent that. I don't think you can write down in this Constitution a rule that would take care of the objections of Mr. Marks, assuming that they are to some extent reasonably taken. And therefore I don't think that it's feasible to do anything about that situation.

HEEN: We now have a statute which provides that as follows: "and also to take such excess over that needed for such public use or public improvement in cases where small remnants would otherwise be left or where other justifiable cause necessitates such taking to protect and preserve the contemplated improvement, or public policy demands such taking in connection with such improvement."

BRYAN: Mr. Chairman.

DELEGATE: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Bryan's recognized. Let's have a civilian for a change. Bryan's recognized.

BRYAN: I think we should recognize that this is not granting a license. The provision for eminent domain and the legislative acts covering that are the license. This is the protection of the individual to make sure that that license is not exercised without compensation. Nothing more nor less.

A. TRASK: To follow up the learned judge here on his reference to the statute, I want the Convention to know that that statute is under attack, was under attack by learned counsel Joseph Hodgson, an applicant for the supreme court chief justiceship. The matter is now pending in the supreme court. Although Judge Matthewman did rule that the statute is constitutional, it was vigorously contended by Joseph Hodgson that the statute is unconstitutional.

So it becomes pertinent for some thinking on this provision with respect to this question, namely, if we do not provide for excess condemnation in the Constitution and will leave the matter up to the legislature and these statutes which probably will be reenacted as part of the law of the State of Hawaii. Should -- it would quite cause us some pain perhaps, if we did not perhaps put in the Constitution some provision with respect to excess condemnation. Of course, the Marks case in Nuuanu does present a very extraordinary situation because the road that goes through our highway, at least intended, creates a thorough cut whereby from the top to the bottom of the surface of the road it's probably a depth of 34 feet. There is no attempt, because this is a non access road, to have a road lead directly from the highway right to her property. The question here is to go down the road about a mile and a half and then create another road paved and paid for by the Territory to get to the Marks property which is way up in the sky. Now I am concerned in other words with this precise question—if we do not put a provision for excess condemnation in the Constitution and leave that only to the legislature, whether in the courts it may be successfully contended that excess condemnation is not properly covered in the Constitution. The Constitution is silent on it and therefore there is no authority for the State to condemn property which is in excess with what may be considered an ordinary condemnation proceeding.

WIRTZ: I quite agree with the speaker that we should have to provide for excess condemnation. However, I don't think the subject is properly before this Committee of the Whole. The only question that's before us is the question of Bill of Rights and that is to protect the individual property owner, and this provides that whatever method, condemnation power is given by this Constitution under appropriate section of legislative powers, that nevertheless the private owner will be compensated. And that's all this is intended to do.

TAVARES: I respectfully disagree with the delegate from Maui that this is not the appropriate place, if we are going to do it. It seems to me that regardless of whether the present statute is under attack in our courts under our Organic Act, if we adopt this provision and in the Committee of the Whole report, which I shall move we do, we state that we have not inserted a provision for excess condemnation because we believe that it is included as an incidental power of the general grant given. That will take care, it seems to me, of any doubt in the minds of the court in the future on that proposition, leaving it then to the courts to decide when the legislature goes so far in condemning excess property as to constitute taking it for something not a public purpose or some other violation of the Constitution.

LEE: I believe it's twelve o'clock now and there are several other sections. I believe this Committee of the Whole should rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again. We all got to eat. Just a question as to what's planned this afternoon or this evening or when to meet.

VOICE: Two o'clock.

PORTEUS: Mr. Chairman, I don't think it is convenient for us to meet this afternoon. As you will recall, tomorrow is the last day for the presenting of committee reports. It is my hope that you will not meet again today when you recess, which will allow the various committees to meet between now and ten o'clock tonight and try to get out their reports.

MIZUHA: As chairman of the Committee on the Bill of Rights I would like to suggest that we do rise, report progress and take leave to sit again on Monday, and I so move that we, the Committee of the Whole rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again on Monday at 9:30 a.m.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

ARASHIRO: I second the motion.

PORTEUS: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of that motion say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried. Adjourned.

JUNE 5, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: Committee of the Whole come to order. The Chair remembers correctly the last action taken up the previous meeting was Section 22 and that was deferred. It is the wishes of this committee that we proceed to Section 23. What is the wish?

DOWSON: Mr. Chairman, I move for the adoption of Section 24.

DELEGATE: Twenty-three.

DOWSON: I take that back, Section 23.

BRYAN: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion has been made and seconded that we adopt Section 23. All those in favor say "aye."

TAVARES: I would like to ask a question. I realize that some time ago there was an argument in the Committee on Bill of Rights at which some attorneys were present, and I think I attended also, in which the words -- in which this section was worked over or added. But I'm wondering if the words "peace or safety of this state" are sufficient or whether we ought to throw in an extra provision about general welfare of the state.

MIZUHA: I'm sorry to interrupt the delegate from the fourth district. We are not on Section 24, we are on Section 23.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

TAVARES: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman, the last movant mentioned 24, perhaps by an error.

CHAIRMAN: So we'll proceed with Section 23.

MAU: At the last seating of the Committee of the Whole, Section 23 was discussed rather thoroughly by the attorneys in this Convention. I'm wondering whether the opponents of this particular section care to restate their position. I think it ought to be restated before we take a vote on it.

CHAIRMAN: Well, it is their privilege and I've made -- the motion has been put and if nobody cares to express themselves, then it is the Chair's duty to put the motion. Shall Section 23 be adopted as amended? All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Section 23 is adopted.
We'll now proceed to Section 24.

BRYAN: I'd like to move for the adoption of Section 24.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Same motion, same second.

ROBERTS: I'd like to speak to Section 24, and when I complete I will move to amend the motion by striking the section. I have examined many of the Bill of Rights' sections in the states' constitutions, and I have yet to find a provision in any of them which have a clause of this type at the end to indicate that all of the provisos shall be construed in such a manner that the rights and privileges which are listed in the Bill of Rights' sections are not to be construed to justify acts inconsistent with peace or safety of the state. I agree that in the general proposals on the Bill of Rights that none of the sections are absolute, that there are no absolute rights, that rights have to have corresponding responsibilities and duties. I believe, however, that such a section does not belong in the Bill of Rights' provisos. The courts will construe each of these sections on the Bill of Rights and those constructions will differ depending upon the sections before the court.

I know, for example, that the courts, Supreme Court particularly, have already construed the concept on the right of free speech, and the court has stated, and I'm quoting: "It is a fundamental principle long established that freedom of speech in the press, which is secured by the Constitution, does not confer an absolute right to speak or publish without responsibility whatever one may choose or an unrestricted and unbridled license that gives immunity for every possible use of language and prevents the punishment of those who abuse this freedom." I believe that the purpose of that section was to prevent license, unbridled license; was to prevent the idea that these are absolute rights, and I'm in accord with that basic idea. I believe that part can be met in the amendment which is already suggested for Section 2 of the section on the Bill of Rights.
As you recall in our discussion the other day that section was deferred, but during the discussion it was indicated that a phrase be added, and I assume that that phrase may later be included: "That these rights cannot endure unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities."

MIZUHA: Mr. Chairman.

ROBERTS: I'm not through.

MIZUHA: Perhaps we can speed up matters if I concede a point to you and --

CHAIRMAN: Do you yield, Mr. Roberts?

MIZUHA: Do you yield just a minute?

ROBERTS: I yield for a question.

MIZUHA: At this time it would be proper if the Convention [sic] of the Whole pick up Section 2 as has been amended, which is before all the members of the committee, and perhaps if Section 2 is acted upon, perhaps it will facilitate the disposal of Section 24. Doctor, will the delegate of the fourth district yield to a discussion of -- deferment of Section 24 now, and taking up the consideration of Section 2 as amended?

ROBERTS: If that will facilitate the discussion, I'll be very glad to.

MIZUHA: Good.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will have to rule that if it's the wishes of the Convention to defer action, someone will have to make a motion.

MIZUHA: I so move.

CHAIRMAN: Committee of the Whole defer action on Section 24.

MIZUHA: Twenty-four, and take up Section 2.

DELEGATE: Second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion for deferment has been made. Section 24 be deferred.

ROBERTS: Well, Mr. Chairman, I assume that the deferment of Section 24 will include a discussion of Section 2 at the same time.

CHAIRMAN: Well, you can bring it up by another motion. All those in favor of deferring Section 24 say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

MIZUHA: I move for the adoption of Section 2 as amended which is before the delegates here.

DELEGATE: I'll second that motion.

ROBERTS: Would the proponent of the motion accept the word "duties" instead of the word "obligations"? I believe it's a little stronger word, and I think it accomplishes the same purpose.

WIRTZ: I rise to a point of information. On my desk I have two amended forms of Section 2 and I'd like to ask the Chair which of the amendments is now before the house?

CHAIRMAN: I think it's proper and fitting that Section 2, the section to be discussed, be read in its entirety.

MIZUHA: The Section 2 that I moved to adopt reads as follows: "All persons are by nature free and equal in their inherent and inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness and the right of acquiring and possessing property. These rights cannot endure unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities."

With reference to the question raised by Doctor -- the delegate from the fourth district on changing the word "obligations" to "duties," I see no material difference between the two words. However, "obligations" carry broader implications, and I believe it would not be too amiss to have "obligations" there instead of "duties" inasmuch as the delegate from the fourth district did concede that all of our rights are not absolute.

AKAU: I want to speak against adding, whether its duties or obligations or responsibilities. I'm not against the idea of people being responsible or having obligations as citizens. I raise the question whether this is the place in a Constitution to make this statement. It seems to me that our obligations and responsibilities, while we do assume them, are the responsibilities of the home and the school and the church and not be worded in and put in a Constitution.

A second thought I have, and perhaps this may sound facetious, is that perhaps if other people elsewhere lead some kind of provincial life the feeling might be that this statement must be included because we here in Hawaii may be, let us say, a little unethical or even unmoral, the fact that we have to have a statement saying obligations and responsibilities. I would, therefore, be against inserting this last clause in Section 2.

CHAIRMAN: What is the pleasure of the committee?

KELLERMAN: The committee has gone into this matter at length. We have found in several of the first constitutions of the colonies, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and one or two others, expressly spelled out the concept of responsibility to government and only on that responsibility can the government survive. The provisions of responsiblity are inserted in the Bill of Rights of those early constitutions. They are not put elsewhere. They are put in there as a recognition that only can rights survive if all recognize their responsibilities. I don't see how it can be construed that we are implying to the world that we are unethical or that we need to restate our responsibilities more than any other state. I think it's a matter of growth in political development. Our early fathers recognized those responsibilities as essential to good government and on that concept of responsibilities has our democracy survived where democracies have died throughout the rest of the world.

Today we are on trial again, a democracy against another ideology and it seems to me to be most apt and fitting that this first constitution to be drafted in nearly 50 years should restate a fundamental principle which has been the basis of the survival of our democracy which we now ask to join as a state.

SMITH: I'd like to call to the attention of the members of the Convention here that these rights cannot endure unless the people recognize the corresponding obligations and responsibilities. This is dealing with their inherent and inalienable rights, something we are born by nature, free and equal, inherent, inalienable rights. We cannot really contest the statement due to the fact that we are a democracy, and I am very strongly in favor of keeping this in. There was a question whether this should take -- be left out of Section 2 and be put in Section 25. We felt in the committee that it should be left with -- primarily with inherent and inalienable rights. The Section 24 which is going to come up and try to be argued out is an overall picture protecting the people.

KAWAHARA: May I ask the committee or the chairman of that committee a question as to why the word "born" is excluded in the proposed amendment. In the first draft, the wording "All persons are born" was included. In the other, the redraft, "All persons are by nature free" is rewritten and perhaps there was some reason for excluding the word "born" and I'd like to know.

HEEN: I rise to a point of information. Perhaps someone can explain this. This amendment reads: "All persons are by nature free in their inherent and inalienable rights." Just what does that mean, "free in their inherent rights"?

MIZUHA: I believe the delegate from the fourth district prepared the draft.

HEEN: I prepared the draft in this manner. "All persons are by nature free and are equal in their inherent and inalienable rights." Those are my notes.

MIZUHA: Then I believe it was an error in the printing and we'll accede to having the word "are" inserted after "and are equal in their inherent and inalienable rights." But first of all, Mr. Chairman, there's a question before the house propounded by the delegate from Hawaii as to why the words "are born free and are equal," "are born free" was not included. I believe Doctor Larsen, who was a member of our committee, can explain why that was omitted.

CHAIRMAN: Why the word "born" was omitted.

WIRTZ: Once again I rise to a point of information, that is why I originally addressed the Chair. There are two drafts of this proposed amendment and I think that the Convention or the Committee of the Whole should know which draft is being proposed.

CHAIRMAN: The draft in which -- that we're discussing was read by the chairman of the committee.

WIRTZ: That's correct and when he was asked the question by the delegate from the fourth district, he reported that the delegate from the fourth district drafted the amendment, whereupon the delegate from the fourth district called his attention to different words which appear in the other draft.

MIZUHA: In order to clarify the whole situation, I'll ask the delegate from the fourth district who had drafted the amendment to read whatever draft he considers his draft at the present time. I did not know that there was another section to have been circulated until right now.

HEEN: My draft, that is the first sentence, not the second, reads as follows: "All persons are by nature free and equal in their inherent and inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and the right of acquiring and possessing property."

CHAIRMAN: Is that the - -

MIZUHA: And qualify the additional clause "these rights cannot endure" and so forth.

CHAIRMAN: Well, will you - -

HEEN: Now, agreed to that last one except to suggest a change in one word, a change in the word "last" to the word "endure." It seemed to me that if we're going to have something along this line in this particular section it should read: "These rights carry with them certain corresponding duties to the state." That's the way it should read.

ROBERTS: I'll second that if the speaker will make that a motion; to substitute for the language: "These rights cannot endure unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities" to read: "These rights carry with them certain corresponding duties to the state." Is that the intent of the motion?

HEEN: That's correct.

ROBERTS: I will second that.

MIZUHA: I believe the amendment as so stated would be very limited in its nature, and I believe in a statement of corresponding obligations and duties and responsibilities, it should be as broad as possible. The effect of the amendment just makes certain corresponding duties to the state which would be very limited in nature, and if we are going along with the philosophy that citizenship in our government carries with it certain obligations and responsibilities for the development of a free democracy where everyone can participate in, so that we can have the kind of government that we all cherish, limiting of those duties by that phrase will more or less give to the people loopholes and avoid the obligations of citizenship in our state.

ASHFORD: May I say that I am in agreement with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee upon that point, that the use of the word "certain" makes the language uncertain.

TAVARES: I think the reason why this language was first inserted, or language along this line, was due, as I recollect, to a feeling by the committee—of which I am not a member but I think I discovered that in listening to the arguments—that since we are providing in the Bill of Rights that one of the inherent rights is the right of acquiring and possessing property and so forth, too strong a statement that these carry with them corresponding duties and so forth might imply that it was our duty to go out and help everybody else get rich. And I think that was one of the reasons why the language was phrased in this negative or not so positive manner.

However, if language of the type now suggested is included, I think it should be clearly understood that it does not imply that type of duty. In other words, the corresponding duties and obligations which these rights carry with them are not duties and obligations to perpetuate or to build a welfare state, but simply the type of obligations which require us to do our duties as citizens, to recognize the rights of others, and to obey and live up to the laws and the good order of our society.

HEEN: While we are not considering Section 24, any effort that is to be made to have 24 included, that could take care of, I think, all of these problems by having that read: "The rights and privileges hereby secured shall not be construed as being absolute." We have it there, then we don't have to discuss this last - -

CHAIRMAN: Section 2.

HEEN: - - sentence in No. 2.

CHAIRMAN: It's up to the committee to decide.

MIZUHA: I was going to suggest that amendment by the delegate from the fourth district as a recommendation from the office of the attorney general for Section 24. However, Section 2 is an expression of philosophy on the part of the kind of government that we desire here in the future State of Hawaii, and in that expression of philosophy as to what good government means for all of us. Certainly if we go back to the days when the colonists first organized themselves in states and founded the state constitutions, we find, running through all of the discussions, that desire on the part of the people that their government should be not only the expression of rights, but also the expression of responsibility. And in these days when there are other ideologies creeping into our frame of government, here in Hawaii as well as in the United States, the time has come when all of us who are to write the Constitution for the State of Hawaii should realize that citizenship in the state and in the Union carries with them certain corresponding obligations and responsibilities for the building up of the State of Hawaii to the kind of State we desire as a member of the Federal Union. And I see no objection to the clause as written here—that these rights cannot endure unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities—as being an expression of philosophy of government, the democratic form of government, under which we are living at the present time.

ANTHONY: Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I agree with the last speaker that it's desirable to incorporate in the Constitution in an affirmative way that while we are declaring certain inalienable rights, we are saying also that these rights carry with them certain corresponding duties and obligations, and I think such a sentence should be included in the Constitution. I submit I'm not making this in the form of a motion at the moment—the last sentence might well read: "These rights carry with them corresponding obligations and duties." That eliminates the delegate from Molokai's uncertainty by eliminating the word "certain." And I think it will express the philosophy. "These rights carry with them corresponding obligations and duties." We usually in the law speak of duties and obligations or rights and duties rather than responsibilities. I think duties is a little better word.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that the - -

LARSEN: I would hope that the delegates from the fourth district may concede that what we had in mind here was make it very clear, and I think that the discussions in the committee made it very clear, that we wanted to emphasize this fact of why rights and obligations were included in this paragraph, and it was because a rising number of people had forgotten that rights seem to be license - - or rather that rights didn't carry with them this, and therefore, we're emphasizing that philosophy, "rights cannot endure unless." They might say, "Oh yes, it carries corresponding obligations," but we felt it was a little clearer to say why we wanted obligations and responsibilities because rights cannot endure unless people recognize these responsibilities. It seems to me we're getting at the same thing but we're emphasizing the reason for including it.

MAU: I believe that the second sentence, or a provision similar to the second sentence is contained in the Model Constitution. Of course that provision is an unusual provision where you state certain rights in the Constitution. I understand that there might be one or two states that have declared the duties and responsibilities of the citizens in relation to the rights that are preserved to the people. But, I am in agreement with the first speaker from the fourth district when he stated that this problem could be resolved if the amendment he suggested to Section 24 would be adopted, and we would then leave out the second sentence of Section 2. I want to say to the Convention that from the discussion there is no question that there are conflicting philosophies involved in particular reference to the declaration of the rights of the people.

You have heard the mention of welfare state again this morning. I am certain, unless the chairman of the Bill of Rights Committee desires to make the record clear, that there was no such discussion in his committee concerning a welfare state, and I would like to have the records clearly stated that any provision, even if the second sentence of Section 2 is adopted, has no reference by implication or by -- directly of anything concerning a welfare state. I don't like to have it in the record that we are in fear of what has been termed the welfare state. At this time, I would like to amend the amendment to Section 2 and move that the second sentence of Section 2 be deleted.

AKAU: I so move.

J. TRASK: Mr. Chairman.

TAVARES: Mr. Chairman, I rise to --

CHAIRMAN: Trask.

TAVARES: -- a point of personal privilege. I think the --

CHAIRMAN: Trask is recognized.

J. TRASK: I accede to the delegate from the fourth district.

ROBERTS: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Tavares. Tavares.

J. TRASK: I accede to the gentleman.

TAVARES: I think my word has been questioned here and I would like to have some members of the committee answer that whether or not the idea at least was discussed in the committee. I was so informed by members of the committee.

CHAIRMAN: Before we proceed the Chair would like to announce a brief pause. We have in the gallery Hawaii's School of Accountants, Mr. Uyeda, instructor. The Kapalama School, Mrs. Richmond Ellis, instructor and Mrs. Wright, instructor. Fifth and sixth grade.

LOPER: And Mrs. Carter, principal.

CHAIRMAN: We have paused and been refreshed. We may continue. Mr. Tavares is recognized. Do you care to proceed, Mr. Tavares?

TAVARES: In connection with discussions on this section with members of the committee, I was certainly given to believe that the matter was being considered as to whether too strong a statement of corresponding duties, rights, duties and obligations, might not carry with them the implication that it is the duty of every citizen to get out and help every other citizen acquire this property and so forth. And that is the basis for my statement which is along the line of not letting our youth grow up to believe that a constitution is just something that gives them everything; that there must be a feeling that they have to return something in duties and obligations and that it is not their duty necessarily to help create a socialistic society, but rather to so live that everybody has an equal chance with them.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to remind the speaker that that was discussed in committee and those points brought out very thoroughly in the committee.

LARSEN: Every once in a while we get this question of welfare state. I always feel they look at me when they say that. I hope they don't because I think I've emphasized repeatedly when and if the philosophy of these people want a welfare state, we're going to have it; when and if we want socialism we are going to have it. There's no use arguing that. We're trying to argue here on the basis; how can we build a strong government and write a good constitution for the ways of today? I feel we don't have to battle it and I hope I'm over-sensitive when I think the delegates look at me whenever they say welfare state. I just feel that isn't a problem.

I'm wondering if some of these things are not a question of wording. I just recently read John Hershey's new book, "The Wall," and in this introduction he says, "I have spent two years editing this book." He said, "I could spend another 20 years and I still wouldn't be satisfied." And it seems to me that's what we have in some of our style here.

Now, probably "these rights carry with them corresponding obligations and duties" does give the same thought, but it seems to me we have discussed it so much and it seems as though we are agreed that rights—and we're talking now of the Bill of Rights—that rights cannot endure, and that's been the false interpretation, that rights are something that you can just grab. But rights are something we have to work for, and to emphasize the fact that this democracy will be destroyed unless we accept the principle that with rights we must have corresponding obligations and duties.

A. TRASK: I speak in favor of retaining the second sentence of Section 2. In the first place, we must read into this provision the simple fact that we have first established a common consent, an organization of men and women. Having established that, that organization declares that by nature free people are born free and equal in their inalienable rights. The question is, that there is an organization. You are not born free because you're isolated. You are born free because you're a member of a certain organization founded on the Christian principles.

I'm in favor secondly for the retention of the second sentence because there is reasonable doubt in the minds of all reasonable people that the reason why democracy is such a difficult pill to take for the people of the world is because they do not have that sense of corresponding responsibility and duties to the common consent of the people of the country. That is to me the very keystone of why democracy cannot sell itself as well as we want it to sell itself. We certainly must know that this question of persons are born free is a Christian principle, based upon the Christian doctrine that to get to God and get to heaven, you must personally save yourself. So this, the whole principle, is ingrained upon the Christian principle of man is born free and equal to God and he must attain heaven on his individual self-will and determination.

So it seems to me clear that if people who are not democratic-minded, are not of this government, not motivated by any principles or sense of knowledge of our history, if they will look upon this second sentence, it would come to mind immediately that their country and their people are not democratic, even though they may be striving for democratic way of life, because this second sentence says to them they must of themselves have a corresponding sense of duty and responsibility.

HOLROYDE: I think whether or not we want to include this philosophy in this article or not has been debated for at - - considerable extent, and now to find out just exactly the consensus of opinion of the delegates to the Convention, I would like to move that the amendment to delete this section be tabled.

CHAIRMAN: The motion - -

BRYAN: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: - - was not seconded.

BRYAN: I'll second it.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Mau made the motion that it be deleted and Mrs. Akau also made the motion that it be deleted. No motion - -

BRYAN: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: - - was seconded in the first place. There was no motion before the house to have that section deleted, as yet.

BRYAN: I'd like to rise to a - -

AKAU: Excuse me, Mr. Chairman.

BRYAN: - - point of information.

CHAIRMAN: I'd like to have the recording replayed to you. You moved that this section be adopted.

DELEGATE: That's right.

WOOLAWAY: Mrs. Akau said "I so move," Mr. Chairman.

DELEGATE: That's right.

BRYAN: A point of information. I'd like to know what motion is to be - -

CHAIRMAN: There is no motion before the house as yet.

BRYAN: - - before the house, the last amendment?

CHAIRMAN: Two of the motions were not seconded.

BRYAN: There's a motion to adopt this section. Other than the motion to adopt this section?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. No other motion.

ANTHONY: I'm in favor of retaining this sentence. I think, however, it will be strengthened if you take out the word "recognize." You want people to do more than recognize. So I suggest that the last sentence be amended to read, "These rights carry with them corresponding duties."

MAU: Does the delegate make that as a motion?

ANTHONY: I make that as a motion.

MAU: I second the motion.

SMITH: Mr. Chairman. I would like to bring up one thing in the wording, obligations. The ideologies that are going around attacking the - - our democracy are very emphatic in not wanting to be obligated in any way. And you'll find that any time that they do come up against obligations, they fight it like cats and dogs. This right, corresponding obligations and responsibilities, being recognized in Section 2 is dealing with inherent and inalienable rights, something which—we're not the only ones, only people who want to become a state—have to really recognize that there are obligations and responsibilities. I think that they're getting away when they say "corresponding duties." We all know we have duties, but we have to recognize the fact that there are corresponding obligations and responsibilities.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that by the process of elimination we'll probably come down to the sentence, "These rights carry with them corresponding duties."

ANTHONY: I might state, Mr. Chairman, the two words - -

CHAIRMAN: The motion has been made and seconded that the words read, "These rights carry with them corresponding duties."

ANTHONY: I want to just explain the matter raised by the last speaker. Obligations and duties are the same thing. One happens to be the Latin form obligateo, and the other the Anglo-Saxon. There's no need of having both. I prefer the simplicity of the Anglo-Saxon word, duties.

SHIMAMURA: Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Having taken up French, I'm not too familiar with the terminology.

A. TRASK: I think the key word in that second sentence is the word "unless." And that's why I cannot agree with the delegate from the fourth district. To me, we've got to have a word in there to show that for these rights to endure, they cannot endure, unless of these corresponding duties. So the word "unless" is important. And so I cannot - -

MIZUHA: I believe we are going far afield from where we started from. The reason for the second sentence here was not a direct statement that there would be certain duties along with these rights. It's the recognition of a philosophy of government, an expression of philosophy of government that says—in our second section in the Bill of Rights—that those rights that we are, or we possess, cannot endure unless the people recognize that there are certain corresponding obligations and responsibilities with reference to these rights. But as the amendment is now proposed, it will lay certain duties on the part of the people in connection with these rights. That's not the idea that the Bill of Rights Committee is trying to present to the Convention here. We are trying to present, in the second section, an expression of philosophy that with the inalienable and inherent rights of the people that it cannot endure unless there are corresponding obligations and responsibilities. And that is why I believe the short amendment as proposed from the delegate of the fourth district would defeat the intent of the committee in the recognition of a philosophy of government. And I move that the amendment be tabled.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion has been made and seconded that the last amendment be tabled. "These rights carry with them corresponding duties." All those in favor say "aye."

MAU: Roll call, Mr. Chairman.

DELEGATE: Roll call, request for a roll call.

CHAIRMAN: A roll call has been requested. All those in favor please raise their right hands. You haven't got sufficient votes for a roll call. Vote carries. The amendment has been tabled.

MIZUHA: I move the previous question.

HEEN: The question was put, and I think there was some "ayes" made, and - - but you didn't call for the noes.

CHAIRMAN: I didn't call for the noes? Well, the Chair will extend the courtesy by - - but I'm glad you reminded me about that. Contrary minded to the motion to table. Two votes. No, there were five, three votes maybe. Still carries. Tabled.

PORTEUS: I'm not sure that there is a motion before the house with respect to this last sentence.

CHAIRMAN: The only motion before the house now is for the adoption as the second sentence as by the committee, as written by the committee.

MIZUHA: No, the motion before the house, as I understand it, is for the adoption of the whole section which reads as follows: "All persons are by nature free and are equal in their inherent and inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and the right of acquiring and possessing property. These rights cannot endure unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities."

The speaker would like to inform the delegates assembled here that this section is a rare expression of philosophy on the part of government, that it does not particularly care what the Style Committee does, so long as that philosophy is retained in the section as reported out from the Style Committee, and that it does not believe that there's too much substance in here for us to be wrangling about for two hours, and we'll defer to the Style Committee in the language of the last sentence.

PORTEUS: In order to bring this matter to the head as to the last sentence, I move that this Committee of the Whole go on record as approving in principle the last sentence of Section 2 reading: "These rights cannot endure unless the people recognize corresponding duties and responsibilities," and that it be left to the Committee on Style, the exact wording.

PHILLIPS: May I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: That is an amendment because you are deleting the word "obligations."

PORTEUS: I thought that the committee chairman had accepted the use of the word "duties."

DELEGATE: No.

MIZUHA: We are now - -

HEEN: I move an amendment so that this sentence will read: "These rights cannot endure unless they carry with them corresponding duties."

MIZUHA: Mr. Chairman. Again may I speak to that amendment? That will change the substance of that last sentence. It will change - - the idea back of this last sentence is just a statement of principles of philosophy as we have previously expressed - -

KAUHANE: Point of order.

MIZUHA: - - that it carries with them corresponding obligations and responsibilities.

KAUHANE: A point of order has been raised and I wish - -

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

KAUHANE: - - the speaker would recognize the question of point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point. State your point.

KAUHANE: The motion made by Judge Heen is not seconded so, therefore, there is nothing before the - -

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

KAUHANE: - - house for the chairman to start bellowing about.

CHAIRMAN: Well, just inform the Committee of the Whole.

KAUHANE: In order to accord that courtesy I second that motion made by Judge Heen.

ASHFORD: I move to amend the motion; to amend so that the sentence shall read as follows: "These rights carry with them corresponding duties without which they cannot endure."

CHAIRMAN: You get that, Clerk?

PHILLIPS: Second that motion.

SHIMAMURA: In my humble opinion, we're making a mountain out of a mole hill. Whichever draft we accept, there's no essential difference or distinction in any of them. I respectfully submit we're wasting a lot of time.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair partially agrees.

HEEN: I accept the amendment that was made by Delegate Ashford.

ARASHIRO: It seems to me that we agree in the retaining of the last sentence and to me it seems that we seem to agree as to the idea, the philosophy of insertion of the last sentence. It seems to me that there's only a disagreement of the word that we are trying to insert in the last sentence. So I therefore move that we recess temporarily for those people who do not agree on the word to get together and agree on something that we can agree.

KAUHANE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is slightly confused but since the motion for recess is in order the Chair will declare a short recess, subject to the call of the Chair.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Committee of the Whole please come to order.

DOWSON: I move to the previous question on - -

CROSSLEY: Second the motion.

DOWSON: Section 2.

CROSSLEY: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: You're recognized. Point of information.

CROSSLEY: My understanding that the previous question would be the adoption of Section 2 in its entirety with the addition of the word "are" after "and" - - after the first "and" in the second sentence. Is that correct? Second line—second line.

CHAIRMAN: Second line. That is correct. We'll - - for the information of the - - previous question has been asked, but for the information of the members of this committee, I'll have the chairman of the Committee on Bill of Rights read Section 2 in its entirety as put for the previous question.

ASHFORD: Just before we went into recess there was a motion to amend which was seconded.

ARASHIRO: I moved that - -

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

MIZUHA: I move to table the amendment.

J. TRASK: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion to table is in order. Question? All those in favor of tabling amendment put by Miss Ashford and seconded by Senator Heen, say "aye." Contrary minded. The ayes have it.

ANTHONY: I rose to find out what the amendment was. I don't think the Chair ever announced what we were voting on.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment put, I mentioned the amendment, the amendment put by Miss Ashford and seconded by Judge Heen.

ANTHONY: What was it?

CHAIRMAN: The amendment, will you read the amendment, please?

CLERK: "These rights carry with them corresponding duties without which they cannot endure."

ANTHONY: I think the Convention ought to vote knowing what it was voting on, Mr. Chairman. I don't believe the Convention did.

CHAIRMAN: Well, that was -- they did vote and that was the question. The amendment was put by Senator Heen and I believe every delegate heard the amendment. Do you care to have the question reput?

DOWSON: I believe we're arguing over principles and I believe the delegates have stated their ideas. The Committee on Style will have a record of this debate. I, therefore, move to the previous question.

CROSSLEY: I second that.

KAWAHARA: I rise for a point of personal privilege.

CHAIRMAN: A motion of previous question has been asked.

KAWAHARA: I rise to the point of personal privilege. In the beginning of this discussion here I asked the committee why the word "born" was excluded. Nobody from the committee answered the question. Now there is a motion to previous --

LARSEN: Mr. Chairman, may I answer that question? It was an oversight, I'm sure.

CHAIRMAN: Highly irregular but it's all right.

LARSEN: I think we've discussed this before that -- we discussed the question "born free and equal" as being obviously so unrealistic that we wanted something more realistic. We then put down "all persons are born free," and someone facetiously said the only thing they are really born free of is clothes. But, nevertheless, then Senator Heen suggested that a better phrase rather than say "born" to say "are by nature," by the nature of circumstance and environment and so on, so we accepted "by nature." And we felt that was actually more according to what the meaning of this phrase had come to be after these centuries and, therefore, we had accepted "All persons are by nature free and are equal in their inherent and inalienable rights." Does that answer your question?

KAWAHARA: In your committee was there any discussion as to the statement that persons may not be born free? That is, somebody made reference to people --

LARSEN: When they said "born free and equal," there was much discussion because we obviously are not born free and equal. That was discussed, and that's why we changed it to this style.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the previous question say "aye." Contrary minded.

Now reread the section for adoption. Section 2. In its entirety.

MIZUHA: Section 2 in its entirety reads as follows: "All persons are by nature free and are equal in their inherent and inalienable rights among which are those of enjoying life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness and the right of acquiring and possessing property. These rights cannot endure unless the people recognize corresponding obligations and responsibilities."

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of adopting Section 2 as amended say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

We'll now proceed to Section --

KAUHANE: Point of information. I believe, Mr. Chairman, when you -- before you allowed the chairman of the committee to move for the adoption of the section as he read, you asked whether the Convention would agree to the amendment made by Miss Ashford, and that was defeated.

CHAIRMAN: That's right.

KAUHANE: I believe that there is a pending motion or there was a pending motion which was made by Delegate Garner Anthony which was never put by the Chair.

CHAIRMAN: The motion -- it is a suggestion that -- he never put a motion.

KAUHANE: I seconded that motion, as I got up to say, to allow the chairman the opportunity to speak rather than to --

CHAIRMAN: Well, I believe your second was out of order. That was just a suggestion. He didn't put a motion. There was no motion.

KAUHANE: You recognized my second to the motion at that time to allow the chairman the right of the floor, which was raised by me on a point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Well, the Chair may have been out of order himself.

KAUHANE: Well then, the record --

J. TRASK: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

KAUHANE: -- still shows, then the record still shows Mr. --

J. TRASK: A point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

J. TRASK: The motion was made by Judge Heen and then Chairman Mizuha made an explanation on the motion. Mr. Kauhane rose on a point of order and said that he would second Judge Heen's motion for -- so that we might have discussion on the floor. Marguerite Ashford moved that the -- she moved for the amendment to the amendment. And that was -- and Judge Heen stood up and mentioned that he accepted the amendment. So in moving to table Miss Ashford's motion, it automatically killed the motion.

KAUHANE: I stand to be correct, Chairman. But I still feel that the records will show the --

CHAIRMAN: The records will show that Section --

KAUHANE: -- the records will show that a motion was made which was duly seconded to allow the chair -- the chairman of the committee the right to speak on the intended amendment that was offered, which was later amended by a motion put by Miss Ashford which was put by you and defeated. I think the original amendment was put by as I still insist, was put by Delegate Anthony and seconded by me, which is still prevailing and until the record is changed then - -

CHAIRMAN: The record will - -

KAUHANE: - - there is still that matter before the house.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Kauhane, I'm afraid the record will show that Section 2 was amended, was adopted as amended by - - as amended - - as the record will show.

ANTHONY: In order to clear the record, I did make a motion and I believe it was seconded, but since the will of the body is to adopt this section, I'll withdraw the motion.

CHAIRMAN: As amended. We'll now proceed to Section 24.

DOWSON: I move that Section 24 be deleted due to the possibility that it will weaken the freedom set up by the other sections.

DELEGATE: I second that motion.

ASHFORD: May I say that this section is my child but the child is a changeling. The swan has become an ugly duckling and in its present form I am in agreement with having it stricken out.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of having Section 24 deleted say "aye." Contrary minded. Section 24 is deleted. We'll now proceed to Section 25.

MIZUHA: May I suggest that we take up Section 25 at the end inasmuch as it's a general clause.

TAVARES: Lest there be - - in order that there be no misunderstanding when we adopt this Bill of Rights after we go back into regular session, I should like to move, and I so move, that when the Committee of the Whole writes its report it makes it very clear that the deletion of this Section 24 is not made for the purpose of eliminating the construction of most constitutional provisions today, that all of these rights are subject to the power of the state to legislate in the interest of the public health, safety and welfare. It should be made very clear so that it would not be urged later on that we deleted this for the purpose of making those rights absolute. I think the report should so state and I so move.

CHAIRMAN: The report will show that - - Mr. Tavares.

CROSSLEY: In seconding that, may I ask the movant if he means by that that all rights themselves are not absolute rights. Is that - -

TAVARES: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

CROSSLEY: I certainly second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Clerk will make a note of that so that the report will show it.

HEEN: It seemed to me in order to obviate any argument at all about this situation that that section should remain and should read: "The rights and privileges hereby secured shall not be construed as being absolute." You have it in there. There's no room for argument at all. You don't need to have the court make any interpretations that they are absolute. The courts have interpreted, made interpretations along that line, that these rights are not absolute, but have it in the Constitution and then there can be no argument about it.

CHAIRMAN: That section has been deleted. There's nothing before the committee. That section's been deleted.

BRYAN: I move we reconsider action on that paragraph.

LARSEN: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion for reconsideration of Section 24 is in order. All those in favor in having Section 24 reconsidered say "aye." Contrary minded. Afraid the noes - -

HEEN: I think the ayes have it, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: I am afraid noes have it.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, the ayes having had it, I move - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule that the noes had it unless a roll call is requested.

WOOLAWAY: Roll call.

TAVARES: There is a motion before the house as to what the report should state. I think that should be adopted.

ROBERTS: I so move.

ANTHONY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Motion is whether we should insert in the report an explanation for the deletion of Section 24. All those in favor say "aye."

ANTHONY: I'd like to speak to the motion first. I think I had the floor.

CHAIRMAN: Contrary minded.

ANTHONY: I had the floor, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: I didn't recognize you. I'm sorry.

ANTHONY: Well, will the Chair recognize me now?

CHAIRMAN: You are recognized.

ANTHONY: Judge Heen has just stated that these - - that the report carries with it an expression, as I understood the debate, that the rights are not absolute. Now that may be true as to some of the items in the Bill of Rights, it's not true as to all. For example, the right of trial by jury in a criminal case is an absolute right. In other words nobody can take that away from the people. So I think that statement is perhaps just a little bit broad. There are certain rights that are guaranteed and they're definite, those that have great precision, like the right of trial by jury.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair should like to point out that Section 24 is not before this committee for discussion. It has been deleted.

CROSSLEY: Speaking to the motion that is before us, Mr. Chairman - -

CHAIRMAN: There is no motion now.

CROSSLEY: Yes, there is a motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been adopted.

CROSSLEY: Was the motion adopted?

CHAIRMAN: The motion has been adopted. I had just explained - -

ANTHONY: The Chair had just put the question and didn't call for ayes.

CHAIRMAN: I called for the ayes while you were asking to be recognized. And the committee voted in favor of - -

ANTHONY: I rose to be recognized before the question was put.

CHAIRMAN: But you were rec -- you were not recognized.

ANTHONY: And the Chair then recognized me after ayes were called and before noes were called.

CHAIRMAN: After the ayes and noes were put.

ANTHONY: No noes were ever called. The record will show.

CHAIRMAN: Well, will the Clerk please read the record please?

CROSSLEY: May I suggest --

CHAIRMAN: The Clerk will show that noes -- ayes and noes were put.

CROSSLEY: May I suggest to the Chair that you put the question again?

CHAIRMAN: If there is a request of this Convention -- of this Committee of the Whole that I reput the question, I'll be glad to. The question before this Convention -- before the Committee of the Whole is to embody in the report an explanation for the deletion of Section 24. All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried. Section 24 is deleted, and the report will show the reason for its deletion, as explained by Mr. Tavares.

ANTHONY: Well, Mr. Chairman, that's just the point of my rising. We've had no debate and had no vote on what the explanation is. And I object to the Chair's stating what's going -- the report is going to show without taking the sense of this committee on it.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair can only put the question as put by the Convention. The Committee of the Whole made the motion with an explanation that that be embodied in this report. That motion was put and carried.

MAU: I realize the position of the chairman, but I don't believe that ample opportunity was given to discuss. I rose three times and the chairman just announced --

CHAIRMAN: Then the Chair will suggest that you ask for reconsideration of the subject.

MAU: I move for reconsideration of that motion.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of having the motion reconsidered say "aye." Motion -- No. Contrary minded. The motion is lost. Now what is the next --

MIZUHA: I believe we deferred certain sections of the Bill of Rights at the last meeting of the Committee of the Whole, and it would be proper at this time to take up Section 8 following the numbered sections of the Committee Proposal No. 3. Section 8. The delegate from the fifth district who asked to be heard on that subject, I believe Delegate Trask, should be heard on the matter on Section 8 with reference to unreasonable search and seizure. A motion is in order at this time.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 8.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

A. TRASK: I had asked for Section --

CHAIRMAN: Motion has been made and seconded that we adopt Section 8.

A. TRASK: I had asked for deferment on consideration to Section 8. I have since taken the matter up with the chairman and other members here with respect to the recent decision of the Supreme Court, and it is the consensus that we will let the court decide the varying phrase, "probable cause," with respect to searches and seizures. And so I would vote now in favor of Section 8.

MAU: I'd like to amend Section 8. I move at this time that at the end of Section 8 this sentence be added: "Evidence obtained in violation of this section shall not be admissible in any court against any person."

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

MAU: Speaking on the motion, Mr. Chairman --

CHAIRMAN: Will you please repeat the wording of your motion slowly so that the Clerk may take the wording?

MAU: "Evidence obtained in violation of this section shall not be admissible in any court against any person."

The Chair recognizes that a second has been made?

Speaking on the motion, Mr. Chairman. A recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, Colorado against Wolf, announced that states may admit certain evidence even if illegally seized in accordance, of course, with their state laws. We are to determine for the new state whether evidence which may be illegally seized may be admissible in the state courts in criminal cases. I might state to the members of the Convention that in the federal court -- such evidence seized illegally may not be used in the federal court. And the Supreme Court of the United States recognized that principle in the late case, Colorado against Wolf. It is my purpose in making this amendment to guard the rights of the individual when they appear in court in criminal cases. It seems to me that although the committee may recommend that this be a legislative matter and be referred to the legislature for determination that this comes to one of the fundamental rights and that we should have this sentence added to protect one of the fundamental rights belonging to our citizens. And that is why I am in favor of that motion.

ANTHONY: I'd like to speak in opposition to the amendment. The committee has very carefully followed the language of Article 4 of the Federal Constitution. That carries with it the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States interpreting that article. Those decisions have already been imbedded firmly in our federal system, that evidence illegally secured may not be admitted in evidence in face of an objection that it violates the Fourth Amendment to the Federal Constitution. Therefore, if we preserve intact the very language of the Fourth Amendment, we also carry with it those decisions of the Supreme Court that would prevent the admission of such evidence in any trial. It would not permit the state to pass legislation that would make such evidence admissible if we have the provision in its present form. And therefore I think it will be dangerous to add the suggestion. It'd be better to leave it as it stands.

MAU: In answer to the statements made by the last speaker I think that the supreme court of the State of Hawaii will perhaps give great weight to the cases laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, in view of the similar language taken from the United States Constitution. But it doesn't mean that the supreme court of the State of Hawaii could not follow the decisions of the various state courts and even follow the decisions of Colorado against Wolf. I would admit that these cases in the Supreme Court will be of great weight in determining that question. I agree, so far as that goes, but I am also saying that it does not prohibit the supreme court of the State of Hawaii not to admit evidence illegally state -- illegally seized in state courts in criminal cases.

HEEN: I don't think you need that last sentence suggested by the last speaker at all, because if the evidence was illegally secured then the courts must refuse to admit such evidence. And to admit it would be violation of this provision in the Constitution. No question about it.

A. TRASK: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Senator Trask is recognized.

A. TRASK: I yield to Delegate Mau.

MAU: In answer to the last speaker, if this sentence is not added I don't think that there's any prohibition against the state from enacting laws which have been enacted in other states to change the concept of illegally seized evidence. And that's what we're driving at in order to put it into the Constitution, so that the state legislature is restricted from passing any laws which would admit evidence which we today consider, following federal cases, to be illegal evidence, illegally seized. However we might be able to resolve this question if the committee will agree to place in its report that this provision follows the provision of the United States Constitution and all of the cases. The law laid down in the cases by the United States Supreme Court should be followed by the supreme court of the State of Hawaii.

TAVARES: I so move that in our report we so state.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will instruct the chairman of the Committee on the Bill of Rights that in his report, final analysis report, that we'll put this provision in. It's my report.

A. TRASK: Yes, Mr. Chairman, and in furtherance of the same idea I have turned over to the chairman of the Bill of Rights Committee that particular case United States vs. Rabinowitz, decided February 20, 1950, so that there'd be no doubt in anybody's mind that the supreme court will follow the rules right down in the Supreme Court of the United States and not follow any state court with respect to this same section.

CROSSLEY: In view of the willingness of the previous movant of the amendment, I move to table the amendment.

MAU: I withdraw the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment has been withdrawn so it clarifies the section.

MAU: I withdraw.

CHAIRMAN: The only motion now before the committee -shall we adopt Section 8? All those in favor say "aye."

AKAU: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Point of information has been requested through Mrs. Akau.

AKAU: Statements have been going back and forth about various cases in the supreme court. I'm wondering if that would clarify a certain right that we've been talking about here—the right of people to be secure in their persons and so forth. Does this imply here that the right of searchers to go into homes without warrant and if any evidence is found that these people are suspected? Is this what they're talking about in a legal language, or am I on the wrong track here?

CHAIRMAN: The question put to the Chair or to the one that made it? [Akau not clearly audible.] Chuck Mau, do you mind giving the lady a little explanation? Mr. Mau, a question has been put to you.

ANTHONY: I'll answer the lady's question, if I may. The purpose of this is to make sure that there will be no unlawful search or seizure and if there is, then when evidence is obtained by the police or the F. B. I. or anybody else pursuant to an unlawful search and seizure, it may not be used in any court against the person that it's sought out to be used against. In other words this makes inviolate your home and your person against any unlawful search and seizure.

AKAU: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to thank the delegate from the fourth district. I'm wondering if in some of these —this terminology we could recommend to the Style Committee to be very careful about the simplicity of language because even in my simple mind I can't get some of it.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will express the welcome for the members. All those in favor of accepting Section 8 with an explanation in the report as ruled by the Supreme Court of the United States, say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

MIZUHA: Section 9.

CHAIRMAN: Section 9 is now in order.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 9.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Same motion, same second. Open for discussion.

MAU: Point of information. I wonder if the committee could tell the Convention whether or not it considered the possibility of indictment even in felony cases by information.

MIZUHA: The question was raised with the office of the attorney general as to whether the language of Section 9 would permit prosecution by information. There was some disagreement between the office of the attorney general and some members of the Convention here. And I believe the delegate from the fourth district, a distinguished jurist who had had court experience, Delegate Heen, entered into those deliberations and I believe it is proper at this time to have his remarks for the record.

HEEN: Under the language used here in Section 9, there can be no information presented against an accused in felony cases, cases that are capital or infamous. We have a statute which allows the filing of information in the circuit court in certain cases, and those will have to be, of course, limited to misdemeanor cases. Here under this language no information having the force and effect of an indictment can be filed in felony cases.

CHAIRMAN: Is that true?

MAU: Another point of information. I wonder if the distinguished jurist has given thought to the cumbersome procedure involved in grand jury indictments and what the modern trend is, whether or not some states have not followed the information procedure even in felony cases.

HEEN: I have not given this subject any consideration along those lines. But I think that no person should be prosecuted in felony cases except upon the indictment of the grand jury. To give a prosecuting officer the right to file information instead of indictment would give that prosecuting attorney too much power altogether. There should be some limitation on the power of a prosecuting attorney and that limitation would be the requirement that a person accused of a felony must be by indictment of a grand jury.

In the constitution of Missouri, we have this, "That no persons shall be prosecuted criminally for felony or misdemeanor otherwise than by indictment or information which shall be concurrent remedies." In other words in Missouri you can proceed in a felony case by information or by indictment, either way. But I think we ought to preserve the requirement of indictment by grand jury.

TAVARES: I am not going to oppose this section although I personally believe that it could well be liberalized or, according to the last speaker, made more the other way. But I do like -- I would like to have the Convention understand the situation. The fact is that the modern trend in many states has been away from an absolute requirement of a grand jury. There are a number of states today that don't even require an indictment, that allow an information. There are others where the constitution permits the legislature to regulate that, to reduce the number of grand jurors or to permit prosecution by information.

The grand jury arose in the good old days when kings and barons and people of high estate in England could throw somebody into jail on an information and keep him there without trial for a long time. Under modern conditions that is not -- that is seldom abused, that power of information. And I want to say that many states have done away with the grand jury or reduced the number or otherwise regulated it, and I don't think I've heard any particular complaints about the matter being too much abused when you remember that you still have the right of a trial by jury afterwards in case you are indicted or whether -- in case an information is signed against you.

CHAIRMAN: I would suggest that we defer action on this to see if we can get together on rewording of this section to satisfy the objections to Section 9.

ANTHONY: I'd like to ask a question either of Mr. Tavares or the chairman of the Bill of Rights Committee. Statement has been made that many states have abolished indictment by grand jury. Is that the fact, Mr. Chairman?

MIZUHA: It is my recollection that most of the western states permit prosecution by information in felony cases. However, the question as to whether or not we should have prosecution by information or first by indictment by grand jury is a question that strikes at the heart of the rights of the people. If you have a prosecutor who is rather anxious to make a record for the prosecution of the people, why he can go into court at any time with an information without the safeguard of a grand jury. As it is, as the most of you will recall there are many cases that are presented to the grand jury in which the grand jury returns a "no bills." In that case then the prosecutor is powerless to proceed with the prosecution. However, if we have information permitted in the State of Hawaii, prosecution by information, then any prosecutor who desires to make a record of prosecutions can go into court with information and prosecute anyone he pleases.

ANTHONY: I think the section ought to stand as drafted by the committee. It's entirely too much power to put in the hands of a single prosecutor, the right to bring somebody before the criminal courts in a felony charge. All of us know that when a person is charged in a criminal case in a felony, most people remember the fact that so and so was indicted, but very few remember that he may have been acquitted, and so you -- we have this screening process of an indictment by a grand jury which I think is a wholesome thing in support of the liberties of the people.

CHAIRMAN: I put the question.

WIRTZ: Perhaps as being one of the delegates who's had more experience with the cumbersome procedure so called, of the grand jury, I'd like to reecho the statements of the last speaker. The grand jury serves a very important screening process and protects persons from being persecuted.

CHAIRMAN: The only question before this Convention is shall we adopt -- before the Committee of the Whole is shall we adopt Section 9 as written by the committee? All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

MIZUHA: Section 12.

CHAIRMAN: Section 9 is adopted.

MIZUHA: Section 12 has been deferred.

CHAIRMAN: Section 10?

MIZUHA: The speaker desires that the Section 10 and --

CHAIRMAN: Section 12 has been --

MIZUHA: They deferred --

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will move that Section 12 be brought up at this time.

BRYAN: I don't think the Chair can make that motion. It's in order for me to make it. I move that Section 12 be adopted.

CHAIRMAN: Motion made that Section 12 be adopted.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Same motion and same second.

ROBERTS: Would you read that?

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Roberts.

ROBERTS: Would you please, would you please read that.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Roberts recognized.

ROBERTS: I'd like to have the language read that we're adopting. Which language, the one that's proposed or the original?

MIZUHA: I believe --

CHAIRMAN: As written by the committee. That's all we have before the house, before the committee.

MIZUHA: In order to avoid confusion there have been two drafts circulated; one with the omission of the sentence on witnesses and one with the sentence on witnesses included. And probably it is proper at this time to hear from the delegates as to whether or not they would like to have that sentence included or deleted.

CHAIRMAN: Would the committee care to have Section 12 read as amended?

WIRTZ: For point of information. I think it's only proper that the movant of Section 12 should move it in the form that he wants it in. There's been a motion on the floor to adopt Section 12. Which Section 12?

CHAIRMAN: A motion has been made to adopt Section 12 as originally written.

BRYAN: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: And that was the motion. Now if there is any amendment in its adopt -- amended form, you can move for these.

HEEN: It seems to me that the last sentence of that section is unnecessary. That matter can be handled by the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair believes that there were several amendments to be brought in and maybe the amendments cover that deletion. I do not know.

HEEN: There was a proposed amendment reading as follows: "Witnesses in criminal cases shall not be unreasonably detained or confined." One criticism against that, that was made to me by Delegate Ashford, that that might mean that you can detain witnesses in civil cases.

CHAIRMAN: By implication.

TAVARES: I agree that that sentence is -- the inclusion of that sentence is not a wise one. It has received no construction by the courts as far as I know, and I think that if a witness is unreasonably detained, under the Constitution or the Bill of Rights of this state as it will be adopted or the Federal Constitution, a witness will probably have ample protection. He can get out on habeas corpus and as far as Delegate Ashford's statement was concerned, it was only in answer to a question about what's the meaning of the writ of ne exeat, and she merely explained, as I understand it, that the writ of ne exeat is a civil action which used to exist in some states and in this jurisdiction which prevented a person from going out of the jurisdiction until the courts permitted him to do so. That has been abolished, and unless we put it into the Constitution I don't think that we can impose such a writ in this jurisdiction.

J. TRASK: I move that we amend Section 12 by deleting the last sentence.

A. TRASK: I second that motion.

DELEGATE: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion's been made and seconded that we delete the last sentence of Section 12. "Witnesses in criminal cases shall not be unreasonably detained or confined." All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

MIZUHA: Section 13.

CHAIRMAN: Section 12 now reads: "Excessive bail shall not be required nor excessive fines imposed nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted."

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of adopting that section as read say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

BRYAN: Just to keep the records straight, let's put in there a motion that the section be adopted as amended.

J. TRASK: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: That motion has already been put.

MIZUHA: Section 13 now.

CHAIRMAN: Section 13.

DOWSON: I move for the adoption of Section 13.

BRYAN: I second the motion.

ASHFORD: Thirteen was deleted.

MIZUHA: Section 13 was not deleted but it was deferred.

CHAIRMAN: Section 18 has been deleted.

MIZUHA: Section --

CHAIRMAN: Thirteen has been deferred.

MIZUHA: There is a new draft of Section 13 on the desk of the delegates, which contains only one sentence: "There shall be no imprisonment for debt." I believe the delegates should be heard on the subject.

C. RICE: Very good draft.

ANTHONY: I move that Section 13 be amended to insert a period after the word "debt" --

CHAIRMAN: I thought you were going to say after the word "thirteen" -- after the letter "thirteen."

ANTHONY: -- and delete the remainder of the sentence which --

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

ANTHONY: So the section will then read: "There shall be no imprisonment for debt" period.

TAVARES: In agreeing with the amendment I should like the report of this committee to state that this was deleted, not out of any desire to eliminate the power of the legislature to provide for such exemptions, which it now does, but simply because that's implied anyway in the general grant of legislative powers.

MIZUHA: That is understood by the committee.

TAVARES: And I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of adopting Section 13 as amended say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.
One sentence --

MIZUHA: Section 14.

CHAIRMAN: Section 14. Same motion?

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 14.

CHAIRMAN: Same second?

DOWSON: I second it.

MIZUHA: Section 14 was again discussed with the representative of the office of the attorney general, with another distinguished jurist from the fourth district, and at this time I'll call on Delegate Anthony to express his views on the subject.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Anthony, care to be recognized?

ANTHONY: I am not a jurist.

CHAIRMAN: No explanation necessary.

ANTHONY: The question raised by the attorney general's department was the phrase in the second line "nor shall the laws or execution of the laws be suspended." And the opposition was that that would defeat the enactment of such legislation as the Hawaii Defense Act. I've reviewed that subsequent to the last discussion, and I believe that that is a desirable deletion and therefore I would move that the phrase "nor shall the laws or the execution of the laws be suspended," be deleted.

ANTHONY: Including both, one comma.

CHAIRMAN: Motion has been made and duly seconded that the words "nor shall the laws or the execution of the laws be suspended," be deleted.

ASHFORD: I move to amend that motion by adding to it "and that a period be placed after the words 'requires it' and the remainder of the sentence stricken."

ANTHONY: Is there a second to that motion?

PHILLIPS: I second the motion.

ANTHONY: It's been seconded. I'd like to speak against the amendment. I think it's -- the purpose of that, the delegate from Molokai will recognize, is to make sure that the only body that can suspend the writ is the legislature, In other words there cannot be an executive suspension. It is to clarify the difficult situation that arose under the Federal Constitution in which by reason of the position in the article, there was a debate whether it could be done by the executive or by the legislature. This language, I think, is good because it shows that it can only be done by the legislature and in the manner provided by the legislature. In other words no executive can go around and suspend the privilege of the writ. He's got to have statutory authority and the precise method, and the duration, which is also very important, be fixed when the legislature does suspend the privilege of the writ.

SMITH: I move that the amendment amending the amendment be tabled.

MAU: Point of information. I was wondering whether or not the delegate from the fourth district would interpret Section 14 a little more fully to the Convention. Assuming that the words "nor shall the laws or the execution of the laws be suspended" were left in, wouldn't the legislature -- couldn't the legislature, even under that provision, provide for protection? I remember the argument made at the last meeting of this committee that in view of the new type of warfare, it might be that we had to have a suspension of laws immediately, and I wondered whether the legislature couldn't provide for such a contingency under Section 14 as now worded without any amendment.

PORTEUS: There is, as I understand it, a motion pending to further amend the amendment and also a motion to table that amendment. If we can dispose of that, I think then the question --

CHAIRMAN: The motion to table was not seconded. It was not seconded.

PORTEUS: The motion to table --

CHAIRMAN: The only motion we have is an amendment to the amendment.

ANTHONY: In answering Delegate Mau's question, I would construe Section 14 to permit the legislature to pass a statute which would authorize the suspension of the laws as well as authorizing the suspension of the privilege of the writ. In passing such a statute then the legislature would deposit executive power with the governor to state the circumstance and the duration in which the privilege of the writ could be suspended or the laws could be suspended. Does that answer the delegate's question? And so with that in view, perhaps the section could very well stand as drafted.

A. TRASK: I'd like to ask Delegate Anthony this question. If that second clause "nor shall the laws or the execution of the laws be suspended" is in fact deleted from this Section 14, would that not allow trial by jury and other rights of similar absolute nature be suspended with the writ of habeas corpus? In other words, as amended the import of the section is limited only to the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, not to the attendant laws with respect to other rights. Now that's why it seems to me that if we delete that second clause the purpose of the suspension of the writ is necessarily tied up with other laws, and so I just question the advisability of deleting that second clause.

ASHFORD: I concur --

A. TRASK: The question to be answered -- Oh, pardon me.

ASHFORD: I concur with Delegate Trask. I think if the last phrase in that Section 14 is retained, there's no reason in the world why the second phrase should not be -- second clause should not be retained. In other words, if it is to be cared for by a general act of the legislature in times of peace, then there's no reason why that act of the legislature could not provide for the suspension of laws at the same time as it provides for the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, and the method in which it should be done.

MIZUHA: Perhaps the section should be explained in its entirety. In the event the second clause "nor shall the laws or the execution of the laws be suspended" is deleted, then the delegate -- the suggestion by the delegate from Molokai as to the deletion of the last sentence is in order. Then the section would refer only to the writ of habeas corpus. The question with reference to the suspension of the laws would be a statutory matter, or a matter for the legislative article to decide. That is the original position on the part of the office of the attorney general, that if we delete the second sentence then the last -- second clause, then the last clause should be deleted.

KELLERMAN: Did I -- point of information. Did I understand Mr. Anthony to -- or the gentleman from the fourth district to state that he now believes that the second clause should be retained in Section 14? Would he answer that question? Then I'd like to speak to the point, CHAIRMAN: That is my understanding.

ANTHONY: I believe on further reflection that the sections should pass as drafted by the committee.

KELLERMAN: I agree with that for this reason. If you delete "nor shall the laws or the execution of the laws be suspended" you're restricting the entire section only to the writ of habeas corpus. The legislature could then constitutionally pass a general act which would grant the executive the power to suspend the operation of the laws at any time he felt like it, which seems to me to be a very tremendous exercise of power and certainly something that should be limited in the interest of the people by a constitutional prohibition.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that if it is so, then all previous motions should be withdrawn rather than be put.

TAVARES: I do not agree with the withdrawal of the motion. Those words are new, "nor shall the laws or the execution of the laws be suspended." As far as I know they've never been interpreted in any other constitution. Suspension of the laws isn't only confined to time of war. You have provisions that when certain things happen certain laws shall be suspended in civil matters. This thing is going to leave a terrific ambiguity in your laws, it will cause 15 or 20 years of litigation before you know what it means. If the legislature says, in case the federal government suspends payment of certain payments, some other laws shall be suspended for our paying out money, this thing will be attacked under this section. It has no meanings that are definite enough for us to be sure of it, and I submit it should go out. It's too broad.

WIRTZ: It seems to be an appropriate time. I move we take a recess.

DELEGATE: I so move.

CHAIRMAN: Short recess declared subject to the call of the Chair.

(RECESS)

[Part of the proceedings not taped. Delegate Mizuha moved for deferment of Section 14.]

MIZUHA: -- is in Committee Proposal No. 4.

CHAIRMAN: Six, as I recollect.

MIZUHA: Is in Committee Proposal No. 4, entitled Section 6. And at this time it is proper to consider Section 6.

CHAIRMAN: Section 6 of Committee Proposal No. 4, is now open for discussion.

BRYAN: Did I understand the committee chairman to move the adoption of Section 6?

CHAIRMAN: No.

BRYAN: I so move.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion has been made and seconded that --

DOWSON: -- adoption of Section 6 in the --

CHAIRMAN: -- we adopt Section 6 of Committee Proposal No. 4.

TAVARES: Mr. Chairman, a point of information. I wonder, I may be perhaps going into too much speculation here, but I wonder if this means that a person whose religion prohibits him from fighting, but not from joining the military organization for other purposes, would have the right here to force the National Guard to accept him even though he wouldn't fight. I think when you put religion in here, you might get to that situation, of a man saying, "I'm constitutionally averse from my religion to killing somebody, but I'm willing to serve in the medical corps. Therefore I insist the National Guard take me." I wonder if that's been considered.

MIZUHA: I believe the policy on the question of enlistment as raised by the delegate from the fourth district can be answered by the policy of the armed services during the recent war. Conscientious objectors were accepted in the service of this country in non-combatant positions. They were welcomed in those positions because in the state of total war this country desires the service of every individual who can contribute something. And as one who had gone to war, may I say that a non-combatant soldier is just as important as a combatant soldier, and if there is a person, because of religious scruples, who does not wish to serve as a combatant but is desirous of serving as a non-combatant with the armed forces, I think he should be welcomed.

TAVARES: I don't doubt but what if they can use him they ought to do that, but they may need these non-combatant s in civil jobs and here you're giving him the right to force himself upon the military even though he doesn't want to do all that the military will order him to do. Now I agree we should use all the people we can, and I certainly don't want to see those people's rights, who through their religion don't believe in killing other people, infringed, but at the same time I think if that's what the purpose of this -- purport of this is, that you're going a little far in saying that the military must nevertheless accept him although he can't be a 100 per cent soldier. I think that's cutting down the powers of your military in selection a little bit too much.

A. TRASK: Point of information, Mr. Chairman. What section are we dealing with, please, and how does it read?

CHAIRMAN: Section 6, Proposal No. 4.

DELEGATE: That's under Committee Report No. 24.

CHAIRMAN: Committee Report No. 24.

BRYAN: I'd like to speak to delegate from the fourth. I think when that came up in the committee, we had considerable discussion on that, and it was the feeling that this section would not prevent voluntary segregation. Is that correct, Mr. Chairman? In other words if someone was to enter the militia and because of his religious principles wanted to restrict his activitiy therein, it could be restricted by the militia on a voluntary basis.

MIZUHA: That's correct.

TAVARES: On the other hand, let's think what would have happened if this were in the Federal Constitution. We have a National Draft Act, we allow conscientious objectors to be excluded, or to be sent over to non-combatant service and so forth, but we give the government the right not to take them if they're conscientious objectors. We don't force them to fight. Immediately you'll force the government to put him on the payroll and pay him even though he's not willing to do 100 per cent of what the government orders him to do. It seems to me that's going too far. Now if the committee report would state that this was not the intention, of going quite that far, why I think that might take care of it, but as it stands literally now, you give a conscientious objector the power to come to the enlisting people and say, "Look, I want to enlist in this militia and collect my salary as a buck private; I'm not willing to fight, I'm not willing to do only one or two things, but you've got to take me on and you've got to pay me that salary."

ASHFORD: Does that -- does the language as it exists here in Section 6 not permit a classification without regard to religion? Suppose a man has religious scruples against killing other people and there is no place in that organization where a man who will not shoot is fitted. Is that not a proper method of classification which has no relation to religion?

CHAIRMAN: Care to answer the question, Mr. Mizuha?

MIZUHA: With reference to the desire of a conscientious objector to serve in a non-combatant position, that's a voluntary choice on his part and certainly in the armed forces of this country we have lots of positions that the non-combatant can serve in. In the recent war, for every man on the front line we needed about 12 behind the front lines. And I think the delegate of the fourth district is wrong in his idea that there's no room for the conscientious objector in the armed services of our country. They should be welcomed, for this country has recognized religious freedom throughout the centuries. And if because of that recognition that individual says that he cannot fight on the front lines and kill other people but desires to serve this country in non-combatant duties as a member of the armed forces, we should welcome him and give him that chance. That is what America stands for at the present time, and if because of conscientious objector's philosophy of life he does not wish to carry the rifle, but wants to administer first aid to anybody on the front line, why that is something that we should encourage and not deny.

TAVARES: I think I've been misunderstood. I do not say there is no place for those people, but I do say this, that their place might be in the civilian occupations. You have a national guard unit. We are not the national government. In case of a draft the national guard -- in case of a war, the national guard, the military forces' functions in the community are limited. The federal government takes over.

In our limited need and our limited funds, the state needs national guardsmen or that type of military only for certain specific purposes.

Now why should they be forced to take conscientious objectors? I say yes, give the conscientious objectors the right to volunteer, but give your state also the right to choose and say, "Now look, we need a 100 or a 1,000 men who are willing to carry a gun. That's all the money we've got, that's all we need. We don't need a conscientious objector, therefore we can't take you." I see no objection to that. We're not forcing him to fight. What I see the objection to is to have this conscientious objector come and say, "Although I am unwilling to fight with those 1,000 men, I still insist you take me in, create a special category of non-fighters and pay me and keep me on the payroll." I think that's going a little too far in strapping the powers of the state.

CHAIRMAN: Any other objections to Section 6?

MIZUHA: May I speak on the subject, and refer to Committee Report No. 24? The third paragraph on the first page reads as follows: "Section 6 is divided into two sections. The first section provides that no citizen shall be denied enlistment in any military organization of this state, nor be segregated therein because of religious principles, race, color, ancestry or national origin. In providing for this clause, it is the intention of the committee that this provision in the Constitution should not be construed as preventing the legislature of the State of Hawaii in creating any military organization or from authorizing such organization to adopt such rules and regulations relative to age, health and other qualifications for enlistment, or to deny enlistment on the basis of security to this state and to the nation."

I refer to that last clause "or to deny enlistment on the basis of security to this state and to the nation." In the event that we have a state militia which goes -- which is incorporated into the armed forces of this nation in time of war, the armed forces has the policy to take care of the conscientious objectors; they will be under federal jurisdiction. Then we would have perhaps an organization like the Hawaii Territorial Guard which functioned during the war here, which would be the home militia. If in the creation of the Hawaii Territorial Guard the legislature provided for such qualifications which it deemed for the best interest of the State of Hawaii; if the legislature in creating that Hawaii Territorial Guard would state that the security -- would make provision for a security board, which security board would determine that a conscientious objector who remains at home and just cooks is not of the type of calibre that would be necessary for the security of the State of Hawaii because he's a non-combatant, I believe there is ample room to deny that person enlistment in the Hawaii National Guard.

But with this provision here I believe the fears of the delegate from the fifth-fourth district are not of consequence at all, because as we know, under the definite standards laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States, they have determined what a conscientious objector is, and in the history of litigation in this country, with reference to conscientious objectors, they reflect but a small minority of the people of this country, very small. And to raise the question that he has raised, it seems as though if we are to have the full participation of our citizenry in the armed forces of our nation we should give them a place if they desire to serve God and country.

TAVARES: The chairman of the committee now seems contradictory. A little while ago he said it was intended that a person with religious scruples could compel himself to be accepted as an enlistment. Now he says you can't and points to the report. I think that should be made clear.

MIZUHA: Under the report as submitted here, it isn't for us to decide what qualifications the legislature may prescribe or what authorization the legislature may give in the creation of the Hawaii Territorial Guard as to what their rules and regulations, which will have the force of law, should be. First of all, I'm proceeding on the general principle, and in the event the legislature sees fit to lay down the other principles for enlistment, it is for the legislature to decide. I do not believe I'm contradicting myself on that point.

TAVARES: If I were satisfied that the words in the report to the effect that regulations might deny enlistment on the basis of security to this state, if I were satisfied that that covered the situation I would accept it as an explanation. However, I wonder if the word "security" is broad enough. You may have a person extremely loyal, no question of security involved, but you only have need for say 500 men to carry a gun and guard your ports, and that's all the money you've got. Now why should you have to take on a conscientious objector? It's no matter of security perhaps there, unless the chairman wants to say that that is involved. If he says that that's what it means, I will accept it.

MIZUHA: Certainly if it is the legislative finding in creation of the Hawaii Territorial Guard and it calls for a security board and that security board feels that the security of the State of Hawaii in time of war cannot permit the conscientious objectors to serve because they cannot defend the country, or defend the state, well, that is for their interpretation; it's not for the Constitutional Convention to decide what is the breadth of that term of "security."

BRYAN: I think that the delegate from the fourth is worried about a limited guard and having fit and willing persons displaced by those that are not willing to do certain things. I would believe if the enrollment or enlistment was limited, the National Guard would be free to say that they could take the first 500 most qualified persons and certainly on that basis they could pick and choose very carefully.

TAVARES: If that is the meaning of the term, and it's so understood, I'll vote for it; but I wanted that made clear. I didn't think it was in the beginning.

DELEGATE: I think it is.

MIZUHA: I believe the report was quite clear in the method it was written, that this Convention is not going to write statutory legislation in the Constitution, and the point that the delegate from the fourth district raises is a legislative matter.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will now put the question. All those in favor of adopting Section 6 as written by the committee --

A. TRASK: Point of information. Is Section 6 limited just to the first paragraph, or does it-on which the debate has been centered on-or does it include also consideration of the second paragraph which reads as follows: "No person shall be denied the enjoyment of his civil rights nor be discriminated against in the exercise of his civil rights because of religious principles, race, sex, color, ancestry or national origin"?

CHAIRMAN: The question is to adopt the section in its entirety, including the second paragraph.

A. TRASK: Well, I'd like to direct the attention of the Convention to the second section and ask of the chairman whether or not he considered this second section with reference to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act? Now in the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act committee report which it submitted, and the proposals with respect to its inclusion in the Constitution, there is the opening provision namely: "All provisions in this constitution notwithstanding." Now, the Bill of Rights Committee has extended to the Madam Chairman of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act Committee and to other members of our committee that with that opening sentence in the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act proposal and its inclusion in the Constitution that this section—this second paragraph of Section 6—will not in any way interfere, and that such statement be included in the report of this Committee of the Whole to indicate that this Section 2 will not interfere with the provision of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act. Could the chairman answer that?

MIZUHA: The Committee on the Bill of Rights had before it the question as to whether or not the anti-discrimination clause as written herein would conflict with the general provision for the record incorporation of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act in the Constitution. After due consideration, it was felt that the provisions in the Hawaiian Homes Commission section as read by the delegate from the fifth district would take care of the situation, and I believe if the Constitution as adopted contains that section as read by the delegate of the fifth district with reference to the Hawaiian Homes Commission, then it will serve as an exception to this Section 6.

ASHFORD: Point of information. May I ask the delegate from the fifth district whether he regards the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act as a racial discrimination in the granting of civil rights?

A. TRASK: I certainly do not - -

CHAIRMAN: Question's been answered.

A. TRASK: - - but in drafting such a basic law as this - -

CHAIRMAN: This is an explanation to the answer?

A. TRASK: - - the delegate from Molokai smilingly acknowledges, that we have to make this, the wording here, precise and exacting as possible, and elastic as possible, and I want to say to the chairman of the Civil Rights Committee who answered the inquiry that Judge Heen, delegate from the fourth district, has concurred in his conclusion and that we request that the same be included in the report of this committee. Will that be done, Mr. Mizuha?

MIZUHA: I believe that would be a proper subject for a motion on the part of the delegate from the fifth district to be decided by this Committee of the Whole.

TAVARES: It seems to me that if we adopt or go on the premise, which I think we have to go on until the courts rule otherwise, that the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act is constitutional; it is an act of Congress which has already given rights to a certain group of our people; if that act is valid, and as I say we must presume it until it's declared unconstitutional by the courts, until and unless it is so declared, then the people of this territory have no civil rights to share in that—in the Hawaiian Homes lands, and therefore this civil rights provision will not apply at all, as I read it.

Now if the act is unconstitutional then somebody ought to take it into court, and do that, and it'll take care of itself automatically. I feel therefore that actually in adopting this Bill of Rights, this section, we will not be infringing on the rights of any persons entitled to benefits under the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act.

A. TRASK: I concur with the expression of the delegate from the fourth district, and at this time move that this expression may heretofore be incorporated in the report of this Committee of the Whole.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

BRYAN: I'd like to point out that this particular paragraph was reworded to get to the point that the delegate from the fourth just made. "No person shall be denied the enjoyment of his civil rights," that means civil rights that would go to him under any other circumstances. Therefore, if enjoyment of the rights guaranteed by the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act do not apply to certain individuals, this paragraph would not apply to them.

CHAIRMAN: Will you please restate the motion.

A. TRASK: The expression made with respect to second - - Section 2 of - - paragraph 2 of Section 6 be incorporated as part of the report of the Committee of the Whole.

CHAIRMAN: You've heard the motion. All in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried. Motion is carried.

MIZUHA: The vote on the adoption of the whole section is in order, Mr. Chairman.

DOI: I understand this Section 22 was deferred to be considered together with Section 6. In the discussion so far, there has been no mention made of the relationship of those two sections. It is my opinion that the phrase "civil rights" have as yet not been adjudicated to include the right to marry, and I would like to ask that question of the chairman of the Committee of the Bill of Rights, or those who were of the thought that the free civil right does include that particular right I am referring to, whether it is included in the civil right.

MIZUHA: I heartily agree with the delegate from Hawaii and it is a proper subject for consideration by this Convention.

BRYAN: I'll move that the committee report show that civil rights in this paragraph extend to the right to marry.

DELEGATE: I'll second that.

A. TRASK: Point of information. Does that mean therefore that Section 22, which is sponsored by Delegate Doi, is going to be withdrawn?

CHAIRMAN: That is my understanding; if it's embodied in Section 6, then probably - - in all probability, Section 22 will be deleted.

DOI: That is right; I don't want to see the Constitution filled with many unnecessary superfluous details.

DELEGATE: But with this provision there it has to be guaranteed.

DELEGATE: May I say that the Delegate Doi has shown statescraft here this morning.

CHAIRMAN: The report I believe will show that, Mr. Doi.

MIZUHA: A vote on Section 6 is in order at this present- -

CHAIRMAN: Motion is now - - all those in favor of adopting Section 6 in its entirety as written by the committee, say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

MIZUHA: Section 10 is now in order.

CHAIRMAN: Section 10 is now in order.

DOWSON: I move for the adoption of Section 10.

BRYAN: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: Motion's made and seconded. Motion's been made and seconded that Section 10 be adopted.

WIRTZ: I rise to a point of information. As I understood the discussion just previously -- just when we adopted Section 6, that something was going to be done with Section 22.

CHAIRMAN: We'll come to that and have it deleted later on.

ANTHONY: The last sentence of Section 10 reads: "The legislature may authorize the trial of mental incompetency without a jury." From the very beginning of our government here way back in the 1840's, incompetency cases have been tried by judges sitting in chambers without a jury. It is not a kind of a case that requires a -- it is not a suit at common law which requires a trial by jury, and therefore, I think that we should eliminate that sentence, and I move that the motion be amended to eliminate the last sentence of Section 1 -- it's 10.

A. TRASK: I second that motion, but in seconding that motion I don't agree for the reasons given. I do think, and there is considerable thinking on the part of many people rightly or wrongly, that many people are committed to our institutions here wrongly and improperly. And I am for the deletion of that situation and let the legislature in their own manner go ahead and make provisions if they deem possible, but I do ask for the deletion.

CHAIRMAN: You second the motion to delete? Motion has been made and seconded that we delete the last sentence of Section 10, "The legislature may authorize the trial of the issue of the mental incompetency without a jury." All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

All those in favor of adopting Section 10 as amended --

TAVARES: I have an amendment to propose. I think it's on the desks of the members, entirely rewriting Section 10. And now that they've voted to eliminate the last sentence of the original section, it will be of course understood that my amendment will not include that last sentence, and I will ask to have it deleted. But I believe it's been distributed among the members of this Convention. Well, I have more copies here if it hasn't been.

CHAIRMAN: Will the messenger deliver copies to those who haven't a copy?

TAVARES: "Section 10. Jury Trial. The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, except in suits at common law where the value in controversy exclusive of costs does not exceed one hundred dollars." But, "For the trial by jury of any civil case or any misdemeanor punishable only by fine, the legislature may provide for a verdict by not less than three-fourth of the members of the jury, after not less than six hours of deliberation; and in any case, except a capital offense, a jury may be waived, or by agreement of the parties in open court, a smaller number of jurors than required by law may render a verdict by any stipulated majority."

Before the members rise straight up from their seats about such a provision, I should like to explain that this is not new. The Constitution of the Republic of Hawaii which was in effect in 189 --

CHAIRMAN: To discuss your amendment, I perhaps do think it would be very much in order to let the -- make the motion the amendment be adopted, and you can discuss the --

TAVARES: I move that the amendment be adopted.

DELEGATE: I'll second it to allow discussion.

TAVARES: The Constitution of the Republic of Hawaii allowed majority verdicts. It allowed the legislature to make any changes wanted in the number of jurors or the proportion of jurors in both types of cases. It read like this: "Subject to such changes as the legislature may from time to time make in the number of jurors for trial of any case, and concerning the number required to agree to a verdict and the manner in which the jury may be selected and drawn, and the composition and qualifications thereof, the right of trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used shall remain inviolable except in actions for debt or assumpsit in which the amount claimed does not exceed one hundred dollars, and such offenses less than felonies as may be designated by law." That's Section -- Article 6, Section 3 of the Constitution of the Republic of Hawaii.

Mr. Chairman, I am not asking this Convention to go as far as the Republic of Hawaii went, although I think there's sound reason for it. I am only asking an amendment which will allow the legislature if it so chooses to provide for three-fourths majority verdicts in civil cases and to provide for three-fourths majority verdicts only in those misdemeanors that are punishable only by fine.

A. TRASK: May I ask the delegate a question? Why is the insertion put in there which is strictly lawyer language "except in suits of common law where the value in controversy except for costs does not exceed one hundred dollars"?

TAVARES: I took that from the Federal Constitution, because it's been construed; that language has been construed in the Federal Constitution.

A. TRASK: Well then, I can't help but recall that, I think it was the associate justice of the Supreme Court in 1862 or 52, he said that the common law of England was not the law of Hawaii, that we were not a colony of Great Britain. So although the common law may have been interpreted by the Supreme Court of the United States as having its certain application and connotations and meaning, I think in -- for purposes of simplification, I would like to see a more definitive expression incorporated, rather than to leave it in that realm of pure judicial determination as to what are suits at common law.

TAVARES: Well, as a lawyer I would think, I would much prefer to have the multitude of federal decisions interpreting a section at my behest than to have to have some new language and wait 10 or 15 or 20 years for the court to interpret it. I adopted that because it had a definite meaning, what are suits at common law. The federal courts have construed them.

ANTHONY: Will the speaker yield to --

TAVARES: I yield for a question or a reply.

ANTHONY: I'd like to reply to delegate from the fifth district. That language—I'm not saying I agree with the amendment—that language comes directly from the Article 7 which reads: "In suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed twenty dollars" only this is put in the reverse. Suits at common law have a very definite meaning. They do not, as the speaker will recognize, include suits in equity, or causes of action of an equitable nature. They do not include marriage and divorce, admiralty, guardianship, probate and things of that nature, and so I think the point is well taken that we should adhere to the language that has a settled judicial construction, and this has.

TAVARES: I'd like to point out that 18 states now have provisions either allowing majority verdicts or granting power to the legislature to provide for majority verdicts in civil cases. These states are as follows: 11 states allowing a three-fourths majority in all civil cases, comprising the states of Arizona, Arkansas, California, Idaho, Kentucky, Nevada, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Dakota, Utah and Washington; one state allows a two-thirds majority in all civil cases—that's Montana; one state, Missouri, allows two-thirds majority in civil cases in courts not of record, that's the justice of the peace courts; four states allowing a five-sixths majority in all civil cases, comprising Minnesota—after six hours deliberation, from which I took the six hours provision—Nebraska, New York, and Wisconsin; one state allows less than unanimous verdict in all civil cases—that's New Mexico. And these states have adopted this provision at various times down to, I think, as late as 1938. It's not -- it's an old provision, but there is a modern trend in favor of majority verdicts.

Now six states allow majority verdicts in some types of criminal jury trials. One state, Oregon, allows ten out of 12 in all criminal cases except murder. One state, Louisiana, provides for unanimous verdict of a jury of five for crimes not necessarily punishable by hard labor—I think we call those misdemeanors—nine out of 12 for crimes necessarily punishable at hard labor and the unanimous verdict of 12 for capital crimes.

Four states allow majority verdicts in misdemeanor cases: Idaho, five-sixths for misdemeanors; Missouri, two-thirds in courts not of record; Montana, two-thirds in cases less than felony; Oklahoma, three-fourths in cases less than felony.

My proposal follows the majority of these states in granting to the legislature power to provide for verdicts in civil cases by not less than three-fourths of the members, but it does not follow many states in permitting the legislature to reduce the number of jurors. I'd like to do that too, but I ran into too much opposition from the bar and I think at least we can get together on this three-fourths, and the persons who objected to the reducing of the jury, members of the bar who are very, very conservative, did not object to the three-fourths verdict in civil cases. Likewise, I have found resistance among the bar to a majority verdict for all misdemeanors, and a little resistance to the provision that I asked for in the misdemeanor cases where the penalty is only a fine, but I believe that that would not be serious.

Now I have not interviewed many members of the bar about the provision for eliminating jury trial in cases not more than a hundred dollars, but I believe this is in line with the Federal Constitution which allowed in the early days, 1890 something, the -- or 1879, was it, excuse, 1789 -- allowed it to be eliminated in cases of not more than twenty dollars. I believe twenty dollars in those days would buy as much as a hundred dollars today. And I want to point out that the Republic of Hawaii had a hundred dollar provision and I'm simply following that. We're going back now to 1894 in Hawaii, so that's nothing very alarming.

A. TRASK: May I ask the delegate one question? The second, after the word "deliberation" about the middle there, well, let's divide this situation here. The first provision up to the first semi-colon, you're referring to all suits, criminal as well as civil. Is that correct?

TAVARES: Yes, the first, "The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate," then the exception comes along.

A. TRASK: Then the next section is with respect to civil suits alone. Is that correct?

TAVARES: No, it's civil suits and misdemeanors not involving imprisonment.

A. TRASK: Yes, over one year.

TAVARES: No, it just provides for misdemeanors where the punishment is only a fine.

A. TRASK: Thank you, and in the second, third section -- clause after that semi-colon, after the word "deliberation," would you consider -- after the word "capital offense," "a jury may be waived, or by agreement of the parties" with reference to criminal and civil cases, shouldn't specific reference be made to criminal as well -- or civil cases?

TAVARES: I think that means all cases. If there's any doubt about it, I think the report could make that clear. In other words, actually I might say this, I'm legislating a little bit in that provision. I think the courts have interpreted, generally speaking, constitutions to allow waiver, but to make it doubly certain I thought I would insert it in here. There are some slight disagreements I think in some courts. The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure allow waiver, but this would make it clearer than ever.

I would like to say this, the provision for the six hour deliberation taken from Minnesota I think is good. It prevents a jury from taking a hasty vote without deliberation and then three-fourths verdict coming out unexpectedly before they've had a chance to talk things over, and perhaps some of them changed their minds. And I think six hours is a reasonable period to require that deliberation before you have a majority verdict.

DELEGATE: Mr. Chairman, on that same point, Mr. Tavares --

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Tavares, you have the floor unless you care to yield--

TAVARES: I yield for a question.

LEE: As I read then, the paragraph after the sentence after the semi-colon after "deliberation," it applies to criminal and civil cases.

TAVARES: That's correct.

LEE: And furthermore at the end of that particular sentence, "by any stipulated majority." I'm trying to conceive of a defense lawyer coming into court representing a defendant who's charged say with a felony, say burglary in the first degree, which carries possibly at least 20 years, wherein he and the government may stipulate on a lesser number than 12 jurors as I understand it. Is that right? And then, do I gather by the last part of it, "by any stipulated majority" that a counsel for the defense would agree to a majority verdict in that case?

TAVARES: I think that's quite possible. It's not as unheard of as it might sound. I could imagine a case where a defense counsel has been getting along very nicely with the jury; he's made a very strong case; he feels sure his man is going to be acquitted; one juror dies, he's only got 11 left. All right, what's he going to do?

LEE: Are you pointing at me, Mr. Tavares?

TAVARES: I mean, what's he going to do then?

CHAIRMAN: He may drop dead.

TAVARES: Is he going to waive the requirement of 12 jurors and take his chances on his good case, or is he going to force himself to have another trial. I think it's quite possible he might be willing to say, "Your Honor, I am willing to gamble," or "I'm willing to accept the verdict of this jury of 11 men, or 10 men, rather than go through another long trial that my client can't afford."

LEE: Well, I don't know whether Mr. Tavares has represented many defendants - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that probably - -

LEE: - - but I doubt from my own personal experience that I would agree to - - with the government in a situation, to be bound by a majority verdict in a felony case when there's a possibility of one man in a 12-man jury voting against conviction so that there may be a hung jury. I think this is a very - - myself I believe it's a dangerous invasion into the concepts relating to the presumption of innocence, burden of proof, and the matter of reasonable doubt when you're dealing with a jury. And I believe a clause of this sort, "by any stipulated majority," I could go for a majority verdict in civil cases but I can't see the matter of opening it up to majority verdicts in criminal cases.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Corbett has moved for deferment. Is that - - Delegate Corbett is recognized.

CORBETT: I am completely confused at this point as I think probably a good many of the other laymen on the floor are also. It appears to me that the lawyers present who deny the privilege of any amplification in areas other than their own want to go too far when they get into legal areas, they become completely technical or very difficult for the non-lawyers to understand. I would like to move to table this amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Motion for deferment is in order.

DELEGATE: The lady forgets her husband's a judge.

CHAIRMAN: The motion for deferment of this section is very much in order, if so - -

MIZUHA: I second the motion to defer.

CHAIRMAN: Someone move - -

DELEGATE: I so move to defer, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Motion's been made and seconded that action on this section be deferred till later so that proper amendments can be drawn to satisfy the delegates of this committee. All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Motion carried.

MIZUHA: May we return to Section 14 which was deferred earlier in the morning?

CHAIRMAN: Section 14 is now in order.

MIZUHA: Section 14 has been redrafted, and I believe it's before all of the delegates.

DOWSON: I move for the adoption of Section 14 as redrafted.

A. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion's been made and seconded that Section 14 be adopted as redrafted.

ANTHONY: I might state, Section 14 has been broken into two sentences which will carry out the intention of the Committee on Bill of Rights. The first sentence has to do with the suspension of the privilege of the writ; that sentence is identical with the language taken from the Federal Constitution, thus carrying with it all judicial interpretations as to when a suspension may take place.

The second sentence has to do with the suspension of laws and it provides that the legislature shall specifically authorize those particular cases in which laws may be suspended. In other words, it prescribes any executive suspension, such was feared by the Committee on Bill of Rights. I might state that this second sentence comes directly from the Massachusetts Constitution, and with the assistance of Senator Heen is somewhat of an improvement on the existing language of the Massachusetts Constitution.

MIZUHA: I would like to move to amend Section 14, the last clause, to read as follows: "to be exercised only in such cases as the legislature shall prescribe, expressly prescribe." I believe the phrase "in such particular cases as . . . "

[Delegates' remarks inaudible.]

CHAIRMAN: No second so far.

A. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion been made and seconded.

ANTHONY: There is a motion pending before the house, as I understood it, that Section 14 as amended be adopted.

CHAIRMAN: The redraft, the redraft of Section 14 be adopted.

ANTHONY: Redraft, and that - - I suggest that it would be in order for the Chair or have the Clerk read the redraft and then take a vote on the redraft. I think it covers the language which Delegate Mizuha had in mind.

CHAIRMAN: Will the chairman read the redraft of Section 14.

MIZUHA: "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless, when in cases of rebellion, or invasion, the public safety may require it. The power of suspending the laws or the execution of the laws shall never be exercised except by the legislature or by authority derived from it; to be exercised in such particular cases only as the legislature shall expressly prescribe."

That is the redraft, but in my amendment to the redraft - -

CHAIRMAN: A motion to adopt that redraft has been made, and an amendment to that has been offered by him.

MIZUHA: There's an amendment to this redraft.

CHAIRMAN: An amendment to that redraft has been offered by Mr. Mizuha. And seconded by Mr. Trask.

ANTHONY: Could we have the amendment read by the Clerk?

CHAIRMAN: Do you mind reading the amendment? Mr. Mizuha, I think needs more - - Read the amendment.

CLERK: "To be exercised only in such cases as the the legislature shall expressly prescribe."

ANTHONY: That means substantially the same thing. I don't know whether there's been a second to that, but I'd like to speak against the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Well if it's the same thing, it would be a matter for Style to change; if it isn't - -

ANTHONY: Yes, it's substantially the same thing, only the language in the redraft requires that power to be exercised in such particular cases. In other words, there shouldn't be any general statute of the legislature suspending the laws, it ought to be in particular cases. Therefore I think that that language is desirable.

MIZUHA: The reason for my amendment was the limitation is too specific here. However, it's a question of style, and if the Style Committee can rewrite this without changing the substance of the section, I withdraw the amendment.

A. TRASK: I'd like to bring to the attention of the - -

CHAIRMAN: Do you withdraw your second, Trask?

A. TRASK: - - that the word "expressly" I believe should be stricken. "Expressly prescribe." I raise that, I'm not looking for the burglar under the word, but because our laws in Hawaii are always printed expressly and they're published expressly, and all the other familiar language in the Constitution has been "as the legislature shall prescribe." And I don't think "expressly" here would do anything else but to diminish the prescriptions authorizing the legislature in the other provisions.

ANTHONY: That's correct.

A. TRASK: I think it should be stricken.

ANTHONY: I'd like to answer that question. The reason why the word "expressly" is used there is for the very purpose that you may not have any executive to look at any statute passed by the legislature and say, "By implication the legislature really intended that I ought to suspend this or that law." In other words, if an executive is going to ld exercise his extraordinary power, the legislature should expressly tell him the circumstances in which he may exercise the extraordinary power.

A. TRASK: I'll withdraw the suggested amendment in view of that explanation.

MIZUHA: I move the previous question.

CHAIRMAN: The only motion before the committee now is whether we shall adopt Section 14, the new draft, the redraft of Section 14, in its entirety. All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

MIZUHA: I move that the committee rise, report progress and take leave to sit again tomorrow at 9 o'clock.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded.

PORTEUS: Before you put that question you've got some other committee meetings tomorrow that are being scheduled. I suppose they can be deferred, if need be. The Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on Executive Powers and Functions wants to meet tomorrow.

HEEN: I rise to a point of information. What happened to Section 14?

CHAIRMAN: Section 14 has been adopted.

PORTEUS: May I ask a question? Was the motion that we sit tomorrow morning carried?

CHAIRMAN: At 9 o'clock.

PORTEUS: At nine.

CHAIRMAN: I haven't called for the "noes" yet. Contrary minded. Carried unanimously.

PORTEUS: It's okay.

JUNE 6, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: Committee of the Whole please come to order. Chair recognizes Mr. Dowson.

DOWSON: Inasmuch as the adoption of Section 6 makes the consideration of Section 22 redundant, I hereby move that Section 22 be deleted.

BRYAN: I duly second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion has been made and seconded that we delete Section 22, Proposal No. 3 on the Bill of Rights.

WIRTZ: Wasn't there a - - Point of order. Wasn't there a motion to adopt Section 10 when we adjourned?

CHAIRMAN: I'll have to ask the Clerk about that. My memory isn't that long.

TAVARES: Section 10 was pending, as I understand it, and was deferred. I'm sorry I didn't hear what went on just prior.

CHAIRMAN: Section 10 as I remember was deferred for amendment.

ANTHONY: At this time - -

CHAIRMAN: So I believe that the motion is in order to delete Section 22.

ANTHONY: I thought we were discussing Section 10 and I suggest that that be deferred until we get Section 10 out of the way. I have an amendment on the Clerk's desk which I'd like to have circulated. Section 10 relating to trial by jury.

CHAIRMAN: That was deferred, though if that is the pleasure of the committee - -

WIRTZ: Point of order. There is a motion pending, and the Chair has ruled that it's in order.

CHAIRMAN: I believe that Section 22 should be deleted, but - - I so rule and so move. The question is shall Section 22 be deleted? All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Section 22 is deleted.

We'll now proceed on with Section 10.

ANTHONY: I move that Section 10 as presented by the committee be amended to read as follows: "Jury Trial. In suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed one hundred dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved. However, the legislature may provide for a verdict by not less than three-fourths of the members of the jury."

TAVARES: I wish to second that motion and to withdraw my original motion for amendment.

ANTHONY: May I speak to the motion at this time? I rise to speak to the motion.

CHAIRMAN: You may.

ANTHONY: The proposed amendment relates only to civil cases, does not relate to criminal cases. It preserves the same language as is found in the Federal Constitution, reason for that being that we want to preserve also the judicial interpretation.

There is one phrase in the Federal Constitution that has proved some - - made some difficulty and that is that section of the Federal Constitution which says "No fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States and according to the rules of the common law." The reason for not including that in the proposed amendment is that courts have had difficulty in setting aside verdicts. Under the Federal Constitution, there are certain limitations on the powers of the law courts to set aside verdicts, and therefore that language is not preserved. But otherwise it will preserve the right of trial by jury in all civil cases in controversies where the amount in controversy exceeds one hundred dollars, and it also authorizes the legislature to provide for less than a unanimous verdict, namely a three-fourths majority of the jury. In other words, it leaves the mechanics of that provision to the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: The question is, shall Section 10 be approved as amended? All those in favor of adopting - -

A. TRASK: Question of Mr., Delegate Anthony. There is no reference whatever and there's - - none is intended with respect to criminal cases?

ANTHONY: That is correct, Delegate Trask. This applies exclusively to civil cases. In other words, in all criminal cases the right of trial by jury by a unanimous verdict is preserved intact as it stands today.

There is one item that I would like to call to the Convention's attention and that is, possibly the amount of one hundred dollars is too low. In other words, the Convention might very well fix it at five hundred dollars, which would be a rather small claim in these days; let that be tried without a jury. I would accept any suggestion that - -

A. TRASK: Does the delegate mean that when you say that the criminal - - the right to criminal jury trials is preserved, you're referring to the Convention's adoption of the Federal Constitution?

ANTHONY: No, there's an express provision in the Bill of Rights section, Mr. Trask. I'll find it in just a minute.

DELEGATE: Mr. Anthony.

A. TRASK: Is that that inviolate section? "The right to jury trial shall be inviolate"?

MIZUHA: "Speedy trial by an impartial jury."

ANTHONY: Number 11. "In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury of the judicial circuit wherein the crime shall have been committed."

A. TRASK: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Anthony, the Chair would like to know the reason why the one hundred dollars is there inserted. Couldn't the legislature fix that at five hundred or seven fifty or three hundred or whatever it deems feasible and just leave out the "in suits at common law, the right of trial shall be preserved. However the legislature may provide" so and so and so and so.

ANTHONY: Well, Mr. Chairman, that I think would be inadvisable, because the most trivial suit for debt, say it was two or three dollars, a person could demand a jury trial. The jury fees would run on the order of a hundred dollars, and all that expense would be passed upon the state.

CHAIRMAN: Couldn't the legislature fix that at five hundred dollars?

ANTHONY: Not unless there is a provision in the Constitution; therefore there should be a stated sum, either one hundred dollars or five hundred dollars as a maximum.

WIRTZ: Under our present system in the territory five hundred dollars is the jurisdictional amount fixed for the district courts, which does not permit jury trial. I would like to amend Section 10 as amended to delete the figure one in the second line thereof and insert in lieu thereof five, so that the jurisdictional amount here for jury trial would be five hundred dollars instead of one hundred dollars.

WOOLAWAY: I'll second that motion.

ASHFORD: Point of order. In the statement by the Chair of the issue before the house, was that not incorrect? I think it was stated as the question before the Convention as whether Section 10 as amended shall be adopted. And I think the real question is on the amendment first.

CHAIRMAN: Discussion is on the amendment.

MIZUHA: I would like to ask the delegate from the fourth district that, in a verdict if there is any damages awarded, the figure arrived at would be by the three-fourths number of the jurors present?

ANTHONY: That would depend entirely upon legislation. In other words in the absence of an implementing statute, the effect of the section relating to the continuity of laws would preserve a unanimous verdict. In other words it would then be up to the legislature to pass a statute implementing the constitutional provision providing for less than a unanimous verdict. As to the question of damages, in that case, of course, the jury would assess the damages. But the party of pleading would have to include a statement that the amount in controversy in this case exceeds five hundred dollars.

MIZUHA: The question of damages will be settled by three-fourths verdict, three-fourths number of the jurors present?

ANTHONY: That's correct. If there is statute to that effect, of course.

MIZUHA: Yes.

A. TRASK: Was the motion of the amendment to amend by Delegate Wirtz seconded?

CHAIRMAN: I think by Mr. Woolaway.

A. TRASK: May I ask a question of Delegate Wirtz? Would this - -

ANTHONY: Will the gentleman yield just a moment.

A. TRASK: I will.

ANTHONY: I would like to accept the amendment of Delegate Wirtz. That will speed up the process here, I think.

A. TRASK: Well, I'm just wondering about whether - - of the advisability of this five. I'm personally opposed to it. There are - - we have on the statute books a rent control law. People, landlords have sought to get tenants out of their houses. The amount in controversy may in some cases may be less than one hundred dollars. It may go over, may be less than five hundred dollars. Now under this situation, the question in many cases is not so much money as it is a place to live. And seldom is any case in summary possession, that is landlord trying to evict the tenant, where the amount in controversy is more than five hundred dollars, and in many cases, it's a question of the humanity of the situation involved, as well as the law. And it would seem to me if the amount is placed at five, it would work great havoc and take away much of the good things that we say are -- repose in the jury system, in jury trials. And so I would -- and according to this reading, no person who is sued by his landlord to evict him where the amount in controversy is less than a hundred dollars, I question whether or not he has a right to demand a jury trial. Unless the judge wants to answer that.

TAVARES: May I answer that question? As Mr. Anthony tried to explain, this provision is only a permissive one. Unless and until the legislature passes a law to that effect, the right of trial by jury is the same as it is today. The legislature can then pass a law if it wishes allowing jury trials in less than a hundred dollar cases, in less than five hundred dollar cases. They can set it at fifty, twenty-five, zero, over five hundred, any amount they want, and that will be a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the legislature which undoubtedly will take all those matters into consideration, and I don't doubt but what if there is a need for it, the legislature can adjust it.

A. TRASK: Well, if that is the case, why insist on five?

ANTHONY: No, no, I think --

A. TRASK: That's the situation.

ANTHONY: Mr. Chairman, I think Mr. Tavares didn't say exactly what the section says. "In suits at common law where the value in controvery shall exceed five hundred dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved." Now in other suits, the legislature can pass any kind of a law it wants, and it could exclude,Delegate Trask, rent control cases from that. I think the proper place to address your problem would be to the legislature. If you want to preserve a jury trial for a hundred dollar rent case, then preserve that in a legislative enactment.

A. TRASK: I think five is too big a number. I think the courts are made for the little person, and there're more little people in Hawaii than there are big people, and I do feel that there, the figure, the amendment five is just too much.

TAVARES: What amount would the delegate feel?

A. TRASK: I say preserve that one hundred --

TAVARES: One hundred?

A. TRASK: -- and so psychologically, the little fellow might think he'll have just as much opportunity as the big fellow.

WIRTZ: In view of the discussion, I withdraw my amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair recognizes the fact that the motion has been withdrawn.

WOOLAWAY: The second is withdrawn.

TAVARES: As I understand it then, that restores the original motion to amend to one hundred dollars. One more last statement. On the desk I believe of each delegate is now a memorandum about state constitution provisions on the right of trial by jury which I have gone to great pains to prepare, and which indicates either the gist or the wording of many state constitutions on this subject. I'd like to point out one typographical error which, due to the haste of writing this, crept in. On page three at the bottom, note No. 14 -- I asked to have it circulated.

ROBERTS: Copies have not been circulated to all members.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Tavares, I think that explanation should be embodied in the report in the Committee of the Whole.

TAVARES: Well, I just wanted to call it to the members' attention, if they care to look at it while this discussion is going on. On page three, starting with the word "note No. 14 supra" that refers to note No. 14 of the last quotation on page two, and it should have gone right there. On page two you have a quotation which at the -- in the last two, three lines has a little number 14 and 15 opposite certain words. And those are the notes, 14 and 15, to which the note No. 14 on page three, and note No. 15 on page four refers.

CHAIRMAN: The only motion before the --

MIZUHA: Before a vote is taken on the section as amended, I believe it is well at this time to make clear to the non-lawyers assembled here that this will give the legislature of the future State of Hawaii the power to change what has traditionally been the system of jury trials here in the Territory of Hawaii. And that must be understood very clearly because we are departing from what has been written into our judicial system for the past 50 years, where there must be a unanimous verdict in civil jury trials. And if the Convention, the delegates assembled here, are ready to give our legislature that power, then the vote should be in the affirmative, but if you feel that the legislature should not be given that power, and that we should retain the 12-men jury system, I mean unanimous verdict, then the vote should be no.

However, it is my own personal feeling that a three-fourths majority verdict is a little too low. Hence, I propose this amendment, the last sentence, the last clause, to read, "the legislature may provide for a verdict by not less than five-sixths of the members of the jury."

CHAIRMAN: As the Chair understands it, no less than three-fourths, so the legislature can fix it at five-sixths.

TAVARES: That's correct. The legislature doesn't have to fix it at three-fourths. The legislature can fix it at five-sixths under this amendment.

MIZUHA: There was no motion there. I think somebody wants to second my motion here.

ASHFORD: May I ask a question of the chairman of the Bill of Rights Committee? Section 10 as reported by the Bill of Rights Committee reads, "The right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate." Does that embrace the section of the Federal Constitution requiring suits at common law where the value is in excess of twenty dollars to go to a jury, or does it require all cases to go to a jury, in his opinion?

MIZUHA: It is my understanding that all cases should go to the jury. But that section was reported out for general discussion on the floor.

TAVARES: I'd like to point out one more thing, and I hope the members will forgive me for being so long-winded, but this is important. And that is today very properly our legislature has provided that jury fees shall be paid by the Territory. That means that the poorest man or the wealthiest man are in equality as far as the cost of jury trials are concerned. In many jurisdictions, including the federal courts, before you can go to trial in a civil case before a jury, you have to pony up half the fees on each side.

Now, I am for preserving that system of the Territory paying those jury fees so that the poor man has an equal chance with the wealthy one, but I think that we should try to cut down a little of that expense. In too many small cases and too many civil cases they gamble with the jury, expecting a hung jury or trying to get a hung jury, and it only takes one man. One man is all you have to have on a jury today to hang a jury in a case that may be very clear.

In many cases where the case is very doubtful on one side, they will hope to have one friend on the jury and let me point out that I don't know that it's happened down here, but on the mainland it has happened. Where you have a unanimous jury requirement all a wealthy man has to do is to either bribe or scare one juror enough to hang a jury, to beat the game. Now this allowing the legislature to reduce the number by which a jury may bring a verdict prevents that from happening. It makes it much harder, if the legislature chooses to do so, for a person to hang a jury, and since the government is paying all those expenses–four dollars a day for every juror and it ought to be increased and probably will be–I think the government ought to be able to cut down a little bit on those expenses.

HEEN: By having a special provision included in the Constitution to allow for a verdict by less than a majority, what is the implication there as to trials of criminal cases? We have no provisions similar to this as to criminal cases.

TAVARES: There is a provision that's already been approved by this Committee of the Whole on criminal trials allowing the trial by jury, which takes care of that.

HEEN: That's correct; it says that in criminal cases a person accused may have a speedy trial by an impartial jury. That generally means the majority - - not a majority verdict but a unanimous verdict. Now can a jury be waived in the criminal case or can, by agreement between the state and the accused, a jury - - may a jury return a verdict less than a majority vote? My point is this, having dealt with criminal trials, with trials of civil cases, to allow less than a unanimous vote, does that imply that in criminal cases, they must always be unanimous, and that they must always have a jury trial?

ANTHONY: I think Senator Heen has raised a good point that should be clear in our deliberations. The intention is to preserve intact the right of the unanimous verdict of a jury in all criminal cases. That's Section 11. As to the question whether or not a jury verdict can be waived, that has been held by the courts permissible. As a matter of fact, in federal courts today, there are many felony cases that are tried without a jury. That can be done by stipulation; so I think the clear import of modifying the section relating to suits at common law, and these minutes should disclose that, that we are preserving intact the unanimous verdict in all criminal cases, but in civil cases, we are giving the legislature a framework on which they can operate to pass a statute which will provide for less than a unanimous verdict.

TAVARES: In that connection I think it should be pointed out that the Judiciary Committee has proposed an article which gives the supreme court of the new state the power to make rules of criminal and civil procedure. It is my understanding and belief, and I think our report should so show, that under that power the supreme court can adopt rules which will permit, under proper safeguards to be set forth in the rules, persons to agree to majority verdicts even in criminal cases. I mean, yes, to a verdict by less than a number of 12, and less than a majority. I think the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure largely provide for that now, and therefore, I would not want it to be understood that by deleting those sections, those provisions out of my original amendment, I was abandoning the idea that it can be done. I think it can be done if we adopt the judiciary rule and allow the supreme court to make rules which will permit people, not require them, permit them if they choose, to agree to verdicts of less than 12, by less than 12 jurors and a verdict of less than unanimous.

CHAIRMAN: The only question before the committee now is, shall we adopt section - - of adopting the amendment to Section 10. The amendment is, "In suits at common law where the value of controversy shall not exceed one hundred dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved; however, the legislature may provide - -

ANTHONY: No "not." The chairman read a "not."

CHAIRMAN: "Shall be preserved."

FONG: May I ask the introducer a question? I notice here that the first sentence, "In suits at common law." Now I think that is meant to differentiate that from suits in equity. Is that right?

ANTHONY: That is right, Delegate Fong. That is taken directly from the Federal Constitution, and has over a hundred years' interpretation. It would exclude equity suits, probate, divorce, guardianship, admiralty, things of that nature which are traditionally not suits at common law.

FONG: Yes. Now will that prevent the legislature from passing a law stating that in equity suits there may be a jury? I understand that some jurisdictions have that.

ANTHONY: That is covered usually by rule. That's the federal practice at present. In a suit where there is a merger of law in equity the court by rule can require a jury verdict. Under the present law we can't have a jury in equity cases except in an advisory manner. It is never definitive, such as it is in a law action or a suit at common law.

FONG: Well, in the territorial courts we have no trial by jury in equity cases.

ANTHONY: Well, we could have a jury in an advisory capacity, in equity cases.

FONG: Yes, but the legislature could provide for trial by jury in equity cases?

ANTHONY: The answer is yes.

ASHFORD: My recollection is that under the present partition statutes certain issues can be tried by jury.

TAVARES: That is correct. It is my understanding as the original introducer of the first, the forerunner of this amendment, that there's nothing to prevent the legislature from saying - - from extending the right of jury trial over what it is today.

CHAIRMAN: I'll ask the delegates to sit while a member has the floor.

ANTHONY: I want to give the delegate from the fifth district an example. In probate, as we all know, that ordinarily comes before a judge in chambers. If you're dissatisfied with the decision of the judge, then by legislation you may take an appeal. The same thing happens in the land court. Nothing in this section would prevent the enactment of such legislation.

FONG: And nothing in this section will prevent the legislature from stating afterwards that in suits in equity there may be trial by jury?

ANTHONY: That is correct.

FONG: Then this paragraph here, "in suits at common law," it deals with all those actions which we understand as having jury trial at the present time?

ANTHONY: At common law, Mr. Fong.

A. TRASK: May I address my remarks to the delegate from the fourth district also on this same question. It seems to me that when a person comes into a lawyer's office and has a law suit, he doesn't know whether it's a common law, equity or probate or whatever it is. He's got pilikia, and he wants adjudication, and he may want a jury trial. So I don't know whether or not we should really confine ourselves just to the federal delineation of this right.

In other words, with the development of time this -- the constitution and the people of the United States have not deemed it advisable to have a constitutional amendment on this thing, but a person who is in trouble and comes to a lawyer, he's got a case, and it seems to me that we ought to broaden the right of a jury trial and determination of facts. As a matter of fact there's been discussion in many quarters of perhaps a right of trial by jury in equity cases. Some people have suggested divorce cases. And it seems to me that we ought to, in view of what -- how people feel about suits in the courts, to broaden the scope of the right of jury trials and to leave it safely to the legislature to provide for the latitudes or the constrictions that are deemed right and proper.

I do feel, therefore, that as the questions of Delegate Fong disclosed, that we ought to make the right of trial by jury be preserved extending to all cases, whether at common law or any other type of law. So I suggest here an amendment to the amendment reading as follows: "In all civil cases," striking out the word "suits at common law." Again, have an insertion after the word "in"; "in all civil cases"; and then continue, striking out "suits at common law."

YAMAMOTO: May we have a -- I move for a five minute recess.

MIZUHA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Short five minute recess has been ordered.

(RECESS)

A. TRASK: With the distinct understanding that the right of the legislature to provide for jury cases and all other suits other than those at common law, and that the same notation will be made in the report of this Committee of the Whole, I withdraw any further inquiry to the matter.

ANTHONY: That is clearly the understanding of the amendment as just stated.

CHAIRMAN: The only question before this committee --

MIZUHA: May I again point out to the delegates assembled that this provision will authorize the legislature to provide for a verdict where nine people sitting on a jury of twelve can return a verdict that will -- must be accepted by the court. And because I feel that is too low a majority, I propose the following amendment: The last clause to read as follows: "The legislature may provide for a verdict by not less than five-sixths of the members of the jury."

DELEGATE: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion has been made and seconded that the three-fourths be deleted, and in lieu thereof insert the word "five-sixths."

TAVARES: I should also like to point out as shown in my memorandum that a goodly number of states permit that today, and we have heard no complaints about the quality of justice in those states. As a matter of fact, I read an article recently in a law journal which pointed out that there were fewer appeals in jurisdictions having a majority verdict than in many other jurisdictions having the unanimous verdict. It has worked well in those states which have it; we've heard no complaints whatsoever.

Finally, I'd like to point out that although the Federal Constitution under which we now operate does not require our legislature to give a jury trial in probate cases, in land court, in many other types of cases, our legislature has actually extended the right of trial by jury rather than restricted it. It seems to me, therefore, that you can trust your legislature to make the proper adjustments that the people want, because even with the power to restrict, they have not restricted so far.

MIZUHA: I wish to point out that five-sixths is ten out of twelve; the original amendment was nine out of twelve. We still make provision for a majority verdict --

CHAIRMAN: One man hanging around there some place. Nine, ten. All those in favor of making it five-sixths rather than three-fourths say "aye." Contrary minded. Chair is in doubt unless a roll call is requested.

PORTEUS: Rather than calling a roll call which takes a long time couldn't we have a raising of hands? It'll be a whole lot shorter.

CHAIRMAN: So ordered. All those in favor of five-sixths, please raise your right hand. Contrary minded. Twenty-five, five-sixths; twenty-four, no. All those not voting will vote in favor of the amendment.

MIZUHA: Those not voting will increase it in favor of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: I understand, in favor of the amendment.

DELEGATE: Roll call.

MIZUHA: I believe it's not necessary for a roll call. We had a show of hands here already.

DELEGATE: It's only 49 delegates.

KAUHANE: We demand a roll call.

CHAIRMAN: A roll call is always in order. All those in favor of a roll call, please raise your right hand.

Clerk, please call the roll. All those in favor of five-sixths vote "aye."

ANTHONY: I'd accept the amend -- I will accept the amendment. I'm the proposer of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: You're out of order. The roll call has been demanded and ten votes carried.

ANTHONY: I'm trying to speed up the procedure here.

CHAIRMAN: Well the only way to speed up procedure is take a vote on it. Clerk, call the roll.

ROBERTS: What's the question, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Question is all those in favor of five-sixths vote "aye." Contrary minded, "no."

[Roll call not available.]

CLERK: 20 Ayes, 37 Noes, 6 not voting.

TAVARES: I now move that the amendment be approved and that we recommend passage when this committee rises, in the form of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The only motion before this committee is that - -

DELEGATE: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: - - Section 10, the amendment to Section 10 be adopted.

TAVARES: That's correct.

DELEGATE: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the amendment, say "aye."

DELEGATE: Roll call. Roll call.

MIZUHA: Mr. Chairman, roll call.

CHAIRMAN: Roll call has been requested. All those in favor of roll call, please raise your right hand. Can't even count. I only see four hands up now.

DELEGATE: Wait a while, there are more than four.

DELEGATE: Hold your hands up.

DELEGATE: I see fourteen.

CHAIRMAN: Roll Call. Roll call has been demanded. All those in favor of the amendment please - - the amendment offered by Mr. Anthony.

MIZUHA: Will you please read that amendment so there will be no doubt in the minds of the delegates.

CLERK: "Section 10. Jury Trial. In suits at common law where the value in controversy shall exceed one hundred dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved. However, the legislature may provide for a verdict by not less than three-fourths of the members of the jury."

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of that amendment, vote "aye." Contrary minded, "no." Clerk, call the roll.

[Roll call not available.]

CLERK: 51 Ayes, 8 Noes, 4 not voting.

CHAIRMAN: The ayes have it.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 10 as amended.

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Motion has been made and seconded that we adopt Section 10 as amended.

KELLERMAN: I have another amendment to propose to Section 10, although it does not relate to the identical subject matter. Should that - -

CHAIRMAN: The amendment may be offered.

KELLERMAN: - - be introduced now or later. Is that in order now?

CHAIRMAN: Your amendment is in order.

KELLERMAN: Is it in order?

CHAIRMAN: Your amendment may be offered.

KELLERMAN: Now? I wish to propose a second amendment to Section 10. Perhaps the ori - - the one on the subject matter under immediate discussion could be titled Section 10A and this could be entitled Section 10B. "No person shall be disqualified to serve as a juror because of sex." I think you have this proposed amendment on your desks. I'd like - - if there's a second to that motion, Mr. Chairman.

MIZUHA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Mrs. Hayes second the motion?

HAYES: Second it.

KELLERMAN: In speaking to that motion, I should like to point out to the delegates that serving on a jury is not necessarily a civil right. It is more a civil duty. It is not necessarily included under the general anti-discrimination clause on civil rights. For that reason it is expressly spelled out in very many state constitutions, that no person shall be disqualified to serve as a juror because of sex.

Under the present Organic Law, there is a limitation. Women are not allowed to serve on juries under the Organic Act, and statutes passed subsequent thereto have of course been in conformity with the Organic Act prohibition. When the Organic Act goes out of existence there - - that limitation will go out of existence. But this guarantee in the Constitution makes it impossible for the legislature to provide otherwise.

CHAIRMAN: Section 10 by Mrs. Kellerman is self explanatory. Any of those opposed to this amendment?

ANTHONY: That is precisely in accord with the recommendations of the Judiciary Committee. I suggest, I'm in favor that the amendment be left to the Committee on Style, the appropriate place to put it in the Bill of Rights.

CHAIRMAN: Well then, it's in order we adopt this amendment.

ASHFORD: I would like to say that I do not concur with the delegate from the fourth district in the suggestion that that is not covered by the protection of civil rights.

AKAU: I was wondering if there might be an amendment on this. If we are going to accept it in the Bill of Rights, instead of the word "because" using the words "on account," that is to "serve as a jury - - juror on account on sex."

CHAIRMAN: On account of?

AKAU: Not "because." There are more words, but I think the meaning is slightly different.

KELLERMAN: I suggested the word "because" because that is the word that has been used in the anti-discrimination clauses in the other parts of the Bill of Rights. It's simply uniformity of style.

CHAIRMAN: Changing that word may be a matter of style rather than anything else.

SAKAKIHARA: I move to amend amendment offered by the delegate from the fourth district. Strike out "because" and insert after "juror," "by reason of sex."

KELLERMAN: I should think that's a matter of style. I don't object to "on account of," "because of," "by reason of" or any of the phrases that mean the same thing.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair so believes. It's a matter of style. Question. All those in favor of - -

MAU: Just for the record, I don't quite agree with the sponsor of the motion that the service on juries by women is merely a duty. I consider it one of the fundamental rights that belong to that class of our citizens, and I want the record to show that there's no unanimity in the explanation given by the sponsor. I have a question on this, whether or not putting this provision under Section 10, which relates to suits at common law, civil trials, whether women will serve only in civil cases. I want that to be very, very clearly explained.

ANTHONY: That was the purpose of my making the statement that it ought to be left to the Committee on Style as to the appropriate place to put this language in the Bill of Rights.

CHAIRMAN: Well, it could be called 10B and Committee of Style -- Style Committee may change the --

DELEGATE: Question.

CHAIRMAN: Question. Shall we adopt the amendment to 10B. All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

TAVARES: Just to satisfy some of the members who have doubts, I move that when this committee makes its report it include in the report a statement that this section that's just been amended, the second part of Section 10, applies to all jury trials.

MAU: I second the motion.

HEEN: To have no doubt about it at all, this section should be numbered 10A. In other words, this should not be a paragraph in Section 10. Otherwise, the implication will be it's limited to civil cases.

CHAIRMAN: Well, someone will have to move for reconsideration.

HEEN: I move that this particular amendment be numbered 10A.

CHAIRMAN: You'll have to reconsider your action.

HEEN: I don't know whether that amendment was made to 10A, or I mean, to 10 itself. I heard Delegate Kellerman say it might be 10A or 10, part of 10.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment as printed calls it 10B.

HEEN: 10B. That's all right.

MIZUHA: I think we agreed that the intention here was that this 10B as proposed, was not restricted to civil cases only, and that the rest was to be left up to the Style Committee. There is no question, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair so rules.

FUKUSHIMA: To make a lot of other things straight for the record, I think there is no clear understanding [of] the composition of a jury. Do we mean here in Section 10 and Section 11 when we say jury, it is a jury of 12? Without any question?

ANTHONY: No question about that. We adopted the federal language and that in turn adopted the common law. It is a jury of 12.

TAVARES: There is not one decision of any state or the United States courts that has ever held that the word "trial by jury," or "jury trial," or the word "jury" when used without any other modification means anything but 12 men. There isn't one decision to the contrary; therefore, when we say "jury" without an amendment or without a change of what we mean, it means 12 men. 12 persons.

ASHFORD: Does it mean 12 men or does it mean 12 men and women?

CHAIRMAN: God created men; he made no distinction between men and women. Section 25, I think is the next section.

MIZUHA: Before we go into Section 25, the Committee on the Bill of Rights would like to call the attention of the various delegates to some standard provisions that have been included in other Bill of Rights. However, for instance, that no law, no bill of attainder or ex-post-facto law incurring the obligations of contract should -- some people have asked that we write it into the Bill of Rights but after consultation with the chairman of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions, it is very clearly covered by Article 1, Section 10 of the United States Constitution, which prohibits -- which is a prohibition on the state from passing such laws, hence it is not necessary to include in our Bill of Rights.

Likewise, the Committee on the Bill of Rights considered the question of segregation in the public schools in connection with this anti-discrimination clause. It is proper at this time that a question be asked of the chairman of the Education Committee, whether that would be incorporated in the education article of the Constitution.

LOPER: The committee proposal in its present form does include a sentence against such discrimination, but it has not yet been passed in its final form by the committee.

MIZUHA: Then, I believe it is proper at this time that the recommendations of the Committee of the Whole will include a provision or a qualification that that question could be considered or raised again in the future, in the event that the education article does not contain that provision of segregation in the public schools. And I so move.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

BYRAN: Point of order. Couldn't that be offered as an amendment to the education section when it's presented, if it's not included?

MIZUHA: That'd be proper. So I withdraw my motion. But it will be offered if it's not included.

Before going on to Section 25, I believe it is proper at this time to ask any of the Convention delegates if they have any other questions with reference to the Bill of Rights, and to raise it at this time inasmuch as Section 25 is a saving clause and will complete the discussion on the Bill of Rights.

CHAIRMAN: Section 25 should be adopted.

MAU: The chairman of the Bill of Rights Committee has asked whether there are any questions as to any other provisions which might go into the Bill of Rights. Is that correct?

MIZUHA: I did not get the question.

CHAIRMAN: The question is whether the members of the committee feel that perhaps some other provisions may go into the Bill of Rights.

MIZUHA: There's none at present. We have a communication from the Committee on Labor and Industry that they will incorporate this clause on the right to organize and bargain collectively and will insert it in their article; hence the Committee on the Bill of Rights has not taken it up at this time. However, we reserve jurisdiction of the question, and will present it to the floor in the event there's no such report by the Committee of Labor and Industry.

DOWSON: I move for the adoption of Section 25 if nobody else has any question.

BRYAN: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion has been made and seconded we adopt Section 25.

Now, Mrs. Akau.

AKAU: I want to say it isn't -- my statement hasn't to do with 25, it has to do with the thing as a whole.

CHAIRMAN: You may make the statement.

AKAU: Point of information. At the time that the proposal on women on juries was presented here to the floor, it was tossed around. I think a statement of the consensus of opinion was that it first went to the Bill of Rights Committee, then it came back on to the floor and it was suggested, I believe, not moved, but it was a consensus of the group that it go to the Judiciary. Now, the point I raise is, if after we've kicked it around and somehow the feeling was that it belonged in the Judiciary, that that's really where it should be, and that we are out of order, I believe, in allowing it to go into the Bill of Rights. I just raise that point.

CHAIRMAN: I'd like to raise -- to remind you that Section 10-B covering that subject has been adopted by the entire Committee of the Whole.

AKAU: I realize that, Mr. Chairman. I was just wondering if it might be in order to reconsider.

CHAIRMAN: It's in the Bill of Rights now.

AKAU: Yes, if it would be in order to reconsider, although it has been passed now, to reconsider this particular section and have it go over to Judiciary without consulting the people on style, since that was the decision of the group some few weeks hence.

CHAIRMAN: The Committee on Style can not change the meat of the -- cannot change the language.

AKAU: Well, they won't -- Mr. Chairman, excuse me, they won't change the meaning of it, but I just raise the question as to the propriety of the thing since we had already moved. I, therefore, move now that we reconsider Section B-10, not the content of it, but the position, the place where it belongs.

CHAIRMAN: That, and I'd like to remind the speaker again, that would be left to rules allowed the Committee of Style, to put that section or any other section where they feel it should belong. I think that's a matter for Style to decide. Anyone feel differently may express their views on it.

All those in favor adopting Section 25, say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

Now go out of Committee of the Whole into regular session.

MIZUHA: I move that the committee rise and report its recommendations to the Convention.

CHAIRMAN: Adjourned.

HEEN: I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. And during the interim period the report of the committee should be reduced to writing.

CHAIRMAN: Final, final?

MIZUHA: I withdraw my motion in favor of that motion.

CHAIRMAN: All those in -- Is there any second?

SAKAKIHARA: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor that the Chair rise, report progress, beg leave to sit again, say "aye." Contrary minded? Carried.

JUNE 15, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: You should have before you for final action, the Committee of the Whole Report No. 5 in reference to the Bill of Rights. I presume most of you have read the report. At this time the Chair would like to thank Representative, I mean Delegate Nils Tavares for doing in my opinion—I've read the report—a wonderful job. I think it's a credit to this Convention and to the Constitution to have in the Constitution this report. And it's a very nice piece of work, in my opinion. I want to assure you that the signature is mine.

What is the pleasure of the committee?

[Inaudible. Motion made, seconded and carried to adopt committee report.]

SAKAKIHARA: What is the motion, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Motion has been made and seconded when the Chair rise, it reports the final adoption of the committee report. All those in favor say "aye." Contrary minded. Carried.

Chairman: HERBERT M. RICHARDS

Second Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole shall come to order.

ANTHONY: I move we take a five-minute recess while all the delegates read the report. Then if they have any questions they can ask them.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no objection, I declare a recess.

(RECESS)

KELLERMAN: First I'd like to explain the delay and inconvenience to this body in asking that the Committee of the Whole sit again on this report. As you are all aware, the committee report was adopted very hastily. I had before me the report of the Committee of the Whole, and I was trying to find in my folder the report of the Committee on the Bill of Rights to get the language to propose the amendment. Before I was able to do so or to phrase the amendment, the report went through. I voted "no" against it, but that was a minority "no," and therefore it appeared that it had passed. And so I've asked for reconsideration on this point.

I would like to propose an amendment to Committee of the Whole report, page five, if you'll turn to page five, your Committee of the Whole report—the end of the first sentence under "Recommendations, Reasons or Explanations." The first sentence ends: ". . . and other relevant circumstances." At the end of that sentence I would like to -- I move to insert the following sentence: "Your committee understands further that this paragraph would not prevent the state from authorizing any military organization to deny enlistment on the basis of security to this state or the nation."

MIZUHA: I second the motion.

TAVARES: I see no objection to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion? All those in favor please signify ayes and noes. Contrary minded? It is so ordered.

At this time, the Chair would like to recognize Delegate Woolaway.

WOOLAWAY: I think it's fitting at this time, while we're in the Committee of the Whole, to recognize some of our outstanding citizens, youngsters who someday will take our /places, the type we enjoy to have, the Cub Pack No. 9 of Kaimuki.

CHAIRMAN: We are most happy to have Cub Pack No. 9 of Kaimuki here, to be with us this morning.

KAWAHARA: I would like to propose an amendment to the report, page five, Section 6. I believe on your desk, you have circulated amendment to Committee of the Whole Report No. 5 which reads: "The Committee is unanimously agreed that the right to marry is a civil right within the meaning of Section 6." I would like to amend -- move to amend section -- the report on Section 6, page five. After the words "consent of Congress" the following words: "Your committee also agrees that the right to marry is a civil right within the meaning of Section 6."

CHAIRMAN: You have heard the motion. Is there any --

DOI: I second the motion.

TAVARES: Although this constitutes repetition of what is stated in another portion of the report under Section 22, I see no objection to inserting it here also.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion? All those in favor of inserting the amendment, please signify by saying "aye." Contrary minded. The ayes have it. So ordered.

HEEN: In order not to have the original written report of the Committee of the Whole re-written, I would suggest that a supplemental written report be submitted setting forth these amendments. That'll save considerable time and it will obviate the necessity of writing a new report altogether.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

HEEN: I so move.

CHAIRMAN: Put that in the form of a motion. It's moved and seconded. Any further discussion? All those in favor please signify by saying "aye." Contrary minded. It is so ordered. If there are now no further --

KELLERMAN: I move the adoption of the committee report as amended.

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and seconded that the committee report as amended be adopted.

I believe that the proper procedure would be that this committee rise and --

HEEN: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: -- and report.

HEEN: I'm just going to move that when this committee rises, that it recommends the adoption of these amendments, and that the same be included in the supplemental written report of the Committee of the Whole. I so move.

AKAU: Point of information. I realize that we have passed Section 10 already. I want to ask a question, if I may please. Section 10, which appears on page 3 of the report which you have in your hands now; there was some discussion on the floor regarding the question of three-fourths of the members of the jury, three-fourths of the members of the jury in Section 10, and I have already read the clarification and the explanation. In view of the fact that we have been told that we have based most of our laws from the English courts, I'm wondering if we might have some explanation about this, since in the English court, it has to be a unanimous jury giving a decision, that is, a 12 man or 12 man and woman decision. Now, then, we say one thing and then say another thing. I was wondering, since Mr. Tavares had written most of this, if he could explain because justice in America may not necessarily be justice elsewhere.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Tavares, do you wish to answer that question?

TAVARES: It seems to me these questions should well have come before the Committee of the Whole got through debating. I don't know offhand, at the moment, just what the latest English practice acts provide as to jury trials. I'd have to look that up. I wouldn't want to answer that question at the moment. It might be they allow majority verdicts. I'm not sure. Or that may be they exclude jury verdicts in a number of cases that we allow them today. There's no British Constitution as the members here well know and parliament can change or abolish the jury trial any time it wants to.

AKAU: I believe, if I may use a name, Mr. Anthony mentioned last week the question of the English courts and that brought to mind that they do have a unanimous jury, and that's why I brought the question up. Maybe Mr. Anthony might enlighten me.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Anthony, would you like to answer that question?

ANTHONY: The words "trial by jury" as appearing in the Federal Constitution have the meaning as that term was used in England at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution. They have that meaning today insofar as criminal cases are concerned. The one departure is in civil cases in which we can provide for less than a unanimous verdict. So in criminal cases we will still have a unanimous verdict of 12; in civil cases there is the framework whereby less than a unanimous verdict can be adopted.

CHAIRMAN: Does that answer the question, Delegate Akau?

Are there any further questions? Is there a second to Delegate Heen's motion?

KELLERMAN: I second Delegate Heen's motion.

ROBERTS: I'd like, if I may, to point out an error in typing on page two of the proposals on Section 6. "No citizen shall be denied," it says, "enlishment." It should be "enlistment" with a t.

Can the correction be made? Page two of the proposal, end of the report.

CHAIRMAN: It has been pointed out that there has been a misprint in the typing of Section 6 on page two in the proposal. Perhaps Delegate Tavares was slightly tongue-tied at the moment of dictation.

TAVARES: I think maybe the typewriter got its feet mixed.

CHAIRMAN: I think that that correction can be made without formal action of the Committee of the Whole. You've heard the motion to recommend upon rising to the -- recommend to the Convention upon rising that this report of the committee pass as amended with the amendments in supplemental -- in a supplemented [inaudible]. Is that the correct motion?

HEEN: The motion was that when this committee rises, it recommends to the Convention that the original written report be amended in the form set forth in the motions that were made upon the floor, and that that report be in a form of a supplemental report. In other words, the first step after resolving ourselves into a Committee of the Whole is to amend -- I mean to adopt the original report, then to adopt a supplemental report recommending the amendments that were offered upon the floor in the Committee of the Whole.

CHAIRMAN: Does the second agree with that?

PORTEUS: There is the possibility that when the minutes are written there may be at least one person who objects and raises some points of order on this. So I think we ought to explore this thing completely. I don't believe that you can on the Convention floor, amend the Committee of the Whole report. The Convention itself has no right to amend any committee report. Only a committee can amend a committee report; therefore, only the Committee of the Whole can amend this Committee of the Whole report. So, if there is any difficulty in getting a signature to an amended report, due to the fact that there have been two chairmen, I think that the suggestion as made, altered very slightly would do the work. In other words, to take the Committee of the Whole report as presented by the first chairman, and as I understand it you're only supplementing that report, making additions to it. Is that not correct?

HEEN: That's correct. And that supplemental report will be adopted. That the original written report is amended in the following particulars. That's where you have two amendments, and that supplemental report may be signed by the present presiding chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

PORTEUS: I differ only on the language that it's an amendment. I say that you can supplement it by adding to it, by adding and adopting a new report, but you can't amend the other report on the Convention floor. Only the committee can make that change.

CHAIRMAN: Do I understand the proposition correctly, that Delegate Porteus suggests that this committee report out two reports: one, the original report as it stands, and second, a supplementary report to be --

PORTEUS: Supplementing the first report.

CHAIRMAN: -- supplementing the first report.

PORTEUS: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: Is that reasonable?

HEEN: That supplemental report, of course, will recommend the adoption of certain amendments to the original written report. Don't see how else you can write that written report, that supplemental written report. That's done very often in the legislature. You have an existent statute, then later on the legislature amends that original statute by saying in paragraph 2 of Section 4 the word 1951 is changed to 1954. That is a complete enactment.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Porteus. Does that satisfy your interpretation?

PORTEUS: No, I'm not satisfied. I don't know how I'm going to write -- handle the minutes of the journal under these circumstances. I'll leave it to you, but I don't think it's correct.

KING: Point of information. Would it not be possible to adopt the two amendments to the pending committee report while we're in Committee of the Whole? Let me ask that question of Delegate Porteus, the parliamentarian.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Porteus.

KING: We're now in Committee of the Whole considering Committee Report No. 5.

PORTEUS: That's correct.

KING: Would it not be possible to adopt two amendments to that Committee of the Whole report? Then would it not be possible for the committee to rise and report to the Convention the adoption of Committee Report No. 5 as amended?

PORTEUS: That's correct.

KING: Well, then it seems to me the first motion is to move to adopt the amendment which has already been done, has it not? So that the Committee of the Whole Report No. 5 stands amended and the committee can rise and report to the Convention the adoption of the Committee of the Whole 5, No. 5 as amended, with authority to the chairman of the Committee of the Whole to file a supplementary report covering those amendments. Is that correct?

I so move that the Committee of the Whole, having already adopted two amendments to Committee of the Whole Report No. 5, rise, recommend to the Convention that the Committee of the Whole Report No. 5 be adopted as amended, and that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole be authorized to file a supplementary report covering those amendments.

DELEGATE: Second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: There is a motion on the floor. Does Delegate Heen withdraw his motion?

HEEN: I withdraw the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The second withdraw -- Mrs. Kellerman, I believe, seconds it.

J. TRASK: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the committee on rising report the -- recommend the adoption of the committee report as amended, and that a supplemental report containing the amendments be filed with the Convention. All those in favor please signify. Contrary minded. So ordered. I entertain a motion to [adjourn].

Debates in Committee of the Whole on

SUFFRAGE AND ELECTIONS

(Article II)

Chairman: GEORGE DOWSON

JUNE 9, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: Will the Committee of the Whole come to order? This committee is meeting to consider Standing Committee Report No. 39 and Committee Proposal No. 8. The Chair now recognizes the delegate from Hawaii.

SILVA: I move at this time that the committee rise and recommend passage of Proposal No. 8 as recommended by the committee.

MIZUHA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Committee Proposal No. 8 be passed. All in favor say "aye." Those who are contrary minded, say "aye." [sic]

ANTHONY: Aren't we going to have any debate on this proposal? I suggest that the -- we proceed to have debate on this rather than take a vote immediately without anybody knowing what's in the proposal.

CASTRO: I think the proper motion is to consider Proposal No. 8 section by section. I therefore ask that the movant withdraw his previous motion.

CHAIRMAN: Would the senator -- delegate, Senator Silva concede to that?

SILVA: You have to reconsider your action because I think the ayes had it.

CHAIRMAN: I did not call for the noes before --

SILVA: The ayes have it then.

CHAIRMAN: -- Delegate Anthony stood.

SILVA: You didn't call for the noes, but the ayes have it.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair rules that the vote was not taken.

HEEN: I move that we reconsider the action taken on that first motion.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we reconsider action on the first motion, that is the motion to adopt the committee proposal -- report as a whole in this committee. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried.

CASTRO: I move that we consider Committee Proposal No. 8 section by section.

WOOLAWAY: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we consider Committee Proposal No. 8 section by section. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried. It's in order to move for the adoption of Section 1, so we can --

KOMETANI: The Committee on Suffrage and Election in this report would like to let the delegates here know that it was a unanimous report. The committee also was very fortunate to have the four county clerks of the territory appear before the committee in its discussions and deliberations. It was this committee's very desire to write into this Constitution a proposal that would not deny a single individual in this territory the right to suffrage. We had made it as brief as possible, and whatever was considered to be statutory was left up to the legislature to be made into our laws.

CROSSLEY: It is my distinct pleasure to move for the adoption of the first section of Proposal No. 8.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

J. TRASK: I think it proper at this time that we number the sections accordingly; one, two, three, four, five and the Committee Proposal --

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will accept that. If there's no objections, we shall number them in the sequence from one to five.

Section 1 is up for debate.

SMITH: I'd just like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Suffrage and Elections a question. In Section 1, No. 4, "shall be able to speak, read and write English or Hawaiian language except for physical disability." How will this be carried out?

CHAIRMAN: Would the chairman like to answer that question?

KOMETANI: I did not get the question.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Smith, repeat the question.

KOMETANI: The last part of that question.

SMITH: I just wanted to know if, for instance, a voter was questioned as to his ability to be able to speak, read and write English or Hawaiian language, how -- wouldn't that sort of open it up having it in the Constitution like this?

KOMETANI: No, I don't think so. It is in the Organic Act and, that is, the name is placed in Hawaiian. Is that right, Mr. --

KELLERMAN: May I offer an amendment? I'd like to amend Section 1 of sub-number 2 to read "shall have attained the age of 21 years."

WOOLAWAY: I'll second that so we can discuss it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the second part of Section 1 be changed to read -- KELLERMAN: May I speak to that amendment, proposed amendment, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Yes, you may.

KELLERMAN: It seems to me that the time is not ripe to reduce the voting age from 21. At the time that the Federal Constitution was adopted, and other early state constitutions, children became adults in their business, social and family responsibilities far younger than they do today. The prevailing age for marriage at that time was around 15 to 18. Fifteen usually for the women and 17 to 18 for the men. There were families before the men were 21. They had their own businesses, they had started their own farms, they were engaged in the business of living an adult life several years before they were 21. In fact, many of the marriages took place at an even much earlier age for the men than even 17. Today our marriage age on the whole is above 21. With marriage comes the establishment of an independent home and family and family responsibilities. Most of our children today do not get out of school until they are 18. They are regarded as children until they are 18. The interim period is spent usually in some form of apprenticeship, in learning a trade or the beginning of a trade or in further education. By and large our children today, our young people, do not engage in business or family lives. On the whole they do not until they are above 21 years of age.

In addition to that the work of government has become even more complicated than it was 150 years ago, very much more complicated. It enters into more phases of our lives than it did then. We all know that without further discussion.

It seems to me that we are keeping our children as children longer than they were then, and the acts, proposed measures on which they are to be given the right to pass judgment, are even more complicated and more difficult of understanding and the passing of good judgment than they were 150 years ago. I should think rather than decrease the age of voting judgment, the two facts which I have mentioned would tend to urge us to increase the age upon which to pass judgment.

I've heard the argument made that since a boy can go to war and risk his life at 18, he should have the right to vote. It seems to me that the very attributes in many respects that make a good, young, brave and, I may add, reckless soldier are not the attributes which are conducive to the sound, sober judgment of a voter who is passing not only upon his own economic and political life but that of all others in his community when he exercises his vote.

I do not see any justification whatsoever in reducing the concept of voting judgment below 21 years of age. And for that reason I urge very strongly that this Convention think carefully before it reduce the prevailing and longstanding recognition of 21 as the age of voting maturity to anything below 21.

HEEN: May I call the attention of the members of the Convention to Appendix 1 on page 372 of the Manual on State Constitutional Provisions which was prepared by the Legislative Reference Bureau. They list the minimum age of every state, and every state sets a minimum of 21 years except Georgia. In other words, 47 states -- Page 372. Every state sets a minimum of 21 years, I mean, 47 states have a minimum age of 21 years and Georgia is the only state that sets the minimum age of 18 years.

KOMETANI: The committee was fully aware of the fact that 47 out of the 48 states had 21 years as their voting age. However, we figured Hawaii as Hawaii. Hawaii grants the age of majority at 20. At 20 he has a right to marriage without parental consent. He by law becomes fully responsible for his debts. He is a taxpayer. Not only that, like the wartime slogan, he's eligible for draft. We also considered the fact that [in] Hawaii with its warm, temperate climate, the children mature a little earlier, and the committee definitely felt that we should give the responsibility and the right of suffrage to our youth one year earlier than the rest of the 47 states.

TAVARES: May I ask the last speaker a question, which I think will bring out the situation further.

CHAIRMAN: You may.

TAVARES: Is it not true that in most of those states that have 21 years as the voting age, it is also the age of majority?

KOMETANI: Yes.

TAVARES: And therefore, if we are going to change the voting age to 21, we ought to change the age of majority for other purposes to 21. Is that not logical?

KOMETANI: That's right.

CORBETT: The lady delegate from the fourth district suggested that we should instead of decreasing the age of the voting population should possibly consider increasing it. I submit that we are doing that continually. Medical science has added a large body of oldsters who are entitled to the vote. The vote has not been taken away from them. I think it might be salutary if we off-set to a certain extent this body of conservatives by a group one year, one age bracket [younger] who will possibly have political imagination, courage, and freedom from tradition. The young people coming out of our schools today have a background, a training in political education, self-government in their schools, which fit them to assume the responsibilties of a voter. I strongly believe that we should give our young people of 20 the vote.

ASHFORD: Delegate from the fourth asked the chairman of the committee a question and following that up, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee the following question.

CHAIRMAN: Will you put the question?

ASHFORD: Is it not true that in some of those states the age of majority for women is below the age of 21 years?

KOMETANI: Yes, I believe so.

AKAU: The statement has been made by the delegate from the fourth district regarding the time of majority in the early colonial days. I simply submit for your consideration the fact that times have changed. Mechanization of industry, population trends, and all the things that go with our modern, atomic age—jet propulsion, and what have you. I could enumerate them right on down the line.

The point I wish to make is that what happened a hundred years ago, a hundred and fifty years ago, is not apropos to our particular situation here in Hawaii today. We have great hope and faith in our younger generation. The students are coming out of the university much more mature than they have in the past. They have had many more serious experiences. They are ready to assume more responsibility. The age of 20 is not too young for the vote. They certainly could't do any worse than the people have been doing for the past fifty years here in Hawaii.

MAU: Having heard the discussion I'm ready to vote on the question. I move the previous question.

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

KELLERMAN: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we move to the - - for the previous question.

ROBERTS: Mr. Chairman.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman:

CHAIRMAN: I believe - -

HEEN: I think we ought to have further debate on some of the other - -

ROBERTS: I'd like to point out - -

CHAIRMAN: Is this on - - a debate on the previous question?

ROBERTS: I understand that there's been a motion for the previous question which has been duly seconded.

CHAIRMAN: That is true.

ROBERTS: A previous question under normal procedures is not debatable, and a motion, such a motion was put to vote. I'd like to raise a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: You may.

ROBERTS: As I understand the procedures for the Committee of the Whole, the purpose is to permit free discussion and a full presentation of ideas by all of the delegates in the Convention.

CHAIRMAN: Are you - -

ROBERTS: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, I'll move - - I'll make the point. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there has not been sufficient opportunity afforded for the delegates to discuss this question, to discuss the question before us, Section 1 of the article before us. I therefore urge, Mr. Chairman, that the motion made by the previous speaker be withdrawn until such time as all the delegates who wish to speak have had the opportunity to speak on this particular section.

MAU: I'd be the last one to cut out debate on any question. I withdraw my motion.

DELEGATE: Thank you, sir.

KING: The previous question would have been ordered on the amendment offered by the lady from the fourth district, Delegate Kellerman, as I understand it, not on the section itself, so it wasn't the desire to cut out debate on the whole section but merely on that particular amendment. Now I feel that we've rather exhausted the point of whether the voting age shall be 21 or 20, and would have voted in favor of the previous question, but now being withdrawn that doesn't come up.

I would like to say I am convinced by the argument that if the majority age in Hawaii is 20, then the person who arrives at majority should be able to vote. He becomes legally a man or woman in his own right or her own right, pays taxes, incurs contractual liability, may be sued, maybe make a will, may marry, may do everything that a person that is accepted as a citizen except to vote. It seems to me the privilege of voting should go with all those other obligations and responsibilities, and I would be opposed to the amendment offered by Mrs. Kellerman.

LAI: Point of information. If we were to adopt this 20 years voting age, what would be the increase in voters? Can somebody answer that?

CHAIRMAN: Can someone answer that question? Delegate Kometani.

KOMETANI: Roughly about 7,000.

DELEGATE: There is supposed to be reapportionment.

KOMETANI: 7,000.

KELLERMAN: Since I proposed the amendment, may I speak to it again and in answer to some of the remarks that have been made opposed to it.

CHAIRMAN: You may.

KELLERMAN: With reference to one of the statements made by the lady delegate from the fifth district, she commented on the maturity of our university graduates. I would doubt that there are many university graduates in Hawaii just 20 years old. The age at which most of our children get out of high school is 18. I assume they go four years or certainly a minimum of three to the university. I dare say then we would have few university graduates in Hawaii at 20, so I don't think that remark was pertinent. In fact, I think it argues my point that if we are relying upon the greater maturity of our university students, then there is no reason on earth of decreasing the age from 21.

Now, with respect to the remarks recently just made by the delegate from the fifth. The age of majority is a statute, and it seems to me that it would be more pertinent and more reasonable to amend a statute to raise the age of majority to 21, if the better political thinking of this community is going to be jeopardized by reducing the voting age to 20 just to make it conform to a statutory majority age of 20. I - - it seems to me that that's putting the weight upon the wrong side of the question. The majority age can be changed by statute, it is now only a matter of statute.

I think for those reasons that the arguments against the amendment are not pertinent, and I ask the sincere consideration of the extreme responsibility of the vote, that it not be reduced. Our high school children coming out at 18 have had experience in the methods of democratic discussion and class meeting. They are not well rounded, as well rounded as judgment and experience can give them, and the questions of social, economic, and political importance that older people have learned and learned to evaluate from experience, the best teacher, and experience can only come with age. For those reasons I ask again the sincere and serious consideration. I think this is very important.

KAM: I would just like to add in favor of this 20 years because the liquor commission of the Territory of Hawaii set the legal age of 20 years in order to purchase liquor. Thank you.

TAVARES: Just matters of information. Not so long ago this territory fixed the age of majority for women at 18, just as it is fixed in some states. Mr. Chairman, those ages were fixed in the dark days when women were considered as chattels, when they were owned by their husbands. It goes back to the days of England when a man could whip his wife as long as he used a stick no bigger than his thumb, and the jurisdictions that have now restored women to the same status as men are those as our territory who have recognized the equality of women with men. And I submit it's a very, very outmoded argument to use that which goes back to those dark ages, the disparity allowing of women coming of age before men. Our territory, fortunately, has seen the light and has placed them both on the same status.

Furthermore our legislators who represent the people of this territory have fixed the age of 20 as the age of majority. That shows that the sentiment of this territory has been and now is - - has been for many years and now is that these people are in every way fully qualified to assume the responsibilities of life. And as long as we have done that, I don't see why we should change in the absence of very strong evidence that those people are not qualified, and I don't think the evidence is available, and I don't believe it's true.

SMITH: I am in favor of the 20 years but I'd like to ask the chairman since we have gone back to the year -- years, what was that, chattels, and ask if any study had been -- or reference had been made to the last constitutions which have been amended, New Jersey and Missouri, and if there's any reason why they kept it at 21.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

DELEGATE: Previous question.

CHAIRMAN: Can Delegate Kometani answer that?

KOMETANI: Both Missouri and New Jersey had retained 21 as their voting age, possibly because the age of majority there likewise is 21.

SERIZAWA: It seems like we've had enough debate on this subject. Therefore, I move for the previous question.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

Chairman: It's been moved and seconded that we move to the previous question. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried.

The vote -- voting will be on No. 2 of Section 1, that is the amendment for that which reads "shall have attained the age of 21 years." I -- the Chair will request that no one vote with the use of the microphone.

MIZUHA: Do I understand that we are now only voting on the amendment?

CHAIRMAN: We are now voting on the amendment which changes the 20 to 21 as the voting age. All in favor of the amendment, say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's not carried. It's been defeated.

SMITH: Mr. Chairman, before moving that, I just want to know, No. 3, "shall have resided in the state not less than one year next preceding the election." Isn't there some rule that they have to be in the district so long?

KOMETANI: The committee seriously considered the question that was asked by the delegate from Maui. Because of the conditions or the requirements in the law, naturalization law, we felt that anyone, any person who's naturalized should be given suffrage immediately. We have given serious consideration to our Filipino population who were brought here as laborers. In order to be naturalized, they must be a resident of the territory for five years and certainly after waiting five years, if he has been naturalized, he should be given the right of suffrage the following day.

KING: As I read the committee report, also, it authorized the legislature to make such restrictions as to residents in the district, county, or precinct, as the case may be. In other words the committee report left out all the statutes, isn't that correct?

KOMETANI: Yes.

HEEN: I think Section 5 takes care of that situation. "Shall be registered as a voter in accordance with law" so that the law may prescribe the period of residence in an election precinct, or rather district.

Now, addressing myself to sub-paragraph or rather paragraph four of Section 1, in order to qualify to vote "one shall be able to speak, read, and write the English or Hawaiian language, except for physical disability." Now I'm wondering whether or not that might be in conflict with Section 6 of the Bill of Rights. Section 6 of the Bill of Rights, second paragraph of that section reads, "No person shall be denied the enjoyment of his civil rights nor be discriminated against in the exercise of civil rights because of religious principles, race, sex, color, ancestry, or national origin." I'm not speaking against the provision itself, but there might be raised this question of discrimination against other races than Hawaiian. May be that in time to come everyone in the State of Hawaii will be able to read and write the English language, so that perhaps this one might be called discrimination in favor of the Hawaiian people. It might be placed somewhere else in the Constitution, perhaps in the schedule of the Constitution, so that if sometime in the future it become functus; and there might be framed in language, "anything in the Constitution to the contrary notwithstanding, Hawaiians able to read -- Hawaiians who are able only to read and write the Hawaiian language shall enjoy the right of suffrage." I'm just presenting my observations on this matter so that it can be taken care of without any possibility of discrimination being raised in the future.

MIZUHA: It is my belief that the Section 6 of the Bill of Rights relative to anti-discrimination because of race, do not take into consideration the physical or mental attributes for the qualifications of that race or the background of that race. It is -- it does not take into consideration the speaking of the language or brown hair or white hair or blue eyes or long noses or short noses and so forth, but it's just by race itself. Hence I do not believe it is in conflict with Section 4 of the section -- sub-section 4 of Section 1 of the Committee Proposal No. 8 which refers to the language of the Hawaiian people, and I think there is sufficient tradition in Hawaii recognizing the Hawaiian language as the language of the territory, so that if the committee report is clear on that point, there need not be any conflict later on.

HOLROYDE: The last speaker indicated that under Section 5 there could be possibly laws passed that would require residence in districts. I note in the Organic Act it corresponds practically to Section 3 of the proposal of the committee with the exception that they left out the three months requirement in the district, in the representative district. I'd like to know whether the committee left that out purposely to indicate that they did not recommend a residence in the district because under that old rule in the Organic Act, many people—especially school teachers who had moved from district to district—were prohibited from voting in territorial elections until the following election, and I would like to know the committee's feeling on that particular question --

CHAIRMAN: Would the committee chairman --

HOLROYDE: -- especially for the report.

CHAIRMAN: -- committee chairman like to answer that?

KOMETANI: We left that phrase out because it is embodied in the election laws of Hawaii.

CHAIRMAN: I believe there's --

TAVARES: Perhaps that should be clarified. It seems to me that that would then be included in the language of No. 5, "Shall be registered as a voter in accordance with law." Now, if the short preliminary residence in a district is required as a condition of registration, would not that be included in that paragraph?

MIZUHA: I move the previous question for the adoption --

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Mizuha moves for the previous question. Do I hear a second to that?

DELEGATE: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we move to the previous question. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "aye," uh "no." It's carried.

The previous questions is, Section I, with the five parts. We are now voting on Section 1 with the five parts, none of which has been amended. All in favor of the motion say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried. Section 1 is carried.

Section 2 is now being considered.

KAGE: I move that Section 2 of Committee Proposal No. 8 be adopted.

APOLIONA: May I second Delegate Kage's motion?

NIELSEN: Mr. Chairman, point of order.

ANTHONY: May I ask what's before the house at the moment?

CHAIRMAN: Your -- the point of order has been brought up.

NIELSEN: Didn't the representative from the fourth district ask if he could second the motion? He didn't second it.

APOLIONA: I rose on a point of special privilege to second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: That the Chair understood but now it's clarified.

KING: The motion then is on the acceptance of Section 2, disqualifications of voters, as written.

ANTHONY: I would like to have the committee answer for me the disqualification, "no person who is non compos mentis." Do they mean a person who has been adjudicated non compos mentis or a person who is non compos mentis and still has never been adjudicated. It seems to me that would, might raise a serious question of fact in the qualification of a voter unless that's cleared up.

WOOLAWAY: Adjudicated, that means as judged, judged as such?

CHAIRMAN: I believe -- the Chair understands it as such, that it's been judged as being non compos mentis.

ANTHONY: Well, a person can be of unsound mind and still not be committed. Now, I think it ought, and he would vote. It seems to me if you want to make it abundantly clear, you ought to put in there, insert after the words "who is," insert the word "adjudicated."

PORTEUS: I wish to disagree with my brother from the fourth district. I think the addition of the word "adjudicated" means, would mean that in each case unless a person had been held by a court to be non compos mentis, he was automatically qualified to vote and the clerk of the county or a clerk registering voters would have no basis for rejecting the registration of such a person as a voter. Undoubtedly someone could be presented for registration, very obviously one who was non compos mentis but not one who had been hailed before a court in which there had been a judicial hearing on that subject. This question as to whether he is or is not non compos mentis, it does not pose an unusual question for the clerk of the -- who registers the voters in that it would be the only thing presented to him, but rather in all these other matters as to whether the person is a citizen, whether he's attained the age of twenty, whether he has had residence in the state is a matter of judgment by the court [sic], and in fact our Organic Act in Section 18 says "no idiot or insane person" and I think that the committee has changed that language to "non compos mentis."

ANTHONY: I'd like to state that I'm satisfied with the explanation.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no further debate, we'll put this up for a vote. We are now voting on Section 2 without amendment. All in favor of passing Section 2.

HEEN: I noticed that they used the term "felony" here. Now, felony is a statutory matter. In other words, any crime punishable by imprisonment for a term of over one year is considered a felony. That might be changed to some other period. In the Organic Act, which I think is the better language to use, that provides "no person who shall have been convicted of any criminal offense punishable by imprisonment, whether with or without hard labor, for a term exceeding one year, whether with or without a fine," shall be disqualified. You have that in the Organic Act; then, any change as to the period of imprisonment in a felony case to a period less than one year would not change the provision of the Organic Act.

MIZUHA: There is one question I would like to raise at this point. Maybe it's not apropos to this section but maybe with reference to another section. At the present time there is a limitation under the Organic Act as to the qualifications of voting of service personnel stationed here in Hawaii. I am just raising the question whether it is advisable at this time to insert it in the Constitution or whether it is a statutory matter. I am not prepared to answer that question. Maybe the committee had considered that question?

KING: Under Section 4, there is some language that would cover it but it authorized, "the legislature shall provide the manner in which a qualified voter who may be absent from the state or the island of his residence on any election day may vote."

DELEGATE: Question.

MIZUHA: The question that I raise is with reference to service personnel stationed in Hawaii, whether they shall be eligible to vote after residence in Hawaii.

PORTEUS: I think that that subject could well be discussed under the next section. It says "No voter shall be deemed to have gained or lost residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States." I think we can get at that subject at that time rather than in this prior section.

TAVARES: I don't think the statement of -- the argument of the delegate from the fourth district was answered about the felony. For more than 50 years, we have had a statute which defines felony as any crime punishable by imprisonment at hard labor for more than one year with or without fine. Now it's hardly likely that we will ever change that definition and if we do, it is hardly likely that we will make it much less serious than that. And as long as we define felony by statute, and I'm sure we always will, there will be no uncertainty about it. We are going to continue that statute in effect by our Constitution, and I am certain our legislature won't repeal it without putting something in its place, so I feel the danger is not real at all.

CHAIRMAN: I believe the -- Delegate Roberts, have you --

ROBERTS: I'd like to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. Whether the substitution of the words "convicted of" instead of "under conviction of" would be a matter of style. If it is, then I will not make a motion to amend that section so that the section would read "No person convicted of a felony" instead of "under conviction of felony." Would that be a matter of style? If it is, then we can take care of it in the Style Committee.

CHAIRMAN: Would the chairman like to answer that? The Chair feels that there's been ample debate here unless there's any question as to that and would you like to put this Section 2 up for vote? We are now voting on Section 2 without amendment. All those in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried.

We are now ready for Section - -

HOLROYDE: Point of information, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: - - three. Delegate Crossley.

HOLROYDE: Point of information.

DELEGATE: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

HOLROYDE: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Holroyde.

HOLROYDE: I'd like to know whether the Chair is aware of the fact that Delegate moved-to-adopt Bryan is now present.

CHAIRMAN: That's a point of personal privilege, Delegate Holroyde.

WOOLAWAY: I now move for the adoption of Section 3.

APOLIONA: I second the motion.

J. TRASK: Because of the lateness of the hour and in keeping with the general orders of the day, I move that the committee rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again so that we might consider in the Committee of the Whole Standing Committee Report No. 39 on Committee Proposal No. 8. Oh, no, Standing Committee Report No. 37 and Proposal - - on Committee Proposal No. 7.

ASHFORD: I second that motion.

WOOLAWAY: There's a motion before the House - - before the committee right now.

CHAIRMAN: Motion's been withdrawn on passage of Section 3.

AKAU: The Section 3, 4 and 5 of this report is not too lengthy and not half as involved as, let us say, the judiciary. It would seem to me that we could sit another 20 minutes and probably get through if that would meet with the approval of the Judiciary Committee. We could ask them to extend us the courtesy, and I'm now asking for point of personal privilege to speak to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee. May I please?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair believes we could declare a short recess while you do that and get this matter straightened out.

AKAU: Oh, he's right here. I could just ask him, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Well, you may ask him.

AKAU: Mr. Anthony, may we - -

SILVA: There's a motion before the house.

AKAU: I move to table the motion to go resolve ourselves back into Committee of the Whole - - I mean, from the Committee of the Whole.

DELEGATE: Second that.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we table the motion to rise and report progress to the President of the Convention. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." The ayes have it. It's - - Section 3 is up.

WOOLAWAY: Point of order. Having withdrawn my motion, there's nothing before the house so now I move again that we adopt Section 3.

APOLIONA: Mr. Chairman.

CROSSLEY: The Chair recognized me, I believe, and the point of order is - -

CHAIRMAN: I believe Delegate Crossley has the floor.

CROSSLEY: I now move the adoption of Section 3.

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

APOLIONA: I now second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we adopt Section 3 of the report.

KING: I might say in response to Delegate Trask's motion that we rise and report progress and sit again, that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee is willing to proceed on the consideration of this if it doesn't take too much longer. So that if we finish this within the next 25 minutes, we can complete it and then go into Committee of the Whole on the judiciary. If we don't complete it the next 25 minutes, then perhaps the motion you made would be in order. I just make that as an explanation of the point of view of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

CHAIRMAN: Section 3.

HEEN: On Section 3 I don't quite understand the purpose of the section there. A person might be absent while employed in the service of the United States and will never lose his residence if he has an intent to always come back to Hawaii to live. That's a matter of law. Nor does he lose his residence if he goes away to the mainland to study in any institution on the mainland. He can go away and stay away for five years; so long as he has the intent to come back to reside permanently in Hawaii, he will always be a resident of the Territory of Hawaii. That's also a matter of law. So only when you change your intent, then you lose your residence. I know some of these students who've gone away to study have registered as voters on the mainland. When they did that, that was an intent to give up their permanent residence in the Territory of Hawaii. But if they didn't do that, as long as they maintained an intent to come back to live in the Territory of Hawaii, their residence will always be in the Territory of Hawaii.

A. TRASK: I am bothered also with this Section 3. To me, it's writing into the Constitution a question of qualification for citizenship which under the facts of the particular case, as the Judge has indicated, may disqualify the person in fact. In other words, when I was attending the University of Southern California, I voted—for Roosevelt at that time—and I naturally cut off my voting allegiance to the Territory of Hawaii. I had not yet attained 21 at that time, but I think California was 20. The situation is this. I think we are putting into the Constitution something of a permanent character when such a matter should be determined by the facts of the particular case appertaining to the particular person. I - - take for instance, the first section. Now, a person may be - - a local boy may be in the service of the United States Army, Marine, Air Corps, and so forth. He leaves here, he goes away and he raises a family and after a few years decides to come back. According to this provision, it would seem to me that by virtue of his services in the United States Army, even though he may have acquired legal rights and voting privileges elsewhere, he always has his voting privilege in the Territory of Hawaii. I do not think it's right, I do not think it's fair. And so I doubt the wisdom of including such a Section 3 here, and I would like at this time to consider seriously that this matter be altogether deleted and I so move.

BRYAN: I feel that I'm fairly well qualified to speak on this point. I have been in the predicament that this thing hopes to control and rules on. I think that the word "simply by reason" gets around the objection that my colleague from the fifth had. In his own case he had other reasons why he should not be qualified to vote in the Territory of Hawaii, the other reason being that he had registered to vote and had voted in the state of California. But "simply by reason" of his service in the United States or his attendance at an institution of learning in some other state, that was not what would disqualify him. And I think that this is a good protection, I'm very much in favor of it.

AKAU: Mr. Chairman.

DELEGATE: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Akau wanted the floor a little while ago.

AKAU: I think Delegate Heen and Delegate Trask have both brought up some -- a very important legal question that I had in mind also and perhaps from our "Supreme Court" here, we might get some judgment. Now, then I'd like to state the incidence that happened recently -- no, a couple of years ago from the Attorney General's office. I simply quote from my memory. The woman who was working there in the Attorney General's office in the secretarial department used to vote here in Hawaii. Now then she went to the mainland, I think it was to California and I'm simply doing this as I say from memory, She voted, I believe, in California as a legal resident there. Then she came back here and wished to establish her residence here as a citizen having voted here once, established her legal residence in California, I believe, and then came back here. I don't know what the legality finally was, but I do think that we need some kind of clarification here and I have an amendment after somebody else speaks that I'll get together on the same -- on this very question.

CHAIRMAN: Can anyone speak to that point?

PORTEUS: If I may be exempted as being a member of the "Supreme Court," I'd like to talk on this subject.

CHAIRMAN: You're exempted.

PORTEUS: Thank you very much. I think there is some good reason for the section as it is worded. I think the intent is, as expressed here, that simply and solely because of a person being here in the territory or being absent while employed by the United States government, that isn't conclusive as to whether he has acquired residence here in the territory or lost residence in the territory. The same applies while he is in navigation. Now, this last clause means that if a person goes away to an institution of learning, a school, that because of him going away, he shall not thereby be held to have lost his residence. It will take something more than that. Now, there are -- there is a good body of law with respect to the acquisition of residence and domicile. It's a question of intent. It has usually been held that where a person is in the service of the United States such as in the Armed Forces, and is ordered to a post and lives on a post, that thereby he has not got the option of deciding whether or not he will take up residence in that place and then qualify as a voter; in other words, a private or a sergeant stationed at Schofield on the post, not formally a resident here, could not be eligible purely because of his being stationed here to be a voter. He has to prove that he has acquired residence under the general body of law that is applicable. Insofar as the case that delegate from the fifth district was referring to, it arose in the Attorney General's office. I think that question arose as to whether or not someone was eligible to be employed by the territory unless that person had been a resident of the territory for a certain length of time. By going to the mainland and voting, it was a clear indication to surrender residence in the territory. There was nothing that prevented that person from acquiring residence again. It just meant that they couldn't qualify by, on the moment of coming back, as having been a resident for three years next preceding appointment. That's all that was. There's no ineligibility to acquire; it was just that she had surrendered her previous residence.

A. TRASK: I think there is a distinct feature of home rule involved in this section, namely this. A voter with this particular section in hand would be placed at an advantageous position with respect to the clerk. In other words, the clerk's got to disprove his claim, rather than making it on the other hand the obligation on the voter or the applicant for voter -- for voting recognition, to register. In other words, I would like to see the clerk placed in a more advantageous position to judge the qualification of the applicant who desires to register as a voter. Whereas, in this situation we put the burden on the clerk to disprove the claim of the applicant for voting, which I think is not altogether proper. And to me it has a feature which is against the local officials having a sense of home rule and control over the voters and registration.

ANTHONY: I incline to think that this doesn't put the burden on anyone. This is a simple statement of what the existing law as to residence or domicile is. And all it does is say that you don't either gain or lose your residence or domicile if you're in the armed services or if you're away at school or if you're on a boat. Now it might very well be deleted but I see no objection to enactment of it into the Constitution if the Convention wants it. It seems to me it's a simple statement of the existing law on the subject, fairly accurate, and I see no particular harm in it.

RICHARDS: I'd like to ask a question. As I understood the Secretary's remarks, the inclusion of this would not prohibit people in the armed services from obtaining local residence if they qualified under other terms. Is that correct?

ANTHONY: That is an accurate statement. May I be recognized?

CHAIRMAN: It is an accurate statement?

ANTHONY: That's an accurate statement. You can gain residence in Hawaii and be in the Army. The mere fact that you're in the Army however and in Hawaii does not prove that you're a resident.

ASHFORD: This is a section that is declaratory of the law as it now exists. A law not provided by statute, but by uniform decisions of the courts, not only our own courts but courts everywhere, including the United States Supreme Court; and therefore it seems to me it'd be circuitous to write it into the Constitution.

SHIMAMURA: I also see no objection to this Section 3. As some of the previous speakers have mentioned, legal residence or domicile consist of two things: first, physical presence, and second, intent. That is, intention of whether or not you wish to make a certain place your home, whether or not you adopt it as your home. And it is therefore a question of fact. As Miss Ashford said, "this is declaratory of the law," and where a student goes to school, there's a presumption that he doesn't lose his residence. In other words, the residence isn't changed; the same thing is true about being in the armed forces. Therefore I think this section should be - -

A. TRASK: I'd like to draw the attention of the delegates to the second sentence in the following section, No. 4, which reads, "The legislature shall provide the manner in which a qualified voter who may be absent from the state or the island of his residence on any election day may vote." I think that is a more - - a proper expression which does incorporate No. 4, and let it be the law, and as it is, and it's a good statement, but still I think it should be - -

WOOLAWAY: I think that question just covers absentee voting, that's all.

A. TRASK: No, everything.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Fong.

WOOLAWAY: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to ask the chairman of the committee, doesn't that question - - that sentence that Mr., Delegate Trask just read - -

CHAIRMAN: You're out of order. Just a minute. Delegate Fong has the floor.

FONG: May I ask the chairman a question? Now the word used is "employed in the service of the United States." Now if a man was in the agricultural service and he came here and say he will stay here for about 10 years, would he be able to gain residence here?

CHAIRMAN: Will the chairman answer that? Delegate Woolaway, did you have a question?

WOOLAWAY: I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman, I thought I still had the floor. Mr. Trask - -

FONG: Just a minute, Mr. Woolaway.

CHAIRMAN: Oh, you're not - - you haven't given up the floor. I'm sorry. Delegate Woolaway, Delegate Fong still has the floor.

FONG: The language as read was this: "No voter shall be deemed to have gained or lost residence simply by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of United States." Now that means that he will not have gained residency if he is in the employ of the service of the United States.

ANTHONY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Do you wish to speak to this point?

ANTHONY: Mr. Chairman, may I answer that, Delegate Fong's question?

CHAIRMAN: Will Delegate Fong yield to Delegate Anthony?

ANTHONY: Isn't this the situation? All this is saying is the mere fact alone of presence or absence in Hawaii, if you're in the military service, will not make you a resident. In other words, if there are other facts, if an army officer buys a home here, he pays his taxes, he marries, and so on, then naturally he becomes a resident even though he's been ordered here by virtue of - -

FONG: Why don't we put it in so it won't be so ambiguous.

ANTHONY: I don't think we need it at all, really. It's a matter of existing law.

FONG: It seems quite ambiguous to me.

TAVARES: Mr. Chairman.

WOOLAWAY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Woolaway has been waiting patiently. Delegate Woolaway.

WOOLAWAY: Delegate Trask said that the sentence, "The legislature shall provide the manner in which a qualified voter who may be absent from the state or the island of his residence on any election day may vote," says that Section 4 as written covers Section 3. I would like the chairman of this committee to answer that. I feel that just covers absentee voting. Is that right?

KOMETANI: Section 4, "The legislature shall provide the manner - " Provide absentee voting.

WOOLAWAY: That's right. Another thing, Mr. Chairman, I think we're arguing over a lot of words. As a resident voter of this territory on the island of Maui, if I went away, whether on a vacation or if I served in the army, when I came back and I appeared before the county clerk to reregister, all I had to do was raise my hand and under oath say I've been here the sufficient time or qualified without any trouble, why I'd be registered again. So I don't think that - - I don't see any reason why we should argue any more on Section 3; therefore I move the previous question.

SMITH: I'll second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we move to the previous question. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried. Now the question is on Section 3, without amendment.

ANTHONY: I think the expression "no voter" is inaccurate. It should be "no person." Voter includes a person who is a resident.

CHAIRMAN: I believe the delegate's out of order. It's been moved that we vote on the previous question.

ANTHONY: I move for reconsideration.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we reconsider Section 3. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried. Section 3 is now being reconsidered.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen has the floor.

CROSSLEY: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Crossley rises to a point of order.

CROSSLEY: I believe that the last motion was inaccurate; I think what we were reconsidering was our vote on the previous question. You had never put the question on the adoption of - -

CHAIRMAN: I believe I stand corrected, Delegate Crossley.

CROSSLEY: - - so the vote should have been the reconsideration of our action in moving the previous question.

CHAIRMAN: I believe you're right. We are now considering Section 3. Delegate Heen.

HEEN: Considering Section 3?

CHAIRMAN: Yes.

HEEN: I think the proper words to be used there, or rather the proper word to be used there is "person," instead of "voter." "No person shall be deemed to have gained residence or lost residence," because if he is already a voter, he doesn't gain it.

KING: I believe the gentleman is correct and I suggest he offer that as an amendment to the motion to adopt Section 3.

HEEN: I so move, Mr. Chairman, that the word "voter" in the first line of Section 3 be deleted and that the word "person" be inserted in lieu thereof.

TAVARES: Mr. Chairman, I second it, the amendment.

HEEN: I move the adoption of that amendment.

DELEGATE: Question, Mr. Chairman. We accept that amendment.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the word "voter" in line 1 of Section 3 be deleted and the word "person" be added in its place.

CROSSLEY: As the movant of this section, I accept the amendment.

KING: I believe with the mover of the original motion accepting the amendment, we can now at one vote accept Section 3 as amended; the amendment has been incorporated.

CHAIRMAN: Will the seconder accept that amendment? Dr. Apoliona does.

I believe the Chair will accept that ruling. Delegate Porteus.

PORTEUS: Mr. Chairman, when anyone moves that a section be adopted, he can't say that it be adopted in an amended form. Is that what your ruling is? That, in other words, the section be adopted in amended form.

CHAIRMAN: That is what's under consideration.

PORTEUS: Customarily it is to move that the section be amended; then after the amendment carries, then move that the section as amended pass.

CROSSLEY: That's correct.

KING: In the effort to push it along they cut across lots. I imagine the motion is on the amendment first.

CHAIRMAN: Thank you. Are you ready for the question? The question is to vote on the amendment to Section 3 which is the deletion of the word "voter" in line one, that is the second word, and the addition in its place of the word "person." All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried.

CROSSLEY: I move the adoption of the section as amended.

APOLIONA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 3 be passed as amended. Are you ready for the question? All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried; Section 3 is carried as amended.

CROSSLEY: I move the adoption of Section 4.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we adopt Section 4.

NIELSEN: I'd like to make an amendment in that section in the fifth line after the word "absent," the fourth word, and insert "from the representative district in which he is registered may vote." The reason for that is that on the Big Island why it's a 120 miles between one district and the other and many times people are commuting between Hilo and Kona and they don't get to vote. So if we leave it to the legislature "between representative districts" instead of "between islands" then the legislature can do something about it. As it originally is written, why nothing could be done about it by the legislature except between islands. I so move.

ASHFORD: I'd like to say that we, there are several islands in the county of Maui that are one, that are in one representative district, and if you don't have the island in, they'll be left out.

J. TRASK: Point of order.

BRYAN: I was going to suggest that you leave the words "state, district and island" all in there.

J. TRASK: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

BRYAN: I was wondering if that would be acceptable.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate James Trask rises to a point of order.

J. TRASK: There's nothing before the Convention. Now the motion has not been seconded, so I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment has been seconded. Will Delegate - -

NIELSEN: I'll accept the inclusion as indicated by Mr. Bryan.

CHAIRMAN: Will you repeat the inclusion, Delegate Bryan?

BRYAN: I didn't have the exact wording. I was going to suggest "who may be absent from the state, district or island of his residence." That would take care of his problem, the problem of Molokai, and the problem of the territory.

NIELSEN: "The state representative district" so that wouldn't be mixed up with senatorial districts which are individual islands.

J. TRASK: I see no reason for including the words "representative district" because of the fact that the state automatically includes the representative district. So there's absolutely no reason for the amendment.

NIELSEN: Explaining that - - one says from a state that means to the mainland or to the Orient or somewhere else.

J. TRASK: "Absent from the State of Hawaii." You might put that amendment in. After all we are writing a Constitution for the State of Hawaii. It naturally includes the State of Hawaii. It would mean that it's implied.

BRYAN: I think the answer to that is that if someone who is a registered voter on the island of Molokai is on Maui or on Oahu at the time of voting, they can vote by absentee ballot on Molokai. That's the idea.

HEEN: I think what we should do is to use language which is in more general terms. "That the legislature shall provide for absentee voting."

NIELSEN: I'll accept that as an amendment.

DELEGATE: I second that.

KAUHANE: I did rise to a point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kauhane rises to a point of information.

KAUHANE: Mr. Chairman, don't you think because of the confusion of the minds now that you should declare a recess and get this thing written up correctly?

KING: The point raised by Delegate Nielsen was that absence from Kona in Hilo would not have a right to vote in Kona unless he was absent from Hawaii on some other island. And the point made by Delegate Heen would fill it if he would propose it as an amendment instead of just as a statement of information. Let that last sentence read, "The legislature shall provide the manner in which absentee voting may be held," or some other phraseology if the delegate will figure it out, and Delegate Nielsen has indicated his willingness to accept that. It's merely to solve the point of the largest island here where a man may be in Hilo on business on election day and according to this would not be entitled to vote in Kailua. Is that right?

HEEN: In the Model Constitution, we find this: "Absentee Voting. The legislature may, by general law, provide a manner in which qualified voters who may be absent from the state or county of their residence may register and vote, and for the return and canvass of their votes in the election district in which they reside." Now, the use of that general language might be adopted. I suggest this - - "The legislature may, by general law, provide a manner in which qualified voters who may be absent from the district in which he is registered to vote and for the return and canvass of their votes in the election district in which they reside." Language along that line would, I think, cover the situation, but I think it requires a little more study in order to get the real proper language. I therefore move that this committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that this committee rise and report progress and ask to meet again. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no."

JUNE 13, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: Will the Committee of the Whole come to order for the consideration of Committee - - Standing Committee Report No. 39 and Committee Proposal No. 8. You may be at ease.

CROSSLEY: I move, I believe Section 4 is the next section under consideration. I move the adoption of Section 4.

CHAIRMAN: I believe it has been moved and seconded that Section 4 be adopted, at the last meeting of the Committee of the Whole. There was a pending amendment made by Delegate Nielsen and seconded by Delegate James Trask that the word "district" be added in the fifth line after the word "state" in Section 4.

HEEN: The matter of absentee voting involves absence from the voting district, absence from the island, absence from one representative district while being in another representative district. Now all of those things can be taken care of by statute, and it's my suggestion that that last sentence be deleted altogether because the first part of the section reads: "The legislature shall provide for the registration of qualified voters and prescribe the method of voting at all elections, provided that secrecy of voting shall be preserved." Now, it may be "method" means voting by ballot, and I think if we insert there after that word "method," "method," two words, "method and manner of voting," it would take care of the whole situation. In other words, a person may be absent from his voting district, and he can vote in such a manner as to go before the county clerk and vote there while he's absent from his own representative district, as an illustration.

DOI: Is that a motion, Mr. Heen?

CHAIRMAN: I don't understand it to be a motion.

HEEN: No, it was a suggestion. If it appeals to the members of the Convention, I would change it into a motion; that is, by adding after the word "method" in line two the words "and manner" and delete the last sentence.

DOI: I would like to second the motion to amend the fourth section.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the last sentence be deleted and the word "manner" be inserted in the second line after the word "method."

KOMETANI: In inserting this last phrase in regard to absent voting, it was the desire of the committee to liberalize absentee voting. We have taken this matter up very carefully with the county clerks and the phrase "island" was inserted because of the geographic make-up of our state. We would not like to deprive any individual from the right of suffrage because of the fact that he lives in Lanai, Molokai or Maui, which happens to be one county. I feel very strongly that this phrase should be - - this section, "Registration; Voting," should be left as it is, and the matter which was discussed by our delegate from Kona, I think the election laws would take care of the district voting in the county. However, in the case of Maui county where it is made up of three islands, we felt that the individual in Maui when he is on a contract job to Lanai and because of the fact transportation and a stretch of water prohibits him from returning, he should not be deprived of the right to vote. In the district of - - the county of Hawaii, it's big enough to have the law take care of that matter.

HEEN: I still insist that I think I'm right in having that last sentence deleted; the legislature can take care of absentee voting as it does now. There's nothing in the Organic Act about absentee voting at all and still the legislature has enacted appropriate statutes to take care of absentee voting. However, if the chairman of the committee would like to have that provision included, then I say it should read: "The legislature shall provide for absentee voting." That will take care of the whole situation, without trying to determine from what district, what island, and so forth and so on. The legislature can take care of that.

Perhaps in order to clear the way, if Delegate Doi will permit my withdrawal of my original motion, I will withdraw that motion and make the present motion, that the last sentence be amended so as to read: "The legislature shall provide for absentee voting."

CHAIRMAN: Do I hear a second to that motion?

ANTHONY: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Doi seconds the motion, I believe. Delegate Anthony, do you wish to have the floor?

ANTHONY: No, Mr. Chairman, I just rose to second it.

CHAIRMAN: Thank you. Is there further discussion on this amendment?

YAMAMOTO: Is it understood that in reference to this problem, the matter of the Big Island will be considered? All included?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, would you like to answer that?

HEEN: May that question be repeated? I thought I heard it but - -

CHAIRMAN: Will you repeat the question, Delegate Yamamoto?

YAMAMOTO: The problems in regard to the Big Island will be considered in this matter?

HEEN: Oh yes, quite definitely. If the legislature has the power to enact statutes with reference to absentee voting, they can take care of the situation over in Hawaii, for instance, where they have two representative districts.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the Section 4 be amended so that the last sentence will read: "The legislature shall provide for the manner in which absentee voting shall take place."

ANTHONY: No, the last sentence was - - the motion was: "The legislature shall provide for absentee voting," period, and the rest of the language stricken.

CHAIRMAN: I'll take that correction. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried.

AKAU: A little before that where it says - - in the line before that, may I just read, "voting at all elections, provided that secrecy of voting shall be preserved." In view of our past experience in this recent election for the Constitutional Convention, and since some of the methods were not preserved, I move to amend that section by just adding the word before "preserved" to "scrupulously preserve" adding that word which makes it much more emphatic in my opinion. "Scrupulously preserve."

CHAIRMAN: Will you repeat that word, please.

AKAU: It would read therefore, like this, Section 4 on registration and voting. "The legislature shall provide for the registration of qualified voters and prescribe the methods of voting at all elections provided that secrecy of voting shall be scrupulously preserved."

ANTHONY: I move that Section 4 as amended be adopted.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 4 be adopted as amended.

DELEGATE: Question.

APOLIONA: I think the delegate from the fourth district, in the first sentence after the word "method," said "and manner." It was seconded by Mr. Doi.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, that motion was withdrawn.

CHAIRMAN: I believe so.

HOLROYDE: I second the motion of Delegate Anthony.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any - - shall I put the question? All in favor of adopting Section 4 as amended say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried, as amended.

We're now ready for Section 5.

CORBETT: I move for the adoption of Section 5.

APOLIONA: Second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we adopt Section 5.

SAKAKIHARA: I have an amendment to Section 5 of Committee Proposal No. 8, which was distributed last Friday. I move that the amendment be agreed to. Section 5 of the proposal. The amendment to Section 5 will read as follows: "General elections shall be held on Tuesday after the first Monday in November in even numbered years, and every second year thereafter." The amendment fits in now as follows: "At any primary and general elections a voter shall not be denied the right to vote for candidates from more than one party ticket."

KAUHANE: I second the motion to adopt the amendment offered by Delegate Sakakihara.

ANTHONY: I'm opposed to this amendment. This is an obvious attempt to undo the good work of the last legislature in having a closed primary. I don't think we ought to have anything in our Constitution that's going to prevent the legislature from keeping on the statute books wholesome legislation which will prevent the shifting of votes from one party to another in a primary election, and therefore I'm against this.

SAKAKIHARA: That's a matter of opinion whether that was good legislation or bad legislation. I don't necessarily subscribe to the opinion of one man's thinking. If the members of the Convention will recall that the matter of a closed primary election was a very hotly contested issue before the last session of the legislature. It was strongly supported by the union, by the two major political parties of the territory, who are now regretful of the fact that such legislation was put into effect. Many good men of either party, their candidacies are endangered in a closed primary election.

I don't know whether the members of this Convention realize that approximately 85 per cent of the voters in this territory are non-partisan. Fifteen per cent of the voters are either Republican or Democrat. And out of the existing territorial statute, a person offering himself as a non-partisan candidate for public office are discriminated against; they have to receive twenty per cent of the votes cast or they are eliminated in the primary election. On the other hand, if you are running as a Republican or a Democrat, you could be nominated by a majority vote at that election, but nevertheless it specifically provides that a man offering himself as a non-partisan candidate, he will have to receive twenty per cent of the votes cast.

This is in conformity with the trend of thought at the present time even on the continental mainland United States. The states of Massachusetts and Ohio recently repealed the straight party ticket act which existed for many years.

I submit that a man is entitled to vote according to the conscience of - - according to his own conscience. He can no longer go to the polls and cast his vote for the man who he thinks is the proper person to represent him in a government office. Hereafter he will have to select one or the other, select a Republican or a Democrat, and yet when he is a non-partisan, not affiliated with either of the political party, he will be kept away from the polls; he will be discouraged from voting. Eighty-five per cent will be discouraged from going to the polls and cast their votes. And I submit that this is a good amendment.

CORBETT: I don't intend to enter into the debate as to whether the legislation was good or bad at the last session, but it is my belief that any actions taken on such legislation should be by the next legislature and not written into the Constitution.

TAVARES: I'd like to say that I am going to vote against the proposed amendment, but I don't think that we have to agree that the closed primary is good or bad in order to do that. I agree with the last speaker that this is a question to be left to the discretion of the legislature. If the legislature made a mistake the last time I think that mistake ought to be pointed out to the next legislature, and they ought to be asked to change it. My own opinion is that as conditions change, sometimes the law should be changed to meet them. Once upon a time we had a convention system, and it worked very well for a while; then it began to be felt that there was too much control so we changed to the open primary; then we changed to the closed primary, and perhaps later on, we should make another change. Perhaps some day we will want to come back to the convention system. I think it ought to be left open to the legislature to decide which one of those methods, under all the conditions then obtaining, is necessary and for that reason I shall vote against the amendment.

J. TRASK: I take exception to the remark made by the delegate from Hawaii to the extent that the political parties are regretting that they adopted the closed primary law. Again I think it's a matter of opinion. The Democratic party is strongly in back of this closed primary law, which was enacted by the legislature and as such belongs to the legislature. It should never be made part of the Constitution. I can't speak for the union. However, speaking to a lot of my Republican friends, they are all for the closed primary law. I don't know what percentage the delegate from Hawaii represents but I think he's erroneous in his information to the delegates of this Convention. Another thing, here he quotes 85 per cent of the voters will be deprived of their vote in the primary election. I am almost sure he is basing his remark on the existing law which is the open election. So I move at this time that we table the motion to adopt the amendment.

SAKAKIHARA: I didn't know that there wasn't any Democratic Charlie in Hawaii now. I don't know which is the party, but I do say - -

A. TRASK: Will the gentleman from Hawaii yield?

SAKAKIHARA: I will.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Arthur Trask.

A. TRASK: For the purpose of debate I seconded the motion made by my fellow - -

SAKAKIHARA: I refuse to yield, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: As I understand it, you yielded to Delegate Arthur Trask.

SAKAKIHARA: He wanted to ask me a question, if I understood it correctly. I yielded the floor to question.

CHAIRMAN: I don't think the delegate from the fifth district did say that he rose to ask a question. He asked - -

A. TRASK: It wasn't intended to deprive the orator from Hawaii of his rights, of course. I withdraw that second for the time being.

CHAIRMAN: Second's been withdrawn.

SAKAKIHARA: I don't understand why the fifth district delegate, who preceded before the elder Trask, said that the Republicans predominately were in favor of the closed primary; I don't know since when the gentleman speaks for the Republican party. I do say, Mr. Chairman, I have an editorial comment from the San Francisco Chronicle of recent issue of why Ohio has just adopted the Massachusetts ballot, which abolishes the practice of straight party ticket voting. Hawaii is not going forward by adopting such tactics as closed primary elections to deprive the people of this territory, especially who are not of any political party. I submit that the people of this territory have every right to have this Convention incorporate their bill of rights, rights of suffrage and election, and go to the polls and vote according to the dictates of their conscience without any statutory prohibition as to how they should vote. I submit that this is an appropriate question, a right to be incorporated into the basic law of this territory.

CROSSLEY: I am opposed to the amendment not on the merit of the amendment or on the merits of closed primary law as such, but purely and simply on the matter that this was created by the legislature and if they have made a mistake, they'll correct it; if they think it's the will of the people, they'll continue it. I appreciate very much a member of the loosely connected Democrat party speaking for the Republicans, but I think the Republicans are quite able to carry on for themselves. It was in our party platform before its adoption and I think the Republican party primarily feels that it's something that should be tested out and given back to the people who created it for further action, and not by the Constitutional Convention.

HAYES: I just want to say that I was one of those who fought against the - - who fought for the closed primary on the floor of the legislature, and the result of that, at that time was - - showed that it was a very close vote. There are many, many things that I believe in thoroughly, but I feel that at this Constitutional Convention that we should refer it back to the legislature. If we've made a mistake, the legislature should change it again, and so therefore I feel that that is my sentiment and I just wanted to stand up and speak for it because I was a marked woman on the floor of the legislature speaking for open primary.

NIELSEN: I might say that it has been in the platform of both the Democratic and Republican parties for several years. So, so far as being in the platform, why the standpatters have it in, and will continue to have it in. In the past we've been having two popularity contests; we might just as well have one election. Your primary is a party matter, and then in the general you zigzag down and vote for anybody you want to. So I'm sure we won't lose 85 per cent of our vote in the primary. I'm sure it will still turn out around 80 per cent. But certainly it doesn't belong in the Constitution, and it's a legislative matter and so I'll have to vote to table.

KOMETANI: While we are in the matter of open elections, in 24 of the 48 states the matter of free and open election is in the Constitution under the Bill of Rights, in suffrage rights. And it reads as follows: "All elections shall be free and open and no power, civil or military, shall at any time interfere to prevent the free exercise of the right of suffrage." Now that is in 24 of the 48 states, and therefore the open election is a matter of the individual state's opinion.

CHAIRMAN: Will Delegate Sakakihara restate the amendment so that it may be clear.

SAKAKIHARA: The amendment reads as follows: Second sentence in Section 5, "In any primary and general elections, a voter shall not be denied the right to vote for candidates from more than one party ticket." That is the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any deletion from Section 5?

SAKAKIHARA: Yes, delete the rest so that the Section 5 will read as follows: "General elections shall be held on Tuesday after the first Monday in November, even-numbered years and every second year thereafter. In any primary and general elections a voter shall not be denied the right to vote for candidates from more than one party ticket."

CHAIRMAN: Thank you. Are you ready for the question?

ASHFORD: Wasn't there some question raised the other day about the propriety of tabling an amendment?

CHAIRMAN: I don't believe the motion to table has been put. Delegate Nielsen did mention that he would vote to table, but I don't think he put that into a motion.

HEEN: I take it that the first section of -- or rather the first sentence of Section 5 is left intact under this amendment proposed by Delegate Sakakihara?

SAKAKIHARA: That is true, Senator Heen, and then I intended to make this clarification. My amendment will merely replace this second sentence of Section 5 and retain the third and fourth sentence thereof, so that the Section 5 will read: "General elections shall be held Tuesday after the first Monday in November, even-numbered years and every second year thereafter. In any primary and general election a voter shall not be denied the right to vote for candidates from more than one party ticket. Special elections may be held according to law. Contested elections shall be decided by the Supreme Court of the State of Hawaii according to law."

HEEN: So, I take it then that the amendment deletes the second sentence altogether and another sentence substituted for it.

CHAIRMAN: I believe so.

HEEN: Is that correct, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: I believe so.

HEEN: Because I would like to raise a point with reference to the first sentence later on.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question?

H. RICE: The motion has been made by Mr. James Trask that -- to table the amendment. I second the motion to table.

CHAIRMAN: I believe he's withdrawn his motion to table.

J. TRASK: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Rice, do you yield?

J. TRASK: I did make a motion to table the amendment; it was seconded by my brother Arthur who withdrew his second.

H. RICE: I will second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the motion be tabled.

ROBERTS: I rise on the matter of personal privilege. I'd like to point out I'm not going to raise the question of procedure. I'd like to point out that when a motion to table is put and my vote is recorded in the negative, it is not an indication that I approve of the proposal. I have voted before on the motions to table and I have voted regularly against any motion to table when adequate procedure exists to vote on the specific proposal. It seems to me that adequate procedure exists right now to vote on the amendment. There's no need to move to table. It seems to me that as long as we can vote on the question then we can vote in terms of our specific ideas and notions. A motion to table denies that right.

J. TRASK: In view of what the delegate has just said I withdraw my motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion to table has been withdrawn. Are you ready for the question?

SAKAKIHARA: I ask for ayes and noes, roll call.

CHAIRMAN: All in -- do I see the hands on that? There is insufficient demand for roll call.

TRASK: I think we should defer action on this matter until the other delegates are here on the floor.

CHAIRMAN: That is a -- Would you put that in the form of a motion. Delegate Kometani, did you --

KOMETANI: I'm just looking around to see who's absent from the Convention, that's all.

CHAIRMAN: Roll call has been put but there's not enough hands. How many in favor of roll call?

SAKAKIHARA: No, as the Chair was about to roll call, it was interrupted by Delegate Trask. Let's be fair about it.

CHAIRMAN: There are about two people in favor of roll call. How many are in favor of roll call? Roll call has passed, and it's to be -- this is to be done by roll call.

AKAU: Are we voting now merely on the amendment --

CHAIRMAN: We are.

AKAU: -- or on the whole business?

CHAIRMAN: We are voting on the amendment as put by Delegate Sakakihara. The Chair feels that there's been enough explanation of the amendment so that it need not be re-explained. All in favor will say "aye," and all who are opposed say "no," by roll call.

DELEGATE: In other words, all those who vote aye now are voting in favor of Mr. Sakakihara's amendment?

CHAIRMAN: That is true.

Roll call: Ayes, 23. Noes, 34 (Anthony, Ashford, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Corbett, Crossley, Gilliland, Hayes, Heen, Holroyde, Ihara, Kage, Kawahara, Kellerman, King, Larsen, Lee, Loper, Luiz, Mau, Nielsen, Porteus, Rice, C., Rice, H., Richards, Roberts, Serizawa, Tavares, Trask, A., Trask, J., White, Wirtz, Wist. Not voting, 6 (Arashiro, Kido, Phillips, Sakai, Smith, Woolaway).

CHAIRMAN: The motion's been defeated.

HEEN: I'd like to have someone explain this language to me, "even-numbered years and every second year thereafter."

KOMETANI: That was very seriously considered because we would like to coincide our election with the federal and we understand that the federal election is held on the even number of years.

HEEN: I think the language should be "in the even-numbered years," period.

KOMETANI: No, "and every second year."

HEEN: "In all even-numbered years," put it that way. "General elections shall be held on the Tuesday" -- there ought to be a word after Tuesday inserted, the word "next." That's the language used in the Organic Act. "General elections shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November in all even-numbered years." I so move that.

DELEGATE: I move we take a short recess so the chairman of Suffrage and Election can get this.

SAKAKIHARA: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no objection --

KING: Rather than recess, I would suggest that we rise, report progress and ask to sit again so that we may go into the Committee of the Whole on the Judiciary, and when we sit again the amendment suggested by Delegate Heen might be the first order of business. I'd like to offer that as a motion, that the committee now rise, report progress and request permission to sit again.

CROSSLEY: Second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we rise, report progress and beg leave to sit again. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried.

Afternoon Session

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole is now come to order. There'll be a -- if there's no objection, there'll be a five minute recess. Section 5 has been brought up for consideration. It was moved to be adopted by Delegate Corbett and the motion was seconded by Delegate Apoliona.

KING: If I recollect correctly there was an amendment pending on that.

CHAIRMAN: There was one pending, but I believe at the time of the closing it wasn't put up. May I suggest that the proponent of that amendment offer it again. I think it was Delegate Heen. I understand he was having it typed this afternoon.

PORTEUS: I will go and see if I can find out whether that's being typed and where Delegate Heen is.

CORBETT: I believe that I recall Delegate Heen's amendment to be the deletion of the words "and every second year thereafter." I think his intention was to put a period after the words "even-numbered years" as he felt that the next phrase was simply repetitious.

CHAIRMAN: Could we check with the Chief Clerk on that matter?

NIELSEN: As I recall he also inserted the word "next" after the word "Tuesday" in the first line, and after the word "November" in the second line, "in all even-numbered years," it would read.

HEEN: I am having two forms of amendment printed for the members of the committee. Now one form will read, "General elections shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November in all even-numbered years." That's one form. The other form might be in this manner: "A general election shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November in the first even-numbered year following the adoption of this Constitution and every second year thereafter." Take your choice.

NIELSEN: Mr. Chairman, a question. I'd like to know if after the Constitution is adopted, it might not come in odd-numbered years.

CHAIRMAN: Will you answer Delegate Nielsen's question?

HEEN: If we -- say the Constitution is adopted in 1950, then the general election would be in 1951 or if the general election -- or rather the Constitution is adopted in 1951 after the close of the regular session of the territorial legislature, then the first election will be the 1953 general election. Of course there'll be a provision for special session if there's a necessity for acting before -- acting on the changes in laws, statutes and so forth before the regular session. A special session of the legislature might be called by the Governor.

KOMETANI: The reason for even-numbered years is, as I previously stated, is to have our election coincide with the federal. If we held it on the odd-numbered years -- You will remember that when you become a state you will elect for the President, and therefore it must be on the even-numbered years.

HEEN: That's correct, it's even-numbered years. So that if we have the Constitution adopted this year the first general election would be in 1952.

TAVARES: It's not my understanding that if we happen to come into the Union at an odd time that we won't have an election, but that may be a special election. It shouldn't necessarily interfere with the general election to be held under this section. Therefore there would be a special temporary provision in the ordinance section or some other appropriate place taking care of that special election.

SHIMAMURA: Under the provisions of H. R. 49 it is mandatory that the governor of the territory call an election within sixty days after receipt of notification from the President of the United States certifying to the approval of this Constitution. Therefore in this general section we should not try to restrict ourselves to the ordinary elections. As a matter of fact the Committee on Ordinances has already prepared and drafted and filed the committee proposal on such an election ordinance.

CHAIRMAN: I believe it would be in order if someone moves to adopt one of these amendments.

KING: I agree with both the previous speakers that upon the adoption of the Constitution a special election would be held to inaugurate the state government. Therefore the second suggestion offered by Delegate Heen referring to election after "even-numbered years following the adoption of this Constitution and every second year thereafter" would not be applicable. I'd like to suggest to Delegate Heen, who made the original suggestion, that he move for the adoption of the amendment that would have Section 5 read: "General elections shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November in all even-numbered years" and hereafter the same language as the original proposal.

HEEN: I move at this time that the first sentence of Section 5 of Committee Proposal No. 8 be amended to read as follows: "General elections shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November in all even-numbered years."

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kellerman seconds the motion. You would then delete the other two or three sentences?

HEEN: No, no, this is only the amendment of the first sentence that would delete the words "of every second year thereafter."

KOMETANI: Mr. Chairman, we accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment 's been accepted by the --

HEEN: No, there'll have to be a vote on it because it's an original amendment.

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved that the first sentence in this Section 5 be amended as read by Delegate Heen. Are you ready for the question? All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried.

HEEN: Reference to the second sentence in the same section which reads, "Primary elections shall be held not less than six weeks prior to the general election." That should be left to the legislature, and should not be included in a constitutional provision -- as a constitutional provision.

Efforts have been made in the past to have the legislature set a period of six weeks prior to the general election, and they may yet succeed in having that done, but if you write it in there as a permanent provision, the time may come when you don't need a six weeks' interim between your primary election and general election. I therefore move to delete that section -- I mean sentence.

BRYAN: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Just the second sentence that was moved for deletion and seconded.

AKAU: I'd like to speak in opposition to that statement made by the honorable delegate from the fourth. I think if anybody has been near City Hall in the time between the primary and the general and has seen those clerks work practically day and night, he would realize that the time is absolutely necessary from the point of view of efficiency and practicability to get everybody registered. There are new registrants, there are people who wish to change their registration, and there are people who have come and have set up residences here and have had their residence cards okayed. I think in fairness to the people who have asked us; Mr. Oren Long for example came to visit us at one of our meetings and other people from the county office, the county clerks from all of the counties, and discussed this very important time element with us; I think we should take the word of the people who actually have to do the work. They're the ones who ought to know. Of course, from the point of view of a person who's running for office it is a little hard, physiologically, psychologically and anatomically, all that sort of thing. But for those people, if we are going to be considerate for those people who actually do the work, I think we should leave this clause as it is, namely six weeks.

HEEN: I think if the last speaker were to address her remarks to the legislature it would appeal to the legislature, and probably the legislature would probably set a six weeks period. But there may come a time when you don't need six weeks, when you simplify the process of registration you may not require six weeks.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no further debate --

KOMETANI: Because of our geographic makeup it would -- when we become a state, it will necessitate a little more time for the representative or the office seekers to travel throughout the different islands. And for that reason we have felt that six weeks or more should be inserted in the Constitution to protect our office holders.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the second sentence of Section 5 which reads, "Primary election shall be held not less than six weeks prior to the general election," be deleted, that that section be deleted. All those in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." The Chair is in doubt as to how that went. I believe we could vote by the show of hands. All in favor of deletion raise their right hand. All who are contrary minded raise their right hands, please. Just one hand. There are 29 ayes, 17 noes and there are some who didn't vote. The second sentence is deleted.

HEEN: I now move that Section 5 be adopted as amended.

OKINO: Before there is a second, I should like to make a further amendment of Section 5. I move that the last sentence of Section 5 be deleted. There is nothing in our Organic Act with reference to the subject matter of a contested election. Said subject matter in the past has been regulated by its statute, by legislation. I refer specifically to Section 280 of the Revised Laws of Hawaii, 1945, as amended. You will note that the last sentence refers to contested elections. The last sentence reads, "Contested elections shall be decided by the Supreme Court of the State of Hawaii according to law." Now there is a possibility that candidates seeking county offices may have contested elections. It will be very unfair to ask the candidates seeking county offices to bring their witnesses all the way from Kauai and Hawaii to Honolulu in order that the matter may be adjudicated before the Supreme Court, which no doubt will be here in Honolulu. I believe the legislators in the past have taken this fact into account. It was for that reason and in my opinion a very good reason that the matter was left with the legislature. It is for this reason I have moved the deletion of the last sentence from Section 5.

CROSSLEY: I'd like to second the motion to delete.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Crossley seconds Delegate Okino's motion to delete the last sentence, that is "Contested elections shall be decided by the Supreme Court of the State of Hawaii according to law."

AKAU: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Akau, what is your point?

AKAU: Perhaps it may sound naive but is it possible for the Supreme Court to go to Kauai? Isn't the Supreme Court where the judge is, whether it's under a tree or what have you? I'd just like to have somebody from our "Supreme Court" here answer.

HEEN: I believe though that the delegate from Hilo has a point. It may be that the last sentence should read, "Contested election shall be determined in a manner prescribed by law."

KAWAHARA: May I ask the delegate from the first district a question? My question is in reference to the statute that he referred to in regards to the contested elections. I wonder if that statute states that in the case of contested election such a contested election shall be decided by the Supreme Court. Who decides in the final analysis as to the validity of the election? Does the legislature decide or does the Supreme Court decide? By his reference that there is a law written, that doesn't answer the question, still doesn't answer whether the Supreme Court decides or the legislature decides.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Anthony, would you -- he has a question which you would like to answer? Delegate Anthony.

ANTHONY: For a great many years, in the days of the monarchies, in the days of the Republic, and even down to today, the matter of contested elections have been left to the Supreme Court, and it is by virtue of rule of the Supreme Court. Rule 17 of the present Rules of the Court provides for election cases. "Petitions by any candidate directly interested or by thirty voters of any election district, setting forth cause why the decision of any board of inspectors of elections shall be reversed, corrected, or changed, shall be verified or supported by the affidavit of some person or persons having personal knowledge of the facts claimed to be grounds for reversing, correcting, or changing the decision." Now there's nothing to prevent the Supreme Court from sitting over in Hilo if there should be a contested election in Hilo.

I imagine the purpose of this Rule of Court and this tradition of depositing that power in the Supreme Court is to get away from any political suspicion of tampering with the election ballot boxes and what not, and so you go to the most trusted agency in the whole government, namely the Supreme Court, and let them pass on the contested election. And also it's a very speedy matter.

C. RICE: Isn't it a fact that when the election inspectors get through, all the ballots are put in the bag and mailed to the Secretary of Hawaii, they're all here. None of them are kept on the other islands. It's easier to have your contest right here where all the ballots are. We've had several contests; one the island of Niihau, they wanted to recount the ballots but they're always correct. They've counted them twice but they've always been found correct, counted by the Supreme Court here. Of course, in those days they all voted Republicans, I guess.

SHIMAMURA: I shall also read Section 280 of the Revised Laws of 1945 referred to by the delegate of Hawaii. That refers to appeals to the judicial circuit court from the decisions of the respective board of inspectors and does not pertain to election contests as such which the delegate from the fourth district correctly pointed out have been always within the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.

HEEN: All the more reason why this section should be either deleted or amended. Leave it to the legislature to prescribe the manner in which contests may be determined.

TAVARES: I think there is some point to that suggestion for this reason. I think it's already been touched on. I'd like to make it a little clearer. I think that if it is entirely left to the legislature it would be theoretically possible for the legislature to provide that contested elections should be handled by the legislature itself, in which case it might go along party lines instead of on the basis of the facts as shown before an impartial body. I don't necessarily think they should be tried in every case before the Supreme Court but it seems to me something should be said about trial within the courts rather than before some other type of tribunal.

OKINO: I have no objection to accepting the suggestion made by the delegate from the fifth district, Judge Heen, that the last sentence be amended to read as follows: " Contested elections shall be determined in such manner as may be provided by law."

HEEN: Is that your motion or is that my motion, if I may ask?

OKINO: I have adopted your suggestion into my motion.

HEEN: I second your motion.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen has seconded the motion to amend the last sentence.

CORBETT: Would it not be possible to put both the special elections and the contested elections in one sentence if both of the subjects are going to be covered by legislative act? It doesn't seem necessary to have two sentences. I'm sure the attorneys can word this better than I, but this would be my suggestion; " The legislature shall enact laws to provide for special elections and contested elections."

TAVARES: I'm a little bit concerned about leaving this entirely to the legislature to provide by law for contested elections. It seems to me that the one impartial tribunal you'll have will be the courts. And I would like to move to further amend that by adding after the word " determined" insert the words " by the courts." I think that would be sufficient, " by the courts," so that it would read, " shall be determined by the courts, in such manner as shall be provided by law."

WOOLAWAY: I second that manner.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Woolaway seconded the motion by Delegate Tavares to amend.

OKINO: To simplify procedure, I'm willing to adopt that suggestion made by the delegate from the fifth district, Nils Tavares.

ANTHONY: Mr. Chairman, it shouldn't be "by the courts"; it should be " by a court of competent jurisdiction" if you're going to put that in there. You're not going to have more than one court pass on the same contested election.

TAVARES: I'll accept the amendment. " It shall be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction in such manner as shall be provided by law." I'll accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Will Delegate Woolaway accept that as the second? Will Delegate Tavares tell us what the amendment is now as it is?

TAVARES: The amendment is to amend the last sentence to read as follows: " Contested elections shall be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction in such manner as shall be provided by law."

HEEN: Is that your motion now, Delegate Tavares, if I may ask?

OKINO: For the benefit of the delegate from the fourth district - -

CHAIRMAN: Just a moment. Delegate Heen, will you yield to Delegate Okino? Delegate Okino, you have the floor.

OKINO: I am answering the question interposed by the delegate from the fourth district. I am willing to adopt the suggestions again suggested by the delegate from the fourth district, Mr. Nils Tavares.

HEEN: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen seconds that motion. There's no more deliberation and no more - -

MIZUHA: What is the amendment we're voting on now?

CHAIRMAN: Will you inform the delegate from Kauai?

TAVARES: The amendment is to amend the last sentence of Section 5 to read as follows: " Contested elections shall be be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction in such manner as shall be provided by law."

MIZUHA: There is a question, I rise to a point of information. What would you mean by "contested election"?

CHAIRMAN: Could you answer that, Delegate Tavares?

TAVARES: I take it that a contested election will be an election in which there is a reasonable basis for claiming that the count was wrong or that some other thing was not done properly and that if done properly the result would have been affected. And I think it would be up to the statutes to set forth those circumstances.

MIZUHA: I believe now that question - - I believe that question is now decided by the boards of registration of voters in each county.

TAVARES: That is not correct. Before an election, if a voter's right to vote is challenged, the board - - the inspectors of election must decide it on the spot. However, a candidate who is affected by the votes which are affected by those rulings can appeal the election if it can be shown that it might make a difference in the result. And if he does, then there is a recount under the supervision of the Supreme Court, at the present time.

NIELSEN: Much as I hate to say it, I don't see any reason to put this in the Constitution at all. It's simply a matter for the legislature. They'll set down the rules regarding any contested elections. I don't see why we have to put anything in the Constitution.

CHAIRMAN: If there is no more deliberation, we can put the question to amend the last sentence. Are you ready for the question? All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." I believe it's carried.

LAI: I move that we adopt Section 5 as amended.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 5 be adopted as amended. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried. Section 5 is adopted as amended.

HEEN: I now move that this committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again to consider a written report.

J. TRASK: Before there be a second on that motion, I notice that we have an amendment on our desk in regard to the limitation of political expenses. The amendment will include a new section, Section 6, to read as follows—I believe the delegates have the amendment on their desks—"The legislature shall provide for the limitation of expenses which may be incurred by persons seeking elective offices." I am just wondering, Mr. Chairman, whether this will be a constitutional matter or whether this will be a legislative matter. I wish one of the delegates here would answer that question.

KOMETANI: I feel that is entirely legislative matter.

CHAIRMAN: Since no one seconded it - -

BRYAN: I second Delegate Heen's motion to rise, report progress - -

KING: Does that motion include the adoption of the proposal as a whole?

CHAIRMAN: I don't think so. I think that would be in order before - - if the second will hold off on this. Delegate Bryan concedes.

KING: I move that Committee of the Whole adopt Proposal No. 8 as amended, and after they've done that then the committee rise, report progress and ask permission to file a written report later.

SMITH: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the Committe Proposal No. 8 be adopted as amended and that the committee rise and report progress and ask for permission to file a written report. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It's carried.

JUNE 20, 1950 • Afternoon Session

CHAIRMAN: Will the Committee of the Whole meeting come to order. The [Committee of the Whole] report [No. 7] was made out and a great deal of help was given to the chairman by members of the "Supreme Court" and other attorneys and other members of the Convention for which the committee chairman feels very thankful.

KOMETANI: I move for the adoption of the Committee of the Whole Report No. 7.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

DELEGATES: Question.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any debate? All in favor of adopting Committee of the Whole Report No. 7 to be presented to the Convention say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." Everything is aye, so I guess it is passed.

C. RICE: I move that when the committee rises, it reports recommending the passage of Committee Report No. 7.

CROSSLEY: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we rise and report to the Convention the recommendation that this report be accepted. All in favor say "aye." All who are contrary minded say "no." It is carried. The meeting is over.

Debates in Committee of the Whole on

LEGISLATIVE POWERS AND FUNCTIONS

(Article III)

Chairman: J. GARNER ANTHONY

JUNE 28, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: The meeting will come to order.

HEEN: In order that the delegates may be better informed as to the consideration of the various sections in the article on legislative powers and functions, I will read the preliminary discussion in the report of the committee.

"Your Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions submits herewith a committee proposal for a complete article on legislative powers and functions. The proposal embodies what your committee believes necessary or desirable in establishing the legislative department of the state government. Before arriving at its proposal your committee studied the several proposals referred to it, as well as those provisions of the Hawaiian Organic Act, the Model State Constitution and the constitutions of several of the states pertaining to the legislature. Your committee has decided to retain the framework provided in the Organic Act without substantial change, except in a few particulars.

"Your committee believes that the legislature should remain bicameral, but recognizing the desirability of wider representation of the population which has greatly increased since the adoption of the Organic Act, has provided for an increase in the membership of both houses of the legislature. However, while it was unanimously agreed that there should be an increase in membership, your committee was unable to agree as to the extent of the increase. A majority of your committee approved a Senate of 25 members and a House of Representatives of 51 members, while a minority insisted that the House should not be larger than 41 members, nor the Senate larger than 21 members.

"In fixing the composition of the two houses your committee was faced with the problem of reapportionment, which, with the increase and shift of population since 1900, has become complicated as well as acute. Your committee has agreed that the House of Representatives must be apportioned on the basis of the number of registered voters among the several major island divisions (the present counties) but that the present ratio of representation among the four existing senatorial districts should be maintained in the Senate. In districting your committee made but one change as to senatorial districts, that being the splitting of the island of Oahu into two districts roughly corresponding to the present representative districts, but completely revised the representative districts, which are increased from six to eighteen.

"A major departure proposed by your committee from the provisions of the Organic Act is the provision for annual, as distinguished from biennial, sessions of the legislature. Your committee proposes that of the annual regular sessions, only those held in the odd numbered years, which shall be known as 'general sessions,' shall be open to all kinds of legislation, and that those held in the even numbered years, to be known as 'budget sessions,' shall be confined to general appropriations bill and bills to authorize proposed capital improvement expenditures, revenue bills necessary therefor, bills to provide for the expenses of such session, urgency measures deemed necessary in the public interest, bills calling elections and proposed constitutional amendments. In addition, special sessions are provided for.

"The provision for annual sessions is a recognition of the need today for more frequent, if not continuous, sessions of the legislature, particularly in view of the difficulties of projecting estimates of revenues and expenses for two years and more in advance, as is the case at present. The provision for a budget session in those years in which a general session is not held, makes it possible to limit appropriations for the expenses of the government to a single fiscal year.

"A similar thought underlies your committee's action in providing for the establishment of a legislative council. While such a provision might be considered legislative and the inclusion of such provision objected to on that ground, your committee believes that the work of the legislature must be implemented by a continuous study by some agency under the control of the legislature in the interim between sessions and that it is a matter of such importance that it should not be left entirely to legislation.

"Another important change is in the provision for reapportionment. The provision of the Organic Act for reapportionment has been, as is notorious, totally ineffective. Your committee proposes that reapportionment be practically automatic every ten years."

It was my intent as chairman of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions to take up all the sections of the articles at this time instead of -- and leaving Sections 2, 3 and 4 to be considered last. Two, three and four of the article deals with the setup of the Senate, the initial apportionment of the House of Representatives and the automatic reapportionment of the House of Representatives every ten years. I understand, however, that some of the delegates would like to take up Sections 2, 3 and 4 first, dealing with the Senate, the House, the apportionment, and the reapportionment of the House of Representatives. I would like to hear from some of the delegates on that.

SAKAKIHARA: I so move.

MIZUHA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: What is your motion, Delegate Sakakihara?

SAKAKIHARA: My motion is to take up Section 2 and Section 3 and 4.

CHAIRMAN: You've all heard the motion. All in favor.

MAU: Doctor Larsen is asking what the motion is. The motion is to consider all the other sections of the proposal other than that -- those that relate to reapportionment.

CHAIRMAN: No, Mr. Mau, the motion was to take up -- I should think you'd take up Section 1 first. The motion was to take up reapportionment first. Is there any further discussion? All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried. Proceed.

MIZUHA: In this discussion on apportionment I would like to ask a general question before any motion is put to the chairman of the committee, whether the delegates here will discuss the question of apportionment only with reference to particular districts by delegates from those districts or are we going to participate in a general discussion of all districts.

CHAIRMAN: That's up to the body. The speaker can proceed any way he desires.

HEEN: Perhaps it might be well to take up Sections 3 and 4 first, dealing with the House of Representatives. Section 2 provides for the initial apportionment of the House of Representatives which will continue until the automatic reapportionment of the House in 1959, about ten years hence.

PORTEUS: I think there's a disposition on the part of some of the members who wish to deal with the composure of the Senate and establish how many senators there's going to be. I think if we can go to the sections in order now, Section 2, then Section 3, then Section 4, we'll make progress.

CHAIRMAN: May I ask the chairman of the committee a question? Is there any reason why we shouldn't act on Section 1 first?

HEEN: Well the problem as to reapportionment in my mind is more serious than that one connected - -

CROSSLEY: Point of order. We just voted to take up Section 2.

CHAIRMAN: I'm just asking for some information.

MIZUHA: It's my understanding that Section 2 deals with senatorial districts, and I think we should proceed with senatorial districts first before we - -

CHAIRMAN: Chair so rules. We're dealing with Section 2.

SMITH: I move that we tentatively adopt Section 2.

CROSSLEY: I'd like to second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we tentatively adopt Section 2. Any discussion?

NIELSEN: I have an amendment. I have an amendment to Section 2.

CHAIRMAN: Has it been printed?

NIELSEN: Yes, it has been printed and distributed. The amendment is to make the first senatorial district, East Hawaii with five senators; the second senatorial district, West Hawaii with two senators.

PORTEUS: Might I interrupt one moment to ask whether or not it might not be desirable to deal with the first sentence of the section first in order that we may determine how many will be in the Senate. After we've made the determination of how many will be in the Senate, then I think the division in districts will be a little easier.

CHAIRMAN: That seems desirable to the Chair if it is agreeable to the movant.

NIELSEN: That's agreeable but the question is, I think this ties in with the House too. So if it's going to be a 25-51 combination, I'd be in agreement, but if it's going to be 21-41 or some other combination, why then we've got a headache on our hands. I think the number in both the Senate and the House is the critical thing to decide right now.

HEEN: Perhaps it might be well to read Section 2 throughout:

SECTION 2. Senate; senatorial districts; number of members. The Senate shall be composed of twenty-five members, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective senatorial districts. The districts, and the number of senators to be elected from each, shall be as follows:

First senatorial district: the island of Hawaii, seven;
Second senatorial district: the islands of Maui, Molokai, Lanai and Kahoolawe, five;
Third senatorial district: that portion of the island of Oahu, lying east and south of Nuuanu street and Pali Road and the upper ridge of the Koolau range from the Nuuanu Pali to Makapuu Point, five;
Fourth senatorial district: that portion of the island of Oahu, lying west and north of the third senatorial district, five; and Fifth senatorial district: the islands of Kauai and Niihau, three.

PORTEUS: Would it facilitate matters to have a motion that we adopt - - we tentatively approve the first sentence so as to determine the number.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will entertain such a motion.

SAKAKIHARA: I so move.

SMITH: I'll second it.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we tentatively adopt the first sentence of Section 2. Any discussion?

H. RICE: I'd like to offer an amendment, where it reads "25 members" to read "15 members."

MIZUHA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute, who seconded that?

HOLROYDE: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: What is your point of order?

HOLROYDE: The first sentence does not include the number. The first sentence which was the motion, "The Senate, the senatorial districts, number of members." Would that be the first sentence?

CHAIRMAN: No, that's not the substance of the provision. That's just descriptive.

HOLROYDE: We want to clarify that.

CHAIRMAN: What we are voting on is the first sentence: "The Senate shall be composed of 25 members who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective senatorial districts." To which there has been an amendment that the number "25" be changed to "15." It has been moved and seconded by Delegate Rice. Any discussion? All those in favor of the amendment - - the vote is on the amendment.

HAYES: I would like to know the reason why the senator from Maui feels that the number should be 15.

H. RICE: From our county it would be ridiculous to have five senators and six representatives. The senators would be worth a dime a dozen in that proportion. I think that for the economy of the territory and the good of the territory, we should cut down on this representation, and they're not going to increase anything except proportional representation and I think it is all right to leave it where it is.

SMITH: I'd like to speak against the amendment. The main issue here, as the committee has decided, that for 50 years the reapportionment under the Organic Act is now proven defective due to population. And even though we feel that there might be too many from Maui, we have to consider that in order to have something to follow in the future, that to give Oahu a true reapportionment, that maybe Maui would have too many. But we'll be having something to follow, and therefore I believe that Maui will have to have a little more than she really needs.

CHAIRMAN: If there is no further discussion, the Chair will put the question.

TAVARES: It seems to me that if we are going to vote for a larger Senate, that may be all right provided we put some curbs upon the type of wasteful expenditures for patronage that legislatures are apt to engage in, and later on I hope that if the 25-member Senate is voted on that the members here will seriously consider some reasonable curbs on the unlimited patronage that has made our sessions so expensive.

A. TRASK: I am in favor of the amendment by the senator from Maui. I feel that it isn't so much the question of economy, it isn't so much a question of dime a dozen, it's a question of the House being the undergraduate, the more representative portion of the legislature, and the Senate being made up of men more mature, more learned, more experienced who can give a deliberative eye, ear and heart and mind to the various problems the territory faces. It's a question of deliberation and it's not a question so much of representation and I am altogether in favor of having the Senate as we all like to think from the historical sense, that it is the group of people composed of mature, deliberative people wise to the ways and experiences of the community life.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion on the question?

NIELSEN: I'd like to speak against the amendment because I feel that we need a larger number in the Senate so we can have more committees. Because of the complicated days that we're living in, with only 15 in there, the overstacking on committees means that the various committees cannot meet half often enough. I might call your attention to the fact that the reorganizational act of Congress, they reduced the standing committees in the House—which would be the same as the Senate with us—from 48 to 19, that was after they reduced the number of committee assignments, and what happened. The very first Congress that met after that had to put under these 19 committees, three special committees and 119 subcommittees. So I think that in order -- so that each committee will have men familiar with the work that that committee will be given to do, that we should have a Senate large enough to take care of it.

LARSEN: It seems to me that one thing we have to consider is expense also. We have a chance to try this state for ten years with the same number we've had, a well respected body of few men who are deliberating with a minimum expense. If this doesn't work out, in ten years we can have 25. But, let's not start our state off with a top legislative expense.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion?

LEE: I believe that someone should answer the statement made by the delegate from Hawaii concerning the matter of committees. I believe that when a body is increased in size you will find that there will be more committees and when more committees are established, as we found here right in this Convention, members of that particular body have to belong to many more committees, and as a result it increases the work of the particular members of that particular body. It may be all right for one chamber of the legislature to be in that category, but you will find as in this experience we have here that whatever the committee reports out of committee, the matter often times is taken up by the Committee of the Whole and that has been the practice of this Convention. You will note that if the Senate is the size of 15, many of the matters are taken up as the Committee of the Whole. There will be more opportunities to take up matters in the Committee of the Whole where every member of the Senate will be able to give full consideration to any proposal that may be made before the legislature. I merely call that in answer to the remarks from the delegate from the island of Hawaii.

KAWAKAMI: I believe in quality rather than in quantity and so far we have had three senatorial representatives and I hate to have that three diluted by water. Therefore, I believe in 15.

WOOLAWAY: While we're speaking on the subject, I'll speak for the measure. First of all, I'd like to point out that in the year 1900 when the Organic Act came into effect, the population of this territory was 154,000 people. At that time, as we do now, we had 15 senators or a total of one senator to every 10,000 of the population. With a 25 Senate, we would have one senator for every 20,000 or twice that amount. As far as caliber is concerned, it was mentioned to me that Maui would be at a disadvantage to the island of Oahu if we had five senators and not three because we just didn't have the caliber of men on the county of Maui as you have on Oahu. Well, I can hardly swallow that, let alone speaking for the senators now that represent us in the territorial legislature. Secondly, I think a 15 Senate, its voting power would be a little bit too overwhelming against a House of 43 members, say three votes to every one in the House of Representatives; and let me tell you they can really wield their power with that vote. And fourthly, on the cost, it isn't the cost of paying for the services of your senators and representatives that's running this Territory into unnecessary debt, but it's the cost of unnecessary administrative costs, messengers, stenos, clerks and the like that are given jobs for political reasons alone, as was brought up by Delegate Tavares. I think this Territory can stand an increase in the House of Representatives and in the Senate. Furthermore, in sticking to reapportionment that we're all for, I'm not going to vote for any decrease in representation from Maui county or anybody else in this Territory. I'm for the increase of 25.

ASHFORD: In the Federal Congress there is no reapportionment of the Senate except as may occur from the entrance of new states. Just conceive of the immense increase, for example, in the population of California between 1900 and 1950, yet they still have two senators. The reapportionment occurs in response to population in the House, and it seems to me it is very proper that that is what should occur here. The 15 members of the Senate have functioned extremely well and I am for it.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? The Chair will put the question that's on the amendment of Delegate Rice, that the number "25" be changed to "15" in the first sentence of Section 2 of Committee Proposal No. 29. All those in favor. Contrary. The noes have it.

DELEGATES: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a request for a roll call? Roll call is in order, apparently. The Clerk will call the roll. This is on the amendment.

Ayes, 16. Noes, 46 (Akau, Apoliona, Bryan, Castro, Crockett, Crossley, Doi, Dowson, Fong, Fukushima, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Ihara, Kam, Kanemaru, Kauhane, Kawahara, Kellerman, Kido, King, Kometani, Lai, Luiz, Lyman, Mau, Nielsen, Noda, Ohrt, Okino, Phillips, Porteus, Richards, Roberts, Sakai, Sakakihara, Shimamura, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, J. Trask, White, Woolaway, Yamamoto, Yamauchi). Absent, 1 (Wist).

CHAIRMAN: The motion is lost.

WIRTZ: I now have the amendment to the first sentence. I had previously had and prepared and printed an amendment to the entire section but I understood the ruling of the Chair was that we're going to take this up sentence by sentence, so I'd like to read the amendment to the first sentence. I move that the first sentence be deleted and in lieu thereof the following sentence inserted:

> The Senate shall be composed of 20 members who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective senatorial districts and the lieutenant governor of the state who shall be the presiding officer and who shall have a vote only in case of a tie.

A. TRASK: I second the motion.

WIRTZ: I'd like to speak briefly in support of my amendment. I think it's clear that in the legislative committee deliberations that so long as we moved up in terms of five in the Senate-for each five giving each of the outside islands -- outside counties, one and Oahu two—that the same proportion was maintained. The difficulty with a 20 Senate was the possibility of a tie. That is why the committee went to a 25 Senate to avoid the possibility of a tie. I offered this suggestion in the committee in the interest of economy to keep the number of the Senate down, and I feel that by having the lieutenant governor of the state act as the presiding officer we are following a well established precedent of the United States Senate and likewise of 35 states in the Union. Now I think that this amendment will satisfy all persons who are critical of the present setup of the Senate. It will increase the body to 20 members and by having a lieutenant governor, who, I'd like to point out, is only to be the presiding officer and has no vote except in case of a tie, serves both the criticism that our present Senate is too small and should be expanded and likewise it answers the criticisms of keeping expenses down.

SAKAKIHARA: May I ask the Delegate from Maui a question? This amendment is to have Section 2, line 2 read "20" instead of "25," is that it?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Sakakihara, will you please address the Chair. The amendment was that the number should be fixed at 20, that the lieutenant governor should be the presiding officer without vote except in case of a tie. Does that answer your question?

SAKAKIHARA: May I ask, Mr. Chairman, the delegate from Maui how he proposes to set up the Senate on the basis of 20 senators, from each senatorial district?

WIRTZ: I'll be glad to answer that question. As I stated, I have this entire proposal, the whole section which would show the breakdown, but I didn't want to get into that for fear of being out of order, but if the Chair will allow me to answer, and I'd partially answered it by pointing out that when you go up in multiples of five the increase is one to each of the outer counties and two for Oahu. So that this would, on a 20 member Senate: Hawaii five; Maui, Molokai, Lanai and Kahoolawe four; Oahu eight; Kauai and Niihau three.

SAKAKIHARA: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN: No further discussion?

MIZUHA: I would like to speak in favor of the amendment. The federal government has recognized the principle of equal representation in the Senate and that has continued over the period of the history of our government and has never been changed. Hawaii, since its inception as a territory of the United States under the Organic Act established a 15 man Senate but did not follow the federal principle but did closely resemble it and gave representation to the outside counties in a sort of proportion which gave them some voice in the Senate. In a republican form of government where the two branches of the legislature has been established, it has always been felt that the Senate should be a small body of men who would represent entire districts, or entire states on a statewide basis to the Congress of the United States; with reference to the various state legislatures to represent the various counties or districts to the state legislature.

Increasing the Senate to the proportion, as originally proposed by the legislative committee, of 25 members will give Hawaii a 25 man Senate and follow the pattern of other state legislatures and the federal government. We have seen throughout the years that the representative body of the state assembly always had about three or four times the number of senators. If we establish a 25 man Senate, then our state legislature -- House of Representatives should, if we follow that pattern of proportion, have at least a minimum of 75 representatives. The history of our legislature here in the Territory of Hawaii has shown that they have spent money in the legislative sessions, sums of money far out of proportion to the population and to the income of the territory as compared to other state legislatures. If we had a 25 man Senate, every senator will have his brother and sister working for the Senate. Every senator will have his brother and sister and uncle and nephew working for the holdover committee of the Senate.

Likewise we have seen the legislative article as set out -- put out by the legislative committee creating a legislative council, and our experience with holdover committees here in the Territory of Hawaii has shown that our legislators are human. Once they are elected to that great body, the legislature of the State of -- the Territory of Hawaii, they carry with them a certain aura of importance. Not only will they exert themselves in legislative sessions to give employment to their relatives and friends and seek to increase the legislative budget, but also they would be breathing down the necks of every department head of this territory morning, noon and night to give their relatives and friends jobs, and if we have a 25 man Senate, every department head once a day will have a call from a senator to tell him that he must give somebody a job.

And if we are to look at the facts closely, if we cannot have the 15 man Senate as it was voted down previously, then a 20 man Senate would give us just a slight increase and will avoid the tremendous expense that our legislative sessions will have to face because of the increased salaries that have been proposed by the legislative article, fifteen hundred dollars a session and then a thousand dollars for the budget session. It must be remembered that they will meet annually. Now, under this article certainly the costs of the legislature would be double or triple, depending upon the number of people representing the various counties, and I am in favor of this amendment because it tends to bring economy to government and have the legislative body a deliberative body instead of a body seeking to seek jobs for their friends and relatives.

SMITH: I am speaking opposing the amendment for this reason; that I fully appreciate the work of the committee in their deliberations; that they felt that the Organic Act was ineffective as far as reapportionment was concerned; that these arguments that will come up against their proposal, I believe that they did come up in the committee and were discussed, probably very thoroughly, more thoroughly than we can possibly take time in one or just two days discussing it. Therefore, I really oppose this amendment.

ROBERTS: I am generally in favor of a little larger Senate, in part because it makes it more representative of the community and doesn't permit it to operate like a private club. I think we ought to get adequate representation from the islands and I believe the previous method did provide representation. I think that the increase in number whether it be five or ten has some bearing, not in terms of how much it's going to cost for the salary of the senator, but what it's going to mean in terms of the total budget. Those who have followed the budget of the Territory in terms of the expenditures of funds not for the salary of the individual nor for his travel expense, but for additional expense in connection with the operation of the legislature, makes it quite clear that the costs are extremely high. Let me just give you the figures for the year 1949. The total legislative costs excluding members' salaries and travel - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts, has that been printed and placed on the desk? Is that the same document that has been printed and circulated?

ROBERTS: No, it is not. That figure shows a total legislative costs of $472,000 and that is exclusive of the salaries of the members of the House and the Senate and the travel expenses. Now that $472,000 is 63 per cent of employee cost to the total costs; in other words, the other cost amount to only approximately 37 per cent. Now when you increase the size of your Senate and of your House, you are going to have proportionate increases in cost, and it would seem to me that we ought to try and keep the cost at some reasonable level; but at the same time consistent with getting as broad representation as possible, to permit the Senate to operate as a deliberative body properly representing the entire community. I think the amendment offered by the delegate from Maui is a reasonable one; it provides for increase to 20 and has the additional advantage of providing that the lieutenant governor of the state is to be presiding officer of the Senate which provides some work for the lieutenant governor and also brings a person in to keep deliberative operation and permits an operating Senate of 20 which is generally broader. I, therefore, would like to speak in support of the amendment and I urge that it be adopted.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Lee, your microphone is not working, I don't believe. Still not working.

LEE: I would like to speak in support of the amendment proposed by the honorable delegate from Maui. If I may point out that the subcommittee of the Statehood Commission had recommended a House of 41 members of the lower house and 21 members of the Senate. So that the point raised by Delegate Smith concerning the deliberations by the committee of the Convention must also be weighed in line with the recommendations made by the committee from the Statehood Commission.

Your chairman of the Legislative Committee has given considerable time both prior to the Convention as well as during the Convention concerning the membership of both the House and the Senate and it is in line, it seems to me, with the matter of costs. If as Delegate Roberts has pointed out, the costs of the budget for the legislature in the '49 session, excluding salaries, is $472,000, we may safely say . . . [Part of speech not on tape.]

The 1949 session is closely set out to be about $500,000 or near $600,000. Actually a 51, because if you adopt a 25 member Senate you will amost be bound to vote for a 51 House. Instead of 45 members of the legislature you will have 76 members of the legislature and your legislative budget will be at least a million dollars for the regular session, then plus the annual session which might be anywhere near $500,000 and $600,000. The cost is out of line, and it seems to me when we become a state we will not have the aid of the federal government in paying the salaries of your legislators. Your legislators are, under the present territorial setup, are paid by the federal government. Now your taxpayers, the people whom you represent, will have to dig out of their pockets for this type of representation.

It seems to me that the proposal offered by Delegate Wirtz comes near in answering to all of the criticisms possibly of a smaller size Senate. If we are to have a 25 member Senate, it seems to me you will do away with the principle that the Senate should be a deliberative body because in my experience in serving in both the House and the Senate, in my experience in the House, there is a tendency of steam rolling because if debate were unlimited, as there is in the Senate, it would be very difficult to have legislation proceed in an expeditious manner, as we can well appreciate in this Convention. If debate were unlimited here and the matter of sixty days were to be invoked, we would never get through.

Therefore I believe that those who will support the amendment will be supporting a lower sized House, and those who will be supporting a 25 member Senate will be supporting a 51 member House. With the annual sessions plus the legislative council which is being proposed by a majority of the committee, we would be imposing a great burden upon the people whom we represent. The cry has been that we are being taxed to death. Now certainly we are encouraging that taxation without improving, it seems to me, the legislative process.

YAMAMOTO: Can I ask a question? Are we presupposing that our legislature for the new State of Hawaii will meet annually?

CHAIRMAN: Will the chairman of the Legislative Committee answer that question?

HEEN: That's correct; it is proposed in the article on legislative powers and functions that there are to be annual sessions, one to be known as the budget session and the other to be known as general session.

A. TRASK: I'm voting for the amendment because I think the taxpayers ought to have a break.

MAU: I am wondering whether the reduction of the Senate from 25 to 20 will increase the cost to a million dollars. I believe that that discussion should apply to the original motion made by the delegate from Maui who proposed a Senate of 15, so that it becomes a matter of degree. However, I don't believe that any one sitting in this Convention is disposed to disagree with what has been said insofar as the tax monies are concerned. But I am wondering whether or not in the past legislative sessions, if economy had been practiced, and I believe it could have been practiced, that the amount of money expended for the general sessions of '43, '45, '47, '49 could not have been cut down. I don't see any reason why even though you do have a Senate of 25 and a House of 51 that it need cost us a million dollars to run the legislative sessions. I believe that if the people are conscious of the fact that the legislative sessions are costing so much money that public opinion will restrain their hand on the public purse.

KELLERMAN: I'd like to speak in favor of the motion. I think we have one more factor to consider in addition to the fact that even this increase is an increase in one-third of the body proposed. The increase in one-third doesn't mean just salaries and it doesn't mean just clerks, it also means room for the members to meet, a room adequate for their sessions, adequate for the public and adequate for committees. I believe most of those who are in favor or contemplating favorably a 25 Senate are also the group favoring a 51 House.

I think, it may seem a short view, but it seems to me we're not writing a Constitution to which we are bound forever. If we feel that a 21 Senate or a 20 Senate with the lieutenant governor as the twenty-first member eventually does not prove to be adequately representative, we can amend the Constitution. In the interim period, we are making an increase of 33-1/3 per cent, and we would be increasing the body to a number that could be housed in our present facilities. If we go to a 25 Senate, which is I feel sure carries in its train a 51 House, we are going to find immediately upon our doorstep the necessity for a new capital building. A new capitol building is an outstanding edifice of any state government. It will mean millions of expenditure to provide the necessary facilities to accommodate a Senate and an increased House on that proportion; millions which at this time we can not afford to spend for such a purpose. And in view of the fact that we are not forever bound to the smaller Senate or smaller House if we do not consider that it works justifiably and adequately in representation, I feel that now of all times, we should limit this to what is still a considerable increase, a 33-1/3 per cent increase in the Senate.

The one more point about the lieutenant governor. It was brought up in committee and discussed at some length, that if the lieutenant governor is given the duty of sitting in the Senate he will be taken away from his necessary duties as lieutenant governor. As of that time we had not adopted an administrative director, or administrative assistant or administrator, whatever the term, to the chief executive. It seems to me that a lieutenant governor would have a very valuable education and ample opportunity to work as the governor's representative in the Senate, to work with the legislature, to be the go-between between the executive and the legislative process as we have in the Senate of the United States. I think it would be highly valuable as part of our cooperation of our two branches, executive and legislative branches of government, to have the lieutenant governor serve as president of the Senate. For those reasons I am in favor of the small Senate of 20 and of the lieutenant governor as the presiding officer.

SMITH: It just came to my attention that believing in distribution of powers—that there should be three branches of government. Here we would be having an instance where the executive branch will be an arbitrator in case of ties in the legislature. I am rather dubious on that, very much so.

CHAIRMAN: That is the same system that prevails in the Federal Constitution.

H. RICE: You have your memorandum of the cost of the legislature. Just for the record, in the Senate of 1919 I was chairman of the Committee of Accounts. We had $25,000 and I returned $4,000 to the Territory. We operated on $21,000. But here I'm surprised that these men in that industry wanting to build up, tied up your legislature; they're always saying, "Why don't you put your government on a business basis?" and here they get away from it. You're going wild in putting up your legislature to that amount; you don't take on ten men when one man or two men will do; you keep them down.

MIZUHA: The question was raised, how can an increase of five senators increase the cost of the legislative sessions a million dollars? It isn't only the cost of the legislative session that is concerned. Five more senators in the Senate of the State of Hawaii will have five more senators clamoring for their pet projects in Hookena and Kapalama and every place else and we'll get a library in every village and hamlet worth hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the final result will be an appropriation budget that we'll never be able to fund by our own income.

KING: I had not intended to speak on this subject but I don't think that those who have been arguing about the expense should be allowed to get away with a lot of information which is inaccurate. The argument as to the pending amendment is between 20 and 25 senators and the costs that have been put up defending the smaller number have to be taken into consideration with the period in which those costs were involved. We know that the dollar has shrunk in buying power tremendously in the last 30, 40 or 50 years. We know also that the population of Hawaii has increased tremendously. We know also that the annual budget has increased tremendously. Delegate Sakakihara has prepared a statement which was submitted to the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions and was incorporated in the minutes of that committee's deliberations, showing that the per capita cost of the legislature is less today than it was 20 years ago and that the ratio of the cost of the legislature to the annual appropriation is less today than it was 20 years ago. That information should be offered to the members of this delegation so they will realize that this talk about the low cost in 1919 has no bearing whatsoever in the year 1950. I am opposed to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kage, did you want to speak?

KAGE: I am in favor of the amendment. I am not a politician and I have never been one and I don't know whether I'll be one or not, so naturally my observation will be very, very simple. By and large, the larger the number the lesser the quality, by and large. Second, the larger the number the less the compensation, the less the compensation the bigger the chances of graft. The larger the number the less the attracting power. I am not worrying about the cost of the government. I think democracy is a very expensive form of government, but if we have a million dollars to spend why divide it among 75 people when you can divide it among 50 people? There is a question that I would like to ask of the chairman of the Legislative Committee. What is the minimum number of senators required to legislate for the State?

CHAIRMAN: Does the chairman care to answer that question?

HEEN: I don't exactly know what the purport of the question is. You mean for the proposed State of Hawaii?

KAGE: Yes. As I read your report it says here that 15 members was too small and that's the only reason that you give in your report that it should be increased to 25.

HEEN: That's the report of the majority of that committee. The minority of the committee proposed first a 20 member Senate—that was an amendment that was proposed by Delegate Wirtz of Maui—but that failed to carry. Then there was a proposal made to have the Senate consist of 21 members and that was voted down by a majority of the committee.

Personally speaking I think that the Senate can operate with either 20 members, the lieutenant governor serving as the 21st member without a vote except in the case of a tie, or with 21 members.

CHAIRMAN: Does that answer your question, Delegate Kage?

KAGE: The question that I'm trying to raise here is, what is wrong with the 15 members we have today?

CHAIRMAN: What was that question? Please address the Chair.

KAGE: The question that I wanted to be answered was, "What is wrong with the 15 members we have today?"

CHAIRMAN: That's the question before the body for debate. Are you ready for the question? Is there any further discussion?

DOWSON: I have here some figures as to the economy practiced in the Senate in 1949. They had appropriated to run the Senate about $225,000. After the regular session they returned $16,706.97. In the special session they had $75,000 to use and they returned $7,208.10.

AKAU: I just want to say a word against the amendment. We have heard the questions brought up about will there be no room, it will cost a great deal of money and that we don't have the kind of people or where will we get them, they'll be a dime a dozen. I'd just like to say, Hawaii has been in existence voting for people at least since it has been a territory since 1900. The people of the community, the people of the islands and the legislature have found ways and means of doing things they wish to do. This is another challenge, another opportunity for them to rise to the occasion just as well as they have done over a period of years. We can stand 25 people in the Senate. I am sure we can do it because we have all the capable people here who will find the ways and means.

ARASHIRO: The problem that I'm concerned about is not the question of how many senators, it's how many senators that we can afford to have in this state government of ours. I am for a smaller number because I want to see that the senators and representatives of the legislature be paid a sufficient amount of money. How many of you feel that $2,500 is enough to make a legislator be independent and not dependent upon some other source of income? He should be independent so he can act independently. But any time that we increase our legislature means that we cannot afford to pay our legislators sufficient amount of money and thereby making that legislator dependent on other source of income, whereby he will not be independent in his action and decision. That is the reason why I am for a lower number of legislators though I am interested in having more representation from all the districts and to preserve the democratic form of government. But yet I am concerned about the cost because I know that we cannot afford to pay a tremendous and exorbitant amount of money, and I still want to say that the legislator be paid sufficient amount of money so he won't be dependent upon some other source of income.

AKAU: Point of personal privilege. Mr. Chairman, point of personal privilege.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

AKAU: I just want to say by the way, that Mr. Trask is now carrying out his promise regarding the ilima leis. He has now given each of the women delegates a beautiful lei for which we thank him very cordially.

SAKAKIHARA: So much has been said here in connection with the increase of the legislative branch of government. If the present membership of 15 senators should be increased to 25, I wish to call attention of the members of the Committee of the Whole [to] a fair comparison of the two branches of the government, namely, the legislature and the judicial. In 1949 the population of the Territory of Hawaii was approximately 493,348. The legislature in that session made a total appropriation of $71,709,698. Legislative expenses appropriated was $500,000. On a percentage basis, the percentage of the total appropriation amounts to 0.7 per cent and per capita $1.01. For the judicial, the legislature appropriated $1,857,652; percentage of total appropriation, 2.6 per cent to the legislative percentage of 0.7 per cent; per capita, $3.76. Now I have given this comparison to show how much it costs to run your judiciary, one branch of the government, to the legislative branch of the government.

ASHFORD: May I ask the foregoing speaker a question?

CHAIRMAN: State your question, Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: I would like to know if a large part of that increase in cost to the Territory was not due to the fact that the Territory took over the courts which had formally been supported by the county.

CHAIRMAN: Will you answer that, Delegate Sakakihara?

SAKAKIHARA: That is true. When the Territory took over the circuit courts, it became the obligation of the Territory rather than the county. But that fact nevertheless remains, this is one branch of the government, namely, the judiciary.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion? If not -- Delegate Rice.

C. RICE: I sent in a request to the director of the Bureau of Research, I wanted to find out these costs. We had 15 senators and 30 representatives in 1919 and we had the same number in 1949, but the costs went up tremendously. President King said before the session, "If we didn't have much money, we couldn't have any gravy trains." That's right. But it seems that all legislative bodies have "gravy trains." We're getting experts as we go along in government, and I just wanted to show the cost to the people. Maybe they can show that the cost is justified, but it's there. You can't have so much money for kindergartens if you spend it on the legislature. We're going to try to live within our budget and if we spend too much on the legislature, somebody else will have to suffer. Maybe you can run a 25 Senate as cheap as a 20; maybe you can, but one thing was pointed out, we had to move here because we have a 63 Convention. To have a 53 House, you'll have to build a new building. We are invited to go and see a million dollar building today. They'll have to have a two million dollar building for the next legislature if we increase it too much. I'm just thinking a little, that we are facing a little hard times now and we ought to cut down.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. The question is on the motion of Delegate Wirtz.

DELEGATES: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: Roll call demanded? And that is, the Senate should be 20 with the lieutenant governor as the presiding officer with no vote except in case of a tie, an amendment to the first sentence of Section 2 of Committee Proposal No. 29.

NIELSEN: Point of information. That would mean that the Senate would not elect their own speaker or the president of the Senate.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. Do you want to answer that, Delegate Wirtz?

WIRTZ: That's been answered. I didn't know whether you wished me to read the exact words of the amendment. You stated it substantially.

CHAIRMAN: Would the body like to have the exact language read or do you have the substance already? The Clerk will please call the roll.

LARSEN: Mr. Chairman, while we're waiting for the vote, could I call attention to how little the tremendous argumentation has made any difference in the vote? I would like to suggest, and all of us have listened in on this committee - -

DELEGATE: Point of order, Mr. Chairman. I'm afraid he is out of order.

CHAIRMAN: I think that is correct. There's nothing before the house at the present time, Delegate Larsen.

LARSEN: I asked for permission, didn't I?

CHAIRMAN: You are recognized, Delegate Larsen.

LARSEN: May I continue? I'm merely asking for this deliberative body to recognize this, and it will save an awful lot of time because we've all talked to members and we've all sat in.

Ayes, 20. Noes, 43 (Akau, Apoliona, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Crossley, Doi, Dowson, Fong, Fukushima, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Ihara, Kam, Kauhane, Kawahara, Kido, Kometani, King, Lai, Luiz, Lyman, Mau, Nielsen, Noda, Ohrt, Okino, Porteus, Richards, Sakai, Sakakihara, Shimamura, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, J. Trask, White, Wist, Woolaway, Yamamoto, Yamauchi). Not voting, 0.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment is lost.

SERIZAWA: I would like to submit an amendment to the first sentence to read that: The Senate shall be composed of 16 members with the lieutenant governor sitting in as the president of the Senate without a vote except in the case of a tie and that the representation from each island shall be in equal numbers of four.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second to that motion?

MIZUHA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion? All in favor of the motion - - Have you heard the motion? All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary "no." The motion is lost.

ARASHIRO: I wish to make an amendment making the Senate 21 members instead of 25.

MIZUHA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has already been acted upon, I think.

ARASHIRO: Twenty-one.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second to that?

ARASHIRO: The reason for my 21 is this, that I think there has been a tremendous discussion that has taken place in the committee - -

WOOLAWAY: Point of order. Is that seconded?

CHAIRMAN: That was seconded by Delegate Mizuha.

ARASHIRO: And then there is a statement here submitted by the delegate from the Big Island which reads in the first paragraph: "There are more than a dozen theories of apportionment. To name a few, rejected fractions, included fractions, Vinton method, geometric fractions, harmonic fractions, inverse range, inverse minimum range, smallest divisors, greatest divisors and the method of equal proportion," and so forth.

We are not considering this thing, but the amendment that I had offered is based on a compromise, a compromise which I think will be acceptable to the Big Island, will be acceptable to Oahu, and also to the rest of the islands which will have some tie with the apportionment of the House. Now, under this setup, Oahu will have two senators increase and the Big Island will have an increase of two senators. Maui will have an increase of one and Kauai one. That will make Hawaii six, Maui four, Oahu eight and Kauai three. And under this base I think it is acceptable to all the islands because Hawaii will probably not get too much increase in the House but will get two senators instead of one because of the increase in population. Oahu will get two senators because of the tremendous increase in population, and I think they should be satisfied with two because they are getting so much increase in the House of Representatives as has been proposed. So I feel that under this 21 base it will be acceptable if you are anticipating on the reapportionment of the House as has been proposed by the committee.

FUKUSHIMA: With all these numbers flying around, I'd like to ask the movant of the last amendment whether we are in a Constitutional Convention or in a bingo game.

CHAIRMAN: I think the point is well taken. Will the delegates take their seats.

DELEGATE: Question.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the motion of Delegate Arashiro that the Senate be composed of 21 members signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion is lost.

The question is now on the first sentence of Section 2 of Committee Proposal No. 29.

HEEN: As I understand it, whatever action is taken upon that particular sentence it will be tentative.

CHAIRMAN: That's the understanding of the Chair.

HEEN: I would like to have that definitely understood because during these proceedings Delegate Lee and myself will file a minority report for a 21 membership in the Senate, but apportioned not along the line as stated by Delegate Arashiro, but apportioned five to Hawaii, four to Maui, nine to Oahu, and three to Kauai.

NIELSEN: Point of information. Now we are voting on the first paragraph I believe, not just the first sentence of that first paragraph?

CHAIRMAN: First sentence was the motion, the Chair's recollection.

NIELSEN: The first sentence is just senatorial districts.

CHAIRMAN: No, that's just description. The first sentence reads, "The Senate shall be composed of 25 members, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective senatorial districts."

Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it.

There is nothing before the body at the present time. Someone should move for the adoption of the remainder of the section.

KING: It will be proper for the committee to make in a form of motion that the second sentence be tentatively approved.

SAKAKIHARA: I think that any member of the Committee of the Whole can make such a motion. I move that we tentatively approve the remaing portion of Section 2.

BRYAN: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair didn't get your motion. Will you repeat it?

SAKAKIHARA: I move that the remaining portion of Section 2 be approved tentatively.

BRYAN: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: What do you mean by the remaining portion? The entire Section 2?

SAKAKIHARA: The entire Section 2.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second to that motion?

BRYAN: I seconded that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the entire Section 2 be tentatively approved.

NIELSEN: I have an amendment. It's on the desks of all the delegates and that is to -- at the top of page two, Committee Proposal No. 29, change as follows: The first senatorial district, East Hawaii, Island of Hawaii, five; second senatorial district, West Hawaii, Island of Hawaii, two; and then renumber the other paragraphs so that instead of two, three, four, five, they will be three, four, five, six. I so move.

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the remaining language in Section 2 be amended in accordance with the amendment proposed by Delegate Nielsen, which is on the desks of the members. Are you ready for the question? Is there any discussion?

NIELSEN: May I speak on the --

CHAIRMAN: You may. Proceed.

NIELSEN: The reason for that is: undoubtedly we're going to have a 51 member House and with the 51 member House, Oahu gets an increase of 21 and on our island we remain the same eight that we have been for 20 or 30 years, but West Hawaii loses two. We only get 50 per cent of what we've had all this time. We only have two representatives, and East Hawaii will have six so in fairness to West Hawaii and the fact that if we're going on an area basis we should be entitled to really four out of the seven on our island in a 25 member Senate. However, I realize that is asking a whole lot more than we could get, so I'd like to see West Hawaii have two and East Hawaii five of the seven senators that will be assigned to this island.

Now the reason as stated for splitting Oahu is the fact that it will cut down the cost of campaigning and that is an expensive proposition. But I want to point to the fact that to cover West Hawaii—which has 2,234 square miles—but just to follow the road when you go out campaigning, you travel 384 miles. I imagine in the fourth district on Oahu, with only 78 miles against our 2,234 square miles, that they probably travel around 30 or 35.

Now if this is not put into effect, West Hawaii will have only two representatives and the senators being elected at large will, practically all of them, except when you have an outstanding man like Senator Silva, why, East Hawaii will elect all the seven senators. So in fairness to West Hawaii, I would like to see the delegates here kokua me on this amendment to kind of take care of the fact that we lose 50 per cent of our representation.

KAWAHARA: In looking over the report of the Legislative Committee, I see that somewhere along the line, the committee has agreed, at least in part, on the idea that the Senate shall be based on geographical representation and the House on the basis of population. I think if we're going to follow that principle, at least right close to the heart of the matter, I think perhaps when we consider the island of Hawaii, we should likewise follow that principle. For that reason, I believe that rather than setting the number of senators at five and two, if Oahu is to be divided between the third senatorial district and the fourth senatorial district, likewise the island of Hawaii, with its large area, likewise Hawaii should be divided into two senatorial districts.

However, in the division of the two senatorial districts, in the division of Hawaii, I believe in the Senate there should be more or less equal representation between the two districts. In the report of the Legislative Committee, there is already a proposal that East Hawaii shall get six members in the House and West Hawaii, two. Granted that this will be possibly considered seriously, I believe that in the Senate some guarantee should be given to West Hawaii which comprises a greater area of land than East Hawaii does. Some guarantee should be given that it be represented in the state legislature. For that reason I propose to amend the amendment as presented by the delegate from West Hawaii, so that the amendment would read: "First senatorial district, East Hawaii, island of Hawaii, four senators; second senatorial district, West Hawaii, island of Hawaii, three senators."

CHAIRMAN: Unless that's accepted by the proponent, the Chair will have to rule it's out of order at this time. Is that accepted by Delegate Nielsen?

SILVA: Speaking in opposition to the amendment of giving West Hawaii two senators, I am firmly of the conviction that the people of Hawaii will have more to lose than to gain. I have been elected from West Hawaii for the last four terms as senator from that area with the help of East Hawaii, and in no time in the history of the territory has that district, West Hawaii, gone without representation in the territorial Senate, with no law. Previously we've had two senators from West Hawaii, and with four we've had one. Surely with seven, there'll be times when we'll probably have three and East Hawaii with four. Sometime there will be times when we'll have one. But the point remains that for the interest of the people of Hawaii you will find that if they do run at large that the bargaining powers of the both districts are much stronger than having them divided.

Now I want to say this. In principle I do not believe in dividing the Senate by districts and I say this because I know that West Hawaii will stand more to lose than to gain. Senators shouldn't represent just a specific district, they should represent the counties which they represent. I am of the strong conviction that we should elect our senators at large throughout the territory rather than by districts. And I see no reason why West Hawaii -- There has been an argument, they say, "Well, maybe you're afraid Nielsen will beat you in West Hawaii." Well, hasn't that fact been proven already during the last election to this Convention? Who led the ticket in West Hawaii? I did. I don't want any credit for that but I want to point that out that is no argument.

The point that I'm trying to sell is that the people themselves will have more to lose by dividing their senatorial districts rather than by letting them run at large.

LEE: Mr. Chairman, will the speaker yield to a question?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Lee is recognized.

LEE: Delegate Silva, is it your conviction that the idea that the senators should be elected from the entire island? All senators?

SILVA: I thought I made myself plain on that question.

LEE: Yes, I believe you did. And your answer would be that they should run from the entire island, is that correct?

SILVA: I just said that.

LEE: And the theory being that those senators would have a broader picture of the entire island while the representatives would be running from their respective districts.

SILVA: Whatever I say will be repetitious.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Silva, if you've got anything to say, will you address the Chair, please.

SILVA: Mr. Chairman, whatever I say would be repetitious in answering those questions.

CHAIRMAN: Does that answer your question, Delegate Lee?

LEE: I believe my question answered itself.

MAU: I think we all know that in the territorial Senate in the past 16 years, the honorable delegate from West Hawaii, who last answered the question, is one of the youngest men in the Senate. By his argument, when he says that West Hawaii has not suffered in the past, I think it is because of his able representation of that section of the island in the territorial Senate for the past 16 years, but he presupposes that he will continue to remain as young as he is. I do hope he is in good health; I hope that he will live forever and ever and that he will be a senator forever and ever; then West Hawaii probably will never suffer. However, we are writing a constitution; it will last for many, many years beyond the lives of most of us and it seems to me that the amendment is one of the fairest proposals put before this Convention. It seems logical that a huge island like the island of Hawaii should be divided in two. If the proposed amendment, or rather the amendment to the first paragraph on page two of Proposal 29, contains the same number of representation in the Senate for that island so that the island will not suffer nor will West Hawaii suffer, I believe that the amendment should pass.

HAYES: I don't feel that West Hawaii will lose its representation if this amendment went through. I feel that she would be well represented because according to the amendment it would be two senatorial districts, East Hawaii, island of Hawaii, five; second senatorial district West Hawaii, island of Hawaii, two. Now when you have two senators running for the division of East and West Hawaii, I feel that West Hawaii deserves two senators.

A. TRASK: I am in favor of the amendment and I am in favor for this reason. The cost of campaigning was the moving consideration which will seek to divide Oahu into the third and the fourth senatorial districts. So how we vote on this question will also reflect itself on whether or not Oahu, which is now the third senatorial district, will be divided into the third and fourth senatorial districts. I am in favor of the amendment because of making or having the man with not enough money but with some talent to get an equal opportunity to get into this tough senatorial race which costs just absolutely plainly too much money. This business of campaigning on Oahu itself is so expensive that the ordinary fellow with an ordinary job just cannot and should not run in fairness to himself and to his family. And on the plain consideration of economy I am in favor of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Question is on the amendment proposed by Delegate Nielsen. Are you ready for the question?

SAKAKIHARA: May I make a statement here as to the standing of the Hawaii delegation on this amendment. The Hawaii delegation stands ten to two against the amendment.

YAMAMOTO: I'd like to say a few words in favor of this amendment. I come from the center of Hilo and I firmly believe that at all times there should be a representation from West Hawaii. The Constitution for the State of Hawaii that we the 63 delegates are drawing up now to be ratified by the people, the voters of Hawaii, will be the pattern of our government for many decades to come. The Constitution must incorporate the broad philosophy of government which will be the future guide for the legislature and the courts. In view of the fact that we have seven senators from Hawaii, and in view of the fact that we have able delegates and Senator Silva, in the future we might not have a representation from West Hawaii. I therefore maintain that we must follow the pattern of the government of the United States. No matter how small the minority is, we must have representation in our legislature. So I therefore ask each and every delegate here to favor the amendment.

LEE: I heard Delegate Sakakihara, I believe, make an announcement as to the standing of the Hawaii delegation. I didn't quite - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understood him to say that the - -

SAKAKIHARA: I would like to make a correction at this time for the information of the delegate from the fourth district.

CHAIRMAN: You may.

SAKAKIHARA: Nine to three.

CHAIRMAN: Nine to three. Will the delegate state that again, Delegate Sakakihara?

SAKAKIHARA: Nine to three against the amendment.

LEE: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Lee has the floor.

LEE: Will the delegate also yield to a question? Did your delegation - -

CHAIRMAN: Will you please address the Chair?

LEE: I addressed the Chair, Mr. Chairman. Will the delegate yield to another question?

CHAIRMAN: You have the floor, Delegate Lee, no question of anybody yielding.

LEE: Well, to a question, Your Honor, Mr. Chairman. What is the vote of your delegation as to the division of Oahu into senatorial districts, third and fourth?

A. TRASK: Mr. Chairman, this is not germane to the question. I think it is out of order.

LEE: I believe it is germane, Your Honor. The discussion is on the entire remainder of Section 2.

A. TRASK: I ask for a ruling from the Chair on this matter.

LEE: It is a discussion on the entire remainder of Section 2.

CHAIRMAN: You want to ask a question of Delegate Sakakihara?

LEE: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: What is your question? Address the Chair, please.

LEE: My question is how does the Hawaii delegation stand then in the division of Oahu into two senatorial districts?

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute.

DELEGATE: Point of order --

A. TRASK: Mr. Chairman, the speaker is seeking to get a poll on an anticipated vote on the floor. I think it's out of order.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule it is out of order. We are voting on the division of Hawaii.

NIELSEN: I want to say that the delegation is split on this. Naturally, with most of the delegates being elected from East Hawaii, there are only a very few of them that will go for this amendment, but I still say it's fair and that I'd like you to call for the question.

DELEGATE: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will recognize Delegate Ihara. He rose first.

IHARA: I don't want to give you delegates here the idea that perhaps there is some dissension among the delegation from Hawaii, but I would like to say this, that we are not in line with the opinion expressed by our Delegate Sakakihara. Not all of them, anyway.

HOLROYDE: I'd like to state that if I voted for this amendment, I would also have to vote for Koolau as a separate senatorial district. It's been unrepresented in the past in the Senate and has 6,200 voters, which exceeds the number from Kona.

CHAIRMAN: Is there further discussion or are you ready for the question?

DELEGATES: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: Roll call demanded? The Clerk will call the roll.

Ayes, 29. Noes, 33 (Apoliona, Arashiro, Bryan, Crossley, Doi, Fong, Gilliland, Heen, Holroyde, Kawakami, Larsen, Lee, Loper, Luiz, Lyman, Mizuha, Ohrt, Okino, Porteus, H. Rice, Richards, Roberts, Sakakihara, Serizawa, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, Wirtz, Woolaway, Yamauchi, King, Anthony). Not Voting, 1 (Wist).

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, may I ask what Delegate Arashiro's vote was?

CLERK: "No."

CHAIRMAN: The motion has lost.

HEEN: I now move that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. When that occurs I would like to submit a minority report so that it can get into the hands of the printing committee to be printed.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

WOOLAWAY: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

CROSSLEY: Couldn't we just recess till 1:30?

HEEN: No, I would like to offer the minority report, as it should be in the regular session.

KING: Mr. Chairman, does the chairman of the committee desire to offer a minority report? He's already signed a majority report and not concurred. Isn't that sufficient or is the minority report to be filed in addition?

CHAIRMAN: Mr. President, the vote was on the motion to rise and report progress and that motion carried.

Afternoon Session

MIZUHA: What is the order of business at this time?

CHAIRMAN: At the close of the last meeting in the Committee of the Whole we had just taken a vote on the amendment to Section 2, which was lost. As the Chair understands it, Section 2 was tentatively adopted.

MAU: We have before us Section 2.

CHAIRMAN: Section 2 is before the committee at the present time.

MAU: At this time I would like to offer an amendment to Section 2 by amending the third and fourth paragraphs of Section 2 of Committee Proposal 29, appearing on page two to read as follows:

> Third senatorial district: that portion of the island of Oahu, lying east and south of Nuuanu Street and a line drawn in extension thereof from the Nuuanu Pali to Mokapu Point, five; > _____ senatorial district: (It will be either the fourth or fifth, depending on what the amendments are) that portion of the island of Oahu, lying west and north of the third senatorial district, five.

This language, Mr. Chairman --

KAM: Mr. Chairman, second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Has that been printed, Delegate Mau?

MAU: I beg your pardon?

CHAIRMAN: Has that amendment been printed?

MAU: It has been printed and circulated.

CHAIRMAN: Placed on the desks of the delegates?

MAU: Placed on the desks of the delegates.

This language, Mr. Chairman, appears in the Organic Act. I have changed the designation in the Organic Act which covers the fourth representative district to the third senatorial district. It is my belief, Mr. Chairman, that the geographical division which has existed since the inception of the Organic Act and under which we have elected our members of the legislature from this island should be continued. It would eliminate the inclusion of Kailua and Waimanalo from the fifth district. The proposal before this body places these two districts into the fifth district, and it seems to me that we should continue what has been the geographical designation and representative districts for the past fifty years or so in the State of Hawaii. There is no good reason for gerrymandering this island by including Waimanalo and Kailua in the fifth district. It properly remains part of the fourth district.

Of course, the argument would be raised that in the Constitutional Convention election, Kailua and Waimanalo were included in the fifth district. I thought that that was wrong. As a matter of fact, I presented that argument to the attorney of the Territories Division of the Interior Department and explained the situation to him, and he agreed that that should not have been done, that that plainly looked like gerrymandering, that they picked a section, a slim slice of the northern section of the island and made it a representative district. Of course, the reason why nothing was done with the present H. R. 49 in the designation of districts for the constitutional election was that the Interior Department was afraid to jeopardize the statehood bill. They thought it was best to leave it alone, but they did not agree that that was a fair designation on this island of representative districts. And for that reason, I submit that this amendment should carry, that these two sections of the island, Kailua and Waimanalo, should belong in the fourth -- present fourth district and that is what the amendment attempts to accomplish.

HOLROYDE: As a member of the committee as well as an elected representative of that district, as far as the committee considerations were concerned, it was a much more equitable division as far as the total voting population was concerned. As far as the people of that district are concerned, one of their major ambitions and desires is to have a representative district of Koolau. They feel that they do not have very much in common with the City of Honolulu as such. They feel that it is a rural district and part of the rural part of Oahu, and they want to be a representative district, and they'd actually like to be a senatorial district too, as Koolau. So I hope that you will see fit to vote down this amendment.

CHAIRMAN: No further discussion? Are you ready for the question? All those in favor of the amendment proposed by Delegate Mau signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The Chair's in doubt.

DELEGATES: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: Call for a rising vote. Madam Clerk, will you call the roll, please.

Ayes, 31. Noes, 30 (Apoliona, Bryan, Cockett, Crossley, Dowson, Fong, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Kellerman, King, Lai, Larsen, Loper, Lyman, Ohrt, Okino, Porteus, Richards, Sakai, Sakakihara, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, J. Trask, White, Wist, Woolaway, Anthony). Absent 2, (Castro, Phillips).

MIZUHA: I have an amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Has it been printed, Delegate Mizuha?

MIZUHA: It has been printed but there's a new version of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Has it been circulated?

MIZUHA: It hasn't come back from the printer as yet, and I would like to have the privilege of offering that amendment in print as it returns from the printer.

CHAIRMAN: Does it relate to Section 2?

MIZUHA: Yes.

WIRTZ: Point of information. Did the Chair announce the last vote and whether the motion -- the amendment carried or not?

CHAIRMAN: The amendment carried.

MIZUHA: I want to change that here. It is being printed. I'll read out my amendment and then it can be circulated afterward.

CHAIRMAN: Proceed.

MIZUHA: The second part of Section 2 to read as follows:

"First senatorial district."

CHAIRMAN: By the second part, what do you mean?

MIZUHA: Beginning with senatorial districts.

First senatorial district—East Hawaii, four;
Second senatorial district—West Hawaii, two;
Third senatorial district—the islands of Maui, Molokai, Lanai and Kahoolawe, five;

Then the fourth and fifth senatorial districts in accordance with Delegate Mau's amendment. The fourth senatorial district to read as follows:

That portion of the island of Oahu, lying east and south of Nuuanu Street and a line drawn in extension thereof from the Nuuanu Pali to Mokapu Point, five;

Fifth senatorial district—that portion of the island of Oahu, lying west and north of the fourth senatorial district, five;

Sixth senatorial district—the islands of Kauai and Niihau, four.

ARASHIRO: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded --

SILVA: To expedite matters, I move at this time that action on this amendment be deferred.

CHAIRMAN: I think that's proper at this time until the delegates can examine the amendment.

SAKAKIHARA: Second it, Mr. Chairman.

SILVA: I think the motion was in order because the motion was made to adopt it and seconded.

CHAIRMAN: I didn't get your point.

NIELSEN: Mr. Chairman, could we have a two or three minute recess? It will probably be out by that time.

CHAIRMAN: We'll have -- Chair will declare a two-minute recess. Don't stray away, though, it ought to be here in a minute.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegates please resume their seats. Delegate Mizuha, your amendment has been printed and circulated.

MIZUHA: A motion was made for the adoption of that amendment orally.

CHAIRMAN: A motion has been made and has been seconded. Anybody want to discuss the motion?

SAKAKIHARA: May I ask the delegate from Kauai how he arrived at this apportionment of the senate, Hawaii, six; Maui, five; Oahu, ten; and Kauai, four.

CHAIRMAN: Care to answer that, Delegate Mizuha?

MIZUHA: Basically I don't know how the committee arrived at their own apportionment when they had Oahu, ten; Hawaii, seven; Maui, five; Kauai, three; and I believe just as much as the committee took it out from the heavens, I took it out from the heavens myself.

CHAIRMAN: That's an answer to question.

SAKAKIHARA: May I speak to the amendment?

CHAIRMAN: What was the statement?

SAKAKIHARA: May I speak to the amendment offered by the delegate from Kauai?

CHAIRMAN: You may speak to the amendment.

SAKAKIHARA: Mr. Chairman, members of the Committee of the Whole, I wish to call your attention to the fact that Hawaii, when they have 21,000 votes, Maui with 13,000 votes, five senators, Kauai with 8,600 votes should be entitled to four senators. I don't think this will be a fair distribution of the Senate.

WIRTZ: When Mr. Mizuha said he picked this out of the heavens, I don't think he quite meant that. This is based upon the logical increase by units of five. Everytime you increase the Senate five, it's one, one, one for each of the outside counties and two for Oahu and this is just going up two stages; so it increases Hawaii two, Maui two, Kauai two and Oahu four; so it is following in the same logical pattern.

BRYAN: I'd like to say that the committee didn't just pick the figures out of the air either. If you worked the percentages, you will find that the increase on each island is as nearly uniform percentage-wise as you can get it under the proposal that the committee made. It's 1.5 on Kauai, 1.66 on Oahu and Maui and 1.7 on the island of Hawaii. So we didn't pull it out of the air either.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion on the Mizuha amendment?

MIZUHA: May I speak on behalf of the amendment? Under the federal principle of representation, the Senate has always been a body of equal representation in the Congress of the United States, two senators from each state of the Union. Hawaii is seeking admission to the Union as the 49th state and asking that the Congress of the United States permit us, under the federal principle, to have two senators in the Congress of the United States. There is no doubt in my mind today, if we went to the Congress of the United States and said we would be satisfied with one senator, they would admit us tomorrow.

Under my amendment it increases the number of senators from each of the outlying islands by two; two for Kauai, two for Maui, and two for Hawaii and gives Oahu four. Under no conception can we believe that at the present time that the island of Hawaii will be entitled to three more senators and Kauai only one. I believe it is grossly unfair if we give to one outlying island three and another outlying county and island one because of the fact that under the federal principle of equal representation in the Senate the islands of Kauai and Niihau deserve that increase of two in the future State of Hawaii. Oahu will get its four, Maui will get an increase of two, but the island of Hawaii comes to this Constitutional Convention and asks for an increase of three.

We have to discuss the representation in the future State of Hawaii on the basis of statesmanship. We cannot go into this question on the basis of politics. We cannot go into this question on the basis of thinking who will be representatives and senators from the various outlying counties in the future State of Hawaii and what our chances will be for election under the basis of represenation as submitted by the committee.

I submit to the delegates here that if we are going to find ourselves in a position where we have to decide the issues of representation both in the Senate and the House of Representatives of the future State of Hawaii, we must decide it on the high principles of statesmanship, where we believe it will be to the best interests of the people of this territory and the future State of Hawaii. And if we are to recognize those outlying islands in the Senate of Hawaii we must give them a fair representation. Under the committee proposal, allowing seven senators from the island of Hawaii, it will divide the balance of power and place the balance of power in an outlying island with seven senators that will be in the end the basis for political manipulation in the Senate and will result in the detriment to the interests of the people of the future State of Hawaii. So I submit that the delegates consider this amendment on the basis of statesmanship and not political footballing.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? Is there a roll call demanded? There is not sufficient showing of hands for a roll call. Roll call is required. Madam Clerk, will you please call the roll?

Ayes, 27. Noes, 33 (Apoliona, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Corbett, Doi, Fong, Fukushima, Gilliland, Holroyde, Ihara, Kawahara, King, Lai, Larsen, Loper, Luiz, Lyman, Ohrt, Okino, Porteus, Richards, Roberts, Sakai, Sakakihara, Silva, St. Sure, Tavares, White, Wist, Woolaway, Yamamoto, Yamauchi). Not voting, 3 (Mau, Phillips, Shimamura).

CHAIRMAN: The amendment is lost. The matter before the house is still Section 2.

KOMETANI: I would like to move for reconsideration of the amendment that was proposed by Delegate Mau.

WOOLAWAY: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the amendment adopted before the recess as proposed by Delegate Mau be reconsidered.

LEE: Delegate Mau isn't here. I just wondered whether the - -

CHAIRMAN: I was going to call that to the attention to the proponent of the motion, whether or not he would like to withhold that until the appearance of the movant.

KOMETANI: I will do so.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will consider it withdrawn then.

KING: I feel very strongly that we can't hold up the progress of the Convention's considerations for the absence of one member, unless we have a recess until he can return. When the vote was taken, there were other absentees. Nevertheless the vote was taken, and I suggest, therefore, that we have a brief recess awaiting the return of Delegate Chuck Mau.

CHAIRMAN: I think, Delegate King, that we can instruct Delegate Mau to be present. That's what we got a Sergeant-at-Arms for.

KAUHANE: I'll second that motion for a recess.

CHAIRMAN: We'll take a short recess and in the meantime the Sergeant-at-Arms will get in touch with Delegate Mau.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The delegates will take their seats. The committee will come to order, please. Will the delegates please take their seats? The Committee of the Whole is in order.

KOMETANI: Is it my understanding that due to the absence of Delegate Mau that my motion was withdrawn?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. You are now in order.

KOMETANI: Then I would like to make the motion to reconsider the amendment that was proposed by Delegate Mau.

CASTRO: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the amendment to Committee Proposal No. 29, which was carried this morning in regard to the division of the third senatorial district be reconsidered. Is there any discussion on the motion?

DELEGATE: Roll call!

CHAIRMAN: Is there any discussion? Anybody want a roll call? How many want a roll call?

KELLERMAN: May I say a few words with respect to this proposal?

CHAIRMAN: You may.

KELLERMAN: During the recess I talked to several members from the outside islands who said they did not understand what any of the issues involved, so I think it behooves some one to speak on this point. It is my contention that Waimanalo, Lanikai and the Kailua area should belong in the district with the rest of the Koolau group. Their interests are essentially windward Oahu interests. They are not interests of the City of Honolulu. They do not even use—that is the Lanikai-Kailua area—do not even use the transportation around the end of the island of Makapuu Point.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kellerman, does that go to the merits of Delegates Mau's motion or to the matter of reconsideration?

KELLERMAN: It goes to the merits of the question, and therefore I think they might wish to reconsider their vote if they realize that there are merits on the issue. For that reason I think it's pertinent.

KING: I had expected to seek recognition to speak on the merits of the amendment after the vote on reconsideration had been taken, but I do feel it was appropriate to offer to the Convention - - or the committee some reason for the vote for reconsideration.

CHAIRMAN: Roll call has been demanded. Madam Clerk, please call the roll on the motion to reconsider Delegate Mau's amendment relating to the division of the third senatorial district.

Ayes, 39. Noes, 22 (Akau, Arashiro, Ashford, Doi, Fukushima, Heen, Ihara, Kam, Kanemaru, Kauhane, Kawahara, Kawakami, Lee, Luiz, Mau, Nielsen, Noda, C. Rice, H. Rice, Shimamura, A. Trask, Wirtz). Not voting, 2 (Phillips, J. Trask).

CHAIRMAN: The motion is carried. The question is now on the amendment, I believe, proposed by Delegate Mau.

KING: When the motion was offered to adopt this amendment, perhaps some of us didn't read it as carefully as we might have. I realized what it meant but did not rise to speak against the amendment.

The statement was made that this was gerrymandering to put Waimanalo and Kailua into the fifth district. Gerrymandering, if any, was done at the time of the adoption of the Organic Act. They went up to the top of the Nuuanu Pali then drew a straight line through the Mokapu Peninsula and said that all that lies east and south of that line would be the fourth district, and all that lies north and west of that line would be the fifth district. At that time Kailua and Waimanalo did not have a very great population. In the meantime those two sections have filled up with a rather large population and they are part of Windward Oahu. The ahupuaa of Kailua and Waimanalo are a part of the old district of Koolaupoko. Further on in the report of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions, it is proposed to create a separate representative district of Koolau. That may or may not pass. That is immaterial. Nevertheless, these two pieces of land are an intrinsic geographical part of the district of Koolaupoko and has been for many many years. They lie over the mountains from the fourth district.

Now, the City of Honolulu is defined as being that area of the island of Oahu lying between Makapuu Point and Red Hill. It's the urban section of the island of Oahu. As a matter of fact, it's almost identical with the ancient Hawaiian district of Kona of the island of Oahu—we had a Kona too as well as Hawaii—and Waimanalo and Kailua lie outside of that urban area. Furthermore the fourth district of Honolulu comprises that part of the urban area that lies east and south of Nuuanu Avenue to Makapuu Point and goes over the mountains to include these two precincts of Kailua and Waimanalo.

At the time that H. R. 49 was under consideration many of us sat in on various committees to devise a more representative way of electing delegates to the Constitutional Convention. I served on the committee with Delegate Heen and the late Judge Robertson and the former Senator David Trask and several others and we devised this program that was carried out in H. R. 49 and in Act 334 of adding Kailua and Waimanalo to its proper geographical unit, the geographical district of Koolaupoko. That was approved by the legislature and sent to Congress and introduced by Delegate Farrington and is embodied in the provisions of H. R. 49. Then later it was approved by the legislature and embodied in the provisions of Act 334.

Now this discussion of some attorney in the Department of Interior not approving is no relevance to the matter at all. As a matter of fact, I doubt very much whether the Department of Interior would commit itself one way or another as to the zoning of our election districts for the Constitutional Convention. Their interest lies more in the material matters of public lands, and so forth, and had the attorneys of the Department of Interior made any suggestions to the committees of Congress to change it, it probably would have been disregarded since it was in the bill introduced by the Delegate, approved by the legislature and enacted into law in Act 334.

I feel very strongly, and the people who live in Kailua and Waimanalo feel very strongly, that they should be a part of rural Oahu and not a part of urban Honolulu. There is no common bond of interest. There we still have agricultural industries, they have dairies, they have commuters and are owners of suburban homes, and we have all of the rest of the attributes of a rural and suburban area. So I feel that this particular amendment should not carry and the division proposed in the committee report should carry.

Now while I'm on my feet and as I have not exhausted my time, I'd like to discuss the general attitude of the committee report. The committee report made a majority report, and as I recall the vote, it was nine to three in favor of the provisions of this report as submitted to this Convention. As it happens the chairman of the committee is not in favor of the majority report. The chairman and two other members have submitted a minority report. That's well and good. That's their privelege. Nevertheless the majority report consists of nine members of that committee that went over the provision of reapportionment and apportionment of the Senate and of the House very thoroughly and very exhaustedly and as far back as June sixth the provision in this proposal of twenty-five senators allocated as it is in this proposal was agreed upon. The motion was put on June seventh to reconsider that action and that motion was voted down on a nine - three vote. Then later on, it was brought up again and discussed and discussed verbatim in all of the angles and phases of it and the final decision was to submit this report with nine members of the committee in favor of it.

Now I think it comes with ill grace to members of the other islands to question what the people on Oahu have decided by a majority, to divide this island into two senatorial districts. Either vote down the senatorial district as a whole or support the committee report as to their division between the fourth and the fifth district. So, I would urge the Committee of the Whole to vote down the proposed amendment.

LEE: I'm surprised, I don't hear any answer in the rebuttal. I don't want to take the floor on this too long either. But I'd like to say the first time I have heard the President say that the committee has voted nine to three, after going through exhaustive studies. I agree that we had gone through exhaustive studies. I might say to the committee that at one occasion after reconsideration the committee voted for 43-21, 41-21, somewhere along the line where there was only twenty-one senators. Then the matter was reconsidered. So that actually there is a great deal of doubt on this particular point.

It seems to me that it's unfair to say that the people of Kailua and Lanikai have nothing in common with the City of Honolulu. I have a lot of friends who live out in that area who have always voted along with the fourth district. That has been the part of the fourth district for over fifty years. It seems to me that the statement that Kailua and Lanikai have no common interest with the rest of the fourth district, in my opinion they have more of a common interest with the rest of the fourth district than with the fifth district.

FUKUSHIMA: I would like just to say one sentence. Kailua is no more rural than Aina Haina or Portlock Road which is also part of the fourth district.

HEEN: When the report was signed by the members of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions there were six delegates who did not concur with Section 2. Delegate Lee, Delegate Kellerman, Delegate Wirtz, Delegate Serizawa, Delegate Kawahara and myself, all six did not concur with the provisions of Section 2.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to ask Delegate Heen a question. That is, whether or not in the course of this debate, some place along the line, the body is going to be informed why we need this increase. I know a great many delegates have spoken to me about this vast increase. I think the body would like to hear about it.

CROSSLEY: I would like to say that what the chairman of the committee has just said is right. There was a nine to six vote on this, on concurrence. The reason that the six did not concur was not based on a division of the areas. They were not concurring because of numbers. Just to get up and say that the six did not concur; they did not concur for different reasons. As a matter of fact, I don't recall that there was any disagreement as -- yes, there was some, but only minor disagreement, certainly not six disagreeing with the cutting up of the districts the way they are. I believe that's what President King had reference to when he was talking. The non-concurrence didn't go to the point of this amendment.

APOLIONA: I think we have heard all the reasons and I think lot of the delegates' minds are satisfied, and now I move for the previous question.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kawahara, did you want to be heard?

KAWAHARA: Yes, on the matter of the way -- of the voting of the committee. Some sentiment is being expressed here that if it's a matter of Oahu, we leave it up to Oahu, and if it's a matter of Hawaii and Kauai -- or Kauai, we should leave it up to the various islands, and yet when it comes to the voting everybody participates. I don't see any logical reason between the two ideas that if it is a matter for one island, then leave it up to the island and in the final analysis the whole convention -- the whole committee votes and what happens?

In reference to the report of the committee, Delegate Crossley has mentioned that perhaps some of us signed and some of us did not concur on the various sections for various reasons. I signed it and said that I didn't concur, and one of the reasons why I said I didn't concur was because of the fact that I wasn't quite enlightened on this matter of redistricting Oahu. In fact, I am still open for suggestion as to how to vote, what to do, what not to do.

The second point is this; I signed the report saying I didn't concur because I thought that the redistricting of the island of Hawaii for example wasn't quite complete. Anybody can see that the redistricting of the island of Hawaii isn't quite, you might say, artistic anyway. East Hawaii is divided into three districts. West Hawaii is divided -- is not divided into three districts, the whole of West Hawaii is district four. While I didn't vote against it nor did I vote for it, I think we still have a lot more to go as far as investigating the possibilities of this business of redistricting.

KAUHANE: I believe statements are being made here that should be answered; first of all, the delegate from the fifth district who stated that while he was back in Washington, he met with officials of the Interior Department of Insular and Territorial Affairs, and that this matter of the reapportionment which is contained in H. R. 49 was taken up. Certainly the matter was taken up with the officials of that body. The Democrats who appeared in Washington felt that it was gerrymandering because in H. R. 49 we have a stretch of a combination of precincts arriving at Aala Park and we run away over about two and a half miles and take in Precinct 17; that's the Kalihi Pumping Station. We showed the officials in Washington what has been done.

This same setup of reapportionment when it was first submitted to the Congress of the United States back in 1941 was objected to strenuously by the Democratic Party. The same provision which was objected to by the Democratic Party in 1941 is contained in H. R. 49. So much so, that those of us who are of the Democratic faith appearing in Washington made every means to see that that provision was not carried forth in H. R. 49. The ultimate goal was statehood for Hawaii, and because that was put to us we felt that we should sit back and take a back seat and let the ultimate goal, statehood for Hawaii, go through. We felt that upon returning to Hawaii that we would meet with those of the Republican faith and sit down and decide with them and talk over with them the method of reapportionment. Certainly the committee has studied reapportionment, and yet when we came back before the legislature and tried to arrive at a common ground, what had happened? The result was the passage by the legislature and adoption of a provision of reapportionment similar to that as contained in H. R. 49.

Reapportionment under the Organic Act should be based and made according to the population as to citizens of the Territory of Hawaii, and not to citizens of the United States. That's the requirement of reapportionment under Section 55 of the Organic Act. The Bureau of Census has not yet submitted to this body or any body interested in reapportionment, the citizenship with respect to citizens as to the Territory of Hawaii. Even up to the last census taken by the Census Bureau, there is no report to show citizens as to the Territory of Hawaii as well as citizens to the United States. And in order for us to comply with the section of the Organic Act, 55, we must arrive first as to citizens of the Territory of Hawaii, then, from then reapportionment shall be based accordingly.

The amendment proposed here by the delegate from the fifth district which was carried and which now has been overridden by reconsideration brings only one factor to my mind, that we are voting on this thing on a partisan basis—Democrat versus Republican. That is the only reason by which the reconsideration has been asked. As reconsideration as I say would be sincere and is asking if we come back and say that the Senate shall be composed of twenty-one members, twenty-one members which was agreed to by the Senate in the 1949 session, when they passed Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 21. In Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 21, the senators voted for a twenty-one member Senate and a forty-two member House. It came to the House of Representatives, and we agreed to the amendment of the Senate, and we passed it back to the Senate except to increase the senatorial membership to twenty-three following the proposal, the amendment that was offered by Representative Arashiro. When it got to the Senate, the Senate changed it from twenty-three senators to twenty-one, and it came back to the House, and there it died for lack of having sufficient votes to carry. Certainly the twenty-one House -- Senate --

CHAIRMAN: Excuse me, is that relevant to the amendment? Delegate Mau's.

KAUHANE: It is relative to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Would you just point out the relevance.

KAUHANE: What's that?

CHAIRMAN: Would you point out the relevance. It's not clear to the Chair.

KAUHANE: As to the twenty-one membership and forty-two House?

CHAIRMAN: No, as to Delegate Mau's amendment. That's what is before the house.

KAUHANE: Yes, we are considering whether or not to adopt Chuck Mau's amendment or reject Chuck Mau's amendment. On the basis that Chuck Mau's amendment presents a pattern by which we should follow in adopting the apportionment of the Senate by the division of the district of Oahu into fourth and fifth districts as far as senatorial districts are concerned. What I am trying to show is the membership of the Senate as increased and agreed to by the last legislature to where the Senate and the House has agreed that the membership should be twenty-one and then which could be applied in the same division, as offered by Chuck Mau, in the division of Oahu as far as senatorial districts are concerned in the fourth and fifth districts. We can apply that figure as well to the amendment offered by Chuck Mau. Chuck Mau's amendment, I think, has a lot of merit, merit where we are getting away from a pattern which we have followed for the last fifty years clamoring for reapportionment. If we are concerned about reapportionment, then let us go reapportionment, all out for reapportionment, and adopt the proposal as offered by the delegate from the fifth district for the division of the senatorial district on Oahu.

MAU: The statement has been made that originally Congress in passing the Organic Act for the Territory of Hawaii gerrymandered this island. I don't believe that's true. They cut the island in two using Nuuanu and Nuuanu Pali as the boundary line. But assuming for the purposes of argument that that statement is correct, if that was gerrymandering should this Convention continue to gerrymander this island worse than it was in 1900? Look at the map of Oahu when you come to it later. You will find distinctly gerrymandering. The statement has been made that an attempt has been made in creating these representative districts to put people in those districts who have common interests. I don't believe that that's true. You will come to it when you see representative district number five, all of Manoa, part of Manoa going all the way down to Waikiki. Their interests with the people of McCully, Bingham Tract are the same? That is not correct.

When the statement is made that the windward Oahu people have common interests, that too is incorrect as a matter of fact. The vast majority of the people who live in Lanikai, Kalama and Kailua and some even in Hauula, work in the heart of the city. They are middle class people and some upper middle class. That's a fine residential section out there. But I think the true situation concerning this gerrymandering is simply this, one of your strong Republican leaders told me this morning that he was in favor of that because the fifth district as it stands now is too strongly Democratic and we have to overcome that. That is the sole purpose.

CHAIRMAN: Ready for the question?

ASHFORD: May I ask a question of the last speaker? I never have understood what middle class and upper middle class was. I'd like a definition.

CHAIRMAN: That was running through the Chair's mind, too, Delegate Ashford.

HOLROYDE: I was very glad to hear the last speaker quote that the people of Lanikai, Kailua and Hauula had something in common. That's all.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on Delegate Mau's amendment. Is there roll call requested? Roll call?

DELEGATES: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: The Clerk will call the roll. The vote is on Delegate Mau's amendment which was adopted this morning. Then, there was a motion to reconsider. We are now voting on the merits of Delegate Mau's amendment, which reads as follows: Amend the third and fourth paragraphs of Section 2, of Committee Proposal No. 29 to read as follows:

> Third senatorial district; that portion of the island of Oahu, lying east and south of Nuuanu Street and a line drawn in extension thereof from Nuuanu Pali to Mokapu Point, five; > _____ senatorial district; that portion of the island of Oahu, lying west and north of the third senatorial district, five.

LOPER: Mr. Chairman, would you remind the delegates please to use their microphones; we can't hear back here.

CHAIRMAN: I have asked the body to do that.

HAYES: I believe the point that we would like to know would be, those who vote for the amendment would do this, and those who vote against it would do this. Will you state that please?

CHAIRMAN: Those who vote in favor of the amendment are in favor of Delegate Mau's motion and you vote aye. If you're against his motion you vote no.

WIRTZ: Slight point of order. I don't want the delegates to be confused. We voted on this after lunch, not this morning, shortly after lunch.

CHAIRMAN: I think the Chair was in error in that. Reconsideration was voted after lunch.

ARASHIRO: Is it still going to read as the " Third senatorial district"?

CHAIRMAN: Afraid I didn't understand your question.

ARASHIRO: It says, "___ senatorial district; that portion of the island of Oahu, lying west and north of the " third or fourth?

CHAIRMAN: Will you answer that, Delegate Mau?

MAU: That was purposely left blank depending on what amendments came. When this was drafted, there was an amendment before that from one of the delegates from Hawaii, which used the first and second, rather than cover Hawaii by the first senatorial district. If this amendment does pass, then the Style Committee can - -

CHAIRMAN: Insert the appropriate number.

MAU: Insert the proper for each blank - - number to the blank.

CHAIRMAN: Will the Clerk call the roll?

Ayes, 30. Noes, 32 (Apoliona, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Crossley, Dowson, Fong, Fukushima, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Kellerman, Kido, King, Kometani, Lai, Larsen, Loper, Lyman, Ohrt, Porteus, Richards, Sakakihara, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, J. Trask, White, Wist, Woolaway, Yamauchi). Not Voting, 1 (Phillips).

CHAIRMAN: Amendment is lost. We're still on Section 2.

CROSSLEY: I have an amendment. I'd like to amend -.-

CHAIRMAN: Has it been printed, Delegate Crossley?

CROSSLEY: No, it's an oral amendment, it's easy to follow. Where it reads: " First senatorial district, the island of Hawaii," change " seven" to " six." Where it reads " Fifth senatorial district, the islands of Kauai and Niihau," change "three" to "four."

MIZUHA: I second.

CHAIRMAN: That's in Committee Proposal No. 29, Delegate Crossley?

SILVA: Point of order. I think that that question has been settled a moment ago, about four senators for Kauai.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is trying to get what the amendment is, Delegate Silva, if you'll permit me.

CROSSLEY: The change is reducing the committee proposal which calls for seven from Hawaii to six, and increasing the fifth senatorial district in the committee proposal from three to four. I might say that in the previous amendment put in by Delegate Mizuha it was tied in with the Oahu, all of the rest of the senatorial districts. It was tied in with the senatorial district proposed by Delegate Mau which has since been brought up for reconsideration and defeated and therefore I felt that it was in order to offer this new amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second to that?

MIZUHA: I second that.

SAKAKIHARA: I believe the amendment is not in order. The amendment offered by Delegate Jack H. Mizuha is just what the amendment now proposed by Delegate Crossley of Kauai is which reads that Hawaii is entitled to six senators and Kauai four, leaving Oahu and Maui the same. The vote has been taken here on that amendment and that amendment was defeated.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair ruled that the motion is in order.

SILVA: If that is in order, I would like to further amend, you can have one more amendment. The amendment would read that in the first senatorial district, leave it at seven, and in the fifth senatorial district, two.

CHAIRMAN: You're amending - - Just a minute. You are amending what, Delegate Crossley's motion?

SILVA: The amendment offered by Crossley, the fifth senatorial district, cut it down to two and take the extra one and give it to Oahu.

DOI: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair doesn't consider that as an amendment, because the original proposal said the island of Hawaii, seven, and the amendment was to six. So you've just changed it back again. A vote on the amendment will - -

DELEGATE: No, no, the amend- -

CHAIRMAN: - - accomplish your purpose.

DELEGATE: Point of order.

WIRTZ: Will the last speaker yield to a question? Which district, which senatorial district in Oahu will get the extra senator?

SILVA: That - - well, we can decide that later on. They may run at large.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will recognize Delegate Crossley.

CROSSLEY: That last motion is out of order because it changes the purpose of mine by diminishing instead of increasing. That's just the opposite.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. The Chair has so ruled. You understand the motion?

SAKAKIHARA: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: If I might state the substance of it, that would reduce the number of representatives in the Senate on the island of Hawaii from seven to six and increase the number on the island of Kauai from three to four. Is that correct?

SAKAKIHARA: All right, Mr. Chairman. I believe that question was disposed of, Mr. Chairman. I think if you will play the recording, it'll bear me out.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has already ruled on that.

DOI: We wish to appeal to the Chair, your honor, Chairman. We wish to appeal from the ruling of the Chair. I think should we replay the recording there, all of the discussion on the amendment offered by Mr. Mizuha was confined to the question of increasing Kauai and decreasing Hawaii.

HEEN: As I understood Delegate Mizuha's amendment, it divided the island of Oahu into two senatorial districts, one to have four senators and the other to have two, so that identical question hasn't - - is not the same as what you have now. You don't divide up the island of Oahu into two districts now, left as one senatorial district with the same number of senators. Therefore, we did not pass on this identical question at any time.

CHAIRMAN: That's the Chair's interpretation. I think if Delegate Silva will examine the proposal, you'll find that statement of Judge Heen is accurate.

APOLIONA: If my memory serves me correct, this morning we approved tentatively the first sentence of Section 2. Then a motion was made to approve tentatively the rest of Section 2. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, Delegate Silva's motion is in order.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye."

SAKAKIHARA: What's the question, Mr. Chairman?

DELEGATE: Point of information; what is the question?

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amend -- the Chair will state the amendment. It's an oral amendment made by Delegate Crossley, page 2 of Committee Proposal No. 29, second line, strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "six" and the last line of Section 2, strike out "three" and insert "four," Am I correct, Delegate Crossley?

CROSSLEY: Yes.

SAKAKIHARA: I demand roll call.

CHAIRMAN: Is roll call demanded? Madam Clerk, please call the roll.

Ayes, 23. Noes, 37 (Akau, Apoliona, Ashford, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Corbett, Doi, Fong, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Ihara, Kawahara, King, Kido, Lai, Larsen, Luiz, Lyman, Nielsen, Ohrt, Okino, Porteus, Richards, Roberts, Sakai, Sakakihara, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, White, Wist, Woolaway, Yamamoto, Yamauchi). Not voting, 3 (Loper, Phillips, J. Trask).

CHAIRMAN: The amendment is lost.

LEE: I have an amendment which has been circulated.

CHAIRMAN: Has it been printed, Delegate Lee?

LEE: Yes, printed and circulated, amending Section 2. All this does is make Oahu into one district so that the ten senators from Oahu shall run at large over the entire island instead of the two districts, conforming with the rest of the other islands where the senators run county-wide. I move for the adoption of the amendment.

> Section 2. Senate; senatorial districts; number of members. The Senate shall be composed of twenty-five members, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective senatorial districts. The districts, and the number of senators to be elected from each, shall be as follows:
> First senatorial district—island of Hawaii, six;
> Second senatorial district—the islands of Maui, Molokai, Lanai and Kahoolawe, five;
> Third senatorial district—island of Oahu, ten;
> Fourth senatorial district—the islands of Kauai and Niihau, four.

DELEGATE: Roll call.

HEEN: I think in order to bring that issue directly before the members of this committee, I might suggest and if that appeals to the members of the committee, change that to a motion, I would suggest that it is the sense of this committee that the island of Oahu be not divided into two senatorial districts.

LEE: That's acceptable to the mover.

HEEN: I so move --

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

HEEN: That is the sense of this committee that the island of Oahu be not divided into two senatorial districts, If we can clear that question, then I think we can proceed much faster with the further consideration of Section 2.

CHAIRMAN: Do you accept that, Delegate Lee? Delegate Lee? I wish the delegates would take their seats. The Chair's having difficulty getting your attention. Do you accept that amendment?

LEE: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The question, then, is whether it is the sense of this Convention that the island of Oahu be not divided into senatorial districts.

SAKAKIHARA: Is that the amendment?

CHAIRMAN: That's the motion moved and seconded—moved by Delegate Lee and seconded by Delegate Heen.

CASTRO: I would amend that motion so that it is easier to deal with. That it is the sense of the Convention -- either ask Delegate Heen to state it another way, either that the island be placed in one senatorial district or be placed in two; "not," that's a negative statement and it might confuse some of the delegates in voting.

HEEN: I was waiting for someone in the majority because I am in the minority. I'm opposed to dividing Oahu into two senatorial districts --

CASTRO: Then I will make that amendment.

HEEN: -- but in order to put that question definitely before the Convention, I had to do it that way, following my stand upon that issue. If someone would want to put it the other way, it is just all right with me. In other words, it might be put by those who favor the division to move that it is the sense of this committee that the island of Oahu be divided into two senatorial districts.

HOLROYDE: I think that issue is before this Committee of the Whole now. Delegate Lee's motion to amend and change that would clarify the problem.

CHAIRMAN: Chair understands the question is perfectly clear before the body, and that is whether or not we want Oahu divided into more than one senatorial district. That's the purport of the motion.

SAKAKIHARA: Would that dispose -- Mr. Chairman.

KING: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate King. Who was it rose?

KING: Delegate, Mr. Chairman, I thought that Delegate Sakakihara was seeking recognition. I yield to Delegate Sakakihara.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Sakakihara.

SAKAKIHARA: Point of order, Mr. Chairman. There is an amendment before the Committee of the Whole offered by Delegate Lee which purports to reapportion the senatorial district --

LEE: Point of order, Mr. Chairman, point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

LEE: That motion has been withdrawn in favor of the suggestion made by Delegate Heen, and the motion before the committee is whether Oahu shall be divided into one senatorial district or into two senatorial districts.

PORTEUS: Point of order, point of order, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order, Delegate Porteus.

PORTEUS: The motion that was pending before this committee is to approve the balance of this section. There is now an entirely new motion not amending the motion that's put, that was now before us. In order to get into the discussion and present these other amendments, the motion was made, as I understood it this morning that we approve of the balance of the section and on that basis these other amendments have been presented. Therefore it's in order for anyone to make any motion he wishes to as to any amendment as to the setup, and I think since the majority of the committee has come forward with a specific proposal, the majority of the committee desires to have anyone who wishes it differently present the amendment. A motion is now before the house and the other motion is not germane to it, it is not amendatory to the other motion in any respect.

HEEN: Point of personal privilege. The idea was to facilitate further consideration of Section 2. I presented it in that spirit.

KING: I think the point of order made by Delegate Porteus is quite appropriate, quite in order. What's before this Committee of the Whole now is the Section 2 of Committee Proposal No. 29. Any amendments to that would be in order, but a motion to agree on a general principle is not pertinent to this particular section. Now, if Delegate Heen wishes to accomplish his purpose to have an expression of sentiment regarding the division of Oahu, let's vote on Section 2. The passage of that section would immediately automatically divide Oahu into two senatorial districts. If it is voted down, the business before the house then is to have one senatorial district.

And let me say further that if Delegate Heen finds himself a little embarrassed to act as the chairman of the committee because he's in the monority, let's suggest that the vice chairman, who is in the majority, take the discussion on Sections 2 and 3 until that's out of the way and then we can go on with the balance of the committee report.

ROBERTS: If Senator Heen would withdraw his motion for the sense of the committee, I would move the amendment proposed by Senator Lee with two slight amendments: one, the first senatorial district, change the word "six" to "seven" and the word on the island of Kauai "four" to "three" so that the actual section before the committee, Section 2, remains identical except that the fourth and third senatorial districts will be combined in one. If I may have a second to that.

YAMAMOTO: I second the motion.

LEE: This amendment was prepared when Delegate Mau's amendment had passed. Since the action has been reconsidered and it has failed, I am agreeable to the suggested amendment made by Delegate Roberts.

CHAIRMAN: Will you state your amendment again, Delegate Roberts?

ROBERTS: The amendment is the one proposed by Senator Lee, which is on the desk of every delegate, except that in the first senatorial district, the number "six" be changed to "seven," and in the fourth senatorial district, the number "four" be changed to "three." So that the only issue on the floor is the question as to whether or not the island of Oahu should be one senatorial district.

HEEN: I would like to amend that motion so as not to be involved in the question as to how many senators shall represent any senatorial district. In order to bring it to an issue, I move, by way of an amendment, that the third senatorial district and the fourth senatorial district be deleted from Section 2, together with the language attached to each of these senatorial districts and substitute in place of those two senatorial districts the following: "Third senatorial district, island of Oahu—nine," or you could leave the nine out.

WOOLAWAY: Second the motion.

HEEN: Is not the question definitely before the Convention as to whether we shall have one senatorial district on Oahu or more than one? Therefore can we leave the number of senators out for the time being, because when we think of numbers then we get all confused, and there is so much difference of opinion as to how many should represent each senatorial district. Let's get that other issue decided at this time—whether Oahu is to be one district or more than one district.

PORTEUS: Did I understand that the word or figure nine was used? Number nine. It seems to me that we tentatively adopted the first sentence setting the number at 25, and Oahu's proportion of that would be ten rather than nine. Then if you reconsider -- if there's any other action, it could be changed. Bring it to ten.

HEEN: I'll put in that figure ten, but I won't be bound by that figure ten. I want the other issue settled first.

CHAIRMAN: I think that's perfectly clear. We can vote on that simple amendment using the figure in the committee proposal, then if there is any desire on the part of any of the delegates to change that figure, that can be done later.

SHIMAMURA: Point of information, Mr. Chairman. What is the question before the house, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: The question before the house is the amendment to Committee Proposal No. 29 which would create the island of Oahu, the third senatorial district, with ten senators, one district.

SHIMAMURA: Is that the only question?

CHAIRMAN: That is the only question.

SHIMAMURA: Thank you.

NIELSEN: I am in favor of that as long as we've already taken the vote that on the island of Hawaii that there is to be only one senatorial district. So I think this is all right.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion?

LEE: I would like to speak in favor of the amendment. It would seem to me that this Convention or committee at the present time certainly would be accused of possible gerrymandering when we vote for senators on the three other islands, Hawaii, Maui and Kauai, on an entire county basis while we are voting for the division of the senatorial district into two districts on Oahu. Let us be consistent.

ARASHIRO: Has Delegate Roberts' amendment been accepted?

CHAIRMAN: It has been withdrawn and the question that has been stated by the Chair has been substituted.

ROBERTS: My motion was still pending but in the --

CHAIRMAN: In the shuffle, I think it was withdrawn.

ROBERTS: -- for clarity I will be willing to withdraw it.

J. TRASK: For information, Mr. Chairman. What have we got before the floor at the present?

CHAIRMAN: The question before the body at the present time is the motion of Delegate Heen, seconded by Delegate Lee, that the island of Oahu comprise one senatorial district and have ten senators. The number which is inserted is for convenience only and the movants feel free to change that number at a later date. The purpose of the amendment is to get a vote on the simple question, whether or not you are going to divide the island of Oahu in two or more senatorial districts.

PORTEUS: I've hesitated to speak on some of the various issues before the Convention because I felt that there were so many that were well qualified to speak on the subject and I didn't wish at the time to take the additional time. This is a matter, however, I think of some concern to all of us, those that are in office, and those that are in the Convention and the people, at least certainly on the island of Oahu. I say that I favor the division of the island of Oahu into two senatorial districts, each district electing five senators. It seems to me that has certain advantages. It has the advantage of assuring to one part of the island five senators and to the other part five, rather than a concentration of senators from any particular area. I think, too, from the point of view of those who come from the rural portions of Oahu that their vote will loom larger in the total vote to be cast for five senators with the divided island than their vote will be if the island remains undivided.

There are those of us that have spent -- there are those delegates here who have spent many more years in politics than I have. I am a junior to many of those who come from, or at least one of those who comes from the island of Kauai and one from the island of Maui; junior, too, to at least one of the senators who is a delegate here, who has been in the Senate rendering creditable service for many years. It has been my experience, however, that running in the fourth district only, with some forty odd thousand voters, that without making much of a splash in the way of a political campaign that it cost me in excess of a thousand dollars to be elected last time. I filed with the Secretary's office an expense of $997 for the primary—that's a sworn statement, a matter of record—and $400 in the general. So it cost me $1400 to get elected, $1400 of my money, not someone else's.

Now, I hear it said that there are those who are fortunate enough to be elected senators without spending a thousand dollars. I don't know how they do it. I only had one ad in the Star-Bulletin before the primary, seven inches long and two columns wide, and it cost me $42. I used the same ad in the Advertiser, one insertion only, for another forty odd dollars. And then I ran a thank you ad after the primary in each of those papers of the same size, because I wanted to say "thank you" in as big terms as I had asked for a vote. That's all the political advertising, no half pages, no quarter pages, no more than one insertion and no full pages. I know it is the experience of the people on Oahu who have seen those who have sought Senate office to have a full page ad. A full page ad in the Star-Bulletin runs $2.80 a column inch and there are 168 column inches on a page, that is almost $490. They'll give you a discount to take the full page of somewhere around -- it comes down to somewhere around $450 or $470. Now, many of the senators that are running don't pay that themselves and I don't blame them.

But it is true that when you seek election and you seek to reach over 80,000 voters, it is necessary for the new man to spend money, either to spend it himself or to accept the backing of an individual who will finance him or have his friends go out and collect money in order to put his campaign over the top. In the money that I spent, I had some cards printed. I had also some penny postals, some letters printed. Just the cards for the fourth district in the primary only cost me $350.

Now, my point that I wish to make is this, that if somebody who has been elected four times straight and seeking his election the fifth time finds it necessary to spend as much money as that without radio, without any buttons, and a few newspaper ads which I have spoken of, and if he also has had no paid workers—I had no paid workers, I paid for no cars, I didn't provide a lot of lunches, I had no luaus, I paid for no drinks. My campaign was not a splash campaign. It was a campaign where some friends did a little talking for me, and I am very grateful to them.

But I feel this, that at present, it is very difficult for the new person coming into politics to hope to get the attention of the public and hope to get elected. Out of the fourth district now, with six elected to the legislature, it's very difficult for the new man to come in and make himself known to so many voters. He has got to spend a lot of money or someone else has got to spend a lot of money for him. Now, I believe that if the island is divided into two senatorial districts, if the House is divided up into smaller districts, that we will then give the newcomer in politics a chance to come in and get elected.

I'm supposed to be an oldtimer from the fourth district. My fellow delegate from the fourth district has been in there five terms as I have. There's just the two of us. But I feel that it is a healthy thing in politics to attract new able fresh faces into politics and have them campaign and put their ideas before the public. Even if they don't get elected at least they do this, they keep the oldtimers on their toes and hustling. I think it makes for better government. I think anything that will enable more young people to run for office on their own ability, on their own financing, that we are better off, rather than giving the advantage to those of us who are supposed to be oldtimers to hold the vote, if for no other reason than that the 80,000 people or forty odd thousand people haven't heard of them before.

If you will pardon the personal reference, in the last campaign I had 25,000 votes in the fourth district in the House. The lowest man had 20,000 votes and there are none of us that admit that we know individually 20,000 people. We just don't know them and the 20,000 people may have heard of us, but they don't know us personally. And I'm for the smaller district with lower cost and an opportunity for more people who wish to render service to this Territory being able to come in and offer their services within their purses, within their capacity to foot the bill. It either is going to mean that the man has got to have a lot of money or it means that he has got to have someone come and finance him. Sorry to have taken so much time and I hope that you see the point with which I've been trying to make.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to ask the speaker a question. This is for my own enlightenment. What is the reason for districting the island of Oahu and not districting a much larger island, like Hawaii? I don't quite understand that.

PORTEUS: On Kauai, Mr. Chairman --

DELEGATE: Hawaii.

CHAIRMAN: Island of Hawaii.

PORTEUS: Well, we'll start with the islands and go to Kauai. Kauai has between 7,500 to 8,000 voters and the cost is not very great. The island is of considerable size but it is a belt road island with laterals going out from that. We'll go to Maui. Maui, of course, is divided over several of the islands. On Hawaii, as I understand it, there's a total vote of about 20,000 voters. The majority of the Hawaii delegation felt that the senators elected from that island could run the island as a whole and successfully do it. They can reach 20,000 voters without excessive cost. Twenty thousand voters is only fifty per cent of the number of voters that would be on one of these senatorial districts if we cut the island of Oahu in half. We have over 80,000 voters with a prospect of increase, and the expenses -- I checked as to what it would cost to just have an envelope addressed to send to these voters and was told that it would cost three cents, so it would cost you $2,400 to go to a commercial concern for addressing envelopes. And I think that there is a vast difference between having over 80,000 voters and 20,000 voters. I don't know, Mr. Chairman, whether this is being persuasive insofar as your point of view is concerned, but it is one of the bases on which I have made this decision myself.

HEEN: This statement about spending three cents on an envelope and circular addressed to 80,000 voters is far fetched because you could do that by a postal card for one cent unless you want to be a little high toned and send it out in letter form. And furthermore, when you send out letters or postal cards to the voters, you're not going to send them to all the voters because there are a lot of them you know who will not vote for you anyhow. I wouldn't send one to Delegate Porteus and ask him to vote for me because he is a rabid Republican and I wouldn't send one to say friends of mine because it is just wasting postage on friends, and I am not going to send two postal cards to man and wife. I'll send only one to a man and his wife. So you could cut the cost down considerably. This idea of $2,400 is just an exaggeration.

PORTEUS: May I say I have enjoyed receiving the campaign literature of the senator from Oahu, and from both senators from Oahu that are in this convention hall, and my wife has enjoyed receiving the same. On several occasions we were able to talk to the children and I had to promise them to see if I couldn't get for each one of them a letter also, because I got one and my wife got one, too.

HEEN: That was a mistake on the part of my clerk, and just a waste of postage there. He made a mistake.

APOLIONA: I want to also thank the honorable senator from the fourth district for sending me that letter.

A. TRASK: I am for dividing Oahu in two parts. In the words of Kamehameha, if we divide Oahu in two parts, we'll have equal opportunity for the big man, the small man, the aged man and the ladies. Aloha.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question?

C. RICE: Did Mr. Porteus know that those papers were of general circulation? Just the same as it went all over the islands as in only one district. But as I would say from the outside islands, maybe it would be a good idea to divide Oahu. They wouldn't stand so solid then.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the motion of Delegate Heen that the island of Oahu consist of one senatorial district having ten senators. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor, signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion is lost.

ASHFORD: In consideration of the clerks, I move for a brief recess.

CHAIRMAN: A recess is declared.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The committee will come to order.

HEEN: I now move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

PORTEUS: I find it great pleasure to second the senator's motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. All those in favor, signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

JUNE 29, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole please come to order. Delegates please take their seats.

HEEN: At this time I would like to submit an amendment to Section 2 of Committee Proposal No. 29. In view of the fact that yesterday this committee went on record for dividing Oahu into two senatorial districts, and in order to be -- rather in order to conform to that decision, I have had redrafted the amendment attached to Standing Committee Report No. 99 and that redraft of that amendment is on the desk of every delegate, I believe, at the present time.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, will you please read the caption of that redraft so all the delegates --

HEEN: The caption of the redraft is "Amendment to Committee Proposal No. 29, substituted in place of amendment attached to Standing Committee Report No. 99." Now this amendment divides Oahu into two senatorial districts and provides for a 21 membership in the Senate; and in the division of Oahu into two senatorial districts, the number of senators for the third senatorial district is placed at five, and that for the fourth senatorial district is placed at four. This is on account of the difference in population of registered voters. There were 44,249 registered voters in the third senatorial district, which of course includes Waimanalo, Lanikai and Kailua, and in the fourth senatorial district -- or rather which excludes Waimanalo, Lanikai and Kailua, and in the fourth senatorial district which includes Waimanalo, Lanikai and Kailua, the population of registered voters there is 37,179. These figures were in connection with the Constitutional [Convention] election. Now I move for the adoption of this amendment.

SECTION 2. Senate; senatorial districts; number of members. The Senate shall be composed of twenty-one members, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective senatorial districts. The districts, and the number of senators to be elected from each, shall be as follows:

First senatorial district: the island of Hawaii, five;

Second senatorial district: the islands of Maui, Molokai, Lanai and Kahoolawe, four;

Third senatorial district: that portion of the island of Oahu, lying east and south of Nuuanu Street and Pali Road and the upper ridge of the Koolau range from the Nuuanu Pali to Makapuu Point, five;

Fourth senatorial district: that portion of the island of Oahu, lying west and north of the third senatorial district, four; and

Fifth senatorial district: the islands of Kauai and Niihau, three.

DOI: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State the point of order.

DOI: I believe yesterday we decided on the question of the number of the members of the Senate. It was decided to be 25. This amendment here proposes 21. The question has been already settled. Also the question as to the number of senators from Hawaii has been already settled; also the number of senators from Kauai and Niihau has been settled; the only question as to number which hasn't been settled is Oahu and Maui.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule that there is only a tentative agreement. The point of order is not well taken.

PORTEUS: May I understand what the ruling of the Chair is here? I can't quite agree with this theory. When you go down sentence by sentence and take a vote on it, it's tentatively agreed subject to the adoption of the entire section, but once the vote is taken on a sentence or on some provision like that, it was the custom with the other Committees of the Whole to require that a vote to reconsider be made in order to get at that particular subject.

HEEN: I think the Chair will recall, as well as the delegates will recall, that at one point when we decided on the division of Oahu into two districts I put in the figure ten and that was supposed to be only tentative because I had in mind that I would later on submit a proposal advocating a membership of 21 members.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair believes the ruling is correct. This is one of the most important issues to be settled by this Convention. The Chair is not going to make any technical ruling that's going to shut off a full and free debate on the constitution of the legislature.

FONG: May I ask what we are voting for? Are we voting just for fun in this assembly here?

A. TRASK: I second the motion made by Delegate Heen.

FONG: I just want to know what we've been voting for; are we just voting for fun? We have voted on the issue and whether it's tentative or whether it's permanent, we have voted on the issue and once we have voted on the issue, I think that - -

LEE: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order.

LEE I think the Chair is absolutely correct in its ruling. The question of the 21 membership in the Senate has not been voted upon. The only thing that has been voted upon was the 20 member Senate with the lieutenant governor The proposal presently made by Senator Heen at the present time calls for a membership of 21 senators regardless of the lieutenant governor. Is that correct, Senator Heen?

HEEN: That's correct.

FONG: As I understand, Mr. Chairman, the question of 21 has been voted upon.

CHAIRMAN: Has not been voted upon.

SAKAKIHARA: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Sakakihara, state the point of order.

SAKAKIHARA: I have a memorandum before me that we have voted on the 21 member Senate yesterday. That amendment was proposed by Delegate Arashiro of Kauai and I respectfully request that the Clerk, I refer to the minutes of the Clerk here, it will show that this Committee of the Whole voted down overwhelmingly by voice vote Delegate Arashiro's motion at yesterday's session.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is in agreement, the Chair's notes show that there was a motion by Delegate Arashiro, seconded by Delegate Mizuha, on a 21 Senate. That motion was put and lost. The Chair still adheres to its ruling that it was only tentative, and the present motion is in order.

LEE: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order.

LEE: The point of order that I'd like to make is that your ruling is absolutely correct; that the motion put by Delegate Arashiro went into the membership of the various islands, which is different from the membership as pointed out by Delegate Heen.

FONG: May I ask for an explanation of the word "tentative"? Now as I understand it, the word "tentative" is only used for the purpose of taking up the question sentence by sentence or paragraph by paragraph, and that the whole thing will be voted upon as a whole afterwards. That's the only meaning of "tentative" as far as I am concerned. Now we, if the Chair means that - - if the word "tentative" means that we can vote on it and keep on voting on it, and keep on voting on it, I think that is not the meaning of this assembly.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has stated what its position and ruling, still adheres to the ruling that there should be a full and free debate on the constitution of the Senate and the House of Representatives. Thus far, that has not occurred and the Chair will maintain its ruling.

DELEGATE: What is before the committee?

CHAIRMAN: Before the committee is the motion to amend moved by Delegate Heen and seconded by Delegate Trask.

DELEGATE: I'd like to hear from the proponent of the motion.

HEEN: In support of the amendment which has been submitted, I want to read the minority report in this connection:

[Standing Committee Report No. 99]

We, the undersigned members of your Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions, do not concur with the majority report of the committee insofar as it establishes a Senate of twenty-five members.

A Senate of twenty-five members was chosen by the majority of the committee to assure that the precise ratio of 40.0 per cent Oahu members to 60.0 per cent neighbor island members would be retained.

That ratio is the mathematical result of the present senatorial apportionment, not the underlying reason for it, and we are unable to discover any justification for its unequivocal retention.

That exact ratio was not intended to become a sacred and inviolate standard. The framers of the Organic Act stipulated that the Senate, as well as the House, was to be periodically reapportioned on the basis of citizen population. An apportionment, if made today on the basis of total population (citizen population statistics are not available) would result in the following distribution of members:

(a) for a Senate of twenty-five members: First senatorial district, three; Second senatorial district, two; Third senatorial district, 18; Fourth senatorial district, two; and the ratio would be 72.0 per cent for Oahu, 28.0 per cent for the neighbor islands;

(b) for a Senate of twenty-one members: First, three; Second, two; Third, 15; Fourth, one; and the ratio would be 71.4 per cent for Oahu, 28.6 per cent for the neighbor islands.

It may be seriously doubted that the use of citizen population, if available, would have any material effect on the above apportionments.

We accept the proposition that no single major island group should be in a position to control legislation for the state. We are not advocating such control when we propose a Senate membership of twenty-one.

The apportionment of members among the several senatorial districts as proposed by the amendment (the substitute amendment here) as a part of this minority report is the same as that contained in Senate Concurrent Resolution No. 21, adopted on third reading by the Territorial Senate during the 1949 regular session. While the Senate was unable to concur in a conference committee report on that resolution, no better plan was proposed.

We agree with the apportionment attempted in 1949. The ratio under such an apportionment is 42.9 per cent for Oahu members and 57.1 per cent for neighbor islands. We believe this apportionment eminently fair to all concerned.

KELLERMAN: I should like to say that had this amendment, which divides the island of Oahu into two districts, been attached to the original minority report I also would have been one of the signers of that minority report. I don't want to over-labor the question of expenses, but I cannot but feel that when you have attained a number adequate to do the job—and no one has held out the point that it takes 25 senators rather than 21 to do the required work on a high standard—whenever you increase beyond those needed, you necessarily of course increase expenses all down the line, but you also diminish to that degree of increase the prestige of belonging to that body. It is far more important to be one of 21 than one of 25 and as I feel strongly those who favor the large Senate will also probably favor the very large House—the two go together in thinking, in psychology, and in results—the same question is even more pertinent when it comes to the 51 House as against the smaller House.

I cannot but feel that we are going overboard on this enlargement. To increase from 15 to 25 in the Senate is a sixty-six and two-thirds per cent increase, to increase from a 30 House to a 51 House is almost as large, in fact a little larger. There has been no evidence that a tremendous increase is necessary to do the work required on a high standard, and the greater you dilute the prestige and the responsibility the greater chance you have of not getting into either of your two bodies the most capable people because the reward of prestige which is probably the greatest reward for good public service is not held out in the same degree.

I feel that we should consider this very seriously. It isn't a matter of politics. We are writing a constitution. We should be keeping in mind the best governors whom we can get, the best legislators whom we can get to serve the public at a recognizedly amount of salary which is in no sense a real compensation. It is merely a token. I would ask all the body to consider these points very seriously.

ARASHIRO: I am thinking in line of having something to protect you and all of us no matter what changes take place in our political setup and other changes that will have any relation to our future legislature. For the matter of record, I wish to make a statement to the assembly that I only wish that we did consider this matter from a layman's point of view and judge it accordingly. If politics is the theory that we are basing on this issue of reapportionment or apportionment, then I need not go further. But I do not think that we are basing this on the theory of politics. We are, to my assumption, basing this on some fair method whereby the committee and this assembly has come to a conclusion that a bicameral legislature is necessary to attain this fair method.

Where there exists this bicameral legislature, there are many theories behind the setup of a bicameral legislature. To name the few they are as follows as I said yesterday from the statement submitted here by the delegate from the second representative district where he stated that we can have rejected fractions, included fractions, and Vinton method, geometric fractions, harmonic fractions, and other methods. But whether we can pick any one of the above methods and say this is the one for the State of Hawaii is, I presume, unacceptable to your delegates and the same applies if we were to choose a constitution from any one of the 48 states in total and say this is the one for Hawaii. Now we cannot pick any one constitution in total or any theory or method in forming the bicameral legislature. We are here to create, make or propose one that will fit and work here in the State of Hawaii.

What I am driving at is this, that with all the information we have to date, and forgetting politics, we should work on the theory of just fair and uncontrollable legislature by any one or two counties. This is the $64 question. What is just and fair in trying to set up a fair method of representation in our legislative branch? If we are going to base the representation on population alone, then I would say we should recommend a unicameral legislature; but if we are going to base our representation on [inaudible] for the purpose of the above state a fair one, then a check and balance method of a bicameral legislature is our choice. Let us agree, and there is no question that one house will be on the basis of population but the other on the basis of a just and fair method where the check and balance is not only a word but something that is in practice.

Now to me, whatever method you use, I do not think that when you set up a Senate for the State of Hawaii that can be controlled by two counties it's right, and especially when one house is already controlled by one county. Under the present proposal, what assurance can be given to the counties of Maui and Kauai if Oahu and Hawaii should have a different type of people sitting in the future legislature than the kind that we had in the past that we can look back with some pride? Every legislation that comes to the Senate will be disposed of just the way Oahu and Hawaii want, since the ten Oahu and seven Hawaii senators is far more than the necessary majority of the total 25, and so will the same apply to a coalition of Oahu and Maui of ten and five. The Hawaii delegation may be assuming at present, or the Oahu delegation for that matter may be assuming that a coalition between Oahu and Hawaii, but it might turn out the other way. For a coalition of Oahu and Maui can really hurt the Big Island which really needs and are so far back in their public improvements and projects.

What I am trying to get is this, leaving the House aside —which I don't think there exists much difference in the opinion for the matter in which we are going about in setting up the House and so there's no question or argument in the reapportionment of the House—however, I do not want to see a Senate to be controlled by any two counties but, being in the minority, I thought that the fair proposal and one that can be accepted by the majority was the one I offered yesterday. That is a 21 member Senate with six from Hawaii, four from Maui, eight from Oahu, and three from Kauai, but dividing the Big Island into two senatorial districts and Oahu into two senatorial districts. In this setup no two senatorial districts will control the Senate and the number will be a very workable one with the minimum cost of operations.

But if the assembly still prefers a 25 member Senate that is still acceptable to me, except that I still want to see that the counties having six or more in a 25 member Senate to be divided so we base our balance and control of power in no two senatorial districts. But if you on the majority will lean a little to the minority then I would prefer you making it that no two counties will control the Senate.

From my experience in the legislature I can say this, what I have said here today is something I wish you delegates will give serious thought and consideration because I do not think that in my thinking—if my thinking should be followed or carried out—that Oahu, Maui, Hawaii or Kauai can be mistreated and neither one or two counties can abuse their powers, and that is the balance of power I want to remain in the majority county. But under the proposed proposal, as tentatively adopted, there is a grave danger as I pointed out previously.

To clarify this, may I briefly explain it. Under my plan the present setup of Oahu will by far have the majority in the House. That means they can stop any outside island legislation in the House, but in the Senate this power of Oahu cannot be offset because it will require more than two counties to stop it, which is of course very hard. This is to point out to the Oahu delegation that their legislation cannot be easily killed in the Senate. So I see no fear there as far as the Oahu delegation is concerned. As far as the other islands are concerned, we will need the help of Oahu because the snag and obstacle for the outside islands will be in the House.

So, you see, there is a check and balance there where no counties can monopolize the legislature. For monopoly in our democracy is a dangerous thing no matter where it is and what kind it is because monopoly means the loss of control of the power of the majority. The control in any faction—it may be in big business, big politics, big union—I say this that there will be some abusement, for that is human nature and you cannot help that.

You are here laying the basic law of the State of Hawaii that will have much to do with our future legislation and especially the kind of taxation system we will have; and to me when you are not just legislators, but writing a constitution and so doing can whole heartedly push something down the throat of the minority, then I say they are the kind of actions that breathe foreign ideology. By finding out the real faults of our system where in one breath [we] say it is a democracy and on the same breath have a monopoly. In business, we call business monopoly or an industrial monopoly or a labor monopoly, but in politics we call it a dictatorship or some sort of a totalitarian government with a democratic front.

So in conclusion, please, I humbly plead to you delegates, let us work towards preserving this democracy by preventing this means of giving or creating any sort of a monopoly or giving any group or any faction a chance of monopolizing.

CHAIRMAN: Before proceeding with the debate, I think this is a serious question. A lot of the delegates are paying no attention, reading newspapers. I suggest we get down to business on this.

LEE: It seems to me that it's very important to keep an open mind on this question. I know that long before we had discussions on this matter, various delegates of this Convention have gone around arguing for their plan and practically, you might call it, doing a snow job, and a lot of the other delegates probably have been committed by the arguments of which they have heard only one side concerning the matter. Delegate Kellerman's statement was a statesman-like approach to the problem but I didn't hear very many people listening.

As a member of this committee, this legislative committee, I'd like to state as to how the figure 21-51 was reached. How was it reached when after various statements were made by the members of the committee that the membership was unwieldy, was impractical and highly over expensive, statements made by the members who voted for this proposal in the majority. Then how can they reconcile their view points? Their reconciliation it seems to me comes back -- well, it's a matter of compromise. Certainly, politics is a matter of compromise. Nobody will question that. But also balanced against the principle of compromise is the principle of what is best for the people and not what is best for our particular political aspirations or the political benefit of each particular island.

I know that there are members of the outside islands who feel that since they are yielding to Oahu the lower chamber, that they should control the upper chamber. The majority of them, in fact I believe all members of the committee, were willing to go along with that principle, but not content with that the idea was to preserve the principle or the ratio of 60-40 control. And so in order to preserve that ratio of 60-40 control you had to reach the figure of 25. That was the only way you could preserve that ratio.

Then there was an able member of the committee who realized that difficulty and also realized the expensiveness of the entire legislature which would mean a 51 House—we've got to consider a 51 House, unwieldy, admitted by the majority or a great number of the majority in the report that came up, was produced by the majority of the committee—this member proposed a 20 House, with a lieutenant governor -- Senate. Your ratio would be preserved. The outside islands' ratio would be preserved. And with a 20 House you'd have a far better chance of having a House which is not unwieldy -- not a House which is not unwieldy because you have a 51 House. You've got to consider both of them, you can't only consider the Senate. You have a 25 member Senate, there's no question you've got to go up in the air to 51. Admittedly unwieldy. Are we representing the people of the entire territory or aren't we when we go up to a figure of 51, admittedly unwieldy?

It would seem to me therefore that the better part of wisdom is to bring down the figure and the only way you will bring down the figure of the House is to bring down the figure of the Senate. And the only way you'll be able to bring down the figure of the Senate and to preserve that ratio is to pass a proposal which you refused to pass yesterday. It is not too late to reconsider. You will preserve your 60-40 ratio and you have a man presiding as lieutenant governor, the lieutenant governor presiding over the Senate. And it seems to me that the rest of this committee should understand what is involved in this entire picture.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. What was the basis for the division of the senatorial representation on the island of Oahu? I note that your amendment would give five to the fourth district and four to the fifth district. What is the basis of that division?

HEEN: The third senatorial district, which is the present fourth representative district plus Waimanalo, Lanikai and Kailua, has a total population of registered voters of 44,249 as against 37,179 in the other district.

BRYAN: I'd like to perhaps clarify a few points as brought up by the last speaker on the floor regarding why the number 25 was picked. I was in the majority of the committee that came out with the report requesting a Senate of 25 members. Now he reviewed the thing and practically answered his own question. It was a case of preserving the ratio of 60-40. Now it's been stated that that can be done with a 20 member Senate and it can be done with a 25 member Senate. I believe that the question of the 20 member Senate was fairly well settled yesterday on the basis that you were putting the controlling power of the Senate, in other words the deciding vote in the case of a tie, in the hands of the executive department, and I think that was the basis that many people refused to go along with that proposal yesterday. The whole history of this committee action shows that the only thing that a majority of the committee could agree upon - -

CHAIRMAN: Pardon me, Delegate Bryan, did you say executive department?

BRYAN: I said executive department.

CHAIRMAN: You explain that a minute?

BRYAN: Yes, on the basis - - I was talking to the ratio of 60-40. The ratio of 60-40 can be maintained with a 20 member Senate or with a 25 member Senate, either one, not with a 21 member Senate. And the reason that we picked 25 was when you pick 20 you give the deciding vote, which is actually the chairman's vote in case of a tie, which is the deciding vote on important or controversial issues, to the lieutenant governor who would be a member of the executive department. Does that clarify that?

When the figure 21 came up on the basis presented by Delegate Heen this morning, the committee could not get together on it because it destroyed the 60-40 ratio, as his proposal this morning destroyed the 60-40 ratio. In every vote that was taken the only thing that a majority of the committee could agree on—the minutes I am quite sure will prove this—as far as the Senate is concerned was 25. I hope that answers the question as to why we ended up with 25 so many times in the committee.

MIZUHA: I don't see how the legislative branch will be taking over some of the executive authority by having the lieutenant governor cast a vote in case of a tie. That has always been done in the United States Senate. I think it's a principle that has been firmly established. It's a weak excuse for a 25 man Senate.

I would like at this time again to reiterate the federal principle upon which those people who wrote the Federal Constitution decided to have equal representation in the Senate and representation according to population in the House of Representatives of our Federal Congress. In the proposal as submitted by the committee giving us that 25 man Senate for the Territory of Hawaii, they have discarded that principle and engaged in a sort of exchange which has given an increase to some of the outlying islands far above those of other outlying islands. By giving Hawaii seven, they have increased the senatorial representation of the island of Hawaii 75 per cent and gave the island of Kauai just a 50 per cent increase.

However, whatever the composition is with reference to the 21 man Senate as proposed by Delegate Heen at the present time, I must speak in favor of a smaller Senate and I'm speaking in favor of it, sounding a warning to all of you delegates here, especially those of you who are engaged in industry here in the Territory of Hawaii and who will be engaged in industry in the future State of Hawaii. And it is a warning which I give for the record because as the State of Hawaii takes its place in the sisterhood of states we will be continuously confronted with the problem of raising sufficient moneys for the expenses of government. Under a 25 man Senate we will have an increase of ten senators in our State legislature. The increase of ten senators may not materially increase the expenses of our legislative sessions, even though they might come annually. The increase may be only $200,000 or $300,000 or half a million because of the fact that the federal government won't be paying the salaries of our legislators. But when you have ten more senators in the State legislature, every senator who goes back to his constituents must return home and stand re-election from time to time and tell them what improvements he has secured for his constituents in the State legislature, and senators, being what they are, are not going to divide the credit for some capital improvements. We had that problem on the island of Kauai when two senators wrangled as who got the airport for the County of Kauai. Every senator will have his pet project; it may be a library, it might be a flood control, it might be a new kindergarten, it might be a new school gymnasium and so forth. But the answer from some of those who have written debt limitations into our Constitution say, "Well, you have a constitutional provision you can't go over 60 million or 15 per cent so we're not worried about what the ten additional senators will do."

But there is the crux of the warning right now. Those ten additional senators, if they cannot raise the money for capital improvements by floating bonds, will go to your tax structure; and industry will be taxed more than any other group here in the Territory, proportionately, to get the revenues for those improvements that ten additional senators would like to have for their constituents on the outside islands; and that is fact because we see that in the federal government today. Every senator is seeking to railroad into that public improvement or flood control - - army program for flood control and rehabilitation, their pet projects; and we have seen continuously appropriations by the Federal Congress for improvements, capital improvements that are far out of line, and as a result there has been a deficit in our federal budget since the end of the war. A bigger deficit than the war even brought about in our federal budget.

If you think that ten additional senators are just going to stand by and not make appropriations or get the money for those appropriations because of debt limitations, I believe you are all wrong because they will raise the income tax, they will raise your gross income tax, they will raise all the taxes to get the money to get their pet projects through so that they can tell the people back home, "I got you this at our State legislature." And it's a warning I would like to sound now because if industry raises a howl, if our tax structure goes awry, and increased taxes face the industries of the territory, they may as well say that they gave us that Constitution in a State legislature [sic] that permitted that, and they cannot howl afterwards.

HOLROYDE: It seems to me that, at the moment, we're debating a choice between 21 and 25 which is a difference of four men. We're not debating 15 as against 25. Now I think it's been obvious from the debate and the problem that this Committee of the Whole has had as to the problem that your committee of the legislative division had wrestling with this problem. We wanted to be fair to the representatives from the other islands and as the previous speaker said, we tried to maintain that ratio. We reconsidered our action on these figures of 25 and 51 on three different occasions and tried desperately to find a suitable compromise of some kind and that was the only one that your committee, the majority of your committee, could reach.

Now you've heard a lot of discussion on the cost of the legislature, about how much is this increase in the legislature going to cost you? It's going to cost you just as much as you allow your legislators to spend. Now you've had a legislature of 45 members for the past many years and you look at the records that are on your desk of the increased cost of that legislature maintaining the status quo in number of members. I maintain that if the people of the territory want their legislature to operate economically and do their job on that basis that, with the amount of money spent right now for your legislature, you can almost finance a legislation that the committee has proposed as their proposal.

MAU: I would like to ask the proponent of this amendment whether it would be agreeable to him to have Oahu be a little bit more than fair. It will take a licking by having only eight senators, giving the lieutenant governor a right to vote in case of a tie. In other words, you would have a 20 member Senate. The third senatorial district instead of having five, would have four. The fourth senatorial district will remain at four. Then amend the portion covering the third senatorial district, striking out the words " Pali Road and upper ridge of Koolau Range" and inserting in lieu thereof the words of the Organic Act "a line drawn in extension thereof," that would put Kailua and Waimanalo in the fourth. If that is agreeable to the proponent of the measure, maybe we can get somewhere, particularly insofar as the Oahu members are concerned. If they want to be what I call overly fair, beyond the 60-40 representation, we take less. Possibly the outside islands may agree. I'm making that just as a suggestion.

KING: I make a point of order against that suggestion. Before the proponent of the amendment - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Mau has subsided, Delegate King. Is it still open to make a point of order now that he's left the floor?

KING: I make a point of order against his suggestion.

CHAIRMAN: Very well.

KING: That it is simply a rehash of what we decided yesterday. As a matter of fact, I am convinced that a point of order justly lies against this proposed amendment. But the Chair has ruled that it's open for discussion and to be discussed, so I'm not making that point of order. Now, I'd like to be recognized to speak in opposition to the amendment offered by the chairman of the committee on behalf of himself and two other members of the committee.

MAU: Point of order on the statement made by the speaker.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order.

MAU: There's a difference in the proposal offered yesterday.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order, Delegate Mau.

MAU: The point is this. Yesterday's proposal on 21 did not reduce Oahu's representation in the Senate. This suggestion made does reduce Oahu's representation in the Senate.

CHAIRMAN: Proceed, Delegate King.

KING: The amendment offered by Delegate Wirtz was exactly along the lines of his proposal of eight senators from Oahu, and the amendment offered by Delegate Chuck Mau was exactly along the lines of restoring Waimanalo and Kailua to the fourth district. Now, in speaking against the amendment offered by Delegate Heen, I'd like to refer to the Manual of the - - on State Constitutional Provisions. On page 11 of that manual is listed the states of the Union, the numbers of senators and representatives. If the committee will bear with me, I'll have to take my glasses off to read that. I'm only going to read the states that have comparable population to Hawaii. Arizona, 19 senators, 58 representatives. Arizona is a state that has a slightly larger population than Hawaii. For a long time during the time I was in Congress it had only one representative in Congress. I believe it has since gained one more. We are to have two representatives, if the provisions of H.R. 49 are carried out. We go down to Delaware, small state with a population less than ours, it has 17 senators and 35 members. We go down to Idaho which has only two representatives, 44 senators, and 59 representatives. We go down to the next state of comparable population, Montana. Montana has two representatives in Congress, has a population slightly greater than Hawaii.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate King, you might give us the page in the Manual so the delegates - -

CHAIRMAN: I think the delegates are worth - - this is material worth listening to.

KING: It's page 11 of the Manual. I announced it I thought at the beginning, and if the delegates will turn to page 11 you look at Arizona, Delaware, Iowa, Idaho, and I was down to Montana. Montana has 56 senators and 90 representatives. Nevada with a population of about one-fourth of our population, less than a fourth, has 17 senators and 41 representatives. Get down to New Mexico with a comparable population, 24 senators and 49 representatives. Go down to North Dakota, a large state, only two representatives, population only slightly greater than ours; North Dakota, 49 senators, 113 representatives. Turn on the next page, page 12. Utah, a large state with a population not very much greater than ours, 23 senators, 60 representatives. Vermont, with a population of 350,000 people, one of the old states, of course—not one of the original 13 colonies but came in immediately after the Revolutionary War—Vermont has 30 senators and 246 representatives. Get down to the last state, Wyoming, the state that is represented in the United States Congress by that very distinguished senator, Senator O'Mahoney, Wyoming had in the 1940 census 350,000 people, its population has now shrunk to 285,000 people. State of Wyoming now has 27 senators and 56 representatives. Let's forget this business about increasing the Senate to an exorbitant number.

A. TRASK: Mr. President.

KING: I do not yield unless it is for a question.

A. TRASK: Yes, it is for a question.

CHAIRMAN: Does the delegate yield?

KING: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: State your question.

A. TRASK: Mr. President, are you - - by those figures which you have read - -

CHAIRMAN: Will you please address the Chair?

A. TRASK: Mr. Chairman, do you gentlemen - - President mean that he is in favor of senatorial and representative houses based on population?

CHAIRMAN: Will you answer, Delegate King?

KING: That is not the point at issue. It is merely the size of the Senate I am discussing at this time. It has been repeatedly said that we are going to increase the cost of government tremendously, and a comparison was made between 15 senators and 25 senators. That's not the issue. The issue is 21 senators or 25, or at the least 20 or 25. The move to retain the membership of the Senate down to 15 has been lost. It has been the consensus of the committee that 15 is too small and it must be increased. Even the proponents of this amendment and the proponents of the other amendment use 20 or 25 and not 15. So let's discard 15 as the figure, that isn't in the picture at all. The picture is 20 or 25, or 21 or 25, that's the only question before this Committee of the Whole.

Now, when we get down to cost, it has also been brought up by Delegate Sakakihara that the per capita cost of the legislature is less today than it has been in the past. The dollar has shrunk in buying value, our population has increased threefold, the appropriation made by the legislature at every session has doubled twentyfold. So that the cost is not an important feature in this discussion.

Now, this amendment proposes to allocate nine delegates to Oahu, divided five and four, and that of course, would penalize the fifth district. Now, the fifth district with the addition of Waimanalo and Kailua has a population equal to the fourth district. It has a registration of voters somewhat less than the fourth district but actually the population of the fifth district is equal to that of the fourth district under the provisions that were adopted in the committee report including Waimanalo and Kailua into the fifth district. We are not using population as a figure in the Senate distribution, we're using an arbitrary figure because it has been generally agreed that the theory of the balance of powers should be maintained; that Oahu should have the control of the lower house because of its greater population but that Oahu should concede to the other islands the control of the Senate.

I have been one of the advocates of reapportionment for many years. As a matter of fact, I introduced a bill in Congress in 1939 or 1940 when the legislature of Hawaii agreed upon a basis of reapportionment that does, I will say frankly, follow the line of this amendment of 29 senators and 41 representatives. At that time I predicated my advocacy of reapportionment on three or four premises. First, that Oahu was entitled to a majority in the House of Representatives. No one questions that and that majority should be a fairly substantial one, but I added to that premise, second, that the other islands should not have their representation in the House decreased, that Hawaii, Maui and Kauai should not have less than they now have. It is true that they are not entitled to what they have now under the terms of the Organic Act. We have not obeyed the mandate of the Organic Act. We have not reapportioned in accordance with citizen population by election districts. If we had done so Oahu today would have 21 representatives out of 30 and would have nine senators out of 15, but it hasn't been done and that's water over the dam. I never did favor it. But let me repeat the two premises on which I based my championship or advocacy of reapportionment. First, that Oahu should have a majority in the lower house, a substantial majority, and that the other islands should not have any of their representation reduced. Second, in the Senate, that the other islands should have a majority but that Oahu should have its representation substantially increased in that body and that Oahu should be divided into two senatorial districts and that it should be divided into smaller representative districts.

Now, with those four premises I sat in, and I advocated that and submitted memorandums to the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions. We tried to come to an agreement in that committee. I was an ex officio member without a vote and if I'd realized what a tough nut it was going to be, I would have assigned myself to that committee with a vote. But I sat in their many hearings and over and over again every possible combination of the House and Senate was submitted to that group of 15 delegates, representing this Convention, coming from all of the islands of this group, but they could not come to any other agreement except 25. That was the least common denominator over which there was a majority in favor and a minority in opposition. On many occasions, it was a nine to three vote in favor, ten to four vote in favor, but in every other possible combination including this one here that is being proposed by Delegate Heen, there was no majority in the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions.

Now I feel that after all, we can't sit here as a Committee of the Whole with 63 members and go over all the ground that's been gone over before. One or two other remarks made here today merely repeated the remarks that were made yesterday, and it seems to me that we should come to a conclusion, vote on the subject, down or up, and then go on to the next order of business. I am not going to move for previous question because I do feel that is uncalled for, but, nevertheless, there is no question that the argument lies only between, shall we have a Senate of 20, or 21, or 25. The pending amendment says "21," so let's vote on that.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate King, I have a question, if you'd inform the Chair. I noticed in the table that you read from, the New Jersey Senate is 21. Now, that's the most recent constitutional revision. Did that revision change the membership in the Senate, do you happen to know?

KING: I do not know and I do not care what the states of large population do. You can turn to California which has seven million people, it has a Senate of only 40. You can turn to New York.

CHAIRMAN: Can any member of the committee advise the Chair of that fact?

KING: Well, let me finish my reply, the Chair asked me a question. I said that I did not know and I did not care that New York with 15 million people has only a Senate of 56, so there's no comparison between large populations. Now I'm comparing Hawaii with the states of comparable populations of 250,000, 285,000, 350,000, 525,000. If we are satisfied to base our representation on the standards adopted by California, Pennsylvania and New York, we'd have a Senate of two members and a House of five.

WIRTZ: I just want to clear up one possible misapprehension that might be left with this committee in regard to per capita costs of the legislature. It is true that the delegate from Hawaii did submit to the committee certain figures based upon the relative inflation of the dollar, and as I recall the discussion of the committee, it was pointed out that like all comparable tables of that nature, it depended where you started with the dollar and that those figures were rejected by the committee. As one of the delegates who is a businessman pointed out, they just didn't make sense.

A. TRASK: I think as the President has indicated, there are as many ideas on the subject as there are delegates here in this Convention. What I am concerned about is what theory can this Convention pose to the people as being the basis of whatever agreement we reach. How are we going to justify to the people the basis and theory upon which this legislature is to be apportioned. I would like to know, as vice chairman of the Committee on Submission and Information, which is the official organ of this Convention to sell the idea, I'd like to know.

Now this is my thinking about the subject. Let us read what the Organic Act says in Section 55:

> The legislature at its first regular session after the census enumeration shall be ascertained, and from time to time thereafter, shall reapportion the membership in the Senate and House of Representatives among the senatorial and representative districts on the basis of population in each of said districts who are citizens of the Territory.

Now, that's a plain and simple statement. The question first to be considered is, are we to depart from that principle of reapportionment in the House and the Senate after a census enumeration, which hasn't been done and which fault lies at the very foundation of the Republican party? Let's find out if this principle is to be departed from. It has been departed from in the last 50 years. Now having been departed from, what principle therefore are we proceeding on? Now to me that is basic. How are we going to justify any kind of reapportionment and as fair-minded men and women concerned about trying to give a proper answer to a proper question, what is the theory upon which we are proceeding? Obviously the theory is this: we shall reapportion the House but we shall not reapportion the Senate. That, to my mind, is the basic thinking unless this Convention admits of selfishness and personal gain. There is no other question but that the thinking basically, if it is to be justified at all, is on the principle that we shall reapportion the House but the Senate shall remain the same. To me 21, 25, 20 and the various questions of whether or not the lieutenant governor or not stays in as a president pro-temporare of the Senate -- if we do not apportion the Senate according to population we're just juggling it to our own provincial aims.

It seems to me therefore, that the most logical thing is to maintain the Senate at 15 and the House according to population, on the basis of population of the districts who are citizens of the Territory. It seems to be altogether that that is the theory. It's the history of the legislature. It's the history of the thinking here, unless we admit of other ideas than that of honesty. So therefore, 15 having been voted down—I wonder how we're going to justify 15 having been voted down when we go on the basis of population for the House. Are we apparently to abandon and say to the people, "Even though we have a principle in the Organic Act we disregard it altogether, it is not binding." And yet, on the other hand, we have put into this Constitution many provisions, and we say, "Ah, it is in the Organic Act and therefore we must follow it." I submit therefore, that as far as any proper thinking can be an excuse, the thinking is obviously this: reapportion the House, but do not reapportion the Senate. But the 15 is killed so the only other figure, and I am supporting as the second to Delegate Heen's motion, if we are to justify this thing at all, we can only justify it by voting for 21.

CHAIRMAN: The clerks have been busily engaged for the last hour. If there's no objection the Chair will declare a short recess.

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

CROSSLEY: What I have to say will only take 30 seconds.

CHAIRMAN: Very well, proceed.

CROSSLEY: I'd like to say, as chairman of the Committee on Submission and Information, and as one of the committee who has done a great deal of work with other members of the committee in trying to get this information out each week to the people, I am not a bit concerned with going back to the people and saying that what has been decided on this floor is the majority opinion of the people you elected to represent you in writing a constitution. It's just as simple as that. I'm not going to try and justify my vote on any issue or anyone's vote. I'm simply going to say, "There are lots of things that were controversial in here; there are lots of things in this Constitution with which I don't agree personally but they're in there because a majority of the people wanted them. Now, it's up to you people."

I resent the innuendoes remarks that constantly go on when I try to put across a point.

C. RICE: I move we take a recess.

CHAIRMAN: Any second to that motion?

WIRTZ: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor. Contrary.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole will come to order. Delegates take their seats please. Ladies and Gentlemen of the Convention, just before the recess, Delegate Crossley was speaking and he was obstructed in his addressing the Convention by some remarks that came from some place. I don't think that's conducive to earnest and sincere and effective debate. I think we ought to get rid of that sort of thing. The Chair will recognize Delegate Crossley in case he has something further to say.

CROSSLEY: I was trying to make the point that had been raised by the delegate from the fifth district that we might have a very difficult time in explaining some of the actions. The point that I wanted to make, the point that I think is so important for all of us to remember is that there may be many controversial issues embodied in the Constitution. I don't think that you can pick out any one of them and say that that is going to be it. There will be some people who will fully agree with some of the actions, there'll be many people who will disagree with some of the actions. You're going to sell the Constitution as a whole. That will be one of the jobs of the Committee on Submission and Information. Therefore, I think it's erroneous to state that on one issue alone-whether you may agree or disagree with the action finally taken—I think the Constitution is going to be presented to the people on the basis that it is the majority opinion in each of the issues that has been settled, that that be decided as the article to go into the Constitution, and that is the reason that it's there. In some cases, it may have been that they were unanimous decisions, in more cases it will be that they were majority decisions and that is how democracy works. That was the point that I wanted to make.

I find that my sense of humor is not as good as it was 60 some odd days ago and for that I'm sorry because I appreciate a sense of humor as much as anyone and I don't like to be short, but I was so serious and intent yesterday and today on the two subjects on which I was talking that I did resent interference.

KAGE: I'd like to make my remarks toward the statement made by Delegate King in reference to the ten comparable states as far as Hawaii is concerned. We all speak about money and we say an expense is nothing, but money is a necessary evil in our civilization and no matter what you do you just got to consider money. Most of us are unwilling to work for love.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kage, I think if you'll hold your microphone a little closer you can be heard better.

KAGE: Now, getting back to the ten states that were referred by Delegate King: Arizona, Delaware, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Utah, Vermont and Wyoming. Of those ten states, Nevada pays the highest salaries to the legislators. Nevada pays for a two-year period $900.00. According to the proposal of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions, they are allowing a salary of $2,500 for each session. For the general session $1,500; for a budget session, $1,000. The question that is going around and around and around in my mind is these ten states that were named. Is it not possible that they would like to have a smaller Senate than the Senate that they have today? I would also like to make another reference to a very interesting book published by the -- Report of the Subcommittee of the State Constitutional Convention of the Hawaii Statehood Commission. I notice that there is a report on reapportionment and I notice also that the chairman of the Legislative Powers and Functions, Mr. Heen, is the chairman. And I also found out that the other members of the committee are Thomas E. Waddoups, Charles Kauhane, Rhoda Lewis and Judge Wirtz. I think this material here deserves consideration. Thank you.

SILVA: I'm just wondering whether it's timely for us to discuss the costs. If it is, then it is proper and fitting that at this time that we fix the salaries of the legislators. Otherwise we're just wasting a lot of time about -- talking. about the costs and what the various states pay their senators and legislators, unless we agree that in discussing the number we shall also discuss what their salaries shall be, if that is going to be relevant to the subject. Otherwise we should settle the number first and then come to the cost. For us to bring the question of cost now in comparisons for the various states, in my opinion is not a proper one unless the Convention decides that we should talk about both of them at the same time.

CHAIRMAN: You wish to make that in form of a motion, Delegate Silva? The Chair thinks there's a good deal of relevancy to what you have to say there.

SILVA: I just want to point that out that I just hope that they save their breath in talking about the cost if that is not the intent of this Committee of the Whole. If we're going to discuss the number that is to be decided upon, whether it's 21, 15 or 25, then let's stick to that issue. Then later on when we come to costs, it's a different subject.

H. RICE: I am perturbed about the size of the Senate because I think it will have a bearing on the size of the House, and I quite agree with Delegate Kawakami that when you dilute the milk it might not be as good, but I think that when you dilute these bodies you won't have the same responsibilities. I am fearful that with these large Senates you'll have a 51 House which I will surely oppose as well, and I think if we could get down to 21-41 or 43, it would be far better.

In Delegate King's analysis of the different states, they are not comparable to Hawaii because they have -- take the case of Vermont. I think all the legislators go home every night. They don't have the same situation and the same responsibilities really, that go here. And as I say it's made a big difference and I am hoping that we have statehood soon because I don't think there's anywhere in any state where you have to pay tax to go from one county to the other, the way you do here. And the sooner we get statehood the better.

I realize, too, that we should have more help. Today I got a report from the Full Employment Committee and we have 26,288 individuals who were helped in the month of May at a cost of $672,360. And you know, fellow delegates and Mr. Chairman, that with 8,000 more graduates from our University, there's quite a responsibility that goes with it all, and I think that if you have these larger houses they will shirk their responsibility.

On the Aeronautical Commission we have one delegate from the County of Hawaii, the County of Maui and the County of Kauai that always show up. We have six representatives from the island of Oahu and we can hardly ever get them together. The others realize their responsibility in these airports on the other islands, and they always are meeting when they're called. It's the same way with our school commission and other commissions, but the whole government -- I think that the Territory is in a critical situation on account of this unemployment and I think that two counties are floundering, the County of Hawaii and the County of Maui, on account of their finances. Kauai is pretty well off, so is Oahu. I think you can bring a few people together much easier than you can bring a lot, and I think that you won't have the responsibility that goes with the office if you have bigger ones. I'd rather have 15, but that's out. Looks like you probably will kill 21, then they have 25, by jove, you have 51 House! I don't think you can sell that kind of a House and Senate to the territory. That's my firm belief, that the people when they realize what it means will think it's ridiculous. What did those fellows do in those 63 days up there and then finally work out a legislature of this kind. I think it's ridiculous!

YAMAMOTO: The legislature is possibly the most vital branch of representative democratic government.

CHAIRMAN: Excuse me. Will the delegate speak a little closer to the microphone; I don't think the delegates can hear you.

YAMAMOTO: Here today, we are debating on the most vital and important factor of this Convention—reapportionment—whether we are giving equitable or justifiable representation to all sections or districts throughout the new State of Hawaii.

To give a slight phase of how other states of the Union base their representation, let me explain the system carried by the great state of California, which state that is represented by the Honorable Governor Warren, who is one of the greatest proponents for statehood for Hawaii, and the state that is closest to Hawaii.

Under the present California "Federal Plan" of representation, the 80 assembly districts—to us the House of Representatives—are apportioned on the basis of population, while the 40 senatorial districts are formed on a county basis, with the restriction that there may not be more than one district per county nor over three counties per district.

It is the contention that such procedure is necessary to protect the rural interests of the state which play an important part in the economic structure.

I like to back up the past statements by quoting our President of the United States, the Honorable President Harry S. Truman, the strong advocator of equal rights to all.

On May 6th of this year President Truman urged the Senate to "strengthen the security of our nation" by granting statehood to Alaska and Hawaii.

"I know of few better ways in which we can demonstrate to the world our deep faith in democracy and the principle of self-government," the President added.

Mr. Truman made this plea in a letter to Chairman Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.) of the Senate Interior Committee. Noting the contention of opposition forces that admission of the two territories would give them the same representation in the Senate as the most populous states, the President said, " This argument is not only entirely without merit, but also directly attacks a basic tenet of the constitutional system under which this nation has grown and prospered. Without the provision for equal representation in the Senate for all states, both great and small, regardless of population, there probably would have been no United States. There is no justification for denying statehood to Alaska and Hawaii on the basis of an issue which was resolved by the Constitutional Convention in 1787."

Don't we consider the above statement by our great President, Harry S. Truman, of great significance?

Let us consider other states of our great union. Ten states, Alabama, California, Florida, Idaho, Iowa, Maryland, Montana, New Jersey, South Carolina, and Texas, provide in their constitutions that each county be limited in representation to one senator.

Therefore, honorable delegates, I plead to your good judgment to give this matter of apportionment serious consideration on the merits of principles on which our nation is based on—to preserve certain rights of the minority. I reiterate again and plea to you all delegates with a clear conscience of mind to weigh the merits of equality. This Constitution must be approved by Congress and the President of the United States after ratified by the people of Hawaii.

I like to leave with you, fellow honorable delegates, a thought. We want statehood, so let us be fair to all so that Congress and the President of the United States will grant us that wish of approving our Constitution. Thank you.

MIZUHA: May I ask the previous speaker a question?

CHAIRMAN: Address the question to the Chair, please.

MIZUHA: Mr. Chairman, does the speaker desire equal representation from all counties in our future State Senate?

YAMAMOTO: Yes.

MIZUHA: Then I believe that the delegate is in a position to reconsider our action on the previous apportionment of senators because there is an equal representation at the present time and I believe he voted for the proportion of representation as it exists on the ten, seven, five, three basis.

CHAIRMAN: I think that's correct.

CORBETT: I'd like to speak in favor of the amendment offered. I believe it's the first debate we've had when someone hasn't mentioned the Organic Act and its virtues and how well we've done for the last 50 years. Of course that's because we're all in agreement on the need of reapportionment. But I do feel we should recognize the strides that the Territory has made under the apportionment made by the Organic Act under the small Senate and the small House. The Territory of Hawaii is recognized everywhere as being advanced, particularly along social lines. Now this is something that we should not forget.

DOI: I would like to ask the movant of this amendment a question.

CHAIRMAN: Address your question to the Chair, please.

DOI: Yes. I understand the House is apportioned on the basis of population. I would like to know just exactly what the movant based his senatorial distribution of members, just exactly what did he base it on?

CHAIRMAN: Would you answer that, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: It is based partly on geography and partly on population in terms of registered voters. It is almost in the same proportion that exists now of 40 per cent for the island of Oahu and 60 per cent for the outlying islands. It's only a small difference in percentage here under this plan of 21 membership in the Senate.

DOI: Will the movant also yield to another question, and that is, whether he feels that the 40-60 per cent ratio should also be retained in the House. Of course, reversed.

HEEN: I do not think so. I don't think that was the standard that was fixed by the drafters of the Organic Act because in the matter of reapportionment of both the Senate and the House of Representatives, they set a different pattern. Those two houses were to be apportioned on the basis of citizen population.

DOI: It is my conclusion that all these bases used here are simply arbitrary.

HEEN: That is correct, a little arbitrary in creating a little difference in the proportion.

MIZUHA: May I ask the delegate from the first district a question?

CHAIRMAN: You may.

MIZUHA: Isn't the proportion that now exists in the proposal of ten to Oahu, seven to Hawaii, five to Maui and three to Kauai, arbitrary also?

CHAIRMAN: You have any views on that, Delegate Doi?

DOI: Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman, I think it is arbitrary.

ROBERTS: I haven't spoken on the general question of the Senate. I'd like to make a few observations which I think we ought to keep in mind on the question that is being voted on. The purpose of the Senate and the House, I think, has been adequately discussed. I think that there is a need as we see it, to increase the representation in the Senate in order to provide a little more representation and to prevent the body from acting in such a capacity that it does not give broad representation and provides too much veto power over the House. I favor some increase in the Senate. Whether that number is 21 or 25 is not material to me.

It seems to me that the problem raised on the question of cost which I discussed in part yesterday can be divided in two sections. The first is the cost of the representatives themselves, whether they be House or in the Senate, and the second is the cost of maintaining the operation. The figures which I have indicated, that the cost -- average total cost expenditure per legislative day in the Territory of Hawaii apart from the cost -- expenses of salaries and travel, runs in excess of $7,000 per day. That's excessive. I don't believe, however, there's much we can do about it in the Convention. That problem, it seems to me, is the problem which the people have got to face. If the costs can be reduced, they ought to be, and the pressures ought to be exerted, but not in the Convention.

The question we have is whether the 21 Senate or 25 Senate meets the need. It seems to me that that basically, however, is not the problem which has caused most concern on the floor. The question is how that 21 or 25 is to be apportioned, that's the big issue and it seems to me that we ought to face that issue, and in writing something into our Constitution as we're planning to do now, we ought to be extremely careful. I personally have been very happy that we've had two full days of discussion even though at times, perhaps, a little too many overtones in terms of volume. I think it was a good discussion, I think it raised the basic question. But we ought to focus on the problem and the problem to me is the problem as to how you apportion that 21 or that 25. That's the real problem. Not the problem as to whether it's 21 or 25 because the total cost and the total savings that you can make on the salaries are small. You can't keep the other costs down by any provision in the Constitution. That you've got to leave outside.

I'd like therefore to address myself to what should constitute a proper basis for the distribution in the Senate. I have a general feeling that the senators ought to be basically representative of broader areas than the members of the House. They ought to view the overall problems in terms of the larger aspects of the entire community, the entire territory. Therefore, the larger the unit from which the senators come, to me the better. I, therefore, supported yesterday that the island of Oahu and the island of Hawaii each be one unit so far as senatorial representation is concerned. However, there seems to be a strong feeling on the floor, and the majority has voted that Oahu ought to be divided into two districts, two senatorial districts. The issue there it seems to me is quite clear. The issue is in two districts, the issue is what is to happen to Lanikai, Waimanalo and Kailua. And it seems to me that we ought to face those issues. The same thing it seems to me applies to East Hawaii and West Hawaii. If there's good logic in having two districts in Oahu, there is good logic for having it in Hawaii. And even though I did not support two districts for Hawaii, if you're going to have two in Oahu, I think you can support as well logically and reasonably two for the island of Hawaii.

It seems to me therefore that we ought to have the problems clear before us as to basis. All figures that we pick, whether it be 15 or 21 or 20 or 19 or 25, are all basically arbitrary, there's nothing scientific about it. It seems to me therefore that once we agree on the general figure, let's face the real issues in terms of the distribution. It seems to me that we in the Constitution ought not to consider the political question as primary, but consider the overall problems of the Constitution as primary.

As you recall, a few days ago we took up the question of revision and amendments and in that section we inserted a proviso which prevents any constitutional amendment, which prevents any reapportionment of the Senate from now until hereafter except under very unusual and difficult circumstances. It seems to me, therefore, that the problem of apportionment of the Senate ought to be on logical and reasonably sound ground. I did not support that proviso in the section on revision and amendments. It doesn't make good sense to me to tie the hands of any future constitutional conventions. There may be some question as to whether you can do it, but if you write it into the Constitution you say in fact that you do believe in it. Having written it in by majority vote, it seems to me that we've got to give it earnest and serious consideration to the basic issue of distribution of our 21 or 25 senators, and I therefore urge that the problems be focused. Let's have a degree of logic and sense in our distribution even though we recognize that basically the number that we choose and the distribution is arbitrary.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts, are you suggesting that we amend the present motion to attack your problem logically, as you described it?

ROBERTS: I haven't made any motion, Mr. Chairman. I just wanted the issue focused on the floor and if a proposal is made for reconsideration on the question of East and West Hawaii, I will support it even though I personally favor distribution of the island of Hawaii as one and Oahu as one.

DOWSON: Representation, I believe, should keep up with the population increase to a certain extent. The population has trebled since the Senate was set at 15. The amount of milk has trebled, the amount of cream has trebled. We need not have fear for the lack of good candidates for a Senate of 21 or 25. I am in favor of an increase from 15 to 21; however, I am more in favor of an increase to 25.

HEEN: If there are no other delegates who would like to speak, perhaps I should take the opportunity at this time to close the debate. Now in addressing myself to what Delegate King said in his remark comparing Hawaii with Arizona, Arizona has 19 senators and in 1940 Arizona had a population of 499,000, and in 1940 Hawaii had a population of 423,000 and in 1950 Hawaii has a population of 493,000. Now take the State of Idaho, that has a Senate of 44 members. In 1940, it had a population of 524,000. Montana in 1940 had a population of 559,000. Now this is the one that should have been pointed out to the members of the Convention. New Jersey has a Senate of 21 members and in 1940 New Jersey had a population of 4,160,000, and before the revision of the Constitution of the State of New Jersey in 1947, prior to that time, New Jersey had a Senate of 21 members. At the time of the revision, the State of New Jersey had the opportunity to increase the membership of its Senate from 21 to some higher figure, but it did not do that, but left it at the same number of 21.

Now one comparison that was made by Delegate King was the one in connection with the State of Vermont. In 1940, Vermont had a population of 359,000 and the membership of the Senate in Vermont is 30 and the membership in the House of Representatives is 246. Obviously that is altogether out of line, therefore it should not be used as a basis of comparison; and in addition to that, in Vermont they pay the members of the legislature there $375.00 per annum or $750.00 for two years. Therefore, it shouldn't be used as a basis for comparison at all. It is altogether out of line. Now you take the State of Washington, they pay the members of the legislature there $5.00 a day for a 60 day session.

Now in closing, I would like to quote the words of Alexander Hamilton discussing the membership of an assembly.

> One observation, however, I must be permitted to add on this subject as claiming, in my judgment, a very serious attention. It is, that in all legislative assemblies the greater the number composing them may be, the fewer will be the men who will in fact direct their proceedings. In the first place, the more numerous an assembly may be, of whatever characters composed, the greater is known to be the ascendancy of passion over reason. In the next place, the larger the number, the greater will be the proportion of members of limited information and of weak capacities. Now, it is precisely on characters of this description that the eloquence and address of the few are known to act with all their force. In the ancient republics, where the whole body of the people assembled in person, a single orator, or an artful statesman, was generally seen to rule with as complete a sway as if a sceptre had been placed in his single hand. On the same principle, the more multitudinous a representative assembly may be rendered, the more it will partake of the infirmities incident to collective meetings of the people. Ignorance will be the dupe of cunning, and passion the slave of sophistry and declamation. [THE FEDERALIST]

KING: Since the chairman of the committee represents the minority opinion, I think he should not necessarily have the last word.

CHAIRMAN: He can have the last word on his amendment, Delegate King.

KING: I should like to answer the comparison he made with my statement. I took all of the states that had a comparable population. The eastern states such as Vermont, New Hampshire and Connecticut, they have a House of Representatives based on the old township principle of New England. They all have very large numbers, three hundred and so forth and so on. Delegate Roberts told me that New Hampshire recently had a constitutional convention instructed to revise and reduce the House of Representatives. They had a House of Representatives of over 400. After several days of deliberation, they reduced it from 450 to 399. But I'll grant you that the New England states are not a comparison. Delegate Heen neglected to make a comparison with Wyoming. Wyoming had a population in 1940 of 350,000 in round numbers. It has lost population and now has a population of about 285,000. It has a Senate of 27 and a House of 56 and so the comparison can be made. The only point I was trying to make is that states of comparable population have in many cases as large or larger legislatures than we are proposing to establish for the State of Hawaii.

Furthermore, in reply to the quotation that Delegate Heen read that came from Alexander Hamilton, the great federalist who didn't believe in democracy anyhow, he wanted to make George Washington the king of the United States.

ROBERTS: May I add a footnote, a very brief footnote to Mr. Chairman King's statement? The finance committee report of the New Hampshire convention to which he has reference reported out the payroll for the cost of the convention. That payroll provided for the services at $3.00 per day for the 451 delegates to the convention for a total cost of $5,400.

CHAIRMAN: For the purposes of the record -- Delegate Hayes.

HAYES: May I just give the delegates a little information that I just read from our legislative book here—that Manual, that they have already 95 patterns on reapportionment, so this will be the hundredth pattern.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to state its position on -- Does Delegate Doi wish to speak? Delegate Doi is recognized.

DOI: I too am not in favor of a large numbered House and Senate, but as Delegate Roberts has very adequately stated the question is distribution, a fair distribution, and if a fair distribution is not meted out then probably we'll have to have a large Senate and House. In line with that few remarks, I would like to suggest that some of the members on this floor have worked out a plan which we believe is fair in distribution and is also reasonable in the number as to the Senate as well as the House. And specifically this is the recommendation. The Senate according to this idea will be composed of 19 members. It will be distributed on this basis: Oahu, seven; Hawaii, five; Maui, four; and Kauai, three. The House will be composed of 37 members and that 37 will be divided into the following numbers: Oahu, 22; Hawaii, seven; Maui, five; and Kauai, three. I believe the numbers in both houses are reasonably small and adequate enough to do a good and efficient job. It also gives fair representation to the people of the respective areas in the state.

ROBERTS: A point of information. The figure that you gave for Oahu is 22, isn't it? Not two?

CHAIRMAN: It was 22, Delegate Roberts, it was 22.

DOI: That is only a suggestion I wanted to mention before we voted on this Heen amendment.

ARASHIRO: Is the last delegate who spoke proposing to offer that as an amendment after this amendment is voted down?

CHAIRMAN: He offered that as a suggestion. He'd like to have it before the body before the vote is taken.

A. TRASK: Point of order.

DOI: If it is in order to amend the amendment on the floor at this time -- is it in order to do so?

A. TRASK: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order, Delegate Trask.

A. TRASK: I think the Chair should rule out the presumption of fact made by the delegate from Kauai that this is going to be voted down.

DOI: Point of information. Is it in order at this time to amend with the suggestion, the amendment of Delegate Heen's?

CHAIRMAN: I believe it is although -- Delegate Heen.

DOI: If that is the case, I would like to so move.

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

PORTEUS: I wonder whether since we have debated at such length the scheme presented by my fellow delegate from the fourth district, whether or not we might not vote on that and then turn to the suggestion from Hawaii, because if his suggestion as an amendment is put before us, it will require, I think, rather extended debate. If it passes, that's fine; but if it does lose, then we'll be up against the proposition of debating the Heen amendment all over again. So if we could dispose of, either accept or reject the Heen amendment and then turn to the amendment that is being offered by the gentleman from Hawaii, it might expedite matters.

CHAIRMAN: The speaker agrees that the amendment is in order?

PORTEUS: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Doi is recognized.

DOI: For the sake of orderly procedure and the saving of time, I wish to withdraw my motion and reserve right to submit it later.

LEE: I was just going to suggest to Delegate Doi that it might be a good idea to offer your amendment at this time so that the discussion could go immediately into that point and it's perfectly proper to propose an amendment to any motion and I believe the delegate from the fourth district was merely making a suggestion.

HEEN: I don't think it's in order to consider any amendments along the lines advocated by Delegate Doi from Hawaii at this time. If an amendment of that type is to be offered it should be complete in itself. That requires the setting up of different districts as representative districts throughout the whole State of Hawaii and also would require the setting up of senatorial districts. Now the Committee of the Whole has already gone on record, perhaps permanently or tentatively, that Oahu is to be divided into two districts; therefore, in order to have a complete amendment before the Committee of the Whole, that amendment both as to the House and to the Senate should be complete.

OKINO: I realize that it is not in order at this time to consider the number of representatives to our state legislature but I feel that the determination of the number of senators for the State of Hawaii is dependent considerably upon the numbers in the House.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair agrees with the speaker. I think the two things must be considered together.

KING: The only question before the committee is the amendment proposed by Delegate Heen, and unless there's further discussion on it, I suggest the Chair call for a vote on it.

ARASHIRO: I think the amendment made by the delegate from Hawaii is in order and then if that amendment is voted down, then we vote on the amendment.

WOOLAWAY: Point of order. The delegate from Hawaii has withdrawn his motion.

CHAIRMAN: There's been no second.

ROBERTS: I have a point of information, that if the Heen amendment is adopted, that will be subject to amendment subsequently?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct as the Chair understands it. Before voting on this, the Chair would like to make known its position. I have listened with great attention and careful attention—I'm not a politician—to the debate and I'm not persuaded.

KING: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State the point of order.

KING: When I was on the Chair and started to make some comment, I think it was Delegate Anthony who rose to call me to order.

CHAIRMAN: Since then—the point is not well taken—I have examined the rules on the Committee of the Whole, the chairman is entitled to participate in debate.

LEE: Mr. Chairman, I believe that your remark to the President was when the Convention was convened. This is the Committee of the Whole.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. That's the difference. I have not been persuaded from anything that's been said on the floor of this House, that we should depart from a 15 man Senate to a 25 man Senate. I agree that it should be increased. I agree with the basic principle that the outside islands should control the Senate, but I can not see any real basis for the figure of 25. The Clerk will call the roll.

DELEGATE: I demand a roll call.

CHAIRMAN: Roll call demanded?

DELEGATE: Roll call demanded.

SILVA: I was under the impression that the words used by the chairman was " Clerk call the roll," which is the chairman's privilege.

CHAIRMAN: I wanted to be in order, Delegate Silva. I didn't know that I had that right.

AKAU: Is it the amendment we are voting on or is it the proposal?

CHAIRMAN: We are now voting on the amendment offered by Delegate Heen.

Ayes, 20. Noes, 42 (Akau, Apoliona, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Crossley, Doi, Dowson, Fong, Fukushima, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Ihara, Kam, Kanemaru, Kauhane, Kido, King, Kometani, Lai, Luiz, Lyman, Mau, Noda, Ohrt, Okino, Phillips, Porteus, Richards, Roberts, Sakai, Sakakihara, Shimamura, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, White, Woolaway, Yamamoto, Yamauchi.) Not Voting, 1 (Wist).

CHAIRMAN: The amendment is lost.

DOI: I wish to move to amend Section 2 of Article 29 by changing the members of the Senate to 19, and as to distribution of senatorial districts, Hawaii, five; Maui, four; Kauai, three; and Oahu, seven, with this understanding, that the question of whether Oahu is to be split into two senatorial districts could be decided later, the island of Oahu, seven.

ARASHIRO: I second that motion.

PORTEUS: If the maker of the amendment tends to leave for a later time the question of the division of Oahu, I would like to object to that in that that matter was voted on more than once yesterday. It was reconsidered and then voted on again and under the rules no question may be twice reconsidered unless there is the suspension of the rules, and the rules can only be suspended on a 32 vote. I'm not objecting to his presentation of the 19, but I am trying to stay out of the fight which I think has already been settled.

DOI: I believe the chairman ruled this morning that all that we have agreed to this morning have been tentative.

CHAIRMAN: That's what the Chair said.

PORTEUS: I know that was what the Chair said, but at the time Delegate Heen presented his amendment, at that time yesterday he left the number blank that he was going to place on Oahu. I was one who stood and asked whether or not he couldn't follow the form of the committee proposal leaving the words "ten for Oahu" and the chairman said that he would be willing to do that provided however, that he had the right to come back at a later time with a further amendment on the question with respect to the number on Oahu, and I think that was accepted by the assembly.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Porteus, there's a motion. Are you speaking to the motion?

PORTEUS: I am speaking on the point of order with respect to the ruling of the Chair as to whether or not—I believe it was perfectly proper under the understanding of yesterday—to have Delegate Heen's motion considered. I do object however to a consideration of this other question which was voted on, reconsidered and voted on again. If the chairman of the Committee of the Whole will turn to his rules on this matter, the rules are very specific.

CHAIRMAN: Pardon me, I think what's before the house is the motion of Delegate Doi. He's not asking to reconsider anything as the Chair understands it.

PORTEUS: He is making an amendment that would leave Oahu in its entirety again, and that matter has been debated and settled more than once. In that respect the amendment is out of order. If he wishes to divide it among Oahu, then it is in order.

CHAIRMAN: I think the point is well taken, Delegate Doi.

ROBERTS: I'd like to speak to that ruling. The rule is quite clear, it seems to me. If a motion to reconsider is lost, it cannot be repeated except by consent. The question that we took yesterday in reconsideration was won, and therefore it goes back to the original motion, and therefore it can be reconsidered. The purpose of the motion for reconsideration is that it shall not be acted on twice in the same manner, but that question is not now before us, Mr. Chairman. The question I think can come up if and when that problem is faced by us, not now.

CHAIRMAN: I'd like to speak to Delegate Roberts. If you will examine Rule No. 39, Delegate Roberts, that rule provides, "When a motion for reconsideration is decided, that decision shall not be reconsidered, and no question shall be reconsidered twice." It does not use the words "lost," as far as I can see. Any error in that?

MIZUHA: Under that rule, as mentioned by the chairman, it can be reconsidered twice and it was reconsidered only once and if the question does arise again on the floor for another reconsideration, it can be again reconsidered because our rules allow any problem to be reconsidered twice.

SILVA: Mr. Chairman. I've been standing here for an hour, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Silva, I'm sorry that you've been standing there for so long.

SILVA: Thank you. Thank you. I move we recess until 1:30 o'clock p.m.

H. RICE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye."

(RECESS)

Afternoon Session

CHAIRMAN: The committee will come to order. Will the delegates please take their seats. At the conclusion of the recess this morning, we were discussing a proposed amendment by Delegate Doi. That, I understand, has been printed and is circulated. The Chair would like to make this suggestion, if it meets with the approval of the body. It seems to the Chair that there have been five or six votes on the combination as to the constitution of the Senate and the present difficulty seems to center about whether or not the action taken yesterday in regard to a Senate of 25 was tentative or final. It is the suggestion of the Chairman that we at this point move for the adoption of Section 2 which will place squarely before the body a Senate of 25. Those members who are against a Senate of 25 can exercise their right to vote on that question. Then later, whatever number is determined upon or whatever combination is determined upon, can be voted upon by an appropriate amendment. If that meets with the approval of the body, the Chair would be glad to entertain such a motion.

SAKAKIHARA: I now move the adoption of Section 2.

WOOLAWAY: I'll second that motion.

DOI: Do I understand that all the issues we've already passed on are declared as not having been decided, that we are starting all anew again?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair made no such statement. The difficulty that we're in is in regard to the technical use of the language "tentatively agreed upon." It was the view of some members of the body that that meant tentatively and it was open to change without a vote to reconsider at any time. It is the view of others as a practical matter, as the history of past debates have shown, once we have passed something tentatively it has been final and not tentative. Now my suggestion to resolve the difficulty is to take a vote on Section 2 which will clear the decks. If that's not satisfactory, the Chair will entertain any other motion.

MAU: I believe that the Chair's understanding of the practice and the agreement of this Convention in adopting any provisions or proposals tentatively was that anyone could make any amendments to it without moving for reconsideration. We had agreed to that. That was a definite understanding.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Mau, that was the Chair's understanding, but there is a disagreement.

MAU: I think the Chair is right.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Mau, will you please yield a moment? There are other delegates who entertain a different view, and it seems to me we can resolve this question in the manner suggested by the Chair.

J. TRASK: I so move, Mr. Chairman, at this particular time that any question that a motion is made on, any question that is seconded and approved tentatively, be subject to amendment at any time.

SILVA: May I point this out to this Convention, especially we who are sitting in Committee of the Whole, that all action no matter what it is taken in the Committee of the Whole is only tentatively any way, and that the final action on any measure will have to be taken when we sit in Convention rather than in Committee of the Whole, and when we say "tentatively" that is the definite meaning of that word. In the Committee of the Whole you cannot take final action on any measure and that's why the word "tentative" was used, no final action is taken in the Committee of the Whole. We all know that and those that don't know should know.

WOOLAWAY: Point of information. Did you recognize my second to the amendment?

CHAIRMAN: I recognize you now. Do you second? Second the motion?

WOOLAWAY: I do.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we adopt Section 2. Is there any discussion? Not tentatively. We adopt Section 2.

HEEN: I move that if we adopt Section 2 that we do so tentatively.

WIRTZ: I second the motion.

KING: It's my recollection that when we were considering various measures in the Committee of the Whole, we adopted one section or one paragraph of a section or one sentence of a section tentatively and then we moved on to the next paragraph, sentence, or section. We did not continue to discuss possible amendments to the material that had been adopted tentatively. As Delegate Silva has pointed out, all action to the Committee of the Whole are tentative, but it was in an effort to get along with the rest of the legislation pending before us, the proposal that we were discussing, to say all right, we'll adopt Section 1 tentatively and now consider Section 2 and the committee in charge would make a pro forma motion, "I move for the adoption of Section 2." It would be seconded and that would be subject to amendment. We have adopted, by the minutes which I have just read, the first sentence of Section 2 tentatively, and we should now be discussing the remainder of that section with no further amendments to be considered to the first sentence of Section 2 unless by a motion to reconsider, which has to carry. That has been the procedure right along to the best of my recollection. Now, if we're going to sit here and talk about further amendments to the first line, first sentence of Section 2 and all the variations from 15 to 25, we'll have a profusion of amendments that will not mean anything. Twenty has been voted down; 21 has been approved. Now we have a new amendment that's going to propose 19 and its only basis in reason is that it has a different apportionment, and it raises another point that has already been settled by the Committee of the Whole and that is the division of Oahu into two senatorial districts. I feel that we are wasting our time and I certainly do urge that the Convention -- Committee of the Whole vote on at least on the first sentence of Section 2 at this time.

CHAIRMAN: That's what is before the house now.

DOI: Point of information. Do I gather that the motion on the floor at this moment is just to the first sentence of Section 2 or is it to the whole section, Section 2?

SAKAKIHARA: May I answer that question? I am the movant of that motion to adopt the whole of Section 2, not the first sentence of Section 2.

DOI: What is the ruling of the Chair?

CHAIRMAN: That was not the Chair's understanding of the motion. It was the first sentence but if you'll bear with me a minute I'll check with the Clerk. The Chair rules that it was the first sentence of Section 2. It was the motion of Delegate Sakakihara; however, we will permit the delegate to amend his motion if he so desires.

SAKAKIHARA: In order to straighten the record, I move that we adopt Section 2 in toto.

WOOLAWAY: I'll second that motion.

DOI: I move to amend Section 2. In the first line in Section 2 changing the word "twenty-five" to "twenty-one" members. On the next page, first senatorial district from "seven" to "six."

BRYAN: I would like to raise a point of order before we go further.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order, Delegate Bryan.

BRYAN: As I understand it we have voted on the first sentence of Section 2, which vote was carried, approving that as written by the committee. When that vote was taken it was with the understanding that it would not prevent a consideration of the minority report of the committee. The minority report of the committee has been considered on this matter and that consideration is finished. I believe that if we're going to amend the first sentence of Section 2 it would be necessary to ask for a reconsideration of that vote. The only proviso when that was first passed was that the minority report of the committee would be considered and that is finished. Now, if there're going to be other amendments, other than the minority report, I believe that we would have to reconsider our action on the first sentence of Section 2. I believe that would clear the whole situation.

J. TRASK: Correct me if I am wrong but I believe the Chair has ruled that the motion for consideration was not entirely in order, that the delegates were free to amend any particular sentence they wished of Section 2. Isn't that my understanding, Mr. Chairman?

KING: I certainly did not hear the chairman make any such ruling. Speaking to the point of order raised by Delegate Bryan, I should like to read what happened yesterday.

> Delegate Arashiro had an amendment pending. It was voted upon and the motion was lost. The Chair then stated that the question before the committee was the first sentence of Section 2 of Committee Proposal No. 29.
> Delegate Heen stated that as he understood, whatever action is taken on that particular sentence, it will be tentative.
> The Chair stated that that was his understanding.
> Delegate Heen thereupon stated that he would like to have that definitely understood because during this proceeding he and Senator Lee will file a minority report for a 21 membership in the Senate, but not apportioned along the lines stated by Delegate Arashiro.
> The Chair thereupon stated that the question was the adoption of the first sentence of Section 2, reading "The Senate shall be composed of 25 members who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective senatorial districts," and he thereupon put the motion, which motion was carried.

And then in the next action:

> Delegate King suggested that it would be proper for the committee to make a pro forma motion that the second sentence be tentatively approved.
> Delegate Sakakihara thereupon moved that the committee approve the remaining portion of Section 2. Seconded by Delegate Bryan.

And that motion is pending. That is the only motion that's pending other than the courtesy extended to the chairman of the committee to bring up his minority report this morning. That was debated exhaustively, amendments were suggested to it, it was defeated by a roll call vote before we rose in recess, and now I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the only motion pending before this Committee of the Whole is the motion to approve the balance of Section 2 and that the first sentence of Section 2 has already been approved insofar as the Committee of the Whole can approve any provision.

DOI: Mr. Chairman, what is the ruling of the Chair?

CHAIRMAN: I didn't hear, Delegate Doi. What was your question?

DOI: What is the ruling of the Chair on the point of order raised?

LEE: Before you rule, may I have your attention, Mr. Chairman? According to the information read by Delegate King I believe there is possible one of two constructions. When Delegate Heen wanted it understood by the committee that the adoption of Section 1 should be tentative, he stated that he had in mind the consideration of the minority report. That's correct, that has been disposed of. But when the Chair ruled that that was his understanding and the understanding of the committee, that the action taken on the adoption of Section 2 is only tentative, it did not preclude any one from offering amendments other than the minority group, although at that time Delegate Heen was only interested in his consideration of the minority report. So I believe that the Chair's ruling as to the tentative adoption is correct and it bears out the conclusion brought out by Delegate Silva that anything we do here, even though we adopt this section using the language offered by Delegate Sakakihara it would still be tentative and subject to amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will state that it was the purpose of inviting a vote on the first sentence of 21, of Section 2 on the constitution of the Senate to avoid a resolution of what we meant by tentative. The Chair had one thing in mind and I know a number of delegates have a different thing in mind. Now, if Delegate Sakakihara would withdraw his motion and make a motion that the first sentence of Section 2 be adopted it seems to me the purpose of the body, namely to get a vote on whether you want 25 or 21, would be accomplished. That is just a suggestion of the Chair.

FONG: I thought we voted on the number of 25 yesterday. Now is it my understanding that the Chair is now ruling that our vote on 25 was a non-entity vote, that that doesn't mean anything? That we can now revote on that question?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair's understanding was that it was a tentative vote. If the Chair is wrong he'd like to be instructed by the body.

BRYAN: I think if we're going to revote on the first sentence, then we should first vote to reconsider the first sentence and then vote on it again, if that's what would clear the air because I believe our practice has shown in here that we have voted on sections or parts of sections tentatively, the idea being that when we come to the end of the section we would vote in toto on the whole thing. On several occasions when we have adopted sections or parts of sections and at the end different delegates have had questions on previous sections, we have reopened the matter on a motion to reconsider. Even on tentative votes. We have always reconsidered in order to go back to something that was tentatively adopted. Therefore, if we are to vote on the first sentence of Section 2, we should reconsider and then vote on it again. There has to be another vote. That's my opinion.

WHITE: I'd like to ask the chairman a question. Under your interpretation of it, when would you ever get through with this section?

CHAIRMAN: When the final reading of the article is made and the committee makes its report, that was my understanding.

WHITE: What's the purpose of a vote? We take a section or we take a paragraph and we vote on it, then we pass on to the next paragraph on the theory that that reflects the thinking of the Convention on that particular thing until we get through the complete proposal; then we act on the complete proposal. But as we're going now, an action or a vote means nothing if we can continue to offer amendments to actions that are already taken.

CHAIRMAN: The difficulties the Chair is having, Mr. White, is the use of the word "tentative," which has been used throughout. Apparently it means something different that I thought the word meant.

LEE: In order to bring this to a head, I move that we reconsider our action in adopting tentatively Section 2.

DOI: I second the motion to reconsider.

SAKAKIHARA: Point of order, Mr. Chairman. I thought the Chair had ruled that we can reconsider.

CHAIRMAN: I didn't hear the statement of the delegate.

SAKAKIHARA: I thought -- oh, let it go.

CHAIRMAN: In order to get the record straight I request that Delegate Sakakihara withdraw his previous motion so we can have a vote on this question.

SAKAKIHARA: I made no motion for a previous motion, Mr. Chairman. I just raised a point of order. I thought the Chair had ruled that you cannot reconsider.

CHAIRMAN: No, the Chair had made no such ruling. It has been moved and seconded that we reconsider our action on sentence 1 of Section 2.

WOOLAWAY: Point of information, Mr. Chairman. If the vote to reconsider is lost, then the Senate still stands at 25? Am I correct?

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The Chair is in doubt. Better have a roll call. The Clerk will call the roll.

LEE: There has just been called to my attention that I am not able to make a motion for reconsideration and since I'm always trying to be technically correct, I withdraw my motion for reconsideration.

PORTEUS: The subject is now before the body. I don't think it's within the power of the delegate to withdraw it. There's been a motion, there has been a vote in which the body is in doubt and now in order to clarify the question as to how the vote went, we're now proceeding with a demand for the roll call vote.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will so rule.

LEE: That may be correct, Mr. Chairman. I just merely wanted to make my position clear. If the majority wants to let the motion stand, that's O.K. with me.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will so rule. Roll call will proceed.

Ayes, 31. Noes, 30 (Akau, Apoliona, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Crossley, Dowson, Fong, Fukushima, Hayes, Holroyde, Kido, King, Kometani, Lai, Larsen, Loper, Ohrt, Okino, Porteus, Richards, Sakai, Sakakihara, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, White, Wist, Woolaway.) Not Voting, 2 (Gilliland, Kam).

CHAIRMAN: The motion is carried.

DOI: Is it proper to move for an amendment of Section 2 at this time?

CHAIRMAN: The first sentence has been voted to reconsider.

DOI: Just the first sentence?

CHAIRMAN: That was the motion, to reconsider the first sentence. Is the Chair correct in that?

KING: Point of information, The vote to reconsider the first sentence having carried, I would feel that if Delegate Doi has an amendment that goes to the remainder of the section, there could be no objection because he's not only going to propose a different number but a different apportionment and it might expedite matters if --

CHAIRMAN: If there's no objection from the body the Chair will make that ruling. That wasn't the precise motion though. The Chair will so rule then that the entire section is open.

TAVARES: I don't like to be obstructive but earlier in this argument we were asked to vote on a question of principle among other things. One was, shall we have one district or two senatorial districts on Oahu and we were expressly asked to vote on the matter of principle so we wouldn't have any more arguments about wording on that. Now, are we going to change that too, without reconsideration? We were asked to do one thing to avoid this trouble, then we still have the same trouble. I think that it's not open, at least to that extent, because we voted on the matter of principle for the express purpose of avoiding - -

J. TRASK: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order.

J. TRASK: There is nothing before the floor of the Convention. The movant, Delegate Doi, made a motion to amend. It was not duly seconded.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule that the interpretation of the motion was that the first sentence was reconsidered. Thereafter at the suggestion of President King the Chair made its ruling that it would apply to the entire sentence [sic]. Now if the body is not in accord with that ruling, we can go back and the Chair will reverse itself. I was trying to expedite it in accordance with the wishes of Delegate King.

KING: I merely made a suggestion but I feel that those who have raised the point of order gave that as correct and the amendment should be to the first sentence of Section 2 only, as the only matter before this committee.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will so rule. What has been moved and voted to reconsider is the first sentence.

LEE: I move that we reconsider the action taken on the other sections in Section 2.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we reconsider the remainder of Section 2.

FONG: Point of order. I understand that Delegate Lee was on the losing end of that reconsideration motion and therefore he cannot ask for reconsideration.

CHAIRMAN: The point of order is well taken.

KING: Another point of order. The remaining part of Section 2 was not before the Committee of the Whole. No action was taken on it.

ARASHIRO: To conform with the rule and the request from Delegate Trask, I move that we adopt Section 2, then we'll be in order.

PORTEUS: I wonder whether this would be acceptable to the gentleman from the island of Hawaii who wishes to put the subject before this Convention as to the number in the Senate. We have reconsidered our action on adopting 25. The question will be clean cut as to whether it will be 21 or 25 - - pardon me, I think the amendment that was being proposed this morning was 19 - - or is it 21? - - then back to 21. Under those conditions I think it would be a reasonable portion of the debate to have the gentleman offering the amendment explain that if his motion for 21 carries, how he intends to apportion the 21 among the various districts. Then we can argue that point later and I am sure that he can tell us the scheme he has in mind and I think we can get at it.

CHAIRMAN: I think the Chair was in error a moment ago. When we reconsider the first sentence of Section 2, it seems to the Chair now just a matter of simple arithmetic, you've got to consider the rest of the section. Otherwise you wouldn't have enough senators to go around. If you reconsider the first sentence of Section 2, then that wouldn't add up to what is contained in the remainder of the sentence. Therefore, the ruling of the Chair is that the remainder of the section is open.

PORTEUS: I think the Chair is correct on the addition. I don't agree with the chairman insofar as the scheme of senatorial districts is concerned. Your numbers will total more than 21. But the matter has been settled more than once with respect to senatorial districts.

CHAIRMAN: I agree with the delegate. The Chair will so rule as to the division of the island of Oahu. That has been voted on and will require reconsideration.

DOI: Am I correct in assuming then that the number of the Senate is subject to amendment as well as to the distribution of that particular number, but not as to the division of senatorial districts?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will so rule.

DOI: In that case, at this time I would like to move to amend Section 2, first line, by deleting the word "25" and inserting in lieu thereof the number "21". And on the second page, first line, first senatorial district, island of Hawaii reduce the number "seven" to "six"; and in the second senatorial district, reduce the number "five" to "four"; and in the third senatorial district, reduce the number from "five" to "four"; and the fourth senatorial district, reduce the number from "five" to "four;" and in the fifth senatorial district keep the number "three" as is.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second to the amendment?

ARASHIRO: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 2 be amended in the following respects: second line of the sentence, "21" in lieu of "25"; first senatorial district "six" instead of "seven"; second senatorial district "four" instead of "five"; third senatorial district "four" instead of "five"; fourth senatorial district "four" instead of "five"; fifth senatorial district "three." Is there any discussion? Are you ready for the question?

FONG: May I ask the movant a question?

CHAIRMAN: You may address your question to the Chair.

FONG: What is the proportional representation of the island of Oahu at the present time in the Senate? The percentage.

CHAIRMAN: Will the movant or Delegate Heen answer that question?

NIELSEN: I can answer it. The outside islands would have 61 and 7/13.

FONG: That didn't answer the question.

WOOLAWAY: I believe it's 40 per cent as it now stands.

FONG: At the present time, 40 per cent. With the Senate set at 21 with Oahu receiving only seven, what is that percentage? Does Oahu win, lose or do we come out equal?

DOI: Mr. Chairman, correction, Oahu gets eight in this deal.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment was four for the fourth district and four for the fifth district as the Chair gets the amendment. They would have a total of eight, Delegate Fong.

FONG: My question has not been answered, Mr. Chairman. Do we lose in percentage on Oahu or do we gain in percentage or do we retain our 40 per cent?

BRYAN: The percentage goes from 40 per cent to 38 point -- I think it's .15 but I can't remember exactly.

FONG: In other words, Oahu will lose some more in percentage. Is that correct?

SILVA: Mr. Chairman, the exact figure is six-tenths of one per cent.

CHAIRMAN: What is that figure again?

SILVA: Six-tenths of one per cent.

CHAIRMAN: Will be lost by the island of Oahu?

NIELSEN: I'd like to correct that.

RICHARDS: I have to disagree with the delegate from the island of Hawaii because it is approximately a two per cent loss, just under two per cent.

CHAIRMAN: Is an accountant in the delegation that can give us the figure here? It's a simple matter.

NIELSEN: The exact percentage is that Oahu would lose one and seven-thirteenths per cent.

CHAIRMAN: Does that answer your question, Delegate Fong?

FUKUSHIMA: Correction please, 1.99.

BRYAN: I think this can be put on -- The easiest way to answer this is that Oahu loses six-tenths of one senator.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no further debate, the Chair will put the question. All those in favor of the amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The Chair is in doubt.

DELEGATES: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: Will Madam Clerk please call the roll.

Ayes, 23. Noes, 39 (Akau, Apoliona, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Crossley, Dowson, Fong, Fukushima, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Kauhane, Kido, King, Kometani, Lai, Larsen, Lee, Loper, Noda, Ohrt, Okino, Porteus, H. Rice, Richards, Sakai, Sakakihara, Shimamura, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, J. Trask, White, Wist, Woolaway, Yamamoto, Yamauchi.) Not Voting, 1 (Kam).

CHAIRMAN: The amendment is lost.

FONG: I move that we adopt sentence one of Section 2, not tentatively.

AKAU: I second that.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we adopt sentence one of Section 2. Are you ready for the question? All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it.

LOPER: I move that we adopt the second portion of Section 2.

LAI: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we adopt the remainder of Section 2. Is that the motion, Delegate Loper? Are you ready for the question? Is there any discussion?

J. TRASK: Is that tentative?

CHAIRMAN: No.

AKAU: Will you kindly have the Clerk or somebody read how the first senatorial district reads, all the words in those three lines, please?

CHAIRMAN: First senatorial district, the island of Hawaii, seven. No change from the committee proposal.

NIELSEN: Now that there has been a definite decision to split Oahu in two senatorial districts, I feel that the consideration on the Big Island should be taken up, as undoubtedly when many of them voted against splitting the Big Island it was for the reason that they were on record and wanted to be on record not to split Oahu. Now those maps up there are quite deceitful as to scale because if you scale the island of Hawaii the same as you do the fifth district it would be bigger than that whole blackboard. To give you some relative --

CHAIRMAN: Do you have a motion, Delegate Nielsen?

NIELSEN: Well, I'd like for someone, in fairness to West Hawaii, to present this.

H. RICE: I am in order. I move for a reconsideration of the island of Hawaii senatorial districts.

KAWAKAMI: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the senatorial districts on the island of Hawaii be reconsidered.

NIELSEN: May I talk now? We have the cost of running for election in West Hawaii as we have to cover 383 miles.

SILVA: Point of order. You have to put the motion first for reconsideration before you can debate the subject.

CHAIRMAN: You are quite right. The Chair is in error. Are you ready for the question? All in favor of reconsidering the senatorial district of the island of Hawaii signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it. Proceed, Delegate Nielsen.

NIELSEN: We have to look at this on a basis of a constitution and not political finagling or chicanery, or some of the words attached thereto. Now, you've got people of the fifth district, when you run I don't suppose you have to cover over a hundred miles; the fourth district is only 78 square miles. We have 2,234 square miles in West Hawaii with a 383 mile trip to make to be elected and we don't have the wealth there. We don't send up here any wealthy senators or wealthy representatives from West Hawaii. Those kind of people just don't live down there. We have to live on climate—we've got a lot of that.

Now, I think in all fairness to West Hawaii, to give us a little break, instead of having to travel around the entire island and also to guarantee that that great geographic belt will have some senators up here in the future that we should consider giving two senators to West Hawaii and five to East Hawaii. Now, I'm not hoggish in that because we have 55 per cent of the area of that island. We have a community that may grow some day. I doubt that it will grow very much if Pele keeps up her erupting because she's taken acreage out in the hundreds of acres—several thousands this last shot she took at us—but we do really need consideration of our problem insofar as splitting up the two districts.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Nielsen, would it not be better to make your motion so we, the committee know what your motion is in regard to districting? I didn't want to interrupt your train of thought but it might --

NIELSEN: I move that we divide the Big Island of Hawaii into two senatorial districts making the first one have five, which is East Hawaii, and the second district, two.

YAMAMOTO: I second that motion.

NIELSEN: I'm not going to talk very long because we've been over this once, and I think that due to the fact that we have a change now in Oahu and have split the fourth and fifth districts that we are ready for consideration of the Big Island's problem. Anyone who says that West Hawaii is well represented and has been, all they have to do is come down there and drive our one-way roads, where you're taking your life in your hands many times a day, as against any other part of the island. I say that without fear of contradiction. So far as water, you just get what God gives you in your tank back of your home in Kona and that goes for all of Kona. You don't have any water system. In fact you sometimes think living over there that the good Lord just wants to let us live on fish and poi and drink brackish water. But we do have something to sell the tourists and we do want to get some representation up here in the Senate so that we can develop that back country as the playground for all of Hawaii and I'll appreciate kokua on the motion.

HEEN: Will the last speaker yield to the question?

NIELSEN: Surely.

HEEN: Will two guaranteed senators bring water to Kona?

NIELSEN: Well, it would certainly help because we can build a little bigger fire up here when we do come up to the session.

SILVA: I have made my stand clear on that; I have made my stand clear on Oahu the other day; and surely just because Hawaii's excuse that not knowing of Oahu's intent to divide into two senatorial districts that some of the members of this Convention had changed their minds, they had to start somewhere. If they did not start with Hawaii they would start with Oahu. By the same token if they started with Oahu then those on Hawaii could say, well we didn't know you were going to divide, therefore I'd like to reconsider my action because of this division. I thought that was made very plainly. But I would like to state at this time that the majority of the island of Hawaii and I were amazed and surprised to find the good Senator Harold Rice from Maui, trying to see what he can do for Hawaii by cutting us up into two, had seconded the motion by a delegate from Kauai. I think when the fifth district's turn comes, I think we'll have a few of our boys trying to cut up Kauai, too. I would like to make this point very clear that a majority of this group, I'm not saying how many, have gone on record I think, sometime back - -

SERIZAWA: Point of order.

SILVA: I am speaking against the motion.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order.

SERIZAWA: The motion to reconsider has already been passed.

CHAIRMAN: The point of order is not well taken. The delegate is speaking against the motion.

SILVA: I am speaking against the question of division. I am very much in order. Just to please the delegate I'll call myself out of order if it makes him happy.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no further discussion, the Chair will put the question on the division of the senatorial representation in the island of Hawaii.

SAKAKIHARA: I demand a roll call.

CHAIRMAN: Is a roll call demanded? The Chair will rule that there's not enough showing here for a roll call. Sufficient? The Clerk will call the roll.

KAM: Will you please state the question?

CHAIRMAN: I didn't get the statement, Delegate Kam.

KAM: Will you please state the question?

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the motion of Delegate Nielsen to divide the island of Hawaii into two senatorial districts, one and two; the first senatorial district to have five in the Senate and the second to have two. Is that correct, Delegate Nielsen?

NIELSEN: That is correct. West Hawaii would have two.

Ayes, 33. Noes, 29 (Apoliona, Ashford, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Crossley, Doi, Fong, Gilliland, Holroyde, King, Kometani, Lai, Loper, Luiz, Lyman, Ohrt, Okino, Porteus, Richards, Sakakihara, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, White, Woolaway, Yamauchi, Anthony). Not Voting, 1 (Larsen).

CHAIRMAN: The motion is carried. Delegate Bryan's recognized.

BRYAN: Now that Oahu and Kauai have divided Hawaii, I move that we approve Section 2, as amended.

WOOLAWAY: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 2, as amended, be approved. Are you ready for the question? All in favor - - Delegate Arashiro.

ARASHIRO: I wish to change the word on the thirteenth line from three to four.

CHAIRMAN: The thirteenth line of what?

ARASHIRO: The second page of Proposal 29.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair doesn't understand your motion.

ARASHIRO: On Proposal 29, page 2 on the thirteenth line, where there is the word "three" to change to "four."

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule that is out of order. The Chair will now put the question. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor - -

KAUHANE: Since we have reconsidered the action taken as to the division on the island of Hawaii I would like to amend, if permitted to do so, the language appearing in Proposal 29 on page 2 with reference to the third senatorial district.

PORTEUS: Point of order. I think it requires a vote to reconsider on that matter.

KAUHANE: It requires a vote to reconsider? I so move, Mr. Chairman. I move that we reconsider the action taken.

PORTEUS: Point of order. I think that the gentleman who is making the motion voted in the minority on that matter and is not in a position to make the motion.

KAUHANE: But I thought your ruling was, Mr. Chairman, when you stated that all matters under reconsideration of Section 2, first paragraph, where you stated that the whole thing is open. Basing your ruling to be the rule of the Convention I thought that I am in order now to ask for an amendment be made on the third senatorial district that the language should be changed, basing your ruling that the remainder of Section 2 is now open for discussion. Am I right or wrong?

CHAIRMAN: That was the Chair's ruling. I'd be glad to be informed by Delegate Porteus on the point of order.

PORTEUS: Mr. Chairman, in the matter of the question of 25 or 21 senators the vote was finally put on the motion to reconsider. This matter was discussed at some length yesterday, voted on and disposed of. It requires another motion to reconsider on this particular matter as there was a requirement of the motion to reconsider with respect to the number in the Senate. The difficulty is if we don't move along in this matter, if this rule is not adhered to, then we are going to keep going over and over and over again.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair wants to adhere to the rule, but what is the point of order?

PORTEUS: The point of order is that this matter was set yesterday. It takes a motion to reconsider, to have it reconsidered, to open it up, and it also requires somebody that voted in the majority to make the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will so rule. Unless you voted with the majority, Delegate Kauhane, your motion is now out of order.

KAUHANE: Mr. Chairman, I am only basing my attempt to have that language changed on your own ruling, when you reversed your second ruling. The Chair has made two rulings, the second one was to this effect; the Chair has reversed his ruling and that motion taken is on the first paragraph only. You later made a further ruling that the remaining portion of Section 2 is still open for discussion. That being so, Mr. Chairman, on the motion - -

SILVA: To expedite matters, Mr. Chairman, I voted in the affirmative yesterday and I so move we reconsider our action.

KAUHANE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we reconsider the action in regard to the districting of the island of Oahu.

KING: I'd like to make a point of order that such a motion is a second motion to reconsider. This is the second motion to reconsider. Rule 39 I believe forbids such action. If the Chair will turn to Rule 39.

CHAIRMAN: Rule 39 provides that "When a motion for reconsideration is decided, that decision shall not be reconsidered, and no question shall be reconsidered twice." It is the ruling of the Chair that this motion to reconsider is out of order.

KAUHANE: I rise to a point of order. Yesterday, Mr. Chairman, the motion for reconsideration was on the amendment offered by Chuck Mau which was pertinent to the main question as contained in Proposal 29 which we are now considering. The main question that was put was amended when Chuck Mau offered his amendment, so the reconsideration was taken on the reconsideration of the adoption or rejection of the amendment offered by Chuck Mau. That being the case, the ruling I believe holds true only to the main subject matter, that it cannot be reconsidered twice. The motion for reconsideration was on the amendment that was offered by the delegate from the fifth district in amending the main subject matter.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kauhane, I think that's incorrect. I've got before me Delegate Mau's motion. Reads as follows:

Third senatorial district: that portion of the island of Oahu, lying east and south of Nuuanu Street and a line drawn in extension thereof from the Nuuanu Pali to Makapuu Point, five;

____ senatorial district: that portion of the island of Oahu, lying west and north of the third senatorial district, five.

The Chair's understanding is that was voted on first and it was carried. Then there was a motion to reconsider and the motion was carried. Then the proposed amendment of Delegate Mau was voted down.

KAUHANE: I am still on the point of order. I feel I am entitled to defend my position on the question that is now being raised. I say that the motion on the adoption of the Chuck Mau amendment was to the main subject matter as contained in Proposal No. 29 of the majority committee report. We voted to adopt that. A reconsideration was asked on the adoption of the amendment that was offered which is a part of the general or the main subject, so that was lost but the main subject matter was not lost. So the reconsideration is on the main subject matter, not on the amendment that was offered by Chuck Mau, so we are still in order to demand a reconsideration of the main subject matter which is before this Convention.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that he must rule that you are out of order and would be glad to take an appeal if you think the Chair is in error.

SILVA: To expedite matters, I withdraw my motion.

MAU: I was just going to remark - -

CHAIRMAN: To what purpose do you rise, Delegate Mau? The motion has been withdrawn.

MAU: I was about to make a motion to suspend Rule 39 for the purpose of reconsidering this matter. Before I put that motion I was going to remark that Delegate Silva is a gentleman and a scholar and I congratulate him and take my hat off to him to permit the minority to get a chance to say something on this floor. I move for the suspension of Rule 39 in order to consider this subject matter posed by Delegate Kauhane.

KAUHANE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved by Delegate Mau and seconded by Delegate Kauhane that we suspend the rules in order to permit reconsideration on this matter. State your point of order.

BRYAN: If we knew the amendment that was going to be proposed on this we might know whether it was pertinent to that which had been reconsidered yesterday or not. We don't know exactly what the amendment is. It may be that it's not pertinent to what was reconsidered yesterday and it would save suspending the rules and reconsidering the vote if we knew that now.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair's understanding is that the purpose of the motion is to suspend the rules to permit reexamination as to the question of the districting of the island of Oahu. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion is lost. The Clerk will call the roll.

WIRTZ: I understand the question before the floor now is the adoption of the rest of Section 2. Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. The motion on the adoption of the remaining language in Section 2, the first sentence having been adopted, is now before the house, the remainder of that section.

WIRTZ: I asked that question because I now would like to have the Clerk read us the rest of that section in the amended form.

CHAIRMAN: To expedite matters, the only amendment has been on districting the island of Hawaii into two districts, one having five senators and the other having two. Does that answer your question, Delegate Wirtz?

WIRTZ: Yes.

MIZUHA: Point of information. What are the geographical divisions of the island of Hawaii that we are voting on at the present time to classify West Hawaii and East Hawaii?

CHAIRMAN: Will you answer that, Delegate Nielsen? You're the author of the motion.

NIELSEN: Well, the geographical division is the North and South Kohala, North and South Kona, Kau, those sections in West Hawaii will be known in the amendment as the second senatorial district. All that blue portion on the map plus all that where the four is, that is West Hawaii.

CHAIRMAN: The Clerk will call the roll. Was a roll call demanded on this?

AKAU: Are we voting then on the statement that appears in the second, third, fourth and fifth senatorial districts as it appears now?

CHAIRMAN: In the committee proposal, as amended by Delegate Nielsen's amendment, dividing the island of Hawaii into two districts of five and two.

KING: It is understood, of course, that the other senatorial districts will be renumbered.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. All those in favor - -

KAUHANE: As far as voting on the adoption of the proposal as amended, I am going to take a position to vote against the proposal on principle. I feel that the fifth district, having the greatest area and the greatest number of population should not absorb any more additional population by the inclusion of Kailua and Waimanalo into that portion of the fifth district that it today embraces. I feel that the fifth district if it's going to absorb the population of Kailua and Waimanalo as part of the present fifth district setup, then we are entitled to more senators than we are getting today, or which is being attempted, to lay out for the fifth district. I feel that if, as expressed by the members during their deliberation on this matter before the committee, that they were somewhat kanalua about dividing Oahu because those who ran for the office of senator in the last election admitted before the committee which was considering Committee Proposal No. 29 that it took the vote of the fifth district to elect them as senators. That being so, we who run in the fifth district feel that we have sufficient votes in the present fifth district to elect representatives and senators from the present fifth district. But if an attempt here is being made to have the fifth district absorb additional population by the inclusion of Kailua and Waimanalo, then certainly we are entitled not to four or five senators as is being proposed, we should be entitled to at least - - if five, we should be entitled to seven senators. We are justified in requesting the additional senators from that what is proposed by the committee present.

KING: With all due tolerance in the world, I do believe I have to make a point of order. The gentleman is speaking out of order. He may get up and explain his vote and may be against the pending motion, but we are no longer discussing the merits of it.

CHAIRMAN: I agree with you. We have passed the stage of debate, Delegate Kauhane. I think you have adequately explained your position on the vote.

KAUHANE: I don't think I have, but if it is the ruling of the Chair that I should be shut off from further clarification, then I shall abide by the ruling of the Chair.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will give you another 30 seconds. The Clerk will call the roll.

Ayes, 40. Noes, 23 (Akau, Arashiro, Corbett, Doi, Heen, Ihara, Kam, Kauhane, Kawahara, Kawakami, Kellerman, Lee, Mizuha, Phillips, C. Rice, H. Rice, Roberts, Sakai, Serizawa, A. Trask, Wirtz, Yamamoto, Anthony). Not Voting, 0.

CHAIRMAN: The motion is carried.

LAI: I move for a short recess.

NODA: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: If there is no objection, the Chair will declare a short recess.

(RECESS)

C. RICE: Now that we have decided on 25 senators let me point out that it will take 17 senators to over-ride the Governor's veto.

DOWSON: I now move for the adoption of Section 2, as amended of Committee Proposal No. 29 on a permanent basis.

LAI: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 2, as amended, be adopted. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it. Carried.

We are now on Section 3.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of Section 3, first paragraph down to the words "follows."

NODA: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the first paragraph of Section 3, Committee Proposal No. 29, down to the words "shall be as follows" be adopted. Are you ready for the question? Is there any debate on this? Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it. Carried.

BRYAN: I would like to move the adoption of the remainder of Section 3. Perhaps some of the delegates would like to take up the districts individually, but we'll have a go. I move the adoption of the remainder of Section 3.

NODA: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the remaining provisions of Section 3 be adopted.

HEEN: In order that the members of the Committee of the Whole may more intelligently consider the contents of Section 3 I would like to read the report of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions upon that Section 3:

> Section 3 fixes the number of members of the House of Representatives. It further describes the 18 representative districts from which the members of the House will be elected. As the descriptions of some districts are necessarily long, they will be included in the schedule of the Constitution, but are nevertheless to be considered as a part thereof. The number of members to which each of these districts will be entitled until reapportionment is based on the number of voters registered in each district in 1950.

From a very early point in your committee's deliberation on the question of apportionment and reapportionment of the House of Representatives, your committee was unanimous in its decision to apportion the members among the several major island divisions on a realistic basis and in accordance with the principle that representation should be as nearly uniform as possible.

One of the reasons why the reapportionment directed by the Organic Act was not carried out was because that act required reapportionment on the basis of citizen population. A breakdown of the population according to this standard has not been locally available. Total population figures for the territory are shown by census tracts which do not necessarily coincide with locally defined areas. As a practical matter, the number of registered voters was found to bear a reliable and fairly uniform relationship to total population, although it favors slightly the neighbor islands where the percentage of persons who have registered to vote is from one to two per cent higher than for Oahu. It was in recognition of the potential difficulty in obtaining figures which would show citizen population, or figures which would show total population by desirable districts, that the basis for reapportionment of the members of the House was chosen as the number of registered voters.

A majority of the members of your committee was of the opinion that the present representation enjoyed by the neighbor islands should not, at least for the present time, be decreased. With a 51 member House apportioned equally among the several major island units, the present representation is maintained, although the representation for the island of Oahu is increased from 12 members to 33 members.

The cost to the state of a legislature, with a 51 member House and a 25 member Senate, was discussed at some length by your committee incident to the question of having biennial or annual sessions of the legislature.

Some of the members of the committee felt that this larger size would, on a cost basis, make it inadvisable to provide for annual sessions; however, the majority of the members of the committee felt that the state could afford to have both a large legislature and annual sessions.

At this point Delegate Bryan, Chief of Staff of the Committee on the Legislature, will take over.

BRYAN: I didn't know that this honor was going to be bestowed upon me. I had intended to merely to act as a flunky in order to point out the districts. I believe that the districts are rather adequately defined in the committee proposal and as shown on the board, and I would ask if there are any questions as to where the division lines come or any questions as to districts, I would be very glad to point them out.

ASHFORD: May I address a question? I would like to ask a question relative to the throwing together of Lanai, Molokai and Lahaina for two. Was that to put them on a parity with Central Maui or East Maui? I had thought that Molokai and Lanai were going to be thrown together and that is why I am interested in Lahaina.

BRYAN: I think the delegate from Maui, Delegate Woolaway, can answer that.

WOOLAWAY: The total registered voters on the island of Molokai is 1,400, Lanai 610, so that if you just combined those two islands you would have a registered total voters of 2,000. Wailuku and East Maui both have a total number of registered voters of 5,600 and 4,200, so throwing Lahaina in with 1,500 additional votes would bring that area up to 3,500 or near comparable to Wailuku or East Maui. Then if I am not mistaken -- What are the least number of registered voters in any one district based on—2,300 or something near that figure?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will have some one answer that. Will you answer the question, Delegate Bryan?

BRYAN: The idea among other things was to make the districts as nearly equal population—wise as possible and by this means we arrived at the figures of the fifth district: Molokai, Lanai and Lahaina at 3,865; Hana and Makawao, which is the seventh district, 4,706; and the Wailuku area, 5,592; and that division was made in order to make the three districts as nearly equal as possible. Now, there was one other point in doing that, Mr. Chairman, and that was that should the population shift drastically either from or to one island we did not want the district so small that they would not be entitled to at least one representative and so we tried to make the districts large enough so they would be entitled to at least one and preferably two. Does that answer your question?

ASHFORD: It seems to me, we have been given a little the edge. Of course, it makes it a little difficul for campaigning to have to go to Lanai first, and then we have to travel all the way to Lahaina, but I can see that we got a little advantage having it like that.

CHAIRMAN: "We from Molokai," is that it, Delegate Ashford?

ASHFORD: No, we from the extreme rural districts.

HOLROYDE: To further enlighten the delegate from Molokai, 2,445 voters qualify you for one representative, so you would not quite qualify if you took just Molokai and Lanai together.

AKAU: May I ask a question please? I have heard Delegate Heen give an explanation and I read it previously. Now, I would like to ask this, has there been any formula set up, a ratio so that the people between now and ten years hence when we are going to have another meeting of the Constitutional Convention that there will be something to go by, some guide? I notice that the ratio varies as Mr. Bryan has just stated. Is there any particular ratio or formula automatically speaking that will work itself out so that we won't ever have this difficulty again?

BRYAN: Yes, there is. It is not a ratio. If we were to take a ratio of one representative for every 3,000 or 2,500 persons, if the population should double, the size of our House would double. Therefore, we have adopted the formula used by the Congress of the United States which is known as the method of equal proportions. It operates much in the same manner as the method of equal fractions. You take the size of your House and divide it into the total number of registered voters—this is not the process of equal proportion but it is the end that it reaches—and that gives you your ratio. If you have 137,000 voters, I think we used for a base, divide that by 51 and you get 2,400 so actually you come out with one representative for every 2,400 people.

The method of equal proportions goes at it in a little different manner because if you go by major fractions you sometimes would end up with a 52 member House or a 50 member House rather than a 51 member House. The method of equal proportions gives every district one member first and then it sets up a priority list which shows which district would be next entitled to a representative, and as you progress when you get to the 50th number, you have 50 members assigned to different districts. The last district, the one that is most entitled on the basis of their population to another representative, gets the 51st member. It is a mathematical formula, very practical and very usable for this particular purpose. Does that answer your question?

AKAU: It answers my question partly, but - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Bryan, the Chair would like to ask you a question. Does this proposal fix the number of delegates for a given area but permit within that number the reapportionment depending on changes in population? Is that what you have done here?

BRYAN: Yes, we have. It goes a little further than that, however, Mr. Chairman. In using the method of equal proportions, it is a two step method. First, it is divided on the basis of equal proportions among the islands so that each island would be assigned so many representatives on the basis of equal proportions. Then again on the basis of equal proportions those representatives are divided among the districts on that island, so that it goes through a process of two steps. As far as automatic reapportionment is concerned, that's covered in Section 4 and it provides that the method of equal proportions shall be used for reapportioning every ten years.

LUIZ: I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I would like to know the reasons why you have the 12 and 13 on Oahu split right through School Street.

HEEN: I think we ought to leave that up to later on, when we get down to the several districts. By reading the report on Section 4 you will see how the method of equal proportions is applied. On page 8:

> Section 4 sets out the method and the procedure for automatic reapportionment, and involves two steps, both of which have been spelled out. Step one is to take the total number of members of the House and to apportion those members among the four major island divisions (which have been defined as "basic areas") on the basis of the number of registered voters in each division. Step two is to take the number of representatives to which each basic area is entitled and to further apportion those members among the several representative districts within each basic area as those districts are defined in Section 3. This second apportionment is also based on the number of registered voters. The result of this procedure is to achieve what is deemed to be the most equitable distribution of members among the several representative districts. The mathematical process, known as the method of equal proportions, is the identical method used in apportioning the members of the United States House of Representatives among the several states (55 Stat. 761-2; 2 U.S.C.A., 2a, 2b) and has been proven by expert mathematicians to result in the least possible discrimination.
> The initial apportionment, as set out in Section 3, maintains the present neighbor island representation in the House. However, there is no guarantee that upon reapportionment any area or district will continue to be entitled to elect the same number of representatives. Should the number of registered voters in any district, for example, drop in proportion to the number of registered voters in the State as a whole, the number of representatives to which that district would be entitled would be proportionately less.
> It was not deemed advisable by your committee to provide for complete redistricting of the State at the time of each reapportionment. To obviate the necessity for periodic redistricting, representative districts were fixed in such manner that it appears highly improbable that any district in the next few decades will not be entitled, on the basis of registered voters, to elect at least one representative. Should, however, the number of registered voters fall below the number which would logically entitle it to elect a representative, provision is made for the redistricting of the basic area within which such district lies . . .
> The duty for effecting reapportionment and such redistricting as might be necessary has been placed on the governor. In order to assure that this duty, which is of a ministerial nature, will actually be carried out, the governor has been made specifically subject to mandamus by the Supreme Court. This is the only way in which a constitution can guarantee reapportionment and is consequently the method considered by this committee to be the most desirable.

I might state that the Committee on the Legislature was unanimous in adopting this principle of apportionment and reapportionment on the basis of the method of equal proportions.

LEE: Will the speaker yield to a question? Will the Delegate state that the committee, however, was not unanimous in the number?

HEEN: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: Any further questions on the apportionment in the House of Representatives?

SHIMAMURA: If amendments are in order now I would like to make an amendment. On page four, line two, I move, Mr. Chairman, that after the words "upper Nuuanu" insert "and Kapalama," and on the third line after the word "schedule" insert the words - - under the captions "Twelfth representative district" and "Thirteenth representative district," delete the word "three" and insert the word "six" on line three and delete all of the fourth, fifth and sixth lines on that page.

MIZUHA: I second the motion.

BRYAN: I would like to point out to Delegate Shimamura that under the method of equal proportions, as you change the districts you sometimes change the relative priority of the district. By combining those two districts, under the method of equal proportions you would have five representatives instead of six.

SHIMAMURA: I have amended it so that the proportional representation remains the same, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Does the explanation lead you to wish to withdraw your motion, Delegate Shimamura?

SHIMAMURA: No, Mr. Chairman, because I have amended "three" there to read "six" so that the representation remains the same. On all of the districts there, all of the representative districts run from the sea to the mountains or from the mountains to the sea, and it's only in upper Nuuanu and Kapalama that they have been arbitrarily cut like that. I think it should conform to the rest of it so that the twelfth and thirteenth districts shall be one.

HEEN: If we followed the method of equal proportions, that total number of six may not come out that way; it may come out with five. So we should decide I think at this point whether or not we are going to stick by the method of equal proportions. If we stick by that, then if Delegate Shimamura would like to have those two districts combined into one, they may be combined but let the method of equal proportions determine how many representatives shall represent those two districts combined.

CHAIRMAN: It seems to make sense to the Chair. Did you get what Delegate Heen said, Delegate Shimamura?

SHIMAMURA: No.

MAU: No, I don't, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask what difference there is in the fifteenth representative district which would go into the fourth and which includes Manoa and Waikiki from the mountain to the sea. How does that differ?

CHAIRMAN: Can you answer that, Delegate Heen or Delegate Bryan?

BRYAN: I think that maybe the basic question here is why in the fifth district do we have smaller districts and in the fourth district, larger districts. Is that correct?

MAU: It's like a crossword puzzle. You have got only one representative district in the fifth that's cut in two. There's no other baby like that on the whole map.

BRYAN: I can give you an explanation for that. This line here dividing the twelve, fourteen and thirteen is the old division of the fourth and fifth districts. In the fifth district, as we know it now, all of the new representative districts were broken into smaller parts. In rural Oahu we have three representative districts with two representatives apiece, and in urban fifth district we had three districts with three apiece. In other words, that was a more or less of a uniform distribution in the old fifth district. The members of the committee from the fourth district said that they thought it was more proper to have larger districts in the fourth district and the fourth district was broken up in that manner. We tried in districting to let the members from the various districts more or less decide what they wanted. For instance, on the island of Kauai, the representatives from the island of Kauai said that they would rather have one district than to have three districts or four districts, so you notice that the island of Kauai is one district. The representatives from the fifth district said that they would like to have districts with approximately two or three, and as nearly uniform as we could make it. We have two for the three districts in rural fifth district and three for each of the three districts in urban fifth district.

CHAIRMAN: As the Chair understands it, all that Delegate Shimamura's motion is is to combine the thirteenth and twelfth representative districts without changing the number of representatives. Am I in error on that?

BRYAN: You are correct. I would like to point out why you sometimes gain or lose by doing that. For instance, let us assume that District 12—to make it simple we will go to the basis of a major fraction—if our denominator is 2,400 voters District 12 may be entitled to two and a little over half, so we give them three; and District 13 may be entitled to two and a little over a half, so we give them three. When you combine them together they just equal to five. It's a case of two and one half we make it three, two and a half and we make it three, put it together and you have five. Does that answer your question?

CHAIRMAN: It doesn't answer mine. Is that a mathematical result of a combination? Would it result in giving the combined area a greater representation?

BRYAN: The combined area gets a lesser representation.

J. TRASK: I would like to ask Delegate Bryan how does that compare with the fifteenth representative district with both the combination of Manoa and Waikiki. Would you be getting more representation if you combine both or less? The fifteenth representative district—by combining both Manoa and Waikiki as one representative district I notice that they have six representatives. How does that compare with the twelfth and the thirteenth?

BRYAN: To answer that question I think we have to do a little research on the method of equal proportions. It is possible that by dividing that you might lessen your representation and it might be that by dividing that you would gain representation. We would have to do some research to find out. I might say that in picking these districts the committee did consider very many possibilities and with the aid of the Reference Bureau got the figures on how many representatives each district would have under certain conditions. It is also true that by cutting this district in half either this way or this way, you may add a representative to this one or you may add a representative to Koolau. You can't tell; you have to look at the whole island as a unit in changing your districts.

J. TRASK: What are the number of registered voters in the fifteenth representative district?

BRYAN: 15,593.

J. TRASK: And what would be the registered voters in the twelfth and thirteenth representative districts?

HOLROYDE: 6,552 plus 6,815.

J. TRASK: What was that figure again?

CHAIRMAN: Approximately 13,000 in the combination.

FUKUSHIMA: It is well and good to speak about equal proportions here, but I believe for those who are not members of the Legislative Committee, we don't have the figures, we don't know why this is split up in this fashion. I would like to find out from the chairman of the committee whether he has a graph or a chart prepared so that the other delegates can study this intelligently. We are just groping in the dark.

HEEN: I think yesterday there was laid on the desk of the Oahu delegates a map showing the division of Oahu into representative districts. I might point out here while we were on the districts number twelve and thirteen that according to Mr. Dodge of the Reference Bureau those two districts were combined and under the method of equal proportions, the number of representatives for those two districts combined would be five and the one that's lost would go over to the Koolau district.

KAUHANE: May I ask a question? Mr. Chairman, may I ask the chairman of the committee a question? The question that I would like to raise is this. Are we following the method of cutting up the district the same as we had in the Constitutional election?

HEEN: I don't quite get the question.

CHAIRMAN: The question is whether or not this is based on the same as the election for this Constitutional Convention?

HEEN: No.

KAUHANE: As far as the fifth and fourth districts are concerned.

HEEN: Only I think in the case of the twelve and thirteen an attempt was made to follow the Constitutional Convention.

J. TRASK: Might I add, Mr. Chairman, I notice that the country districts - -

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute. Delegate Kauhane has the floor. If you want to wait until he is finished.

KAUHANE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Proceed, Delegate Kauhane.

KAUHANE: I am waiting for an answer. I think these people are getting into a huddle there.

HEEN: Mr. Bryan, who is more familiar with the fifth district, tells me that the fifth district was divided that way, the same as was required for the election of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention.

KAUHANE: Now, we go back to the same question that I raised. The fourteenth representative district, what combination of precincts is that with respect to the election held for the Constitutional Convention? What combination would that be?

CHAIRMAN: What was your question again, Delegate Kauhane?

KAUHANE: I would like to know, the fourteenth representative district, what combination would that be if they have followed out the election method where the delegates to this Constitutional Convention were elected?

CHAIRMAN: You mean what combination of the election of the delegates to this convention were elected?

KAUHANE: That is right.

BRYAN: District marked 14 here is not in the fifth district and it didn't follow the districting used for the Constitutional Convention. I think if you want to see how these districts fall together, if you will look on that map before you, it will show you the lines of demarcation used in the Constitutional Convention and the lines of demarcation used under this method here.

KAUHANE: According to this map here, it is not spelled out clearly to clarify the provisions of Committee Proposal No. 29.

CHAIRMAN: I think your point is well taken. The Chair will have that explained. Will you please explain the map on the desk of the Oahu delegates, chairman of the committee or Delegate Bryan?

BRYAN: The heavy dotted lines show the division used for the election in the Constitutional Convention. The letters within the circle are the combination designations. The small numbers within the circles are the precinct numbers and the light dotted lines are the precinct boundaries. The purple lines are the lines drawn to conform with the districting that is described in our appendix as proposed for the island of Oahu.

CHAIRMAN: Is that clear, Delegate Kauhane? Do you have anything further to ask?

KAUHANE: Yes, I cannot tie in the fourteenth representative district with the map here. It says here, "that portion of the island of Oahu known as Pauoa and more particularly described in the schedule, five representatives." According to the map here, we have the setup of the division whereby the delegates to the Constitutional Convention were elected by combinations of precincts. We have purple lines dividing combinations of precincts P, Q and R. Would that mean the fourteenth representative district?

BRYAN: The fourteenth representative district as proposed by the committee, if you will start on your map up there under the O with precinct 27, the fourteenth representative district would include all of precinct 27 of the old fourth district, precinct 26 of the old fourth district, precinct 16, precincts 25, 24, 23, 22, 21, 20, 19, 18, 32, 17, most of 11 and part of 12. If you follow the purple line it should be clear.

KAUHANE: I think we can get along very well. I think I have been helped by the Secretary.

CHAIRMAN: Any further questions?

HOLROYDE: It might be helpful for the delegate also if he follows that with the schedule which is Committee Proposal 30, which gives the definite boundaries of these sections.

CHAIRMAN: The descriptions of the districts are contained in Committee Proposal No. 30, Delegate Kauhane, if you will examine that.

ASHFORD: Is this an appropriate time to offer an amendment to the fifth representative district provision?

CHAIRMAN: If you wish.

ASHFORD: I therefore move, Mr. Chairman, that the third paragraph on page 3 of Committee Proposal No. 29 be amended by substituting therefor two paragraphs to read as follows: - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is in error. I believe we still have a matter to decide on, the motion of Delegate Shimamura, unless he has withdrawn that, for a combination of the twelfth and thirteenth representative districts. Do you wish to withdraw?

SHIMAMURA: No, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: You wish to vote on that?

SHIMAMURA: Yes.

FUKUSHIMA: I don't think we can vote intelligently on Delegate Shimamura's motion. I would like the committee to point out what the equal proportion is. We have talked about it for half an hour and I still don't know how many representatives we have to how many registered voters.

CHAIRMAN: You want them to go into the arithmetic of how they arrived at this, Delegate Fukushima?

FUKUSHIMA: If we don't do that we can't vote intelligently on anything here when we have any amendments.

HOLROYDE: In setting up these districts, after they were set up under your rule of equal proportions, each district is first assigned one representative. From then on a priority - -

CHAIRMAN: I have been trying to get order. Will the delegates please take their seats?

HOLROYDE: After these districts are established and agreed upon, each district is thereby assigned one representative. Mathematically from then on a priority list is made up, the district with the highest priority getting the next representative for his district, and then it goes right down the line until the full quota of representatives has been exhausted. In this case the island of Oahu, the whole thirty-three. Now if it would be helpful to the group, we could ask Mr. Dodge to work up that list of priorities on these districts as they stand. However, once you change the boundary of a district and change the number of registered voters, you have to re-figure your priorities to know exactly what it means.

MIZUHA: Before we go into that, as a delegate I would like to know how they arrived at the various districts and the boundaries first, before we go into the question of priorities. Who determined where the lines should be on these various portions of the map of Oahu?

CHAIRMAN: Will you answer that, Delegate Bryan?

BRYAN: I think the only thing to say that could be very truthful was that we were arbitrary. We allowed each member to make his suggestion as to where we should gerrymander, or whatever you want to call it.

FUKUSHIMA: On that hypothetical, arbitrary equal proportion, you have on the island of Kauai 6792 registered voters, and you give Kauai four representatives. Then we come to the districts of Koolauloa and Koolaupoko, there are 6,242 voters - -

MIZUHA: I rise to a point of personal privilege.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair can hear without you raising your voice.

MIZUHA: I beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman. The previous speaker is in error. Kauai has about 8,600 registered voters, not 6,500.

BRYAN: 8620.

CHAIRMAN: Take a note of that, will you, Delegate Fukushima.

FUKUSHIMA: I added up what Kauai has and perhaps I am wrong, but all I see is from this last Constitutional Convention - -

CHAIRMAN: I think you can rely on the Kauai delegation to be accurate on their figures.

FUKUSHIMA: [Part of statement not on tape.] Then in Koolaupoko you have 6,720 registered voters; 6,242 and there they are entitled to only two representatives. How does the equal proportion work there?

BRYAN: Mr. Chairman, may I answer that? There are two reasons for that. One is that we are short of one representative in the House. If we had fifty-two members Koolau would get the fifty-second member. If you take the fifty-first member away, I've forgotten, some district loses one. So that some district or several districts that are just on the edge of getting another one but don't quite get it. Then there is another point which should be remembered. In applying this method in the two-step fashion-which was referred to as the fox trot in the committee—in applying it by islands first, each island gets its basic representation before the districts on that island have been considered at all. In that manner you can see that you can't compare the island of Kauai with the districts on Oahu. If you want to make a comparison let's compare the whole island of Oahu with the whole island of Kauai.

J. TRASK: I move for a short recess, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no objections the Chair will declare a short recess. The clerks have been working pretty long here.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The committee will please come to order. It is now 4:20 and the Chair would suggest that we might rise at this point, if somebody would make such a motion.

HEEN: I move, Mr. Chairman, that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

J. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it.

JUNE 30, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole will come to order.

ASHFORD: Yesterday I offered an amendment to the fifth representative district. I think there was under discussion at that time some other representative district, but I will ask for the consideration of the Committee of the Whole of this amendment at this time, since one of the Maui delegates is going to have to leave shortly.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Ashford, will you hold that for just a moment? The chairman of the Legislative Powers Committee wishes to make a brief statement and I will recognize you immediately after that for the purpose of your amendment.

HEEN: As the record will show there was a minority report, the Standing Committee Report 102, that was filed with the Clerk, and attached to that report is an amendment to the Committee Proposal No. 29, insofar as Section 3 is concerned, that being the apportionment of the House of Representatives. I did not call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to that matter yesterday as I thought that we would go through the preliminary study of the method of apportionment and reapportionment. However, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have it understood that whatever is done in connection with the majority report, that that will not eliminate consideration of the minority report. That has been the procedure so far.

CHAIRMAN: That is the understanding of the Chair, unless there is some objection.

PORTEUS: I hope we don't get into one of these round the robin propositions as we did yesterday because of misunderstanding as to exactly what we have done.

CHAIRMAN: I don't think there will be any misunderstanding. When we vote on something it will be not tentative and will require reconsideration. What Delegate Heen is asking is leave to present the majority proposal and at a later date, without foreclosing a consideration of his minority report. Otherwise he will have to introduce an amendment right now.

PORTEUS: That is the point I wish to make, Mr. Chairman, was that yesterday there was a motion made to accept the first sentence and that passed, and we don't want to introduce any greater element of confusion. Now that was not on a tentative basis as I understand it. It was proposed and it was passed. Now I don't wish to foreclose the chairman of the committee from being able to present his ideas—if he does wish to present them that is fine—but I think after the lesson we had on Section 2, the motion on the first sentence of Section 3 was for a flat adoption. So I want to keep the record straight now, rather than waiting and arguing about this later. Then if the chairman wants to introduce this other proposition, why we can reconsider our action and decide whether to go into this question of 41 or 43 or whatever else it is.

HEEN: I would like to have this situation cleared and clarified. My position is this, whatever action is taken on the majority report even to the extent of approving the committee proposal in regards to Section 3, that that will not foreclose the consideration of the minority report. Otherwise, I would have to present that now, upon receiving recognition from the Chair, as an amendment to the provisions of Section 3 as contained in the majority report.

FONG: I hope we will not get into the same mess we got in the other day. If we are going to consider the majority report with the understanding that the minority report will be reconsidered later on, we are really voting on nothing. Now, I think the better thing to do is to let the chairman present his minority report and then it is up to this assembly to adopt the minority report or the majority report. There is no use just in discussing the majority report and we vote on that and then say, "Well, that doesn't mean anything, now we can vote on the minority report," and vote all over the same question. Now it seems to me that if there is a minority report, the minority report should be presented at this time.

CHAIRMAN: May I ask the speaker, it is feasible to have both reports before the body at the same time?

FONG: And then we can discuss it. If amendments are to be made to one report or the other, well let's make the amendment and vote on it.

LEE: I would like to state that as to other majority reports and minority reports, if I recall, we considered the majority report first—and I have a distinct recollection as to the Committee on Initiative, Referendum and Recall—so that all the action taken in respect to the majority proposal was taken tentatively. But since it was adopted in the sense that the minority proposal, when it was presented, was voted down, you still achieve what you sought to do in the first place. If we are to consider both of them at the same time now, we would be reversing our procedure heretofore established. I have no objection personally either way, but we should have an understanding as to what we are doing.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair recalls that Delegate Nielsen had an amendment in regard to Initiative and Referendum when we first dealt with the question of the majority report and he was not foreclosed. Now, whatever way the body wants to handle it, is of course agreeable to the Chair.

KING: Yesterday we passed the first paragraph of Section 3. That states that the number of representatives of the House of Representatives shall be 51 members. The minority report starts right off by fixing the number at 41. If we are to wade through the rest of Section 3, and argue about the reapportionment of those 51 members between the islands and between the smaller representative districts, and then go back and consider the minority report, we would have wasted the whole forenoon or afternoon. It seems to me that if Delegate Heen wishes to bring up his minority report now, he should bring up the first paragraph of the minority report as an amendment to the first paragraph of the majority report.

CROSSLEY: I don't think there is any question as to the procedure. I think that if the minority has a different idea than the majority, that it would be handled in the same way that we have handled all the others in the Committee of the Whole. I am thinking now particularly of the Judiciary where the minority, without even having filed a report, made their position known on the elective judges versus the appointed judges, and as each of these sections come up, where the minority is in opposition of course to the majority, they make their amendments at that time. So that the actions that we take are in themselves final. That is the only way we are ever going to get through this report.

HEEN: Well, if that is the case then I'll offer the amendment that is contained, or rather that is attached to the Standing Committee Report 102 as an amendment to Section 3 as proposed by the majority report and then we can go along from that point on. Then I would ask for reconsideration of that paragraph one for that purpose. I am sure that the majority does not want to foreclose the minority from debating the problem.

KING: As one who has voted on the affirmative on the first paragraph of Section 3, I will make the motion to reconsider the action taken in approving the first paragraph of Section 3.

CROSSLEY: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we reconsider the action taken yesterday on the first paragraph of Section 3. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary.

HEEN: In order that the debate may be carried on intelligently, I think it is appropriate at this time that we have an explanation made as to that method of equal proportion by Mr. Dodge of the Legislative Reference Bureau. After we get that cleared in our minds, then I think that we can proceed much more rapidly, if that is agreeable to the members of the committee.

WIRTZ: I might point out to the committee, if I may, that there is no disagreement in the committee. There was no disagreement at all as to the method of reapportionment. The only disagreement is as to the number, so I concur with the chairman's suggestion that we have this preliminary explanation of the principle of equal proportion so that the Committee of the Whole can understand all amendments that might be offered.

HEEN: That is correct. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is on the desk of every delegate a statement entitled: "Apportionment and Reapportionment by the Method of Equal Proportions." This statement was prepared by Mr. Dodge of the Legislative Reference Bureau and, in order to appreciate the explanation made by Mr. Dodge, every delegate should have that statement before him or before her and in that way probably follow a little more easily the explanation that is to be made by Mr. Dodge. I now move, Mr. Chairman, that Mr. Dodge be allowed to speak to the members of this Committee of the Whole and to explain this statement which he has prepared.

CHAIRMAN: I was wondering if you would hold that. I understand Delegate Ashford has a fairly short matter, and some of the Maui delegation want to leave, and she'd like to get that before the body. If you'd hold your motion.

ASHFORD: In the minority report there is provision for the separate representation for Molokai and Lanai. In the majority report we are thrown in with Lahaina and given two representatives. I therefore wish to present an amendment to that, the sixth, seventh and eighth paragraphs of Section 3 of Committee Proposal No. 29, to read as follows, and the amendment is on the desks of the delegates. I will move for the adoption of that amendment.

Substitute for the 6th, 7th and 8th paragraphs, of Section 3 the following:

"Fifth representative district: the islands of Molokai and Lanai, one representative;

Sixth representative district: the islands of Maui and Kahoolawe, five representatives."

Renumber the subsequent representative districts to conform."

ST. SURE: I second the motion.

ASHFORD: May the amendment be taken up paragraph by paragraph?

KING: I really don't see how we can possibly undertake the consideration of this amendment. We moved for reconsideration of our action on the first paragraph of Section 3. This amendment goes to the latter part of Section 3 and, as pointed out by Delegate Ashford, would not be applicable if the minority report is accepted in place of the majority report of Section 3. So, with all due respect to the lady delegate, I feel that the motion to amend a section that is not before the delegation is not in order.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair was just trying to facilitate the convenience of the delegate from Molokai.

WIRTZ: Might I add this thought, as expressed by the movant, that regardless of what, whether we accept the majority or the minority report, this amendment will fit in. The majority report divides Maui into three districts as shown on the map. The minority report divides Maui into two districts in accordance with this amendment, and this amendment is being made to the majority proposal. So that if the Convention later adopts the minority proposal, this will fit right in.

CHAIRMAN: Did you hear the explanation, Delegate King? Are you agreed with that explanation?

KING: I don't know whether it is possible to take up an amendment to a matter that is not before the Committee of the Whole.

HEEN: As I understand it, the idea was to have this amendment placed in the record without acting on it now, because one of the members of the Maui delegation is leaving before we perhaps reach that point. In other words we can defer action or defer consideration of this proposed amendment until it comes up in regular sequence.

CHAIRMAN: I will entertain a motion to defer Delegate Ashford's amendment.

NIELSEN: As I understand, it doesn't make any difference whether we take the amendment to the whole article in Section 2 [sic] or the minority report. Maui still gets six representatives, so it's just a question of who and where they are placed, so it shouldn't make any difference. If Maui wants it, why we ought to give it to them.

ROBERTS: I have one or two alternative suggestions to make. I have opposed the use of the motion to table, but a motion to table is perfectly proper to put on the table until we want to consider it. It would, therefore, be in order to table Mr. Heen's motion and take up the suggestion made by the delegate from Molokai or, on the alternative, to move to defer Mr. Heen's action until such time. I would therefore move, Mr. Chairman, to defer - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts, the Chair will advise you there is only one motion before the body, namely, the motion of Delegate Ashford, and the question is whether or not we are going to act on that.

PORTEUS: Mr. Chairman, the difficulty in this situation, I believe from the point of view of those who are not on Maui, is that if we have a House of 51, we know that Maui is entitled to six. We know under the scheme as presented by the Committee that two go to a certain area, two to another and the balance to the remainder of Maui. The difficulty is, however, that we don't know whether the number, as recommended by the minority report, may be a House of 41. If it is a House of 41, Maui will not get six votes. Now if Maui does not get six votes then your distribution is going to be different, and those are at a disadvantage, it seems to me, who wish to support the majority report. It's all right from the point of view of the minority who say, give one representative to Molokai and Lanai and let all the rest run at large. That's fine, it's clear cut, but it puts those at a disadvantage who wish to preserve the districts because they don't know how many people are going into a district and they can't make the proper argument until they know what the number in the House is going to be.

CHAIRMAN: Is it your position that this motion is out of order at this time, Delegate Porteus?

PORTEUS: It seems to me that the motion is out of order and that there is no disposition I'm sure to prevent anyone from Maui from having a vote, and we can vote on this at the very end after we have dealt with all the rest of the districts in this section.

HEEN: I now move that consideration of the amendment proposed by Delegate Ashford be deferred until later.

HOLROYDE: I'll second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that consideration of Delegate Ashford's motion, relating to the districting of Maui, be deferred until a later date. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It is carried.

SILVA: I just want to get this straight. Was it deferred to a later date or a later hour? You said "later date." Now, "later date" means after today.

CHAIRMAN: Later time.

HEEN: I renew my motion that Mr. Dodge be allowed to explain the statement that was prepared by him.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Dodge, will you proceed with the explanation.

BRYAN: I would like to preface his remarks by saying that I think it is very much in order that we hear from him. It took the committee at least three hours to understand it themselves.

HEEN: I'd like to amend that, it took about ten days.

MAU: If the standard that is being used, known as the equal proportions, is so difficult to understand, why adopt such a standard? Why don't we use some other standard?

CHAIRMAN: It is a statutory standard contained in the United States Code and maybe the witness will enlighten the body. That is why he is called here, Delegate Mau.

Will you proceed, Mr. Dodge.

DODGE: I'd like to point out to the body that I don't think it is going to take hours to explain this. It took me about eight hours to understand it. Delegate Bryan said that the committee understood it in three. I hope it is boiled down now so that the delegates can understand it in 15 minutes.

As the chairman of the committee pointed out, there is on the desk of each of you an explanation, not only of the method of equal proportions, but the reason why that method was chosen.

Now, it starts with an objective that you try to reach when you make an apportionment of any body. That objective is to have each member of that body representing as nearly as possible the same number either of voters or of people or whatever standard you are using. Now if we start out with a House of 51 members, theoretically each member of the House would represent 2,445 registered voters because the total number of registered voters divided by the total number of members of the House results in a quotient of 2,445. Now there wouldn't be any problem at all if each district that was to elect a member had a population of registered voters that was always an exact multiple of your quotient, and there are figures that illustrate that in the second section of the explanation under the heading "The Problem." There I have given as a total population of registered voters for the four islands certain figures. I worked those backwards so that they had to come out in exact multiples, but if the County of Hawaii was always at a fixed population of registered voters of 19,560, and similarly if the total registered voters of the territory was always 124,677, you would never have any difficulty because 2,445 would go into those numbers equally, with no remainder. Neither would you have any problem if the total membership of the body of the House was exactly equal to the number of districts from which you were going to elect the members, and each district would be entitled to one member. You have no problem of apportionment then, because each district is entitled to but one member and you don't have any left over.

The problem does arise when you add to the total membership of the body an additional member which is over and above the number of districts or counties in the territory or the new state. Then if your House has a total of four members, then Hawaii, Maui, Kauai and Oahu is entitled to one member, then you wouldn't have any problem of apportionment. The problem arises when you have a House of one more, or a House of five. To which basic area, or to which county, should that one additional representative be allocated? Progressively on up the scale from five members to six, on up to 51. In each instance, when you add an additional member to the total membership of the House, you have the problem of which district is most equitably entitled to have that representative from that district.

Now getting on to page 2 of the report. The problem exists in using simple methods because they don't always work out. I have illustrated that by showing that when you divide the actual number of registered voters in each of the basic areas by the quotient of 2,445, the quotient that you then get, the number of representatives, are fractional representatives. For Hawaii it is 8.37 representatives, for Maui it is 5.79 and so on. Now it is merely coincidence that with a House of 51 and the present population of registered voters, the distribution among the four basic islands comes out to the same as the committee proposal under the method of equal proportions. It is also only coincidental that the total membership of the House after you add up the individuals comes to 51.

I point out in here that a single positive example of a method does not mean that that method will in all cases be valid. But a single negative example will prove its failure and I prove the failure of the simple method of doing this by assuming slightly different figures for total registered votes. On Hawaii, I have assumed that instead of 20,468 which they actually have, that that island have 20,780. Your quotient that then results is 8.499, not quite 8.5, not quite a major fraction; so you can't round it to nine members, you have to leave it at eight, then you drop 4.99 -- or .499 members. Similarly with Maui. Assume a slightly different registered vote, and again 5.499 is the answer. You can't round it to six it must stay at five. The same situation with Kauai and Oahu. Now you round those to the nearest whole number and you come out not with eight, six, four and 33, but you come out with eight, five, three and 33 and you add those up and you get a total membership of 49. You wanted to get 51, so you're immediately faced with a problem that must be settled rather arbitrarily. You have two extra members of the House to apportion. Which of those four counties is going to be entitled to it? They all have precisely the same remainder and so the allocation of one of the two members to any one district must necessarily be arbitrary.

By the same token if you take straight percentage, of course you arrive at the same figure that is shown here by the ratio because the ratio is actually an expression in a different way of a percentage. So you get the same result there, and if you use a straight percentage figure there will be times when you will round to the next higher number in all cases and come out with the House totaling 52 or 53. Then you have to decide where you should put -- from which district you should take away a member. You might come out with 49 and then you have to decide which district gets an additional member.

It is for this reason that these simple methods will not always give you the answer you want, will not always solve the problem. Expert mathematicians have come up with these series or a number of different methods of apportionment. Now all of these methods, and the method of equal proportions is one of them, is a method that permits you, in all cases, no matter what the figures, to come out with the answer that you want to get, in all cases with the House of 51 or in all cases with the House of 49. You have no fractions left over. You are not faced with the arbitrary decision of to which district should an additional member go.

Now to restate the problem -- we're on page 3 now. Under what conditions would it be fairer to assign an additional representative to basic area A, for example Hawaii, in preference to assigning an additional representative to basic area B, or Oahu. Similarly when you get down into representative districts, under what conditions would it be fairer to assign a member to—well, the committee yesterday was discussing the twelfth district—under what conditions would it be fairer to assign members to the twelfth instead of an additional member to the eighth district over in the Koolau area. Now that is the thing that the method of equal proportions and the method of major fractions and several others, each of which uses a priority list of numbers, that is the solution offered by those methods.

Now it gets a little involved from here on in. Whenever there is a difference, and of course you're going to have a difference between the various districts as it was pointed out in the first pages of the report, all your districts are not going to be of equal multiples of your basic quotient. There's going to be differences; you're going to have fractions, fractional parts, less than half a ratio, more than half a ratio left over, so whenever there is a difference—and you are always going to have them—that difference is the least when it is measured in terms of its relation to the

APPORTIONMENT AND REAPPORTIONMENT

BY THE METHOD OF EQUAL PROPORTIONS

AN EXPLANATION

THE OBJECTIVE: To apportion the total membership of the house of representatives so that each member will represent as nearly as is possible the same number of registered voters.[1]

For a house of 51 members the objective would then be:

$$\frac{124{,}677 \quad \text{(total number of registered voters, 1950 Constitutional final election)}}{51 \quad \text{(total number of members of house)}} = 2445$$

or: each member representing 2445 registered voters.

THE PROBLEM: There would be no problem if the total membership of the house was set at 4 and each county was entitled to 1 member.

The problem arises when the house is increased in membership from 4 to 5, and, progressively, from 5 to 51.

Stated simply, the problem is: which county is most entitled to each of the additional members of the house?

Even then there would be no problem if each county had and would continue to have a population of registered voters which was an exact multiple of 2445. Thus, if the population of registered voters in each county were:

Hawaii	19,560
Maui	14,670
Kauai	9,780
Oahu	80,685

then the number of members each county would be entitled to elect could easily be determined by simple division:

$$\text{Hawaii} \quad \frac{19{,}560}{2445} = 8.0$$

$$\text{Maui} \quad \frac{14{,}670}{2445} = 6.0$$

$$\text{Kauai} \quad \frac{9{,}780}{2445} = 4.0$$

[1] Registered voters happens to be the basis for apportionment decided upon by the Committee. The explanation throughout would, however, be equally applicable if the basis were to be total population, citizen population or number of votes cast in any given election.

Similarly, there would be no problem in determining the number of members the respective representative districts would be entitled to elect if, within each county, the number of registered voters in each district were and would continue to be equal to exact multiples of 2445. Simple division would achieve the result desired.

But, the problem exists because the membership of the house is to be larger than 4, and each county does not have a population of registered voters in an exact multiple of 2445, nor do the several representative districts within each county.

To illustrate:

Hawaii $\frac{20,468}{2445}$ (registered voters) = 8.37

Maui $\frac{14,163}{2445} = 5.79$

Kauai $\frac{8,620}{2445} = 3.525$

Oahu $\frac{81,426}{2445} = 33.30$

When the results are rounded to the nearest whole number, the number of members for each island, coincidentally, is 8-6-4 and 33, and the total membership is equal to 51.

A single positive example does not establish the validity of a method, but a single negative example, either actual or hypothetical, will suffice to demonstrate its failure. By merely assuming slightly different numbers of registered voters, the failure of the above simple method is immediately apparent.

Assume:

Hawaii $\frac{20,780}{2445}$ (registered voters) = 8.499

Maui $\frac{13,445}{2445} = 5.499$

Kauai $\frac{8,555}{2445} = 3.499$

Oahu $\frac{81,905}{2445} = 33.499$

Rounded to the nearest whole number, the result is 8-5-3 and 33, and the total membership is equal to only 49.

Two members must be added somewhere to bring the total to 51. But which district is most entitled to an additional member? Each has precisely the same fractional remainder.

A straight percentage will give a similar result, and will not always yield the desired answer.

Consequently, the solution of the problem necessitates some method the use of which will assure that the total number of members will be apportioned among the several areas so that, at no point, nor under any assumed set of figures, will the assignment of members depend on arbitrary action, but will in each instance result from the application of a predetermined, unchanging standard.

THE SOLUTION--THE METHOD OF EQUAL PROPORTIONS:[2]

The problem restated: Under what conditions would it be fairer to assign an additional representative to basic area A in preference to basic area B? Similarly, under what conditions would it be fairer to assign an additional representative to district 8 in preference to district 12?

Whenever there is a difference between the population of registered voters in any two areas, or between the number of voters that the members elected from those areas represent, that difference is the least when measured in terms of its relation to the smaller of the two numbers.

In mathematics, the relative difference between two numbers is measured by their geometric mean.

Hence, the method of equal proportions uses the following processes of computation:

> Area A deserves an additional representative when its population of registered voters, divided by the geometric mean of its present assignment of representatives and of its next higher assignment of representatives, is greater than the population of registered voters of any other area divided by the geometric mean of the present assignment to such other area and its next higher assignment.

In order to compute the relative claims of each area, or representative district, a priority list is prepared. The figures for the priority list are obtained by dividing the number of registered voters of the area by the geometric means of successive numbers of representatives.

The geometric mean of two numbers if equal to the square root of their product, thus, for area A's 2nd representative, the computation is:

$$\text{Priority No.} = \frac{\text{No. of registered voters}}{\sqrt{2\,(2\text{-}1)}}$$

[2] Actually, any one of several methods which make use of a priority list will solve the problem. The method of equal proportions has been chosen because it is the one which gives the most equitable distribution of members among the districts, and because it is the method used in Congressional apportionment.

and for its 3rd representative:

$$\text{Priority No.} = \frac{\text{No. of registered voters}}{\sqrt{3\,(3-1)}}$$

Applied to the county of Hawaii:

$$\text{Priority No. for Hawaii's 2nd representative} = \frac{20{,}468}{\sqrt{2\,(2-1)}}\text{, or}$$

$$p^2 = \frac{20{,}468}{1.414{,}213{,}6}$$

$$p^2 = 1447$$

for its 3rd member:

$$p^3 = \frac{20{,}468}{\sqrt{3\,(3-1)}}$$

$$p^3 = 835$$

and for its 4th member:

$$p^4 = 590.$$

Applied to the county of Maui:

$$p^2 = \frac{14{,}163}{\sqrt{2\,(2-1)}}$$

$$p^2 = 1001$$

and $p^3 = 578.$

Listing the priority numbers in sequence to determine, as between Hawaii and Maui which is most entitled to its second and its third representative:

Priority No.	County	Number of Members
1447	Hawaii	Its 2nd
1001	Maui	Its 2nd
835	Hawaii	Its 3rd
590	Hawaii	Its 4th
578	Maui	Its 3rd.

Following is a listing of the priority numbers for each of the four basic areas. Because each basic area is initially entitled to 1 member, the size of the house begins at 4, and it is the assignment of the 5th and subsequent members that is determined by the priority list.

smaller number. That is the relative difference as distinguished from an absolute difference. Now in mathematics the relative difference between two numbers is the least when measured by their geometric mean. If you want to get the least absolute difference, you use the arithmetic mean, but the least relative difference is the one that gives you the most equitable proportion. The method of equal proportions is based on the geometric mean which gives you that least relative difference, and it is for those reasons that the method of equal proportions uses the following computation.

Now in all cases this is the process of computation that is gone through. Area A deserves an additional representative—that's an additional one to what it now has, if it now has four, it deserves a fifth, if it now has three, it deserves fourth, and so on—when its population of registered voters divided by the geometric mean of its present assignment, for example, four, and of its next higher assignment, for example, five, is greater than the population of registered voters of any other area divided by the geometric mean of that area's present assignment of representatives and the next higher assignment to that area. In other words, assume you have two members from each island, now when is Island One going to be entitled to its third member before Island Two is going to be entitled to its fifth or sixth member? The priority list determines that procedure.

Now, in order to compute the relative claims of each of these basic areas you use a priority list, and the priority list is determined by dividing the number of registered voters of each basic area in the initial step of the apportionment or by the number of registered voters in the district in the second step of apportionment, by the geometric mean of successive numbers of representatives, that means by the geometric mean of two and three, of the geometric mean of three and four, of the geometric mean of five and six, and on up to Oahu 32 and 33. Now the geometric mean of two numbers is equal to the square root of their product. Thus for example, in Area A's representation the computation is that the priority number is equal to the total number of registered voters in that area, divided by the geometric mean which is expressed at the bottom of page 3 by the square root of -- the product of two successive numbers and for -- There is an error.

HEEN: That word "if" --

DODGE: Should read "is."

HEEN: -- should read "is."

DODGE: "Geometric mean of two numbers is." There's a typographical error there. Well, for the priority list for a third representative for any given district then, you take the total population of registered voters and you divide that by the square root of the next highest sequence of numbers, the product, the geometric mean.

Now, let's apply that to the island of Hawaii, for a specific example. The island of Hawaii becomes entitled to its second representative -- Well, I'll put it this way, the priority number that determines when Hawaii is entitled to a second representative is arrived at by dividing the total registered vote on Hawaii, 20,468, by the geometric mean of the product of two times two minus one or its increase from one member to two members. That priority number is 1447. Now for its third member, the same computation is gone through except that you use the geometric mean for the next higher successive number and the geometric mean --, I mean priority number for Hawaii's third member is 835; for its fourth, it is 590. Now, applied to the county of Maui, for its second member its priority is 1,001; for its third member it's 587.

Now when you get these individual priority numbers for your various districts, all you do is merely list them in sequence; that is illustrated by this little part set off in brackets here. To determine just as between Hawaii and Maui, which is first entitled to its second, and which is first entitled to its third and so on, you list the priority numbers without regard to county, but with regard only to relative sequence; in order, listing down 1447, 1001, 835, 590, and 578. And Hawaii, therefore, has the highest priority number for being entitled to its second representative so it first becomes entitled to that. The priority number for Maui for its second is higher than the priority number for Hawaii for Hawaii's third member, so Maui gets its second member before Hawaii gets a third. Hawaii has a higher priority number for both its third member and for its fourth member than Maui does for its third, so they get the next two representatives and the following one goes to Maui.

There is on page 5 the tabulation of the priority list made up for the territory as a whole based on 1950 registered vote of the Constitutional [Convention] final election, assuming four basic areas, each county as one area and, of course, each county being basically entitled to one member. So your problem is when you increase the membership from four to five which island, which basic area, is entitled to that fifth member. The priority list determines that, and if you notice that by adding the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth members to the House, Oahu, because it in each case has the highest priority number, becomes entitled to its second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth members. When you get down to the total size House that you want to get, 51 members, down near the bottom of the page, the last county that became entitled to a member, or the county that became entitled to the fifty-first member that is added, is Kauai, and that becomes Kauai's fourth member. As shown, you can pick out the figures for the other islands. Hawaii becomes entitled to its eighth member when the House is increased from 45 to 46, Maui to its sixth when the House is increased from 47 to 48, Oahu its thirty-third when the House is increased from 49 to 50.

Well, that is the system for the initial apportionment of the number of representatives of the House among the several basic island units. Once that is done and once you get the answer of eight for Hawaii, six for Maui, 33 from Oahu, and four to Kauai, you repeat the process by apportioning those members for each island among whatever representative districts you have established on that island, and you do it in precisely the same mathematical manner. You take the total population of registered voters of each district, divide it by the geometric mean of the next higher successive numbers and you get a priority number. You do that for each district and you list those priority numbers in sequence and that determines which district is most entitled to that additional member.

On the left, on page 6, which isn't numbered, on the last page of the report, on the left side of the page is a table which shows the apportionment of members on Oahu in accordance with the representative districts that were agreed upon by the committee. You notice that that starts at the eleventh member because there are ten representative districts under that scheme. Delegate Shimamura's suggestion yesterday to consolidate two districts means that you have not ten representative districts among which to apportion the members but nine, and so your problem comes down a little sooner as to who gets the tenth member, not who gets the eleventh but who gets the tenth one, and therefore you have one more member to apportion between the representative districts. Now those two tables, the one on the left being the apportionment among the districts as determined by the committee, the one on the right being in accordance with the proposal made yesterday, are shown. Now under that system the apportionment that was suggested in the committee proposal is arrived at. Two for Koolau, two for Wahiawa and Waialua and so on.

Under the proposal suggested by Delegate Shimamura, consolidating the two districts changes the sequence in which the priority - - well it changes the priority number for that district and it changes the sequence in which that priority number will fall in the priority list. That is the reason why it drops from a divided representation of three for each district - - or six, to combined representation of five and why that other member, that sixth one, goes all the way over the ridge to Koolau because Koolau becomes, under this method, more entitled to that additional member than does the Nuuanu area. Now if you'll also notice that if Oahu would be entitled to thirty-four members, Delegate Shimamura's suggestion would achieve six for that district; whereas if the committee proposal is taken and the House is increased for Oahu to thirty-four, then the Koolau area becomes entitled to it.

Well, that is the method of equal proportions. It is the method used by Congress, as the chairman of the Committee of the Whole has pointed out. It was chosen together with another method which measured the difference in absolute terms instead of relative terms. But in 1941, Congress amended that and now only the method of equal proportions is used.

Now in getting back to the conclusion here, the objectives that we were trying to achieve in the method of apportionment was that each member of the House represent as nearly as possible the same number of registered voters. There is a tabulation at the bottom of the page which shows how close we came to the objective. I might say this is as close as is possible to come to the objective under any system of apportionment that has ever been devised. For the state as a whole it's 1 for 2445; for the island of Hawaii as a whole it's 1 to 2559; for Maui, 1 to 2361; for Oahu, 1 to 2467; for Kauai, 2305. Now within each of those islands the representation is as shown below and they are pretty uniform. You will notice under Oahu, the eighth district, which is the Koolau area, is under-represented. It has one representative representing 3100 voters. But that's because it would be the district next entitled to have one member. Similarly you find those that are quite high on the priority list for the last representative they got being slightly over-represented, such as the Waialua-Wahiawa areas which is the ninth district, whose representatives will represent only 2000 voters. But, nevertheless, the method gets as nearly as it is possible to get the most equitable distribution when it's measured in terms of the number of people that a representative is representing. I'd be glad to answer any questions that the delegates have on this matter. It is complicated.

LOPER: May I ask a question about paragraph 3 on page 3, where I read that the difference is the least when measured in terms of its relation to the smaller of two numbers. I don't understand that because the difference between 80 and 100 is 20 and if you compare that with 80 it is 25 per cent and if you compare that with a larger number 100, it's 20 per cent.

DODGE: I knew I'd have to call for help. This that I am going to quote from is a book on Congressional reapportionment which was published by the Brookings Institute in collaboration with a number of the other expert mathematicians who know far more about relative and absolute differences than I.

C. RICE: Is that on the census?

DODGE: The Congressional apportionment happens to be on census, that's true.

C. RICE: Then I am going to bring up a point a little later. Mr. Chairman, I want to bring up this point right now. Why didn't they take the votes cast instead of the registered votes at the last election? You know the registered votes. The clerk needn't take off the absentees, the dead men or anything. You take just one district, the island of Hawaii. East Hawaii had 15,301 registered voters, only 10,901 voted. West Hawaii had 5,167 and 4,606 voted. I want to have it on the men who go to vote, the people who go to vote. You can see - - I know that they can - - if a county clerk wants to leave all the dead men on, they can leave them on the registered list, we'll have a padded list. Congress bases it on the - - PHILLIPS: Point of information. I can just barely hear the delegate. I wonder if he could speak closer to his microphone.

C. RICE: I thought I was speaking too loud. Can you hear that? I'd be very glad because I think Mr. Phillips has something along this line. According to this vote and according to the committee report, East Hawaii would have for 10,901 voters, they'd have seven representatives. West Hawaii for 4,606 voters that voted, they would have two, isn't it? You take Maui. Maui 14,163 registered voters, 11,393 voted. What do they get—six? Yet they had more voters voting than East Hawaii. You take your fourth district, you have 44,247 registered voters but 3,512 were all that voted.

BRYAN: Mr. Chairman.

C. RICE: 34,000. I'm taking this from this - -

BRYAN: Is that from the constitutional election?

C. RICE: Yes.

BRYAN: I think the question can be - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Bryan, can you answer that problem?

BRYAN: There were two questions posed. The last question was as regards the figures on those voting and those registering. In the Constitutional election, several delegates were elected outright which meant those voting in the general election - - in some precincts, nobody voted at the general election.

C. RICE: That is only on Kauai.

BRYAN: I think we have cases on Oahu where people were elected outright. They were - -

C. RICE: No.

BRYAN: - - and people didn't come to the polls because - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate King was elected outright; the Secretary was elected outright.

C. RICE: Yes, but there were other voters in those districts, they are all registered voters, and goes on the general election in the last election.

BRYAN: I wanted to - -

C. RICE: Same proportion.

BRYAN: I wanted to get to the - -

C. RICE: Same proportion.

CHAIRMAN: Will you please address the Chair and discontinue this conversation back and forth.

C. RICE: I want to show, then in the fifth district there were 37,179 voters—that's including Waimanalo, Kailua and Lanikai—had 20,102. I want to say that if you take the basis of registered votes it might be a fictitious number. Why should we apportion for the fellows that are on the list? Why shouldn't we reapportion to those people that vote, they're the ones that are entitled to reapportionment. People that don't exercise their privilege of voting shouldn't be counted.

HEEN: I think the using the basis of votes cast is not a reliable one because there are a lot of factors involved there. In one area they may not show up on account of rain and probably that's what happened over in Hawaii. Over in West Hawaii, where they have a dry climate, they all turned out; and over in East Hawaii, it must have rained pretty bad and a lot of them didn't turn up. Therefore, it is not a reliable standard to go by. There are a lot of other factors to be thought of and -- I'm addressing the Chair, but looking at the delegate from Kauai. There's only one place in the Union where they use the votes cast as a standard in determining the number of representatives and that's Arizona, votes cast for governor at the last preceding general election. No other state uses that measure. In Massachusetts it's based on the number of legal voters, which means the same thing as registered voters, both for the Senate and the House. And in Rhode Island, qualified voters, that method is used for the apportionment of the members of the Senate; in Tennessee they use qualified voters, both for the Senate and the House; and in Texas, qualified electors for the Senate.

I might add that we had to resort to some official figures in order to use as a basis for apportionment and reapportionment, and the only official figures that we can rely on is the registration of voters as kept by the various clerks of the various counties. We cannot use population because there's no method under which we can use the federal census to show how many people live in these ten districts, say, on the island of Oahu. You can't tell how many of those are citizen voters in these various districts. Therefore, we have to resort to some method where you could get official figures.

C. RICE: I still say that the people that vote are the ones that ought to be counted.

CHAIRMAN: I think you've made your point, Delegate Rice.

C. RICE: I don't want to take you any longer. I haven't spoken very much on this floor and I resent you calling me down and trying to shut me off.

CHAIRMAN: I didn't intend to call -- I'm quite sure the delegate didn't mean that. I'm just saying that you've made your point clear. You made it clear to the chairman.

NIELSEN: I wanted to take exception to the fact that the weather was the reason for the voting in West Hawaii. It is the Americanism that we practice and preach over there.

LARSEN: I would like to urgently ask the delegates if they would give up some of the bickering about one or two and think about 51. It seems to me this committee deserves a tremendous lot of credit. They have gone through a tremendous job; they went for weeks and weeks; they have done a good job; it's a mathematical job. We can't suddenly throw it out of kilter here and it seems to me we ought to give them full credit for it and I would like to make the motion that we accept this method of equal proportions as worked out by the committee, and if we do that it seems to me we won't be bickering about a little here and a little there.

HEEN: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we adopt the method of -- accept the method of equal proportions as proposed and recommended by the committee.

MAU: I want to ask whether there is any difference between the Congressional method and this method. I understand that this method is provided for in the Constitution of the United States.

CHAIRMAN: No, by statute, Delegate Mau.

MAU: By statute? What is the difference between that used by Congress and that used by the committee?

DODGE: No difference.

CHAIRMAN: The answer is no difference.

MAU: I understand that there is an essential difference, that Congress uses population as a basis, and they're using here, registered voters. I am wondering whether or not that does make a difference in the working of this complicated method.

CHAIRMAN: We would like to have an answer from somebody who has those facts.

ROBERTS: The report prepared by the committee indicates in a footnote that "Registered voters happens to be the basis for apportionment decided upon by the committee. The explanation throughout would, however, be equally applicable if the basis were to be total population, citizen population or number of votes cast in any given election." I would like, Mr. Chairman, to speak in favor of the motion for the use of --

MAU: Mr. Chairman, I believe I still have the floor.

CHAIRMAN: I believe not, you asked the question.

MAU: And it was not answered to me until just now. Delegate Roberts was the one who answered the question. I accept that answer. But I --

CHAIRMAN: You rose to ask a question and your question has been answered, Delegate Mau. In the meantime the Chair has recognized another delegate.

ROBERTS: Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the delegate from --

CHAIRMAN: Very well, Delegate Mau.

MAU: I wonder if the gentleman who has been explaining this complicated method this morning would explain how Wahiawa, Ewa and Waialua have been arranged under this method. I don't have it in the sheet that was passed around to the delegates. This here ends with combination X under the Constitutional method of selection of delegates.

PORTEUS: Point of order. I understood the motion to be the question of equal proportions, which was the subject matter to which I thought Delegate Roberts was prepared to address himself.

CHAIRMAN: The point is well taken. Will you address yourself to the motion, Delegate Mau?

MAU: I think it is directly on the point. If I don't understand how they have arranged it and it is arranged under this method, how it works in various precincts, I would not know how to vote.

CHAIRMAN: The vote can be made on the method of adoption without reference to any map. The Chair will now recognize Delegate Roberts.

ROBERTS: The procedure suggested of equal proportions is a perfectly rational and easy method of application. The problem which some of the delegates are facing however seems to tie on to other problems, the problem as to where the lines are drawn in each of the districts and the question as to whether or not it ought to be on the basis of total population or on the total number of votes cast. I think this procedure used by the committee is a fair one and can be applied, and I therefore urge that it be adopted. I would indicate, however, that even though we adopt the equal proportions method I would feel free to discuss the question as to whether it should be on the matter of registered voters, votes cast or on a basis of population.

C. RICE: I hate to speak too often - -

CHAIRMAN: You're one that has not offended in that respect, Delegate Rice.

C. RICE: On page 5, this proportion would not have to be changed at all. You turn to page 5, where you say on the fourth line "voters registered," you say "voters voting at the last," instead of "registered." Then you come down to - - in the next paragraph, everytime it says "voters registered" you say "voters voting at the last general election." This would be an incentive to get your voters out, too. I know that there's a record of all these votes just the same as they are registered and you wouldn't have dead men and absentees counted. I know a lot of these Republicans are always trying to get a big vote for the delegates so as to have so many delegates in the convention, and so forth, and that is one incentive they have to get the vote out even when there is very little other interest. But this would be a fair way. This wouldn't complicate. I think Mr. Dodge's thing can be worked out just the same, you go on your proportions. I am just trying to have it so that there won't be any dispute in the future, so that there is one county leaving the dead men on the list and so forth; I know it will lead to abuse.

HOLROYDE: I would like to clarify, for the moment, that in voting to adopt this principle, that we are not setting the lines or the boundaries. We are not deciding whether the dead men are going to be counted or not. All we are deciding is whether we are going to use this method, this formula to determine the assignment of representatives to an individual district. The decision on the boundaries, the decision on the dead men, will come later.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion on the motion? Are you ready for the question?

MIZUHA: I rise to a point of information. The vote on this method of division will not preclude further decision on whether it will be based on votes cast or votes tallied?

CHAIRMAN: That is the Chair's understanding. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it. It's carried.

BRYAN: I'd like to move that the method of equal proportions be based upon the registered voters. If I could have a second, I would like to - -

LARSEN: I would like to second that and in seconding it I would like to say this. It seems to me we ought to give credit to those voters who go and register. And if they register and happen to be sick, if you have an epidemic, why should they, if they are all in bed, why should they be punished. It seems to me if a man has enough citizenship to go and register, that gives him a reason for being counted.

MAU: I rise to a point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order.

MAU: The last motion which was passed and this motion which is now before the house concerns Section 4, which deals with the method and also deals, I think, with how that method will be used, whether by population basis, registered voters or votes cast. I thought that we were dealing with Section 3.

HEEN: In determining the number of representatives from these four basic areas and the number of representatives from the various representative districts, that determination was made on the basis of registered voters, although it doesn't say so in Section 3; but that was the actual basis upon which the apportionment was made, that is the initial apportionment as set forth in Section 3.

FUKUSHIMA: I would like to ask the chairman of the Legislative Committee how many states based their representatives on the population basis?

HEEN: That is found on page 31 of the Manual. I haven't counted the number; there are quite a number of them based on population.

AKAU: For Mr. Fukushima, as far as I can figure out, the only states that don't base their voting - - their reapportionment on population are the states of Texas and Tennessee. They are the only ones who don't.

BRYAN: I would like to answer that question. If I am allowed without being out of order to speak on the motion, I think I can clear the point up that was raised by Delegate Fukushima. The problem as stated in the report and as stated by the committee chairman this morning of using population in these districts is that it is next to impossible to obtain accurate population figures for the districts that we want to use or even for the old precincts or for any districts, unless you should take your representative districts to be the same districts that are used by the Census Bureau. Now it is quite possible that by the next census we could convince the Census Bureau that they should break their areas up into the areas that we may decide upon for representatives.

I would like to say a few words further on that. That in checking this over in the committee we found that there was actually percentage wise or using the method of equal proportions or anything else, very little difference whether we used registered voters, votes cast or population. I believe Mr. Dodge can tell us how much the difference was and in favor of what islands or counties and so forth, but the difference was very small.

I would like to say further on the using of registered voters that if you count and include the dead persons and so forth and so on, you only do it once, but the error is very small, percentage-wise it is just nil and I don't think it will ever make a difference in the apportionment. The reapportioning section, in the committee proposal, says that the reapportionment shall be based on the last general election prior to reapportionment. If in that general election we had some sort of disaster in one county, that county might lose half of its representation. Or in any one district on one island, if they had a large storm or something like that or epidemic and large numbers of people couldn't get to the polls, that district would lose a large share of their representation and I don't think that it is fair. The registered voters can only be in error if half the people die off between elections and that is not too likely.

ASHFORD: I think the theory of Delegate Bryan is correct, but my experience is that it is not the fact. I have been carrying on a war for four years to have dead men and felons dropped from the voting list and what do the election officials do every time when they sit down, they run a pencil and check mark through the people they know are dead or in jail and they continue right on the rolls as registered voters.

CHAIRMAN: You can take an appeal you know, Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: I wish to retain you as my attorney.

FUKUSHIMA: Delegate Bryan made a statement that even if we were to use the population as a basis, under this method that we have just adopted it wouldn't make much difference with the registered voters, but I can't see how he can make that statement when he's already stated that there is no accurate method of determing the population.

CHAIRMAN: I think Delegate Bryan should answer that.

BRYAN: I believe that what my intention was in making that statement is that we do have the population by islands and - -

CHAIRMAN: Will you please explain the difficulty of applying the federal census. I think that is the root of the problem.

BRYAN: I thought I had explained that.

CHAIRMAN: I thought you had too, but apparently Delegate Fukushima didn't hear it.

BRYAN: His point was that my statement was unfounded because I said it wouldn't make any difference if you did use it, and that before that I said that you couldn't use it. My point is this, you can use it in determining the number of representatives for each island because we do have population figures for each island, and on comparing that with the registered vote on each island the difference was very small. I think that should answer the question.

ROBERTS: I would like to speak in opposition to the motion that we use registered voters as the basis for the application of equal proportions. There is a great deal of logic in the use of registered voters. It is something which is tangible, you can see it; it is something which does indicate that people have had the opportunity to go down and register, and they have indicated their interest in voting. There is just as much logic for the total votes cast. As a matter of fact a little more logic because these people actually went to the trouble of going down and casting their ballots. Now in a democracy you ought to pin a bouquet on people when they cast their ballots. I think it is a responsibility which they have, but you want to say in this thing, apparently, that you are favoring such a proposal.

I believe, however, that the proper basis for determination and distribution of the representatives should be on the basis of population. When a person comes into the House of Representatives, he isn't there to represent the people who cast their votes, he isn't there to represent the people who register, he is there to represent all of the people in that particular area, the total population, the children who have not yet voted, the individuals, the youngsters who need taking care of, and those people who do not have the opportunity to or are too old to go to vote. The representative's job is to represent the entire population of the area. It seems to me, therefore, that population makes much more sense in terms of representative government.

There is a problem and I recognize the problem with regard to the census. That problem, however, is not an insurmountable problem. That problem can be resolved the way other states have resolved it. You reapportion your House and your Senate presumably every ten years. We said we are not going to reapportion our Senate. You reapportion the House every ten years on the basis of population. Now where do the other states get their figures? They have hundreds of districts the way we would have. All you've got to do, when the census people prepare their tabulation, is to let them know that you want them to tabulate the areas on the basis of population on the basis of the districts that you have. It is not an impossible problem, it is a very simple problem, and they will tabulate it for you on the basis of population, on the basis of the districts that you want, and the problem can be resolved very easily. I, therefore, vote against the proposal to use either the method of registration or votes cast.

CHAIRMAN: I think the Chair will declare a short recess. The clerks have been pretty well engaged. A few minutes recess.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegates please take their seats. The pending motion before the body is whether or not the method of equal proportion by registered voters be adopted. The Chair is of the view that that should more properly be brought up under the discussion of Section 4 rather than the present section, and, therefore, requests the movant to defer that motion or withdraw it so we can proceed. I might state we've had a good deal of debate on this legislative article and of course it goes to the heart of our government, the legislative process, but we do have to proceed and the Chair would appreciate it if we would proceed a little more expeditiously.

BRYAN: In withdrawing my motion with regards to the basis of whether it shall be registered voters, population, and so forth, I'd like it clearly understood that that doesn't affect the first motion that was already passed, that it should be on the basis of equal proportion.

CHAIRMAN: That is the Chair's understanding, that was the method that was adopted in the initial apportionment. What should be done in the future is the present motion which you are now withdrawing.

BRYAN: I think we have a misunderstanding.

CHAIRMAN: Please state your position.

BRYAN: My motion was that the method of equal proportion shall be used on the basis of registered voters and whether that is applied to the present apportionment or future reapportionment was not intended either one way or the other. I might also state that I had no objection to using some other figures for reapportionment, but for the initial apportionment I have requested that we use the registered voters because those were the figures that were most nearly applicable and could be obtained. Now if the motion is put that way, is it still out of order in your opinion?

CHAIRMAN: No, not at a later date, but at this time the Chair understands you are withdrawing your motion and we are now voting on Section 3.

BRYAN: Okay.

ASHFORD: Is my motion for the fifth representative district in order now?

CHAIRMAN: I think not, Delegate Ashford.

FONG: I move that we adopt the first sentence of Section 3 reading as follows:

> House of Representatives; representative districts; number of members; apportionment. The House of Representatives shall be composed of fifty-one members, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective representative districts.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

BRYAN: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the first sentence of Section 3 be adopted. Any discussion?

HEEN: I move an amendment to that first sentence.

CHAIRMAN: What is your amendment? Has it been printed and attached to your report, minority report?

HEEN: That is correct, in connection with Committee Report No. 102 I move that that sentence be amended to read as follows:

> SECTION 3. House of Representatives; representative districts; number of members; apportionment. The House of Representatives shall be composed of forty-one members, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective representative districts. The representative districts, and, until the next decennial reapportionment, the number of representatives to be elected from each, shall be as follows:

WIRTZ: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the first sentence of Section 3 of Committee Proposal 29 be amended by incorporating the first sentence of Section 3 of the proposal attached to the minority report of the committee. Is there any discussion on the amendment?

WIRTZ: I would like to make one last plea to this Convention for a smaller legislature. This Convention has already gone on record as adopting the 25 Senate and probably that connotes, as the discussion indicated yesterday, a 51 House. I am making my plea not only on the ground of economy. I think it is quite apparent that if we have this large legislature, the first immediate problem that faces the State of Hawaii is a new building.

Now it was booted around the floor under cover that the legislature had already appropriated money for a new building. I have been unable to find any such appropriation. There is an appropriation of $100,000 for preliminary plans. There is also some indication that it might be contained in the $70,000,000 bond issue program. However, those bonds have not been issued as yet and it would still be an obligation that the people of Hawaii would have to face. With the large legislature, a larger legislature, the new building is a must; but with a small legislature, a smaller legislature, perhaps Iolani Palace—although it is somewhat outmoded—would suffice, if the legislature at that time felt that the economy of the State would not permit capital expenditures.

But not only is the question of capital expenditures involved. We have operating costs to meet. Now there has been much talk; four or five more senators, ten or eleven more representatives, and the matter of salaries; but please do not forget that under the territorial system we do not pay any salaries. It's going to be a question of meeting all these salaries. True that is a small item and it is the smallest, as far as operating costs are concerned. Then we have the other costs that go with it, and regardless of all the arguments here about per capita cost and so on, the figures are astronomical. You only have to examine the sheet that was placed on the desk of each delegate.

My second reason against a large legislature is that it is cumbersome. In a large House, it will be impossible for some of the representatives to keep track of the bills in the legislature and especially is this true since the committee has gone on record favoring a limited session.

Now what is more important in my mind is the jeopardy that is placed upon what I consider very necessary reforms to our legislative structure. You delegates will reflect in examining the various articles of this Constitution dealing with the coordinate branches of government, the legislative branch is the least affected by form -- by reform. It is still, even as reported out of committee, very archaic in structure. These reforms that I am referring to that were able to be presented in the committee report, and they are minimum reforms, are annual sessions, a budget session in one year and a general session in another, the question of the legislative council. These, as I say, were minimum, and there were many others probably that should be done, but that is the best that could be done by the committee at this time.

Now the jeopardy of those necessary reforms heightens the necessity or the public demand or clamor for some voice, some means of reforming the legislature through initiative, referendum and recall. I would like to place that definitely in the record. The Committee on Initiative, Referendum and Recall considered these matters, and one of the witnesses who advocated them was asked whether those expensive measures, if the money that was expended for those could be utilized in reforming the legislature, wouldn't we have a better form of government, and the answer was "yes." But what are we doing. We are taking the money that we saved from the initiative, referendum and recall and we are increasing the legislature, not reforming it, because I am very fearful that when these other questions of the reform come up they will be answered immediately by the fact that we do not have money to put them in because our legislature is so large. It will be very interesting to hear that debate when we hit the other points. To me it is unfortunate that we dealt with this problem first rather than the rest of the articles originally suggested by the chairman of the Legislative Committee. Now we have agreed on the method of reapportionment. Just what difference is there between a 51 House and a 41 House. In a 51 House, Oahu will have 33 representatives and the outside islands will have the same 18 they have now. That gives Oahu a 15 vote margin. In a 41 House as proposed in this amendment that is now before the floor, Oahu will have 26 and the outside islands 15, or an 11 vote margin control. To me the difference in four votes, insofar as Oahu is concerned, is immaterial. So I ask once again that this body stop, look and listen before we go on and bind our future legislature to all the expense of running this cumbersome Frankenstein.

KELLERMAN: May I add one more point in addition to Mr. Wirtz' and in corroboration of his point of view. In the committee the original discussion hovered around a 41 or 43 House. I think I am being fair to all members of the committee when I say that the one argument which boosted that number from 41 to 51 was so that, under the same principle of equal proportions which we adopted unanimously, the three outside counties or islands could retain the number of representatives they have now. There was no question that 41 would not be capable of doing as good a job, if not better; there was no question of the need for a 51 House. It was purely the political fact of the discussion of representation, that for the outside islands to retain their eight, six and four, it would be necessary to increase the House to 51 to do it. Therefore, increase the House to 51 to do it. It means for the addition of three members, one from Hawaii, one from Maui and one from Kauai, we are saddled with seven additional members from the island of Oahu which frankly we do not need. To be able to obtain three more from the other islands, we have the expense all down the line of seven more from this island, which is totally unnecessary. And it seems to me having voted upon a 21 [sic] Senate or even if in any circumstances we should reconsider and get back to a 21 Senate, the three outside islands would still be getting additional representatives at least as great as the one each they would lose under a 41 House in the House of Representatives. If you adopt a 51 House, you have eight from Hawaii; you have seven senators from Hawaii in a 25 Senate. You have six representatives from Maui; you have five senators from Maui. You have four representatives from Kauai, and you have three senators from Kauai. Now in either a 21 or 25 Senate, each of the other islands gets more representation or at least as much as it has on the eight, six and four basis now. True it may be in one house rather in the other, but a house which has stood for greater prestige and which has more power in that it has the power of approving appointments or removals from office. So as I see it, the outside islands are in fact losing nothing in going to seven, five and three representatives, as against their present eight, six and four. And the cost of those extra three representatives of those islands is seven additional representatives from the island of Oahu which are totally unneeded.

Those reasons I think, with respect to everything that Mr. Wirtz has said, is equally as applicable in the discussion of cumbersomeness, economy and all other factors, and I wanted to bring up that point. That's how we happened to hit upon 51.

SMITH: I would like to ask the previous speaker, does that mean that her intentions are that the House should be 41 and that the Senate would be kept at 25?

KELLERMAN: My intentions, if I had my way, have been made quite clear. I was in favor of a 21 Senate and a 41 House, but even on a 21 Senate as an increase over the present 15, each of the outside islands would get an additional senator, which in my opinion would be worth more to them than one representative in each house, which they would lose on a 41 House.

FONG: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the speaker a question? The fact that we have already passed on the number of senators, that is 25, does that mean that she will still persist that the Senate be cut to 21 should her amendment pass?

CHAIRMAN: I think the position of the delegate is perfectly clear. She is in favor of this number in the House, and if that would prevail, then she feels that this body would reconsider its action on the Senate. I think that is the position of the delegate.

PORTEUS: I wonder if the various members would be kind enough to turn to the apportionment and reapportionment circular that was distributed this morning. I think we can make the point very simply here. If you will turn please to that table and turn to page 5 of the table.

CHAIRMAN: The table prepared by Mr. Dodge of the Legislative Reference Bureau, is that what you have reference to?

PORTEUS: Yes, Mr. Chairman. If you will turn to page 5, on the left hand column is the total number of members in the House. As so well explained by Mr. Dodge, if you took the number in the left hand column, by looking across you can find out what the House would be as divided between Oahu and the outside islands.

Now as a matter of interest, we've been talking about 51 and 41, there is nothing magic in the numbers. Let's just for fun take a look at these numbers, let's take a look at a 30 House. Oahu would have 20, that means the outside islands would have 10, that's a two to one margin. Now we move up next to where Oahu might next like to go because it demonstrates the point of where you pick the number, what happens? If you pick a House of 39, if you will look across please, you will find that in a House of 39, Oahu would have 26, that would obviously leave the outside islands a total of 13. Again a two to one. Both Maui and Hawaii should in a discussion on a House of 39 immediately point out to the rest of the body that on the fortieth member, Maui is entitled to that member, and on the forty-first member, Hawaii is entitled to it. Therefore, they should advocate that instead of taking a House of 39, we ought to take 41 which would then give the split of 26 to 15. Now there is nothing magic about this split of 26 to 15; that's only what the division is, if you will assume that you will take 41. Now as soon as you go to 41, if you will look at the table, it is to Oahu's interest to ask that the House not be set at 41 but rather for $4,000 a year, which would be the cost at a thousand dollars a year, we move the House up to 45. By moving it to 45 you then find that Oahu is entitled to 30. The outside islands, however, have not come in on any of those four - -

CHAIRMAN: Pardon me, Delegate Porteus, I didn't quite follow that, if you move it up to 42 - -

PORTEUS: Up to 45, jump from 41 to 45. If you move to 42, Oahu has 27; at 43 we have 28; at 44 we have 29; at 45 we get 30 of the House of 45. I am pointing out the difference between moving from 41 to 45. At 41 we have 26 to 15; at 45 we have 30 to 15, what we'd have had at 39 and at 30.

So, there is reason to support the recommendation of the committee that the only figure that they could come together on was a House of 51; there is reason to support it. Maybe I like 45, maybe someone likes 39. Kauai, Hawaii, Maui would have other numbers because if they just get in under the line it is to their advantage to draw the line in the number of the House where they last come in under the line.

By the time you got to 45 the difference in cost between 41 and 51 – if the committee's recommendation is carried out, which is apparently a $1000 per budgetary session and $1500 for another – it means $10,000 a year in a budgetary session for salaries and $15,000 a year in another session. Now as far as this tremendous cost of $10,000 and $15,000, this cumbersome "Frankenstein" that is labeled at 51 becomes a very desirable body apparently at 41. As a matter of fact if that is all they call the legislature, the legislators will be very lucky. But at 51 you'll find that Kauai, the last outside island, comes in for its last representative. That gives to each of the outside islands their present 18. It is true there is nothing magic about 51, there is nothing magic about 41; 30 is too tight, it should be increased.

Now if we wish to let those who desired to preserve the same number of representatives in their islands to go back to their islands and ask their people to vote for the Constitution, I see no great difference in cost a year. Ten thousand dollars is a lot of money to me, but I don't think $10,000 spent in salaries in a particular year is that much difference as far as cost is concerned. It is true they can argue that there are going to be a lot more clerks, but as I understood the argument that has been made earlier, the legislature is operating on too expensive a basis and you ought to operate on a more efficient one. If that is true it shouldn't cost any more money.

The 18 committees of the House I think can just about adequately take care of the work of a House, whether there are 30 members or whether there are 41 or even 51 members. I don't believe that the item of cost is such a major one, but the table does show the difficulty of arriving at any particular figure for the size of the House. As you look at it everybody is for a different number, and every time you pick a different number it affects some people in some districts, in the rural districts, or in other districts, as how many people they will be entitled to elect to the legislature. And it seems to me, therefore, that the recommendation of the committee to be a reasonable one, not necessarily one I would have chosen had I had the right to choose, but we've got to make a selection along the line, and I think their recommendation to be a fair one.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will ask Delegate Heen to close the debate on this.

LAI: Only three states out of 48 states - -

KING: Close the debate, why should we close the debate? There are a lot of us who want to speak on this.

LAI: I was speaking against the amendment. Only three states out of the 48 states have a House of less than 50 members, and only three states out of the 48 states have a House less than two times that of the Senate. In other words we have decided on a 25 member Senate. Now we should have a - - 51 would be a proper size House to go with a 25 member Senate. Now our population of the territory has increased tremendously the last 20 years and I think the increase in the membership in the House is very well justified. That would give a better representation of the increased population.

KING: First let me say that I am very anxious to expedite matters, but we didn't take a great deal of time in discussing the theory of equal proportions. Once we've adopted the principle of equal proportions, you inevitably come to a House of a membership of 51 members because that gives the other islands the same eight, six, four they now have and then gives Oahu the additional members to complete the number, as was well pointed out by Delegate Porteus.

Now this discussion of the additional cost to me seems all out of order. I have had some figures prepared here—of course we can always get many figures—but in 1919 from the memorandum that was circulated yesterday, the cost of the legislature was $60,000. The expenditures of the legislature was $5,080,000. That made a ratio of legislative cost of total appropriation, 1.07 per cent. In 1929 the legislative cost was $100,000, the total appropriation was $8,633,000 [which] made the ration 1.16 per cent of legislative costs to the total budget, which was slightly higher. In 1939 the legislative cost was $160,000 and the total budget was $14,500,000; the ratio was 1.10 per cent, a decrease from the preceding decade. In 1949 the legislative cost was $500,000 and it has been assumed that it would keep going up and up in that percentage which is not an assumption that is justified. The total budget was $72,000,000 and the ratio was 0.69 of 1 per cent, almost half of what it was in 1919. So this question of cost has been greatly exaggerated.

We are getting into the larger monies because of increased population, the lower buying power of the dollar and the larger services required. It is true that the per capita cost has gone up because the people of Hawaii have demanded more services from the government. In 1929, with a population of 255,000 in 1920, the per capita cost was $1.98; and in 1930 it went up to $2.34; in 1940 to $3.45; in 1950 to $14.60. Why? Because we demand more of government; we demanded the government shall do things for us that were not done in 1919 and in 1929 and so forth.

Now, this question of a new capitol. Frankly Iolani Palace is no longer very adequate as a capitol at this moment, and this increase to 41 representatives will make it less appropriate for a capitol. I don't know what the future is going to do, but we'll cross that bridge when we come to it, and whether we erect a new capitol or not will not depend upon the size of the legislature but upon the finances of the Territory at the time.

Now if we want a good democracy we want better representation of all sections of the State of Hawaii. We want representation based on a reasonable percentage of people that have voted, and we get that by increasing the size of the legislature. I recited the other day the number of states that have comparable size of legislature as we have. Colorado, for instance, to mention a new one that I did not mention yesterday, has 35 senators and 65 representatives. It has a population of about a million people, about twice as many people as we have, but there is no comparison in population when you get up to a higher figure. Wyoming, however, with a population less than ours, has 27 senators and 56 representatives. They do not find that unwieldy. They do not find it overly expensive. As a matter of fact, Wyoming is a poorer state in money spent than this Territory of Hawaii, this future State of Hawaii.

So it seems to me that the cost angle doesn't come into the picture at all. It is what will provide the State of Hawaii with a fairly distributed number of representatives for its population and its vote, and you inevitably come to the figure 51 as the only one that suits the needs of the other islands and of Oahu. A lower figure would be taken out of the other islands before it is taken out of Oahu. So I feel that the amendment should not carry, that we should continue to maintain the 51 House membership and the 25 membership in the Senate.

MIZUHA: I am in favor of the amendment, and in favor of a smaller state legislature for Hawaii. It will be covering the same ground as I covered with reference to my remarks on the size of our Senate when I speak for a smaller House of Representatives for the State assembly. It isn't so much a question as to the cost of our State legislature; the amount of moneys that could be used for the salaries of clerks, for representatives and senators and holdover committees and so forth. What I am principally concerned with is, by a larger body in the House of Representatives the total budget of the Territory, whether it be on an annual basis or a biennial basis, will increase proportionately with the number of representatives and senators in the State legislature.

I wish to point out at this time that in establishing the House of Representatives here in the Constitution we are departing from an established principle of representation that Hawaii has enjoyed since the Organic Act. We have elected representatives on a large basis, large geographical basis. On Kauai, on Hawaii, on Maui and on Oahu, we have had only six representative districts. Now we are establishing 18. From some of these representative districts we are electing six, as the fifteenth district on Oahu, some five, as the fourteenth district. And every representative that comes to the State legislature will come first and foremost with the interest of his constituents in mind and there will be competition in the State legislature for improvements in the various representative districts. And undoubtedly when you have 51 legislators in the House of Representatives each one of these boys must go back home and tell their fellow voters that, "I got you this new library, this new swimming pool, this new school," and when the "pork barrel" bill comes up for capital expenditures everyone can not be satisfied. So they will be confronted with Delegate White's "debt limitations" and the answer will be, "Well, you can't increase the bonded debt of the Territory. You have already raised enough money and under the constitutional limitations you're stymied."

So these boys in the legislature will get together, as they have gotten together here in this Constitutional Convention, and say, "Sure, we'll get Delegate Silva's proposal in 1949 with reference to income tax and we'll put it through, and when we put such an income tax bill through, we'll have enough money to take care of this new school, and this new gymnasium and new swimming pools." And that is what is going to happen because legislators are human. They must go back to their constituents and tell them, "We got something worthwhile for you when we went down to Oahu in that beautiful Iolani Palace and we brought back a new gymnasium for you, a new beautiful public school like the Castle school down at Kaneohe." Why, the boys up there in upper Nuuanu, in the twelfth representative district, and maybe it might be Delegate Trude Akau, says, "I gave Puunui the best looking public school in the Territory and I am going to fight for it." And the end result with a large body like this will be a State budget not $100,000,000, it will be $250,000,000, and they will have to raise the money from income taxes or gross income taxes, and we will find the State confronted with a tax structure that will make our present tax structure silly.

It is my opinion that a small legislative body—maybe a few more representatives and a few more senators than we have at the present time—will be the kind of body that will work for the interest of the State of Hawaii and will not bring politics into the deliberations to the extent that it will be when you have a larger body. Delegate Heen, the chairman of the Legislative Committee, read from the Federalists Papers I believe, upon the recommendation of the distinguished political scientist, what a large body will do and what a small body will do. And then if we have this large State legislature, I am certain, and I will sound a warning again, that our legislative appropriations on an annual basis, on a biennial basis, will be far above what the Territory has ever experienced and it will mean taxation on a basis which was unheard of under the Territorial status. I am in favor of this amendment for a smaller House of Representatives.

ARASHIRO: I was told it would be better to keep quiet than try to speak to a group that's not going to listen, but I am not going to say anything, but I have a question to ask. My question is - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair didn't mean you to keep quiet but wanted to remind you that a few souls are saved after the first hour. I have a great deal of sympathy with the last speaker, but I recognize what the feeling of the body is.

ARASHIRO: My question is, is the present legislature a body too small that is not carrying out the wishes of the people, and if it need be increased, should it be increased to 25 senators and 51 representatives which will then, to this assembly, be reasonable and will be sufficient to represent the different population - - I mean different people of the Territory adequately?

SILVA: I would like to state that I heartily disagree with the delegate from Kauai. Truly in a form of government as ours, that it would be proper if we could break it down into smaller units, if it would be possible for us to do that, and if we could afford that, for the people of this Territory then, surely, then we would have a truly representative form of government. We are trying to stay within the economy and at the same time give the people, the truly representative of the people, a voice in the legislature, and it is because of that that the figure of 51 has been chosen. I say that if the delegate from Kauai is correct, then maybe he is of the opinion that it would be better to do without a legislature so that none of the members of the House nor the Senate could go back to the people - -

CHAIRMAN: I don't think his argument went to that extent, Delegate Silva.

SILVA: Well, he was saying for a smaller house, now how small is the question. How small is the question. If the argument is that 51 is too large, that is not truly representative of the people, then - -

MIZUHA: I rise to a point of personal privilege.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

MIZUHA: In my previous argument, Mr. Chairman - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair recognized your argument. The remarks were facetious on the part of Delegate Silva and everybody recognizes it as such.

MIZUHA: Thank you, your honor.

SILVA: He never gave us any figure of what the exact number should be. I just want to get this question straightened out, Mr. Chairman. That his argument, in my opinion—I believe the majority of delegates here—was that 51 was too large. He didn't say how small it should be. Now, I just want to say that in my opinion, maybe, if we could afford, if this Territory could afford a 150 House of Representatives and if it could do the work at the least expense to the public, then I'd be for a 150 House of Representatives. I do not think that the members of the House who will be representatives of the legislature are just running back to every constituent and yell to the top of their lungs of how much they got for Milolii and how much they got for Hookena or whatever it may be; that is not true. If I have had experience in the legislature, the people of this Territory are not as dumb as some of us assume them to be and they know wherefore they vote. And let me tell you, gentlemen of this body here, that I hope - - I am only hoping that when we get through with this Convention that those of you who were never in the legislature try and become representatives of the people and you'll find out. And I hope that the speaker himself from Kauai will seek an office and maybe he will be one of the first ones to holler how much he got for Nawiliwili.

KAGE: I too, like the other delegate from Maui, would like to put in a last plea for a small legislature. Reference has been made to the Manual issued to the State Constitutional Convention. We noticed that quite a number of people point at the states of comparable size to Hawaii and say they have a big legislature, a big Senate and a big House of Representatives - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kage, will you speak just a trifle closer to the microphone? I think you will be heard better.

KAGE: One thing I would like to have the people understand here, the delegates, excuse me, to understand here is that the majority of the constitutions for the states were written 50, 60, 70, 100 years ago when they had very poor means of transportation. They had no radio, their communication was terrible. It was much harder for them to travel from Albany to New York than it is to travel from San Francisco to Hawaii. I am a firm believer of a representative form of government, but with the advance of transportation and the advance of communication, the ability to represent a certain group of people that has lessened. That is, a person today can represent a 100 people whereby a 100 years ago one representative was able to represent only 10. Now the trend at the present time is, I think, whether it is to the good or to the bad, is more towards centralization than decentralization. New Jersey, just recently, about three years ago, had a constitutional convention. They had a Senate of 21. They had the opportunity to enlarge their Senate. They have a population of eight million. But why didn't they do it? Because they also agreed that we should keep up with the times. Fifty years ago, when the Organic Act was written, they said that we should have a Senate of 15 and a House of Representatives of 30. Why sure, but at that time they had no radio, and that is why I believe that the ability to represent has grown here in Hawaii and all over the world. For that reason I believe that we should keep our legislature small.

SMITH: In the beginning of this Convention, we had a slight argument as to electing judges and other officers. I was whole heartedly opposed to that because I believed in representative government. I also was in favor of keeping the Senate at 15 and with adding on to the House of Representatives slightly more to Oahu only. But when it came down to decide what could be done since the 15-30 was ineffective I tried to ask myself, in the idea of representation, what could be the nearest we could reach in numbers which would be appropriate and equal to all concerned. I couldn't help but realize that if we went to a 21 Senate and a 43 [House] it would be an addition, but also it would be taking away representatives from the House and giving to the Senate, say for the island of Maui. At the same time realizing that we were for the idea that the outer islands should have a 60-40 ratio, we would not be getting that on a 21. Now with the 20 and one it came up, and giving a 60-40 ratio, but I was wholeheartedly against that because of the fact that the executive would be the arbitrator of the legislative branch. Now if the opponents of the 25-51 can go ahead and say that we don't want the representation changed at all in percentage, geographically and by population and so forth, what figure are we going to honestly arrive at? Now the only figure that I can so far see is that 25-51. Sure it is an expense, but our democratic government is very expensive and I don't feel that by that addition it will be so great that the economy, such as the administration, patronage and handling expenses, can't easily be cut down otherwise. I am looking at [it in] this light, we have to have representation of the people and with a 25-51 you gain that. It spreads it out more. I feel also that with the spreading out, there is a lesser chance of pressure groups or parties or anything to have such a die-hard control in the matters of the people.

BRYAN: I would like to inquire, there has been only two speakers from the outside islands in favor of a House the size of 51; perhaps we on Oahu have made a mistake. We should ask for 45. Don't the outside island representatives want to retain their present representation? Mrs. Kellerman said, and truthfully so, that the reason that the committee went to 51 was so that the neighbor islands could retain their present representation and I see very many neighbor islands delegates getting up and saying, "We want a 41 House."

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understood the heart of President King's argument was that this figure of 51 preserved intact the present representation.

BRYAN: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: So if the outside islands really want a lower House they can go down to any figure that would be satisfactory to the island of Oahu. Is that a correct statement, President King?

KING: Delegate Bryan was developing the point that those who spoke who are delegates from the other islands, why should they set on 41. Oahu might set at 45, and as Delegate Porteus pointed out Oahu would have 30 to 15. In other words, if they are willing to go down to 15 from 18, let's make it 45, not 41. However, the argument is 41 or 51.

SILVA: Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Bryan has the floor.

BRYAN: I would like to be a little bit more facetious on a further point too. I think maybe the committee made a mistake in not asking for a 75 member House and then we could have settled at 65 instead of 51.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will recognize Delegate Silva.

SILVA: I move we take a recess for lunch and be back at 1:30.

SAKAKIHARA: Mr. Chairman, I second the motion to recess.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that we ought to proceed to a vote on this.

SILVA: Let's vote.

HEEN: I would like to speak upon this matter.

SILVA: You want to speak on the matter to recess?

CHAIRMAN: There is a motion to recess. I was going to ask you to close the debate on your amendment. If the motion to recess is withdrawn you may proceed, otherwise we will have to vote on the motion. You withdraw your motion, Delegate Silva?

SILVA: The motion should be put to save time and if it doesn't carry he is in order, otherwise - -

CHAIRMAN: All in favor of recessing until 1:30 signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion is lost. Proceed, Delegate Heen.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, this minority report was submitted in good faith and with the interests of the people of the State in mind:

> The majority of your committee members propose a fifty-one member House in order that the present membership from the neighbor islands will not be reduced. This is a concession to a fifty-year period of legislative inaction that we believed this convention is unjustified in making.
> All evidence points to the fact that the initial apportionment of the House, both under the 1894 Constitution of the Republic of Hawaii and under the Organic Act, was on the basis of population. The Organic Act further provided for periodic reapportionment on the basis of citizen population.
> With a House of fifty-one members apportioned among the major island divisions, in accordance with 1950 United States Census Population Statistics, the present neighbor island representation is reduced by three, one member from each neighbor island group. For a House of forty-one members, that representation is further reduced by four members, one from Hawaii, one from Maui, and two from Kauai. Thus, if the directive of the Organic Act were to be carried out today on the basis of total population (instead of citizen population), the apportionment would be as follows:

Apportionment of the House of Representatives on the basis of 1950 Population Statistics

County	1950 Population	Per cent of Total	Number of Members: 51 Member House	Number of Members: 41 Member House
Hawaii	67,683	13.7	7	6
Maui	48,387	9.8	5	4
Honolulu	347,440	70.4	36	29
Kauai	29,838	6.1	3	2

By this Convention adopting, as we hereby recommend, a House of forty-one members, apportioned among the several island units on the basis of registered voters, the neighbor islands will have the same representation as they would be entitled to receive if the membership were increased by ten and set at fifty-one and the apportionment based upon total population.

The neighbor islands would receive only three of those ten added members, seven would go to Oahu. We believe the additional cost to the Territory, by reason of having those three members, unsupportable by reason.

The proposal submitted for the legislative article by your committee establishes a salary of $2500 for members of the legislature for a biennium. By statute, there is now a provision authorizing the payment of $15 per day for neighbor island members and $5 per day for Oahu members for each day of a legislative session. During the 1949 regular session, this amounted to $1100 for each neighbor island member and $370 for each Oahu member or a total for the session of $24,420. Taking into consideration only salaries and per diem expenses, the cost to the state, by reason of having those three additional neighbor island members, would amount to over $34,000 per biennium -- over $11,000 per member. The total legislative employee cost for the 1949 session of the House amounted to $5514, computed as an average cost per member. When this amount is added for each of the additional members necessary to retain present neighbor island membership, an additional $55,000 for a general session and perhaps $20,000 for a budget session would be required. Total additional cost, therefore, would approximate $110,000 per biennium. Surely, a great price to pay for adding three additional neighbor island members to the House of Representatives.

We appreciate the need for a somewhat larger membership in the House of Representatives. We do not believe it necessary to go beyond a forty-one member House to achieve this end.

Your committee has unanimously agreed that the distribution of representatives among the major island divisions shall be on a realistic and equitable basis. We do not depart from that principle in advocating a membership of forty-one in the House of Representatives.

The representative districts for the forty-one member House remain the same as in Committee Proposal No. 29 with two exceptions. Lanai and Molokai would constitute one district and the islands of Maui and Kahoolawe would likewise constitute one district within that basic area, from which there would be elected one representative and four representatives, respectively.

The rural districts of Wahiawa and Waialua and of Ewa and Waianae, on the island of Oahu, have been combined and will be entitled to elect three representatives.

The total number of representative districts in the state are thus reduced from eighteen to sixteen.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there is no question but what political considerations were involved in determing this membership at 51. The idea was to have the outside islands maintain the same representation that they have now under the Organic Act of the last 50 years. In, however, giving up one representative from each of these outlaying island, they are gaining, so far as Hawaii is concerned, three senators, losing one representative; and Maui gains two senators and losing only one representative; and Kauai loses one representative but gains one senator. So there the whole situation is leveled off, so that each island major division is not losing any representation in the legislature. So I submit on the basis of the statement made by those who advocate this amendment that a 41 membership is the proper representation in the House of Representatives.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is going to put the question. What's your question, Delegate Smith?

SMITH: I would like to ask the previous speaker, is he saying to keep the Senate at 25 and the legislature -- House would be at 41?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair didn't so understand it.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, I can answer that. So far as the 21-25 Senate is concerned, that's a closed issue. The Convention had decided upon a 25 membership Senate.

HOLROYDE: Mr. Chairman, as the --

CHAIRMAN: For what purpose is the speaker rising?

HOLROYDE: As the vice chairman, I would like to -- and as the head of the majority membership of the committee, I would like to have something to say on this subject.

CHAIRMAN: I thought we were giving Delegate Heen the opportunity to close the debate, but proceed.

HOLROYDE: Your committee in considering this issue felt that the representation of the outside islands was very important in the House as well as the Senate, probably more important as far as number was concerned than representation from Honolulu. With Honolulu's large population, they were bound to be taken care of. Now in deliberating between 41 or 51, you find that by eliminating one representative from Kauai, you cut down their representation in the House by 25 per cent. By cutting one representative from Maui you cut down their representation by 17 per cent, but when you cut one from Oahu you cut down their representation by three per cent. Now the committee is trying to be fair on this matter and for that reason decided to stick to the 51 House, the size at 51. I am beginning to feel a little bit like the delegate at my right. Most of the speakers from the other islands so far have been fighting for a lower House. Now, if that is the consensus of opinion, should we from Oahu continue to hold on to a 51 House for their benefit? For that reason, Mr. Chairman, before we vote on this I would like to move for a recess till 1:30.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has heard no second.

FONG: I move the previous question.

CHAIRMAN: That motion is not entertained in the Committee of the Whole as I understand it.

CASTRO: Well let's have a vote then, Mr. Chairman, it's getting late.

CHAIRMAN: Is a roll call demanded? There will be a vote on the question on the amendment of Judge Heen -- Delegate Heen, which will amend Section 3, first sentence, to change the representation in the House of Representatives from 51 to 41. Will the Clerk please call the roll?

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, may I state this. That if the amendment to that sentence is defeated, that defeats the entire amendment as presented in the proposal attached to Standing Committee Report No. 102.

CHAIRMAN: That is the Chair's understanding. The way would still be open to amend the section for some other figure, however.

HEEN: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: That is the Chair's understanding.

Ayes, 21. Noes, 35 (Akau, Apoliona, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Dowson, Fong, Fukushima, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Kido, King, Kometani, Lai, Larsen, Loper, Luiz, Lyman, Nielsen, Ohrt, Porteus, Richards, Sakai, Sakakihara, Shimamura, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, White, Wist, Woolaway, Yamamoto, Yamauchi.) Not voting, 7 (Crossley, Kam, Lee, Phillips, H. Rice, Okino, Kawakami.)

CHAIRMAN: The amendment is lost.

FONG: May we have the vote on the original motion?

C. RICE: I move that the committee -- the majority committee report be adopted on that.

CHAIRMAN: What is your motion again—the report or the section? Isn't that Section 3?

SILVA: That motion is out of order, that motion has been made long ago.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, if I may, we were voting on whether to adopt the first sentence of Section 3.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

KING: The amendment to the first section was defeated. It is now in order to move the adoption of the first sentence of Section 3.

CHAIRMAN: But he didn't make the motion.

FONG: May I ask the Chair to put the question on the first motion?

CHAIRMAN: What is the first motion that you refer to?

FONG: It is before the house. It is to pass the sentence as written by the majority of the committee.

SAKAKIHARA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: You heard the question.

SHIMAMURA: Point of information, please. Is that the first sentence of Section 3 only?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct, the first sentence of Section 3. That constitutes a House of Representatives of 51 members. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it.

SILVA: I renew my motion for a recess, Mr. Chairman.

DOWSON: I second the motion to recess until 2 o'clock.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded to recess until 2 o'clock. All in favor signify by saying "aye."

Afternoon Session

KING: In order to make plans for the program for tomorrow and for Monday, it is necessary to know whether it is the intention of the Convention to meet Saturday forenoon and on Monday, and I wanted to ask the Chair, while we're in the Committee of the Whole, merely to ask some expression of sentiment. I feel that we should meet Saturday forenoon and Monday. Some of the delegates from the other islands are asking permission to be excused from Saturday afternoon until Wednesday morning. We would not take up any matter on Monday that would require their presence as long as we had a quorum, but I don't think we ought to let Monday go without a meeting. There will be Committee of the Whole reports to take up and other matters that would help expedite the business, so I do ask the Chair to request the Committee of the Whole's sentiment on the question of meeting tomorrow and Monday.

CHAIRMAN: You have heard the request of the President that we meet Saturday and Monday in order to wind up our work. We are getting pretty far behind here.

ASHFORD: I heard the President's remarks with the greatest concern. I think we should meet not only on Saturday and on Monday but on Tuesday and carry on the most vital work of the Convention and get it cleaned up.

CHAIRMAN: Including the Fourth of July?

ASHFORD: Including the Fourth of July. What better dedication could we make to the country than to work on the Fourth of July on the Constitution of the new State.

SMITH: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is in entire agreement with the speaker.

KING: I am a little in doubt whether Act 334 allows us to meet on Sundays and legal holidays. My recollection is that we are not allowed to meet on Sundays and legal holidays. If some one has a copy of Act 334 handy, they might check that.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair offhand would say there would be no obstacle to that. Delegate Tavares, do you have any views on that?

HEEN: We must not forget that we are working only in committees and therefore there is nothing final that is done by the committee. It is only when the recommendations are presented to the Convention sitting in regular session that the acts then become final. As far as the work of the committee is concerned, it can be done on Sundays, Saturday, holidays and even at night.

CHAIRMAN: That is the Chair's understanding.

TAVARES: I am not arguing necessarily that we work on the holidays, although I expect to anyhow, but I do think that there is no prohibition against working on holidays. The only prohibition I know of is the prohibition against labor on Sundays, and as Delegate Heen has said we could always ratify what we have done by working on the next regular day and saying we approved it, so that whatever we did informally could be ratified later.

HEEN: The Sunday law was repealed by the legislature.

KING: It has been suggested that on Monday morning at 9:15 we stand in informal recess and have a Liberty Bell Ceremony that would take fifteen minutes to half an hour.

This is at the suggestion of the Honolulu Chamber of Commerce, that we ring the bell forty-nine times, play "Hawaii Ponoi" and the "Star-Spangled Banner" and Colonel Unmacht, who has charge of that patriotic observance, would ask permission to talk to the Convention in a ten minute speech. He tells me eight minutes and I told him I'd rely on ten. So, without going back into Convention I wanted to get the opinion of the delegates whether we should hold that patriotic observance on Monday morning.

CHAIRMAN: Do you request that it be put to a vote, Delegate King, or do you think that the sentiment expressed is sufficient at this point?

KING: Just a sentiment expressed. We are in the Committee of the Whole now. I just wanted to know what the delegates wished to do.

C. RICE: Can we pair off like we do in the Senate of the United States? I would like to pair off with Monty Richards. I think he is going away.

CHAIRMAN: That pair is out of order, I am afraid.

SHIMAMURA: Mr. Chairman, I was about to suggest that perhaps our deliberations here would not be considered labor in any event.

CHAIRMAN: Let's proceed with the business at hand. I think the President has gotten the sense of the body that we are going to work and try to get this work done. I suggest we try to complete this legislative article this afternoon.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, I think you are over optimistic. We are only on Section 3, and there are nineteen other sections we will have to go through before we finish with this article. I now move that we adopt the balance of Section 3.

SMITH: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the remainder of Section 3 be adopted.

ASHFORD: My long delayed amendment, I think, is now in order. I move the adoption of the amendment that is on all the delegates' desks, the substitution for the sixth, seventh and eighth paragraphs of Section 3, two paragraphs and renumbering.

ST. SURE: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Committee Proposal No. 29 be amended as to the sixth, seventh and eighth paragraphs to insert the following:

> Fifth representative district: the islands of Molokai and Lanai, one representative;
> Sixth representative district: the islands of Maui and Kahoolawe, five representatives.

ASHFORD: The reason for it I think is obvious to any one who knows these three islands concerned. We on Molokai can't even go to the headquarters of the county without going to some other island first. For campaigning purposes, if we have to go to Lahaina as well as Lanai it means we have to go all around Robin Hood's barn. Lahaina is the nearest geographically and just about the furtherest from point of convenience and travel, and also from the viewpoint of contacts and community of interests. Lanai and Molokai have great community of interest. We associate together in many public matters.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Ashford, is the Maui delegation unanimous in this regard? Can you advise the Chair?

ASHFORD: I think they are not unanimous, Mr. Chairman. If Molokai, Lanai and Lahaina are joined the result will be that Lahaina will elect two representatives all the time. I request the support of the Convention to my amendment and I ask for the consideration of one paragraph at a time.

KIDO: I would like to speak against that amendment. First, I feel that Lahaina will not get any representation if you include Lahaina with Maui. I believe that the fundamental of districting is to give the various districts representation, and for this reason I cannot see that Lahaina be included with the rest of the Maui districts. Since the delegate said that if Molokai, Lanai and Lahaina were joined together in one district that Lahaina would elect the two representatives, this I disagree. Figures will show that Molokai has 1,400 votes, Lanai 700 votes and Lahaina 1,500 votes, in which case it would take a combination of two islands at least to elect their representative. Secondly, I believe that the basis of apportionment will be thrown off as used by the committee if you include Lahaina with the rest of the Maui districts. I cannot see any reason why those three districts right now as shown on the map cannot be included as one district. By doing so we will be assured of at least of two representatives from district five as shown on the map. Wailuku, that's district six, will have their two and district seven on the other side. Therefore I appeal to all the delegates to bear in mind that what we want is a wider distribution and representation. I believe that was the foundation of this districting.

DOWSON: I would like to ask two questions. The first is, besides sheep what other living things are on Kahoolawe?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair was wondering about that too.

WOOLAWAY: Goats.

DOWSON: No voters. If they expect to have voters on Kahoolawe, why don't they include Molokini?

WIRTZ: We have great expectations for Kahoolawe but we have given up insofar as Molokini is concerned.

ST. SURE: I would like to call to the attention of the delegates here that the delegate from Molokai's amendment is a confirmation of what is being done in the County of Maui now. In the past it has always been a gentleman's agreement that one member to the House has always been elected from Molokai and the other five from Maui. I think this is more or less assuring Molokai and Lanai that they will always have one member in the House.

For the rest of Maui I want you to realize this, the face of Maui right now is being changed. By that - - if you look over the map it shows district six; within the next two or three years there is going to be a shift in the population and about 30,000 and 35,000 people will be moving. The reason why is that the industries are breaking down the plantation camps and they are building a dream city. I don't think it would be fair right now to split it two, two, two, because of the possibility that all six can come from the island of Maui and I don't think it will be fair to Molokai.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to hear from the chairman of the committee on this. Has this problem been examined by the Legislative Committee?

HEEN: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: What are the results of your deliberations?

HEEN: The result was that Molokai and Lanai was to be tied up to Lahaina, those areas to have two delegates with a total population of registered voters numbering 3,865; and representative district six, as shown on the map of Maui, with a total population of registered voters numbering 5,594; and the rest of Maui, district seven, has a population of 4,704 registered voters. I think there was no dissention there as far as the committee was concerned as to the division of Maui, Molokai, Lanai and Kahoolawe in that manner.

CHAIRMAN: What the Chair wants to know, was the specific problem that is now posed by Delegate Ashford's amendment before your committee?

HEEN: That was discussed from time to time.

WIRTZ: I might say that the Legislative Committee acted in the manner it did on the basis of the Maui representatives in the committee. At that time it was the understanding that that was the best way to do it. However, it has been discovered for reasons that have now been brought forward that that is not the unanimous opinion of the Maui delegation. Now, I think on the figures, and I think Mr. Dodge will bear me out, that as far as this question of dividing the House of fifty-one on equal proportions, it will make no difference to the representation of Maui's total number of six if we follow the amendment, namely, of combining Molokai and Lanai into one and five for the rest. Is that not correct, may I ask Mr. Dodge the question? He has answered in the affirmative, so this does not affect the problem of equal proportions in any way.

HOLROYDE: One of the problems in this division is what happens to Lahaina in a deal like that. Where Lahaina was thrown over with Molokai and Lanai, they were then given a fair chance of electing one as were Lahaina and Molokai. If we throw Lahaina back with Maui as a whole, I figure that they have very little chance of electing a representative because they have only 1,700 or 1,800 votes. That was another reason for supporting this division as it is.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is ready to put the question.

WOOLAWAY: As in the past we all know that the representatives from the County of Maui have been elected at large. I am against this particular amendment but I am not against it because I am trying to keep something away from Molokai. I think that Molokai will benefit as it now stands. As far as the difficulty in candidates getting around from Molokai and covering those three spots, it certainly is not any more difficult than it has been in the past covering the rest of Maui, way out as far as Kaupo.

It has also been brought up, with 1,400 votes on Molokai and 600 on Lanai, I don't care what anybody says, whether they say Lanai is in agreement or not, still Lanai would certainly be at a two to one disadvantage in trying to get representation themselves. Whereas combining it with Lahaina, Lanai's a point of stabilization there—1,400 Molokai and 1,500 Lahaina—then your 600 votes on Lanai can be played either way to get their election over for the benefit of all.

Now again, Molokai and Lanai are part of the County of Maui and if you are going to elect one representative out of fifty-one, the choice of Molokai with their majority vote, you are alienating the island of Molokai in consideration with the other five representatives on the main island.

Also the point brought up by the colleague sitting back of me about the trend of population over the one point in the next two or three years on the island of Maui is something to behold. I know very well that the plan calls for a period of twenty-five years. We are not building that many houses in that area in a period of three years. It is going to take a period of twenty-five. In the meantime the people moving into this new housing area, the Kahului Development Company, are moving from plantation houses within the same area so that there is no change in the population from that standpoint.

Another point brought up by the same gentleman was that there has always been a gentlemen's agreement that we have elected one individual from Molokai. There has been no such gentlemen's agreement. You don't find that in the political scheme of affairs. But Molokai has always had representation in the House of Representatives although they only have 1,400 votes. They've had representation in the last two or three years and also in the Senate. For a good many years they were represented by Senator Cooke.

I think it will be a disadvantage for Molokai to alienate itself from the rest of Maui and in voting against this amendment together with five other delegates from Maui, which constitutes the majority, who are against the amendment, I am doing it so because I think it will be beneficial for Maui to vote this way.

APOLIONA: About two or three months ago Lanai came down here with an appeal for recognition. She appealed to your Committee on Local Government to grant self-government to Lanai. Your committee, even though it felt that it could not give self-government to Lanai, was very sympathetic to the appeals of the people. In the committee's report that Lahaina, Molokai and Lanai be combined as one representative district and be allowed to elect two representatives to the House of Representatives is a good idea because eventually I think Molokai will have a representative and Lanai will have a representative and everybody will be happy. Then there will be four representatives from Maui.

CHAIRMAN: Are you in favor of the amendment?

APOLIONA: I am not in favor of the amendment.

ASHFORD: Mr. Chairman, if everyone else has spoken, may I speak again?

CHAIRMAN: I am going to find out. I think we ought to bring this to a vote. Anyone else care to speak on this?

ROBERTS: I would like to get a few figures on the population of Molokai, Lanai and Lahaina, if I may.

CHAIRMAN: Will the chairman of the Legislative Powers Committee give us those figures?

HEEN: I will give them in terms of registered voters: Molokai has 1,449, Lanai 701, Lahaina 1,715, or a total of 3,865.

KING: I just wanted to point out that the committee adopted as a general principle that no representative district would have less than two representatives. We discussed the subdivision of Hawaii into smaller units and it was turned down.

CHAIRMAN: You mean the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions?

KING: Yes. If I am in error I would be glad to yield for correction.

WIRTZ: I believe that West Hawaii was divided up one and one. I am trying to be correct in my statements, but there are two districts on the island of Hawaii that have one representative. The original thought of the committee was, as Delegate King stated, to try to get each district to have a minimum of two so that in all likelihood no district would ever get below the proportion of representation to warrant at least one representative.

KING: I am glad to be corrected, but I sat in on a meeting where it had been tentatively decided that no representative district would have less than two. But in the amendment offered by Delegate Ashford, Molokai and Lanai would be set aside with one and that destroys the balance of the rest of Maui. The Chair has noted that two spokesmen from that island spoke in opposition to the amendment. Now I would like to suggest to the delegate from Molokai that in a representative district consisting of Molokai, Lanai and Lahaina, and with a vote of nearly 1,500 on Molokai, Molokai is almost sure to get one of the two allocated to that representative district.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Ashford will close the debate.

ASHFORD: There are just two points I want to make. One is the reference to the counties. That matter of counties has been left wide open for the legislature and we feel that our legitimate aspirations will very soon be recognized. The second point is as to the control of the election. It is true that we have from time to time a representative from Molokai but almost never a representative who gets the highest vote on Molokai of those running from that island. In other words the representative from Molokai is chosen by Maui. Now if it comes to an election of those three segments, the two islands and Lahaina, that is exactly the situation that will exist. Lahaina, Lanai and one precinct of Molokai will probably join together and either elect two men who are from Lahaina or some one from Molokai who is not satisfactory to the voters of Molokai.

HEEN: I might point out this, that if the three areas are combined into one representative district – Molokai, Lanai and Lahaina – that does not mean that Molokai will always be assured of one representative. It will depend how smart they can horse trade with Lahaina. Now, if Lanai does the horse trading with Lahaina, throw all her votes with Lahaina, provided Lahaina helps Lanai, they can elect one representative from Lahaina and one from Lanai and leave Molokai out in the cold. It is all a matter of horse trading.

KAUHANE: This morning prior to the session getting into order a representative or a voter from the island of Molokai came to this floor and visited some of his former colleagues who served with him in the House of Representatives. He sat with me and told me that as far as he is concerned and the people of Molokai are concerned that they believe that the amendment as offered by Delegate Ashford is a proper amendment which meets with the approval of the people of Molokai. He left me with this impression, that if Lahaina, Lanai and Molokai were combined as proposed by the committee proposal that Lanai would be the pendulum upon which the election of a candidate from Molokai would be successful. He felt that presently with the votes that Lahaina has combined with Lanai, Molokai would be left out as suggested by Delegate Heen. So in fairness to the people of Molokai, he feels that Lanai and Molokai should be combined together, and they together elect their representive representing the islands both of Molokai and Lanai.

This request for representation for Molokai was made to the legislature, as I remember, for two sessions. Molokai has come to the legislature requesting representation on the board of supervisors. Molokai feels that they should have such representation on the board of supervisors of the County of Maui. The House of Representatives passed such a request from the people of Molokai that they should be represented on the board of supervisors for the County of Maui. It went to the Senate and the Senate pigeon-holed the bill. They again come to this Convention in the form of their elected delegate and request that they be given some consideration by this august body, and I am sure that the amendment as proposed by the delegate representing the people of Molokai and Lanai should be given great consideration by this delegation and should be voted upon as being the accepted amendment in behalf of the people of Molokai.

KIDO: What the previous speaker said is equally true with Lahaina. For instance, if Molokai and Lanai got together, we would be left in the cold also. So it is a question of politics, I think.

WOOLAWAY: The chairman of this committee mentioned horse trading. The chairman of the Legislative Committee mentioned the chances of Lahaina and Lanai horse trading. That is true, but at least they have a chance of horse trading. If you are going to set up Molokai and Lanai as a separate district, as Delegate Apoliona said, Lanai would never elect anybody. Don't forget Molokai has 1,400 votes, Lanai 700. We ought to be fair to all concerned. As I am saying right now, Lanai would be a point of stabilization there between both other districts, and also we would not be alienating Molokai and Lanai from the rest of the County of Maui where they now belong. I do hope that some day they will be given separate status as a county of Molokai by itself, but until then I think we would be making a very grave mistake for the people of Molokai by making them a separate representative district.

MIZUHA: I speak in favor of the amendment as a former Maui boy. I have lived there most of my lifetime, so I know what the result of this division shall be. Under Delegate Ashford's amendment, we will give Molokai and Lanai one representative for 2,150 registered voters. Under the original proposal of the committee, we would give Lanai, Molokai and Lahaina two representatives for 3,865 registered voters. Dividing that up it would give one representative for 1,900, but in the deal that has come out now they have given Wailuku, representative district number six where I come from originally, two representatives for a total number of 5,594 registered votes, and then went over to representative district number seven and gave them two representatives for only 4,704 votes. In the event Molokai and Lanai are constituted as a single representative district and given one representative, and Lahaina combined with representative districts numbers six and seven, then the five remaining representatives would be alloted to the island of Maui on a fairer percentage of registered voters. If Lahaina seeks consolidation with Wailuku and have Lahaina included in representative district number six, then you would have Wailuku getting a fairer representation or percentage of representatives to the registered vote and I believe the amendment should be adopted.

HOLROYDE: Actually, we are dealing with representatives now, and if that is carried out as Delegate Mizuha suggests, what will be the end result is that Wailuku, as the center of population, will have the representation and Lahaina will be left out in the cold. That was one of the reasons why the committee tried to divide up the island so that we would have representation throughout the island.

AKAU: Mr. Chairman, just before we vote. I think if there had been representation from Molokai in the last legislative session, that the money which had been set aside for those frightful washboard roads in Molokai would be fixed. It stands to reason that if there is representation directly from Molokai, Molokai will see to it that they get the money which is set aside for them, and Maui will not be taking the money away.

WOOLAWAY: Point of information. Did I understand that Delegate Akau said that Molokai was without representation in the legislature?

CHAIRMAN: That was not the Chair's understanding.

AKAU: May I answer that? They were without direct representation. He was not elected from the island of Molokai directly.

CHAIRMAN: If there is no further debate, the Chair will ask Delegate Ashford if she cares to close the debate on this. It is her amendment.

COCKETT: I am not in favor, inasmuch as I am one of the old timers of Maui, having been county treasurer for over twenty-five years. Molokai has been well taken care of. As one of the delegates said, through some gentlemen's agreement we had senators from Molokai, even though Molokai did not have enough votes, and they had representatives and even members of the board of supervisors. So with this amendment Molokai will be assured but poor Lanai will never have a chance. So I am in favor of the committee's proposal making Molokai, Lanai and Lahaina as one district, and either Lanai [sic] will have one as a sure thing, and also, Lahaina will always have one, and I think Lanai in time will have a representative in the House. So I am in favor of the proposal by the committee.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that Delegate Ashford, the proponent of the amendment, should close the debate if she cares to.

ASHFORD: I have no further arguments to make, but I would like to ask for a roll call.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment.

KING: Point of information. Are we voting on the first sentence, "Fifth representative district: the islands of Molokai and Lanai, one representative."

CHAIRMAN: I was just going to ask the delegate from Molokai that question. The amendment was for the entire amendment of the fifth representative district, and yet in all arguments she requested that we vote on it, sentence by sentence. Now, what is your wish, Delegate Ashford?

ASHFORD: I would rather have it voted on sentence by sentence, but it is one amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Wouldn't a vote on the entire amendment satisfy you?

KING: It makes quite a lot of difference. If Molokai and Lanai were created one representative district, then the question rises whether the remaining five should run at large over the whole of Maui, or whether there will be a further division of the island of Maui. There are representatives of the island of Maui who would like an opportunity to be heard on the second sentence of the proposed amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Will Delegate Ashford then amend her motion to read that we vote on the first sentence of this amendment?

ASHFORD: Yes, I would be glad to do that, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? All those in favor of the first sentence of Delegate Ashford's amendment, reading as follows:

> Fifth representative district: the islands of Molokai and Lanai, one representative; signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it.

ST. SURE: Point of order. Delegate Ashford asked for a roll call in the beginning. The Chair did not ask if the floor wanted roll call.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair did not hear any request for a roll call, and did not see a sufficient number of hands for a roll call. If the Chair is wrong about the decision, we will have a roll call.

CROSSLEY: I think the point of order was not well taken because it is the floor that has to ask for the roll call, not the Chair. The Chair asks for the ayes and noes which the Chair did properly. If the floor asks for it, they have to show a sufficient strength.

J. TRASK: Point of order. The Chair just ruled that the ayes have it, so the first sentence is adopted. Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN: Well, there is a question as to the ruling.

SILVA: Point of order. The only way is to take a roll call. The Chair may take a roll call in any way he sees fit. He can have a roll call by ayes and noes, by hands, or by a standing vote, but if the Convention feels that that vote is incorrect, then they may ask for a roll call or any other form they so desire. That is the situation. If the members of this Convention would like to have a roll call, then they should so state. Otherwise the ruling of the Chair is correct.

CHAIRMAN: If the body wants a roll call, the Chair will have a roll call. Apparently there is a sufficient number to require a roll call.

ROBERTS: On a point of order. I think the vote was taken and the vote was carried in the affirmative. If they want to reconsider the question, they know how to reconsider it. It would seem to me that after a vote is taken, you don't ask for a roll call vote. You ask for it before the vote is taken.

SILVA: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. There is no definite determination of an aye vote on the floor, so any delegate may ask for a roll call as its final determination or a standing vote to be counted. If that vote is not challenged, then it is a different question, but the moment that vote is challenged, you must put either a rising vote or ayes and noes.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will recognize Delegate Porteus to get us out of this dilemma.

PORTEUS: I was under the impression that the delegate from Molokai had risen and said that she had nothing further to add on the subject other than to ask for a roll call vote, and I wish we could ascertain from the delegate whether or not she had requested a roll call vote. If she had, the question should then have been put to the floor as to whether or not there should be a roll call vote in which case it would take - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair did not understand that.

PORTEUS: May I ascertain from the delegate whether that is so?

CHAIRMAN: Will you please address the Chair, Delegate Porteus?

PORTEUS: Will the Chair please address the question to the delegate from Molokai?

CHAIRMAN: Is that correct, Delegate Ashford?

ASHFORD: Yes.

KAUHANE: I think your ruling is binding upon this Convention. Although the roll call vote was requested, you abided by such a request for a roll call vote and demanded the roll call vote to be taken in the fashion that you so put. The rules say that the Chair has the right after a voice roll call vote is taken to decide the issue and you have decided the issue that the amendment carried, so there is no confusion in your mind as to the vote taken and I believe your decision is final.

KING: There are two points involved. In the first place, Delegate Ashford did request a roll call and the Chair did not ask if the Convention wanted a roll call. That is one of them. The other one, the Chair was in little doubt on the voice vote but finally decided that the affirmative had it and there was immediately a call from the floor for a roll call, so it seems to me there is no further argument. A roll call is demanded.

CHAIRMAN: I think that is clear enough. The Chair will so rule. We can reconsider the action. The voice vote was erroneously heard by the Chair. The Clerk will please call the roll on the amendment of Delegate Ashford.

MAU: I appeal for the ruling of the Chair, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Before we call the roll, we'll recognize Delegate Mau.

MAU: I was one of those who voted for the amendment. I now move that we reconsider our action on the amendment to give the other side a chance.

SILVA: Mr. Chairman, you don't have to reconsider your action.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has ruled that that is not necessary, Delegate Mau. The Clerk will please proceed to call the roll.

Ayes, 36. Noes, 19 (Apoliona, Bryan, Cockett, Dowson, Fong, Fukushima, Holroyde, Kage, Kanemaru, Kido, King, Kometani, Lai, Larsen, Ohrt, Porteus, Smith, Woolaway, Anthony). Not Voting, 8 (Gilliland, Kawakami, Lee, Nielsen, Okino, Phillips, H. Rice, Richards).

CHAIRMAN: The motion is carried. We'll now proceed with the second sentence. Is that in order, Delegate Ashford, at this time? You offer that?

ASHFORD: I move the adoption of the second sentence.

WIRTZ: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the second sentence of Delegate Ashford's amendment to Proposal No. 29 relating to the sixth representative district, reading as follows: " The islands of Maui and Kahoolawe, five representatives."

WOOLAWAY: I want to amend that amendment. Make Lahaina one separate district, and the others remain as they are.

KIDO: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair does not understand your amendment. Where would you insert those words?

WOOLAWAY: You would have to give Lahaina a separate representative district number there, making it a separate district, and six and seven remaining as they are. All you've done is take Molokai and Lanai away from Lahaina.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is trying to understand your amendment, it confesses it doesn't understand it.

WOOLAWAY: Sixth district, Lahaina; seventh district, Wailuku; eighth district, East Maui.

WIRTZ: I was just waiting to be in order. I would like to ask now from the expert attached to the Legislative Committee whether Lahaina has sufficient votes to warrant a separate representation.

CHAIRMAN: Can you answer that, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: Mr. Dodge says yes. You will remember the ratio was 2,445, and this is over one-half of that ratio.

KING: Speaking in favor of the amendment, what the previous action has done is to create a separate representative district out of the islands of Molokai and Lanai. What the second sentence of this proposed amendment, the one introduced by Delegate Ashford, would [do is] throw Lahaina into the rest of Maui and break up the present two representative districts there and make the whole island of Maui and its pertinent island of Kahoolawe, for whom the Maui people have great hopes in the future, make it all one district, electing five. In other words, we have already destroyed the integrity of two, two, two, and now they are going to further destroy it by having five. So the amendment proposes to create Lahaina as a separate district, electing one representative with something like 1700 odd registered votes and then leave the other two districts as they are, the Wailuku District with two and the Makawao District with two. The amendment was not phrased in the exact correct terminology, but that is the intent of it and I think we could vote on that with the understanding that the Style Committee or the Committee on Legislative Powers will re-write it and then re-number the districts thereafter. The purpose is to give Lahaina representation which, under the amendment proposed by Delegate Ashford, will not exist because it will be thrown in with the centers of population and never have any representation directly from Lahaina.

WIRTZ: I'd just like to point out that even on the two, two, two plan, Wailuku district number six, Central Maui, has the greatest number of votes proportionately to that two, so they were to that extent under-represented; whereas, five and seven were over-represented. Now, if we give Lahaina alone with 1,700 votes one representative, we throw that balance even further out of kilter.

MAU: I believe the amendment is rather indefinite, but we ought to give the movant of the amendment an opportunity later if his amendment carries to give a more specific delineation. I think that ought to be the understanding.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Mau, the Chair was going to ask Delegate Woolaway, if he can get the delegate's attention, the Chair still doesn't quite understand that amendment. Delegate Ashford's amendment, as the Chair understands it, would put the islands of Lanai and Molokai in one representative district and the rest of the County of Maui in another. Is that correct? And yours would do what?

WOOLAWAY: I would leave Maui with three representative districts, Lahaina being one with one representative, and six and seven to remain as they are now shown in the committee report.

CROSSLEY: I move for a five minute recess to have the amendment prepared.

DELEGATE: Mr. Chairman, I don't believe that -- Mr. Chairman.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we take a five minute recess. I think that's a good idea, then Delegate Woolaway can get his -- . The Chair will declare a five minute recess.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will recognize Delegate Woolaway.

WOOLAWAY: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. At this time, I'd like to withdraw my amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Motion to amend is withdrawn.

SMITH: I have an amendment which I'd like to have distributed.

CHAIRMAN: State your amendment. Clerk will distribute it later.

SMITH: Substitute for the sixth, seventh and eighth paragraphs of Section 3 the following: "Fifth representative district: The islands of Molokai, Lanai, Kahoolawe and Maui, six representatives."

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second to that?

COCKETT: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the present County of Maui, as I understand the motion, will be one representative district from which there will be six representatives chosen. Is that the effect of your amendment?

SMITH: Yes, it is, sir, and I'd like to talk on it. What's being passed around is - -

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegates give Delegate Smith their attention, please.

SMITH: I have - - there's an error. It says fifth senatorial district. It's supposed to be fifth representative district. Now, if you look at the map, Maui, central Maui which is numbered six, is your biggest population area, your concentration. We in that area were for the good of representation, spreading it around as far as we could, felt for the good of all that we would condescend to only having two, so that Lanai, Molokai and Lahaina would be given at least a chance. We felt that Lanai needed representation, that if they didn't have that - - if they were unable to have that representation, at least they could have a little behind them to urge Molokai or Lahaina to kokua. This way, it's left it out entirely. If you go ahead and have Molokai and Lanai in one, and the rest of Maui in another, it means that Lanai and Lahaina of approximately 2,300 registered voters, they would just be out on a limb. So, since this amendment for just Molokai alone, Molokai and Lanai, with Lanai not having a chance, I feel that it's only fair to all and that is especially the district of - - WOOLAWAY: Point of order. I hate to do this because I'm in favor of the amendment as proposed by Delegate Smith, but I think the amendment by Delegate Ashford is passed and we'd have to move for reconsideration before we take up this new amendment. Am I right?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair doesn't understand it.

WOOLAWAY: The first sentence has already been carried, making Molokai and Lanai one representative district. The new amendment would bring Molokai, Lanai and Maui into one representative district. We've already made one decision there. I think we'd have to move for a reconsideration. Therefore, I so move.

C. RICE: Point of order. The gentleman who just moved, he's voted in the minority. He can't make that motion. Mr. Chairman, just for harmony's sake, I move we reconsider.

SAKAKIHARA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we reconsider our action on the adoption of the first sentence of Delegate Ashford's amendment. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it. Delegate Smith.

SMITH: I now move this amendment: "Fifth representative district: The islands of Molokai, Lanai, Kahoolawe and Maui, six representatives."

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

COCKETT: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and seconded - -

SMITH: I would like to go a little further. If you notice that this throws it wide open as it was before, and if Molokai feels that they'll be left out the window, why even though a man from Molokai is elected, say by the rest of the islands, he still comes from Molokai and he still has a chance of doing as much as he possibly can for Molokai. And another thing is that Molokai has intentions of becoming a county of its own. That is a problem which will be taken up later, but for harmony's sake, we agreed for this redistricting for the common good of the representation being spread as evenly as possible all around.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understood the purpose of Delegate Ashford's amendment was so that the island of Molokai would get some representation. Your amendment wouldn't do that at all.

SMITH: That's right, but there's quite a few number of persons - - there's quite a few number of other registered voters that would be affected. As far as Molokai is concerned, I believe it's 1,400 or 1,500. There's 2,300 registered voters that will be affected and left out entirely, and they should all be given a chance. I was absolutely in favor to condescend to agree as the proposal was submitted by the committee, but since that is broken up, my coming from Wailuku and Puunene, the biggest population, I don't think it's fair to that area nor any other area.

ASHFORD: Some condescending remarks were made about harmony. This isn't producing harmony.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is ready to put the question. Is there a roll call demanded? Sufficient for a roll call. The Clerk will please call the roll. The Chair will put the question on Delegate Smith's amendment which in substance will place the County of Maui in one district with six representatives, no division.

Ayes, 22. Noes, 32 (Akau, Arashiro, Ashford, Corbett, Doi, Dowson, Hayes, Heen, Ihara, Kanemaru, Kauhane, Kawahara, Kellerman, Lee, Loper, Luiz, Lyman, Mau, Mizuha, Noda, Roberts, Sakai, Serizawa, Shimamura, Silva, St. Sure, A. Trask, J. Trask, Wirtz, Wist, Yamamoto, Yamauchi). Not voting, 9 (Gilliland, Kam, Kawakami, Nielsen, Okino, Phillips, H. Rice, Richards, White).

CHAIRMAN: The motion is lost.

ASHFORD: I move for the adoption of my entire amendment.

ST. SURE: I second that motion.

TAVARES: As one of those who originally voted with the group on Molokai, I'd like to state that I have changed my mind. I've seen the result of trying to destroy a plan which I believe has been carefully worked out by a committee that worked very hard to get some order out of chaos, and after this last demonstration of what destroying a carefully worked out plan does in one particular, and seeing what it may lead to in practically every other precinct being re-hashed, I believe that we should stick to the committee's recommendation. I don't believe that enough reasons -- enough information can be given us in the time we have available to enable us to vote any more intelligently than the committee after its hard work has done, and from now on, I think I will stick to the committee's recommendations. I hope the rest of the Convention does because this is what happens when we don't.

LOPER: I would like to second that motion. I feel exactly the same way.

CHAIRMAN: That was not a motion, Delegate Loper. It was an expression of sentiment.

LOPER: Didn't you make a motion for reconsideration?

CHAIRMAN: No motion is before the house other than a motion to adopt Delegate Ashford's amendment.

TAVARES: I was simply arguing against the motion, and arguing that we should not vote for it, but try to stick to the original plan.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion on the question of Delegate Ashford's amendment? All those in favor, signify by saying "aye." Roll call? The Clerk will call the roll.

WIRTZ: This is on the amendment in its entirety.

CHAIRMAN: On the amendment in its entirety.

Ayes, 34. Noes, 20 (Apoliona, Bryan, Cockett, Crossley, Dowson, Fong, Fukushima, Holroyde, Kanemaru, Kellerman, Kido, King, Kometani, Lai, Larsen, Loper, Ohrt, Porteus, Smith, Tavares). Not voting, 9 (Gilliland, Kam, Kawakami, Nielsen, Okino, Phillips, H. Rice, Richards, White).

CHAIRMAN: The ayes have it. The amendment is adopted.

HEEN: It seems to me that we should take up the first representative district which comprises the district of Puna in the island of Hawaii, plus the portion of Keaukaha, as Keaukaha is described in the schedule, as that area has one representative district.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, may the Chair make an inquiry? If there's no substantial dispute among the Hawaii delegation, would it not save time to take up the entire representative districts from the Island of Hawaii?

HEEN: That's correct. If there is no dispute among that delegation, why we can dispose of that.

SAKAKIHARA: I would like to have Delegate Heen bring that up.

CHAIRMAN: We'd like to know whether that is the feeling of the Hawaii delegation before we --

SAKAKIHARA: I think an amendment is in order as to the first representative district by deleting Keaukaha. Amend Section 3, first representative district to read as follows: "that portion of the island of Hawaii known as the district of Puna, one representative," and deleting "and Keaukaha, the latter being more particularly described in the schedule."

HEEN: That amendment, has that been seconded?

CHAIRMAN: Not yet.

SILVA: I'll second for the --

HEEN: That amendment means this, that that portion of the island known as Puna, that's the way it's described in the Organic Act—Puna is known as the District of Puna but described in the Organic Act as Puna—to be one representative district with one representative. Now in order to find out whether Puna alone with the number of registered voters is entitled to one representative, I don't know. I understand the number of registered voters in the District of Puna is 1,819, so that under the method of equal proportions it would be entitled to one representative.

CHAIRMAN: May the Chair ask the chairman of the Legislative Powers Committee, was the Hawaii delegation in favor of the committee proposal as it was brought to the floor?

HEEN: Yes. At one time the island of Hawaii was to be divided into two district, East Hawaii, one district and West Hawaii, one district. Then later on, the delegation in that committee from Hawaii decided to divide East Hawaii into three districts, one to consist of Puna and a part of Keaukaha, another to consist of Hamakua and North Hilo as one district, and the rest of East Hawaii to constitute one district.

BRYAN: I might explain why this combination was made in the first instance by the committee. We tried, as we explained concerning the districts of Maui, to make the districts large enough so that the figures would approach the common denominator of 2,445. Puna when combined with Keaukaha came to 2,355, which was a good approximation. Now, we wanted to do that to give them leeway so that they would always be, or at least for the foreseeable future, a district entitled to one representative. In the reapportionment section, I think it's set up so that when any district does not have registered voters equal to one-half of our common denominator of 2,445, it should be combined with some other district.

Now we've broken the precedent on that in changing the districts on Maui and we have one district with -- that's not really breaking the precedent, but it's reducing the size of the district the committee recommended, so actually this change is not too far out of order. The only danger is that they would only have to drop about six hundred votes in that area, or the rest of the territory to increase proportionately in their representation in their number of votes, so that district would not be entitled to any representation. In other words, if they dropped down to 1,200, they would have to be redistricted and combined with some other district, and we tried to arrange the districts so that the number was approximately 2,400 wherever possible. Now having gone off that standard in some respect, I don't know that there's tremendous argument for keeping it the way it is, in my own mind, but that is my personal opinion.

CHAIRMAN: It would appear to the Chair that it would be of interest to the Hawaii delegation to keep it as the committee proposed it. Delegate Sakakihara, have you heard that explanation?

SAKAKIHARA: I have heard that explanation. When we incorporated precinct nine, which is known as Keaukaha, with Puna we tried to maintain the common denominator of 2,445. In view of the fact that Lanai and Molokai have deviated from that denominator, it is not necessary for Hawaii to maintain that common denominator of 2,445, and I therefore make the amendment to delete Keaukaha and establish a single representative district for the district of Puna with one representative.

HEEN: I think it might be in order for me to ask the last speaker this question. Then what would become of that portion of Keaukaha that was intended to be joined up with Puna?

SAKAKIHARA: Keaukaha would be incorporated into the South Hilo.

HEEN: South Hilo alone, without Hamakua and North Hilo, is that correct?

SAKAKIHARA: Correct.

HEEN: There's another question. I was wondering whether that by adding Keaukaha or that portion of Keaukaha that was intended to be joined up with Puna, by adding that to South Hilo, would South Hilo receive additional representative?

SAKAKIHARA: No.

HEEN: It would not.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Sakakihara's motion simply is for the deletion, as the Chair understands it, of the words "and Keaukaha." Is that correct, Delegate Sakakihara?

SAKAKIHARA: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: In the first representative district, "that portion of the island of Hawaii known as Puna and the latter being more particularly described in the schedule, one representative"?

KING: The language to be cut out is "and Keaukaha, the latter being more particularly described in the schedule." That goes out also because that description was only to Keaukaha.

CHAIRMAN: Oh, that description relates only to Keaukaha, is that right?

KING: Puna is already described as a geographic division in the Organic Act.

CHAIRMAN: Then the amendment would read: "That portion of the island of Hawaii known as Puna, one representative." Is that correct?

SAKAKIHARA: Correct.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question?

HEEN: For the purpose of helping the clerks in this matter, the amendment should be this: That after the word "Puna" insert a comma in the second line of that particular paragraph, and delete the words "and Keaukaha, the latter being more particularly described in the schedule," delete all those words. Then the clerk can figure that out. It'll be easier for the clerk to figure that out.

KING: I'd like to confirm what Delegate Tavares said a moment ago when Delegate Ashford's amendment carried. It upset the schedule, the program set up by the majority of the committee, and opened the gate to a great many more amendments which I think the delegates are not too familiar with at the moment. Also, I have already granted leave to be absent to six and seven members of this delegation, some who are not going to be back until Monday. So I now move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

C. RICE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: You heard the motion that we rise and report progress. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

JULY 1, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole please come to order.

SAKAKIHARA: Yesterday afternoon when this Committee of the Whole rose to report progress and asked to sit again, we were deliberating on the amendment I offered to amend Section 3 relating to reapportionment, namely, first representative district; to define the boundaries of the representative district for the first representative district so that the first representative district would read as follows: "That portion of the island of Hawaii, known as Puna, one representative."

CHAIRMAN: You make such a motion, Delegate - -

SAKAKIHARA: I do, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: And is it seconded?

YAMAUCHI: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is ready to put the question on this and the understanding of the Chair is this is a non-controversial amendment. We will take a vote on it.

DOI: I can't say I am for the amendment nor can I say I am against it. I believe this is a question which relates directly with the problem of Hawaii and it should concern every delegate from Hawaii. I noticed there are quite a few absent this morning and I believe it is the feeling of this Convention this morning not to concern itself with Section 3, the apportionment problem. Why can't we leave this thing on the table for awhile till the rest of the delegation comes back to the Convention and handle this like we do the others.

CHAIRMAN: Well, we could either do that, Delegate Doi, or move for - - put the question, and you can vote with the majority; then when the rest of your group comes back on Monday or Tuesday, it could be reconsidered when we deal with this section. I think that would be more expeditious.

SMITH: I'd like to ask the chairman of the committee, as far as the report is concerned, what effect will that make?

HEEN: Do I understand if this amendment were to be adopted, what effect would it have on the report? The effect would be that other amendments will have to be made in the latter part of that section to conform to this amendment.

SMITH: I don't believe that we can, at this time - - we don't have enough members from Hawaii and I don't think that it should be voted on until all of them are here. I don't think it's fair to anyone.

CROSSLEY: It seems to me that if all we're going to do is go through the form of voting today, with the idea that it can be reconsidered on Monday, with the idea that that's going to change it, then we're just wasting time. Let's go on to something that we think we can pass that will stay passed.

CHAIRMAN: In view of the statements made on the floor, the Chair is of that view, Delegate Sakakihara. Your motion to amend this section should go over until the Hawaii delegation is here and have some debate on it. Will you - -

SAKAKIHARA: We have the Hawaii delegation here, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Nielsen isn't here, is he?

SAKAKIHARA: He's the West Hawaii delegate. This reapportionment is East Hawaii.

DOI: Delegate Okino and Delegate Luiz are not here from East Hawaii.

YAMAMOTO: Mr. Chairman, for your point of inforation, I would like to say that since I sent a message back to Hilo, I had a phone call last night to hold this matter up until Wednesday. Will it be possible?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will entertain a motion to defer this.

KING: If objections are raised from some of the East Hawaii delegation, I think it should be deferred. We thought at the beginning it was a minor matter. Originally Keaukaha was added to Puna merely to increase the voting strength of that particular representative district, and the separation of Keaukaha, placing it back with Hilo to which it belongs geographically and as a part of the urban area of Hilo city, would be the logical thing to do. But if there are objections I would suggest that Delegate Sakakihara withdraw his amendment at this time so that we can go on with other provisions of the proposal.

CHAIRMAN: I suggested that too, but apparently the delegate is unwilling, therefore the Chair will entertain - -

SAKAKIHARA: I withdraw my amendment.

FONG: I move that we defer consideration of Sections 3 and 4 until all the delegates get back here.

APOLIONA: I second Delegate Fong's motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that all action on Sections 3 and 4 be deferred.

TAVARES: I think there should be a definite date of deferment. All of the delegates might not get back for a long time. I think we can then - -

CHAIRMAN: That's why the Chair didn't put the question in the form of a statement as stated by Delegate Fong.

FONG: Until Wednesday, Mr. Chairman.

HEEN: A motion was made yesterday along the line stated by Delegate Sakakihara this morning. The record will show that an action upon that motion was deferred until a later time, so I think the record should be kept that way. When we reconvene say on Wednesday then that same motion can be brought up; otherwise the record will be somewhat confused.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question?

SAKAKIHARA: I have a motion to offer.

CHAIRMAN: There is a motion pending before the house, Delegate Sakakihara.

SAKAKIHARA: Will the Chair kindly restate the motion?

CHAIRMAN: Can't hear you.

SAKAKIHARA: What is the motion pending before the house?

CHAIRMAN: The motion is that action on Sections 3 and 4 be deferred.

SAKAKIHARA: May I amend that motion? I desire to amend that motion upon the grounds that there are a great many delegates who are not present this morning.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair did not understand that statement, Delegate Sakakihara. You move to amend it?

SAKAKIHARA: Amend it upon the grounds that there are a great many delegates who are not present here. Proposal 29 is a very important proposal. I move at this time that action on Committee Proposal No. 29 be deferred till Wednesday when all the delegates are here.

HAYES: Second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: That's not an amendment to Delegate Fong's motion. The Chair will so rule.

TAVARES: I think the words "when all the delegates are here" ought to be left out of the motion. That is our hope that they will be here but if by any chance they don't all get here on Wednesday, it seems to me we shouldn't add that as a condition. If we want to defer until Wednesday and then there are some people that we feel we should defer further for, we can decide at that time. I think the motion ought to be to defer to a definite period. Then let the Convention act at that date.

SILVA: At this time I move we rise, report progress, and beg leave to sit again.

SAKAKIHARA: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: That motion is in order.

KING: I don't know whether that motion is debatable or not but when we went into the Committee of the Whole this morning it was with the understanding, that had not been generally agreed upon of course but a few of us discussed it, that we could go ahead with Section 1 and then skip to Section 5 of Proposal No. 29. Those are non-controversial features of the Committee Proposal No. 29, and if we could dispose of that much ground, then on Wednesday we will be prepared to take up the controversial features of Sections 3 and 4. I hope that the motion to rise and report progress will not carry for that reason, unless there is serious objection and unless there is some feeling that Sections 5, 6, 7 and so forth are controversial, and if they are, then the best thing to do is for the committee to rise.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? The question is on the motion to rise and report progress. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Motion is lost.

The Chair will now put the question on Delegate Fong's motion that action on Sections 3 and 4 be deferred.

ROBERTS: I'd like to speak in favor of postponing action on Section 3 but on Section 4, regardless of the districts we adopt under 3, the problem is a general one and I personally believe that we can handle it this morning. If the movant would accept an amendment so that only Section 3 would be deferred and we could take up Section 4, I would like to so move.

FONG: I think that if we find enough time, I think we can reconsider that motion. There'll be a lot of questions here on Sections 5, 6 and 7, and it will take time.

CHAIRMAN: That appears feasible. Is that satisfactory to you, Delegate Roberts?

ROBERTS: After we try five, come back to four?

CHAIRMAN: No, the delegate's suggestion is that there is ample material that will consume the rest of the morning and if we have any time left over we can reconsider our action, and proceed to five.

ROBERTS: All right.

TAVARES: I should like to move to amend the previous motion so that there will be attached to it the following condition: That whatever action we take at this time, in view of the smallness of the delegation here, shall be subject to a motion to reconsider by any person, whether he votes in the affirmation or the negative, next week.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule that motion out of order. We have rules governing this body.

CROSSLEY: Point of information, will you state the motion, please?

CHAIRMAN: The motion is that we defer action on Sections 3 and 4.

CROSSLEY: Until when?

HEEN: Until Wednesday, as I understand the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Until Wednesday.

CROSSLEY: Until Wednesday.

WOOLAWAY: I'll second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it.

ARASHIRO: I now move for the tentative adoption of Section 5.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

HEEN: May I suggest that we start with Section 1?

CHAIRMAN: I think that'll be more in order.

HEEN: That will be in proper order. I move the adoption of Section 1.

SAKAKIHARA: Second that.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 1 be adopted. Any discussion?

SAKAKIHARA: Question.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Unanimous.

HEEN: I move the adoption then of Section 2 -- no, no, not Section 2.

WOOLAWAY: Section 5.

CHAIRMAN: Section 5.

CROSSLEY: I check, I second his motion. I second Section 2.

SAKAKIHARA: Second Section 5.

HEEN: That's right, Section 5. May I ask the -- perhaps this should be in a form of a motion to amend. The word "elections" in the second line -- "election" in the second line just before the period should be in the plural instead of singular. I move that amendment.

ROBERTS: Second that.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the word "election" appearing in the second line of Section 5 be changed by adding an "s" before the period to read "elections."

SAKAKIHARA: So that it will read "general elections"?

HEEN: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: The plural instead of the singular. Is there any discussion? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

PORTEUS: Mr. Chairman, what is the vote on?

HEEN: That's the adoption of Section 5, or the amendment?

PORTEUS: Oh, the amendment, all right.

CHAIRMAN: Section 5 has now been amended, the first sentence by adding an "s" to the word "election."

CROSSLEY: I now move for the adoption of Section 5, as amended.

TAVARES: I have a further amendment to propose.

CHAIRMAN: Wait till we get the section before the house.

TAVARES: Well, has that not been adopted?

CHAIRMAN: No, it has not. Is there a second to Delegate Crossley's motion?

SERIZAWA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 5 be adopted.

TAVARES: I move that in the third line of Section 5, after the first word "the" we insert the words "term of" and then in that line and next line delete the words "for a term of" so that that second sentence will read: "The term of office of members of the House of Representatives shall be"

CHAIRMAN: Just a little slower, will you please, Delegate Tavares.

TAVARES: Insert after the word "the," the first "the" in the third line of Section 5, the words "term of," and then delete in the same and the next line the words "for a term of," so that --

HEEN: I don't just get that.

TAVARES: Well, I will read it with the amendment.

HEEN: May I ask the speaker if he is referring to the mimeographed copy of the proposal?

TAVARES: Yes, Mr. Chairman, on page 6, the third line starts out with the words "the office of," and I suggest that it read "The term of office of members of the House of Representatives shall be," then delete the words "for a term of." I think it reads better that way, it will --

CHAIRMAN: Couldn't the Style Committee change that, Delegate Tavares. Isn't that just a matter of style?

MAU: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: I think so.

TAVARES: Well, we've made some other changes too. "Elections" is a matter of style.

CHAIRMAN: I agree.

ARASHIRO: I second that motion.

HAYES: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: What motion do you second?

ARASHIRO: I second Delegate Tavares' motion.

HAYES: I second Delegate Tavares' motion.

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegates who are not addressing the Chair please take their seats so the Chair will know who wants to be recognized.

FUKUSHIMA: I think that the last amendment is purely a matter of style, nothing else.

CHAIRMAN: Two delegates felt otherwise and want to put it to a vote. The Chair agrees with you, Delegate Fukushima.

TAVARES: With that understanding, I withdraw my motion.

CHAIRMAN: It is withdrawn.

TAVARES: However, I have a question to ask and that is, we are going to have, I hope, a legislative council. It seems to me that this is awkward, to have the term of office commence with the date of general election, because our sessions do not start on that date. And when you have a legislative council, which is in effect a holdover committee, you always have a hiatus for the two-year term members of the House. I think it's proper to have your term expire on the date of the next general election -- I mean expire at the beginning of the next general session of the legislature so that your holdovers will surely be in office during that period. That is the policy followed in Congress. You do have a "lame duck" session, but you very seldom have a special session called.

CHAIRMAN: Do you have an amendment, Delegate Tavares?

TAVARES: Well, then, I move that the --

CROSSLEY: Mr. Chairman, will he yield for a question?

CHAIRMAN: Will the speaker yield?

CROSSLEY: Will the speaker yield?

TAVARES: Yes.

CROSSLEY: Don't you think we should provide in there, Mr. Chairman, also in the event of a special session being called from the time of the election until the regular or the general session is called? Because a special session could be called in that interim period and the people have been elected to office. Therefore, the term should begin, it would seem to me, on the date of being sworn in at the first general or any special session called between the time of their election and the first general session.

CHAIRMAN: Will the gentleman answer that question?

TAVARES: Well, of course that gives us a somewhat indefinite time, but I imagine that could be worked out. It would take a little more intricate wording to provide for that. I wonder if the chairman of the committee would comment on that suggestion.

HEEN: The provision here with reference to the House you will find in the Organic Act. It would seem to me that insofar as the legislative council is concerned, if it's going to be created under the Constitution and implemented by legislation, the members of that council, even though they may be members of the legislature at the time they were appointed, could hold over beyond their term. It's a body created by the Constitution and legislation implementing the Constitution.

TAVARES: If that is taken care of in the legislative council section, I will withdraw any proposed amendment.

HEEN: I might add that the point raised by the last speaker would apply if it were a legislative committee where all the members must be members of the legislature.

TAVARES: I'm satisfied, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will now put the question. It's on the adoption of Section 5, as amended, with the "s" on "election." All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's carried.

HEEN: I now move for the adoption of Section 6.

SAKAKIHARA: I rise to a point of information. Will the chairman of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions explain to the Committee of the Whole as to how this election will operate in the event this Constitution is ratified by the people and approved by the President and the Congress of the United States, and in the meantime, the Congress will take a recess, say till November of this year, rather than adjourning, and the Enabling Act is passed by the Congress of the United States? In the meantime the territorial delegate -- senators would have been elected.

CHAIRMAN: Will you answer that, Delegate Heen.

HEEN: The Committee considered that problem and it'll have to be taken care of in the schedule.

CHAIRMAN: In other words, there could be an ordinance to that effect, Delegate Sakakihara, that would take care of it.

SAKAKIHARA: There are quite a few members of the Committee of the Whole who are not members of the committee and who are not familiar with that very question and they are rather confused about it.

HEEN: H. R. 49 requires a special election after the Constitution is approved by the Congress and the President, so that that matter will have to be taken care of in the schedule and not in the ordinance as someone stated because the amendment to H. R. 49 as passed out of the Senate committee has eliminated all references to ordinances. I think that was checked yesterday.

SHIMAMURA: May I say in reply to the question raised as to special elections that there is an ordinance already provided for and the only amendment necessary will be that the word "ordinance" be deleted, and also that, "upon the approval of the Congress of the United States," instead of "the President."

AKAU: I'd like to ask the delegate from the fourth district, the chairman, a question. If you have in Section 6, that we've been discussing, "as prescribed by law" -- we're discussing 6, are we not? If you have "as prescribed by law," do you need the rest of that -- those next two lines, and if no provision is made, will it not be prescribed by law?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Akau, that is essential. There either has to be a provision by law or you've got to take care of it some way. This gives the governor the power if the legislature doesn't act.

AKAU: Well, aren't we assuming then the legislature won't act.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. This fills in the hole in case the legislature doesn't act.

AKAU: Well, my question is, we're assuming the legislature doesn't act, but it usually does, so I still don't see why we need it and why we shouldn't delete it.

CHAIRMAN: This is just an abundance of caution. No doubt they will act, but this will just fill in the hole in case they don't.

ASHFORD: I thought we were asking questions about Section 5 still, and may I ask one question in regard to that, not attacking the fact that it has been adopted. Would it not be proper to put into the schedule a provision for short term senators in the first election? Otherwise they will come up at every election, all of them.

HEEN: That's correct. That problem has been considered and a provision will be made in the schedule to take care of that situation. It's quite a complex matter.

LEE: I believe -- I am not sure, has there been a second to your motion, Delegate Heen?

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 6 be adopted, Delegate Lee.

LEE: I was just going to second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's carried.

HEEN: I now move the adoption of Section 7.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

WIRTZ: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 7 be adopted, any discussion? If not, all in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's carried.

HEEN: I now move the adoption of Section 8.

BRYAN: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's moved and seconded that Section 8 be adopted. Any discussion? All those in favor - -

WIRTZ: I didn't notice this till now, but isn't there a little confusion there? "No person while holding any public office, position or employment." Is it perfectly clear that that refers entirely to public state offices, state and county offices and employment?

CHAIRMAN: What was your question? The Chair didn't hear you, Delegate Wirtz?

WIRTZ: My question is whether there might be some confusion when you get down to the question of employment?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, will you please answer that?

HEEN: This language was chosen deliberately to apply to all territorial officers, employees and all officers and employees of any political subdivision and if you will look on page 11, of the committee report, you will find concise explanation for the form of that Section 8. If I may read it:

> Section 8, which is derived from but somewhat broader than Section 17 of the Organic Act, disqualifies any person while holding any public office, position or employment from being elected to or from taking or holding a seat in the legislature.

That is where there might be an appointment in case of a vacancy.

> The difference being that the proposed section applies to persons holding public positions or employment as well as public offices. It is not to be construed, however, to prevent a member of the legislature from being re-elected or to prevent a member of either house from being elected to the other.

WIRTZ: Well, my - - perhaps I didn't state my - - Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate - - I'm sorry, Delegate Wirtz.

WIRTZ: Maybe I didn't state my question very clearly. Is this intended to preclude any one who is holding a position on a - -

CHAIRMAN: An advisory council or something like that?

WIRTZ: Advisory council, juvenile council.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair had that in mind too, Delegate Heen. Could a member of the legislature sit on an advisory council created under the act of the State?

HEEN: Oh, I think if the Constitution itself provides that there may be a legislative council and that the members can sit on that council - -

CHAIRMAN: No, that wasn't the question. Suppose the Welfare Department has an advisory council, could a member of the legislature sit on such a council, such a board?

LEE: Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt for a moment. Perhaps I might suggest to the chairman of the committee, as was done in the judiciary article, that the words "of profit" be inserted after the word "employment." I believe Delegate Wirtz has a very good point, even though your majority report covers it as to what it means generally, but it would seem to me the words "of profit" would take care of the problem raised by Delegate Wirtz.

HEEN: That's in Section 10, with reference to positions of profit, but this is a disqualification on the part of a person who seeks election or seeks appointment to the legislature so that—may I continue —so that if anyone holding public office or position of any kind desires to run for election to the legislature, he must resign from that office or position.

WIRTZ: I think that answers my question. I was concerned about whether a person on an advisory committee, who wanted to run for office, had to first resign and I think that's been answered.

SHIMAMURA: The chairman of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions mentioned territorial and city and county officers and employees. I take it that Section 8 will certainly disqualify federal officers and also federal employees.

HEEN: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for - -

ASHFORD: I would like to ask if the committee makes any distinction between the words "position" or "employment" and "office." Does "position" add anything at all to that?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen.

ASHFORD: In other words I want to know whether it's style or substance?

HEEN: Perhaps those two words are synonymous, and the Style Committee can give it some study and delete one or the other.

APOLIONA: I would like to ask the chairman of this committee a question.

CHAIRMAN: Proceed.

APOLIONA: Delegate Heen, will you clarify the status of the police reserves in Honolulu Police Department in this section here?

HEEN: If they are holding an office of any kind or a position of any kind that particular person would be disqualified from seeking election to the legislature. It may be that if there is any question about it, he can resign.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, would this apply to the National Guard as well if they seek election to the legislature?

HEEN: If they are employees. If they are public employees, it would bar.

A. TRASK: The chairman has explained to Judge Wirtz' inquiry that "eligible to election to" would prevent a person being eligible to be a candidate for office if he holds a position. Now, if that is the meaning of that Section 8, is it necessary to have the additional words "or to a seat in"? Because if the person is ineligible to become a candidate for office, obviously he cannot have a - - be entitled to a seat to that position.

HEEN: You will note that the language states "shall not be eligible to election to." That's one problem. The other one is where a vacancy occurs and a successor is appointed, might be appointed by the governor.

TAVARES: I personally believe that this provision is too tight, and for the purpose of enabling me to speak in order, I move an amendment by inserting after the word -- between the words, "any" and "public," in the second line, the word "salaried."

DOI: Second the motion.

TAVARES: Now in support of that motion --

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute, wait until we get the amendment.

TAVARES: Insert between the words "any" and "public" in the second line, the word "salaried." Mr. Chairman, my reason for this—that may not be the right word—but my reason for suggesting any amendment is this. At the present time a legislator can't even hold the office of notary public. Such a provision is too tight. He may have a per diem job that occupies him two or three days a year and he's got to resign that in order to run for legislative office. I don't believe that a legislator needs to be insulated that much against competition by public officers and employees. It seems to me a little bit -- sort of trying to protect the position of those who are in the legislature from competition. Now, I am in favor of not having salaried officers and employees run, and if it's improper to have others run the Civil Service laws can take care of that. It's a legislative matter, Mr. Chairman, after you get past the stage of salaried officers or employees, and it seems to me that not even allowing a legislator to be a National Guardsman—of course he's an employee if he's a National Guardsman—not even allowing him to be a police reserve, not even allowing him to be a notary public, perhaps not even allowing him to be a master.

CHAIRMAN: A what!

TAVARES: A master.

CHAIRMAN: Oh.

TAVARES: Those are public officers.

CROSSLEY: I would also like to speak to the point that Delegate Tavares has raised, and I hope I'm not misunderstood. I think that the point Delegate Tavares raised was raised also in the committee. There was considerable discussion. At the time I had thought we were going to insert the words "of profit" in there, which has been suggested by two other delegates today, the same provision that we have in the judiciary. I would like to ask the last speaker if after "employment," the insertion of the words "of profit" in the third line would do the same thing as "salaried" after "any," or perhaps "salaried" would take care of profit and wouldn't make an exception of notary publics whereas maybe "salaried" would. If that is the intent, why then all right. Otherwise, I think "of profit" is a more inclusive term and would meet the needs.

CHAIRMAN: Notary public does not get any salaries from the state.

A. TRASK: Following the expressions of Delegate Tavares, which I agree, I think the public want to decide whether a candidate is going to be elected, whether he holds a public office or not. I think it's a little too stringent. I think there ought to be a reverse English on this situation to put it in this fashion: "No member of the legislature shall hold any office, position or employment of this State," or "under this State."

HEEN: That's in Section 10, that problem.

CHAIRMAN: This relates to eligibility for election, Delegate Trask.

A. TRASK: We ought to consider deleting that entire Section 8.

HEEN: I might state that if you are going to confine this to persons who have salaries then there are a lot of persons who are members of commissions who do not get salaries, and they should not be appointed -- I mean be eligible for election to the legislature while they hold those offices. There are numerous commissions where the members of those commissions receive no compensation whatever.

CHAIRMAN: You're thinking of the Public Utility Commission, and the Harbor Board.

HEEN: No, I think Public Utilities, they do get some compensation, but the commissions, the Board of Osteopathy, Optometry, Board of Agriculture, I think they receive no salaries. There are lots of others. Board of Cosmeticians, they receive no salary, Naturopathy and so on down the line.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate King.

KING: Delegate Loper was trying to get attention a moment ago.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Loper, I'm sorry.

LOPER: I wanted to ask a question of the chairman of the committee. Whether it was the intention, I assume it is, that people who are members of the school board, or Commissioners of Public Instruction would not be permitted to run for the legislature?

HEEN: That's correct, in this language, or the members of the Board of Regents. The members of the Board of Education would not be eligible to seek election to the legislature or to be appointed to the legislature to fill a vacancy. They can do this in order to make themselves eligible both to election and appointment, by resigning their office. There is no complication there, they can resign.

LOPER: Was it the intention of the committee also to then exclude members of the newly created Territorial Commission on Children and Youth from running for the territorial legislature?

HEEN: That's correct, it'll take care of them too. If they want to run, let them resign.

LOPER: Mr. Chairman, a third question. Is it the intention to exclude people on retirement that are drawing a pension from the Territory or from the State?

HEEN: When they are in retirement they no longer hold any position or office. They are in retirement.

TAVARES: I believe still that there are some pertinent arguments made by the chairman which should be considered and which are sound. I still think that a provision can be drawn to take care of that, narrowly enough drawn, to take care of the situation I have in mind where non-policy forming officers who don't get compensation can still run, or or employees who don't -- who are not -- certain types of employees can still run. I therefore move to defer action on this section until after other consideration.

DELEGATES: Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman!

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would appreciate it if three delegates wouldn't speak at the same time. The Chair is trying to recognize Delegate Crossley, for a second. You do second it, do you?

CROSSLEY: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we take this up at a later time in the discussion of this article.

SILVA: I move we defer this until Wednesday, then.

CHAIRMAN: That wasn't the Chair's understanding of the motion.

SILVA: I amend the motion to defer until Wednesday. A motion to defer at a certain time is always in order.

ASHFORD: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that this be deferred until Wednesday. You accept the amendment?

CROSSLEY: I will accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor -- Delegate Roberts.

ROBERTS: I have no objection to deferment, but I would like to raise one or two questions for the chairman of the Legislative Committee.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts, if you have no objection, can't we put the question and you can do that at another time?

ROBERTS: Sorry.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HOLROYDE: Did the movant of that motion accept the amendment?

CHAIRMAN: Yes.

HOLROYDE: The second did?

CHAIRMAN: Yes.

TAVARES: I didn't do it through the loudspeaker, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Deferred until Wednesday.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman.

> Section 9. Privileges of members. No member of the legislature shall be held to answer before any other tribunal for any statement made or action taken in the exercise of his legislative functions in either house; and members of the legislature shall, in all cases except treason, felony or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses, and in going to and returning from the same.

If you will turn to page 11 of the committee report, you will find there a concise explanation of that section. I move for the adoption of that section.

HOLROYDE: I will second the motion.

WOOLAWAY: I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. I'm wondering if he's just worrying about the $3,000,000 suit which is now pending against him.

CHAIRMAN: That's out of order.

HEEN:

> Section 9 sets forth the privileges of members of the legislature. The immunity from liability of members of the legislature has been enlarged to include "any statement made or action taken" in the exercise of legislative functions, as compared to section 28 of the Organic Act, which limits the immunity to "words uttered." The proposed section is intended to cover written as well as oral statements and any action taken in the exercise of legislative functions, in the broadest sense. The provision for exemption from arrest is the same as contained in section 29 of the Organic Act, except that the ten-day limitation on going to and returning from sessions has been omitted.

Now, there's always some question, at least in my mind, whether the term "words uttered" meant oral statements and someone may claim that that includes written statements, but here the committee has definitely used the term "any statement that may be made" whether uttered or in writing. Then the committee went one step further to include in this privilege any action that might have been taken, so that the action, for instance, of the legislature in passing Act 2 of the special session of 1949 relative to the water-front strike, would be definitely creating an immunity on the part of the legislature from any $3,000,000 suit.

KELLERMAN: May I propose an amendment to line 5 of Section 9? Delete the word "treason." I think that came into the section from the Organic Act. We have deleted the section on treason from the Bill of Rights. Treason is, of course, a felony. I see no reason for the duplication and mentioning the crime independently. So I would move the deletion of that word and the comma that follows it.

SMITH: I'll second that.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion?

SHIMAMURA: May I ask a question regarding that? When we discussed the sections on the Bill of Rights and the other pertinent section on treason, wasn't that especially with reference to treason against the government of the State of Hawaii?

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. And this statement is treason generally against the United States.

SHIMAMURA: Yes, I was wondering about that.

ASHFORD: It seems to me that the point of Delegate Kellerman's proposed amendment is that if we write in "treason" as well as "felony," it raises the question as to what felony is, whether treason is or is not a felony.

TAVARES: I agree with the last delegate and with the proponent of the motion. I think that the word "treason" is utterly redundant. Treason is a felony; felony covers everything; why put in an extra word there. It's just a carry over from ancient times, it's absolutely unnecessary.

HEEN: Speaking for myself, I have no objection to the striking out of the word "treason."

CHAIRMAN: Could the chairman of the committee enlighten the chairman as to what section of the Federal Constitution this is found in?

HEEN: I believe this is found in the Organic Act.

KAWAHARA: In the Federal Constitution, I believe in Section 6.

HEEN: Section 29 in the Organic Act.

CHAIRMAN: I might call the body's attention to Section 6 of Article I of the Federal Constitution, that > in all such Cases, except Treason, Felony and Breach of the Peace, be privileged from Arrest during their Attendance at the Session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any Speech or Debate in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other Place.

Is this as broad as the immunity conferred under the Federal Constitution, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: I didn't quite - -

CHAIRMAN: Is your section as broad as the immunity conferred under the Federal Constitution?

HEEN: Broader.

CHAIRMAN: It involves the deletion of the word "treason."

SILVA: I would prefer to leave the word in there even though it has probably the same meaning. Any person elected to the legislature and creates such an act, it shouldn't be pointed out to him if he does. If the act is treason he should be pointed out as a traitor, and the word - - the statement "treason" should be left in there for that purpose. If he's a legislator - -

CHAIRMAN: The thing that Delegate Tavares was pointing out, and Delegate Kellerman, was that treason is a felony. Now it is a kind of felony which has a statutory definition in the Federal Constitution and presumably that's why the framers of the Federal Constitution used both words in the Federal Constitution.

SILVA: Well, I realize that. I just want it so that people can know that in their Constitution that that word can be pointed out to them, that's what he did right there. Never mind about the felony - - even though it's a felony, but the legislator did that, that's the word and he's a traitor.

TAVARES: There is nothing to prevent the legislature, or either house of the legislature, if it removes one of its members for treason, which is a felony, from saying they're removing for that felony which is treason. It's absolutely open to them. Putting treason in here is like saying "rice and food." "Food" includes "rice" so why mention "rice." You've got a million other things you could mention also.

LEE: Of course, Mr. Chairman, I agree with the last speaker but I remember the committee voted once to include the word "commitment" [sic] after the word "pardon," period.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair doesn't feel it's very material. The question will be put. All in favor of the amendment which is the deletion of the word "treason" signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it; the word is deleted.

LARSEN: I read this "breach of the peace," which apparently comes from 1776 - -

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, will the speaker yield while we are on this point here. The comma after the word "treason" should also be deleted.

CHAIRMAN: Style Committee will take care of that. No appeal.

LARSEN: Not being a legislator, it seems to me in today's day what is much more important in protecting the community, and you see I am a little bit suspicious possibly of legislators, we might put in drunk driving.

CHAIRMAN: That would be unduly restrictive, Delegate Larsen.

LARSEN: But it is also unduly protective.

KAWAHARA: Keeping in conformity with the Federal Constitution, I would like to propose an amendment so that Section 9 would read, in the third line, "No member of the legislature shall be held to answer before any other tribunal for any statement or speech made," and delete the words "or action taken in the exercise of its legislative functions in either house," so that the words "or action taken" will be deleted and words "or speech" be substituted, and the section will read:

> No member of the legislature shall be held to answer before any other tribunal for any statement or speech made in the exercise of his legislative functions in either house.

J. TRASK: I'll second the motion.

LARSEN: I would like to ask when is a speech not a statement?

CHAIRMAN: You hear a lot of speeches here, Delegate Larsen, and sometimes they're not much of a statement when the - -

LARSEN: I accept that, but didn't dare to say it.

TAVARES: I speak in opposition to the amendment. It seems to me the amendment is designed to again place the legislature in the position it finds itself with this $3,000,000 suit. In my opinion that is a trumped up suit and I think this lends aid and comfort to the people who trumped up that suit. I submit that this amendment should not be adopted, that in modern times the cleverness or whatever you want to call it of certain people has invented means of trying to harass legislators trying to perform their duties and I think they should be kept free, as free as possible from that kind of external pressure in performing their duties.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is of the opinion that the present statute requires no change to prevent the immunity from the pending suits. As a matter of fact, the Chair is a special deputy attorney general in that matter. I don't think you have to change the law to defeat that, to raise that issue in the federal courts.

TAVARES: I did not mean to imply that, but I think it's all right to nail it down to the hilt here and to make it doubly clear in this Constitution that we are not going to stand for that kind of pressure.

KAWAHARA: Does this not mean that by inserting the word "action" that we are giving a constitutional - - you might say a constitutional okay to the legislators to do anything within the provisions of the second part of this section? They may do anything except commit treason, felony and breach of peace, and I think the word, that's a dangerous insertion in our Constitution, to guarantee and say, "Okay, you may do this and may you do that."

HEEN: Now, Mr. Chairman, the delegate who has just spoken is confused. The second part there is an immunity from arrest. The first part is immunity from being harassed when the legislature performs their legislative functions. It must be in connection with the performance of legislative functions.

CROSSLEY: I now move the adoption of Section 9 as it has been amended.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to hear the amendment again before the question is put.

KING: I don't think that motion is in order. Delegate Kawahara did make a - -

CHAIRMAN: I don't think there's been any second, Delegate King.

J. TRASK: I second it, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct, the Chair was wrong.

SILVA: I wish that Mr. Trask would withdraw his motion. I think that if you do this, this would be in our Constitution, then our legislature would be here for years. They would be afraid to vote on any, any question.

CHAIRMAN: I doubt that very much.

SILVA: Well, I tell you I'd be afraid. I know what I went through during that last special session. I'd be afraid to vote on any question if that's taken out of the Constitution.

CHAIRMAN: For the convenience of the body, will Delegate Kawahara repeat his motion so that the Clerk can get it and the Chair also.

KAWAHARA: I move to amend Section 9, so that it will read as follows:

> No member of the legislature shall be held to answer before any other tribunal for any statement or speech made in the exercise of his legislative functions in either house.

CHAIRMAN: You'll have to go a little bit slower - -

KAWAHARA: In other words - -

CHAIRMAN: Indicate where the amendment comes.

KAWAHARA: In the third line delete the words " or action taken," and between the words " statement" and " made" insert a comma and insert the words " or speech" so that the third line would read, " any statement, or speech made in the exercise of his legislative functions in either house."

CHAIRMAN: You heard the motion. All in favor signify by saying " aye." Contrary. The motion is lost.
The question - - the Chair will now put the question on the section - -

SHIMAMURA: Before the Chair puts the question, may I ask a question of the learned chairman of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions, please. On line 4 there, " legislative function in either house," may I ask if the statement is to be restricted strictly to statements made or action taken while the legislature - - while the house is in session, and whether the statement or action taken is restricted to a statement made or an action taken strictly in that house? What happens if the legislature is in joint session, that is, both houses are in joint session? And another question pertinent to that, what happens if a member makes a statement in the committee or a legislative council aside from the sitting of the house?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Shimamura, would your difficulty be met if the words " in either house" were deleted?

SHIMAMURA: I did not so move. I am just raising a question.

CHAIRMAN: Will you answer that, Delegate Heen.

HEEN: Of course, " in the exercise of his legislative functions" would cover a situation where a statement is made in committee because he is exercising his legislative function when he sits in a committee and the committee is operating under the authority of the house. The other question there about " either house" poses a problem because they do sit in joint session from time to time and that would not be perhaps - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, may the Chair ask you a question? Will you state whether or not the immunity will apply whether you are sitting in committee or sitting in session? It's the same thing, as the Chair understands it.

HEEN: No, if you're sitting in session, that's one thing, that's regular session. But if you are sitting in a committee, you're still exercising legislative functions.

CHAIRMAN: Then the immunity applies?

HEEN: Immunity applies.

LOPER: What about a public hearing?

CHAIRMAN: That was the Chair's question, that's in committee and the immunity applies.

SAKAKIHARA: For the purpose of clarification here some of my members here from Hawaii are unable to make a distinction between sessions, in the sessions of the committees maybe on Sunday nights and on evenings. While it is not a regular session of the respective house, although it was indicated here by the remarks of the chairman of the committee that the immunity applies because it is the function of the legislature. Is that correct, Senator Heen?

HEEN: I didn't quite get the purport of the question.

CHAIRMAN: The question was whether or not the legislative immunity continues whether you are in actual session or in committee. I believe you have already indicated that it does.

SAKAKIHARA: Well, that's on Sundays, when the legislative sessions are excepted by law.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct, Sunday doesn't make any difference.

ASHFORD: May the chairman of the committe be asked the question that you put to Delegate Shimamura. That is, whether it would not really strengthen the section by cutting out " in either house."

CHAIRMAN: That is the chairman's view. What does the chairman of the Legislative Committee feel about that?

HEEN: Without further study, it would seem to me to eliminate some question that is involved there when the two houses sit in joint session. By eliminating that, you eliminate that quick.

CHAIRMAN: You eliminate the limitation. If you leave in the words " in either house" you've got a limitation on your immunity, and I suggest the possibility of deleting those words.

SHIMAMURA: I would like to be excused for interrupting a moment here. As far as that goes if you put in the word " of" instead of the word " in" perhaps that will solve that particular situation. " Legislative functions of either house" and you'd necessarily need not be sitting in session in one house, if you make it "of either house," as far as joint session goes. I wonder what the other delegates - -

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, in regards to that you will note that the language is " legislative functions." Whether it's one house or the other makes no difference as long as the functions are legislative.

SAKAKIHARA: In studying Section 9 and comparing with the Organic Act, the committee has merged Section 28 and Section 29 of the Organic Act and simplified it into one section, Section 9, in the proposal. There are some phases of this section which require further study and I therefore move that we defer action on Section 9 until Wednesday.

KAWAHARA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that action on this section be deferred until Wednesday. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The Chair will put the question again. The Chair is in doubt. All in favor of deferring action on this section until Wednesday signify by saying "aye." Contrary. May we have a show of hands? All in favor. Against. Deferred, motion carried.

SERIZAWA: For the sake of the clerks, I move for a short recess.

CHAIRMAN: A short recess will be declared.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Committee will come to order and will the delegates please take their seats? Will the Sergeant-at-Arms ask the delegates to take their seats, please. Will the delegates please take their seats? The last action of the committee was on Section 9 which was deferred until Wednesday. We are now on Section 10.

APOLIONA: Since Section 10 is quite similar to Section 8, which we have deferred until a later date, I move that we defer Section 10.

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegate please just hold that until we get an expression from the chairman of the committee, and then the Chair will recognize you, Delegate Apoliona. Delegate Heen is recognized.

HEEN: Section 10 relates to disqualification of members of the legislature from holding "any other public office, position or employment of profit" during the term for which that member of the legislature is elected or appointed, "be elected or appointed to any public office, position or employment of profit which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased, by legislative act during such term." It may be that the other members who are now absent from this committee might want to be heard on that as well as on Section 8.

CHAIRMAN: May the Chair ask you a question? Is this not an almost verbatim statement from Section 6 of the Federal Constitution?

HEEN: We did not pattern this particularly on the Federal Constitution, but this was patterned after Section 16 of the Organic Act.

CHAIRMAN: It doesn't appear to the Chair that there's anything controversial about this. However, the Chair will entertain any motion.

SAKAKIHARA: In view of the fact that this committee deferred action on Section 8, I move that action on Section 10 be deferred until Wednesday.

CHAIRMAN: That motion was made by Delegate Apoliona and I assume you second it.

SAKAKIHARA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that action on Section 10 be deferred until Wednesday. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Call for a show of hands. All in favor of deferment. Contrary. The motion is carried.

HEEN: With reference to Section 11, now that relates to salaries of members. It's proposed by this section that the salaries of the members of the legislature shall be fixed by the Constitution instead of leaving it to the legislature itself.

ASHFORD: I have an amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Your amendment has been printed and - -

DOWSON: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: State your point, Delegate Dowson.

DOWSON: There is no motion for the adoption of Section 11.

CHAIRMAN: You're correct.

DOWSON: I move for the adoption of Section 11.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

WOOLAWAY: I second that.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 11 be adopted. Delegate Ashford is recognized.

ASHFORD: I now move the adoption of the amendment which has been distributed to the various delegates. Apparently there is no second.

AKAU: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 11 be amended to include the language: "No law directly or indirectly increasing the compensation or emoluments of the members shall be effective for a period of two years subsequent to its enactment."

ASHFORD: I think, perhaps, the words "compensation or" are surplussage. I think "emoluments" will cover it all but I used the two to be sure. Now the purpose of this is perfectly clear. In the executive and in the judiciary branches we have had some provisions as to increasing and decreasing. I think, myself, that the salary fixed by the legislators is too low - - by this section. I think the salaries should be sufficient so that members from the other islands should have ample to maintain them here and to have perfect independence of action. But I do not think that any legislature should vote to itself increases in the emoluments preserved by the Constitution. If it becomes necessary under this amendment, they could vote increases which would take effect two years afterwards. That is, give the voters a chance to say whether they approve.

LARSEN: May I ask a question of the chairman?

CHAIRMAN: I'd like to ask the delegate if he will hold that for a moment. Delegate Ashford, would your amendment be applicable then in substance only to the House of Representatives and not the senators? They have different terms.

ASHFORD: No, you see I didn't use the word "terms." "Shall be effective for a period of two years subsequent to its enactment." I think four years is too substantial a time, but you see you have an election in two years and if the voters express disapproval of that, the holdover senators would act in accordance with the mandate of the voters without any question.

CHAIRMAN: Your theory is that the law will then be repealed?

ASHFORD: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: After the subsequent election?

ASHFORD: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Larsen is recognized.

LARSEN: I wanted to ask the chairman and call attention to delegates that it seems to me the one thing we have been wrought up about is not putting any figures in the Constitution. Five years from now, $1500 might not be worth $100 today. Now then the one case I remember off hand is the Pennsylvania legislature which wrote in they shall spend

$1,000,000 on education. That's still in the Constitution, and yet last year they spent $90,000,000 on their system of education. It seems to me that one thing we shouldn't do is tie ourselves down with a sum that we know might be hopelessly out of date in a year or two.

CHAIRMAN: We hope not, Delegate Larsen.

GILLILAND: I believe this proposed amendment by the delegate from Molokai is out of order. You have in Section 11, "The salary of members of the legislature shall be as follows: the sum of $1500 for each general session, the sum of $1000 for a budget session and $750 for each special session." Now under the Constitution we can - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair agrees with you, Delegate Gilliland, this is a constitutional provision for the fixing of the salary and therefore there has to be some further amendment than the one offered. The Chair would like to ask Delegate Ashford if that is not correct?

ASHFORD: Mr. Chairman, if you change the one word "salary" of members in Section 11 to "emoluments" you have it covered and the subtitles are not a part anyway.

ROBERTS: I was going to point out that no change in salary can be made if Section 11 is adopted other than what we write into it except by a constitutional amendment.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct, that's what the - -

ROBERTS: That can't take effect for at least two years.

CHAIRMAN: That's the Chair's view.

HEEN: I was going to point that out.

ASHFORD: If the chairman of the committee and the various other members would read the report you will notice they use "salary" and not "emoluments."

CHAIRMAN: That is not the point, Delegate Ashford. The point is Section 11, by constitutional provision, stipulates that the salary shall be $1500 and there could be no law, directly or indirectly, increasing the figure over $1500 without a constitutional amendment.

ASHFORD: That's quite true, but if you'll notice in the report they narrowed the term to salaries, so it wouldn't include other emoluments, the $15 a day provision, for example. And this amendment is aimed at just such legislative provisions.

SHIMAMURA: May I ask the chairman of the Committee, the Organic Act, as every one knows provides for per diem and for mileage fees. There is no provision here for either mileage or per diem.

HEEN: That's correct; that's why the term "salary" was used, so that the legislature can take care of mileage and other expenses. As you know we have a statute now which provides for an allowance of $15 a day for members of the legislature who live in the outlying islands and $5 a day for those members who come from Oahu, for incidental expenses.

APOLIONA: If I'm wrong I stand corrected, but I think the entire substance of this debate is a little out of order. We haven't decided whether we're going to have a general session or a budget session and we are deciding, fixing the salaries of the different legislators for two sessions. I think we should go to 12 first, then come back to 11 afterwards.

TAVARES: I am in sympathy with the idea of this amendment but I wonder if it is - - if it doesn't go too far. In the first place I'd like to look up a little further what the word "emoluments" means because I'm a little afraid that that term is too broad. Now when you say "compensation or emoluments," after mentioning salary, you imply then that compensation and emolument are something in addition to the salary. Now what is an emolument? Does it mean that you can't give free lunches to the legislators if they're held in a night session, and can't order lunch and pay for the lunches? There are lots of other things that might be called emoluments and I think it goes too far, and if there is any idea of the members of passing this, that we ought to just get a little further definition of the word "emolument" before we vote on it.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair rules that the amendment is out of order. As the Chair construes the section - -

ASHFORD: I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

LOPER: Since we have deferred action on Sections 8, 9 and 10, I don't know why we shouldn't defer action on this. I so move.

LARSEN: I second the motion.

SILVA: What's that, deferred? Now, Mr. Chairman, I was going to ask to be excused from voting, having a pecuniary interest in this thing.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair refuses to excuse you, Delegate Silva.

CROSSLEY: While there is a motion to defer, there has been an appeal on the ruling of the Chair which must be decided.

CHAIRMAN: Well, perhaps Delegate Ashford will withdraw her appeal.

CROSSLEY: If you'll withdraw your ruling, I think - -

ASHFORD: Yes, if you'll withdraw your ruling, I will be very glad to withdraw my appeal. That's clearly within the - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will withdraw its ruling but gives notice that the ruling, if the amendment comes in the same form upon a deferment, that the ruling will be just the same. The Chair will now put the question on deferment.

ASHFORD: The appeal will be just the same.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the deferment.

WIRTZ: Point of order. I'd like to point out that the motion - - the amendment is in, it has been duly seconded and if we defer there's no question about the amendment coming in again. It's in. We have to vote.

CHAIRMAN: That's right.

DOWSON: Point of information, Mr. Chairman. I would like to know whether we are voting to defer action on the amendment or - -

CHAIRMAN: The question before the body is, shall we defer action on this Section 11 until Wednesday? All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it.

HEEN: Perhaps it would be in order then to defer action on Section 12, which is somewhat tied up with the provision as to salaries. I move to defer action on Section 12.

APOLIONA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we defer action on Section 12 until Wednesday. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

SAKAKIHARA: I now move that we rise and report progress and ask to sit again.

BRYAN: I'd like to second that motion. I note that we have 39 delegates on the floor, counting the chairman.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we rise and report progress. Did the President hear the motion? There's been a motion that we rise and report progress. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Motion is carried.

Second Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: The committee will come to order.

GILLILAND: I think we ought to get together here and agree that if this matter we adopt today comes up again on Monday or any other day, that we stand by what we vote for today and not impose any motion to reconsider our action taken today.

SAKAKIHARA: I thought when we resolved into the Committee of the Whole, it was the ruling of the Chair that in order to be fair to the absent members here, that all of these things would be tentative and brought up again on Wednesday. Am I correct?

CHAIRMAN: I didn't understand your statement, Delegate Sakakihara.

SAKAKIHARA: When this committee resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole in the earlier part of this morning it was the ruling of the Chair, upon the query of some members of this committee, that the action would be just tentative here, that upon the return of the absent members that these matters acted upon today will be reconsidered by the absent members. Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN: That's not the ruling of the Chair, Delegate Sakakihara.

WIRTZ: My understanding of that understanding was that if one of the absent delegates made a motion to reconsider, it would be considered, and favorably, in view of the absence, but in the absence of any such request on the part of any absent delegates I understood that what we're doing today would be binding.

WOOLAWAY: I move for the adoption of Section 13.

SMITH: I'll second that.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 13 be adopted. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's adopted.

KING: Point of information. What section was that that was just adopted?

CHAIRMAN: Thirteen, relating to adjournment.

SILVA: Aren't we going to ask for discussion?

TAVARES: I'm sorry I didn't notice that, I wanted to ask the chairman a question. May I still do that about that section?

J. TRASK: Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Proceed. Delegate Tavares has the floor.

J. TRASK: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Tavares has the floor.

SILVA: Point of order is well taken. You ruled that it has been carried as far as that section is concerned.

J. TRASK: Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has ruled that Delegate Tavares has the floor. Will the remainder of the delegates take their seats and we'll hear from Delegate Tavares what he wants to raise at this time.

TAVARES: A point of information, I ask unanimous consent so I can ask a question.

CHAIRMAN: You don't need any unanimous consent. Ask your question, Delegate Tavares.

TAVARES: The question is, is there anything else in this article which might provide for punishment in case either house did adjourn sine die without consent of the other?

DELEGATE: Point of order.

HEEN: No, there's nothing here to take care of this situation. This Section 13 was taken from the Organic Act verbatim.

SILVA: I appeal to the Chair the point of order, that section has carried. If you want - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair agrees with you.

WOOLAWAY: I move that we reconsider Section 13.

APOLIONA: Second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we reconsider the action on Section 13. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

TAVARES: I'm sorry that the situation has arisen. I merely wanted to state I was hoping that someone would offer an amendment later that would, somewhere in the section, that would provide for some kind of teeth in this section because I know personally of an instance where for 30 days one house adjourned without the consent of the other and there was nothing the other house could do about it. I was wondering if the chairman had considered that matter in committee.

HEEN: The committee did not consider that matter at all.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Tavares, are you familiar with the fact that that is the identical provision contained in the Federal Constitution?

TAVARES: Yes, Mr. Chairman, and I'm also aware of the fact of the futility of it in actual experience in this territory recently, under the Organic Act.

ASHFORD: I call the attention of the delegates to the fact that that adjournment was after the 30 day session.

PORTEUS: May I bring to the attention of the body what one of the delegates, I think, had reference to. One time there was a difference of opinion between the Senate and the House. So, because in those days there was no per diem, they got to a point where the Senate would not consent to going over more than three days. The Speaker of the House, as I understand it, excused the outside island members and the outside island members went home, and every day they rapped the gavel and said the House will come to order. It was announced that less than a quorum was present, and under the rules, being less than a quorum present, that minority was able to adjourn and they adjourned until the following day, and they kept that up until they thought they had reached the point where they could come to an agreement with the Senate and then they came back. That was the situation that I think the delegate from the fourth district had reference to when he was saying, of what real effect will this be if one house is determined to circumvent the language.

SAKAKIHARA: Following up the statement of the previous speaker, I believe it's a matter of common knowledge in this territory that during the session of 1941 while the House was still in session, the Senate, on its own action adjourned the Senate without the consent of the House.

CHAIRMAN: The question before the body is action on Section 13. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

WOOLAWAY: I now move for the adoption of Section 14.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

HAYES: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 14 be adopted.

TAVARES: I have a question I would like to ask the chairman if I may, about this section. As I recall it, in the article on suffrage and elections there is a provision concerning contested elections being determined by the courts, and I am wondering if there isn't a possibility here of an area which conflicts. That is, there is a contested election and the courts decide that a certain person was elected and somebody else claims that he wasn't, then the house is going to be able to determine that all over again. I'm wondering, if that is the case, if we shouldn't later on either eliminate this or later on amend the suffrage and elections section to exclude legislators.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is inclined to agree with you that that should be taken up when the suffrage and election proposal comes up.

TAVARES: May we have the chairman's reaction on that, chairman of the other committee?

HEEN: I think that that matter should be reconsidered on that article on suffrage and elections. I appreciate the difficulties that might arise because of that particular provision in the article on suffrage and elections. I don't know whether or not that question might be considered a little more thoroughly and if so, deferment of action on Section 14 might be in order.

BRYAN: This question came up in committee and if I recall the conversation correctly, it was decided to leave the statement of the judge of election and returns and so forth in here because it might be a case where the returns were not correct but there was no contest. Where the other section calls for a determination in contested elections, if there's no contest, then this would cover.

WIRTZ: There is a possibility of conflict in this particular section and I move that that be deferred until Wednesday so that we can go into the language more thoroughly.

CROSSLEY: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded, that it be deferred until Wednesday. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Deferred.

WOOLAWAY: I now move for the adoption of Section 15.

CROSSLEY: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 15 relating to a quorum be adopted. Is there any discussion? All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

WOOLAWAY: I now move for the adoption of Section 16.

CROSSLEY: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 16 be adopted. Is there any discussion?

TAVARES: As I recall from the report, I'd like to be corrected if I am mistaken, the use of the word "bill" here is intended to eliminate the use of joint resolutions which have been used a lot in the Territory heretofore, under the Organic Act provision. Is that correct?

HEEN: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: Page 15 of the report so states, Delegate Tavares.

TAVARES: I was wondering if the chairman would answer this other further question and that is, was any study made as to whether there was any other use or efficacy for a joint resolution, before we exclude it entirely? As I recall, I'm sure the Federal Constitution doesn't read the same, but Congress has made use of joint resolutions in a manner which was different from acts or bills, and I wondered if that matter has been explored.

HEEN: It wasn't explored.

PORTEUS: It has not always been followed in the legislature, but on the whole a joint resolution was used for something that was once executed within a -- could be executed within a short period of time, relatively that is. Some might run for three or four years and at that time then drop out of sight. There was no use keeping a law on the statute books after a certain period, and I think that the legislature could use the device of the joint resolution. Once it has accomplished its purpose, it is then dropped out of sight and we don't have to carry it forward in the Revised Laws and other laws. It is distinguished from statutory laws of broad application that needed to remain on the books from now on out.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Porteus, your attention is directed to this sentence in the report. "This provision would eliminate the practice of legislating by joint resolutions." Page 15.

PORTEUS: Mr. Chairman, would you explain to me what significance that pointing -- what that would mean?

CHAIRMAN: I'm just directing your attention to the explanation of the committee. Perhaps Delegate Heen could explain that.

PORTEUS. Well, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, you didn't listen to what I was saying. I was talking about the utilization of the joint resolution so that you would not put on the statute books a regular law, pointing out that the joint resolution did have value and pointing out that the legislature didn't always use the joint resolution as it might be used, but that it was a useful device where you wanted to have something executed within the next year or two and then drop out of sight. That's what a joint resolution should probably be used for, and in that I am disagreeing with what the committee said. The committee report says it eliminates joint resolutions. I'm pointing out there's an advantage perhaps in retaining it.

HEEN: Well, Mr. Chairman, I might call attention to the fact that all general appropriations bills run only for two years, and they go out of the picture at the end of two years. They don't get into the Revised Laws at all. The appropriations are enacted by bills and not by joint resolutions.

TAVARES: One more question if I may, one other question. That is, is this article a quotation or copied after any other state constitution? Is the exact wording exact?

HEEN: It came out of the Model Constitution that - -

TAVARES: Which?

HEEN: The first sentence, " No laws shall be passed except by bill."

TAVARES: That answers my question. On the other side, I should like to point out that although we have used joint resolutions in this territory, we have always held that they had to be passed three times, the same way as a bill, and that they have to have a title, the same way as a bill, so that I guess in general effect, they were probably the same except we used joint resolutions more for temporary purposes, as a rule.

HEEN: I might state it's been used usually for the purpose of requesting Congress to enact certain legislation by way of amending the Organic Act. That's always been done by joint resolution. As I recall it, there is no language in the Organic Act about any joint resolution at all, but joint resolutions have been enacted to become law and it has to have the enacting clause, "Be it enacted by the legislature," and also it required three readings, the same as a bill.

PORTEUS: I think the senator and delegate is quite correct, and one of the reasons that a joint resolution was used in respect to Congress or any other body was that, not only did it have a deliberative process accorded a bill for three separate readings and on three separate days in one house and the same procedure in the other, but it also required the consent of the governor, and consequently it seemed to carry very much more weight than a joint resolution - - I mean a resolution of both houses, or a House resolution or a Senate resolution alone. It also let the executive authority have a say so in the matter and it had, I thought, been a useful device and possibly one we would want to preserve. As I understand the committee report you would eliminate the use of a joint resolution.

CHAIRMAN: Committee report says " legislating" by that device. I don't know whether that's any different or not. Is it, Delegate Porteus?

HEEN: Those joint resolutions directed to Congress which required the approval of the governor required three readings. It can very well be passed by a bill. Call it a bill.

PORTEUS: I suppose that procedure could be followed. As a matter of fact we've also used the joint resolution to deal with other matters of a temporary nature. If I'm not mistaken, Keehi Lagoon, the authorization of the proceedings in respect to the acquisition of that property came through in part at least on a joint resolution.

HEEN: I might state, Mr. Chairman, that all these joint resolutions which have been passed after three readings and approved by the governor have been written into the session laws, and when they become functus, of course, they don't get into the Revised Laws. So I see no problem there, Mr. Chairman. Instead of calling them joint resolutions, call them bills.

CHAIRMAN: Ready for the question?

SAKAKIHARA: I beg to differ with the chairman of the committee that no appropriation has been made by joint resolution. When we made an enactment, a certain act by joint resolution, such as the Statehood Commission to go to Washington, the joint resolution also appropriated funds for the commission and it was held by the Attorney General's Department that the legislature was authorized to appropriate funds by means of joint resolution.

HEEN: After all it's just a matter of style, whether you are going to term one legislative act a joint resolution and another one a bill. They're all bills; they become law any way. You can call them all joint resolutions, and if you go through the procedure of three readings and the approval of the governor, they become legislative acts.

SAKAKIHARA: I don't, therefore, see why we should set off enactment by joint resolution and confine it simply to a bill.

CHAIRMAN: Will the chairman of the committee give us the language under which legislation is now being enacted under the Organic Act? What is the language?

HEEN: There is no language with reference to joint resolutions.

CHAIRMAN: Doesn't that answer your question, Delegate Sakakihara? In other words you can still pass them, I suppose.

SAKAKIHARA: But under Section 16, as proposed by the committee proposal, they were outlawed, they were prohibiting legislation by joint resolution.

SHIMAMURA: Although the Organic Act is silent as to resolutions - - joint resolutions, it also does not have any mandatory provisions that the enactment shall be by bill. Therefore, under the present system, under the Organic Act, a law might well be passed by resolution or joint resolution.

CROSSLEY: It appears to be controversial, I move we defer it.

SAKAKIHARA: Second.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying " aye." Contrary. Carried. Till Wednesday, the understanding is the deferment is until Wednesday.

CROSSLEY: Yes. I move the adoption of Section 17, passage of bills.

WOOLAWAY: I'll second that motion.

TAVARES: I hate to appear an obstructionist. I really am not trying to obstruct, but it is my recollection, my understanding, that Congress is not bound by any three-day requirement and that many states are not bound, that under certain types of emergencies they can act without acting on separate days, and I wonder if the chairman would give us how many states require absolutely this three-day provision.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen.

HEEN: The committee didn't go into that phase of the problem, simply adopted what appears now in the Organic Act.

TAVARES: Well, I'm just wondering if we are going to become a state, whether there may not be some cases where it will be to the urgent benefit of the state to act in less than five days or in less than three days. As I understand it, even under this provision, by passing a bill in both houses simultaneously and then switching one for the other in one of the houses you can still pass legislation in three days; but I have some feeling that as a state, which is a rather permanent status, there might be a situation where we might want to pass it sooner. As I recall it some states do have a provision that under certain emergency conditions and by certain large majorities, bills can be passed more than once on the same day.

CHAIRMAN: Did you have an amendment, Delegate Tavares?

HEEN: It would seem to me that if you have a very important measure, that measure should at least require three days' deliberation and not less.

TAVARES: I am in sympathy with that for general legislation, but I can imagine a case where, if we were at war and wanted to mobilize quickly, that there would be a little advantage in being able to pass a bill in one day to raise a national guard or state guard or something a little higher.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question?

SAKAKIHARA: I believe this Section 17 deserves further study, according with the remarks of Delegate Tavares. I have had some experience of ten sessions in the legislature. We have found some difficulty under the present system of requiring bills to - -

CHAIRMAN: Your move is to defer it?

SAKAKIHARA: Defer, yes.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

SAKAKIHARA: Till Wednesday.

ST. SURE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we defer action until Wednesday on this section. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. I think the motion is lost. The Chair will call for a show of hands on the motion. All in favor of deferring this section until Wednesday. Against. Motion is carried. Deferred until Wednesday.

WOOLAWAY: I move for the adoption of Section 18.

CROSSLEY: Second the motion.

FUKUSHIMA: I have a very long amendment on Section 18 concerning the pocket veto, and I believe after I had put it in it will be very controversial, so I move at this time that this section here and Section 19 be deferred until Wednesday.

CROSSLEY: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Section 18 and 19 both be deferred until Wednesday?

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: Is that seconded?

CROSSLEY: I seconded the motion.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried. Sections 18 and 19 are deferred until Wednesday.

WOOLAWAY: I now move for the adoption of Section 20.

CROSSLEY: Second the motion.

ROBERTS: I have an amendment to Section 20. It may not be controversial. I would like to offer it.

CHAIRMAN: Has it been printed?

ROBERTS: No, it has not. It's a simple amendment I'd like to offer. In the fourth line, the words "who shall be guilty of contempt," I'd like to change that to "who have been convicted of contempt." We had previous discussion on the floor on the question of "who shall be guilty" and I think we adopted the language "who have been convicted," "found to have been guilty." I'd like to move that as an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

SAKAKIHARA: Only guilty persons are convicted of contempt, you don't convict innocent persons.

CHAIRMAN: I didn't get the question. Is there a second to this?

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded.

SAKAKIHARA: I rise to a point, Mr. Chairman. I beg to differ with the delegate from the fourth district. I see no harm in the language as used by the committee, only guilty persons are convicted.

HEEN: The use of the term "convicted" might imply conviction by court and this is a summary action on the part of the legislature itself. The legislature, a body of that kind, has power to punish for contempt on the part of any person who might interfere with the functions of the legislature.

ROBERTS: Do I understand that answer to mean that he may not be guilty and therefore can still be kept out?

CHAIRMAN: The question is that your amendment would imply, as it does to the mind of the Chair, that conviction means conviction not before the body but means in a court. Of course it doesn't mean that. The legislature has got the power of punishment for contempt without regards to what the courts may do.

HEEN: And as pointed out in the report, this will not prevent the legislature from enacting legislation for punishment of these persons in the criminal courts. That's being done now by the Congress where they have contempt of Congress or any committee of Congress. Then they have legislation whereby these persons who are - - may be proceeded against in the courts of law and punished there.

ROBERTS: I gather this is controversial.

CHAIRMAN: I don't think so.

TAVARES: Frankly, I think that the fears of the delegate who made the motion are not well founded. Before each house can punish they'll have to find the man guilty and I don't think the word "conviction" adds anything to it. But I do feel this, that there may be a more substantial defect from my point of view in this. I don't know why each house shouldn't be able to put one of its own members in jail if his action is contemptuous enough. Why should it be just an outside member? Under another section just deferred, they can suspend or remove him, but maybe they don't want to do either or it might be easier to slap him with a little fine and if it gets bad enough it might be proper to punish him like you would anybody else, as long as the house does it itself.

CHAIRMAN: Maybe the Republicans can put all the Democrats in the clink then under your amendment.

PORTEUS: Did I understand the chairman of the committee to advocate that as a desirable piece of legislation in the future?

SHIMAMURA: Section 20 in my humble opinion is very broad. It's a very substantial enlargement of the powers of the legislature contained in our present Organic Act. In the first place, it provides for summary punishment, and although the learned gentleman from the fourth district said that certainly there'll be a hearing, when you have summary punishment it's a question of whether or not you'll have a hearing in the first place. In the second place, it's an enlargement of the present section of the Organic Act, in that this provides for any sort of contempt, whereas in the Organic Act as far as the section on contempt goes, or contemptuous behavior goes, it is direct contempt, technically known as direct contempt; for example, contempt before the judge in court which is in session. This is very broad and is not limited to direct contempt in the presence of the court, but to any sort of contempt.

ROBERTS: If the delegation would look at Section 20, Section 20 does not apply to the action of the legislature with regard to its own members. It deals with punishment of persons who are not members of the legislature. It seems to me therefore, Mr. Chairman, that when you are giving the legislature the opportunity to find people guilty of contempt without an opportunity to go to court to contest that, that seems to me to be highly improper. The language here is quite specific, it says that "any person who is not a member of the legislature who shall be guilty of contempt" of each house. Suppose that the house says "this guy is guilty." Does that mean he doesn't have a right to go to court and contest that? He has to be proven guilty by the court. This isn't the question of the action in the house of its own members. This goes to the very root of the protection of the individual. I therefore move, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is quite proper and quite important, and if the body wants to defer that until Wednesday, I'm in agreement. It seems to me that it's a very vital amendment and should not be passed over very lightly.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair didn't get your amendment. What is your motion? That it be deferred?

ROBERTS: My motion was to amend, Mr. Chairman. That motion is still on the floor.

TAVARES: I move to defer action until Wednesday on this matter because I can see there is plenty of controversy.

PORTEUS: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and seconded that we defer action until Wednesday on Section 20. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Deferred until Wednesday.

WOOLAWAY: I move that we adopt Section 21.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second to that?

BRYAN: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 21 be adopted.

TAVARES: It devolves upon me in behalf of Delegate Okino to raise some questions about this section, and since we have been deferring so many matters and there are some serious questions that he has raised in a memorandum which he submitted to me, I therefore move that we defer it until Wednesday, because they are substantial questions.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second to that motion?

SAKAKIHARA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we defer until Wednesday, action on Section 21. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried. Defer it until Wednesday.

CROSSLEY: Inasmuch as Section 22 deals with the Legislative Council and that is a highly controversial article, I move that we now rise, report no progress for the morning and beg leave to sit again.

SAKAKIHARA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we rise and report no progress and beg leave to sit again.

WOOLAWAY: I move that we rise and report progress. We did do something.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

JULY 5, 1950 • Afternoon Session

CHAIRMAN: For the convenience of the delegates, the Chair will summarize the action thus far taken on this article. Article 1 has been adopted; Article 2 has been adopted --

DELEGATE: Don't you mean section?

CHAIRMAN: Section 1 has been adopted; Section 2 has been adopted; Section 3 has been adopted. This is Committee Proposal No. 29, Standing Committee Report No. 92 and Standing Committee Report No. 99, and Committee Proposal No. 30. I'd like to summarize what action has been taken. If the Chair is in error, a correction can be made. Section 1 of Committee Proposal No. 29 has been adopted. Section 2, the first sentence has been adopted. That's the Chair's recollection but the Clerk thought otherwise. The Chair's recollection is that the entire Section 2 has been adopted.

APOLIONA: The entire Section 2 has been adopted as amended. You divided the Big Island into two districts, two senatorial districts.

BRYAN: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. Section 3, the first sentence has been adopted; Section 4 has not been acted upon; Section 5 has been adopted, as amended; Section 6, relating to vacancies, has been adopted without amendment; Section 7 has been adopted without amendment; Section 8 was deferred until today; Section 9, the same ruling; Section 10 has likewise been deferred; Section 11 has been deferred; Section 12 has been deferred; Section 13 was adopted; Section 14 has been deferred; Section 15 has been adopted; Section 16 has been deferred; Section 17 was deferred; Section 18 was deferred; Section 19, deferred; Section 20, deferred; Section 21, deferred; Section 22 has not been debated at all.

HEEN: It's my understanding that the delegates would like to take up the question of reapportionment which is contained in Section 3. There was an amendment offered by Delegate Sakakihara to amend the second paragraph relating to the first representative district. That amendment was to delete the word—in lines 2 and 3—the words "and Keaukaha, the latter being more particularly described in the schedule," and placing a comma after the word "Puna" in the second line.

CHAIRMAN: At the time of that deferment it was deferred on the ground that possibly some members of the Hawaii delegation did not agree with that amendment. Could we have a report on that, Delegate Sakakihara? Have you reached an agreement on that?

SAKAKIHARA: The Hawaii delegation is divided and we have an absent member. I'd like at this time to request the Committee of the Whole to defer action on Section 3 insofar as applicable to the island of Hawaii until tomorrow when Delegate Sakai will be present.

SHIMAMURA: If the delegate from Hawaii is making that in the form of a motion, I move to amend his motion to defer all of Section 3.

SAKAKIHARA: I'll accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the entire Section 3 be deferred until tomorrow.

FONG: I think we could defer the question of Hawaii, but as far as the other sections are concerned we are really deferring the meat of this whole committee report. I think we should go right ahead with the other sections.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is of the same view.

KAWAHARA: I would like to speak against the motion to defer. We've been sitting here for quite a while now, and I think the statement made by Delegate Sakakihara is correct insofar as the island delegation is split. The delegate from the first district didn't say, of course, how we were split, and I'm quite sure we will continue to be split, and I think perhaps it would be wise for us to grab the bull by the horn now and vote and get this thing over with.

CHAIRMAN: We've got to get through this article some time. The Chair is of the same view. However, is there any further view on this? The motion is on the question for deferment. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Lost.

SAKAKIHARA: I move at this time that we defer action on Section 3, first representative district, second representative district, third representative district, fourth representative district.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair rules your motion out of order. The motion has already been put and lost.

SAKAKIHARA: No, the motion was to defer action on all of Section 3, Mr. Chairman, the entire section.

YAMAUCHI: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and seconded that we defer action on - - will you state those sections again, Delegate Sakakihara?

SAKAKIHARA: Paragraphs where it reads first representative district, second representative district, third representative district and fourth representative district be deferred until tomorrow.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? All in favor of the motion - -

LEE: It seems if we accept the policy not to defer but to take the thing by the horns it would be entirely inconsistent for the deferral of just this Hawaii problem when only one member of the delegation from Hawaii is absent. We have acted on other matters where one or two members have been absent. So, I'm against deferring the proposal unless we defer the entire matter.

SAKAKIHARA: May I explain the reason for the deferment for Hawaii? There is an even division - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair can't hear you, Delegate Sakakihara.

SAKAKIHARA: I would like to advance the reason for deferment for the first, second, third and fourth representative districts on the grounds that insofar as the second representative district, which comprises the fourth representative district, there is an even division. Two members are for requiring candidates to run at large and two are for definite division of that district, and one of those members is not present and he will be here tomorrow.

CHAIRMAN: He's already had five days' notice. The last time the request for deferment came up was June 30th, Delegate Sakakihara. The Chair will put the question.

KING: May I call attention to the fact that Delegate Silva is not present also, so that means two absent from the Hawaii delegation.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor of deferment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion is lost. Do you now want to put your amendment, Delegate Sakakihara?

SAKAKIHARA: I move that the second paragraph reading "First representative district," I move to amend, after the word "Puna" in the second line thereof and third line up to the word "schedule" be deleted, so that the amendment would read: "First representative district: that portion of the island of Hawaii known as Puna, one representative."

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

HAYES: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion?

WIRTZ: Point of information. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Legislative Functions and Powers, does this amendment in any way disturb the representation on equal proportions?

HEEN: I understand not.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion?

DOI: Some of the - - in fact, I want to say, the majority of the Hawaii delegation are interested in seeing that Hawaii be divided just into two districts, East and West Hawaii. Now as a matter of a point of information I would like to ask the Chair whether this is the time that you would like to see the amendment introduced or after we have passed on this other issue.

CHAIRMAN: I think if we take a vote on this, it would then be in order to move your amendment. It would go to the whole section as to the Hawaii redistricting.

LEE: I am not quite sure whether I understand the amendment. I heard the delegate from Hawaii. He said that the language should read as follows: "That portion of the island known as Puna, one representative." Is that right, eliminate the rest? Where would Keaukaha land?

SAKAKIHARA: Keaukaha would be taken care of in the second representative district. By deleting the words "excluding Keaukaha" after the word "Hilo" in the second line thereof.

LEE: All right. May I inquire of the chairman of the committee, with the absence of Keaukaha in the first representative district, how many voters will there be in the first representative district?

HEEN: There would still be four representatives.

LEE: Four.

HEEN: No, you mean in the first?

LEE: Yes.

HEEN: One.

LEE: No, what I meant was, how many voters does Puna have?

BRYAN: 1,819.

LEE: How many does Keaukaha have?

CHAIRMAN: Six hundred, according to the vice chairman.

SAKAKIHARA: Yes, 600; way over 600.

LEE: And wouldn't then the second representative district be over-balanced by way of voters if you put Keaukaha's six or seven hundred voters in that portion of the island of Hawaii known as South Hilo, or would it come out a better balance? Because I cannot seem to understand this manipulating going around here, I want to know why.

BRYAN: I am not sure that I understand that question, Mr. Chairman. I'll try to answer it if I understand it.

CHAIRMAN: What Delegate Lee is asking is whether or not there would be a better balance of registered voters if the proposal was adopted as it stands, including Puna and Keaukaha together. Would that, the deletion of it, disturb the balance as between the respective districts, as I understand him.

BRYAN: Well, there would be some disturbance, naturally.

LEE: Well, I want to find out what disturbance.

BRYAN: Keaukaha would increase the number of voters in the South Hilo District by approximately 644 and reduce the number of voters in Puna District, the first district under this proposal, by that number. That would leave -- I stand corrected on the first figures, approximately 1,711 voters in Puna. Now according to the method of equal proportions as we have applied it here, as long as there are over about 1,250 in any one district they are entitled to one representative as long as the remainder of their -- up to 2,400 is taken up by some other district on the same island. And as I understand it, the amendment is that while the committee gerrymandered that line a little bit in order to increase the vote in Puna, the representatives from the Big Island feel that that's not an area of like interest, so forth and so on. They believe that Keaukaha belongs with Hilo.

LEE: Then, am I to understand, Mr. Bryan, that there's some fatal defects in the majority report, committee report on legislative procedure?

CHAIRMAN: Will you address the Chair, please.

LEE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I was -- I'll still not yield the floor. I was just wondering -- I was just following up my question to the chairman of the committee.

BRYAN: May I answer that question?

LEE: Yes, go ahead.

BRYAN: Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Please proceed.

BRYAN: We don't consider that this is a fatal defect, and the chairman of the committee assured me that there are no fatal defects in the committee report.

LEE: You mean the chairman was opposed to the committee report, as I understand.

BRYAN: Maybe I better let him speak for himself.

CHAIRMAN: You want to answer Brother Heen's rhetorical question?

HEEN: There is no fatal defect in the report made by the majority of that committee and this change would not make it another fatal defect at all. It'd just add so many more voters to one district by subtracting it from another district. But under the method of equal proportions the number of representatives will remain the same, one for Puna with Keaukaha eliminated, and still four for South Hilo with Keaukaha added to South Hilo.

KING: The precinct of Keaukaha is merely a part of the geographical district of South Hilo. It's not a part of the geographical district of Puna. Why it was put in Puna in the first place I am not certain except there was an effort to get a larger number of votes in the district that was going to elect one representative. It would be the natural thing to put it in South Hilo as they propose to do it now and it would not disturb the allocation of voters between Puna and South Hilo and North Hilo and Hamakua. So that there's no objections to the amendment on that basis. Incidentally, the gentleman who last spoke and questioned the fatal defects of the committee was a member of the committee, as far as I can recollect, and concurred with both of these recommendations with the exception of one or two points.

CHAIRMAN: That's what the Chair understands.

LEE: Well, I certainly didn't concur with the reapportionment end of it.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question?

MAU: If Puna -- if Keaukaha is withdrawn from the first representative district, then it merely leaves 1,700 votes in that first representative district as I understand it, which is quite a departure from the mean that they used in this thing called the equal proportion theory on the basis of 2,400 voters. Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN: Well, Delegate Mau, I believe the committee stated at the outset that upon the first apportionment there was an arbitrary apportionment; thereafter it has the mathematical application formula. The first apportionment of necessity had some arbitrary features to it.

OKINO: Point of information. If the amendment offered by Delegate Sakakihara is acted upon favorably, that is carried, would it be in order for some other delegate to move an amendment which would incorporate the first four paragraphs of Section 3 beginning from the first representative district, so that all aggregated representatives who are supposed to represent these four districts could be represented from all four districts as enumerated herein as one representative district?

CHAIRMAN: And thus divide the island of Hawaii in two, is that it?

OKINO: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would rule that would be an appropriate amendment even after the adoption or rejection of Delegate Sakakihara's proposed amendment.

OKINO: Thank you.

BRYAN: I'd like to correct one statement the chairman made a minute ago. That is, the first apportionment is not arbitrary, the first apportionment is on the basis of equal proportion. However, if you study the committee report as it refers to reapportionment in the future you will see that we have provided there where a district does not have at least a major fraction of the basic denominator required for each representative then it shall be redistricted to be added to another district so that they will be entitled to one representative. That's why I used the term 1,250. It's not too illogical. The committee tried to build the districts up as large as possible in order that that wouldn't happen in the foreseeable future.

MAU: One more question. I see on the board there the most colorful map is that of the island of Hawaii. Does that make any difference at all in the four representative districts set up for the island of Hawaii, the part in blue as compared with the part in pink way up north? They don't have any numbers. The southern part of the island is marked out in blue. Which representative district does that belong to?

SAKAKIHARA: The fourth representative district.

BRYAN: May I answer that, Mr. Chairman. I think he's speaking of West Hawaii. That belongs to the fourth representative district which is all of West Hawaii.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? The question is on Delegate Sakakihara's amendment which would delete Keaukaha from the second paragraph of Section 3. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The Chair is in doubt. All in favor please rise. Contrary. The motion is carried.

DOI: I would like to move to amend Section 3, the section of Section 3 dealing with the first representative district to the fourth representative district inclusive. In lieu of those four representative districts, I would like to move to place the following words:

First representative district: East Hawaii, island of Hawaii, six representatives;
Second representative district: West Hawaii, island of Hawaii, two representatives.

CHAIRMAN: May I ask how those two districts would be described if your amendment was carried?

DOI: The exact wording has been used as regards the senatorial district, and I believe that is sufficient as reference to the present division of Hawaii.

YAMAMOTO: I second it.

FUKUSHIMA: I'd like to ask a question of the movant. Does that increase the representation from the island of Hawaii?

DOI: No, it doesn't. It's the same number, eight. It doesn't give East Hawaii any increase nor does it give West Hawaii any additional numbers than that recommended by the Committee on Legislative Matters.

HEEN: May I suggest that as amended the paragraph relating to the first representative district shall read the same as it reads in the Organic Act:

First representative district: that portion of the island of Hawaii known as Puna, Hilo and Hamakua.

That's the way it reads in the Organic Act.

DOI: That would be satisfactory.

OKINO: I should like to make this suggestion. I think it would be better to say North and South Hilo.

HEEN: Well, with reference to what is now the fourth representative district in the committee proposal we speak of West Hawaii the same way it is spoken of in the Organic Act, "that portion of the island of Hawaii known as Kau, Kona and Kohala." In other words, they don't divide the two Kohalas into North and South Kohala nor do they divide the Konas into South Kona and North Kona. Of course it can be done, North Kona and South Kona, North Kohala and South Kohala and refer to the Hilos as being South Hilo and North Hilo, if you want to do it that way; but if you follow the Organic Act we'll have no trouble at all.

HAYES: Under this amendment, I believe Delegate Doi is taking two away from West Hawaii. Isn't that correct?

CHAIRMAN: No, it's simply dividing the - -

DOI: We are following the recommendations of the committee proposal as regards the division between West and East Hawaii. There is no increase or decrease.

HAYES: But at the present time West Hawaii - - at the present time you do have eight representatives from the island of Hawaii, don't we?

DOI: That is only because we are following the committee recommendations again and that is equal proportions.

HAYES: So that under your amendment, then, West Hawaii would lose two representatives.

DOI: Under the committee proposal, Mr. Chairman.

HAYES: I'm talking about today. We have four representatives from the island of West Hawaii and four from East Hawaii. That's the situation as it is today, is it not?

DOI: That is correct.

HAYES: Well, that's what I'm saying. The amendment that is being made now - -

DOI: But even if we adopt the recommendation of the committee, it would still be the same. We will be taking away two from West Hawaii. I don't see why that argument should be used against this amendment.

CHAIRMAN: That's part of the problem of reapportionment.

NIELSEN: To resolve this thing, it simply means that instead of breaking down into districts in East Hawaii, we simply elect at large six from East Hawaii and at large two from West Hawaii. That's all this amendment of Mr. Doi's means, that they're at large in both East and West Hawaii.

KING: I would like to speak in agreement with the chairman, if I understood him correctly, and that is that the amendment should designate the district East Hawaii and then name the districts, Puna, Hilo and Hamakua; West Hawaii, name the districts, Kau, Kona and Kohala.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels you should adhere to the language of the Organic Act. It'd be simpler, would it not?

DOI: That is right. We are happy to do that. The reason why we suggested the recommendation so worded was because the section on the Senate was done in the same wording I stated. We are very happy to adopt the recommendation made by Senator Heen.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the - - SAKAKIHARA: May I amend the motion? The second representative district, amend line two, add comma after the word "Hilo," delete "excluding Keaukaha," four representatives, and the remainder remain the same, the third and the fourth.

KING: The amendment offered by Delegate Doi would really telescope the first, second, third and fourth representative districts into two. The amendment now offered by Delegate Sakakihara - -

SAKAKIHARA: I withdraw my amendment.

CHAIRMAN: There has been no second, Delegate King. The Chair will put the question.

DOI: Before the question is put I would just like to make one statement. The amendment as proposed at this moment was the consensus of the majority of the delegation from Hawaii that met during lunch hour.

LYMAN: I happen to come from the Puna district. We in the Puna district feel that if we are going to reapportion and if we have earned a representative in the legislature of the State of Hawaii we should be entitled to it. For the past fifty years the rural areas on the island of Hawaii have always been dictated to by the urban center, Hilo. I, therefore, ask that the group vote against this amendment.

KAUHANE: I know that this is a Big Island fight and I should not get into the mixup, but unfortunately I just can't sit by here with some of the voting constituents of the Big Island who have come in and suggested that the representative districts, both the first and second districts, should follow on the same lines as the election held for the election of delegates to this Constitutional Convention. The reason that they put forth such a suggestion is as follows: that if we were to take the election of delegates from combined precincts B which will include Puna and Keaukaha, there is all opportunity for the minority group to be represented from that combination. If we take precinct combination C, which embraces Hilo, Honokaa and Hamakua, that that part of the first representative district would have an opportunity to send people of their choosing from a minority group to represent them in the legislature. The same holds true with combined precincts G and H. I am just wondering whether some of my Democratic colleagues who sit here in this Constitutional Convention are looking at the situation that will confront the Democratic Party when we become a state—the possibilities of not being able to elect Democrats from various precincts to represent the minority people of that section of East and West Hawaii.

CHAIRMAN: You think this is a Republican plot, do you?

KAUHANE: I am trying to get away from a Republican controlled legislature as being advocated by the present chairman of the Republican Party, so much so that I feel that equal representation and strength should be considered here the request of the people. The constituents who vote for the elected officials from the Big Island who sit here in this Convention, and work as janitors and Sergeant-at-Arms and what not, feel that the present method by which the delegates were elected is satisfactory to them.

They also say this, Mr. Chairman, that the division of the two - - of Hawaii into two senatorial districts will cause a hardship on the senator that is to be elected representing the people of West Hawaii, that they feel that the senator should be elected from the whole County of Hawaii rather than having Hawaii cut up into two senatorial districts. That is the information that has reached me and I'd like to pass it on to the members of this delegation.

OKINO: I might add that the vote on this question is somewhat of a test as to what might follow eventually.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. The question is on Delegate Doi's amendment which in substance would divide the island of Hawaii into two districts as defined in the Organic Act, the first district to have three representatives and the second to have two. All those in favor - -

TAVARES: I don't feel the matter has been aired enough for the rest of us to know what's what. We've heard two or three people speak for and against.

CHAIRMAN: Well, you have the floor.

TAVARES: I'd like to have the Hawaii delegation argue more pro and con so we can get the merits of both sides.

CHAIRMAN: Well, they've been given every opportunity.

SAKAKIHARA: May I submit the case in opposition to the motion to establish two representative districts for the island of Hawaii and the representatives running at large as proposed under Mr. Doi's amendment. I have been in the legislature for many sessions. I think I served ten sessions in the legislature. I feel very strongly that the rural districts should be assured of representation, particularly from the island of Hawaii. Speaking geographically, Puna is entitled to representation in the House of Representatives, and the district of North Hilo and Hamakua combined is entitled to one representative in the legislature. I had much difficulty in the sessions of the legislature trying to find out from the people of that district—districts of Puna, Hamakua and North Hilo—as to their needs and wants and I'm sure if the rural districts, as proposed in the committee's report, excluding Keaukaha, were given adequate representation, then the burden on the members being elected from East Hawaii at large would not be so great. And I believe that the members from Hawaii would more effectively represent the people of the district of Puna, the district of North Hilo and Hamakua combined and the South Hilo District. I submit, Mr. Chairman, and ladies and gentlemen, that this amendment should be voted down.

KAWAHARA: The previous speaker has mentioned something about geographical representation. It has been my impression that the membership in the Senate would take care of that geographical representation. I would like to point out one more thing. If we went along with this idea of giving Puna one representative, perhaps we should give the district of Kau, which is slightly larger than the island of Oahu, one representative, even though Kau has some 1,100 voters. We have somewhat resigned ourselves to this idea, that in the Senate we will get geographical representation and in the House, come what may, hell or high water, we will take our representation according to population. I don't know, I think the arguments are somewhat inconsistent. On the one hand we say, let's have geographical representation, let's have rural areas represented. Certainly, in the Senate we will be represented; in the House we will count the number of heads and as far as I can see, in Kau there's something like 1,108 registered voters. I don't know how many there are in Puna but I understand somewhere around 1,800. I think we have to be realistic and take what's coming to us.

SAKAKIHARA: In reply to the remarks of the last speaker, I think the 15 members of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions will bear me out and the minutes of that committee will bear me out, that on the question of reapportionment, I as a member, and the only member from East Hawaii, at that time, offered to the West Hawaii delegates one representative from Kau, one from North and South Kona, one for North and South Kohala, and that was rejected in spite of the fact that my colleagues from East Hawaii were rather reluctant to give one more to West Hawaii.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Sakakihara, the Chair notes that you joined in the committee report without dissent.

SAKAKIHARA: I do, yes.

CHAIRMAN: And yet you come to the floor of the Committee of the Whole and offer an amendment.

SAKAKIHARA: No. Amendment, in so far as we reserved that - -

CHAIRMAN: Correct.

SAKAKIHARA: I reserved my right in the committee report.

LARSEN: It seems to me we're coming back to the original again. The committee did a tremendous lot of work on trying to make it fair. If now every little district is going to pull here, pull there, pull everywhere, each trying to grab a little extra, a few votes here and a few votes there, we're not going to end with something better than we've got. We've a good suggestion here, and I would like to urge the majority to let's vote on this committee [proposal]. We're certainly not making it better by this type of thing we're doing now, trying to split them here. If we're going to have representation, one to 2,450, let's take it. In ten years from now, if it hasn't worked out well, then let us change it.

CHAIRMAN: Are you speaking for or against the amendment?

LARSEN: I am voting against the amendment and support the committee.

DOI: I too am in favor of giving the rural areas representation as well as different districts as they exist in Hawaii today, but if we were to do that we would need nine representatives instead of eight.

I would also like to say the mere fact that a local unit elects one representative doesn't mean that that unit gets the best representation possible. I would think that in this case Puna, speaking specifically, would benefit more by voting for the six East Hawaii delegates than they would if they should vote and elect only one representative. I do not think the six representatives could ignore a vote of 1,800 from Puna and they must accede to the needs and wishes of the people from Puna.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question.

SAKAKIHARA: May I further amplify that remark to correct the impression left by the previous speaker. That is not true.

CHAIRMAN: I didn't hear what the delegate said.

SAKAKIHARA: I said I would like to correct a misimpression left here by the previous speaker. I served in the 1947 session of the legislature. In spite of the appeal and request of the people of the district of Puna for various public improvements, namely and particularly the highways in Puna, Puna District was neglected, was not given one copper penny in the final appropriation, and I felt very strongly since then that the Puna district should be represented in the legislature. It was not until the 1949 session that I made a strong appeal to the Hawaii delegation in the House and with the help of the members from Oahu, Kauai and Maui, that was how Puna was taken care of at the 1949 session. I regret very much the previous speaker has had no prior legislative experience which some of us have, and I believe very strongly that the rural district, namely the district of Puna and the districts of North Hilo and Hamakua combined, should have a representation in the House.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment.

LYMAN: For thirty years we have heard the same old story from the same old fellows running from Hilo and they've never produced the goods. I want to back up Mr. Sakakihara and what he has said. It's only in the last two years that Puna got one red copper penny—they got $200,000—but for the thirty years previous to that Puna never got a penny.

CHAIRMAN: I gather you're against the amendment.

LYMAN: I am.

KING: I would like to speak along the lines Delegate Larsen spoke. The committee amendment, I mean the committee report, after a great deal of thought and consideration and the expression of the wishes of the delegates from the various districts were presented to the committee for consideration, provided for the division of East Hawaii into three districts, Puna, South Hilo and then North Hilo and Hamakua. This amendment that was offered by Delegate Sakakihara is merely a rectification of the boundaries. It doesn't affect the total number of delegates or their allocation. In other words, Puna, less Keaukaha, would elect one delegate; South Hilo, plus Keaukaha, would elect four; North Hilo and Hamakua would elect one. That's in the committee report and I believe we should support it. If we're going to open it up for six at large, the probabilities are all six would come from the city of Hilo, and neither Puna nor North Hilo and Hamakua would obtain any representation.

MAU: In line with what has been said in support of the committee report, I notice that three of the committee members who favored that report voted to amend. So I don't know where we stand now. It seems to me that after the first amendment had been made and voted on and agreed to, that further amendments—if the representatives or delegates from Hawaii desired such change from the committee report—that they ought to be given some consideration.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understands that Delegate Sakakihara's amendment was more of a perfecting amendment, not a substantive amendment.

MAU: But no committee member got up to say that was what they agreed to.

LEE: In line with that just mentioned by Delegate Mau, as long as a particular representative district doesn't lose any members, the number does not decrease, I assume that that argument would also apply to any other amendments proposed, say in the fourth district or fifth district on Oahu.

CHAIRMAN: Let us argue one at a time. The Chair will put the question. The question is on the amendment. The amendment would divide the island of Hawaii into two districts, one and two, the first to have six representatives and the other to have two. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion, the amendment is lost.

LEE: I think there was some doubt in my mind on the matter. I suggest a raising of hands on that matter or a roll call.

DELEGATES: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: The Clerk will call the roll.

Ayes, 20. Noes, 36 (Apoliona, Ashford, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Corbett, Dowson, Fong, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Ihara, Kage, Kam, Kanemaru, Kellerman, Kido, King, Lai, Larsen, Loper, Lyman, Ohrt, Porteus, H. Rice, Richards, Roberts, Sakakihara, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, A. Trask, Wirtz, Woolaway, Yamauchi, Anthony). Not voting, 7 (Arashiro, Crossley, Kawakami, Phillips, Sakai, Silva, White).

CHAIRMAN: The motion is lost.

SAKAKIHARA: May I offer an amendment to the paragraph relating to the second representative district? In second line, on line two thereof after the comma after the word "Hilo" delete the words "excluding Keaukaha" so that the amendment would read:

Second representative district, that portion of the island of Hawaii known as South Hilo, four representatives.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

KING: I'll second it.

CHAIRMAN: That is simply in conformity with the prior amendment.

KING: It is a perfecting amendment to carry out the amendment already adopted with regard to the first representative district.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair doesn't feel there's any need for debate on this. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's carried.

SAKAKIHARA: May I move for the adoption of the third paragraph which reads:

Third representative district; that portion of the island of Hawaii known as North Hilo and Hamakua, one representative;

OKINO: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Couldn't we take both at the same time, Delegate Sakakihara, third and fourth?

SAKAKIHARA: The fourth is very controversial, Mr. Chairman. That is the reason why I deliberately left it out.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any discussion? If not the Chair will put the question. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it. It's adopted.

SAKAKIHARA: Since Senator Charles H. Silva and Supervisor Sakuichi Sakai, both of West Hawaii, are absent here now, I respectfully request the Committee of the Whole to defer action on the fourth representative district.

CHAIRMAN: Haven't we already voted on that once?

SAKAKIHARA: No, we have not, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Didn't you ask to defer the whole section?

KING: Well, Mr. Chairman, that was another proposition, to defer all four.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

YAMAUCHI: I second it.

KING: This merely defers action on the fourth representative district which gives to West Hawaii two delegates at large. Delegate Sakakihara's motion is that we defer action until two of the delegates from that district are here, Delegate Silva and Delegate Sakai.

CHAIRMAN: All in - -

NIELSEN: I don't see any reason to defer action on that. We're only entitled to two representatives in West Hawaii under reapportionment and we're going to go along on reapportionment. We're only entitled to two, and two at large is the only way to elect them over there. So I see no reason for deferment by East Hawaii on this matter.

DELEGATE: That's right.

OKINO: In fairness to Delegate Silva and Delegate Sakai, I feel that the matter should be deferred. Delegate Nielsen and Delegate Kawahara are delegates from Kona. The two delegates from Kohala are absent and I think in all fairness the matter should be deferred.

CHAIRMAN: They knew this was coming up though, didn't they?

KAWAHARA: I'd like to correct the statement made by the previous speaker that I'm a delegate from Kona. I am a delegate from the Combination H which includes Kau, the district of Kau. Even if the other two delegates did come and express an opposing view it would be the same. I'm quite sure that the voting would be fifty-fifty. In other words, I think we're going to be split. I'm in favor of taking this matter up now so that it's going to be two to two, so that - - Well, Delegate Silva is here. I'm in favor of taking this matter up now, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: It seems to the Chair we should take a vote on this.

SAKAKIHARA: The reason why I deferred action in the absence of Senator Silva is because I happen to know that he has an amendment to second paragraph - -

CHAIRMAN: He is here now. The Chair will recognize him right away. Delegate Silva, if you can catch your breath and turn to Section 3 - -

SILVA: I think I am pretty well familiar with the subject. I was just wondering whether we on the island of Hawaii are going to divide East Hawaii into districts. On the same island, by the same token we move to another district and we say—that very same island—the representative district shall not be divided. Then in the senatorial district we divide the County of Hawaii into two senatorial districts, the first and the second. In the second senatorial district with two senators we fail to - -

CHAIRMAN: Pardon me, you didn't get what was before the house, the question of whether or not we should defer.

SILVA: Defer?

CHAIRMAN: Defer or - -

SILVA: I think to defer is very much in order, Mr. Chairman, because Mr. Sakai isn't here and the West Hawaii delegates are sort of divided two-two on that question.

CHAIRMAN: Well, there's been considerable sentiment expressed in favor of going forward with this. So if you have anything to say why it should be deferred, you ought to give it to the body here.

SILVA: Well, as I pointed out a moment ago that Mr. Sakai isn't present. I think Sakai and myself are for cutting West Hawaii into two representative districts so that North and South Kohala with a portion of probably Kona, like they elected to the Convention here, would elect one representative, and the other part of Kona with Kau, like Mr. Kawahara was elected under those circumstances, would elect the other representative. Otherwise you're going to find Kohala District and Kau without representation at all.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the deferment. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion is lost.

HAYES: I feel that we should let Senator Silva catch his breath and go to the next one and then we come back to the other. I don't believe he knows what we've already done with East Hawaii, dividing them up as reported by the committee. Are you ready?

SAKAKIHARA: I desire to ask the Committee of the Whole to defer until the end of the Proposal No. 29 action on fourth representative district.

CHAIRMAN: Would you amend that motion to read until the end of the section? In other words we then could clean up the section.

SAKAKIHARA: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: I think that would meet your point.

HAYES: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we defer action on this until we dispose of the other items in the section. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's carried.

Fifth representative district. Is there a motion that be adopted? Mr. Chairman, is there any further action need to be taken on this section?

HEEN: No, as I understand it, action has already been taken whereby Molokai and Lanai has been made into one representative district with one representative, and the rest of Maui constituting one representative district with five representatives.

KING: Just for a brief statement. Three letters were received in the Convention this morning, two from Molokai and one from Lanai. They were referred to the Committee of the Whole. They are pertinent to this particular subject. I suggest that perhaps the Clerk might re-read these letters before we complete discussion on these two districts.

LEE: I don't think that's necessary. I think it's communications from some Republican clubs.

DELEGATES: Mr. Chairman.

WOOLAWAY: Mr. Chairman, under the circumstances - -

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute.

KING: Mr. Chairman, in reply to - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kauhane is recognized.

KAUHANE: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I think I am of the same opinion as Delegate Lee that the letter has already been read. The fact that we received three letters from the island of Molokai and the rest of the people did not write in their views, I am certain that they favor what was voted upon by this delegation whereby Lanai and Molokai shall be constituted as one representative district. So therefore the preponderance of evidence is in favor of the action taken by the committee by the silence of any protesting letters.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Woolaway is recognized.

KING: I rise to the point of personal privilege, please. The previous speaker before the last one, Delegate Lee said - -

CHAIRMAN: Don't take him too seriously.

KING: Well, never mind, I want the records to show that one of the letters was from Judge S. H. H. Ashford, a leading Democrat on the island of Molokai and the brother of the lady who sponsored the amendment and he's opposed to the amendment.

WOOLAWAY: Under the circumstances I now move for the suspension of rules so that we can reconsider our action on Maui, the County of Maui.

ST. SURE: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we suspend the rules in order to permit this committee to reconsider its action.

ROBERTS: I'd like to call attention to what the group is doing. The motion to suspend the rules on this is for second consideration. We've already acted on this, as I recall, twice, and on the basis of the rules that we've adopted for the Committee of the Whole as well as outside, it is that it not be reconsidered twice, and therefore the suspension of the rules as proposed is a procedure for opening up any other question that might later be open.

WOOLAWAY: Mr. Chairman, if I am not mistaken we reconsidered once.

CHAIRMAN: If that is the case, then there is no occasion to suspend the rules.

PORTEUS: I think those who made the motion are correct in asking for a suspension of the rules if they desire to get into this question further. I think the delegate from the fourth district is correct in pointing out that the motion for the suspension of the rules for the purposes of considering these particular sections is to get around the ruling that the matter has been reconsidered once and under our rules cannot be reconsidered twice. Therefore, it is necessary to suspend the rules in order to deal with this situation on the County of Maui. The rules are not - - as I understand it, the motion is not made for the suspension of rules. Any business that anybody wants to take up from now on out - -

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understands that it only applies to the County of Maui. Are you ready for the question. It's been moved and seconded the rules be suspended in order to permit reconsideration of the re-districting of the County of Maui. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The Chair is in doubt.

DELEGATE: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: I think we can have a standing vote on this. All those in favor of suspension will please rise. Contrary. So close, I think we'd better have a roll call. I think Brother Heen stood up twice.

LEE: Mr. Chairman, did you count 32 ayes? If not the motion would fail anyway. So, if there's less than 32, the motion would fail.

CHAIRMAN: That's right, it was not 32, it was 26 to 25 or something like that. The motion fails. You're quite right. It requires 32 votes.

WOOLAWAY: I'd like you to note that there were six Maui people in favor of suspension here.

HEEN: I move for a recess, Mr. Chairman, a short recess.

CHAIRMAN: Recess for five minutes.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegates please take their seats?

DELEGATE: Let's go.

H. RICE: I suggest we start on Oahu now.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, it's been suggested that we start on the reapportionment of the island of Oahu.

BRYAN: I'd like to move the adoption of the paragraph beginning "The eighth representative district." I think for the sake of clarity, although there are amendments which would change the district numbers, if until we finish the article we can retain the numbers in the report they will jibe with the numbers on the map, and I think it will keep it a little clearer until we get to the end, and then we can change it or you can change them in the report.

LAI: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: That is just a mechanical change. It's been moved and seconded that the eighth representative district as recommended by the committee be adopted. Is there any discussion?

LEE: Let's see, that's Koolaupoko and Koolauloa. What precincts are they at the present time, may I inquire? That's Kaneohe, the first of the fifth?

HOLROYDE: That's right, first of the fifth.

LEE: Second of the fifth?

HOLROYDE: Second of the fifth, third of the fifth, fourth of the fifth, twenty-eighth of the fourth, and thirty-eighth.

LEE: I see, that includes Waimanalo and Kailua.

HOLROYDE: It does, that is correct.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.
Ninth representative district. Will you make a motion please?

BRYAN: I'd be very glad to. I move we adopt the paragraph concerning the ninth representative district.

LAI: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we adopt the paragraph of Section 3 relating to the ninth representative district on the island of Oahu. Any discussion? If not, all those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it.

BRYAN: I'd like to move the adoption of the paragraph concerning the tenth representative district.

LAI: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the paragraph relating to the tenth representative district on the island of Oahu be adopted. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

KAUHANE: I move for the adoption of the eleventh representative district.

KAM: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion? If not the Chair will put the question. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of the paragraph dealing with the twelfth representative district.

CHAIRMAN: What was that?

BRYAN: Twelfth. I move the adoption of the paragraph concerning the twelfth.

NODA: I second the motion.

SHIMAMURA: I made a motion previously, some days ago. I should like to renew my motion to amend by substituting for paragraph thirteen and fourteen of Section 3 the following:

> Twelfth representative district: that portion of the island of Oahu known as upper Nuuanu and Kapalama, and more particularly described in the schedule under the caption the twelfth representative district and the thirteenth representative district, six representatives.

And number the subsequent representative districts to conform. I have the written amendment here, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to point out the minute we get into this kind of amendment we're going to take a long time. Now presumably the committee had representatives from both political parties and came out without any dispute as to this particular section.

SHIMAMURA: I am willing that it be deferred until a later date. It has been deferred for several days already.

LEE: I move that it be deferred until the end of the section.

CHAIRMAN: End of what section?

LEE: This particular section, Section 3.

SHIMAMURA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded - - Delegate Fong.

FONG: I think we're ready to vote on that question

CHAIRMAN: You have to vote on this motion then. It's been moved and seconded that it be deferred until the end of the discussion on the section. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion is lost.

WIRTZ: I'd like to ask the chairman of the Legislative Committee a question. In the amendment as I understood it, offered by Delegate Shimamura, a combination of the twelfth and thirteenth would still combine the total number of representatives.

KAUHANE: Point of order. Wasn't the motion lost?

CHAIRMAN: The motion was lost. The motion to defer was lost. So we're now on the subject of the twelfth representative district.

BRYAN: No second.

CHAIRMAN: The motion to defer it was lost.

WIRTZ: Am I in order?

CHAIRMAN: You're in order. Proceed.

WIRTZ: The question that I want to ask the chairman of the Legislative Committee is, by combining the twelve and the thirteen, how does that affect the representation on the theory or doctrine of equal proportions?

BRYAN: Before I speak on the question I insist that we have a second on the motion.

J. TRASK: I second the motion.

BRYAN: As I understand it - -

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the twelfth representative district be amended to include Kapalama, as I understand it. Is that the effect of your motion, Delegate Shimamura?

SHIMAMURA: That is right, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Proceed.

BRYAN: That would, under the method of equal proportions, would leave them with five representatives rather than six and the sixth representative would go to Koolau.

J. TRASK: Mr. Chairman, let me clarify that. The word is Koolau, and not Kulau.

CHAIRMAN: The Chairman has already chastised him for that, Delegate Trask, silently.

H. RICE: I'd like to know if - - and it says "Nuuanu, more particularly described in the schedule." I don't understand that schedule. Where is that schedule presented to us?

CHAIRMAN: That's a part of the matter that's before the committee. It's Proposal No. 30 accompanying - -

AKAU: I'd like to ask the delegation here to vote against the amendment. I think it's high time we got what was coming to us and if we vote for the amendment, unfortunately these districts would actually lose one representative. So if you're voting I trust that you'll vote against it.

WIRTZ: The purpose of my question was to bring that out. I understood the movant to say that he wanted six representatives in those two districts. That was part of his motion, to combine the twelfth and thirteenth and leave the total number at six. That is why I brought out the question from the chairman of the Legislative Committee that under the theory of equal proportions twelve and thirteen combined would only have five.

CHAIRMAN: This is the same amendment that was proposed at our last meeting which did involve the combination of the twelfth and thirteenth representative districts allocating to the two districts six.

HEEN: That's correct. If the delegate who proposed the amendment insists upon six, then he's out of order for the Convention has gone on record as adopting the principle of equal proportions. Having adopted that principle, then if he wishes to have that motion considered, he will have to leave that to be determined under the method of equal proportions as to how many representatives will be elected from the combination of the two districts.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Shimamura, what have you to say to that point of order. It seems to me there would be some substance to it.

MAU: If what the chairman of the committee has just stated is correct, what about the action we took in Puna? Isn't that the same? Is there a difference there?

CHAIRMAN: That did not involve the taking away or adding to the number, as the Chair understands it. This does.

MAU: This doesn't add to anything. Both of them give three each, that would be six.

HEEN: In the case of Puna and South Hilo it didn't make any difference. Under the method of equal proportions neither Puna lost any nor South Hilo gain any.

MAU: As I understand the amendment neither will these districts, if combined, lose any representative.

CHAIRMAN: They will if we abide by what this body has already agreed upon, namely, the application of the principle of equal proportions. That's what Delegate Heen is pointing out.

MAU: Assuming that the Convention votes for it, and I don't think it will, they still have six if they vote for the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: His point of order is that we first have got to reconsider our basic principle before this motion is in order. I am now asking Delegate Shimamura if he doesn't agree that there's substance to that point of order.

MAU: I'd like to be informed about that, on that point of order, whether or not we took that as a separate motion and voted on the theory or whether we voted on a section which carried that theory.

CHAIRMAN: No, we voted on that as a principle.

NIELSEN: How many registered voters, may I ask, are in the twelfth and thirteenth combined?

CHAIRMAN: Will you hold that a minute until the Chair straightens out the point of order? Delegate Shimamura, the Chair is inclined to agree with the chairman of the committee on that point of order unless you can convince us otherwise.

SHIMAMURA: I don't think that point of order in my humble opinion is well taken. For this reason. We voted on this special paragraph twelve, and this amendment is to this particular paragraph, and if this Convention adopts this amendment it is amending this particular paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: Don't you agree that it's an invasion of what the committee has already done in regard to adopting the principle of equal proportions?

SHIMAMURA: The principle of equal proportions as far as the particular article is concerned relates to the reapportionment in 1959. It's no part of this article at all, except for Section 4.

BRYAN: I'd like to speak on that point of order. As I recall the morning that we had the explanation of the mathematical process of equal proportions there was a motion made, duly carried, and I believe the minutes will bear it out, that we follow the method of equal proportions in allocating the representatives in the apportionment which we are speaking of now.

HOLROYDE: May I add a little bit to that also? Delegate Mau's inquiry is to Puna. He implied that the equal proportions system was not applied there, didn't appear like it was applied there, and I grant from where he sits his observation probably looked to be correct, but the committee here checked equal proportions method when that proposal was first submitted and found out that it did not alter the representation at all and that theory was followed in that change. There was no - - under the system of equal proportions there was no change in representation.

OKINO: Point of information. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions a question. If the twelfth and thirteenth representative districts are combined and if the number of representatives by reason of this combination is to reduce the number of representatives from six to five, where is the sixth representative going?

HEEN: Under the method of equal proportions and using the priority list that is established in connection with the application of that method, that one delegate lost by the combination of the twelfth and thirteenth would go to Windward Oahu, Koolauloa and Koolaupoko.

KING: Mr. Chairman, have you ruled on the point of order yet?

CHAIRMAN: I have not. The Chair is trying to find out what's in the minutes. The Chair is of the view that we adopted the principle of equal proportions. That being so, it seems to follow that if this will involve, upon an application of that principle, a change of one representative, the present motion is out of order.

KAUHANE: Point of order. I believe the committee did a very good job by arriving at equal proportions to determine the number of representatives for each representative district, but the poll has just been taken of the representatives from the fifth district and the majority of them are against the amendment, so I think let us vote on the amendment that is now being submitted. I move the previous question.

HEEN: I insist upon my point of order. My recollection is clear, Mr. Chairman, that at the earlier stages of the consideration of the question of apportionment and reapportionment, I believe I made the motion that the committee adopt as the sense of the committee that the method of equal proportions be applied, and that carried.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is of that opinion and will so rule. Delegate Shimamura, you may take an appeal from the ruling of the Chair if you care to.

J. TRASK: In lieu of the decision just made by the Chair, I want to amend Delegate Shimamura's amendment to strike out the word "six" and include the word "five."

CHAIRMAN: Is that acceptable, Delegate Shimamura?

SHIMAMURA: No, Mr. Chairman, that is not acceptable to me.

FUKUSHIMA: For the benefit of the rural areas, I'll second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair didn't hear your statement, Delegate Fukushima.

FUKUSHIMA: I'll second Delegate Trask's motion.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Trask's motion is to move to amend combining the twelfth and thirteenth districts, changing the figure by one representative.

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct. I'll second that motion.

APOLIONA: If you have ruled that Delegate Shimamura's amendment is out of order, then Delegate Trask's amendment to that amendment is out of order, too.

CHAIRMAN: No, that's not correct. This does not invade what the body has already adopted as to the theory of equal proportions.

KAWAHARA: May I ask a question of the chairman of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions? As I read Section 4, of the Committee Proposal No. 29, Section 4, there is a definite statement that reapportionment of the House of Representatives in 1959 shall be on the basis of equal proportions. Nothing in Section 3 -- there is no definite positive statement to the effect that the reapportionment or apportionment shall be on the basis of equal proportions.

CHAIRMAN: You don't reapportion the Senate, just the House of Representatives.

HEEN: That's correct. There's no mention of that method of reapportionment in Section 3 but the fact remains that the apportionment, initial apportionment was made on that basis. If you will read the report it states that the initial apportionment until reapportionment was made under the method of equal proportions.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment.

SHIMAMURA: I did not have an opportunity to address myself to the Chair on the Chair's ruling on the point of order. May I speak to that now, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: You may.

SHIMAMURA: If there was such a vote, and I think the Chairman is correct, that it was a sense vote.

CHAIRMAN: It was a what?

SHIMAMURA: It was a sense vote.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

SHIMAMURA: That was a mere general vote on the general proposition of a sense vote and it does not directly alter the situation. In other words, this does not directly conflict with that vote because this is an amendment to a definite specific paragraph. I think the Chairman has ruled because the incidental effect of the house voting on this section on this particular paragraph, if it did agree to it, would be to overrule its prior sense vote. This is not in direct consideration of the sense vote, Mr. Chairman. This amendment is a specific amendment to a definite paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Shimamura, the Clerk has finally found the minutes. The discussion occurred when Mr. Dodge had made his explanation, and this is from the Clerk's notes: "Following the explanation of Mr. Dodge, Delegate Larsen moved that the Committee of the Whole accept the method of equal proportions as worked out by the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions. Seconded by Delegate Heen. There was considerable discussion on this matter following which the Chair put the question to adopt the method of equal proportions as worked out by the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions, which motion was adopted."

SHIMAMURA: May I ask when that vote was taken, whether that sense vote was taken after my motion to amend?

CHAIRMAN: That was taken before your motion to amend, so the Chair adheres to its ruling.

TAVARES: I rise to a point of order. If Delegate Shimamura's motion is out of order, an amendment to it is out of order because it places us in this position: if we vote for the amendment we are making a motion not out of order, in order; if we vote against it then we are voting to retain the original one which is out of order.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair construes it as a new and independent motion made by Delegate Trask and seconded by Delegate Fukushima.

FUKUSHIMA: Mr. Chairman, if this is a new motion, I withdraw my second.

CHAIRMAN: There is nothing before the house.

A. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved by Delegate James Trask and seconded by Delegate Arthur Trask that the twelfth and thirteenth representative districts be combined and that the two as combined have five representatives.

FONG: I don't think I can sit here and let that highway robbery go by.

CHAIRMAN: Are you referring to the Chair's ruling or what, Delegate Fong?

FONG: This motion.

CHAIRMAN: Oh!

MAU: Point of order. Do the rules provide that a brother can second the motion of another brother?

CHAIRMAN: I think so.

FONG: Six precincts are entitled to three representatives; five precincts are entitled to three, that is referring to the twelfth, thirteenth and eleventh precincts. The Legislative Committee had a hard time arriving at what it should do in the matter of reapportionment of the districts known as X, Y and Z, Kalihi, Palama and Nuuanu and it first adopted the number of eight representatives for the three districts, but in looking over the redistricting of the other part of the fifth district we found that we were out of line. You will note that you have voted on the various reapportionment for the districts, the districts of Koolaupoko and Koolauloa will have two representatives, that is in conformity with the Constitutional Convention in which they had two representatives. The portion of Waialua and Wahiawa would have two representatives and the portion of Waianae and Ewa, two. You will note that in the fifth district the districts are cut up so that none of the districts have representatives exceeding three in number. This amendment if it goes through would have the effect of stealing one representative from the twelfth and the thirteenth precincts - -

A. TRASK: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: He is against the larceny.

FONG: This is larceny in the highest degree. This amendment - -

A. TRASK: Point of information and order. Larceny is not possible unless you first establish the fact and we haven't a fact yet.

CHAIRMAN: It only relates to personal property, not to human beings.

FONG: The twelfth precinct would have three representatives according to the committee report and the thirteenth precinct would have three representatives according to the committee report. Now, if this amendment goes through then a combination of the two will consist of only five representatives which will mean we will lose one representative from the twelfth precinct and thirteenth precinct. Now in the fifth district you will note from the committee's report that the district went according to the Constitutional Convention line. Now, there was no gerrymandering of the fifth district. That line was established by a non-partisan group composed of Democrats as well as Republicans. They were the ones that set forth the Constitutional Convention districts upon which the delegates were elected, and the members of the Legislative Committee felt that they would follow the lines as set forth by the Constitutional Convention group which first delineated the district. So I want to say to the group here that there is no gerrymandering of these districts as far as these two combinations are concerned. So I would like to ask that the Convention vote down this amendment.

FUKUSHIMA: I'd like to voice my feeling as to that amendment which is now before the house. I'm against the amendment. I'm against all amendments to the committee proposal. A few days ago I thought I was at a bingo game. Now apparently this is an old time taffy pull.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. The question is on the amendment. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Amendment lost.

DELEGATE: Previous question.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question on the twelfth representative district. All those in favor of adopting the provision relating to the twelfth representative district signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of the paragraph concerning the thirteenth representative district.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

LAI: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and seconded. Ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

BRYAN: I move the adoption of the paragraph concerning the fourteenth representative district.

J. TRASK: Second the motion.

ROBERTS: The action this afternoon on the fifth district, fifth area, covered the Constitutional Convention combinations U, V, W, X, Y and Z. Combination U became the eighth district, V became the ninth district, W became the tenth district, X became the eleventh district, Y the twelfth and Z the thirteenth. The previous speaker, Mr. Fong, pointed out that the distribution of those districts was done by a non-partisan group. I have no reason to contest that. I think, therefore, accepting that premise, the combinations O, P, Q, R and S of the fourth should therefore be distributed in like manner. I have an amendment to offer which would provide that combination O become the fourteenth district.

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute, there is no combination O in this proposal.

ROBERTS: I am merely indicating the overall basis for my proposal. Combination P becomes the fifteenth; combination Q, the sixteenth; combination R, the seventeenth and combination S, the eighteenth. The overall effect of that would be to give each of those combinations three seats with a total of fifteen seats, as is now proposed in the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth. I'd like, Mr. Chairman, since only one proposal is before us, that of the fourteenth representative district - -

CHAIRMAN: Before you speak to it, is there a second to this motion?

LAI: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Proceed, Delegate Roberts.

ROBERTS: I have been - -

HEEN: Point of information. What becomes of combination T?

ROBERTS: Combination T becomes the nineteenth representative district. There is no distribution - - there's no increase in the seats on the basis of equal proportions. It made good sense to me that a proposal as applied to the fifth, which gave representation of seats of two, two and two to U, V and W and three, three, and three to X, Y and Z, that that same distribution should apply to combinations O, P, Q, R and S. There can be no accusation of gerrymandering on the same basis, since each of those combinations are entitled to three seats so far as the population is concerned of those five areas, the population in terms of registered voters. The fourteenth has 7,000; the fifteenth, 7,600; the sixteenth, 7,400; the seventeenth, 7,700 and the eighteenth, 8,000. Each of those would then have three representatives. I think we can avoid a lot of discussion because the combination as proposed by the committee set up new boundaries and new lines. The boundaries as adopted for the Constitutional Convention to me seem to have been fair. I have not been shown anything which indicates that they were gerrymandered or biased or prejudiced. I think therefore that the combinations used for the Constitutional Convention should also be used in the district.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, would you care to express your views on that?

HEEN: I have not given the subject as proposed now any study at all.

LEE: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that any comments should come from the ones who have been delegated by the majority member group in the Legislative Powers and Functions. He's in the minority, we are all minority.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Bryan, you got any views on this subject?

BRYAN: I think when we started the discussion of apportionment some days ago I tried to explain that so far as the committee could, they tried to consider the views of the members of the committee that were from the particular districts under discussion at the time. At that time the members of the committee of the fifth district were in favor of having the districts as presented by the committee. The members of the committee from the fourth district favored larger districts, for that reason we have broken the fourth district up into larger districts with greater representation from each district. That is about the only thing I can say about it.

In the fourth district some of the people felt their population was more concentrated than in the fifth district and they felt for that reason they would like larger districts with more representatives. Now that is not wholly true because our districts twelve and thirteen have a fair concentration of population. However, those districts were made to keep the fifth district or old fifth district uniform. In the fourth district, as I recall, we went along with the majority of the members of the fourth district that wanted it in larger districts.

LEE: I might add I believe there was a little confusion and tiredness on the part of the members of the committee. By that time there were many members who disagreed with the size of the Senate and House. When it came to Oahu those members who were in the minority were pretty well worn out. They knew that the group over there had the votes and there was no use of saying anything, so that actually very little consideration was given to the fourth district. Of course, we had several ex-officio members who had a lot of weight in the committee and that's the way it went along, but as far as I'm concerned I made no expression. At this time I want to say this much, that I am definitely opposed to the present plan of reapportionment in the fourth district. I have a substitute plan if this one doesn't pass.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will ask Delegate Porteus if he'll enlighten us on this. You've heard the proposed amendment to change the committee report?

PORTEUS: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I don't know why I am selected to speak on it other than I have for many years had a great interest in the representation on Oahu insofar as the legislature is concerned. For some years in the legislature we attempted to find some formula under which we could have an apportionment to give more votes to Oahu. A scheme was suggested that we increase the members of the House. We always ran into the difficulty, however, that when we came to draw the precinct boundaries, nobody seemed to be able to agree with the other. Two people could agree, any two people could probably compromise and agree but the others couldn't get along and I think it was much the same way as far as this committee was concerned.

It is true that there have been certain districts set up, which the legislature adopted in a bill authorizing this Constitutional Convention. At that time we felt that it was better to follow the plan as more or less outlined in the Act before Congress without trying to draw any boundaries, and it was said at that time that the Constitutional Convention itself would be the body which would determine the particular boundaries. The boundaries, I think, worked out very well insofar as election to this Convention is concerned.

However, insofar as the legislature is concerned, I think the former delegate to Congress, our President, will bear me out, that I have always felt that we should not have small districts. I've always been in favor of running our lines on the old boundaries, land boundaries of Hawaii from the mountain down to the sea. Basically that was what was done on the island of Hawaii. Basically that was what was being done in the committee report insofar as Maui is concerned. At present it's true, it now stands five to one but it's on a geographical distribution. I think the fourth district is now split up. It follows geographic lines along the mountainsides until they start going into the lowlands, and as soon as they go into the lowlands, then they pick up a major street and follow that major street or landmark down to the ocean. Now that is the division. Originally there have been many who thought the fourth district should be divided into about three divisions. However, the committee in considering it, felt that the fourth district could very logically be divided into four, and that was the result of the committee's deliberations.

I for one have always liked, as I say, the districts with more people in them, with more people to be elected from the particular district. I never favored the running of all those to be elected from the fourth district at large if we were fortunate enough to have a number such as twelve or even eighteen as is now contemplated. I might point out that in the fifth district, for instance, or the rural area, the rural area would have had six votes. Now, that would seem a very appropriate district. However, those in the rural areas felt that they would prefer to divide that into three sections, and it came down to a natural division, and it seemed logical enough to have them divided as they desired. When it came into the fifth district, I think it was soon found that with Kalihi electing three and then the next division running from the mountains to the sea, five could well be elected. However, in looking the situation over I believe those that -- who were elected from the fifth district to this Convention soon found that by following the lines as laid out for this Convention, instead of having five elected at large there, by dividing into two districts they got six and picked up a man.

As far as the fourth district is concerned I'm very much in favor of having the larger number run. I know that in many issues before a legislature it has sometimes happened that a small area becomes somewhat irked with a position of a particular representative or person in politics. However, as time goes on usually the people get over their annoyances and swing back behind that person if he has rendered good service. I believe that the division as the committee has laid it out, while not the divisions that I would draw on the map, is nonetheless a reasonable division. I might point out that they would elect five, and then in the center section six, then four and then three. Insofar as the area electing six is concerned, there is some prospect in the future that with the housing area removed from Manoa Valley that that section might well in the future lose representation from that central area up to the area out at Kuliouou, the last representative district on this island. I don't think there's great prospect for increase. I think rather there is more chance for decrease. I believe the division of the committee to be an equitable one. I think it's perfectly workable and after all that's the thing we want.

I think the people from the fourth district, the senators who have been elected will testify, have on the whole not insisted that their senators and representatives bring back to them particular bacon for their particular little area, but rather they let them play their politics not quite as close to the ground as is played in some of the other areas. I am sure that the chairman of the committee will testify to such being the case over the many years of service that he's rendered in the Senate. There are others that I think have experienced the same situation. For instance, when you are afforded the opportunity to have kindergartens, we may politically leave the matter to the Department of Public Instruction and let the Department of Public Instruction allocate those kindergartens where the need is the greatest. Whereas in certain of the other districts it is necessary that those who are able to secure kindergartens actually mandate where they go, and they are forced to do that because if they don't, then at the next election someone will stand up and say, "Had I been there in that man's place I would have brought you a kindergarten to this particular school." I think, Mr. Chairman, that the division is a reasonable one, a workable one. I hope the committee will be supported.

DELEGATE: Question.

CHAIRMAN: What we are debating is Delegate Roberts' amendment. Do you have anything to say, Delegate King?

KING: Yes. Delegate Roberts' amendment would make an additional representative district in the fourth district. I feel that that would throw out the equal proportions again. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if that subject had been considered. The minute you add or subtract an election district you disturb the balance in accordance with the principle of equal proportions.

HEEN: That's correct. You would have to figure the thing all over again. I might say that I am opposed to the amendment offered by Delegate Roberts. I believe in having larger districts and larger representation where you can draw on more material to represent the people in the House of Representatives. Under the proposal as it stands now some of the districts will elect six representatives, others five. Under the Roberts' amendment they'll be reduced to smaller figures and you draw, of course, on lesser material.

HOLROYDE: In fairness, however, to Dr. Roberts' suggestion, the system of equal proportions has been applied to it and it doesn't affect the balance between the fourth and fifth districts.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understands that. Are you ready for the question?

AKAU: Before we vote, we didn't do such a bad piece of work in getting some very fine people here on that Constitutional Convention basis. I would say that it's a very good amendment.

ROBERTS: I would like to suggest that careful thought be given to this amendment. It does not change in any respect the number of representatives allowed to the fourth district. The numbers to be elected from each of the districts are no smaller than those in the fifth district where they have two and three combinations. They certainly are not smaller than the Hawaii one in Puna which only has one. I think we are less subject to criticism if we follow the lines used for the Constitutional Convention. It seems to me that as you examine these lines, the basis for the meandering of the line has created some doubt in many delegates' minds as to the allocation and distribution of votes. I think the combinations that I suggest, which have been found workable and have been used and cannot be regarded as improper, since they are being used for the fifth, provide for representation of three in each of the groups, gives representation to the fourth district which will provide distribution in terms of over-all ideas which are equally applicable in the fifth district. I would therefore urge that this amendment be adopted. If it is, then we are through with the districting of the fourth district -- fourth area and all of the combinations are taken care of.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question.

TAVARES: May I point out one more matter? Some statement was made that this Convention didn't do so badly about election. I don't know which delegates were being referred to, but I would like to remind the delegates that some of the delegates ran at large over the whole fourth district and didn't run from the combinations.

SHIMAMURA: May I ask specifically—I think the question was asked in a general way—but what will happen to the theory of equal proportions as far as this amendment is concerned?

CHAIRMAN: That will not be violated, as I understand it from Mr. Holroyde and from Delegate Roberts.

SHIMAMURA: Will not be violated?

CHAIRMAN: Will not be. The Chair will put the question. The question is on the Roberts' amendment. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The amendment is lost.

J. TRASK: Roll call.

ROBERTS: Is it proper now to ask for a roll call?

CHAIRMAN: No.

KAUHANE: I was somewhat in doubt because some yelled loudly through the microphones.

CHAIRMAN: All right. All those in favor will please rise. Roll call must be put before the question is put, Delegate Roberts -- asked for, rather. The Chair is asking for a division on the Roberts' amendment. All those in favor will rise. Contrary. The motion is lost.

LEE: I believe that in between the sentiments expressed for the Roberts' amendment and the committe's amendment, there is a proposal that I have had printed and circulated among the members there, which I now offer as an amendment wherein the divisions would be more in line with the rest of the divisions recommended by the majority of the committee. The fourteenth representative district as set out there would include Precincts 15, 16, 17, 21, 22, 23, etc., four representatives; fifteenth representative district, four representatives; sixteenth representative district, four representatives; and seventeenth representative district, three representatives; and the eighteenth representative district,three representatives. So that actually you have the matter of size taken care of in the numbers of four. You know that four will be the largest number of all of the divisions by this report, and it seems to me that instead of four representative districts in the fourth district you have five representative districts. It seems to me that this amendment is proper, and I, therefore, move for the adoption of the amendment.

Amend Section 3 of Committee Proposal No. 29 in the following respects:

(1) Amend the definition of the fourteenth representative district to read as follows:

"Fourteenth representative district: that portion of the island of Oahu included in Precincts 15, 16, 17, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27 and 32";

(2) Amend the definition of the fifteenth representative district to read as follows:

"Fifteenth representative district: that portion of the island of Oahu included in Precincts 8, 9, 10, 11, 18, 19, 20, and 31."

(3) Amend the definition of the sixteenth representative district to read as follows:

"Sixteenth representative district: that portion of the island of Oahu included in Precincts 6, 7, 12, 13, 14, 34 and 36";

(4) Amend the definition of the seventeenth representative district to read as follows:

"Seventeenth representative district: that portion of the island of Oahu included in Precincts 2, 3, 4, 29, 30 and 33";

(5) By renumbering the eighteenth representative district to be the nineteenth representative district; and

(6) By inserting a new eighteenth representative district defined as follows:

"Eighteenth representative district: that portion of the island of Oahu included in Precincts 1, 5, 35 and 37."

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to ask Delegate Lee, you were a member of the committee. You did not dissent from the apportionment feature of the committee report, did you?

LEE: I'd like to remind the Chairman what I said previously, that by the end of that session we had, everybody was pretty well worn out, and when the committee report was prepared it was just a question of either including in the minority - - signing minority side or the majority side, and I signed on the minority side although I didn't specify as to this particular provision. However, I believe that consideration can be given by the Committee of the Whole at the present time. I've taken this matter up with Mr. Dodge, and Mr. Dodge informs me there would be no loss in representation under the theory of equal proportions. Perhaps if the committee would want enlightenment on it, I'd like to call on Mr. Dodge to point out the division on the geographical map there.

CHAIRMAN: I think it would be more to the point at this time if you'd summarize briefly what this does.

A. TRASK: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Lee has the floor.

A. TRASK: I'll second the motion in the meantime so that the debate can continue, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Very well. It's been moved and seconded that Section 3, Committee Proposal No. 29 be amended with respect to the fourteenth to the eighteenth representative districts inclusive.

LEE: I'd like at this time to call on Mr. Dodge to point out the division where the fourteenth representative district would be, where the fifteenth representative district would be, and where the sixteenth representative district would be.

CHAIRMAN: I'd suggest you take a pointer and indicate, Mr. Dodge.

DODGE: The proposal by Delegate Lee would retain Nuuanu, of course, as the dividing line. The first, the Waikiki boundary of his fourteenth district would be along the boundary line that separates the fourteenth and the fifteenth precinct. The amendment has been prepared so you can spot on the maps that you have before you the precincts that are included in there, and it would run down to King Street, which is the - - it uses the dividing lines that are now dividing the various precincts. It does not cut across any precinct line. It comes down the dividing line of the fourteenth and fifteenth precincts to King Street.

The next representative district is that area that lies makai of King Street and runs over here to, approximately, Kapahulu. That area makai of King and ewa of Kapahulu over to Nuuanu, the lower portion of that is one representative district. The sixteenth representative district then would run from the boundary line that is roughly along Palolo Avenue—just on the ewa side of Palolo Valley there—runs from there over to the boundary line between the fourteenth and the fifteenth districts and stops again at Waialae. The seventeenth representative district would take in the Diamond Head area up to Waialae, and straight out Kalanianaole out here. The balance or the eighteenth representative district would be what is now T on the committee proposal except that it includes a little area on the ewa side of Wilhelmina Rise and is on the mauka side of Kalanianaole Highway. The numbers that they would elect are shown in the amendment prepared, and they have been worked out by equal proportions.

DELEGATES: Question.

KAUHANE: I would like to ask Mr. Dodge to point out the twenty-second precinct on the map.

DODGE: The twenty-second precinct - -

KAUHANE: Would you move this way, Dodge, towards the rail so I can have it identified by you. The twenty-second precinct. I've got it here. I am only trying to show, when he points out the twenty-second precinct, and then I would like him to show me the fifteenth precinct.

DODGE: The fifteenth?

KAUHANE: That's right.

DODGE: The fifteenth precinct is roughly this area in here.

KAUHANE: Well, my question is this, on Mr. Lee's amendment on the fourteenth representative district. Although much has been said here about gerrymandering, that we are not attempting to gerrymander the precinct combination, but it is clearly shown when Mr. Dodge pointed out the twenty-second precinct, which is Central Grammar School on Emma Street, and then he goes to Wilder and Kewalo Streets, the fifteenth precinct at Wilder and Kewalo, we are somewhat stretching too far apart from precincts that are so close. I think that the lesser of the two evils, of the taking the committee proposal and recommendation of the precinct combinations or the precincts as submitted by the committee and the one by Representative Lee, that I'd sooner accept the amendment that was offered by Delegate Roberts because these precincts, as stated in the combination of the election of the delegates to the Constitutional Convention, is so close, and that the people, if the people are to be considered in this instance, would be given the representation that they really need. That's only the first question that I'm asking now.

LEE: I wonder if Delegate Kauhane might yield to this point? Delegate Roberts' motion has already failed.

CHAIRMAN: That's right. What we would like to be enlightened on is the advantage of your amendment over the proposal.

LEE: In the fourth district you have to start from Nuuanu and start moving towards the waikiki direction. Whichever plan you take you have to move towards the waikiki direction, and moving to Wilder and Kewalo is the farthest extent that area in the twenty-second precinct—as pointed out by Delegate Kauhane—goes to, and from then on you start with another combination.

HOLROYDE: One point in regards to Delegate Lee's proposal is the fact that it throws out of kilter the delicate balance between the fourth and fifth districts. He gives the fifth district one more representative under his proposal. I don't know whether he did that purposely or not, but under equal proportions that happens.

CHAIRMAN: Is that correct, Delegate Lee?

LEE: That is not my understanding, because you have four, eight, twelve; and three, three, fifteen, eighteen as the representation in the fourth district.

BRYAN: If that's correct, Delegate Lee's proposal is out of order. It does not follow the method of equal proportions. His proposal - -

CHAIRMAN: Well, the issue we'd like to find out now is whether it does or does not follow the method of equal proportions. If it does not then, like Delegate Shimamura's amendment, the Chair will rule it out of order.

BRYAN: May I speak on that?

CHAIRMAN: Yes.

LEE: Go ahead, proceed, go ahead.

BRYAN: I understood at first that it did and in checking the figures, according to Mr. Dodge, there's been either a misprint or an error made in the proposal before us. It should read under paragraph six "the eighteenth representative district, two representatives," which means that it would do as Delegate Holroyde suggested, throw the balance between the fourth and fifth districts out somewhat.

LEE: I understood it that under the eighteenth representative district there would be three representatives under the method of equal proportions. I was informed of that by Mr. Dodge. Now, if there is any change in that, of course, I have to reconsider my amendment. If this information given to me was false he should at least have let me know.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will declare a 2-minute recess. Will you find that out, Delegate Lee?

(RECESS)

LEE: I'd like to say that there was a slight error in the location of the twenty-ninth precinct which is in the seventeenth representative district under paragraph four.

CHAIRMAN: You have some changes in your amendment?

LEE: Yes. If the members will consult the amendment you will notice that in paragraph four it includes the twenty-ninth precinct. Well, the twenty-ninth precinct was supposed to be down at the bottom to be included after the word "five," 1, 5, 29, 35 and 37."

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute, Delegate Lee. You first strike out "29" in paragraph four, is that right?

LEE: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: Where do you insert it?

LEE: Insert it after sixth paragraph, after "precinct five."

CHAIRMAN: Insert the number, 29.

LEE: So that the representatives will remain as they are in the proposed representative district, so that this will not violate the method of equal proportions.

CHAIRMAN: You've checked that with Mr. Dodge, our authority on that question?

LEE: Yes, with Mr. Dodge; the experts, Mr. Bryan and Mr. Holroyde, Mr. King and Senator Tavares.

CHAIRMAN: They're all in accord with that statement? Are you ready for the question? The question is on the - - Delegate King.

KING: The perfected changes in the amendment is agreed to, but that's all?

CHAIRMAN: Oh, yes. Oh, yes.

KING: I would like to speak briefly against the amendment or change. Turn to the map, those of you who have maps. Delegate Lee's amendment would make a makai representative district from Nuuanu Avenue to Kapahulu Avenue below King Street, taking all of the city, the old district of Kakaako, Kewalo, McCully Tract and Waikiki, and then have Manoa and Pauoa, Makiki put together, then Kaimuki, and then end out in the small district up here. There's no advantages proposed by his amendment over that submitted by the committee, and it seems to me that the amendment should not carry.

LEE: If there's no further debate, I think I'll - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Lee may close the debate.

LEE: May I close the debate here? I believe most of the votes are already cast in the minds of the delegates. What this amendment really actually does in my opinion is give the common man a chance to be elected in the fourth district.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the amendment - -

SILVA: Before you go any further I want to ask Senator Lee a question. What does he consider the other fellow? Who's this common man and who's the other fellow? Is the other fellow a freak or something of that sort?

CHAIRMAN: That question's out of order. The Chair is about to put the question. All those in favor of the amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The amendment is lost.

LEE: Roll call, Mr. Chairman. The vote was pretty close. I demand a roll call.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor will please rise. In favor of the amendment.

LEE: How about a roll call, Mr. Chairman. Aren't we entitled to a roll call, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: No.

LEE: Well, then the Chair will ask all those in favor to rise. Is that it?

CHAIRMAN: I'm now putting the motion again. All those in favor will please rise - - in favor of the Lee amendment. Contrary. The Chair is still in doubt so the Clerk will please call the roll?

Ayes, 23. Noes, 33 (Apoliona, Ashford, Bryan, Castro, Cockett, Corbett, Crossley, Dowson, Fong, Fukushima, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Kage, Kauhane, Kellerman, Kido, King, Lai, Larsen, Lyman, Ohrt, Porteus, Richards, Sakakihara, Silva, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, Wist, Woolaway, Yamauchi, Anthony). Not voting, 7 (Kawakami, Kometani, Loper, Mizuha, Phillips, Sakai, White).

CHAIRMAN: The motion is lost.

KAUHANE: I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

PORTEUS: I don't think that the motion has been put yet to adopt the proposal as reported by the committee. I move - -

CHAIRMAN: Before that is done, the Chair on re-examination of the notes must state that it was in error a few minutes ago in regard to Delegate Shimamura's motion. That motion was in fact made prior to the adoption of the equal proportions principle and therefore the Chair was in error. There was a date here that the Chair was confused about and the Chair will be inclined to reverse itself if the question is pressed at this time.

HOLROYDE: Point of order. I think there was a motion to adopt the fourteenth section and Delegate Lee's amendment was an amendment to that. Was it not? I don't think he could have presented that without having something before the house.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair was calling attention to a previous ruling in regard to one specific district, the twelfth and thirteenth, that Delegate Shimamura was pressing and the Chair ruled him out of order.

PORTEUS: I think I was in error in asking for the adoption of the entire section. I think really we were only on the fourteenth representative district. I think if we take those one by one we would clear the record. I move for the adoption of the fourteenth representative district.

HAYES: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

APOLIONA: I move for the adoption of the fifteenth representative district.

LAI: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

LAI: I move to adopt sixteenth representative district.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the paragraph relating to the sixteenth representative district be adopted. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

KELLERMAN: I move to adopt the seventeenth representative district.

HAYES: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any discussion?

KING: There is a matter which I think the Committee on Style can correct. The seventeenth representative district comprises Kahala and Aina Haina. Aina Haina is a tract name and not a geographical name and should be written Waialae or Wailupe. I do not want to suggest it as an amendment but have the record of the Committee of the Whole indicate that the Committee on Style may correct it.

There is another further matter. The State of Hawaii will include not only the islands we have been discussing, but a lot of little islands such as Midway, Johnson, Palmyra, and the Organic Act—not the Organic Act, but the statutes of Hawaii—in defining the county boundaries do mention all other islands not otherwise assigned, and I suggest the Committee on Style be instructed to add that on to the seventeenth election district, so that the seventeenth election district will include Palmyra, Johnson Island, Midway. And whoever runs from that district will have the pleasure of campaigning among those islands.

CHAIRMAN: All the cats and dogs go into the seventeenth, is that right? There's a motion for the adoption - -

BRYAN: I would like to speak to the motion. I might suggest that they add those miscellaneous islands to Koolau so they could pick up another representative.

DELEGATE: Question.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

SERIZAWA: I move that we adopt the paragraph on the eighteenth representative district.

C. RICE: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion? It has been moved and seconded that we adopt the paragraph relating to the eighteenth representative district. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

CHAIRMAN: Section 4. Will you proceed, Delegate Heen?

PORTEUS: Is it in order to ask for adoption of the entire section?

CHAIRMAN: I should think that would be done when we complete the work on the article.

SAKAKIHARA: I think we deferred to the end of this section, Section 3, the paragraph relating to the second representative district.

CHAIRMAN: The second representative district? That was adopted.

SAKAKIHARA: No, that was deferred 'til the end of the section.

CHAIRMAN: You're quite right. You're quite right.

HEEN: It was the fourth.

CHAIRMAN: It was the fourth, not the second. The Chair will entertain a motion that the paragraph relating to the fourth representative district be adopted.

KAUHANE: I so move.

DELEGATE: I'll second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the paragraph in Proposal 29 relating to the fourth representative district be adopted.

SILVA: There's an amendment, I think, on the desk of every delegate here.

CHAIRMAN: Read your amendment.

SILVA: The amendment amends Committee Proposal 29, Section 3.

> Fourth representative district: that portion of the island of Hawaii known as the second representative district, precincts 16, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 inclusive, one representative.

That gives you a total of 2,229 -- 49 votes.

Fifth representative district: that portion of the island of Hawaii known as the second representative district, precincts 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 inclusive, one representative.

That is 2,918 votes. That is similar to the districts that we had for the Constitutional Convention in which Sakai was elected and Kawahara was elected, without the two at large. You have two representative districts in that one district and that'll give a better chance for the smaller districts to be represented. Otherwise you are going to have your concentration of voters in both the Konas, and Kau, and the Kohalas will probably be out of the picture. That falls in line with the idea of giving Puna one representative district and Hamakua one representative district.

You on the island of Hawaii, you've gone and reapportioned one side of the island as far as senators and representatives are concerned; then you go to the other representative districts and you say in that representative district there shall be no reapportionment in the House nor in the Senate, both shall be at large from the very same county. Now, I just wanted to be a little bit consistent not too much, but I'd like to point out that on the island of Hawaii you've gone over to Puna and given them one representative with 1,800 votes. In West Hawaii with 5,000 some odd votes, you say these outlying districts of North and South Kohala should not have representation, they should run at large. North and South Kohala has more votes than the district of Puna. Yet, you allow Puna to have one and you don't allow North and South Kohala with these few precincts in Kona which gives 2,249, and that is the purpose of the amendment. I now move for the adoption of the amendment.

SAKAKIHARA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the amendment be adopted. The Chair will put the question.

NIELSEN: That will put 2,049 in one district and 3,119 in the other. Will that agree with reapportionment? I would like to ask the chairman of the Legislative Committee.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen or Delegate Bryan, would you answer that?

HEEN: No, I can't tell you offhand. That would have to be figured out.

HOLROYDE: Basically, they'll each get one and according to Mr. Dodge that will be allowable under equal proportions. They will each get a basic one.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the -- Delegate Nielsen.

NIELSEN: That places half of Kona and Kau with 3,149, higher than any other in the whole Territory. I think at large is the answer here and I'm going to vote against the amendment. The sentiment over there in Kona and Kau is all to be at large.

SAKAKIHARA: Mr. Chairman, correction. The fourth representative district, including precincts 16, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 8 will have 2,249 votes. The fifth representative district, that portion of the island of Hawaii known as the second representative district, precincts 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 will have 2,918 votes, not over 3,000.

HEEN: Might I ask the last speaker if all these precincts will be in the districts of North Kohala and South Kohala, in one part? And all the other precincts in the districts of North Kona, South Kona and Kau?

SAKAKIHARA: No, sir. The fourth representative district will include from Kailua, North Kona, to South and North Kohala, inclusive, and part of North Kona, South Kona and the district of Kau will comprise the fifth representative district.

CHAIRMAN: If there is no other discussion, the Chair will put the question.

KAWAHARA: I am not too strongly opposed to this amendment, except for this reason, that some of the arguments presented are rather inconsistent. If you will notice the map of West Hawaii there, you will notice that there are three distinct geographical areas; Kau, the districts of North and South Kona, and the districts of North and South Kohala. In the districts of North and South Kona there is something like 2,300 registered voters. In the district of Kau there is something like 1,100; the difference of something like 1,100 voters. By splitting Kona in two it is very convenient, certainly, to throw half of Kona into Kau and throw the rest of Kona into Kohala. If that's the will of the Convention, that's okay with us.

I would have to oppose it on this ground, that we are not following the intention, for example, of what we started out to do when we gave Puna one representative. In order to be consistent it would be necessary to give Kau one representative and Kona one and Kohala one. By splitting the whole district up in two we are splitting Kona up. Kona itself is a geographical and economic unit; Kau likewise is a geographical and economic unit; and Kohala likewise is a geographical and economic unit. However, because of the fact that we can't get more than two, I see no reason why we should arbitrarily draw a line somewhere between North and South Kona and say this half goes to Kohala and the other half going to Kau. For that reason I'm opposed to this amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Silva, would you like to close the debate on this?

SILVA: Yes, I would. That is not true as far as the arbitrary line dividing both Konas. When we elected these delegates to the Convention, Mr. Kawahara was elected. He ran from Kau up and through part of North Kona, Keauho, with Holualoa thrown in there; and Mr. Sakai from North and South Kohala, including Waimea and Kawaihae, Ponohula and Kalaua. Ponohula has 32 votes, Kalaua 82 and Kailua 250 somewhat, votes. That was thrown in with the Kohalas and that was one representative to this Convention. Mr. Nielsen and I ran at large.

Now, I'd like to give the strong economic districts of that community representation rather than arbitrarily throw them into a part where they have no representation at all. The wealth of West Hawaii is dependent upon the Kohalas and Kau. They are the biggest taxpayers in the community and they should have a crack at the House of Representatives whether they elect one or -- they should have some voice. That was the reason that I put this amendment in. And it only takes 200 somewhat votes from Kona, and even if you leave the Konas by themselves, then the Kohalas in comparison with Puna, just the Kohalas alone, North and South Kohala, has 1,823 votes, just like Puna. If it is the wishes or if this is true then I would be only too glad to let North and South Kohala elect one representative and all of the Konas and the Kaus elect the other representative. If they will do that it's okay with me. If they don't want to cut any part of Kona at all then I say surely North and South Kohala has sufficient votes to elect one representative, just like Puna. They have 1,823 votes.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. The question is on the amendment proposed by Delegate Charles Silva which would amend the paragraph relating to the fourth representative district, dividing it in two. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor of the amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The amendment is lost.

DELEGATE: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule you're not entitled to a roll call unless it is requested before the Chair put the question.

KAUHANE: Mr. Chairman, you have twice deviated from your rule. In one instance you said the motion carried on a voice vote, and you insisted on the roll call. Secondly you took a standing vote, and you again was in order - -

CHAIRMAN: It's because my arithmetic differed from the Clerk's.

KAUHANE: No, I think your arithmetic was all right, only you wanted to satisfy an individual.

TAVARES: I move for a division of the house. There isn't - -

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor will please stand? In favor of the amendment of Delegate Silva. Against? The motion is carried.

KAUHANE: See what he's done, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Thank you, Delegate Kauhane.

NIELSEN: It's all right with Kona because we'll probably elect both of them right from Kona this way.

KING: Mr. Chairman, a minor point that the Committee on Style might take into consideration. The precincts enumerated must be tagged with some year. "Precincts 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 inclusive as delineated in the Secretary of the Territory's Proclamation of 1948" or some other - -

CHAIRMAN: There'll have to be reference made to the schedule attached like the other sections.

HEEN: That's correct, Mr. Chairman. It can be taken care of in the schedule.

KING: Another minor point. The numbering of the different paragraphs will have to be corrected.

CHAIRMAN: They will have to be renumbered in accordance with these amendments. Section 4 is before the house.

DOWSON: I move we adopt Section 3, as amended.

SAKAKIHARA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 3, as amended, be adopted. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

SAKAKIHARA: I now move that we rise and report progress and ask to sit again.

FONG: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any discussion? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

JULY 6, 1950 • Afternoon Session

CHAIRMAN: Committee of the Whole is in session.

HEEN: We are now considering Section 4 which relates to reapportionment of the House of Representatives. I now move that we approve the first sentence of that section which reads, "On or before June 1 of the year 1959 and each tenth year thereafter, the governor shall reapportion the members of the House of Representatives in the following manner."

HOLROYDE: Mr. Chairman, I second the motion.

C. RICE: I would like to know why they picked '59 instead of '60, after the census. I think '60 would be better.

HEEN: The reason for that, we were basing the reapportionment on the number of registered voters, the population of registered voters, instead of on the population as determined by the federal census.

C. RICE: Well, in '59 they have an election, don't they?

HEEN: That's correct.

C. RICE: I asked the deputy county clerk over here how long it took him to take the names off of people that didn't vote. It took him nearly two years.

HEEN: No, '59 is no election.

C. RICE: What?

HEEN: The election is in 1960.

C. RICE: '60?

HEEN: So there's considerable time from June 1, 1959 till the time of election.

C. RICE: I was just thinking maybe Delegate Roberts was going to bring in the one on population. I think it'd be fairer, population. That's why I brought up '59 before it passed.

ROBERTS: I have an amendment to propose which I discussed in our previous consideration of this question.

CHAIRMAN: Amendment to the sentence?

ROBERTS: Amendment to this section, Section 4.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule you out of order at this time unless it relates to this sentence.

ROBERTS: Well, this sentence would involve that, because if you are going to use the population figures of the census you have to use June 1, 1961 as you have the census figures of 1960. I was going to move the subsequent language on population instead of voters registered, but if you are going sentence by sentence, I now move, Mr. Chairman, that in the second line of Section 4, "June 1 of the year 1959," delete the figures "1959" and substitute "1961."

AKAU: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the year "1961" be substituted for "1959" in the first sentence of Section 4. Any discussion?

BRYAN: I think it would expedite matters perhaps if we would dispose first of the question of principle, whether it's going to be on population or on registered voters, then the amendments could be made more orderly and I think the entire section could be considered in a more orderly fashion. I'd like to ask Delegate Roberts if he would withdraw his motion in order that we might make the motion that reapportionment shall be on the basis either of registered voters or on the basis of population.

CHAIRMAN: I suggest that we take a sense vote on whether reapportionment shall be based upon registered voters or population, if Delegate Roberts will withdraw his motion and make the suggested motion.

ROBERTS: I'll withdraw the motion, although I was said out of order by the Chair previously when I was going to move that.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair allowed you to proceed upon your assurance it related to the first sentence, you will recall.

ROBERTS: I discussed this question before and I don't think it's necessary to repeat the general discussion with regard to the desirability of using population instead of registered voters for your reapportionment.

CHAIRMAN: For the sake of the record, have you moved that we adopt the population figures for reapportionment?

ROBERTS: I will so move.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

FUKUSHIMA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Proceed.

HEEN: I would like to find out whether this is population generally or citizen population?

ROBERTS: My basic premise and argument last time was that the legislators represent all of the people in the particular area from which they are elected. Therefore, population includes all individuals.

CHAIRMAN: Aliens as well as citizens?

ROBERTS: All, that is correct.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? The question is whether or not reapportionment shall be based upon population rather than registered votes. All those in favor - -

KING: The reason the committee didn't adopt population was that you cannot get population figures for individual election districts. You get them for geographical districts and for islands, but you cannot get them - - for instance, the setup in Kalihi, Kapalama, Nuuanu and in the fourth district.

Now there's another point why population is not necessary. I had a study made by the Legislative Reference Bureau and found that the percentages of votes cast or votes registered and population did not differ too materially, and as a matter of fact, the population percentages for the other islands, the neighbor islands, are less than the votes cast. If we are going to use population and then use the system of equal proportions, the other islands might suffer. The island of Hawaii for instance cast in 1948, 18,500 votes. That was 17.2 per cent of the total votes cast. The population on the 1950 census is only 14.5 per cent. The island of Maui cast 12,616 votes which was 11.7 per cent, and the population figures, Maui county has only 10 per cent of the total population of the territory. The same is true of Kauai. They cast 7.3 per cent of the votes; they have only 6.4 per cent of the population.

So the committee was wisely guided in using registered voters instead of population. The figures I quoted were for votes cast in '48 but the same is true of the registered votes of 1950; therefore, I feel the amendment would upset what we've already done in regard to reapportionment.

CHAIRMAN: It has all been pretty well aired at the last debate. The Chair would like to put the question.

FUKUSHIMA: Section 4 does not deal with the immediate problem. This is a question of reapportionment in 1959, or according to the amendment proposed by Delegate Roberts, 1961.

CHAIRMAN: No, that's withdrawn, that was withdrawn.

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct, but if we are to assume that we are to reapportion the legislature on the basis of population, this is projected to 1961 and it is not, and it will not, hamper what we have done so far. We've done only Section 3, which is on the basis of registered voters; that is because we could not get the figures at this time. However, in 1961, upon proper request I am sure that the federal census will give us the figures that we want as far as population is concerned, so the point that was made by President King is not correct.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question?

HOLROYDE: Just one minute before we close this. The delegate's first part of his statement was correct. It doesn't affect Section 3. However, he says, "I am sure that we can get these census figures taken the way we want them by district." Now what assurance can he give us that that's so? I'm a little hesitant about that part of the proposition.

CHAIRMAN: I think his view is it's done elsewhere and there is no reason why we shouldn't do it here.

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. It is done all over the 48 states; there's no reason why we can't have it done here.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Lost.

The question is now on the first sentence of Section 4. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: I now move that this committee adopt the second sentence of Section 4, which reads as follows:

> The total number of representatives shall first be reapportioned among four basic areas; namely, (1) the island of Hawaii, (2) the islands of Maui, Molokai, Lanai and Kahoolawe, (3) the island of Oahu, and (4) the islands of Kauai and Niihau, on the basis of the number of voters registered at the last preceding general election in each of such basic areas and computed by the method known as the method of equal proportions, no basic area to receive less than one member.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

HOLROYDE: I second that.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion?

C. RICE: I'd like to change the word "registered." Where it says "number of voters registered," "number of voters voting in the last preceding election," then we could go down - -

CHAIRMAN: You mean the number of votes cast?

C. RICE: Number of votes cast, or voting in the last general election, cast. I have the last general returns, official tabulation.

CHAIRMAN: May I understand your amendment? On the fourth line of Section 4, you would delete "voters registered" and insert in lieu of that "votes cast"?

C. RICE: Yes, in the last preceding general election.

CHAIRMAN: "At the last preceding," and the language will be the same. Proceed, Delegate Rice. Is there a second to that?

NIELSEN: I'll second the motion.

C. RICE: West Hawaii has the biggest number of voters -- of registered voters. They vote 90.8 per cent, Kauai votes 90.6 per cent, East Hawaii votes 90 per cent, fifth district 87.6, and the fourth district 84.99. Is Dr. Larsen here, I mean Delegate Larsen? He told me there must be an epidemic and so forth, if they don't vote. I want him here because I think there was an epidemic.

CHAIRMAN: Will the Sergeant-at-Arms get Dr. Larsen?

C. RICE: The last election here for the delegates to the Convention, 10,000 stayed away.

TAVARES: I understand Dr. Larsen is addressing a meeting of physicians this afternoon. I don't think he should be disturbed.

CHAIRMAN: Will the Sergeant-at-Arms stop the messenger?

C. RICE: Then in the last general election 87 per cent stayed away. I think the people that take an interest to go out and vote, they are the ones who should be counted. It isn't just because it makes some of the other districts higher but I think the votes cast are the ones. It's very easy to do it, just as easy as taking the registered voters. They have a record. You have a record of how many votes in each district are cast and the dividing of precincts is very easy, and why not put a premium on the fellow who goes to vote?

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion? If not, the Chair will put the question.

BRYAN: I think that Delegate Larsen's point was not without foundation. I'd like to ask the members from the Hilo area what the votes cast would have been had there been an election the day of the tidal wave. A registered votes would still be a good figure that we could go by, but had the general election fallen on that day or had the tidal wave come on general election, how many representatives would they have in the House for the next 10 years after that?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question, the question is on the --

HEEN: I am opposed to the amendment. The committee considered these various problems: votes cast, registered voters, population, citizen population and so forth. There is only one state that uses this measure of votes cast for the governor, that's Arizona, and that's only for the House of Representatives. Now, Massachusetts uses legal voters, both for the House and the Senate. Rhode Island uses qualified voters for the House. Tennessee, qualified voters for both the House and the Senate. Texas, qualified electors for the Senate.

APOLIONA: I am against this amendment and at the same time I would like to submit to the honorable Delegate Rice from Kauai some facts of maybe why the Oahu people show a small percentage of votes cast. I wish, Mr. Chairman, that this delegation here -- delegates here do not blame the people who register to vote. They are ready to at all times, but the people who are really to blame for keeping those people away from the polls are these business houses in town who keep the stores open so the people can't go to vote. Those are the people who are to blame, not those who are registered to vote. They want to go to work -- to vote, and I think this Convention here should give that thought some consideration. Blame the people who keep the people from the polls, not the people themselves.

NIELSEN: I am very much in favor of this amendment because I think it's going to teach Americanism. I think it's a step that the other states would like to take right now and I think if we can put a premium, as Charlie Rice says, on the men and women that will go to the polls and vote, it will mean that they get a bonus in going to the polls and electing the people they want to serve. I am fully for it.

TAVARES: I am opposed to the amendment. I think the sponsor should withdraw it, in the light of just what Delegate Bryan alone said. Too much can happen by some fortuitous circumstances, acts of God and so forth that would unfairly discriminate against an area. If you are going to have an average figure over the last 10 years, that would be a different thing; but if you're just going to take one particular day, and what happened on that particular day, which could be influenced by so many different considerations, I think it is unwise and I think the sponsor ought to withdraw it.

CHAIRMAN: I don't think he will but the Chair will put the question.

ARASHIRO: May I ask the Republican party leader and the Democratic party leader the reason for their choosing the number for delegates to the Convention on the basis of votes cast for the Delegate to the Congress of the United States or based it on that?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair doesn't feel that that's germane to this issue. As I understand Delegate Rice, they have a high number of votes cast over on Kauai and therefore he's in favor of his amendment. Is that correct, Delegate Rice?

C. RICE: No, that's not right. You shouldn't put words into my mouth. I know you are trying to put cards in my hands but that doesn't work with words. No, I think this is right, don't make any difference, but it's true that the man who goes out to vote should be counted and there is no --

A. TRASK: Point of order. If the --

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order.

A. TRASK: If the delegate of Kauai -- I'm sure he wants the vote down here. The delegates down here would like to hear him.

C. RICE: I couldn't quite hear. Oh, can't hear. I was afraid my voice was too loud. No, I sincerely think that this should be the way to select them. It isn't that just a few of the outside islands gain by it, they don't gain much. But there'd be no subterfuge, there'd be no leaving dead men or anybody else on the list. We know who comes to vote and it'll be an encouragement for everybody to get the people out to vote. You'll have a bigger percentage of voters voting on that day and it's a great encouragement and I think it's fair and square and should be adopted as amended.

DOI: I am against the amendment proposed. The argument advanced in favor of the amendment to the effect that the registered votes carry many dead voters, I think is invalid because under the present system, I believe, should a voter fail to go and vote, his name is dropped from the register at the next general election. The argument also advanced that using the basis of votes cast will make better Americans, also I think does not carry much weight. Reason for that is reapportionment comes around once in ten years and I don't think that is incentive enough to make good Americans.

DOWSON: I am against the amendment because should it pass it would be unfair to certain areas which are adjacent to military installations. I believe in times of emergency, these people who work there in these military installations would not be able to go and vote. They are patriotic and sticking to their installations and we can't very well call them down for not voting.

DELEGATE: Question?

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment of Delegate Rice, who would substitute "votes cast" for "registered voters" in the fourth line of page 5 of Committee Proposal No. 29. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Afraid it's lost.

RICHARDS: I have another amendment to offer. The matter was brought up yesterday in regard to the other islands that are to vote along with one of the groupings on the island of Oahu. Now, if they are to vote with that particular grouping, they should also be included in the matter of reapportionment. Therefore, I should think that line three should be amended to read: "the island of Oahu and the other islands not specifically enumerated."

CHAIRMAN: I think we agreed when that was last raised that that would be taken care of by the Style Committee.

RICHARDS: But, Mr. Chairman, I think that this is a little bit different. That was as far as Section 3 was concerned but this is Section 4, a different section, and has to do with reapportionment and I think that a note should definitely be made that those islands should be included in reapportionment.

CHAIRMAN: Does the chairman of the committee have any views on that?

HEEN: I think that's a good amendment.

TAVARES: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: What are the words of your amendment, Delegate Richards?

RICHARDS: I drafted them very rapidly. I don't know whether that's proper or not, but my suggestion is, "and the other islands not specifically enumerated," in view of the fact that all the other islands that are in the different groupings are specifically enumerated.

CROSSLEY: I understand that will go in number 4, "the islands of Kauai and Niihau and such other islands as not enumerated."

CHAIRMAN: No, you're in error on that.

HEEN: Question, Mr. Chairman. All these other islands will be tied to Oahu?

CHAIRMAN: Chair has already noted that on the amendment, Delegate Heen. Are you ready for the question? I think we can vote on this question and the actual language can be left to the Style Committee. The sense of it is clear enough.

ARASHIRO: Point of information. Are we now voting only on the Section 4, paragraph A?

CHAIRMAN: We are now voting on the Section 4, paragraph A. Delegate Richards has called attention of the body to a technical defect in the description, or the omission from the description of the other islands not in the enumeration in this particular paragraph. This would in effect bring those other islands and islets within Oahu.

Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's carried.

Chair will now put the question on the section.

HOLROYDE: I move that that section now be adopted as amended.

HEEN: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 4-A, as amended, be adopted. Any discussion? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: I move that sub-section B of Section 4 be adopted down to - - no, all of that section.

CHAIRMAN: The whole section, Delegate Heen? On the copies before me I note the word "ratio" has been taken out and "quotient" inserted. Is that - -

HEEN: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: Should that correction be made on all the prints before the delegates?

HEEN: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: That occurs in two places. Paragraph B, the very end of the paragraph, the word "ratio" should be taken out and substituted "quotient," and nine lines above that where the same word appears, take out "ratio" and insert "quotient." Is there a second?

NODA: I second the motion.

TAVARES: To be perfectly clear that should be reinforced as a motion to amend, and I second Judge Heen's amendment.

HEEN: I second Delegate Tavares' motion.

TAVARES: All right, I'll make the motion, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the substitution of the word "quotient" in the two places, indicated by the Chair, be adopted. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: I now move that this sub-section B of Section 4, be adopted as amended.

HOLROYDE: I'll second that.

ASHFORD: I move to amend that motion by striking out the last sentence.

CHAIRMAN: Beginning with the word "Upon," Delegate Ashford?

ASHFORD: Yes.

WIRTZ: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Hearing no second, the Chair will be obliged to put the question on the motion.

WIRTZ: Point of information. When you are referring to section B do you mean that paragraph or all of the rest of it all the way over to Section 5? A lot of us don't know what you're talking about, "the last sentence in sub-section B."

HEEN: I amend my motion and confine that to the first paragraph of sub-section B of Section 4.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of adopting the first paragraph of Section 4, sub-section B as amended, signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: I now move the adoption of the second paragraph of sub-section B of Section 4.

HOLROYDE: I'll second that.

HEEN: That paragraph reads as follows:

> The governor shall thereupon issue a proclamation showing the results of such reapportionment, and such reapportionment shall be effective for the election of members to such house for the next five succeeding legislatures.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any discussion?

AKAU: If we are going to meet every year, Delegate Heen, would you say that should be for the "five succeeding legislatures," if we're going to meet for the budget and then for the regular one? Would that still hold true?

HEEN: That's correct. It is the same legislature sitting annually instead of biennially.

RICHARDS: I have a question that I would also like to ask. Assuming that there has been a change in the Constitution within that particular period, this would be in conflict with it if we use the term "for the next five succeeding legislatures."

CHAIRMAN: Any change in the Constitution would have to take care of that difficulty. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: I now move the adoption of the third paragraph of sub-section B of Section 4.

HOLROYDE: I will second the motion.

HEEN: This particular paragraph deals with the writ of mandamus that might be issued in order to compel the governor to perform the duties as described in the two paragraphs prior to that, the Supreme Court being given original jurisdiction for that purpose. It also provides that if the governor does not reapportion correctly on the basis of the method of equal proportions, the act of the governor may be corrected also by mandamus.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion? If not, the Chair will put the question. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: On my notes, I note that Section 5 was adopted in an amended form.

CHAIRMAN: That is in the Chair's notes too. There was an amendment proposed by Delegate Tavares, however the amendment was not complete. I was going to call the body's attention to it. That amendment was in the third line beginning with "the office of members," "the term of office."

TAVARES: That was objected to as being a matter of style. I think then the matter was sort of either ruled out of order, or I withdrew it, something, it wasn't acted on.

CHAIRMAN: I think you're correct. I suggest that Delegate Tavares has the floor, I want to see if his recollection is the same as mine. He made the motion and I suggested -- the Chair suggested that it could be taken care of in the Style Committee in both places where it appears, and you acquiesced in that view. Is that correct?

TAVARES: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: It has been adopted, Delegate Heen.

WOOLAWAY: Sections 5, 6, and 7 have been adopted, I now move for the adoption of Section 8.

CHAIRMAN: May I go through the list here? Will you hold that just a second? Section 6 has been adopted, Section 7 has been adopted and Section 8 was deferred. You're quite right. Is there a second to that?

WOOLAWAY: I should change that to move the adoption of Section 8 as amended. I believe we put in the word "salaries" between "any" and "public."

CHAIRMAN: The second line after "while holding any," insert the word "salaries," and I believe the word "position" was stricken, according to my notes.

ASHFORD: I think following the word "office," there should be included "other than legislative," because he may hold a legislative office and still be qualified to run.

HOLROYDE: Could I second that? I'll just second that motion to the adoption.

CHAIRMAN: You're seconding what?

HOLROYDE: Woolaway's motion. I don't believe there was a second.

CHAIRMAN: Question before the house is on Section 8 as amended. Did Delegate Ashford care to make an amendment?

ASHFORD: I will offer that amendment, Mr. Chairman, that after the word "office" there be included "other than legislative." Otherwise a member of the legislature wouldn't be eligible to run.

HEEN: That's correct, speaking technically, but we have the same language in the Organic Act and that language has never been held to preclude members of the legislature from running for election.

CHAIRMAN: It appears to the Chair, Delegate Ashford, that it's implicit in that section that a man can hold the office that he's elected to.

ASHFORD: I don't think anybody seconded that motion. I think the reason it has stood is that it hasn't been attacked.

WIRTZ: I second that motion. Perhaps the movant will accept a slight amendment, if we insert the word "other" before "salary."

CHAIRMAN: I think that would do it a little more expeditiously, Delegate Ashford. The amendment is to insert the word "other" before the word "salary," hence a legislator could be a public officer and receive a salary, but no other salaried officer.

PORTEUS: In connection with this I wonder whether some member of the committee might care to answer the following question? At what time does a legislator cease to hold office? It was my understanding from the examination of the proposal that a legislator goes out of office at the next general election, If he goes out of office at the next general election, beginning on that day he's out of office. As a matter of fact he's not a legislator on the day that they're voting for him and he succeeds himself. But I don't think there's even any technical question there because he goes out of office on election day, not at the end of the day, he goes out of office immediately on the start of the election day and he isn't elected until the end of the election day, until the votes are tallied, cast and a certificate of election is filed.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Ashford, have you any rebuttal to that suggestion? Sounds kind of reasonable to the Chair.

A. TRASK: I don't think that argument is valid because this section, as I remember the last debate on it, was to the eligibility of the person to file for the office. So even though the election day is subsequent, it will always be subsequent to the day of filing the application for the office.

TAVARES: I seem to have a faint recollection that provisions of this type, such as age and various other qualifications, have been held to apply to the situation as it existed at the time they take office, whatever time that is. In other words, we have elected senators to the United States Senate who are under age, and if they became of age before the session opened or before they took office why they were considered eligible. Some of them, in fact, were just not allowed to take their seats until they became of age and then have been given a seat, so that I don't think that should cause too much damage. If on the day before election or perhaps even on election day before they are declared elected they resign from their offices, I would think they would be eligible under this provision.

ARASHIRO: Under this provision does it make it possible for a legislator to be a member of the board of regents or the school board?

CHAIRMAN: No. No. The prohibition is against holding a salaried job.

ARASHIRO: But if they are not paid salaries, non-paying - -

CHAIRMAN: That's right, they can hold that job.

HEEN: No, Mr. Chairman, that situation, I think, is taken care of in Section 10. I might state there was some discussion of having an amendment inserted in this Section 8, that each position - - each office shall be salaried offices or position but there was no vote on that as I recall it.

CHAIRMAN: May the Chair ask - - Delegate Arashiro has raised the question—why weren't the disqualifications dealt with in a single section rather than in two, Delegate Heen. I note that it's dealt with in Section 8 and also in Section 10.

HEEN: Well, Section 8 disqualifies public officers and employees from being eligible for election or to hold a seat in the legislature. Now Section 10 is the other way around.

WIRTZ: To clarify the atmosphere, I'll remove my suggestion of the "other." I understand the movant is willing to withdraw her motion to amend. My recollection, however, on the other point [that] was raised by the chairman of the Legislative Committee was that we did vote on the question of "salary."

CHAIRMAN: We did not?

WIRTZ: We did.

CHAIRMAN: That is the Chair's recollection but the section was deferred, so the Chair will now read the section according to his notes. It reads as follows: "No person while holding any salaried public office or employment shall be eligible to election to, or to a seat in, the legislature." Are you ready for the question? Question is on the adoption.

ROBERTS: I have an amendment to offer to this section. My amendment is to delete the second sentence and to substitute, therefore, the following: "No legislator shall hold any other office or employment of profit - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts, that's covering Section 10, if you'll examine it.

ROBERTS: The purpose of my amendment is to meet the problem of individuals who are employed and who would be disqualified under this proposal from running for office. I note for example, there are a number of individuals in this Convention, who were elected to the Convention, who would not be permitted to run for office under this provision if adopted in the Constitution. I would therefore, Mr. Chairman, move to delete that section in order to provide individuals who have the general qualifications to run and if they are elected, during their term of office, then they shall not hold any other office. That section was adopted for the governor. The governor, for example, can run for the United States Senate. Any member of the legislature could run for the Senate of the United States. They aren't disqualified from running. Why shouldn't an individual in the community, if you're looking for individuals to run, be permitted to run for office?

CHAIRMAN: In the judiciary article, they forfeit their office if they run for an elective office.

ROBERTS: Well, talking about the judges, the problem there was quite different.

A. TRASK: I second the motion made by Delegate Roberts.

ROBERTS: May I speak to the amendment, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Proceed.

ROBERTS: The amendment is to delete Section 8. There is only one other state in the Union that has made any provision for disqualification along this line, and that is the state of Missouri. And that state has made specific exemptions which include, for example, reserve corps, school boards, notary public and others.

It seems to me that if we are looking for individuals in the community to run for office, that if we want to provide as broad a basis for individuals for the new legislature which has increased its membership, then you ought to go to every area in the community to bring competent and qualified people there to serve the community and the public. This thing it seems to me would prevent individuals in the community from running.

Suggestion was made the other day that the way to do it was to resign from your office. That seems to be hardly an answer. If a person has a livelihood he can't give up his job, and no individual in private employment gives up his job when he runs for office. He takes leave of absence. Why shouldn't individuals in the community who have jobs as teachers, for example, if they wish to run, get a leave of absence? Why should they be denied the opportunity for serving their community? I think this amendment, Mr. Chairman, would permit all individuals to run if they have the general qualifications. If they are elected, then obviously they have to give up their previous employment while they are in the legislature.

A. TRASK: In support of the deletion, I think the best argument for this deletion is the fact that there are so many people in government service here contributing to this covenant and doing an excellent job. I think the invitation to people to run for public office should be a general one.

I am very curious to look at Section 22 of this proposal where the members of the legislature, after they're elected and get their salaries, they may vote themselves additional salaries. Now that's an extraordinary feature.

CHAIRMAN: We haven't passed that yet.

A. TRASK: I know, but that is the proposal and I'm directing the attention of the delegates to that provision. The governor can run for the United States Senate while he is still the governor. And directing our attention to this matter with reference to what Delegate Tavares brought to the attention of the Convention with respect to the United States senators who were elected when they were under age, provision with respect to Article I of the United States Constitution says: "No person shall be a senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years:"

CHAIRMAN: This section goes to the question of eligibility rather than -- Yes, there's a difference.

A. TRASK: Precisely, that's why the argument of Delegate Tavares was not in line. You not only seek to have a person be in government service, but you penalize him and you make him ineligible to apply for office, to be elected, and I think certainly that the government workers have an advantage over most people in government. And I think they should not have this confronting them and alienate a large part of the people of the territory, some 15,000 in number.

CHAIRMAN: What would happen to his public duties during the time he was running for office? Who would do that?

A. TRASK: I think we could leave that to the wisdom of the legislature.

HAYES: I have a question I would like to ask Delegate Roberts and my question is this. For instance, he runs for the legislature and he is elected and after the legislature has closed its work, does he go back again to his position that he left to run?

ROBERTS: Let me assure the lady delegate that I do not intend to run for the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: She wants you to construe the section for her, though. That was her query.

ROBERTS: If an individual in the community has a job and he feels that he can make some contribution in the legislature, he can take a leave of absence and run for that office, and if he is elected, then sits in the legislature and is on leave and may return to his office when that legislature is pau. That same privilege is accorded to private employees who run for office and are elected, serve their term, and then they go back to their job. There's no reason why the same provision is not applicable and proper for other individuals in the community.

SILVA: There is no getting away that working for the government and working for private employment are two different things in its entirety. Working for the government is a privilege rather than working for private employment. Now, there is no binding duty in working for the government. If that is true, then all of us, every citizen throughout the territory should have the same privilege and any time there is a depression, we should go to the government and say, well, I want to be a teacher and I am entitled to be a teacher like the other school teachers or like the other government worker. There is a distinct difference and I am opposed to the amendment in its entirety. I can't see for any member of any department, whether in the school or any department of government, to get into the legislature and work out for the very same department in which he represents. That, in itself, is contrary to our own Constitution to have a judicial branch, legislative and administrative branch all in one.

TAVARES: As the one who suggested the first amendment, I think I am going to have to eat a little humble pie here. I am now convinced that Section 8 ought to go out entirely with the understanding that we are leaving it to the legislature by law to regulate this situation. I am now convinced that even the language I put in, "salary," doesn't hit the problem. There are some heads of departments who are members of boards and commissions that don't get paid that shouldn't run for the legislature. On the other hand, there are some officers, like notary public, who do get profit from fees who shouldn't have to resign in order to run for office, and I don't think we can cover it unless we do what Delegate Roberts said Missouri did in their constitution.

Now we have a civil service law which, after weighing the pros and cons of employees running for office, has decided that there are more evils from allowing them to run for office than the benefits of allowing them to do so, and therefore the civil service law allows the civil service commission to prevent that under rules and regulations. If you put Delegate Roberts' amendment in and it means what he says it does, you are invalidating your civil service rules.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a school teacher running for office sounds fine, but that school teacher has thousands of children whom he is in a position to influence unduly and unfairly, and even if he doesn't do it, as some of the school men will testify, he is accused of doing it anyhow and the people don't like it. I think in the long run we should leave it to the legislature. I, therefore, move that we delete the whole Section 8 with the understanding that the legislature can regulate it as it does under civil service.

ARASHIRO: I second that motion because I feel that Section 10 can properly take care of that.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 8 be deleted in its entirety.

ROBERTS: That was my motion, Mr. Chairman, and that was seconded by Delegate Trask—to delete Section 8.

CHAIRMAN: I thought you had some added language.

ROBERTS: I did, but when the suggestion was made that it was not proper I therefore moved to delete.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried. Section is deleted.

WOOLAWAY: I now move for the adoption of Section 9.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

COCKETT: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It was moved and seconded that Section 9 be adopted. Any discussion? I call the attention of the body to the fact that at the last discussion of this, the debate centered about the words "any statement made or action taken" on the question of treason.

WIRTZ: Point of information. Weren't the words "except treason" -- no, just the word "treason," wasn't that deleted?

CHAIRMAN: No.

WIRTZ: My recollection is that it was deleted.

WOOLAWAY: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Not according to the Chair's notes.

WOOLAWAY: It was my understanding that Delegate Kawahara made that amendment and it was lost.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kawahara made the amendment to take out the words "or action taken" and insert the words "or speech" according to the Chair's notes. It was never acted upon.

KELLERMAN: I think I made the motion to delete the word "treason" and the comma following it and that was passed. Then the discussion went to "action taken" and after some discussion on that amendment, there was a motion to defer the paragraph. I think you will find that's correct.

TAVARES: My notes show on July 1 we did vote to delete the word "treason," but we did not pass on the others.

ASHFORD: Wasn't there also a motion to delete the words "in either house"? I think that was made by the chairman of the committee, "in the exercise of his legislative functions," cutting out the words "in either house."

PORTEUS: Will the body recess for a moment to give the chairman an opportunity to check his notes? Everyone is telling him what has been done and I don't think we are giving him the opportunity to find out from his own records what's happened.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will declare a two-minute recess till he gets his bearings.

WIRTZ: I second the motion.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Committee of the Whole will please come to order. The word "treason" be deleted. That motion was carried. The second motion as put by Delegate Kawahara, that the words "action taken" be deleted, that motion was put by the Chair and lost. So the section now stands as it appears in the print before you with the word "treason" deleted and the comma.

HEEN: I move that the Section 9 as amended, be adopted.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

TAVARES: I was under the impression that a motion was pending to delete the words "in either house."

CHAIRMAN: No, that is not correct.

TAVARES: Well, I so move.

HEEN: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the words "in either house" appearing on the fourth line of Section 9 be deleted. Any discussion?

SHIMAMURA: May I ask the question similar to the one I raised at a previous session, Mr. Chairman? In other words, if you delete "in either house," you're making this provision much more expansive than it is now. Isn't that correct?

HEEN: That's correct. It'll take care of the situation where we have in some other article provided that the judicial officer may be removed by the two houses sitting in joint session, and I think there was one provision this morning along the same line.

SHIMAMURA: May I ask another question, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Proceed.

SHIMAMURA: What would be the situation of a member of the legislature who makes a speech, say at the legislative council meeting, if we have such a council? Would his immunity apply to such a speech if he makes some ordinarily -- let's rather say a statement that is ordinarily defamatory, would he be still immune?

CHAIRMAN: No; there would be no immunity unless it is expressly conferred in the section creating the council.

TAVARES: It is my understanding that it would depend upon whether he was performing a legislative function or not. I am not prepared to say, without studying that further, that just because it was a legislative council meeting that there wouldn't be immunity. I believe it wouldn't be as broad possibly but if it was in the exercise of legislative functions, as the court should find, then I think this would give immunity.

CHAIRMAN: I think the correct rule would be that it would stand on the same basis as the testimony before any other public body. There is a certain immunity, as you know, if you testify before the P. U. Commission, or court.

SHIMAMURA: Well, that's just the point I mean, because if it's in the performance of the legislative function presumably the question would arise whether or not that legislative immunity would cover that situation. That's why I raise the point. The section as it stood prior to the deletion of the words "in each house," would limit it to his deliberations, his speeches, and his actions in the house.

HEEN: In the exercise of legislative functions, it might be in a committee so long as he is exercising his legislative functions, and much of the function of the legislature is performed in committee, so that if a legislative council can be regarded as a committee of the legislature that immunity might extend to the members of that council so long as they are all members of the legislature who are members of that council.

CHAIRMAN: The proposed amendment would broaden the immunity in other words.

A. TRASK: This would, of course, extend to holdover committee legislative activity, would it not?

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. Are you ready for the question?

SAKAKIHARA: Would you be kind enough to restate the question.

CHAIRMAN: The question before the body is the deletion from Section 9, fifth line, after the words "legislative functions," delete the words "in either house," and the purpose of the deletion is to broaden the immunity rather than to restrict it. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

SAKAKIHARA: I have an amendment to Section 9. Section 9, the last word, "the same," delete the period and insert the following: --

CHAIRMAN: Chair did not get where you are beginning, Delegate Sakakihara.

SAKAKIHARA: Starting from "the same" in the last sentence there, delete the period and insert a semicolon, add the following sentence: "provided, that such privilege as to going and returning shall not cover a period of over 10 days each way."

YAMAMOTO: I second the motion.

HEEN: Your committee decided to delete that provision. That's the provision that appears now in the Organic Act. The Organic Act was passed 50 years ago when they had no automobiles. I believe, at that time, you had to have buggies and horses and it used to take 10 days to go from Kau to Hilo.

CHAIRMAN: No airplanes?

HEEN: No airplanes. Now you don't need that provision. You leave here at half-past four in the afternoon and get to Kauai about an hour after that.

CHAIRMAN: That seems to make sense to the Chair. Does the delegate want to withdraw his amendment?

SAKAKIHARA: Oh no, the amendment stays.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will put the question.

PORTEUS: May I point out that it would seem to some as though this were an extension of time by putting in "shall not exceed 10 days." If you have gone home, you're home. But under the provision as written here, a person might take a month to return home and try to claim his privilege. I think that time would be unreasonable, but at least in this, we would be pinning him down to the ten days. I don't think it is an extension but rather than that, it sets an outside limit.

CHAIRMAN: The body understands the question? All those in favor of the amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The amendment is lost.

ROBERTS: I'd like to offer an amendment as follows: at the end of that section after the word "same" delete the period, put a colon, and provide the following language: "provided that such privilege as to going and returning shall not cover a period of over two days." If I have a second to that, I would like to speak to that amendment.

YAMAMOTO: I second it.

ROBERTS: The way the article reads now, a legislator could take a month or two off and engage in any kind of activity under the Constitution and be completely privileged and immune from arrest. I don't think we ought to grant him that immunity. The purpose of the immunity is to perform certain functions - -

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute, Delegate Roberts, "except felony or breach of the peace." "In all cases except felony or breach of the peace." Now if the legislature - -

ROBERTS: That is while he is in session and performing his duty. The parenthetical clause says "be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the sessions of their respective houses and in going to and from the same." It seems to me, therefore, what you're doing is giving a complete immunity without any specified time and that's the purpose of the proviso in the Organic Act. Now maybe the time is too long because we have airplanes and boats and automobiles, but you certainly don't want to give them a free-for-all on that. You ought to put some time limitation on it.

BRYAN: I'd like to speak against that amendment, not that I'm not particularly in favor with the sentiment of it but I think the words "and in going to and returning from" are sufficient. If a fellow is taking a month off on Kauai when his home is on Hawaii, he is not going to or returning from the legislature, in my mind.

FONG: This privilege from arrest is not an immunity in which a man after the attendance in the legislature cannot be arrested. Now this immunity only applies to the time when the legislature is in session. You can't arrest him at that time. Nothing prevents you from swearing a warrant after the legislative session is over to arrest him. Now this is only to prevent you from hampering the administration of the legislature.

TAVARES: I should like to quote from an authority cited in a note to Section 6, clause I of the United States Constitution. I'm reading from the U. S. Code Annotated. There is this decision cited from the case of Williamson vs. U. S., 207 U. S. 42552, Lawyer's Edition 278, and it says this, "The term treason, felony and breach of the peace as used in this section excepts from the operation of the privilege all criminal offenses." There is nothing to worry about.

CHAIRMAN: What are you, for or against the amendment?

TAVARES: I am against the amendment, it isn't necessary.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? The Chair will call the attention of the body to the fact that the same language appears in the Federal Constitution, "in going to and returning from the same." The Chair will put the question. All in favor of the amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The amendment is lost.

HOLROYDE: I move Section 9 be adopted as amended.

APOLIONA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion is on the adoption of Section 9 as amended. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's adopted.

KAM: I move for the adoption of Section 10.

WOOLAWAY: I second the motion.

ASHFORD: Section 10 was adopted, wasn't it?

CHAIRMAN: No, we are now on Section 10.

AKAU: In this question of public office, would that apply to the holdover committee appointments? The statement is, "No member of the legislature shall hold any other public office, position or employment of profit." Now I raise the question, did the committee think about the holdover group and would that apply?

CHAIRMAN: They could still be on the holdover committee, that would not be a prohibition against that. "No other public office," it says.

AKAU: Delegate Heen, would that be considered a public office?

HEEN: Not the other kind of public office. It is still a legislative office.

CHAIRMAN: You don't trust the chairman of Legislative Powers either, is that the idea?

HEEN: I believe there is a defect in this Section 10 with reference to the use of the term "of profit" after the word "employment" in the third line. I believe that those two words should be deleted, otherwise members of the legislature may hold the position of police commissioner over on Kauai or police commissioner in Honolulu where there is no salary or profit attached—I mean legal profit—attached to those offices. I move for the deletion of the two words "of profit" following the word "employment" in the third line.

WIRTZ: May I ask a question? Is it also deleting the words "of profit" as they appear later in the section? They appear twice.

CHAIRMAN: That's right, that would be the same, three lines below that, Delegate Heen. "Be elected or appointed to any public office, position or employment of profit."

HEEN: I move the same amendment to delete the same two words following the word "employment" in the fifth line of that section.

ASHFORD: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 10 be amended in two respects. To delete the words "of profit" in the two instances where those words appear.

FONG: May I ask whether a reserve officer in the United States Army is a public officer. Does that mean if I stay in the legislature I got to resign my reserve commission?

HEEN: I think that this language here would include reserve officers.

KING: I think the language ought to be limited to officers under the State of Hawaii and its political subdivisions, not to the federal government.

CHAIRMAN: Well, you wouldn't want to see an officer holding a salaried position in the federal government, would you? As a member of the legislature?

FONG: That would eliminate Delegate Samuel King also. He is a reserve officer, I understand, retired. He is still holding a public office. That would knock us all out, all the reserve officers who are in the legislature. That would prevent reserve officers from running for office. They are only reserve officers to the extent that when the government is in a dire emergency they are called to active duty, otherwise they are civilians. So I was wondering whether this was a little too harsh and I don't think this was the intention, to eliminate these people.

KING: Aside from the difficulties that might be experienced by Delegate Fong and myself, the Territory and the State of Hawaii of the future will have thousands of officers and men in the organized reserves of the army, navy and marine corps and all of them will receive some retainer pay and they will be public officers according to this section.

OKINO: I should like to ask the chairman of the Legislative Committee a question. As I read Section 10, the officers commonly known as notaries public are included, are they not?

HEEN: That is correct.

OKINO: I feel that an exception should be made for notaries public because many legislators from the outside islands are notaries public and there are not too many notaries public in the outside islands, and I think the people of the islands are entitled to those particular services. By inserting a very short clause after the word "employment" respectively in the third and fifth line, "excepting notaries public," it will take care of that situation.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, it appears to the Chair that there are several instances which would work a hardship on reserve officers. Wouldn't it be in order to defer this until we get a little perfecting language and proceed with the next section?

OKINO: I move for deferment at this time.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

RICHARDS: If we are going to defer action on it for possible other wording, there is another question that I would like to raise regarding the wording here and a situation which could easily arise. As I read it, no member of the legislature shall hold any public office during the term for which he is elected. Now a situation can arise where someone is elected to the State senate for a period of four years. At the end of two years there is a change in the governorship. Now the governor might want him as his executive assistant or might want him in one of the cabinet positions. Now would this preclude the senator resigning because his term would not be up and accepting a position of other government employment?

CHAIRMAN: It appears to the Chair that it would. Is there a second to Delegate Okino's motion?

CASTRO: I second the motion to defer Section 9. Pardon me, 10.

CHAIRMAN: Until the end of this article?

CASTRO: Until the end of the article or such time as we can get satisfactory wording for this section.

CHAIRMAN: You have heard the question. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's deferred.

WOOLAWAY: I move for the adoption of Section 11.

KELLERMAN: I move that we take up Section 12 before Section 11, because the issues involved in Section 11 are definitely tied in to whether we have an annual session or not. It seems to me that, depending upon how the vote goes on the next section, we might have to reconsider what we did on Section 11.

CHAIRMAN: You make a motion to that effect?

KELLERMAN: I will move - -

WOOLAWAY: I accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and seconded that we take up Section 12 at this time. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried. Floor is open for Section 12.

HEEN: I move for the adoption of the first paragraph of Section 12.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

HOLROYDE: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the first paragraph of Section 12 be adopted. This provides for annual sessions.

PORTEUS: In conjunction with the provision for annual sessions – I probably am anticipating the second paragraph – as I understand the matter of taxation and finance, there was a recommendation there that other legislation not be tackled until legislation affecting appropriations of money, not being passed until the general appropriations bill has been passed. If we have a budgetary session, might we not reconsider our action in that portion of the taxation and finance article? Did the chairman of the committee have that particularly in mind?

HEEN: I think the language of the second paragraph of Section 12 is not in conflict with the provision that was adopted in connection with the article on taxation and finance.

PORTEUS: Well, I thought the general appropriation bill would be passed at one session. You wouldn't have to pass it at the next session. If you passed it, it is already disposed of. If you don't have a general appropriations measure, what are you doing to do, wait to pass it when you don't have any particular one in mind?

CHAIRMAN: Do you have an amendment, Delegate Porteus?

PORTEUS: I want to get what the picture is between the Legislative Committee and the Committee on Taxation and Finance as to whether these things do or do not fit together under this scheme. They wish to have one session exclusively confined to general appropriation measures.

TAVARES: I think I can answer that question. The chairman of the Committee on Taxation and Finance was also a member of the Committee on Legislative Powers and Functions and the taxation and finance sections have been carefully dove-tailed into what we understood the language of this was going to be. There is now a provision for regular sessions which is defined in this bill, in this article sufficiently so that whether you have annual or biennial sessions, it will fit the taxation and finance article.

WIRTZ: I think there is some confusion that the appropriation bill is going to cover a period of two years. Under this system the appropriation bill will be for the next succeeding fiscal year. The only difference between the two sessions is that one - - there will be the appropriation bill in both sessions, but in one it will be limited to the appropriation bill and revenue measures and certain emergency measures.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate White, did you want to be recognized?

WHITE: It is my understanding that the provision which we adopted would apply to a biennial session or annual session, that was the purpose of it. The only difference is that you will have an annual budget instead of a biennial budget, that's all.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion? The question is on the first paragraph of Section 12. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: I now move the adoption of the second paragraph of Section 12.

BRYAN: I'll second that motion.

ROBERTS: I have a question to address to the committee. I thought it had been our previous understanding that it would be possible at the budget session to take up confirmations in the Senate or for the possible removal of individuals. As I read the section, there is no provision at the budget session to permit the taking up of Senate confirmations.

CHAIRMAN: That isn't done in the session; it is a session of the Senate alone, confirmation.

ROBERTS: I know, but there is no sense in calling a special session of the Senate when the House and Senate are both in session and you can bring those matters up to them instead of reconvening them, providing for special consideration.

CHAIRMAN: You think there is a prohibition here?

HEEN: There is no prohibition here, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN Then there is nothing to stand in the way of the Senate confirming any nominee during any one of those sessions.

ROBERTS: As I read the section, Mr. Chairman, it says at the budget session, the legislature shall be limited to the consideration of the following things.

HEEN: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: That is not the action of the Senate.

ROBERTS: I assume the Senate is part of the legislature.

HEEN: That is correct; the limitation is on the two houses, sitting as the legislature. But it so happens that the Senate is also in session; therefore, the Senate, being in session, can act on those appointments in the way of confirmation or consent to removal.

ROBERTS: If that goes in the Committee of the Whole as a statement of consideration by this committee, that will be perfectly all right.

CHAIRMAN: That's perfectly clear, Delegate Roberts.

OKINO: I should like to propose a question in connection with the second paragraph of Section 12. Is the expression "urgency measures" sufficiently broad and inclusive to include impeachment of public officers?

HEEN: It might well be if the governor becomes too dictatorial and wants to take over the government, it might be an urgency measure that might require drastic action on the part of the legislature.

OKINO: I should like that statement to be incorporated in the report. I think it will clear up the situation.

CHAIRMAN: Chair may appoint you as subcommittee of one to incorporate these things in the report, Delegate Okino.

OKINO: I shall appoint you as a committee member.

NIELSEN: I wasn't on either one of those committees, but I noticed in the third sentence it says, "for the succeeding fiscal year." Isn't the budget session supposed to cover the biennium?

HEEN: No, Mr. Chairman, it's supposed to cover each year, each year becomes a fiscal year instead of a biennial appropriation.

NIELSEN: Well, then you have a budget session every year?

HEEN: That is correct. In other words, in your general session you consider your general appropriations bill; in your budget session you consider only the appropriations bill and other bills referred to in the provision of this section, urgency measures and tax measures that may be required for the general appropriations bill.

NIELSEN: I was under a mistaken idea then. I thought there was one session, one year there was a budget session and the following year there was a general session.

WHITE: On this question of confirmation and other things, isn't that handled under the paragraph on the executive powers and duties where it says that the governor "shall at the commencement of each session, and may, at other times, give to the legislature information as to the affairs of the State and recommend such measures as the governor may deem expedient"? Does that permit him to take up those things that need to be taken up at that session?

CHAIRMAN: The Senate confirmation does not necessarily involve a session of the legislature. So the problem that Delegate Roberts raised is taken care of.

H. RICE: You're going to have 76 senators and representatives. Don't you think we ought to write it in here somewhere that each member should be allowed to introduce one bill or 10 bills or 15 bills, that's the limit?

CHAIRMAN: Chair is ready to put the question before any facetious remarks are extended.

PORTEUS: I note here that at a budget session or apparently at a general session a general appropriations bill for a succeeding fiscal year only may be handled. It would seem to me under some circumstances that it would be desirable from the point of view of a department and from the point of view of the governor to be able to budget out their expenditures over more than one year's period. I think this is unduly restricted. If it appears desirable to have a budget for a succeeding fiscal year only, that could be handled. On the other hand, many expenditures for a department, as those who have been in the legislature know, may well be handled over more than one particular series of months. It may be a little desirable to postpone some of the purchases or to make some of the purchases a little earlier. Now, if you don't let a department budget itself out for about two years in advance or even a year and a half, I think that you're placing an undue restriction on your legislature, on your governor, and the executive departments because there are sometimes a good time to make purchases. You don't know quite when they'll be, whether they'll be in the next year or six months. Give them a little discretion and that, I think, will be more desirable than to restrict your budget to a one year period.

CHAIRMAN: Will the committee address themselves to that?

BRYAN: The only point that I want to make is the words, "for the succeeding fiscal year" referred to the general appropriations bill. It's just describing what the general appropriations bill is. Now other authorizations for expenditures and so forth and so on would not necessarily be limited to the succeeding fiscal year in my mind.

PORTEUS: It is my understanding that the general appropriations bill is the budget for the territory. The general appropriations bill that I thought we had been talking about in this Convention is the one that not only sets up the out-lay of money for personnel but it sets up the money to be expended for supplies, maintenance and the operation of the particular departments of government.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate White, can you clear up the Secretary?

WHITE: I think he's getting confused about budgeting and the general appropriation bill. You can develop a budget three or four years in advance, if it is necessary for proper planning, but when you come to a particular session you approve a certain amount of appropriation to take care of general operating expenses for a one year period. That doesn't prevent the development of a biennium budget as a guide to the legislature and as a guide to the executive, and then you come along to the following year and you may want to modify what you've already budgeted for the second period.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question?

PORTEUS: I take it then the answer is that you can tell the legislature all you want, the legislature can sit around and talk all it wants about maybe what might happen in a succeeding fiscal period, being a one year period, but if the governor and the executive department and the legislature feels that it would be better to set up a general appropriations bill and make it an appropriation for two years or for a year and a half, that under this provision then it is forbidden to do so.

AKAU: I'd just like to speak on the other side of the picture. I think the people in public office, in government office here, would appreciate the fact that they can set up their budget for one year. I think they have found it very difficult to see forward for a period of two years. I think we have a very glowing example of the Department of Institutions who didn't plan very well a couple of years ago and they were in hot water. I think we should do it on the basis of one year and let it go at that.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will put the question.

ROBERTS: I'd like to speak in support of the comments made by Representative Porteus. I think there are problems in terms of the operation of the legislature where you may want to provide budgets for a biennium. I know, for example, at the university if you're going to bring in individuals from the mainland to teach, you've got to make some overall provisions in planning for more than one specific year in terms of budget. I think the legislature should be given the opportunity to make provisions for longer budgets than one year. I think we ought to provide for some amendment to the section to take care of that and if it's agreeable with the group, could we defer action on that paragraph so some language could be provided?

HOLROYDE: Again we are talking about the difference between budget and appropriations. You can make a budget for ten years; there is nothing to prevent you; in fact most businesses do plan for ten years. But you appropriate for one year, then you come back and review and if you want to - - maybe you tentatively decided what you were going to do the following year, but you come back and review it again against that budget and maybe change the budget. But your appropriation is for a year, your budget can be for any number of years.

ROBERTS: Mr. Chairman, there is a distinction obvious - - Mr. Chairman, may I have the floor.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts, you have the floor.

ROBERTS: I just want to know.

CHAIRMAN: You what?

ROBERTS: I want to know whether I have the floor. I understand the difference between a budget and an appropriation. I think the problem basically is that, to say you've got a budget mapped out for ten years and then tell the department to go ahead, but they cannot go ahead except for one year because all you given them an appropriation for is one year. And even though they may look to you and say, "Yes, you've got this plan for the next five or ten years," but they cannot act unless they are given funds with which to act.

LOPER: I'd like to ask the chairman of the committee, if there's any reason why these words should not be deleted: "For the succeeding fiscal year and."

HEEN: It was definitely decided that the appropriations bill should cover only one fiscal year.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate White, do you have any further views on this? Does it present any problem to you?

WHITE: No, it doesn't to me. It seems it is a relatively simple problem. I think you always have problems where in employment you may go beyond the period of a fiscal year which might have to be taken care of in the amount that you appropriate, but I can't see that it raises any more problem than when you have to take on the employment of a man for four years when you have a biennium budget.

KELLERMAN: May I add in support of the committee report that we had before us in the committee the heads of several of the executive departments. They were unanimous in their opinion that an annual budget on a one fiscal year basis would be of material benefit to them in planning their expenditures and laying out their plan of work and what they could expect to have without running into the question of cuts by the executive branch where there were discrepancies in revenues and funds - - taxation plans that were set up in an appropriation bill. They were unanimous in their approval of the workability of a single fiscal year plan.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will put the question. Question is on the adoption of the second paragraph of Section 12 beginning with the words, "At a budget session" down to the words "entered upon its journal." All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it, it's carried.

HEEN: I now move the adoption of the third paragraph of Section 12.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

KAGE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion on the section? This limits the number of days of the session of the legislature.

TAVARES: May I ask a question? Under the Organic Act which has substantially the same language, the governor has exercised the power to grant more than one extension during the 30 day period. In other words, it doesn't mean that he can only exercise the right of extension once. In other words he can extend for five days and then two days and ten days more until the 30 days are up. I think that should be understood, that the power of extension is not lost by one exercise thereof within the limits.

CHAIRMAN: As a practical construction that would follow, I think.

HEEN: This language follows the language in the Organic Act and it has been so interpreted that the governor may extend for five days, and before the expiration of five days gives another extension of two or three days and so on down the line, so long as the combined extensions do not exceed 30 days, excluding Sundays and holidays.

ROBERTS: The second section provides for general sessions limited to a period of 60 days and budget sessions to 60 days and special sessions for 30 days.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, correction, 30 days.

CHAIRMAN: Thirty days for special session - - budget and special sessions, 30 days.

ROBERTS: I'm sorry, that's correct.

CHAIRMAN: That's right.

ROBERTS: I'd like to amend the number of days for 90 days for the general session and 60 days for the budget session and 30 days for the special session. I also plan, Mr. Chairman - -

CHAIRMAN: Wait till I get that. Ninety for the regular, 60 for the budget and 30 for the special.

ROBERTS: That's correct.

HEEN: Ninety days for the general session and 60 days for the budget session. The budget session and the general session are regular sessions.

ROBERTS: My amendment, Mr. Chairman, was to change the words 60 to 90, to provide for 60 days for a budget session and 30 days for a special session.

CHAIRMAN: Do I hear a second?

MAU: Second.

CHAIRMAN: Seconded by Delegate Mau.

ROBERTS: My own personal preference would be to place no limitation on the time of the legislature. In discussing the matter with various delegates, however, I find that there is general opposition to a continuing session of the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts would like to have your attention. It just may be he has a contribution here. The Chair is inclined to think he has.

ROBERTS: We'll weigh that after I get through talking. It would seem to me that a 60 day session, which would include the general legislation and the passage of an appropriation bill, that 60 days is much too short a time. You ought to provide at least 90 days if you're not going to provide for a continuing session. The budget session, I think, ought to remain as they are and the special sessions ought to remain as they are. I would suggest that some opposition may be created by the fact that the salaries in Section 11 for the 60 day session are limited to $1500. When we come to that section I plan to move an amendment to provide additional compensation for the legislators for that additional time. I would amend that section when I get to it from $1500 to $2000 and from $1000 for the budget to $1500.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the speaker one question? I take it you will leave the provision there as to the extension of every regular session for a period of 30 days.

ROBERTS: Yes, the language in your section with regard to the extension by the governor would still remain. I understand that the purpose for limiting to 30 days would be that if the governor needs more than 30 days for some special operation then he has to call you back in special session and pay you appropriate funds for it.

HEEN: As I understand the last speaker, he feels that it would take 90 days to take care of all kinds of bills, including the general appropriations bill during a general session. Is that correct? Well, they can do that with 60 days plus 30 days' extension.

ROBERTS: The fact that we can do a job in three months doesn't mean sometimes that it might not take us more. I thought perhaps this job here might be done with less time, but when getting 63 people together we found that it was much more difficult and I would venture to suggest that perhaps it would be more difficult with a larger House and a larger Senate. There will be more individuals to consider and more differences of opinion to reconcile. I think you ought to be given adequate opportunity to do a job in giving adequate legislation and proper consideration to the appropriation bill.

MAU: In line with what the last speaker has just said, in this Convention we have only one body to deal with. If we are to have a bicameral legislature there'll be two houses to deal with and I think progress will be much slower than has been the progress in one house in this Convention. I want to call the attention of the delegates to the fact that this 60 day period has been going on for the last 50 years in the Territory. Of course times have changed. We have come a long ways from where we were 50 years ago. I think there's much more work for the legislature than say 20 years ago and yet the performance of the legislature in the past say ten years has been such that the public is inclined to believe that 60 days has been too short, and I sincerely believe that the legislators ought to have enough time in which to do a good job. I contend that if the legislature has to rush through its work as this Convention has been trying to do, to rush through its work, that possibly a good job cannot be done.

I also want to call attention to the fact that Congress used to meet between the months of December and March and now it is in session continually because of increased business, and I believe the same holds true for territorial and I hope state affairs.

CHAIRMAN: Question is on the amendment.

FONG: I want to speak in opposition to this amendment. In my experience in the legislature, I have found that 60 working days is plenty enough for the legislature to do its business. In the five sessions that I have been in, it was only on very few occasions that the governor has seen fit to convene the legislature in extra session for two or three days and the longest that I have stayed was about five or six days. Now the 60 working days which we have been given to carry on the work of the legislature has proven sufficient for the legislature to do its business. Now if you extend the session to 90 days it will mean that your legislature will be in session for almost one-third of the year, that is 90 working days will stretch out to about four months of work. Now four months of work is a pretty long time to have your legislators sit and I believe that 60 working days with the privilege of the governor to extend it for 30 days, the way he has been extending it two or three or four days depending upon the time needed, is plenty sufficient for us to carry on our work. Besides the regular session we now have the budget session and in the budget session we'll carry on some of the emergency measures which will be taking off the load from the general session. So actually we have an extra 30 days in the budget session, and I would say that 60 working days is plenty enough. So this amendment should be voted down.

APOLIONA: I, too, am against this amendment. Knowing the legislators as I do, I am casting no reflection on them, they are all good and honorable men. If you give them 60 days, they're going to ask for more. If you give them 90 days, they're going to ask for 120 days. I think the idea is to give them a lesser number of days so they will get down to work from the very beginning because legislators are just like we are. We are human, we like to loaf until the last few days and then rush everything. Personally, I think this extension of time is just giving the legislators more time to "dilly" around.

H. RICE: I wish the delegates would look at their manuals, pages 48 and 49, and they'll find that the majority of the states do try to limit the number of bills introduced into their legislature. The trouble is the legislature now has too many worthless bills introduced and that takes time to segregate them all and expecially - -

CHAIRMAN: Is that done by constitutional provision or is that a self imposed rule?

H. RICE: I'll read just a sentence here. "As a result of these constitutional provisions and legislative rules, a great majority of states in some way attempt to restrict the introduction of bills." I think that you will find that some say it will take four-fifths of the legislature to introduce bills after the 40th day. I'm against this amendment. I think the legislature is long enough in 60 days and I think if it's annual you will find it's plenty.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. The question is on the amendment enlarging the number of legislative days to 90 for a general session, 60 for a budget session, and 30 for a special session, with the power to extend for an additional 30 days. All in favor of the amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Amendment is lost.

Question is now on the paragraph. Are you ready for the question? All in favor of the adoption signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Unanimous. Not unanimous, excuse me, carried.

WOOLAWAY: I move for the adoption of Section 11.

NODA: I second the motion.

WOOLAWAY: It was my understanding we were going to take up Section 12 and then go back to Section 11 by the wishes of Delegate Kellerman.

ASHFORD: I have an amendment to Section 11 which is on the desks of the delegates. I offer that amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Ashford, may the Chair get the procedure straight. Has it been moved that Section 12 be adopted? The Chair will entertain a motion then that that section be adopted prior to receiving your amendment.

KELLERMAN: I move the adoption of Section 12.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

SMITH: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 12 be adopted. Is that the entire section, Delegate Kellerman? Chair will recognize Delegate Ashford.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, if I may. In the first paragraph of Section 12, fourth line, they have this language, "All sessions shall be held at the capitol of the state." One article that was adopted by the Convention says that the seat of government of the state shall be in Honolulu, so this will have to be amended to conform with that provision in that article and maybe that can be a matter of style. That could be ironed out.

WIRTZ: I so move that the matter be taken up by the Style Committee, to conform.

HOLROYDE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will incorporate that understanding in the report, that it will be taken up by the Style Committee. The Chair will recognize Delegate Ashford who is trying to get her amendment before the house. I don't believe it has been offered yet.

CROSSLEY: Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

ASHFORD: Mr. Chairman, I - -

CROSSLEY: Point of order. You just asked for a motion on Section 12, Mr. Chairman, which is one section that we adopted paragraph by paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: Quite right, the Chair is getting a little dizzy. The Chair will now put the question on Section 12.

TAVARES: Point of information about Section 12. It seems like a trivial matter, but I think it should be understood. In the last paragraph of that section when it says, "Regular sessions shall commence at 10:00 a.m.," it means 10:00 a.m. whatever time the legislature may enact from time to time.

CHAIRMAN: Hawaiian Standard Time.

TAVARES: Daylight saving or any other time the legislature enacts.

CHAIRMAN: That's so understood. Are you ready for the question? All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

CROSSLEY: I now move for the adoption of Section 11.

WOOLAWAY: That's already been covered, carried.

CROSSLEY: It couldn't be, it's out of order, so I now move for the adoption of Section 11.

SMITH: I'll second that.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 11 be adopted, and the Chair will now recognize Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: I have an amendment to Section 11, to the entire section.

Section 11. The compensation of members of the legislature shall consist of a salary of the sum of $1,500 for each general session and the sum of $1,000 for each budget session and the sum of $750 for each special session which sums shall be payable in such installments as may be prescribed by law, together with such additional emoluments as may be provided by law. No salary shall be payable when the senate alone is convened in special session.

No law directly or indirectly increasing the emoluments of the members shall be effective for a period of two years subsequent to its enactment.

CHAIRMAN: You move the amendment. Is there a second?

ASHFORD: I move that amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

WIRTZ: I second.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 11 be amended in accordance with the amendment offered by Delegate Ashford, on the desks of the delegates.

ASHFORD: If I may speak to that. I incorporated in this Section 11 the salary schedule presented by the committee although I think that salary schedule is far too low. For a regular session at the time of the adoption of the Organic Act, $1000 was given. Now we've had more than 100 per cent inflation.

If we are to have a truly representative legislature they must be adequately paid, particularly people from the other islands who have to come here and live away from their homes, and unless they have adequate compensation, of course they can't leave, particularly one-man businesses or what not, can't come, but I did not attempt to amend that in the amendment I am offering because I didn't want to ask too much at one time.

The amendment which I do offer is to cover the situation which now exists. The legislature has voted itself an emolument of, I understand, $15 a day for legislators from the other islands and a lesser amount for legislators from Oahu. Now I am in hearty accord with that principle but I do not think that any legislature should be permitted to raise its own pay, and therefore the meat of my amendment is contained in the second paragraph that "no law directly or indirectly increasing the emoluments of the members shall be effective for a period of two years subsequent to its enactment."

CHAIRMAN: In other words, your amendment simply adds the second paragraph to the committee proposal, is that right?

ASHFORD: That's the essence of it, yes.

NIELSEN: I'd like to ask a question. This does freeze the salaries, however, at $1500 with no further per diem or anything to be allowed during the first session after statehood?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. The Chair might suggest to Delegate Ashford—I don't know whether the delegate heard that inquiry—the adoption of this amendment would preclude a change in the salaries of legislators, and what the delegate from Hawaii is inviting the delegate from Molokai's attention to, is just that. If you desire to have the second paragraph acted upon, that could be done separately.

HOLROYDE: I would like to ask Delegate Tavares or someone else in the law profession if that act now on the books that allows them $15 a day, won't that continue?

TAVARES: I assume it would under the Ashford amendment. The emoluments are mentioned. They are provided for by law.

HOLROYDE: That's my understanding, so that won't be taken away, it will continue.

TAVARES: Was there a second to that motion, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Yes, there was a second.

ASHFORD: I'm not in agreement with that suggestion. I don't think that that would necessarily continue because that was the legislature of the Territory of Hawaii and we're setting up a new legislature by this State -- for the State. If the delegates will refer to Section 11 as included here by the committee, it doesn't give the legislature any power to raise their salaries, the salaries are frozen.

CHAIRMAN: Could Delegate Tavares enlighten the Chair as to what section of the Revised Laws this per diem is in?

TAVARES: As I recall it I think it's later than the Revised Laws of 1945. I think --

CHAIRMAN: Here, we got it here from an expert.

SAKAKIHARA: It was the 1945 session of the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: 1945 session laws?

SAKAKIHARA: Yes, 1945 session law.

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, are you referring to the allowance? That was enacted I believe in 1947 and amended in 1949, where it was raised from $10 to $15 for the members of the legislature from the outlying islands and where an allowance of $5 for incidental expenses was made for the members from Oahu.

NIELSEN: I'd like to ask Senator Heen, under this amendment then there can be no allowance per diem to the outside islands or the local representatives until they voted it for the next succeeding session? They couldn't get it the first session after statehood, is that right?

TAVARES: I disagree respectfully with Delegate Ashford. We are going to have, I believe, a provision in the ordinances and continuity of law portion of our Constitution which will continue in effect laws not inconsistent with this Constitution. I do not consider such a law inconsistent with this Constitution unless we provide otherwise specifically, and therefore it will be continued in effect until the legislature otherwise provides, in my humble opinion.

FONG: I think the passage of this amendment will give further strength to the opinion of Attorney General Tavares. There was a question as to whether the legislature could pass such a bill and there is still a question as to whether the bill is valid or not. But with this amendment here, it would validate what the legislature has done, and I think if this amendment passes and nothing is said about the law which is now in effect, that law will continue and the per diem will still be paid.

PORTEUS: May I point out to the concern of some of those from the outside islands that if the next legislature anticipating statehood doubles the ante, when the first state legislature meets they'll get double what it is today. It'll be a nice incentive for some of those that desire to see what pay is established when the first state legislature meets. Actually if there is a session of the territorial legislature before a session of the state legislature such laws as are in effect will continue over. I think the former attorney general, the delegate from the fourth district, is quite correct in his opinion. But don't let's make the assumption that it's $15 and $5. It might be nothing if it's repealed and it might be something else if a different law is passed.

HEEN: If the Republicans are still in control of the legislature that might happen.

NIELSEN: That's the reason I brought that up because we are certainly taking a beating these days from the outside islands in this Convention.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will call the body's attention to Act 17 of the Session Laws of 1949, which provides:

> A member of the legislature of the territory, other than members residing on the Island of Oahu, while attending any session of the legislature, shall be allowed fifteen dollars a day, which amount is to cover all personal expenses, such as board, lodging and incidental expenses, but not traveling expenses, and a member of the legislature of the territory residing on the Island of Oahu, while attending any session of the legislature, shall be allowed five dollars a day.

Now under the continuity of law section that statute is continued; your amendment would not reach the vice, Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: Apparently I'm not supposed to speak on this subject.

CHAIRMAN: You certainly are, Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: The attitude of some of the delegates here seems to be that I am opposed to having the legislators properly paid. I'm not; I think they should be, I think that's the way you get good men, and particularly good men who have not private resources. But I think it is abominable for a legislature to vote money to itself.

PORTEUS: I'm sorry, but I feel that I can't let that pass unanswered. It's all right for some of the delegates to make remarks about the legislators. Legislators are used to being fair game by a great number of citizens. They would expect, however, that those that had had some concept of the duties and the difficulties would perhaps speak a little more kindly. I think I'm in a position to rise to this and speak on the matter because I was not one who ever voted for any increase in pay, for any retirement, or for any emoluments. There were others that did; I did not. I think, however, that the law as passed, while it was passed by a negative vote, has worked to the advantage of the outside island legislators; I think it has worked also to the advantage of the legislators here on the Island of Oahu. In fact I might add that when it was -- the law was passed giving Oahu $5 a day the outside islanders looked at those of us in Oahu and said smilingly, "You vote 'no,' but your hand is out." And I don't know that any of us who did oppose it then refused to accept the amount that was proffered.

However, I think it should be pointed out in the defense of the territorial legislature that had taken some of these actions that their pay has been set by Congress in the Organic Act, and I think there's been a legitimate effort to pay for some of the terrific expenses to which the outside legislators have been put by extended service in the territorial legislature, where in the last several sessions I don't think we have failed to have a short extension, if not two or three extensions of time. That has been, I think, very hard on those who have had to come here from the other islands and maintain, in effect, two homes.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will declare a short recess for the clerks.

ASHFORD: Before a short recess is declared, Mr. Chairman, I would like to withdraw the word I used. I think that was in very bad taste and I would like to substitute for the word "abominable," the words "bad taste."

C. RICE: Mr. Chairman, just one correction I want to make. I think it was the Organic Act started with $500 for the legislators, not a $1000. It was increased, I think, in 1921.

CHAIRMAN: Recess for five minutes.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole will please come to order. Will the delegates please take their seats.

ASHFORD: With the consent of the delegate who seconded my amendment, I would like to --

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegate hold just a minute? Will the delegates please take their seats. Proceed, Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: I would like to offer as a revised amendment, the second paragraph of the amendment, also substituting for the word "emoluments" the word "compensation."

WIRTZ: I'll accept the amendment.

FUKUSHIMA: I'd like to further amend the amendment by inserting the word "minimum" in the second sentence before the word "salary."

CHAIRMAN: There is no word "salary" in the amendment, Delegate Fukushima. The Chair understands --

FUKUSHIMA: There is; the second sentence, Mr. Chairman. I mean the second line in the first sentence.

CHAIRMAN: Wait. Will you hold that just a second. Does the Chair understand that the first paragraph of Delegate Ashford's amendment has been deleted in its entirety?

ASHFORD: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: So there is no language there relating to salary.

FUKUSHIMA: In that event, Mr. Chairman, I'd like to amend Section 11.

CHAIRMAN: What we have before us is Delegate Ashford's amendment which is the last paragraph of the printed amendment before the -- distributed among the members, and the word "emoluments" has been stricken orally by the delegate and the word "compensation" inserted. That is what is before the house now.

FUKUSHIMA: In that event, I'll wait until disposition of that is made.

FONG: I think it's a good amendment.

TAVARES: In connection with voting on the amendment or the amended amendment proposed by Delegate Ashford - -

CHAIRMAN: No, it's just on the amendment of Delegate Ashford. She has changed that and the second has accepted the change.

TAVARES: I move that it is the sense of this Convention that in so doing, we are not by implication holding that the per diem now paid under existing law would be invalid under the first part of the section. I think that should be clearly understood.

CHAIRMAN: This would have a prospective operation when and if we become a state, as the Chair understands it.

TAVARES: Yes, Mr. Chairman, but the deletion of the word "emoluments" from Delegate Ashford's first amendment might now lead to an implication that we didn't want anything else brought in. I think it should be clear that we're carrying over the existing construction of our Organic Act, that the prescription of the compensation as salary does not prevent the legislature from putting up additional per diem for expenses, a reasonable amount to cover living expenses.

CHAIRMAN: I don't think that this Convention can pass on the propriety of that act of the legislature, Delegate Tavares.

TAVARES: I think that this Convention can place a construction on any words that it wishes; and I believe that it's perfectly in order for us to say that it is the sense of this Convention that we mean thus and so, at least as far as the Constitution is concerned.

HEEN: I rise to a point of information, Mr. Chairman. Do I understand the first part of the amendment, first proposed by Delegate Ashford, has been deleted?

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. The Chair will restate the status of the amendment because the delegates have been moving about from place to place. Delegate Ashford has offered an amendment to Section 11, the first paragraph of which she has now deleted, and offered an amendment which reads as follows; this is an amendment to Section 11; "No law directly or indirectly increasing the compensation of the members shall be effective for a period of two years subsequent to its enactment."

H. RICE: I'd like to see this amendment in the reverse. This is one time when I don't agree with Delegate Ashford. I think the way it's set up it is an expense account. I'm in the same category as Delegate Porteus. I did not vote for this but I think it's a very fair thing because this is an expense account and it can be deducted from your taxes. This $1500 they're going to get, the first deduction is going to be 20 per cent for the Federal Government and then two per cent of the whole amount for the Territory. So you take 22 per cent off and I think it's only fair. I'd like to write it into the Constitution that there should be a $10 expense account for the legislators.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair may call your attention, Delegate Rice, that in the section establishing a salary it would be perfectly competent to propose an amendment, a salary plus expenses not to exceed blank dollars per annum. That, of course, would be fully tax exempt.

WHITE: I'd like to ask the movant of this motion, what do you mean by "directly or indirectly increasing compensation"?

ASHFORD: Well, if it—I was going to say, if it please the court, Mr. Chairman. I think an indirect compensation is when you, in addition—you notice I didn't use the word "salary," I used the word "compensation"—and I think that that includes any financial contribution to the office, and I think it would unquestionably cover this ten or fifteen dollars a day. Not this, but I mean if they start to increase it, I think that would be increasing their compensation as distinguished from increasing their salary.

WHITE: I'm not an attorney, but I wouldn't interpret it that way because I would think that the compensation would apply to a salary, not to an allowance made for traveling or living expenses of that nature.

CHAIRMAN: That would be the Chair's interpretation of the language.

WHITE: I would like to go back. Personally, I think that the amendment that Delegate Ashford offered, the first paragraph, is a good one. I see no reason why we shouldn't put in there that the legislature shall be entitled to other emoluments as may be prescribed by law. There's no reason why - - there's no magic in having to continue it as an ordinance. There's no reason why it can't go right into this provision so that there is no misunderstanding about it.

FONG: After taking a look at this amendment, I have a question. Now you will note that the amendment says, "No law directly or indirectly increasing the compensation of members shall be effective for a period of two years." I think it impliedly means that the legislature could increase the salaries of the members by that amendment.

CHAIRMAN: That's right, but that would have to be effective two years hence.

FONG: So if the legislature says the salary of the members shall be $5000, then the subsequent legislature can come in and get $5000. I don't think that was the intent of Miss Ashford.

ASHFORD: That absolutely was, and I think the people who return to the legislature would be an entirely different group.

FONG: Now, Mr. Chairman, under those circumstances I don't think that this is such a good amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Do you change your vote?

FONG: I change my vote if that is the intent. Now I think that if you give the legislature the power to set their salaries from time to time and only to be effective two years hence, it's not the thing to be desired. I think that this Convention should set the amount of salary and then they should stick on to that salary.

H. RICE: I move we defer action on this and go on to - -

CHAIRMAN: We are now on Section 11. This is a proposed amendment to Section 11.

H. RICE: I would like to offer another amendment in place of Miss Ashford's amendment and I'd like to have time to get it written up. I'm not a lawyer myself.

ASHFORD: I will second the motion having full confidence that I will agree with Mr. Rice even though he doesn't agree with me.

CHAIRMAN: The question then is on the amendment of Delegate Ashford. All in favor of deferring Delegate Ashford's amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

WIRTZ: I understood the motion to defer went to the entire section, not only the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: That wasn't the Chair's understanding.

KING: Mr. Rice made the motion to defer action on the section.

PORTEUS: Section 11.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will reverse itself then.

WOOLAWAY: I believe Section 13 has been adopted, so I now move for the adoption of Section 14.

NODA: I second the motion.

HEEN: I don't know what the status of Section 13 is?

CHAIRMAN: Has been adopted, on July 1, 1950.

ASHFORD: May I ask a question of the chairman of the committee in regard to Section 14? Inasmuch as there is a provision in another section for the judging of elections, would the chairman of the committee feel that this is desirable to say, "Not withstanding any other provision of the Constitution"?

HEEN: I believe what the delegate just stated refers to some provision in the article on suffrage and elections which provides for contested elections by a court of competent jurisdiction. Mr. Chairman, I must state that that provision there gave the Committee on Style some concern and maybe that provision should be eliminated altogether. But, if it is going to be there, remain there, then the suggestion made by Delegate Ashford I think is in order. "Notwithstanding any other provision in this Constitution, each house shall be the judge of elections and returns and qualifications of its own members."

CHAIRMAN: With the understanding that the Style Committee will reconcile any difference, will that be satisfactory to Delegate Ashford?

ASHFORD: Yes. In my opinion perhaps the exception -- two exceptions should be written into the article on suffrage and elections, that is, with the exception of any constitutional convention or the legislature.

BRYAN: The last time that this question came up, I pointed out that it may not have been exactly pertinent. This covers cases where there is no contest. Judges of elections in the other case, covered under the article on suffrage and elections, there would have to be a contest before it could be determined.

CHAIRMAN: This only applies to the legislature; it does not apply to the executive officers of government that may be elected. Any further discussion? If not, the Chair will put the question.

ROBERTS: I'm not quite clear as to the disposition you are making of this. In Committee Proposal No. 8 on suffrage and elections, there is a sentence which reads, "Contested elections shall be determined by a court of competent jurisdiction in such manner as shall be provided by law." Unless you are going to make some exception in the case of constitutional convention elections and elections involving members of the legislature, those two sections are in conflict. I think that the Committee on Style should be directed by this committee to resolve the conflict in some specific way, either change the article on suffrage and elections or make some provision in the present article with regard to that.

CHAIRMAN: This language is a common provision, that each house shall be the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its members. The section to which you have reference has to do with the contested election, which is a very different problem.

ROBERTS: Well, there may be a contest of election in connection with the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: Then the legislature is the sole judge.

ROBERTS: Well, unless you construe Section 5 to apply only to those areas other than the legislature and the constitutional convention elections, otherwise there is a conflict.

CORBETT: I don't see how you can make the legislature judge in a contested election of its own members. It seems to me that the point in putting that section in suffrage and elections was to have a body entirely objective in its approach to the problem. You have a group of people sitting in judgment on each other, and it is going to make a very difficult situation. In a contested election where there are facts to go on, it is quite a different story.

CHAIRMAN: That's a provision contained in our constitutional history from its very beginning. Whether or not a person is qualified to sit in the legislature each house determines; it's a political question with which the courts cannot interfere.

Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

TAVARES: I now move that it is the sense of this Convention that any conflict in the article on suffrage and elections should be controlled insofar as inconsistent with the sections just adopted by this section.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

C. RICE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: You heard the motion. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

WOOLAWAY: Section 15 having been adopted, I now move for the adoption of Section 16.

NODA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion? If not, the Chair will put the question. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's adopted.

WOOLAWAY: I now move for the adoption of Section 17.

NODA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 17 be adopted. Any discussion? Chair will put the question, all those in favor --

TAVARES: I just wanted to refresh the memories of those present. I am not going to argue too much one way or the other. There is a possibility of a need sometimes for faster action than one reading on each day. However, I am not going to labor the point. If the delegation still feels that as we have operated for 50 years we can safely operate in the future, why that's all right. There are some constitutions that allow by a two-thirds vote or some other special manner, the legislature or each house of the legislature can waive that separate reading on each day for emergency measures.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will put the question? All those in favor --

BRYAN: I'd like to put Delegate Tavares at ease. If the legislature were to pass a bill [by] three readings in one day, the only objection could be on the grounds of unconstitutionality. While that was being labored in the courts they could repass the same law and take three days to do it.

CHAIRMAN: That doesn't make him too happy.

ROBERTS: I don't think that statement should be left in our record uncontested. I think the intention of this section is quite clear. The purpose is to see to it that no legislation is passed hurriedly and without due and careful consideration by the legislature. The intention is to provide three separate readings. I for one would not suggest that we look aside at this thing and say make it a constitutional section and violate our Constitution. I think the language is clear and ought to stay that way.

CHAIRMAN: The language is perfectly clear. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

WOOLAWAY: I now move for the adoption of Section 18.

NODA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 18 be adopted.

FUKUSHIMA: I have an amendment to offer to the second paragraph of Section 18. The amendment has been distributed to the delegates. At this time I would like to move the adoption of this amendment. Amend the second paragraph of Section 18 to read as follows:

> If any bill is neither signed nor returned by the governor within ten days, Sundays and holidays excepted, after having been presented to him, it shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the legislature by its adjournment prevents its return. If on the tenth day the legislature is in adjournment sine die, the bill shall become a law if the governor shall sign it within twenty days, Sundays and holidays excepted, after such adjournment. On the said twentieth day the bill shall become a law, notwithstanding the failure of the governor to sign it within the period last stated, unless at or before noon of that day he shall return it with his objections to the house of origin at a special session of the legislature which shall convene on that day, without petition or call, for the sole purpose of acting pursuant to this paragraph upon bills returned by the governor. A bill reconsidered at such special session, if approved upon reconsideration by two-thirds of all the members of each house, shall become a law.
> No salary shall be payable when the legislature is convened for this purpose.

CHAIRMAN: Does this relate to the second paragraph only?

FUKUSHIMA: Yes, it does.

J. TRASK: I second the motion.

FUKUSHIMA: This amendment has to do with the subject matter of the pocket veto. We have in this Convention set up an executive with very strong powers. Here, as proposed in Committee Proposal No. 29, the governor has the power to veto bills when the legislature adjourns sine die, without signing the bill certified to the governor. My amendment permits the legislature to reconvene for the purpose of reconsidering bills that are not passed by the governor. If he should fail to sign a bill within 20 days from the date of adjournment the bill automatically becomes law, unless he shall return the bill to the legislature for reconsideration. This will take away some of the powers which the governor now has. I feel that the governor's power to pocket veto a bill is a very strong power. He possesses legislative powers as well as executive powers. Many a time we have a bill passed after much deliberation in both houses, passed unanimously; and then the bill is certified to the governor, the legislature adjourns sine die, the governor doesn't do a thing within ten days and the bill is killed. This will prevent that and I think much of that power we have given to the governor may now be taken away from him as far as legislative matters are concerned.

CHAIRMAN: How would the legislature reconvene under your amendment, Delegate Fukushima, just automatically or by proclamation?

FUKUSHIMA: Automatically, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: I don't think you've said enough in here to do that.

FUKUSHIMA: This follows the New Jersey Constitution and I believe that is done automatically in New Jersey. It says without petition or call, 20 days from the date of adjournment sine die.

CROSSLEY: I would like to speak in favor of the amendment. I think it is a good amendment and serves a very useful purpose. There has been a lot said here about giving the governor too much power and I think this is one way in which we can take what would very well be a legislative power away from him. It accomplishes one more thing in that it makes everyone take a position on every piece of legislation that has been passed by the legislature, and I think that is worthwhile and I would be in favor of this amendment.

TAVARES: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the experienced legislators here? This sets an absolute time of 20 days after adjournment within which the governor must consider all bills. At the present time, the requirement is that the governor has ten working days or ten days exclusive of certain days, like Sundays and so forth, in which to consider a bill after he receives it. Experience has shown that sometimes at the end of a session the legislature passes say 100 or 150 bills or more and some of them are very long and it takes them quite a number of days to even write those up and engross them, so that the time of ten days doesn't start running until the governor receives them. This will require that your clerks engross all of those bills and get them up to the governor in that 20 day period. The query in my mind is, will that 20 days be sufficient to give the typists and so forth in the houses of the legislature time to engross the bills and at the same time give the governor adequate time to consider them? From my recollection those bills come dribbling into the Secretary's office now at the rate of a few a day, and it sometimes goes on for ten or 15 days before the last bill is received by the Secretary's office and transmitted to the governor.

FUKUSHIMA: The Constitution of New Jersey provides 45 days. I thought perhaps 45 days was a little too long. Therefore, after consultation with some of the delegates, we changed it to 20 days.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Fukushima, are you referring to the executive article on page 14 of the New Jersey Constitution?

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: The delegates have that before them.

FUKUSHIMA: If the period of 20 days is too short, I feel that the New Jersey language of 45 days could be substituted for 20 days and I shall now so amend my amendment to delete "20" and insert in lieu thereof, "30."

HEEN: Point of information. What was the last statement?

CHAIRMAN: Change the twentieth day to the thirtieth day, about the middle of the paragraph of Delegate Fukushima's amendment.

AKAU: I second that.

WIRTZ: There are two places. In the ninth line the "20 days" should be changed to "30 days," and the next sentence the "thirtieth day." Is that where you want to make the changes?

HEEN: I would suggest 45 days. That would give ample time for the clerks to engross those bills and give ample time for the governor to ponder over them. He has to send those bills over to the attorney general's office for the opinion of the attorney general's office and adequate time should be given the governor for that purpose.

H. RICE: I think that Delegate Heen is quite right. If we are going to have this in the Constitution we ought to have 45 days. As you know the last legislature of '49, they appropriated $100,000 for Manulani Hospital and $100,000 for the Hilo Hospital and both of them were pocket vetoed by the governor. Of course, now with the appropriation bills going through early in the session, the appropriation bill won't be affected so much by this veto power of the governor, and there may be other legislation but it is legislation that would take time for the attorney general's office to go over thoroughly and I think if you will accept the amendment of 45 days, I will go along with it.

FUKUSHIMA: The amendment is accepted.

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegates make the appropriate changes: "45" in lieu of "20" in the two places where they appear.

KING: The only reason I rose, Mr. Chairman, is that Delegate Fukushima was ready to accept 45 days in the first instance and we sang out 30 to him, so I think he is quite willing to have the 45 days if those who are experienced in the legislature think the longer period is desirable.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion on the proposed amendment? If not, the Chair will put the question.

TAVARES: One more question. I wonder if there is any construction of this provision as to this situation. The governor vetoes a bill, the legislature reconsiders it and the veto message has a good point in it and the legislature amends that bill to conform to the governor's objection. Must they pass the bill as is or can they on reconsideration make amendments to that bill? I think that point ought to be cleared up.

CHAIRMAN: Can you enlighten us on that, Delegate Fukushima?

FUKUSHIMA: I believe any bill returned for reconsideration will follow the same procedure, and that is Section 19 -- as provided in Section 19 of this Proposal.

CHAIRMAN: May the Chair ask whether or not this is an exact duplication of the section of the New Jersey Constitution? It seems greatly simplified as against the New Jersey provision.

FUKUSHIMA: I think it has been simplified. I asked the Legislative Reference Bureau to prepare this in line with the New Jersey Constitution.

CHAIRMAN: But the substance of it is the same, is that correct?

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct.

HEEN: I think Delegate Tavares has a point there. I think the only action that the legislature may perform after the bill is returned to the legislature is to either override the veto or sustain the veto. I don't think it has power to reconsider that bill at all under the language used here in this proposed amendment.

SILVA: That is right, or introduce a new bill to comply.

HEEN: They can't even do that.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will call the attention of the body to the omission from Delegate Fukushima's amendment of the following language in the New Jersey Constitution. "At such special session a bill may be reconsidered beginning on the first day in the manner provided in this paragraph for the reconsideration of the bills and if approved upon reconsideration by two-thirds of all the members, it shall become law." That would meet, I assume, what Delegate Tavares is raising here.

SHIMAMURA: Isn't there similar language contained in Delegate Fukushima's proposed amendment in the last sentence?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct; the Chair is in error.

TAVARES: I still think that unless we adopt Delegate Heen's interpretation that they must only pass it as is over the governor's veto or sustain the veto, I think you are going to get into some more trouble. Then you have another pocket veto coming up if the legislature makes an amendment, so what do we do in that case, go on ad infinitum? I think unless we adopt Delegate Heen's interpretation that they must pass it as is without amendment, then we should have further language to show the circumstances under which they can pass it or to make sure that if they amend it and the governor then doesn't approve it, why then it is pocket vetoed permanently this time.

SILVA: The usual procedure, if the governor finds fault in a bill before the ten days are up, he calls the introducer of the bill and makes some suggestions. Then the Senate may recall the bill from the governor's office for reconsideration before the final veto period. That's the usual procedure, you recall -- to have the bill recalled.

HEEN: That is correct if the legislature is still in session. But this is at a time when the legislature adjourns sine die.

TAVARES: I think this amendment is important enough and I am in favor that if it can be worked out that we should defer and see if we can work out that problem by research or otherwise in the meantime. I move we defer until tomorrow this section. In the meantime, we will try to do a little research on it.

HEEN: Second the motion to defer action.

CHAIRMAN: Motion is on the question of deferment. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It is deferred.

WOOLAWAY: I move for the adoption of Section 19.

NODA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 19 be adopted. Any discussion? If not, the Chair will put the question. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

WOOLAWAY: I now move for the adoption of Section 20, I believe as amended.

NODA: I second the motion.

WOOLAWAY: Was the amendment made by Delegate Roberts carried? Or was it defeated? Then I change my motion to adopt Section 20 as is.

CHAIRMAN: That was deferred. My notes do not show that Delegate Roberts' motion was carried. Am I in error on that?

ROBERTS: We discussed the matter and it was felt that it was controversial and we deferred action until today.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair thought it wasn't controversial and it turned out to be very controversial.

ROBERTS: I know the delegates are tired and it is almost five o'clock.

CHAIRMAN: We have lots of time.

ROBERTS: I have too. I think we ought to give pretty close attention to this particular one. My batting average has not been very good this afternoon.

HEEN: I would suggest that Mr. Roberts have his amendment typed and mimeographed because it will require some study before we can act.

ROBERTS: The amendment is very simple. May I defer this then to prepare - -

CHAIRMAN: Will you please address the Chair?

ROBERTS: In line with the suggestion made by the senator, may I ask that this section be deferred until tomorrow?

SAKAKIHARA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Do you move that it be deferred?

ROBERTS: If that is the consensus of the Convention. The amendment is quite simple.

CHAIRMAN: What is the amendment?

ROBERTS: The amendment is to delete the words "be guilty" and substitute the words "have been convicted." So the sentence would read: "Each house may summarily punish by fine, not exceeding $100.00, or by imprisonment, not exceeding 30 days, any person not a member of the legislature who shall have been convicted of contempt of such house or of any committee thereof."

CHAIRMAN: Is there any second? What do you mean by the word "convicted"? Convicted where?

ROBERTS: Convicted by competent authority to pass on the question.

CHAIRMAN: That would defeat the entire section. The word "convicted" as you use it refers to the conviction in court.

ROBERTS: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: This has to do with finding guilty within the body itself.

WIRTZ: Has there been a second to the amendment?

CHAIRMAN: There was a half-hearted one on my left, but I don't know who made it.

WIRTZ: Then I would like to speak against the amendment for this reason. I don't see how the house, a member of the legislative branch, can punish a person who is convicted in court. They could provide, they could delegate to the court by law a certain punishment and allow the court to punish them.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. That is what the Chair tried to point out to Delegate Roberts in the last hearing on this.

TAVARES: I wonder if Delegate Roberts' words were - - the first words he used were not necessarily such as to require only a court to convict; he said an authority or some competent authority. Now as I read it, I would like to move to amend that to substitute for the word Delegate Roberts had, the word "found," "who shall be found guilty." Then the finding can be by the legislative body. I thought that was what was intended. There must be a finding of guilt. Unless we are going to eliminate the power to punish for contempt altogether from a house, we ought to leave it in something like this. If we want only a court to punish, then we should delete this provision entirely about the power to punish and leave it to laws to be passed.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would suggest that that would be a desirable amendment. That is exactly the situation in the Federal Constitution.

ROBERTS: I move to delete Section 20.

KAGE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and seconded that Section 20 be deleted.

TAVARES: In saying that we should do one or the other I certainly didn't want to imply that I was in favor of deleting the section. There is a certain amount of force, a great deal of force in the contention that a body like the legislature should be able to protect itself against contumacious conduct in its presence, and if you require them to go each time to the courts to bear that out you are placing the body in the power of the courts to that extent. The legislative body when it is deliberating, deliberates for only a short time. If anybody gets in there and starts being contemptuous and delays its proceedings, he is performing a great disservice to the community. If they don't have the power to make summary punishment for contempt—and this is small, it's only 30 days at the most, it's not a large penalty—why then you force them to go into court, and then by the time you are through with court the session is over. I think they should have some summary powers.

KING: I understood that this section was condensed from the section in the Organic Act, but the Organic Act very specifically says what Delegate Tavares mentioned a moment ago but what is not in this section, that it has to be in the presence. So the Organic Act says, "That each house may punish by fine, or by imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, any person not a member of either house who shall be guilty of disrespect of such house by any disorderly or contemptuous behavior in its presence or that of any committee thereof," and so forth. Now this section doesn't say that. It says that "Each house may summarily punish, by fine not exceeding $100 or by imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, any person not a member of the legislature who shall be guilty of contempt." They may be guilty of contempt not in the presence of the legislature. I feel that some language more closely approximating the language of the Organic Act would be more appropriate.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the motion to delete.

SHIMAMURA: I agree with the last speaker. The Organic Act also provides for notice and opportunity to be heard which this does not. In fact - -

CHAIRMAN: We are not debating this section, we are debating the question of deleting it.

HEEN: I move we defer action upon this section.

CHAIRMAN: We did that once before.

HEEN: Until this point can be ironed out.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair doesn't feel that it should be deferred. However, if there is a motion. Is there a motion to that effect? Is there a second that we defer?

C. RICE: I'll second that motion to defer. I happen to have been one of those chosen while in the Senate to try a case before the Senate. It was the Desha Bathing Suit Act, do you remember? It happened to be a California firm that Senator Desha was very outraged that the advertisement that this particular firm had, and that party happened to be down here visiting us. We got him up before the legislature and made a Christian out of him. I think you could make a Christian out of quite a few people here if you bring them before the body.

CHAIRMAN: What was the judgment, guilty or not guilty?

C. RICE: Guilty.

CHAIRMAN: What was the sentence?

HEEN: Question is on the motion to defer.

CHAIRMAN: Question is on the motion to defer. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's deferred.

WOOLAWAY: Let's try Section 21, so I now move that Section 21 be adopted.

NODA: I second the motion.

OKINO: I should like to offer an amendment to Section 21. Before making a formal offer of my amendment I should like to remove some doubt or confusion, confusion which might have resulted by reason of the fact that I had circulated a proposed amendment yesterday. Will you discard my amendment dated July 5?

CHAIRMAN: The one relating to judiciary?

OKINO: No, Mr. Chairman, it refers to Section 21 of Committee Proposal - - yes, that is correct, I understand what you mean now. Now before I make the offer of this amendment which I have circulated among you, will you please make the following addition. You will note in the fourth line a mark inserted after the word "require." Will you insert the following: "excepting justices of the supreme court and judges of the circuit court" comma. And I would like to insert further, in the second paragraph following the word "manner" which is the last word in that line, insertion: "and procedure of removal by impeachment," delete the preposition "of" appearing before the word "impeachment." I move at this time, Mr. Chairman, to offer that amendment to Section 21 of Committee Proposal No. 29.

> Section 21. Removal of officers. The governor, other elective executive officers, and any appointive officers for whose removal the consent of the senate is required, excepting justices of the supreme court and judges of the circuit courts, may be removed from office on impeachment for such causes, as may be provided by law, and upon conviction of the charges against such officers.
> The legislature shall by law provide for the manner of procedure of removal by impeachment.
> Judgments in cases of removal from office shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit under the state; but the person convicted may nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment according to law.

CHAIRMAN: Will you read that second sentence as you have amended it, Delegate Okino?

OKINO: Second paragraph. "The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment."

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

HEEN: I move that action on this amendment be deferred so that we can give it some study. I have no particular objection to it but I would like to give some study before voting on the amendment.

OKINO: I have no objection to defer action on the amendment which I have just offered.

CHAIRMAN: Chair suggests that you get a reprint of it with your corrections.

OKINO: I shall do that.

WIRTZ: I move that we defer action on the entire Section 21.

WOOLAWAY: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and seconded that we defer action on the entire Section 21. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried. Deferred.

WOOLAWAY: Last but not least, Section 22, I now move for its adoption.

NODA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and second that Section 22 be adopted. Any discussion?

WIRTZ: I should like to at this time move to defer for this reason: Dr. Larsen is interested in this particular section, having been one of those who signed the original proposal, and I have been informed that he would like to, or intends to make an amendment to the section as contained in the committee proposal. For those reasons, I move to defer.

C. RICE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

J. TRASK: I move that we rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again.

PORTEUS: May I point out that this afternoon we had a conference where - - at least we tried to agree that a week from this Saturday we would wind up the affairs of this Convention. A good deal of time has been spent, properly so, in exploring many of these sections. I don't want to imply that it is my desire to cut anyone out from full exploration, but nonetheless after debating sometimes 15 or 20 minutes or half an hour we have had these matters deferred until tomorrow. Now that means that tomorrow, if we come up having already deferred each of these matters once already, it is to be hoped that those who wish deferment will be prepared at that time to present any amendments they may have. There have been others of us who have not spoken this afternoon on these sections, some because we thought the ideas were good and wanted to hear it out, but some of us because we were prepared to vote. We didn't want to take the time and stand up and say, we were ready to vote and we were for the matter. But I hope that tomorrow, at any event, all those that have perfecting amendments to those matters being presented will be prepared to adopt them, I mean present them, because I think we've got to go forward with the article and further deferment will only postpone coming to grips with these particular problems.

CHAIRMAN: Chair would like to ask the President whether or not we would be able to go forward with this and wind it up tomorrow morning, Mr. President.

KING: That will be the first order of business, other than any third or second readings on the Clerk's tables.

CHAIRMAN: Otherwise, if we have a delay, the arguments won't be fresh in the minds of the delegates.

KING: I would like to second what Delegate Porteus has just said, that those who have amendments not thoroughly ready to present them in final form would work on them tonight and be ready to present them tomorrow morning so that we may adopt or reject them, as the case may be.

CHAIRMAN: Motion is that we rise and report progress. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

JULY 7, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: The Committee will please come to order. Will the delegates take their seats? We have deferred the consideration of Section 11 relating to the salaries and compensation of members of the legislature. There was an amendment proposed by Delegate Ashford. Delegate Rice at the close of the last session requested time in which to prepare an amendment to Delegate Ashford's amendment. The Chair recognizes Delegate Rice.

H. RICE: On the delegates' desk is Section 11 amended to read as follows. It's in two paragraphs. If you take the one in two paragraphs, that's the amendment that I would offer at this time.

CHAIRMAN: Do I hear a second?

WIRTZ: Second that motion.

H. RICE: Section 11 to read:

> The members of the legislature shall receive a salary of $1,500 for each general session and $1,000 for each budget session and $750 for each special session, and in addition thereto an allowance which shall be fixed by law not to exceed a per diem of five dollars for members from the island of Oahu and fifteen dollars for members from the other islands, which sums shall be payable in such installments as may be prescribed by law. When the Senate is convened in special session alone the members shall receive no salary.

That's the first paragraph. The second paragraph reads:

> In no case shall the total expenses for officers and employees for each house exceed the sum of $1,000 per calendar day during any general session, nor the sum of $500 per calendar day during any budget or any special session.

I move the adoption of this amendment.

A. TRASK: I second that motion.

FUKUSHIMA: I have an amendment to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Will you hold that just a moment so we can get the parliamentary situation cleared?

KELLERMAN: May I suggest that we discuss this paragraph by paragraph. Take up the first paragraph and vote upon that separately from the second paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: That isn't the parliamentary situation. I would call that to Delegate Rice's attention. The vote on this amendment would defeat the entire amendment. They're tied up together. They would have to be offered separately.

H. RICE: I will so offer them separately.

CHAIRMAN: The motion is on the adoption of the first paragraph of the amendment proposed by Delegate Rice. Is there a second? Will the second accept that?

A. TRASK: I will.

CHAIRMAN: We are now dealing with the first paragraph of Delegate Rice's amendment -- proposed amendment to Section 11.

FUKUSHIMA: I have an amendment to offer to this amendment, the first paragraph of this amendment. In the second line after the word "a" --

ASHFORD: Point of order. Has it not been ruled that two amendments can't be made to an amendment?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. That's why the Chair interrupted in the beginning and then the point escaped the Chair's mind. In order to clear the parliamentary situation I was wondering if the delegate from Molokai would be willing to withdraw her amendment at this time, so that we have one amendment before the house. If not, the Chair will have to rule Delegate Fukushima out of order. Is that agreeable to the delegate from Molokai?

ASHFORD: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: Then we have one amendment and you are in order. Proceed, Delegate Fukushima.

FUKUSHIMA: In the second line after the word "a" and before the word "salary" insert the word "minimum." In the same line delete "$1,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500"; in the third line delete "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500." I move the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

DOI: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Fukushima, the Chair would like to ask you a question. By the insertion of the word "minimum," did you intend that the legislature would have power to increase the salary over and above the minimum?

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: In other words, this would not be fixing of the salary, but simply leave it to the legislature with a floor on the salary of $2,500.

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion on the amendment?

ROBERTS: I have a question on that first -- on that paragraph. As I read the paragraph, there's a minimum salary set in the Constitution and the legislature may change the per diem as prescribed by law.

CHAIRMAN: That's what the Chair was calling attention to, Delegate Roberts. I believe there would have to be further language to conform to the intention of the movant of the amendment. In other words, you would have to have a grant of legislative power to permit an increase over and above the $2,500 in this section, I believe.

ROBERTS: Are we going to vote on an imperfect amendment?

CHAIRMAN: That's the parliamentary situation unless Delegate Fukushima wishes to amplify his amendment.

FUKUSHIMA: I didn't get the question.

CHAIRMAN: It has been directed to the attention of the movant the same point the Chair called to your attention, that this purports to fix a minimum salary and yet it does fix a salary and there is no grant to the legislature to exceed the minimum.

FUKUSHIMA: No grant to the legislature?

CHAIRMAN: No grant of legislative power to pass a law to exceed the minimum.

FUKUSHIMA: Is that necessary in a constitution? The legislature has that power to increase the salary of any office. What we're trying to prevent here is for the legislature not to go below a certain amount. The legislature may always increase the amount if it saw fit without any legislative grant in the Constitution.

CHAIRMAN: In other words, [as] you read it this would constitute no prohibition. I think that is correct, Delegate Roberts. The question is on the amendment.

H. RICE: Why I didn't vote for the allowance originally in the legislature is because the salary of the legislators were fixed by the Organic Act, and I felt that in passing this per diem for the legislators, they were in fact increasing their own salaries. That's why I feel that if we're going to have a per diem allowance it should be a part of the Constitution, and if it reads as an allowance for expenses as I say then that could be a deduction from taxes.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? The question is on the amendment.

ROBERTS: I would like to speak in opposition to the amendment. We put a section in the executive article providing for a salary in the Constitution. The purpose of putting that salary in was to fix a salary. I argued at that time that there was no place in the Constitution for the setting of fixed figures in terms of any salary. There is a problem in terms of the first governor and there is a problem in terms of the first legislature, but that figure ought to go into the schedule and ought not be a part of your basic Constitution. Once you place a figure in the Constitution, that does not then make it open for the legislature to change it. The purpose of putting it in the Constitution is to fix the salary, and I assume that the basis for putting this in is to fix the salary at a specified number, $2,500.

CHAIRMAN: No, the purpose of the proposed amendment is to fix a minimum and permit the legislature to exceed the minimum. Are you ready for the question?

ROBERTS: Mr. Chairman, I haven't finished.

CHAIRMAN: Well, you stopped talking.

ROBERTS: Just to give the Chair a chance to interrupt.

CHAIRMAN: Proceed, Delegate Roberts.

ROBERTS: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I believe that this section ought to be defeated. I certainly favor as high a salary as possible for the legislators to attract as many competent men as possible for the job. I have no objection to the $2,500, although I think it's a little high. I have no objection to the $1,500 for the budget session or for $750 for the special session. I think, however, that the matter of the amount to be received ought to go into the schedule for the first legislature. The legislature then should be free to raise the salary as it sees fit but no raise shall go into effect for that particular session. If the legislators think the salary is too low, when conditions change they ought to be permitted to make the adjustment. They will not act in violence against public opinion and public opinion will see to it that no undue salary increases are to go into effect and it will apply only in subsequent sessions, and therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to defeat the amendment.

FONG: I'd like to speak in opposition to this amendment. You will note that the figure proposed for the legislative session is $2,500, and five dollars per day for members on on Oahu will be $300 for sixty working days, giving us a total of $2,800 for the general session. The budget session is to be paid $1,500. Assuming that the budget session will take thirty days, at five dollars a day it will be $150. If you add all that up, it will give us a total of $4,450, that is for a legislator from the island of Oahu. We go to the outside islands and we have $15 per diem for sixty days giving a total of $900. Add that to $2,500 you get a total of $3,400 for one session. You add $1,500 for the budget session. Another thirty days at $15, you get a total of $450. You add all of that, the outside islanders will get a total of $5,350 for two years. By this amendment and by giving the legislators these sums of money we will be creating a legislature of professional legislators and housewives. Now when I say that, I don't want the housewives to be sore with me.

It will boil down to this, that the men who are competent to run for office will not have the time to go from house to house and buttonhole the candidates [sic]. The only persons that will have the time to buttonhole the candidate [sic] in the district will be the housewives who will not be employed but who will be able to spend their time for the sum of $4,450 a year. Now $4,450 a year is almost 200 per month and I am beginning to think that we will create here in the Territory of Hawaii a bunch of professional legislators who will do nothing or who will have so little employment that they could afford to spend the time going from house to house to buttonhole the electors.

Many people will say the electors are smart; they will vote for a man who has ability. Now, you will note that in most of our district, the districts are cut down so that we elect either three or four people in the district. I would admit that if there were only one person running probably the elector will exercise his opinion and give the best man the vote, but when you have three or four people running then the votes are scattered all over the place and the man who buttonholed the electorate will be the one that will have sufficient edge in the election to get elected.

Now, I am saying that we are paying too much to our legislators here from the standpoint of the public interest. I believe that if a man runs for public office that he should devote some of his time for the public interest and not expect that he be reimbursed for everything, for the time that he has put in. The amount should not be too low so that it will prohibit the man who hasn't got the means to run. The sum of $1,500 for one session, for the general session, and $1,000 for the budget session is plenty enough; $2,500 for two years. At the present time your legislators are only getting $1,000 plus the per diem. In this case here we are increasing it $1,500 for the biennium and I think that is plenty enough money for your legislators.

We are limiting the session to sixty days only, and special session, that is extra session–the governor can call extra sessions for a few days–and I think if we pass this amendment we will be creating here in the territory something we will be very sorry for. We will be creating a group of political politicians, that is professional politicians, and a group probably of women who will be able to devote their time in going from house to house to canvas -- to buttonhole the candidates [sic].

Now one thought, another thought and I will quit. When I talk about professional legislators I'd like to liken him to a professional gambler. Many of us look at the professional gambler from the standpoint that he is a man who goes out and gambles professionally and makes a lot of money. Now I have talked to a lot of professional gamblers in my life and they go out with the idea that by playing percentage in a crap game, by playing for seven or eight hours they will be able to make eight or ten dollars a day, and if they make eight or ten dollars a day they will be satisfied in making that amount of money because it is a day's work. Now, you will be creating here the same type of political thought -- same type of thought by giving them $200 per month. A man will go out and say, "I have done my day's work. I have seen my constituents and I think that this is my employment and I feel that this employment pays me enough so that I can stick to it."

GILLILAND: I don't think this amendment goes far enough.

CHAIRMAN: Can't hear you.

GILLILAND: I don't know why the authors don't add a pension after one session of the legislature.

SILVA: I can see that. Representative Fong probably is scared of those housewives, a little afraid of them, but that's all right. The point I'd like to press at this time is it's the longest motion I have ever heard mentioned on this floor by Fong and I take pleasure in seconding that motion, that is $1,000 for the budget session and $1,500 for a regular session. So I second that motion. It's about the longest motion I ever heard.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understood that the motion was moved and seconded by Delegate Fukushima. There was a second to his motion and Delegate Fong was speaking in opposition to Delegate Fukushima's motion. Is the Chair not correct in that?

FONG: I didn't hear what Senator Silva said.

CHAIRMAN: He was saying some very bad things about you, Delegate Fong.

DELEGATE: He said we husbands are opposed to your remarks.

CROSSLEY: I would like to speak in opposition to the amendment, not because I'm afraid of housewives. I think that the women in this Convention have been helpful, for the most part.

CHAIRMAN: Careful, careful.

CROSSLEY: I still think I'm on safe ground. I think most of the people here have been helpful, for the most part.

I'd like to speak in opposition to it because I feel -- in part at least I don't agree entirely with the delegate from the fifth, but I, too, am afraid of professional politicians. I think that if you examined a lot of people who have run for office in the past, you would find that many of them have stood for office on the basis that whatever they got out of the job–and it would certainly be a more lucrative one under this amendment–has been as good as they could do under any form of work they might choose.

I don't think that's the purpose behind the increase in salaries. I believe that Delegate Fukushima is honestly trying to get a better type of person to serve and there's no question that there are many very competent people who just can't afford to serve because the remuneration is not great enough. However, I don't think that this accomplishes that. I don't think that it's enough money to get the highest type of man. I think it's still an in-between-the-road figure. On the other hand, I'm not sure that the Territory can pay the figure at this time that it would be necessary to pay to get the highest type of man to leave. For instance, men in the professions who make such a sacrifice to go into this type of work.

But I think we're all losing sight of the fact that the work we're doing here is community service. It should be, as it is on many of us, a sacrifice, a personal sacrifice to serve the Territory or the State of Hawaii. Now, you don't make a sacrifice if you make more money or as much money or if there is no sacrifice. To me a sacrifice is when you actually lose something in order to serve, and I think that if this amendment were allowed to go through that it would defeat the very purpose for which it is intended and therefore I am against the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question.

MAU: I'd like to ask the delegate from the fourth district, Delegate Roberts, if I follow his argument correctly, he also would be against Section 11 in the committee proposal itself because that section in the committee proposal does set a salary for the legislators. Am I correct in that impression?

ROBERTS: That is correct. I have an amendment which is being printed which will provide for the salary of the legislators in a schedule and then have a provision in the Constitution giving the legislature the power to fix the salary as conditions change, but the salaries cannot go into effect for the people who vote on the salary.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. Delegate Fukushima, do you desire to close the debate?

FUKUSHIMA: As the movant of the amendment, I'd like to say a few words. The statement made by Delegate Fong is certainly amazing to me, that he's afraid of housewives and professional politicians. I'd like to see a government, in fact we all spoke of a representative government here. If you have your salary as low as he and the others would like the salary to be, we will have only certain types of individuals running–lawyers who can come out for couple of months, go back to their practice and pick up the way they left off; businessmen who do not give any services, but sell merchandise which others can do for him. That's the type of men you will get. You will also get the poor men who are financed and controlled by some others. That's not the type of legislators that we want. We want all, be they small or rich, to run for office if he is capable. We talk about representative form of government, then we come here and say we are afraid of housewives. They're the people; if they can get in buttonholing voters, more power to them.

As far as the figures are concerned, the statement was made that the State may not be able to meet these payments. I don't think that's well founded. The salaries of the legislators at this amount will not increase the expenses of the legislature very much. Second paragraph of Section 11 will cut down the expenses of the legislature. That's what is the trouble with the legislature today. We have too much patronage. The janitors get much more than the legislators, the doorman gets more than the legislators, and so does the sergeant-at-arms and all the officers and the employees down to the lowest level. That's the ridiculous situation that we have today, and anyone who says that we have professional politicians coming into the horizon if we lift the salaries a little further up is certainly afraid of the type of government we should have.

DOI: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment. The Chair asked if there was anybody to speak and then permitted Delegate Fukushima to close the debate.

DOI: I happened to be the one who seconded the motion of Delegate Fukushima.

CHAIRMAN: Very well.

DOI: I would like to speak in favor of the motion to amend. If we look at the motion to amend we will note that it reads, about the middle of the paragraph, " in addition thereto an allowance which shall be fixed by law not to exceed a per diem of $5." The words " not to exceed" I believe means that the legislature has discretion as to whether they can give any per diem or not. That would mean that the salaries of the legislators could be left at $2,500 and $1,500 respectively as regards the different kind of sessions. Now the point is I do not believe a salary -- the fixing of a salary at $1,500 in the future might do justice to the legislators. There is a possibility that the value of the dollar might change and that the salary must be changed again and I think the amendment provides for that and leaves it to the discretion of the legislators. The argument advanced that the change in the value of the dollar can be met by changing the amount of the per diem allowance, I think, is weak in that suppose the dollar value drops right in half. I cannot conceive the legislators -- legislature rather, changing the per diem allowance to $30, and which is definitely prevented in this amendment here. Therefore, I believe the amendment as proposed by Delegate Fukushima should be carried.

Another point I would like to point out is that we should not confuse the cost of running the legislature and that of the salary of the respective legislators. Salaries are paid to attract good and able men. I am in agreement with the last paragraph, and that is to cut the expenses of the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will now put the question. The motion is on the amendment -- Delegate Fukushima's amendment.

FUKUSHIMA: I'd like to delete the word " minimum" that I included in the second line.

CHAIRMAN: Will the second accept that deletion?

DOI: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The effect of that amendment would be to fix the salary at $2,500, have the per diem as stated and the rest of the amendment.

DELEGATE: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will now put the question.

DELEGATE: Roll call, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a demand for roll call? The Chair only sees three hands. The Clerk will call the roll.

Ayes, 33. Noes, 27 (Bryan, Castro, Corbett, Crossley, Fong, Gilliland, Heen, Holroyde, Kam, Kellerman, King, Lai, Larsen, Lyman, Okino, Porteus, H. Rice, Richards, Roberts, Sakakihara, Smith, A. Trask, J. Trask, White, Wirtz, Woolaway, Anthony). Not voting, 3 (Lee, Phillips, Wist).

The motion is carried.

APOLIONA: I move for the tentative adoption of the first paragraph of Section 11.

CHAIRMAN: We're still on the amendment. The second paragraph of the amendment is now before the house, Delegate Apoliona.

A. TRASK: I ask that, and I so move, that on the fourth line of the amendment after the word " and," strike all of that until the words " other islands," so that the next words would be " which sum shall be payable in such installments as may be prescribed by law."

CHAIRMAN: Would you mind repeating that? The Chair is in doubt as to your amendment.

A. TRASK: After the word " session," which is the first word on the fourth line, put a period and strike the balance of the sentence.

CHAIRMAN: In other words, you want to eliminate the per diem in its entirety. Your purpose is to eliminate the per diem for expenses in its entirety?

A. TRASK: That is correct, but retaining the last sentence which reads: "When the Senate is convened in special session alone the members shall receive no salary."

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second? There's nothing before the house.

H. RICE: I'll second the motion.

SAKAKIHARA: May I ask the movant as to how he proposed under the Constitution to pay the legislators, in lump sum or installment payments, by deleting the sentence, " which sums shall be payable in such installments as may be prescribed by law," if that is deleted under his amendment?

NIELSEN: Can I have the amendment again?

CHAIRMAN: The amendment would place a period after the word " session" on the fourth line of the first paragraph and strike out the rest of the language down to the words " installments as may be prescribed by law," leaving intact the last sentence, " When the Senate is convened in special session alone the members shall receive no salary."

A. TRASK: There has been a suggestion by the President and I'd like to withdraw my amendment.

CHAIRMAN: You withdraw your amendment? The amendment is withdrawn.

A. TRASK: I have a new motion. Strike out the following words, beginning with the second word on the fourth line, these being words, strike " and in addition thereto an allowance which shall be fixed by law not to exceed a per diem of $5 for members from the island of Oahu and $15 for members from other islands." That be stricken, and retaining the words which continue, " which sums shall be payable in such installments as may be prescribed by law."

CHAIRMAN: May the Chair inquire if you appreciated that the purpose of the original movant was to permit the allowance of a per diem which would not be treated as taxable income?

A. TRASK: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: Your amendment would defeat that purpose.

A. TRASK: That is correct.

J. TRASK: I second the motion, Mr. Chairman.

A. TRASK: Point of information. Would an acceptance by Delegate Rice, the original movant of this amendment, if he accepts this amendment, would there be a necessity for a vote on this motion?

CHAIRMAN: I think there would. That goes to the heart of Delegate Rice's motion.

Are you ready for the question? The Chair will put the question.

HOLROYDE: Our discussion yesterday brought out the fact that the per diem allowance now carried on the statute would still be in effect if the laws are continued as such. Now, taking it out of here, of course, removes it from the Constitution but it still remains a statute, does it not?

CHAIRMAN: There would still be some question about the validity of it and that's the purpose of clearing this up, as the Chair understands it.

WIRTZ: Likewise there'd be a question as to the taxability.

CHAIRMAN: That is true. Whether or not it's income or - -

HEEN: If this amendment is voted for, then it will open up the first part of this sentence for the reason that then the members of the legislature will have to pay their expenses out of their salaries and that is not tax free.

CHAIRMAN: That's what the Chair endeavored to point out to Delegate Trask. Evidently it's his purpose to cut down the emoluments of the legislators.

A. TRASK: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

PORTEUS: I'm sorry to say that I differ completely with the gentlemen who have debated the question of the elimination of this clause from the Constitution. As submitted by the committee there was no reference to emoluments. In my opinion, one man, I think the legislature can pass a bill with respect to emoluments, and if you delete this it leaves it in the same position it was when the committee brought out its report. Under ordinances and continuity of laws, the laws will be continued in effect, and if the law is in effect with respect to per diem, the per diem will stay in effect. If you eliminate this you will not eliminate in my opinion, the ability of the legislature to provide for a per diem. The only way you can do that is by specifically forbidding it in a Constitution. And by leaving all rightful subjects of legislation to the legislature, the legislature can provide for it.

I might add, Mr. Chairman, that while I was not one who voted for the $2,500 and the $1,500, however I do want to point out to the outside islanders and to the people here that for those of us who have been in the legislature, it would seem to us that it was better to give to those people who come down from the outside island money in the way of per diem. It is a fairer way of treating them than it is to give the Oahu legislators exactly the same salary as those people get who come down from the other island. They are put to certain expenses. They are not making money on this. It is not really a salary to them. They are maintaining homes on the other islands and they are maintaining residences here in Honolulu. In most cases they don't have an opportunity to stay at the home of a friend for two and a half months, which is just what a sixty day session means. It goes from the middle or early part of February until the beginning of May. It's a full two and a half months.

In addition to that they are put to the expense of going back to their islands to consult with their constituents and certainly occasionally they are justified in going back to see their families. There's no traveling expenses that is allowed for those trips back to the islands. They are put to vastly more expenses than the people are who are living here on Oahu. It is true that many of us who live here on Oahu spend some money on various incidental matters. That, however, is their option. It may be an enforced option where we feel it is necessary to do it, but nonetheless if we don't want to do it, actually we don't have to.

I think that when a man comes from the other islands and he finds that he's staying at a hotel and costs him $12 a day to stay and it costs him so much for his meals here, that it is fairer to give him an amount such as $15 not subject to taxes. Otherwise what are you going to do? You're going to try to find out what it is that will give the man any salary, sufficient salary to compensate him for his services and at the same time give him sufficient money for his living expenses after deducting taxes, and I don't know how you're going to do this, how you're going to work that out. It always seemed to me from the point of view of those others who came down from the other islands that the fairest thing to do is to find out how much it costs him a day to live here in Honolulu and then give them exactly that amount of money. So far it has been determined to be $15 a day. It is not taxed. You say it's $15 a day; the man spends more than $15 a day; it's his option. But I think it's a very much better system than trying to incorporate the increase in his salary.

I have no objection particularly to the deletion of this phraseology from the section of the Constitution, but I do wish to register an opinion adverse to those who have given it so far, that by taking it out you will prevent the legislature from covering this point, because I believe this to be a particular subject of legislation. An embarrassing subject - -

A. TRASK: Will the gentlemen yield a question?

PORTEUS: Yes, indeed.

A. TRASK: The per diem allowed legislators covers at least a minimum, usually of one hundred days, so that at $15 - -

PORTEUS: I don't think you're correct in that.

A. TRASK: What is per diem considered, just the legislative pay?

PORTEUS: Do you mean now or do you mean in the future?

CHAIRMAN: Let's have a little order here. Will you please address the Chair.

A. TRASK: Thank you. What is the meaning of the word "per diem" as has been considered heretofore. Does it mean a legislative day which excludes holidays and Sundays, or the period of the time?

PORTEUS: The per diem will depend upon exactly the way the statute is written. At the moment it is written so that it covers the period in which they're here. In other words, it covers the Saturdays and the Sundays, even though the legislature cannot sit on a Saturday [sic]. I might point out, as the gentleman knows, that on a Sunday when the legislature can't sit nonetheless there are many legislative activities and great number of the committees meet. I might point out that this, while an embarrassing subject for the legislators to deal with, of per diem and salary, it is nonetheless, however, in my opinion a fairer way of compensating for out of pocket expenses those that come from the outer islands than it is to try to increase their salaries and to put the Oahu members on exactly the same plane.

LARSEN: [Inaudible] -- to leave out the one thing that it seems to me we have all learned, which is don't put into the Constitution any sums and no specific numbers.

CHAIRMAN: It has been already voted on, Delegate Larsen.

LARSEN: But I'm just calling attention. There is another --

CHAIRMAN: You want to move to reconsider?

LARSEN: -- amendment here that seems to me covers that and that's the one of Roberts. I would like to move to reconsider this idea of considering sums because we'll talk all morning on this.

ROBERTS: I planned to offer my amendment after the amendment is now acted on. So there's no need to reconsider, the section is still before us.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on Delegate Trask's amendment. Is there any further discussion?

H. RICE: I note that Illinois, Massachusetts, New York and Ohio are the only four states that will pay more than the State of Hawaii for a session, and that twenty-seven states provide the salaries. They fix them by Constitution, and twenty-one states fix it by statute. You turn to pages 16 and 17, [Manual of State Constitutional Provisions] you get all of them. Probably the committee has been all through it, but I think as long as you have raised the salary to that high maximum you can forget the per diem, and I want to see it written into the Constitution that they can't get a per diem if they're going to get a salary that size.

TAVARES: I've been quiet here for a while. I think it's about time I was heard. As the attorney general who is the culprit who advised the legislature that in his opinion this per diem was valid I do not subscribe to any of the statements that have been made that this is an illegal contribution at this time. We looked up that matter conscientiously. It was my --

CHAIRMAN: I don't think anybody said that, Delegate Tavares.

TAVARES: Yes, Mr. Chairman, but I don't want the records to show that that has not been questioned. It is my humble opinion, but very strong opinion that there is sound and strong authority to sustain what the legislature has done, and I agree with Delegate Porteus that if this is deleted the legislature under its legislative powers will have the power to enact a per diem statute and that it will not have the effect of eliminating that power.

CHAIRMAN: Unless it's taken away in this Constitution. That's your point, is it not?

TAVARES: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

GILLILAND: I heartily endorse the statement made by the delegate from Maui. Presently, the representatives and the senators are getting $1,000 a session of sixty days, that means an average of about $500 a month. By the amendment of the delegate of the fifth district it would raise this to $2,500 or $1,250 a month, and on top of that they want per diem pay. I think that's the height of imposter. I don't know the word that will fit the case.

CHAIRMAN: What is that word, Delegate Gilliland?

GILLILAND: I'm sorry, I'm excited. The idea of paying $1,250 a month to these men and then on top of that they want per diem pay. That's too much already, Mr. Chairman.

NIELSEN: I'd like to call attention to the fact that this $2,500 is not net, that's gross. You got to take 20 per cent off for federal and 2 per cent for territorial, so your net figure is only really $1,950.

CHAIRMAN: In other words, legislators, like everybody else, got to pay taxes.

SILVA: I think some of the remarks passed by Gilliland are not really accounted for. When he says that the legislators would like to get $2,500 plus the per diem, he mentioned the legislators very distinctly. I want him to know that Mr. Fukushima is not a legislator, that none of the legislators I believe are in accord. In fact I was going to move for reconsideration of Fukushima's amendment. I voted "no" and they had the majority and I was going to move for a reconsideration of the action. I do say that the $2,500 and the $15 is really too much, and I believe that most members of the legislature from the outside island would prefer a smaller salary compensation and a fair per diem allowance, tax free. That is really what fits the rentals and the food expenses, etc., allowed us under the law.

GILLILAND: The members of the legislature in other states like New York, Illinois, they pay taxes too. Yet there's only four states where members of the legislature are going to receive more than what we receive here if this amendment is adopted.

HEEN: I might point out Pennsylvania pays $3,000 a session and $1,200 a year expense account.

DOI: The fact that other states pay salaries that are very low is no reason for us to follow that practice. I think students of government could say that that is the reason why many of the legislatures in the states are so -- the caliber of them are so low. In fact the arguments advanced for the unicameral system of legislation was that the government can pay better salaries and thereby attract better men.

Now what is this $2,500 for each general session and $1,500 for each budget session based on? The governor in this Constitution has been allowed a minimum salary of $18,000 a year, that would be about $1,500 a month. Should we look at this $2,500 it would come out that each legislator will get a salary of about $1,000 a month. I think the legislature is one of the three important branches of the government. It should be given the eminence that the governor has, but the individual members of the legislature should not be given the same salary but should be given something that approaches it and would thereby attract good men.

Should we ask this question of all the legislators in this Convention, I think they would say -- should we ask the legislators of this Convention a question somewhat to this effect, that wasn't the per diem passed in the '47 or '49 sessions of the legislature really made, agreed to the amount of $15 because the individual legislators felt that the salary of $1,000 was inadequate and therefore they increased it, without much reason or comparative study as to the cost of living, to the amount of $15 per day? In fact I got one answer right now from Dr. Silva who says that's right. That kind of a thing I think should not be permitted. The amendment as it stands now, will allow the legislature to make a study of the cost of living and give the legislators the proper amount they need to live.

Look at the other government officials of the government. Today when they travel they are allowed I believe twenty cents per mile traveling expenses and I believe under the State government the individual legislators will be allowed traveling expenses. The legislators from the outside islands, however, will not be allowed traveling expenses after or between - - during the session. Now as to the cost of living in Honolulu for the outside legislators, I believe that should be paid by the government also as is done with other government officials. Should the governor travel from the seat of government on Oahu to the island of Hawaii to do some official business he will be paid traveling expenses plus his expenses of lodging and board and I don't see why the individual legislators from the outside islands should not be paid that amount.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will permit Delegate Trask to close the debate. It seems to me - -

FONG: May I ask the movant of the amendment, what was his intention in deleting that section?

CHAIRMAN: He has already expressed that. He thought that the salary was too high and therefore if they're going to get $2,500 they ought to pay their own per diem.

FONG: If that is so then he should amend to say there shouldn't be any per diem paid.

CHAIRMAN: That can be taken care of in later amendments but that was his express purpose, as the Chair understood it.

FONG: He should do it now.

A. TRASK: Well, I have written in here, in view of what has been said by Delegate Porteus and concurred in by Delegate Tavares, as the amendment as suggested by me stands, the legislature is still empowered to go ahead and write in any further emoluments that it desires. In view of that and in view of the invitation from the delegate from the fifth district, I'd like to further provide that at the end of the first paragraph there will be included this expression, " No other compensation shall be provided."

CHAIRMAN: That wouldn't do it, Delegate Trask. We're talking about expenses.

A. TRASK: With respect to emoluments.

CHAIRMAN: You said " compensation." The Chair suggests that we vote on the amendment and then a subsequent amendment can be entertained.

KAUHANE: Point of information. Since you are somewhat confused on this matter wouldn't it be proper to suggest that we take a recess so that the legal heads can get together to get the proper words?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is not confused in this matter.

A. TRASK: I move for the previous question. I think we're all prepared to vote.

MIZUHA: I'd like to speak in opposition to the amendment of Delegate Trask. It seems as though our brother attorneys from the fifth district feel that the compensation is too high. As an attorney who practices on an outside island I would like to inform the delegates that every time I have to try a case on Kauai while this Convention is in session I have to go home and it costs $19.55 for me to get back to Kauai by plane, plus taxes.

HEEN: Will the gentleman yield - -

CHAIRMAN: That's a deductible expense.

HEEN: Will the gentleman yield to a question? Don't you make your clients pay for that?

MIZUHA: No, but every time Delegate Gilliland goes down to the Circuit Court to have a divorce case he doesn't pay any travel fare, and he goes down there and does it all the time too. The same with Brother Fong and Brother Trask. Now, let us be fair about this question.

CHAIRMAN: Let's dispense with personal remarks. I don't think that's in order here.

MIZUHA: But if Delegate Trask feels that the compensation is too high then perhaps a level of compensation for the outer island delegates should be set in a salary schedule, and a lower level for the Oahu members of the legislature. Then it would be fair, then eliminate per diem. Let us be fair about this thing. I think people like us who come to the Constitutional Convention or to the legislature are not rich men. We have to pay the price for public service, and every one of us who are in public service makes great sacrifices, and I think by the elimination of the per diem expense it's striking at the heart of representative government for people who desire to serve in the public interest.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question.

J. TRASK: The amendment as proposed by the delegate here from the fifth district does not preclude the legislature from setting a per diem amount, but I do not believe that the per diem amount should be a part of the Constitution. It should be left to the legislature, so that if it should be $10 or $20 for the outside islands it's up to the legislature to set, but I do not believe that the particular amount for the per diem should be set in the Constitution.

SHIMAMURA: The present laws provide for per diem for the members of the legislature. Now that law will be continued under the section on ordinances and continuity which continues all existing laws. If this is allowed to be left in, this clause is allowed to be left in, that will mean that the per diem will be frozen at this rate, and even if say twenty-five years from now the cost of living goes up the legislature cannot increase it without a constitutional amendment.

CHAIRMAN: We have a revision every ten years, of course.

The Chair will put the question. All those in favor of the amendment offered by Delegate Trask, and it would delete the words " and in addition thereto an allowance which shall be fixed by law not to exceed a per diem of $5.00 for members from the island of Oahu and $15.00 for members from other islands," be deleted. All those in favor of the amendment signify by saying " aye." Contrary. The amendment is lost.

ROBERTS: I have an amendment which is on the desk of the delegates. The amendment provides for the compensation of members of the legislature, both salary and emoluments, as may be prescribed by law, but the amount thereof shall neither be increased nor diminished during the term for which they are elected. No salary shall be payable when the Senate alone is convened in a special session.

I then propose to put in the schedule the actual amounts set for the first legislature. If it be the sense of the Convention that the amounts should be as in the amendment presented by Mr. Fukushima, in the amounts of $2,500, $1,500 and $750 instead of $1,500, $1,000 and $750, that's a matter for the Convention to decide. It seems to me, however, that the problem of writing specific amounts of money in a Constitution—even though some states have done it, much to their regret because they've had to have constitutional amendments to change the amounts—it seems to me that the proposal as we adopted it makes it rather difficult in case of changes in prices and changes in the cost of living to give adequate consideration to the appropriate salary for the legislators. The amendment to Section 11 now says that the amount shall not exceed $5 per diem for members of the Island of Oahu.

CHAIRMAN: Excuse me, Delegate Roberts. Have you moved an amendment?

ROBERTS: Mr. Chairman, I was explaining. I would like to move this amendment. Amend Section 11 to read as follows:

> Section 11. Compensation of members. The members of the legislature shall receive such salary and emoluments as may be prescribed by law, but the amount thereof shall neither be increased nor diminished during the term for which they are elected. No salary shall be payable when the senate alone is convened in special sessions.

The following to appear in the schedule:

> Until otherwise provided by law in accordance with Article ____ section 11, the salary of members of the legislature shall be as follows: the sum of $1500 for each general session, the sum of $1000 for each budget session and the sum of $750 for each special session of the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: Well, before you debate, I'd like to get something before the house.

LARSEN: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: And that amendment is to what, Delegate Roberts?

ROBERTS: The amendment is to Section 11 as submitted by Delegate Rice, as amended by Delegate Fukushima's amendment.

CHAIRMAN: And you would leave in the second paragraph of Delegate Rice's amendment?

ROBERTS: I assume that the second paragraph, Mr. Chairman, could be taken care of by my second paragraph with regard to the schedule. So that if the amendment is adopted it takes care of both the section in the Constitution, the first paragraph, and a provision in the schedule in the second paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will have to rule you're not in order there at all. That has nothing to do with the second paragraph.

KELLERMAN: The second paragraph is not before the house as yet.

ROBERTS: Oh, I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. I was looking at my second paragraph. I'm sorry. It applies only to the first paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts' amendment then is an amendment to the first paragraph of the amendment offered by Delegate Rice, which has already been amended, to insert the words $2,500 and $1,500 for sessions. Are you finished, Delegate Roberts? Delegate King is recognized.

KING: If Delegate Roberts has finished, I would like to speak in favor of his amendment. I have a good deal of sympathy with the amendment offered by Delegate Fukushima. In my opinion the business of being a legislator is becoming more expensive and more difficult all the time and a substantial raise in pay might be considered necessary. You may note Congress has recently raised the pay of a member of the House of Representatives and of the Senate from $10,000 to $12,500 and then granted each member of the United States Congress a $2,500 expense account which is tax free. They do not, however, get a per diem.

I am also in considerable sympathy with the efforts to secure a reasonable per diem which might even be increased over the $5 minimum and the $15 minimum if the future requires it. But I don't think these things ought to be written into the law. Delegate Roberts' amendment would provide that the rate of pay of the members of the legislature and the emolument may be prescribed by law, and then later in the schedule would fix the rate of pay as fifteen, one thousand and seven-fifty, or twenty-five and fifteen if the Convention so wishes.

But I do feel that the amendment submitted by Delegate Rice, and as already amended, is not a very good constitutional provision. The illustration made of those states that have very small rates of pay are not very good because the states are very unhappy about it. The members of the California legislature are very poorly paid and recently in Colliers Magazine it was written up that the lobbyists for large interests in the State of California almost dominate the legislature through various means of aiding these legislators to meet their expenses.

So it seems to me that we should in the Constitution adopt the general law and leave it to the judgment of the legislature in the future to raise the pay if it's necessary.

There's only one little item here, that the "amount thereof shall neither be increased nor diminished during the terms for which they are elected." If this amendment is passed, the holdover senators would continue at the same rate of pay until their holdover terms were expired, and we would have the situation where the members of the new legislature, the newly elected senators, would get the increase in pay and the holdover senators wouldn't, but that's rather a minor difficulty. I certainly do feel that the amendment offered by Delegate Roberts is in line with good constitutional drafting.

BRYAN: I would like to say that the committee had under consideration a proposal very similar to this, and the only reason we changed to what the committee reported to the Convention was that in discussion it was felt that the members of the legislature at times were a little bit embarrassed at increasing their own compensation. For that reason we finally hit upon the scheme of putting it in as a constitutional provision with the amount fixed, and in hopes that as constitutional amendments were made every ten years or approximately every ten years, that that adjustment could be made to go up and down with the cost of living. Therefore, I don't think any of the members of the committee are greatly opposed to the amendment offered by Dr. Roberts.

I have one suggestion, however. The last three words in the first paragraph, "when the Senate alone is convened in special sessions," I think might well be deleted because the words "special sessions" is used in the Constitution referring to the entire legislature, and I think perhaps if the period were placed after the word "convened" it would be an improvement.

ROBERTS: That's acceptable, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: As I understand Delegate Roberts' amendment as it now is, the last sentence would read "No salary shall be payable when the senate alone is convened" period. Is that correct, Delegate Roberts?

ROBERTS: That's acceptable unless some problem might be created - -

CHAIRMAN: Well, the Chair wants to know if it's acceptable.

ROBERTS: I accepted the amendment.

TAVARES: I'd like to speak in support of the Roberts' amendment. I hope that there will be economy in the legislature, but we must remember first the legislature is one of the major branches of government; we must not lose sight of that. And in deciding what we are going to pay them or what arrangements we are going to make to pay them we must never lose sight of the fact that they are a major branch of government, and therefore there is some justification in paying a substantial amount to that major branch of government.

Secondly, there is the question of fixing dollar amounts which, ordinarily, is unwise. The dollar, as we know, fluctuates.

Thirdly, I think if one looks at the history of Congress, one will find that the congressmen have been very very reluctant indeed to increase their salaries. That reluctance is borne of the fact that no matter how reasonable the increases may be, the first reaction of voters is usually against any increase at all. That fear itself is sufficient deterrent I think to prevent the legislature from running away too much.

Finally, the provision here is very salutory in this amendment. That the increase anyway shall not take effect until after their term will also have a deterring effect for two reasons. First, they'll have to run again if they want to be re-elected and will have to explain that amendment. Secondly, they won't get the benefit of it themselves anyway for that term and I think there will have to be some sound principle, some pretty strong principle to induce them to vote for it when there is no immediate prospect and no certainty that they will enjoy the increase, because there's no absolute certainty that any man will be re-elected.

Under all those circumstances, I feel that this amendment is preferable to the others that have been proposed.

CHAIRMAN: I think there has been enough debate on this.

LOPER: I'm speaking in favor of the Roberts' amendment and to the slight defect noted by President King. I'd like to ask whether this amendment would cure the problem, to take the last sentence of the Ashford amendment, which was before us a day or two ago, so that the latter part of the first sentence which now reads, "but the amount thereof shall neither be increased nor diminished" would change and say, "but no law directly or indirectly increasing the emoluments of the members shall be effective for a period of two years subsequent to its enactment." I would like to move an amendment to the Roberts' amendment to incorporate that sentence.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will have to rule that's out of order.

RICHARDS: I would have another suggestion to take care of that particular problem. If an amendment to the Roberts' amendment is out of order - -

CHAIRMAN: The reason for it being, Delegate Richards, is you're piling up the amendments here. Perhaps we might take a few minutes recess. The Chair will declare a few minutes recess.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts, has your amendment been printed or do you have it written out?

ROBERTS: It has not been printed. It's been written out, and I'll read it slowly so that the delegates can get it.

CHAIRMAN: Just hold it a minute until the delegates take their seats, will you? Will the delegates please take their seats. Delegate Roberts, you have a proposed change in your amendment.

ROBERTS: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: Read it, please.

ROBERTS: In line three after the comma after the word "law," first paragraph, delete from the word "but" down to the end of the sentence which ends with the word "elected," and substitute therefore the following language, "but any increase or decrease in the amount thereof shall not apply to the legislature which enacted the same." Mr. Chairman, while - -

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute please. As the Chair understands it, your amendment, after the words "prescribed by law" would delete the remainder of the sentence and insert the following: "but any increase or decrease thereof shall not apply to the legislature which enacted the same." Is that correct?

ROBERTS: "In the amount thereof," but that's a matter of style, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Does the second accept the amendment? It's accepted. Proceed, Delegate Roberts.

ROBERTS: I'd also like, in view of the discussion during the interim, that the amounts set forth in the second paragraph, $1,500, $1,000 and $750 - -

HEEN: Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt? It seems to me that the word "emoluments" in the second line of the first paragraph here should be changed to "allowances." The term "emoluments" might be regarded as additional compensation, whereas allowances would be in the nature of reimbursement for amounts spent for expenses.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is inclined to agree with that, Delegate Roberts.

ROBERTS: That's acceptable.

CHAIRMAN: Strike out the word "emoluments" and insert the word "allowances." You were discussing the second paragraph of your amendment.

ROBERTS: That's correct. Since it's been the sense of the Committee of the Whole to increase the amounts for the various sessions, I'd like the second paragraph to conform to our previous action, which provides for the sum of $2,500 for the general session, $1,500 for the budget session and $750 for the special session. So that in line three of the second paragraph delete "$1,500" and substitute "$2,500," in the fourth line delete "$1,000" and substitute "$1,500."

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is ready to put the question or accept further debate.

DELEGATE: Question.

WIRTZ: Point of information. Do I still understand that this being an amendment to the amendment offered by Delegate Rice, that it does not affect the second paragraph?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. That's correct, that's still open.

FONG: I think this amendment is worse than the previous amendment which was passed. You will note that this amendment goes beyond the other amendment. The other amendment just stops at $2,500, but this is going to get up to the sky. Now, if you set this schedule at $2,500, you don't expect the legislature to cut it down below $2,500. I think it's very -- Originally the way he had it at $1,500 I think was all right, but now you increase it to $2,500 and and let the legislature lift that lid over $2,500. Makes it worse.

ROBERTS: The purpose of putting those amounts in was to conform to the action of the Committee of the Whole. We voted on that. It was the sense of this committee that those amounts be fixed at that level. I therefore think that they're perfectly proper and perfectly in order.

WHITE: What are we voting on? The first paragraph?

CHAIRMAN: We're now voting on the Roberts' amendmend to the Rice amendment. The Rice amendment is the first paragraph of Section 11, relates to the compensation and expenses allowable -- paid and allowable for legislators. The proposed Roberts' amendment would have the compensation prescribed by law but the salary in the beginning fixed in the schedule.

WHITE: But in voting at this time we're just voting on the first paragraph, are we? And there would be a subsequent motion to adopt the second?

CHAIRMAN: We're voting on the first and second paragraphs of Delegate Roberts' motion. I would suggest to Delegate Roberts, for his consideration, that if you desire to have your motion acted upon in the absence of the figures, you could leave the figures blank and then they could be filled in. However, that's up to the delegate.

HEEN: I move that we take action on the first paragraph first, get that out of the way.

DELEGATE: I second that.

ROBERTS: The reason I suggested we act on both paragraphs is that there's some fear in the minds of some of the delegates that part of this is put in for one purpose and part for another purpose. This is a package deal to cover both the problems. I'd like it presented in that form to get the sense of the Convention.

HEEN: I might be in favor of the first paragraph and not in favor of the second paragraph and I say it's out of order to put two subjects for vote at the same time. Therefore it is out of order.

DELEGATE: I ask for a division of the question.

ROBERTS: I then move that the second paragraph be considered first, leave the amounts $2,500, $1,500 and $750.

LARSEN: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: That is not the suggestion, Delegate Roberts. The suggestion is we vote upon the first paragraph of your amendment, leaving to further action of the body the dealing with the paragraph relating to what goes in the schedule. If that is acceptable to you, the Chair will put that motion.

ROBERTS: I said it wasn't, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Was not?

ROBERTS: That's right.

HOLROYDE: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point of order.

HOLROYDE: The second paragraph would not be an amendment to the legislative article or to Section 11. It would be something to go into the schedule. I think we could vote only on the amendment to the section.

ROBERTS: That's not correct. We're dealing with article -- Section 11. We can amend that to put it in the schedule. It's perfectly proper. The section is before us.

HEEN: I move that we act on the first paragraph first.

WHITE: I'll second that motion.

BRYAN: I'd like to speak to that motion to clarify perhaps what Delegate Roberts is afraid of. If favorable action was taken on the second paragraph first and the first paragraph lost, what would you do? The whole thing would be out of order. The first paragraph provides the basis for the second paragraph. Unless the first paragraph is carried the second paragraph is meaningless.

CHAIRMAN: It seems to the Chair that that's the sensible disposition. However, what is the wishes of the delegate, Delegate Roberts?

ROBERTS: You can go ahead on the first paragraph, Mr. Chairman, but I want it quite clear that my amendment was in two parts, and I intend to put the $2,500, $1,500 and $750 back in again.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair so understands.
The Chair will put the question . The question is on the amendment which is the first paragraph of Delegate Roberts' amendment to Section 11.

ARASHIRO: Point of information. If we vote on the first paragraph of the proposed amendment, then does that mean that we are now substituting or making an amendment to Section 11 of the part that we have already adopted? "In addition thereto an allowance which shall be fixed by law not to exceed a per diem of $5 per member," and right down the line until "the other island"?

CHAIRMAN: There would still be open the question of what the allowances of the legislators would be. The reason for breaking it up was pointed out. There was no basis for the second paragraph unless the first paragraph is adopted.

ARASHIRO: The paragraph that we have adopted freezes that per diem?

CHAIRMAN: That's right.

ARASHIRO: But, this will be in contradiction to the --

CHAIRMAN: That's right. This will leave it as a matter of law for future legislators, but establish it for the first legislature in the schedule. Delegate Roberts has expressed his intention to insert the figures, and abide by what has already been indicated in the Fukushima amendment.

WIRTZ: To clarify that problem, I'd like to point out that we put the word "allowances" in the second line of the amendment offered by Delegate Roberts, which leaves the legislature to provide for these allowances, which in turn could be tax free.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct.

NIELSEN: I think that the two paragraphs very definitely tie in together because if we're going to vote on the first one first, why then I'm going to vote no, and yet I think it's very sound; but without the second paragraph in the deal, why then I know what the play is here, I know politics. They're going to get the first one in and then kill the second one.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question.

BRYAN: Mr. Chairman, before you put the question, please. In discussing the matter of the small change I requested with the members of the committee, I find that I was in error. The words "in special sessions" should be retained as they are used in connection with the Senate in Section 12, which has been adopted.

CHAIRMAN: The Style Committee can take care of that. The Chair will put the question. All those in favor of the amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's carried.

We now have the second paragraph.

WHITE: Are we talking about the second paragraph of Mr. Roberts' amendment?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

WHITE: I have a question on the second paragraph of Delegate Rice's amendment that I'd like to --

CHAIRMAN: We haven't quite reached that, Delegate White.

WHITE: All right, I will withhold it then.

ROBERTS: I move that the second paragraph be adopted as proposed with the amendments suggested for the change in the amounts of $1,500 to $2,500, $1,000 to $1,500 and leaving $750 as it is.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

AKAU: I second that.

HEEN: I move the amendment that the sum of $1,500 be substituted for $2,500, $1,000 substituted for the sum of $1,500 and --

FONG: I second that motion.

ROBERTS: I have some question about the propriety of that amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has no question about the propriety of it. You raising a question of order?

ROBERTS: Yes, I am.

CHAIRMAN: What is your point of order? State it.

ROBERTS: The point is we have acted on the question of amounts. The amounts were agreed on at $2,500, $1,500 and $750.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule that it's a different thing to have a statutory provision and then have it fixed by law. Quite different.

ROBERTS: But the votes, Mr. Chairman, were on the amounts to be received by the legislators for specific sessions, whether they go into the schedule or are in the Constitution.

ASHFORD: When the first paragraph of Delegate Roberts' amendment was adopted, it knocked out the first paragraph of the other amendment which fixed the salaries?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct and the Chair will so rule. The question is on the amendment offered by Delegate Heen which would strike out $2,500 and insert $1,500 for a general session --

ROBERTS: May I have a roll call on that?

CHAIRMAN: -- strike out $1,500 and re-insert $1,000 for each budget session.

ROBERTS: Roll call, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The Clerk will call the roll. The vote is upon Delegate Heen's amendment which would cut down the salaries of the legislators from $2,500 to $1,500 and from $1,500 to $1,000 respectively.

KELLERMAN: May I ask the -- I understand it to be the case that the present per diem allowance permitted by statute will continue in effect unless specifically stated otherwise in the Constitution or the schedule.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

KELLERMAN: Therefore the adoption of either of these as proposed by Mr. Roberts or Judge Heen would have no effect upon the existing statutory per diem. Is that it?

CHAIRMAN: That's right. We've already adopted the provision that the legislature will fix the salary and allowances as may be prescribed by law. The Clerk will please call the roll.

Ayes, 24. Noes, 36 (Akau, Apoliona, Arashiro, Cockett, Doi, Dowson, Fukushima, Hayes, Ihara, Kage, Kanemaru, Kauhane, Kawahara, Kawakami, Kido, Kometani, Loper, Luiz, Lyman, Mau, Mizuha, Nielsen, Noda, Ohrt, Okino, C. Rice, Roberts, Sakai, Sakakihara, Serizawa, Shimamura, Smith, St. Sure, Wist, Yamamoto, Yamauchi). Not voting, 3 (Lee, Phillips, Silva).

The motion is lost.

ROBERTS: I move the adoption of the amendment.

FUKUSHIMA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion? Are you ready for the question? All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it, it's carried.

We're now on the second paragraph of Delegate Rice's amendment. The Chair will recognize Delegate Kellerman.

KELLERMAN: I move the adoption of the second paragraph of Mr. Rice's amendment.

J. TRASK: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the second paragraph of Delegate Rice's amendment to Section 11 relating to total expenses of officers and employees of each house be adopted.

KELLERMAN: May I read the full amendment, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Proceed.

KELLERMAN:

> In no case shall the total expenses for officers and employees for each house exceed the sum of $1,000 per calendar day during any general session, nor the sum of $500 per calendar day during any budget or any special session.

May I speak to the amendment?

CHAIRMAN: Proceed.

DELEGATE: There is no second.

CHAIRMAN: There has been a second. Proceed, Delegate Kellerman.

KELLERMAN: We have just voted for the adoption of a salary schedule of $2,500 for a general session and $1,500 for the budget session to present to the Territory the bill of $364,000 per legislature for salaries, not counting per diem. I think a great many of us are very much in favor of a per diem. At the present rate of per diem that would go up to approximately $430,000 per legislative session. This is of course based upon a 25 member Senate and a 51 member House.

If the members will turn to this mimeographed material which was distributed on the desks this morning --

CHAIRMAN: That bears the caption, "Comparison of legislative expenses 1929, 1945, 1947 and 1949." Is that what you have reference to?

KELLERMAN: That's the one. You will find that the total cost of officers and employees, and may I clarify any possible misconception, that does not include the salaries of the legislators. Officers are such as the sergeant at arms, chief clerk and others who hold positions, they are the officers of the legislature. The 1929 session, the cost per legislative day—and remember the proposed amendment is calendar day, which means for every day during which the session is in existence counting holidays and Sundays, but you will note that you will have to make a comparison in your mind with the figures on this form which relates to legislative days, which means working days only—the cost per working day was $666 per day, working day, for both houses of the legislature. Now that sum spread over the calendar days would, of course, be reduced to less than that by approximately one-sixth of a sixty day session. If you turn to the 1945 session, you will find the total had increased to $2,547 for both houses for a sixty-three day session. That has been figured; it comes to $2,006 if spread over the number of calendar days. If you'll turn to the '47 session you'll find that the total cost of personnel for both houses for a sixty-two day session was $3,271. On a calendar day basis that ran $2,535. The 1949 session --

CHAIRMAN: Is that for '47, Delegate Kellerman?

KELLERMAN: That was for '47. For the '49 session, you will find that the cost of employees and officers ran for the legislative session of sixty-two days to $4,835 for both houses, that is jointly. Broken down on a calendar day basis that comes to $3,747 for the two houses.

May I read briefly from your Manual of Constitutional Provisions on page 41. "The temptation to reward the politically faithful and to repay political favors through appointment to legislative office or employment has resulted in the establishing of both constitutional and statutory limitations on the legislature's power to choose its officers and employees." Further in that paragraph you will find the statement, "The California Constitution. Article 4, Section 23A fixes the maximum total expenses for officers and employees and attaches at $300 per day at regular sessions and $200 per day at special sessions for both houses of the legislature." That is jointly.

The proposal which Mr. Rice has introduced has fixed the amount at a maximum of $1,000 per calendar day during any general session for each house. On the basis then of a sixty day session that would run approximately $75,000 for each house. Calendar days include holidays, Sundays and weekends. The reason that we who have worked on this amendment have considered that a reasonable provision, rather than a legislative day, is because our committees do meet on weekends and holidays and employees do work on weekends and holidays. However, the sum effect of it merely is to increase from a possible $60,000 or a $62,000, depending upon the length of the legislative session from a total or a maximum of $62,000 or $63,000 to $75,000 or $80,000 for that session.

Of course this could be done by the legislature and there will be those who will consider there is no place in the Constitution for a provision which limits the legislature to a certain amount in money. There are several ways of handling this. This we considered the most feasible. Some constitutions limit the number of employees that can be engaged. For instance, the Constitution of Missouri, which has a thirty-four member Senate and a one hundred and fifty-four member House limits the number of employees to seventy-five for the Senate and one hundred and twenty-five for the House. You will notice on that basis with our existing legislature of fifteen in the Senate and thirty in the House, at the last 1949 session there were eighty-six employees of the Senate and one hundred and nine in the House. May I repeat, the Missouri Constitution where you have a thirty-four member Senate and a one hundred fifty-four member House, has a constitutional limit of seventy-five employees for the Senate and one hundred and twenty-five for the House. I've just read you the California provision which fixes a dollar maximum limit at $300 a day for each house in general session. The California legislature has a forty member Senate and an eighty member House.

Now, if you will turn your attention briefly to these other two mimeographed sheets which were distributed yesterday, headed "Partial breakdown of personnel cost for the House, regular sessions, and Senate, regular sessions." I'd like to call your attention to one or two points of clarification. You will find in the last column per diem pay. I have been questioned on the mathematics of these figures. I want to clear that up. That per diem pay relates only to the 1949 session. A survey of the salaries paid through the last -- through the '29, '45,'47 and '49 sessions shows that the salaries have been increased - the per diem that is - has been increased each session. We decided we'd complicate it to put in each time what the increase was, but in each of the respective sessions shown on your breakdown there has been a per diem increase. Therefore the per diem rate shown only relates to the '49 figures.

But there are several points there that I think should be brought to your attention. You will see that although the session -- let's take the '49, the 1949 session had sixty-two legislative days. That comes up to seventy-seven calendar days. However, you will note that a great many of the employees listed here and these are -- of course this is not the total list of employees obviously, this automatically lists a few as individuals because there is only one of each of certain of these offices. Of various others there were many, of course. But you will notice here for instance, the bottom line of the House, Regular Session 1949. The sergeant at arms of the House was paid for one hundred and forty-one days at the rate of $22.50 per day although the session, including the calendar days, lasted only seventy-seven days. You will note also that the secretary to the clerk and the assistant clerk were paid for one hundred and forty-one days although the session lasted, including calendar days, only seventy-seven days. The chief clerk was paid for one hundred and thirty-seven days at the rate of $45 per day, although the session lasted seventy-seven days. Now may I add that those days for which that extra payment was received did not include the cost of preparing the journal. The journal obviously has to be prepared after the session is closed. But the journal costs are in addition to those payments. They are listed under employees and come in under your total quoted on your comparison of legislative expenses and cost as cost for employees. In my opinion that could more reasonably be regarded as an independent contract and not as an employee, but it is so considered in the tabulation of expenses in the files filed by the Account Clerk of the Senate and House as employee pay. But these figures which I have given you here do not include the cost of the journal and do not include time spent on the journal, which obviously comes afterwards.

Now I know Mr. Fukushima brought up yesterday a proposed amendment that would imply at least that all bills would be engrossed and submitted to the governor in time for him to pass upon them within forty-five days after the session. Presumably they would be engrossed and passed up to the attorney general's office or the governor within twenty days. Yet we have the assistant clerk of the House, the secretary to the clerk, one hundred and forty-one days; the engrossing clerk, ninety-six days; the assistant engrossing clerk, one hundred and four days; and so forth.

Now I cannot but believe that the figures must indicate that we do not have sound financial administration of our legislative expenses. I cannot but believe that they indicate that were there someone there who was obviously serving in the position of a financial manager or administrative officer that many of these days would not have been regarded as necessary or as full time work justifying such pay. I cannot but think that part of this is due to the carelessness of not having any single responsible person looking to the economy of the legislature, as well as to the fact of the information that I read, the reward of the politically faithful.

I believe -- I've been told by several legislators who have indicated that they consider it impossible for the legislature to clean its own house, as impossible as it was for the legislature to reapportion itself, although it was under mandate for fifty years to do so and never did it. I therefore offer my suggestion, the amendment -- or rather Mr. Rice's amendment, I am speaking to it—in all friendliness and amity to aid them in clearing their house of unnecessary expenses and unnecessary employees. I would earnestly request the consideration of this body, if they're going to the people with a seventy-six member legislature—$400,000 for legislative salaries which now are no cost to the Territory whatever since, as we know, Congress pays the $45,000 now paid to the legislature—that they would be very wise to think to an enforced curtailment of what will undoubtedly be a tremendous increase over the legislative expenses for employees when all those extra people get in there, each claiming his patronage in addition to the patronage already well established.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kellerman, the Chair would like to ask you one question. Do these figures of the average cost per legislative day include the expenditures of the holdover committee? I notice under the Session Laws of 1949 there was $150,000 appropriated by the holdover committee.

KELLERMAN: No. The 1949 figures include the cost only of employees for the regular session.

Now there's one more point I'd like to bring out, which I intended to in the beginning. I don't want to talk too much but I think this is very pertinent. I'm advised by the chairman of the Accounts Committee that this body, with sixty-three members, has been working, including our salaries, our rent, our loud speaker system, all of our employees, all of our materials and supplies, we have been working on slightly under $1,200 per day, calendar day, including the salaries of the sixty-three legislators. For that reason I feel that the proposal of $1,000 per day maximum for employees of each house is more than generous. It will in no sense be where they will have to budget carefully to meet it.

WOOLAWAY: I'd like to ask a question concerning the generosity of allowing the Senate the same amount of money per day, although that body is half the size of the House.

CHAIRMAN: What is your question? Will you please address the Chair?

WOOLAWAY: Both houses are going to be allowed the sum of $1,000 a day for their expenses. I would like to ask the proposer of this amendment why the Senate is being allowed the same amount of money as the House although that body will be half the size of the House.

CHAIRMAN: Would you care to answer that, Delegate Kellerman?

KELLERMAN: Yes, Mr. Chairman. At present, our Senate is half the size of the House but if you will look across this line, "Average personal services per legislative day" on your comparison of legislative figures that we've been referring to, you will find 1929 Senate cost $337 per day, House $329. There the Senate cost more than the House. In 1945 you will find $1,197 for the Senate, $1,350 for the House, just a little bit over $150.

CHAIRMAN: In other words, you followed the historic pattern.

KELLERMAN: Following historically they come within $200 or $300 of each other right across the line. I have not had the opportunity to ascertain why that should be, but that follows the pattern apparently through a period of twenty-five or thirty years.

TAVARES: I would like to have that amendment read over again because I would like to make a further amendment to it.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment is on your desk, Delegate Tavares. The Chair will read it.

TAVARES: It's the second paragraph of Delegate Rice's amendment?

CHAIRMAN: That's correct.

TAVARES: Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to further amend by substituting a comma for the period at the end of that paragraph and adding thereafter the following words, "based upon the average purchasing power of the dollar upon admission of this State to the Union."

COCKETT: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: What would that accomplish, Delegate Tavares? Is there a second?

TAVARES: Was it seconded?

CHAIRMAN: Yes. Delegate Cockett.

TAVARES: We have seen in the last few years a tremendous fluctuation in the purchasing power of the dollar. Before the last World War $10 a day was allowed by law as per diem for trips to the mainland and it was ample. Today $20 a day doesn't get you as far as $10 did in those days. If we get into another large scale war, inflation may come further. The purchasing power of the dollar may go down further, and this will allow us to keep up with the purchasing power of the dollar.

CHAIRMAN: Pardon me. I don't think your amendment would, though. There's still a prohibition on the limit, is there not?

TAVARES: I think, Mr. Chairman, that word "based upon the present purchasing power of the dollar" would lend meaning to the $1,000 and $500. I think it would mean that whatever the purchasing power of the dollar was at that time, we could go up or down depending on the way the dollar fluctuates, within reason.

ROBERTS: If we could use the words "to be adjusted in accordance with" - -

CHAIRMAN: The Bureau of Labor Statistics figures or something like that?

ROBERTS: The purchasing power figures, I assume, would be the figures of the Bureau of Labor Statistics or our own Territorial Employment department because the only figures we have on changes in purchasing power are changes in actual prices. I am in accord with the amendment proposed by Delegate Tavares. I think the language ought to read, "to be adjusted to the changes in the cost of living index of the Territory of Hawaii," which would provide an actual base upon which to make the changes.

TAVARES: I'm willing to accept any amendment within reason, if someone has a better one in words. I think that we should bear in mind that there is a possibility of a very rapid fluctuation of the dollar from now on. I think since we're going to put this tight rein, which I'm in favor of, on legislative expenditures, we ought to allow at least enough leeway to take care of at least substantial fluctuation in the dollar purchasing power.

H. RICE: I'll accept that amendment.

WHITE: I'd like to ask them why they picked on one particular item and tied it to the purchasing power of the dollar. We fixed salary, we're fixing the compensation for legislators. You going to do the same thing for them? What is this tied to? Is it to be tied to the cost of living? Is it tied to the wholesale commodity price index, or what is it tied to? I wouldn't know what kind of index to tie legislative expenses to.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has difficulty with that too. It would have to be redrafted, the amendment.

ST. SURE: I'd like to call the body's attention to the word "expenses." Could that be construed to be other than compensation?

CHAIRMAN: That has nothing to do with compensation of legislators.

ST. SURE: It states "expenses for."

CHAIRMAN: That means the pay.

TAVARES: I realize, although I am not a financial expert, that there is some indefiniteness in the words "purchasing power of the dollar." However, I believe that under those circumstances if the legislature make a determination based upon some reasonable grounds that the purchasing power of the dollar has gone down and they exceed their expenses within that limit, I believe the courts will honor their finding. I don't think you can absolutely tie it down in any event, but I think it leaves enough leeway so that the courts, if the legislature in good faith finds with good reason that the purchasing power of the dollar has gone down a certain amount and the court cannot find absolutely, almost unimpeachable reasons against that, the court will honor the findings of the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: It appears to the Chair that the amendment would leave the discretion entirely to the legislature and it would not be a reviewable question based on that.

AKAU: I rather agree with Delegate White when he says we haven't this clause on many other statements we have made regarding our finances and salaries and what have you. Would it be possible then to put this statement in the report, in the explanation of the report of this committee, rather than put it on right here in the proposal?

CHAIRMAN: I'm afraid not, Delegate Akau. This is a limitation on the total expenditures. If there's got to be any leeway some language has to be inserted here to permit the leeway.

WHITE: I'd like to say that while I'm in sympathy with the objective of this second paragraph, it seems to me we're writing something into the Constitution that we don't have the faintest idea how it will ever work. We haven't even had a State legislature in session and we don't know what problems we're going to be confronted with, and it is my opinion that to try to put a limitation like this on, that is going to govern for all time, is just trying to do crystal gazing. It just isn't possible. I don't think any of us can tell what kind of conditions we are going to be confronted with. I am sympathetic with the objective but I just don't think it is a practical provision.

CASTRO: I think that this probably deserves a little more thought between the gentlemen who have expressed their sympathy with it. I suggest that this committee recess until 1:30 as it approaches the noon hour, and possibly at that time we can come up with the positive suggestion of whether we will incorporate this or not at all. So I so move at this time for a recess.

SMITH: Second the motion.

RICHARDS: If the movant will hold his motion, I would like to offer one other suggestion that the delegates can think about. Is it the purpose of this amendment to have the clerks walk out along with the meeting of the legislature? There's certainly clean-up work to be done, and how is that going to be done if the clerks all walk off the floor the day the legislators leave?

CHAIRMAN: The purpose of the amendment is to enable the legislature to budget its expenses within reasonable limits. That's the purpose of it as the Chair understands it.

WIRTZ: As long as we're - -

CASTRO: I withdraw my motion.

CHAIRMAN: Excuse me. There has been a motion and I believe it was seconded. Is this motion to recess until 1:30?

CASTRO: To permit the gentlemen to get this off their minds, I withdraw my motion to recess temporarily.

WIRTZ: I just want to pass on one further suggestion for the consideration of the delegates during the noon recess. I am heartily in accord with the objectives of this proposition. I feel that here is a very valuable contribution made by a housewife. Housewives have so much money to deal with in their household expenses and they have to make it fit.

CHAIRMAN: And a member of the bar, you might add.

FONG: I am in accord with the sentiments expressed by Delegate Kellerman, but I'm afraid that we are delving into something which we know very little about. You will note in setting forth the expenses of $1,000, Delegate Kellerman is cutting the legislative expenses down to around 38 per cent of what the legislature has spent for the year 1949.

Now the delegate has set a figure of $500 for a budget session. I don't know whether the delegate understands the working of the legislature. In the budget session the only committee that I can conceive of that will be operating will be the Finance Committee and the Printing Committee, the Printing Committee just to print the financial report of the Finance Committee. In the regular session you have probably from twelve to eighteen committees, each of them almost as big as the other. In each of the committees we have our clerks, we have our typists, and then we have a Printing Committee which is very large. Now, if you're going to set a figure of $500 for a special session, that is for a session in which the budget is only going to be taken care of and which only one committee will work, and you set a sum of $1,000 for a general session, I believe you are way off the mark. Now I don't know whether $500 will do the trick for the budget session. If $500 will do the trick for a budget session, then I believe the sum of $2,000 probably is more in accord than the sum of $1,000.

Another problem to be considered is the question of the number of employees in the House as well as in the Senate. In the House we had a lot of bills that were introduced as compared to the number of bills that were introduced in the Senate. You will note that the total measures of bills introduced in the 1949 House was 1,479, as compared to the total in the Senate of 905, the difference of almost 600 measures introduced in the House. The introduction of bills takes a lot of work of the legislators, work of the members, of the working staff. They type the bills, they see they're engrossed, they have them printed and delivered and the messengers put them in the books and the amendments are made and the committee has to discuss all the bills.

Now I don't know whether Delegate Kellerman has made an exhaustive study of this problem as to the number of workmen that is necessarily needed for the expeditious work of the legislature. Certainly I know there is nothing here to show that the thing has been worked out to compare the special session, the budget session, with that of the general session, and I feel that the setting of an amount here is going to be difficult. I am in accord with the objective of the delegates to hold down the expense of the legislature so that our tax revenue need not be so high, but we must consider that there are problems here which we have to foresee.

Now another question which has come to my mind is the question as to whether -- I'll continue after the recess.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will entertain a motion to recess to 1:30.

CASTRO: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Second?

SMITH: Second.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye." Carried.

Afternoon Session

CHAIRMAN: The committee will please come to order. Will the delegates please take their seats. I direct the committee's attention to the fact that we still have some substantial work to get done, so let's get down to business.

We are now debating Delegate Rice's amendment and we closed with the discussion by Delegate Kellerman. The Chair will ask whether or not she has finished her remarks in supporting the amendment.

KELLERMAN: There's been one point which was called to my attention during recess for lunch which I made this morning but apparently was not entirely clear. The proposal limits expenditures to $1,000 per day for each house per calendar day during the general session. In other words, a basis say on a sixty day session would run about seventy-five calendar days. That would be $75,000 for each house or $150,000. The figure quoted on your "Comparison of Legislative Expenses" tabulation, to which we referred this morning, for the 1949 session of $4,835 as the average personnel cost per legislative day is on the basis, as you note, of legislative day. Now that figure translated in terms of calendar day, which would make it comparable to the proposed amendment, drops to $3,747; so the proposal is to limit to $2,000 per day as against $3,747 in the 1949 session, $2,535 in the 1947 session—you see, there's only a $500 difference there—and in your 1945 session it was exactly $2,006. Is that clear to the delegates that the figures -- Beg your pardon.

CHAIRMAN: It's not clear to the Chair. The proposal that you have suggested or you're advocating would fix the per diem at $1,000.

KELLERMAN: Per calendar day which includes holidays, Sundays. It's every day from the date the session convenes until it adjourns finally.

CHAIRMAN: What would that be in a legislative day?

KELLERMAN: In a legislative day that would come down to -- it would go up to about $1,200 per legislative day. Or if you want to turn it around and take this at $1,000 calendar day and transpose the figures on your "Comparison of Legislative Expenses," it transposes the $4,835 which was the '49 daily total—do you get that, the 1949 session—it takes that figure down to $3,747. It takes the '47 figures down to $2,535 and it takes the '45 session down to $2,006 per day. So you see, it is not as much a cut as some people had concluded, and because they brought up that point during recess and did not understand the difference between the calendar day and the legislative day, I wanted to make that point clear.

CHAIRMAN: That's a reduction of what percentage, Delegate Kellerman? Can you figure that out?

KELLERMAN: A sixty day session runs approximately seventy-three or four days. It depends upon the day it convenes. For instance—I can get it exactly—the 1949 session was a sixty-two day session. It convened on February 16th and it adjourned, I think it was May 2nd or 3rd—the Legislative Reference Bureau has the date—and that came up to a total of seventy-seven calendar days. The sixty-two day legislative session of '49 constituted seventy-seven calendar days, so it's a difference of about one-sixth.

WHITE: As I interpret Delegate Kellerman's thing then, what is proposed on this thing would represent just about a fifty per cent reduction? Is that right, Delegate Kellerman?

CHAIRMAN: That's what the Chair was trying to get at.

WHITE: About $150,000 as against $300,000 shown for this year?

KELLERMAN: The suggestion would be $2,000 per calendar day as against the '49 session of $3,747 per calendar day.

CHAIRMAN: About a ninety per cent reduction.

KELLERMAN: That's not right.

CHAIRMAN: About a forty per cent reduction roughly.

KELLERMAN: On the basis of the 1947 legislature it's a reduction of only $500, that is $2,000 as against $2,500.

WHITE: Well, if you figure roughly seventy-five working days at $2,000 a day that would be $150,000.

KELLERMAN: Yes, it would be $150,000 for employees.

WHITE: Well, that's just about a fifty per cent cut of your $299,788 then which is the figure right above your - -

KELLERMAN: Yes, yes, I was looking at the daily cut. I beg your pardon.

WHITE: That's what I meant. Could I ask one more question? This paragraph now reads: "In no case shall the total expense for officers and employees for each house exceed $1,000." How would you take care of - - supposing the legislature went out and contracted a lot of the work outside, that wouldn't be covered by this, would it?

KELLERMAN: No, it would not, not independent contract. This would be just officers and employees.

WHITE: For instance if work done by the Printing Committee, printing now done by the legislative employees, supposing it was contracted out to one of the printing houses. Then you would have no control on that expense at all.

KELLERMAN: That's right. You have no control over that expense. For instance, the final printing of the session laws, as you know, is done by a printing concern, that's done by independent contract. The journal, under the present procedure, the journal is done by members of the legislature, that is, one member of the Senate and one of the House and it's listed under employees' pay, although in my opinion that is more in the nature of an independent contract because it is not on a per diem or salary but on so much per page basis.

WHITE: The point I'm trying to get at is this, that much of the work that is presently done by the employees of the legislature today could be contracted during the session and circumvent what you're trying to control here.

KELLERMAN: There is no doubt that the printing, I presume, could be done on a contract basis. You mean the mimeographed printing in the legislature? Yes, that probably could.

WHITE: Many of those functions - -

KELLERMAN: It probably could and I don't know any way of fixing that as far as the Constitution is concerned other than the good faith of the legislature in carrying out a constitutional mandate with the intent to cover employees, attaches and officers.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair might suggest that such a contract probably would have to be let in accordance with the general statutes. You would have the assurance that there wouldn't be a lot of water in the contract. I think that is what the delegate has in mind.

HOLROYDE: One other question on the same subject. Say your total number of days was seventy-five; that would allow them $75,000, but there is considerable work usually left over for the employees to do, maybe a week or three weeks or four weeks. Now that work, as I understand it, must be done within the $75,000 range.

CHAIRMAN: That's right. This is a legislative day. They've got to cut their cloth accordingly.

KELLERMAN: The $75,000 would be the maximum, the maximum determined by the length of the session, but that does not mean that all the $75,000 is going to be spent or must be spent and can only be spent by the end of the legislative session. It simply gives them a total sum available for employees' services, and those that must continue, by nature of their work after the session is over, would have to come out of that total.

HEEN: Under this language it would seem to me that the amount allotted is to be for the general session. When the general session adjourns sine die there's no longer any session, then how can you pay those clerks who have to continue engrossing these bills to be sent to the governor?

CHAIRMAN: I think the idea would be so much would be allowed and then the payment could be deferred; it could be computed on the per calendar day. I think that's the intent of the amendment.

KELLERMAN: If the language is not clear to indicate that it's intended to be a maximum available for the expenses of the session based upon this rate of $1,000—that's the idea, it is a way of arriving at a maximum, it is not intended to mean that it can only be paid $1,000 each day within the session—if the language isn't clear, maybe it should be cleared by amendment or cleared in the report. But the intent of it—it's worded as the California constitution is worded and I gather they have the same questions of engrossing as we do and some employees must continue for a few days after the session, it was taken from that language—but the intent of it is that it simply fixes a maximum based upon that method of arriving at the maximum for the full expenses of the session, that is the compensation of employees and officers.

HEEN: Another question. In the first line of that paragraph, the word "expenses" is used.

CHAIRMAN: May the Chair invite your attention to the fact that what is before the house is Delegate Tavares' amendment which adds the sentence, "based upon the average purchasing power of the dollar." I think that is the precise issue that is before the house.

TAVARES: I should like to move a further amendment or rather have my amendment read as follows, in addition to the language which I have proposed, as an addition at the end of the paragraph which reads as follows:

> based upon the average purchasing power of the dollar upon admission of this state to the Union, as measured by the consumer's price index prepared by the Department of Labor and Industrial Relations of this state or the department hereafter performing such function.

SAKAKIHARA: Will the delegate please reread the addition.

TAVARES: "As measured by the consumer's price index prepared by the Department of Labor and Industrial Relations - -"

CHAIRMAN: May the Chair invite your attention to the fact that they do not keep indices, that they take their indices from the Bureau of Labor Statistics? It might be a more ascertainable standard. I don't believe they keep indices themselves. They in turn have a few indices not as comprehensive as the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

ROBERTS: The Territorial Department of Labor does issue quarterly figures.

CHAIRMAN: Yes, but they do not keep statistics like the Bureau of Labor Statistics does.

ROBERTS: Not quite the same way but they do issue publicly on a quarterly basis these data.

CHAIRMAN: Only a few commodities. However, that's up to the delegate.

TAVARES: May I finish reading this as I was requested? "As measured by the consumer's price index prepared by the Department of Labor and Industrial Relations of this State or the department hereafter performing such function."

CHAIRMAN: I assume the second accepts that. Is that correct, whoever seconded it? Does the second accept Delegate Tavares' re-statement? Just a moment until I find out whether I have a second here.

TAVARES: I have another suggestion, Mr. Chairman. I'm sorry. Another delegate has suggested improving language. I'm very willing. Instead of the first part of my amendment, "based upon the average," substitute "to be adjusted in accordance with the average purchasing power."

KELLERMAN: I think Mr. Rice accepted that original amendment to the amendment and therefore -- I don't know about the second, but he accepted that amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Well, the Chair will ask if this proposed amendment has a second.

ROBERTS: I'll second.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts seconded. Ready for the question? The question is on the amendment. The substance of the amendment as the Chair understands it would be to fix a limit but to put a permissable leeway based upon the price indices from which the legislature could from time to time depart. All those in favor --

WHITE: I'd like to raise a question about this. I think we are just jumping into something that we may well regret. I think it's a very unusual provision to have worked into your Constitution. Just to take one particular part of government expenses and try to tie it to the purchasing power of the dollar, I don't see that there's anything to support it. I think we ought to review this thing very carefully.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is of that view, too, but the amendment is pressed.

WHITE: In other words there is no relationship between the index that we select and the type of legislative expense that we're talking about. I'm opposed to it but if you want to put it to a vote --

CHAIRMAN: Chair is obliged to put it to a vote.

APOLIONA: I shall address myself to this amendment and speak against this amendment. In principle it sounds very, very good but it sure belittles the intelligence and integrity of the legislature. Just yesterday we passed that section whereby we say that each house shall choose its own officers, determine the rules of its proceedings and keep a journal. In the procedure of that business, Mr. Chairman, the two houses of your legislature are free to do what they think is in the best interests of the people. This amendment, as I see it, Mr. Chairman, is very much out of order and very much inconsistent with what we did yesterday, and so therefore, Mr. Chairman, at this time I move this amendment be deleted.

CHAIRMAN: The motion before the house is it's adoption; the Chair cannot put your request, Delegate Apoliona.

SAKAKIHARA: In analyzing the amendment, the word "expenses," I take it to mean compensations for officers and employees alone.

CHAIRMAN: That's right.

SAKAKIHARA: What is there, if we were to adopt this amendment, what is there for the legislators to commit subterfuge. There's nothing for the legislature to contract. There are the costs of the printing of the bills and resolutions which may be presented to the legislature, and I feel very strongly that this amendment would not serve this purpose.

CHAIRMAN: That's already been brought out.

CASTRO: Point of information. Are we voting or are we about to vote upon that portion of the amendment which has been added by Delegate Tavares?

CHAIRMAN: That's all we are voting on, the proposed amendment by Delegate Tavares which is an effort to gear the maximum expenditure to the price indices, in substance.

CASTRO: The printed section then will not --

CHAIRMAN: We're not voting on that.

CASTRO: Thank you.

FONG: Do I understand by that, that if the purchasing power of the dollar goes up that the legislature would be cut down to less than a $1,000?

CHAIRMAN: No, go up. You're quite right, it would go down. That is, it would be within the power of the legislature to reduce it.

FONG: Now I understand that is tied up with the purchasing power of the dollar. Now suppose the dollar buys two dollars worth of things. Does that mean the legislature will be restricted to $500?

CHAIRMAN: No, they could still spend $1,000.

FONG: I think that is what it means. It will have to come down to $500.

CHAIRMAN: Chair doesn't construe it that way.

TAVARES: I'm afraid it doesn't mean that. I'd like to point out that with a two hundred and fifty or sixty billion dollar national debt, if our dollar doesn't stay inflated, we'll jolly well suffer. I don't think it's within the realm of possibility that a dollar can start to purchase more from now on with the debt we have. It's got to stay inflated.

FUKUSHIMA: A point of information. Did not Delegate Rice accept the amendment as made by Delegate Tavares?

CHAIRMAN: No, he did not. He accepted a prior amendment and this has been changed and this is a direct amendment, Delegate Fukushima.

SHIMAMURA: May I please have Delegate Tavares' amendment.

CHAIRMAN: I will endeavor to read it to you. If you will examine the last paragraph of Delegate Rice's amendment, after the words "budget or any special session," the period is deleted and in substance the following is added: "to be adjusted in accordance with the average purchasing power of the dollar upon the admission of this State to the Union, as measured by the consumer's price index prepared by the Department of Labor or such other agencies performing such functions," or substantially that. It's rather crude, as the Chair has stated, but that's the substance of it, I believe.

TAVARES: I don't think it's quite as crude as that. May I read it?

CHAIRMAN: I said as the Chair stated it was crude, Delegate Tavares, not as you stated it.

TAVARES: I'll read it. "To be adjusted in accordance with the average purchasing power of the dollar upon admission of this State to the Union as measured by the consumer's price index prepared by the Department of Labor and Industrial Relations of this State or the department hereafter performing such functions."

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The amendment is lost.

The questions is now on the second paragraph of Delegate Rice's amendment.

LOPER: May I direct a question to Delegate Kellerman who made this --

CHAIRMAN: Can't hear you, I'm sorry.

LOPER: I'd like to direct a question to Delegate Kellerman to this point. Is it assumed that this restriction cannot be circumvented? It seems to me that the legislature could meet two or three days a week, take off two or three days, and the calendar days could be two or three times as many days as the legislative session and circumvent the purpose of this amendment.

KELLERMAN: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I think they could. However, as I understand, they're being paid for a session themselves at a fixed amount. If they want to stay here for four or five months just to run in extra calendar days to pay their employees more money through those calendar days or give themselves a per diem through those calendar days, I think the public will be certainly pretty much aware of what is being done, and I don't think that that is the kind of runaround that we would expect from the legislature even in the interest of patronage.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Akau. She rose before the recess and the Chair refused to recognize her.

AKAU: Thank you. Just a word in favor of the paragraph regarding the expenses. I speak in favor of it. Just before recess this afternoon, my good colleague from the fifth district made a statement which I would like to answer. He stated that there were a great many bills that came into the House of Representatives and therefore a great many people -- the implication was that a great many people were needed to take care of all this paper work. I'd just like to inject this. By the higher-paid calibered people who will be, we hope, elected to the House and the Senate—not to be casting any reflections on the people there now, but with more money we hope to get better people—the very fact that they will be people who will know what they are doing and not, shall we say, repeat some of the bills that are put in by themselves and repeat the bills that are on the statutes already, that the number of bills that will be presented, we hope, will be many, many fewer -- much fewer, I should say, than have appeared in the past in the legislature.

FONG: I do hope that my --

CHAIRMAN: Counsel for the defense.

FONG: Yes, I do hope that my good friend from the fifth district will see to it that a harness is placed upon the introduction of bills by the members of the legislature, but unfortunately there is nothing to prevent a member of the legislature from introducing bills.

Now I was quite surprised that our delegate, Mrs. Kellerman, brought this amendment up. She was one of the staunchest supporters of the annual session. And the only argument for an annual session is that a department head cannot budget three years in advance. Now when she sets the limit on the expenditure of the legislature, she is setting in advance ten years, twenty years, the budget which the legislature is going to operate by. Now if the argument for an annual session is strong enough to secure an annual session so that we could budget our expenditures and our appropriations for a year or two years in advance, certainly that argument is just as strong for the legislature as we have it here.

Now you will note that your government appropriated one hundred million dollars for the biennium, the appropriation bill I think around seventy million dollars and with the capital expenditures items it ran up to almost a hundred million dollars. You have three branches of government; you have the judiciary, you have the legislative and you have the executive. The judiciary is comprised of all the judges in the Territory of Hawaii, the expenditures of the jury, the expenditures of the juvenile court, the members of the probation office staff and all the clerks that work in the court room. Now that is quite an expenditure to take care of your judicial branch of government. And then your executive branch of government, everything that is not in the judicial branch is your executive branch of government, probably running up to almost seventy or eighty million dollars per biennium.

Your legislature, which is a sovereign branch of government, which is the third branch of government having the same dignity as that of the judiciary and that of the executive, is now going to be held down to an expenditure of $1,000 per day. In other words, heretofore they have appropriated for their own use in the legislature the sum of five hundred thousand dollars or approximately thereabouts. You are saying to the judiciary -- to the legislature, you can go ahead and appropriate millions, a hundred million of dollars to the other branches of government, that is to the executive and the judiciary, but we will not allow you to appropriate five hundred thousand dollars for your own purposes. Now you will note that your legislature expenditure is a very, very small fraction in this case where there is a hundred million dollars, and five hundred thousand dollars is 1/200 of the expenditure of government for the biennium; your five hundred thousand dollars as against your one hundred million dollars.

Now your government -- your legislature is supposed to be supreme in its own sphere. It is supposed to legislate for the whole Territory of Hawaii and it has the power to say to each department, your appropriation for the next biennium is so much, and yet you are denying to your legislature the right to say that we will appropriate the sum of five hundred thousand dollars to take care of the expenditures of the legislature.

Another discrepancy here in the amendment is the fact that you will give to the Senate and to the House, which are unequal in numbers, and unequal in number of employees, and unequal in number of work, unequal in the number of bills that are introduced and unequal in the number of things that are taken up in the legislature, the same amount of money which is allotted to each of the bodies, that is $1000 per day. Now if you set the amount of $500 per day for a budget session which only takes care of your appropriation bill—one bill out of 1400 bills which was introduced in the House of Representatives in the 1949 legislature and 900 bills that were introduced in the Senate, a total of 2300 bills introduced in the House of Representatives and in the Senate—one bill, the appropriation bill, and you say for that appropriation bill we will allot the sum of $500 per day. And yet you say in the general session, when you will be able to introduce 2300 or 2400 bills in the two houses of the legislature, that your amount is only $1,000 per day.

Now, I don't know under what rhyme or reason or under what figure the delegate picked this figure of one thousand and five hundred. If the figure of $500 is correct, which I do not know, and I have been in the legislature for over 10 years -- for 10 years, then I would say that the thousand dollars for each day of the session, for a general session, is far insufficient. If the $500 is enough, then I will say your $1,000 should be at least $2,000 per day. Now if the $1,000 is enough for the general session, then I say your appropriation per day for your budget session should be $250.

Now I leave this for the thought of all the delegates here. I'd like the objective to be accomplished. If we can save money, I am for it. I'd like to cut the expenditures of government as much as we can, but I am afraid we are tackling something which we don't know anything about, and I for one am not ready to vote for this amendment because I don't know what it's all about.

NIELSEN: I'm very favorable to such an amendment. To give you an instance of where the brakes were thrown away, in the last session when 20 Republicans took over, they created 20 committees and all hired clerks and some of the clerks twiddled their thumbs most of the session. Now we've got to put the brakes on the expenditure and this is really an anti-nepotism bill. I think that's the way you pronounce it.

CHAIRMAN: Didn't the Democrats come in for any of this patronage?

NIELSEN: We got one for ten members.

PORTEUS: No nepotism?

ARASHIRO: I am in favor of the intent of the amendment. I think it will take a non-political assembly of this sort to correct the political evil because the politician won't be able to correct their own political evil. I think this is a very good intention but I do not think that this amendment will meet the necessary needs to avoid these abuses, I might say at this time, of the expenditure because they may by some means be able to go beyond this expenditure.

CHAIRMAN: What would you suggest, Delegate Arashiro? Are you suggesting an amendment?

ARASHIRO: I'm coming to that. I think that this amendment should be drafted in a manner so that none of the politicians is entitled to employ any employee for the legislature, but we have a civil service department with a list of thousands of names who are qualified to do all kinds of work in the legislature, where the civil service department may be able to furnish the men, instead of the legislator getting the workers. So I feel that we are in agreement as far as the intent of this amendment is concerned, except that we do not agree in the amount that is set forth in the amendment, and to expedite the matter I move that we accept the principle of this amendment, I mean the intent of this amendment and then we proceed.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will rule you can't do that.

FUKUSHIMA: I believe the amendment as proposed by Delegate Kellerman has considerable merit. We've all brought that out, everyone that spoke here this morning and this afternoon agrees with Delegate Kellerman. Just before Delegate Arashiro got up, I thought I'd get up and make the same suggestion, that although the amendment carries much merit it will not cure the things that she is trying to cure. Certainly, I am just as much against the principle of nepotism which is practiced at all sessions of the legislature, and I venture to say that if the Democrats had 20 members they would have had 20 committees with 20 clerks of the Democratic party. You just can't get away from that. I believe that Delegate Arashiro's amendment, if he were to propose an amendment, would be a far better amendment than Delegate Kellerman's because in her amendment the legislature may by diverse -- devious methods get away from this amendment. Whatever we have in the Constitution will be of no avail, and this will be merely an abortive attempt to curb the legislature from spending the money which we don't want them to spend.

CHAIRMAN: Do you move an amendment?

FUKUSHIMA: I don't have it prepared, Mr. Chairman, but I'm speaking against the amendment as written here by Delegate Kellerman.

CHAIRMAN: If there is no further discussion, Chair will put the question.

HEEN: It seems to me that the use of the term "expenses" is a little confusing. I take it that this was supposed to be a limitation on the amount of compensation for the employees. Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN: That is the Chair's understanding.

HEEN: Then I move an amendment that deletes the words "expenses for" and insert in place thereof the words "compensation of."

KELLERMAN: As far as I'm concerned I'll be glad to accept the amendment. Mr. Rice hasn't picked up his microphone; he says he will accept the amendment of the word "compensation" in lieu of "expenses."

CHAIRMAN: I heard that. Question then is on the amendment, which will read, "In no case shall the total compensation of officers and employees for each house exceed the sum of $1,000 per calendar day during any general session nor the sum of $500 per calendar day during any budget or any special session."

KELLERMAN: May I close the debate on that with one answer to Mr. Fong's statement about the special session. I'm afraid he has unfortunately misled the body with respect to the number of bills that can be introduced in the budget session. There may be many independent bills introduced relating to capital improvements, many. There may be many introduced relating to some of the other phases of work that can be taken up in a budget session. There may be some introduced independently which may go into the general appropriation bill.

Besides, as long as you have two houses sitting, you have to have personnel required for two houses. They have nothing to do with the volume of bills introduced. If you need a lawyer for the House and a lawyer for the Senate, and I understand in some cases we have two lawyers for each, the fact that there may be one bill, five, fifteen or a thousand, your lawyers do not come a dime a dozen. You will have to have the pay for the legal advisors for the two houses. Frankly, it was on the basis of legal advisors that we deliberately changed from $500 jointly for the two houses in budget session to $500 for each house in the budget session. The California Constitution does put the smaller amount jointly for the two houses. I presume their legal services come from the attorney general's office. I'm told in our legislature the attorney general's office being so overworked, and I say that not facetiously, that we are required to engage additional attorney services for each house on a per diem.

CROSSLEY: I haven't spoken on this subject yet. I would like to concern myself with the remarks that were made directed towards needing this legislation because the Republican party having been in power had practiced nepotism.

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Crossley, I don't think anyone took that very seriously.

CROSSLEY: I did.

CHAIRMAN: I didn't.

CROSSLEY: Well, the Chair and I - -

CHAIRMAN: Proceed.

CROSSLEY: I'd like to point out in the '47 session, the House was evenly divided, the committees were evenly divided. I think that in itself answers the question. However, in the '49 session it was stated that the Republicans had 20 members and 20 committees. The question was asked, how many did the Democrats have and the answer was one. Now nepotism, as I understand it, means employing one's own family, and I think the speaker was probably on dangerous ground when he made that point, because in the first place I believe that it was a member of his own family that was employed and I believe that there was more than one Democrat who had a committee.

I think that from these debates that we have, if we try and break this down to personal politics that we lose a lot of the merit of the bill itself, and that is why I took exception to it. Not because I am a Republican or a Democrat, but because I hate to see these things broken down to the basis of where we're taking personal exceptions to things instead of looking at a bill objectively.

I think there's a great deal of merit to such an amendment. I think that the people in office themselves for the most part would welcome it as it is an automatic answer to a lot of people who are trying to work on the political fringes, and to that point I'm very much in favor of the amendment. I agree with the delegate from the fifth, Delegate Fukushima, who says that it might not cure everything. I think we've passed a lot of legislation here that is - - or constitutional matter that is legislative perhaps, that is aimed at curing things that the legislators themselves cannot cure or find it very difficult to cure. The very question of compensation was one which they expressed some reluctance to deal on. There are lots of other things. I hope that the delegates will look at this objectively, and if they do I'm sure that they will recognize perhaps not a cure-all, and I doubt that we can write a cure-all without being too restrictive, but at least it is in the right direction and I hope it will be supported.

NIELSEN: I want to take exception to the remark that in the '49 session that any member of my family worked in that session. There was no member of my family, wife, cousin, sweetheart, or a side-kick worked in that session.

CHAIRMAN: I think we can keep this debate on the level of the merits of the bill.

NIELSEN: And what I said about the Democrats getting one is true.

ROBERTS: I'd like to suggest that the problem which we have before us, although an extremely vital and important one in terms of an objective of expenditures by the legislature apart from salaries of the legislators, is vital and important and has been fairly high and has been rising rapidly. I personally have some doubt as to whether we, as a matter of writing a constitution, ought to place in that section specific figures which may have no meaning within a period of time, within the next ten or twenty years.

I believe that there is room for progress, and there is room for progress in every legislature dealing with matters of expenditure. I think the problem properly belongs as a matter of public action, as a matter of public interest, as a matter of adequate publicity in the press, on the radio and elsewhere. I think, although the problem appeals to me and the approach is quite valuable, I think we would make a mistake by placing a figure in the Constitution. We are thinking basically, I think, in terms of immediate problems and not thinking of this in terms of a Constitution for years and years to come.

I, for example, followed the similar data for the State of Nebraska, and I compared the figures for 1929 where our total expenditures per legislative day, apart from salaries of legislators, ran approximately $1000 and the State of Nebraska ran $2100. In the 1949 legislature, the average cost per legislative day in the State of Nebraska dropped from $2100, dropped to $1200 in 1949. Our costs rose from $1000 to $7,600. Those figures are high, but I think it would be a mistake to try and write something in our Constitution to remedy a specific evil which ought to be remedied by appropriate action of the community and by a proper understanding of the problem and treatment thereby.

I might have supported this particular proposal if there was some provision made which provided for some flexibility, but that was voted down and no flexibility exists in there now. I therefore can't see how I can support a proposal of this type.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kellerman, do you wish to close the debate finally? The Chair will put the question. The question is upon the Rice amendment to Section 11 which would fix a ceiling on the sum to be expended for compensation of officers and employees of each house.

KELLERMAN: May I ask a roll call vote?

CHAIRMAN: Roll call demanded? The Chair does not see sufficient hands. Clerk will call the roll.

Ayes, 29. Noes, 27 (Apoliona, Ashford, Corbett, Doi, Fong, Fukushima, Hayes, Heen, Kage, Kauhane, King, Kometani, Lai, Larsen, Loper, Lyman, Noda, Ohrt, Porteus, Roberts, Sakai, Sakakihara, St. Sure, White, Yamamoto, Yamauchi, Anthony). Not voting, 7 (Kawahara, Lee, Mau, Mizuha, Phillips, Richards, Silva).

CHAIRMAN: The amendment is carried.

J. TRASK: I move that Section 11 be adopted as amended.

A. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 11 as amended be adopted. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's carried, it's adopted.

We'll proceed to a discussion of Section 20. As the Chair understands it, it has been moved and seconded that that be adopted and thereafter it has been deferred.

HEEN: I believe that there is an amendment here which was proposed by Delegate Sakakihara.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. Has that been printed, Delegate Sakakihara?

SAKAKIHARA: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it has been distributed to the members.

CHAIRMAN: You offer your amendment?

SAKAKIHARA: At this time, I offer my amendment to Section 20 to read as follows:

Section 20. Punishments of persons not members. That each house may punish by fine, or by imprisonment not exceeding thirty days, any person not a member of either house who shall be guilty of disrespect of such house by any disorderly or contemptuous behavior in its presence or that of any committee thereof; or who shall, on account of the exercise of any legislative function, threaten harm to the body or estate of any of the members of such house; or who shall assault, arrest, or detain any witness or other person ordered to attend such house, on his way going to or returning therefrom; or who shall rescue any person arrested by order of such house.

But the person charged with the offense shall be informed, in writing, of the charge made against him, and have an opportunity to present evidence and be heard in his own defense.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

ROBERTS: I'll second it.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understands that the amendment of Delegate Sakakihara substantially incorporates a section of the Hawaiian Organic Act.

SAKAKIHARA: Section 25 of the Organic Act, correct, sir.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion? If not, the Chair will put the question.

HEEN: There is one situation that is not covered by this amendment and that is one where the two houses may sit in joint session. I believe that there is some such provision now in one of the articles where the two houses may sit in joint session; for instance, in the election of or rather the appointment of the post-auditor, that requires action on the part of the two houses sitting in joint session. This provision provides for punishment by each house for any act of direct contempt or indirect contempt as against each house or the committee of each house or by the house. There is nothing to cover the situation where the two houses sit together in joint session.

CHAIRMAN: You're thinking of the situation in the event a contempt should occur in that particular instance?

HEEN: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: Well, possibly the sergeant at arms could take care of that.

Any further discussion? If not, the Chair will put the question. The question is on the amendment of Delegate Sakakihara, printed and on the desks. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

FUKUSHIMA: I believe the Chair has gone ahead with Section 20 when Section 18 was also deferred.

WIRTZ: Point of order. My understanding [is] we have not yet voted on the section as amended, Section 20, have we?

CHAIRMAN: We have just voted on the amendment.

WIRTZ: Not the section as amended?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct; it is a complete substitution of Section 20.

WIRTZ: I move the previous question.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will then put the question on section as amended. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: My vote was "no." I am going to move for reconsideration later on.

CHAIRMAN: Of this Section 20, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: You vote "aye" on this, then.

FUKUSHIMA: I believe yesterday we deferred Section 18 also.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. Section 18 is now before the house. It has been moved and seconded that that be adopted.

FUKUSHIMA: The amendment to Section 18 was moved and seconded.

CHAIRMAN: That was your amendment, Delegate Fukushima?

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct. If the Convention recalls when discussing this amendment the question was asked, what would happen to a bill returned by the governor with suggestions of amendments, and it was not too clear whether this section covered it or not. Therefore, this morning I conferred with Delegate Tavares, who made this observation, and we included in the amendment which is now before the Convention and distributed to each delegate and inserted this sentence to cover that situation. That sentence is the last sentence of the first paragraph of my amendment. It reads, "If such a bill is amended and reenacted at such special session, it shall be presented again to the governor but shall become law only if he shall sign it within ten days after presentation, Sundays and holidays excluded." I feel, and I believe the person that made the observation also feels, that this amendment here will cover that situation adequately.

CHAIRMAN: The purpose of your amendment is to avoid the evils of the so called "pocket veto," is that correct?

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: The basic purpose of your amendment.

TAVARES: I agree with the last speaker and I think this last sentence cures the small hole I found about a bill which might be sent back with the governor's objections, and the legislature might agree and pass the amendment the governor suggested. Or if they didn't do that the governor would then have a pocket veto on that second try.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Fukushima, how many readings would be required in the event the special session is reconvened under your amendment?

FUKUSHIMA: I believe that would be taken care of under Section 19, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The same number, three readings?

FUKUSHIMA: I don't believe that's the procedure outlined in Section 19 for a regular veto when the legislature is still in session.

CHAIRMAN: In other words, Section 19 would be applicable to your amendment as well?

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct.

HEEN: About the middle of this proposed amendment you will find the words at the end of the line there, "house of origin at a special session of the legislature." Now in the other parts of the article and in the Organic Act the governor is required to return the bill to the legislature itself, and that has been the practice, where he sends his message together with the bill to both houses. So I would move the deletion of the words "house of origin at" and then in the next line "special session of the," so that that clause will read, "shall return it with his objections to the legislature, which shall convene," etc. Then later on, after the words "that day" -- "legislature which shall convene on that day," delete the words "without call" and insert in place thereof the words "in special session." "In special session without call," deleting the words "petition or."

CHAIRMAN: "Without call" inserted after the word "convene"; "shall convene without call"?

HEEN: "Shall convene on that day in special session without call."

FUKUSHIMA: That amendment is acceptable.

HEEN: Then later on following the word "call," and reading on, "for the sole purpose of acting," then delete the words "pursuant to this paragraph," so that phrase following the word "call" shall read "for the sole purpose of acting upon bills returned by the governor."

CHAIRMAN: So the Chair can understand your amendment, Delegate Heen, would you go over that again beginning with "shall return it with his objections to the legislature."

HEEN: With those amendments the clause will then read: "shall return it with his objections to the legislature which shall convene on that day, in special session without call, for the sole purpose of acting upon bills returned by the governor."

CHAIRMAN: Is that acceptable, Delegate Fukushima?

FUKUSHIMA: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Chair is still a little bit puzzled as to how the legislature convenes. How is the legislature going to find out about it under your amendment?

FUKUSHIMA: It convenes without call on the forty-fifth day, Mr. Chairman, if the bill is returned. If the bill is not returned, then it becomes law.

HEEN: May I continue with some amendments? At the end of that clause, the last word being "governor," delete all of the next sentence. The provisions in other parts of the article will take care of the required two-thirds vote to over-ride the governor's veto.

CHAIRMAN: You think that's surplus?

HEEN: That's surplus.

CHAIRMAN: Do you accept that, Delegate Fukushima?

FUKUSHIMA: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Any further amendments?

TAVARES: I'm in doubt about just what portion the delegate wishes to delete.

CHAIRMAN: That sentence: "A bill reconsidered at such special session, if approved upon reconsideration by two-thirds of all the members of each house, shall become a law." In other words, you go back to the original veto provision.

TAVARES: Which would control then and allow just the one reading?

CHAIRMAN: That's right.

ASHFORD: May I ask a question of the proponent? "No salary shall be payable when the legislature is convened for this purpose." That means I assume, no salaries shall be paid the legislators.

FUKUSHIMA: That is correct.

C. RICE: Does the proponent of this amendment think they should be paid mileage when they come from the other islands?

CHAIRMAN: I assume the statute would take care of that.

C. RICE: I just wanted to say that in a 25 Senate, nine members have to stay away, and they can't over-ride the governor's veto. It takes two-thirds.

CHAIRMAN: The statute would take care of the mileage problem.

PORTEUS: Who pays the employees? What does the legislature do, convene, and then what does it do, spend its money?

FUKUSHIMA: This provision, the last sentence, merely prohibits the legislators from getting any salary.

CHAIRMAN: In other words that could be changed by the Style Committee to make that clear, if there is any ambiguity.

PORTEUS: I'm not attacking the amendment. What I have in mind is some previous action taken this afternoon where we budget the amount of money and the employees, whom I would like to put in a good word for, spend a great deal of time working very hard. In perhaps the last two weeks of the legislature, there are no people in the territory who get as little rest and sleep as do the key employees of the legislature. The legislature has budgeted that sum, it is certainly not going to hold out a reserve for this additional session. As a matter of fact, right now --

KELLERMAN: I can answer that very question.

PORTEUS: May I continue my remarks. As a matter of fact, right now our clerks are working 'til after mid-night every night. The expenses of this session were referred to as a good indication of what could be done in the legislature. I'd like to point out that we are very fortunate in having a chief clerk and assistant-chief clerk who are willing to work for the money they are getting now for as many hours as they are working. I've been down here from 11 and 11:30 at night and checked with them and been told --

CHAIRMAN: Are you speaking for or against the amendment?

PORTEUS: I am speaking as to a defect.

CHAIRMAN: We have already debated the question of the costs of a legislative day.

PORTEUS: I see, then what do you suggest that I do, Mr. Chairman, when I feel there is a defect with respect to this insofar as employees are concerned?

CHAIRMAN: I would suggest an amendment.

HEEN: I don't think you need any amendment because the provision about paying compensation for the officers and employees applies. It applies for each house, "shall not exceed the sum of $1000 per calendar day during any general session nor the sum of $500 per calendar day during any budget or any special session." So you have $500 for that purpose.

PORTEUS: Is this to be a special session which would otherwise compensate the members at $750 if this other provision were not inserted? Is that your idea, Mr. Chairman?

HEEN: There shall be no compensation, as I understand it, for the members of the legislature.

PORTEUS: But it does rate as a special session?

CHAIRMAN: As the Chair understands it, this would be counted a legislative day for which they could expend funds for employees.

PORTEUS: This would be a special session.

CHAIRMAN: A legislative day, that is correct, but there would be no compensation to the legislators for that particular occasion.

ASHFORD: By implication at least, does not this amendment restrict the legislature in that special session to reconsideration of the bill sent back? Can they pass an appropriation bill to pay their employees?

WIRTZ: Wouldn't the proper construction be that this is an extension of whatever session it was that the bill that was vetoed by the governor, and if it happened to be at a special session that same allowance would continue on $500; if it happened to be in a regular session, $1,000 a day would continue on.

HEEN: It is not an extension of the regular or the general session or any other session. It would be a special session and the provision that was agreed to this afternoon would cover the compensation of employees or other officers of the legislature.

WIRTZ: Then may I ask the chairman of the Legislative Committee the reason why in his amendment he struck the words "a special session."

HEEN: No, the words "special session" are still there.

WIRTZ: The way I read it, your amendment was "house of origin" - - you struck "house of origin," you struck "a special session" - -

CHAIRMAN: No. The amendment reads as follows: "Return it with his objections to the legislature which shall convene on that day, in special session without call."

FUKUSHIMA: It doesn't matter what we call it—special session. We all know what this is for, the primary purpose is merely to reconsider bills that have been turned over to the governor after the legislature had adjourned sine die. If you want to call it a supplementary session, we can do so, or a supplemental session. I think that it's a matter of style. I said "special session" for the lack of a better word.

HEEN: I think the term "special session" is correct and it would carry with it the payment of compensation of employees and other officers serving the two houses.

Now, if that is a closed issue I would move an amendment, that the word "legislature" be deleted and the word "legislators" be substituted for that word. "No salaries shall be payable to the legislators when the legislature is convened for this purpose." In other words, after the word "payable" insert the words "to the legislators," that's all.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would suggest, "No salaries shall be paid to members of the legislature convened for this purpose." Does that meet with your suggestion?

HEEN: "No salaries shall be paid to the members of the legislature - -"

CHAIRMAN: That's what the Chair said.

HEEN: " - - when - - "

CHAIRMAN: "Convened for this purpose."

HEEN: " - - convened for this purpose." That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: Did Delegate Fukushima hear that proposed amendment to his amendment, suggested amendment? It was to obviate the question raised by Delegate Porteus. "No salaries shall be payable when the legislature," and the suggestion was, "No salaries shall be paid to members of the legislature when convened for this purpose." Is that acceptable?

FUKUSHIMA: That is acceptable, but I see no difference from the second sentence of that paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: Well, Delegate Porteus thought that might preclude the payment of the employees. "No salary shall be paid when the legislature is convened for this purpose."

FUKUSHIMA: Very well, I'll accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: That will put his mind at rest.

HAYES: This is an important amendment and I feel that we should have a recess so that it would give them a chance to go over the amendments that have been entertained. So I therefore move for a very short recess.

WHITE: Before you put that, could I ask the chairman of the Legislative Committee a question. Whether, if his interpretation is right that this would be considered a special session, wouldn't it be necessary then to go back and make an exception where we fix a compensation, to provide that "except as otherwise provided in this Constitution"?

CHAIRMAN: That's right, that's the last sentence that we're discussing, Delegate White. "No salary shall be paid - -"

WHITE: Well, I think you'd have to go back and make an exception to Section 11 then because if it is a special session it provides that the legislator shall receive $750 for a special session.

CHAIRMAN: Would you be satisfied if the Style Committee would solve that apparent difficulty?

WHITE: Well, I raise the question because I'm inclined to agree with the chairman of the Legislative Committee that this is a special session, and if it is, then I think that in order to be consistent that there should be an exception made in Section 11.

HEEN: Section 11 is general in terms, and this is a special provision which would control as a matter of construction.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will put the question. The question is on - -

ASHFORD: May I ask either the proponent or the chairman of the Legislative Committee whether it is not true that under this amendment that is now proposed, that legislature in special session could not appropriate the necessary moneys for the staff which would be obliged to work for them if they were to get their work done?

HEEN: I think that's absolutely correct.

TAVARES: For all these 50 years, the legislature hasn't had any trouble appropriating money for a session, and then for two years for a hold-over committee. If they can appropriate money for two years for a hold-over committee—and

I am one of the people who have been for hold-over committees, I think they have done good—they can certainly appropriate money to carry over 45 days to a special session.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will put the question, question is on the amendment.

SHIMAMURA: On the last sentence of the first paragraph it reads, "if such a bill is amended and reenacted." I wonder, for clarity's sake, although this is a minor matter, if it would be better to say "enacted" instead of "reenacted," because if a bill is amended it would not be reenacted, but enacted for the first time.

CHAIRMAN: What is the appropriate language?

FUKUSHIMA: This word has been taken from the New Jersey Constitution. If the Style Committee sees fit to use the word "enacted," it's perfectly all right.

CHAIRMAN: It's all right with you. The Chair will put the question.

HEEN: I think that word "reenacted" might be changed to "passed," "if such a bill is amended and passed."

CHAIRMAN: It's a matter of style, I think, Delegate Heen.

ROBERTS: As I read this article, and I have some sympathy for it, there seems to be a requirement in the article that on the forty-fifth day after the session has ended, the legislature reconvene on its own if the governor hasn't signed all of the bills. Now you've got to make some provision in there for the governor to inform the members of the legislature to bring them in session. This thing would automatically require that they come back at 45 days after they end the session. Now you've got to make some provision for letting the legislators know whether he plans to veto, whether he plans to put those into effect, or if he plans to return some of them.

CHAIRMAN: That is the question that the Chair propounded to Delegate Fukushima three times.

WIRTZ: I renew the motion to recess to ponder that question.

CHAIRMAN: Take a five-minute recess.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegates please take their seats.

H. RICE: Is the Fukushima amendment still before the body?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will recognize either Delegate Fukushima or Delegate Roberts. I believe they have amendments.

ROBERTS: The following language I think will meet the question which we raised before the short recess. After the word "governor," line 16 in the paragraph, it reads: "For the sole purpose of acting upon bills returned by the governor." Change the period there to a comma and add the following language, "unless he shall have failed to give notice hereinafter provided" or "mentioned."

CHAIRMAN: A little bit slower, please. Can we have that again?

ROBERTS: "Unless he shall have failed to give notice hereinafter mentioned," or "hereinafter provided." Then add the following sentence after that. "The governor by proclamation shall give five days' notice to the members of the legislature if he plans to return any bills with his objections on the forty-fifth day."

CHAIRMAN: Are you finished, Delegate Roberts? Is that your amendment?

ROBERTS: That's correct.

TAVARES: I'll second the amendment.

SAKAKIHARA: I would like to have the movant reread his amendment so that we will understand the purport of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: "The governor by proclamation shall give five days' notice to the members of the legislature if he plans to return any bills with his objections on the forty-fifth day."

H. RICE: Yesterday I thought that I would support Delegate Fukushima's amendment but in thinking it over, we're not going to give as much power to an elected governor as we are giving now to an appointed governor and lots of times—it will work both ways—lots of times a bill just gets a fair majority in both houses. It isn't carefully considered and I think that a governor should in lots of instances pocket veto it if he doesn't think it's right. Don't forget the governor, if he is in politics, he'll have to run again, and if he has vetoed some item for say Wahiawa High School, why he is going to run in that district and he will have to get the votes in that district. So I think we are trying to do a lot of funny business and the present law, they should stand as it's written.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would suggest that a simplification of this could be had by just giving a legislative grant of power to legislate in the field of a pocket veto without this long amendment. However, the Chair will put the question.

HEEN: Before that sentence that was recited by the chairman, there was another clause added after the word "governor" in the sixteenth line.

CHAIRMAN: After the word "governor," the line beginning with "shall return it with his objections" has been changed to read, "shall return it with his objections to the legislature which shall convene on that day, in special session without call, for the sole purpose of acting pursuant to this paragraph upon bills returned by the governor, unless he shall have failed to give - - " This is the insert.

HEEN: The words "pursuant to this paragraph" were deleted in a previous amendment that was made by me and accepted by the proponent of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would appreciate it then if you would restate that amendment, Delegate Heen. The Chair's got it wrong apparently.

HEEN: Starting with the word "shall," "shall return it with his objections to the legislature which shall convene on that day, in special session without call, for the sole purpose of acting upon bills returned by the governor."

CHAIRMAN: Then was there not an insert, "unless he shall have failed to give the notice hereinafter provided"?

FUKUSHIMA: I'll accept all amendments so that we will vote upon only one amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Does the body understand the amendment now?

KING: Following the language read by Delegate Heen, Mr. Chairman, would come the amendment offered by Delegate Roberts which has been accepted, and there was a sentence deleted. "A bill reconsidered by such legislature" and so forth was deleted by Delegate Heen and accepted by Delegate Fukushima.

CHAIRMAN: That's the way the Chair has it. I'll read it again. Beginning with that line in the original print, "shall return it with his objections to the legislature which shall convene on that day, in special session without call"; the rest of the sentence goes down to the word "acting," and the words "pursuant of this paragraph" are deleted.

Are you ready for the question? The Chair will then put the question. All those in favor of the amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The Chair will call for a rising vote. All those in favor. Contrary. Amendment carried.

KING: This amendment replaced the second paragraph of the original Section 18. I now move for the adoption of Section 18 as amended.

TAVARES: I second the motion. In so doing I should like to have it understood the committee report will state what was said here in explanation of that second paragraph as amended, that it does not take three readings in this special type of special session to reconsider a bill and pass it over the veto by a two-thirds vote or to amend it and send it back to the governor, that it only requires one reading in each house.

CHAIRMAN: There is a motion before the house that Section 18 as amended be now adopted. Is there a second? Delegate Tavares seconded the motion. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it. Section as amended is adopted.

HEEN: There was some discussion in considering Section 18, as amended, as to the payment of expenses of this particular special session. In order to take care of that situation, I will now move that this committee reconsider its action taken in connection with the second paragraph of Section 12 of the same article.

J. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of reconsideration of Section 12 signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: I take it that the delegates have before them the second paragraph of Section 12 of Committee Proposal No. 29.

CHAIRMAN: Beginning with "At a budget session"?

HEEN: That's right. In line seven of that paragraph, delete the period after the word "session" and insert after the word "session" the following words: "and the special session to be convened thereafter in accordance with the provisions of Section 18 of this article."

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? All those in favor of the amendment will signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: I now move that that paragraph be adopted as amended.

SERIZAWA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and seconded that the paragraph just amended of Section 12 be adopted as amended. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Adopted.

KELLERMAN: Is there anything before the house?

CHAIRMAN: Section 20 is the next item of business.

CROSSLEY: Point of information. I believe we have amended a part of Section 12 and therefore it would be in order now to adopt the entire section.

CHAIRMAN: You're quite right, Mr. Crossley. Do you so move?

CROSSLEY: I so move.

C. RICE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the entire Section 12 as amended now be adopted. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

KING: Section 20 was adopted.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct.

KING: Section 21 is now before the Convention. Delegate Sakakihara had a proposed amendment to Section 21.

SAKAKIHARA: Section 21? Delegate Okino's amendment, I believe.

CHAIRMAN: Section 21 is before the house. It has been moved and seconded that it be adopted. Delegate Okino has a motion which he may offer at that time.

OKINO: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I believe all you delegates have - -

CHAIRMAN: Do you offer the amendment?

OKINO: I do offer an amendment. Amend Section 21 of Committee Proposal No. 29 to read as follows:

> Section 21. Removal of officers. The governor, other elective executive officers, and any appointive officers for whose removal the consent of the Senate is required, may be removed from office on impeachment for such causes, as may be provided by law, and upon conviction of the charges against such officers.
>
> The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment.
> Judgments in cases of removal from office shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit under the state; but the person convicted may nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment according to law.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

SILVA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: State the amendment, Delegate Okino.

OKINO: You will note from the amendment which I have offered that the first correction made to paragraph one of the committee proposal is the insertion of the words, "any appointive officers for whose removal the consent of the Senate is required." I believe all of you know, many of you did fear that the governor of the State of Hawaii was being built up to be a superman because he was given too much power. You will also note that when Delegate Tavares made an amendment to the executive article, Proposal No. 22, the governor was to be given further power to make removal of his appointees. There is no provision in the Constitution with reference to popular recall of any officers of the State. The only way of removing officers is by impeachment, with the exception of that special provision contained in the judiciary article. It was for that reason that I have not included justices of the supreme court and circuit court judges in this proposed amendment.

By this amendment you will note that the legislature is being given the power to remove not only the governor and other elective executive officers but other officers appointed by the governor himself. It is limited to those appointees whose removal can be done only with the consent of the Senate, but if the governor does not exercise this power to remove his appointee, no matter how bad and inefficient he may be, because of the reason that this particular appointee may be his very good bosom friend or perhaps this particular appointee may have a toe-hold or something on the governor, the governor certainly will not remove this particular appointee, but by giving the legislature this power of impeachment there is that check and balance. The governor realizes that if he takes no action, he would be compelled to do so by the legislature. By that I mean, if the governor should realize that the legislature also has the power to impeach any of the appointees made by him, the governor would be in the position to exercise and carry out his duties more efficiently. That should be done, in my opinion, by impeachment.

The next change I have made in paragraph one of the committee proposal concerns the grounds and causes of impeachment. You will note in paragraph one of the committee proposal that there is a specific enumeration of causes for the impeachment of the governor and elective executive officers. The grounds given are as follows: treason, bribery or other high crimes or misdemeanors. You will recall when the judiciary article was submitted before the Committee of the Whole for consideration, a similar enumeration was provided. The same was amended so that Section 4 of the judicial proposal reads as follows: "That the removal from office may be done upon the concurrence of two-thirds of the membership of each house of the legislature, sitting in joint session, for such causes and in such manner as may be provided by law." I feel that it would be better to follow the wording of the section contained in the judiciary article. If we do not do so, there seems to be a discrimination between the judges and other elective or appointive officers of the State of Hawaii. With reference to what may constitute sufficient causes, the same is to be left with the legislature, as qualified by my amendment, "as may be provided by law."

The next amendment -- the next change proposed by me in this amendment is the deletion of paragraph two of Section 1 of the committee proposal. You will note that paragraph two of the committee proposal is a reproduction of the Constitution of the United States. I believe it is realized by many students of political science that an impeachment proceeding is a very cumbersome procedure, and I believe it was for that reason that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee made the change regarding removal of justices from courts. Likewise, I feel that the power may be duly delegated to the legislature to enact proper legislation to expedite any removal proceeding by impeachment. The amendment offered is simply, "The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment." I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this will expedite impeachment proceedings, it will be invoking the principle of check and balance, so that there is less fear about too much power being vested in the governor, and I think all in all it will result in good administration of government.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, the Chair would like to ask you a question. One of the vices of the Federal constitutional provision relating to impeachment is that you can't impeach an officer after he is gone out of office. On your proposed amendment, could impeachment proceedings be had after the officer's term had expired? I notice in some constitutions that is placed in order to get at the disqualification from the further holding of office. Did you consider that problem?

OKINO: No, I have not considered that problem, but from the wording contained herein, I believe that cannot be done unless the legislature perhaps may enact such specific provision.

CHAIRMAN: Well, that was my question.

OKINO: In providing for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment.

CHAIRMAN: Couldn't that be fixed, "after the term of office had expired in accordance with law."

OKINO: I'm willing to accept your amendment.

CHAIRMAN: I'm just asking you what the language means.

OKINO: With reference to paragraph two? Is that with reference to paragraph two?

CHAIRMAN: That's right.

OKINO: I am inclined to the view that the language is broad enough so that it could be done.

CHAIRMAN: Any further debate on this?

KING: I have no opposition to the amendment. It does permit the impeachment of appointive officers whose appointments in the first instance have to be confirmed by the Senate and whose removal has to be approved by the Senate. But this amendment abolishes the rather standard practice of having the House of Representatives, which shall have the sole power of impeachment, the Senate shall preside as the court, and requiring the chief justice to preside in case the governor is impeached, and requiring a two-thirds vote. "No person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present." It seems to me the impeachment of the governor or the lieutenant governor should have those requirements. As to elective officers, I mean appointive officers, I'm not certain.

This substitutes for all of that language that was in the original committee proposal and which follows the usual form of the law governing the impeachment. One brief paragraph says, "The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment." Now that would leave it to the legislature to enact a statute that would govern, and the statute may or may not require a two-thirds vote for the removal of the governor or lieutenant governor.

CHAIRMAN: You are quite right, Mr. President.

KING: I feel that that language should be amplified a little bit and then I would be in favor of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, you stated that this was a counterpart of the judiciary article. Was there not a requirement of a two-thirds vote in the judiciary article?

OKINO: I felt that the legislature could include that particular provision.

CHAIRMAN: I'm asking you what was in the judiciary article.

OKINO: Yes, I've read that.

TAVARES: I don't know whether that motion was seconded for purposes of making it regular; if it wasn't, I second it.

CHAIRMAN: It was seconded.

TAVARES: But I do think that -- well, I had told the delegate I was in favor of this amendment. I believe Delegate

King has brought up a point which was overlooked, and I move to defer until the end of the consideration of this article and we'll try to work out a further amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to state we want to conclude this article very shortly, so I would suggest, Delegate Okino, that you get your amendment in shape.

ASHFORD: I second it.

WIRTZ: I move for a recess then, Mr. Chairman.

ST. SURE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a motion for deferment?

KING: Mr. Chairman, I'm going to suggest that the chairman is unduly optimistic if he believes that we are going to complete Section 22 very shortly.

A. TRASK: Shouldn't we have an expression from the chairman of the committee before we recess?

CHAIRMAN: Was there a motion for recess? I suggest that we go on to the next article instead of a recess, wouldn't that be more expeditious?

CASTRO: Kokua.

DELEGATE: Next section, you mean. Next section.

CHAIRMAN: Next section. The Chair will entertain a motion to defer this section until the conclusion of this article.

MAU: I so move.

FONG: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's carried.

MAU: I wonder if I could ask the sponsor of the amendment to consider the fact that there's only one other elective officer that I can recall, the lieutenant governor. See if he can work out the wording there.

TAVARES: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: We're now on the legislative council. Delegate Tavares.

TAVARES: Oh I'm sorry, I thought a question was asked about the one we just deferred. I just wanted to say that - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate was out of order on that, Delegate Tavares.

Section 22, is there a motion it be adopted?

KELLERMAN: Before we go into Section 22, which I think will take quite some debate, so I understand, may I propose an amendment? It has no number; it would have to be fitted in by Style, wherever it should come. The amendment is on the desks. I'll read it and help you to identify it.

> SECTION _____. Committees. Fifteen days after a bill has been referred to a committee, one-third of the members of the house which has made the referral shall have power to relieve the committee of further consideration of the bill and place it on the calendar for consideration.

WIRTZ: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Delegates have this amendment on their desks?

KELLERMAN: This was passed around just a few minutes ago.

GILLILAND: A question in my mind is whether "the members of the house" refer to the bill to the committee, or the speaker of the House, or the president of the Senate.

KELLERMAN: I think that's a technical point. By this is meant the body, that part of the legislature—I don't know, I think that's clear—rather than the particular clerk or office of the body.

This is known as the anti-iceboxing proposal. May I state first that this was introduced not with one-third but at a much lower percentage in the Legislative Committee of which I was a member. In that committee there was a vote taken eight to five to recommend to the Rules Committee of the legislature that it give serious consideration of this measure. I was told immediately after the meeting of the committee by three members of the committee who had voted to refer it to the legislature that they would favor this proposal on the floor with the increase from one-fifth as it had been introduced in the Legislative Committee to one-third. I therefore feel I am justified in saying that I'm bringing it to the floor with the approval of a majority of the Legislative Committee. However, it is not so listed in the committee report. I give that history of the proceedings to justify my statement.

I think the Committee on Initiative, Referendum and Recall will bear me out in my statement that one of the grounds on which that committee or the majority of that committee voted against recommending to this Convention provisions for initiative, referendum and recall was the ground of improving legislative process, of making it more, I shall say more representative, make it perform in a more representative nature to those who elected them and put them in office. It seems to me that it is a violation of the whole theory of democratic representative government that a committee, by virtue of its chairman, or even with a full consent of the majority of a committee, which I presume would be a minority of the house from which it was appointed, shall be able to keep from consideration of the majority of that body any controversial measure which it sees fit to keep from consideration. I think it only just and right that the members of the public who are by our own act of turning down initiative, referendum and recall, and on that I am in full agreement with this Convention, denying them the right to bring up a bill of their own accord and force its consideration by the public or the legislature, we should at least provide that by a vote of one-third of the members of the house of referral, any bill can be withdrawn from committee, therefore from any iceboxing by that committee, and at least present it to the floor for full consideration and debate.

Under our present rules, it takes a majority vote to bring any bill from committee. It's highly improbable that a majority vote could be so obtained unless there was a majority in favor of the bill which needs passage. I fully recognize that a one-third does not mean that you bring up a bill that would necessarily be passed. That is not the point. The point is to get it considered, ample discussion and debate, so that the public who have elected those representatives will know how they stand on controversial issues on which the public certainly has a right to be advised.

Any man now can go to any member of the public who has elected him and say, "I would have voted," as he knows that individual would have wanted him to vote, "but the bill never got out of committee." He can go to the next one on the next block and say the opposite. We have no knowledge of how our representatives vote in committee, and if it is kept in committee we have no knowledge on how they would stand on any issue which can be of a great deal of importance to the community.

I therefore propose that with one-third the figure is reasonable and adequate and justified. With a vote of one-third that eliminates the possible vote-trading of a smaller group than one-third who might agree to help each other get certain bills out for consideration. I think it's high enough to eliminate the abuse of it; I think it's low enough to bring before the body measures of real importance. I may add - -

CHAIRMAN: Is this included in any other constitution?

KELLERMAN: It is. I have here the constitution—just a moment, I'll report it to you—it's on page 51 of our compilation of constitutional provisions. The State of Kentucky, incidentally, allows any bill to be withdrawn by one member of the legislature, which I do think it would be definitely harmful. I don't propose that as you see. Missouri's Constitution has one-third, exactly the proposal which I have introduced. Their new Constitution adopted in 1945 provides for one-third vote. I think the provision adopted in the Model Constitution provides for a vote of one-fifth, and it was on the basis of the Model Constitution that the original proposal was introduced and referred to the Legislative Committee. However, I have agreed to, and see a great deal of reason to raising that to one-third which is the basis of the present amendment and that is in conformity with the new Missouri Constitution provision.

It is recognized, of course, that the rules can provide for such provisions for taking bills out of committee, but it is just like other things that the legislature has not seen fit to adopt and they find it difficult to bring themselves to the point of publicizing their votes on controversial questions by deliberately putting themselves in this position. I feel that it may be necessary to put this into our Constitution to assure for better representative government, that no bill can be iceboxed if one-third of the members of that house consider it of sufficient importance to bring it on the floor.

PORTEUS: On the theory that when certain matters are debated on the floor of the Convention with respect to the legislature, that I can't be wrong all the time, I now take the liberty of debating this particular matter. With respect to this proposal, the legislature can control the thing entirely by its rules. We are getting really into legislative procedure. I have on my desk the bills that were introduced in the House; there are over 1200 of them. Can you imagine what would happen in a 60 day session if you are trying to carry a program along, get bills worked over in the committee, have the committees hold hearings on them, notify the public about the time of the hearing, and then within 15 days of when the bill was introduced find that the matter had been forced on the floor? That's not the way to get the best legislation, in my opinion.

It seems to me that anyone who wants to know the status of a bill of a particular committee can go to the committee and find out from the members and from the chairman what consideration is going to be given. The legislature has always been willing to have the clerks notify those people that are interested in the bills when there will be a hearing on a particular bill, in order that those who are interested may be present.

It is true that things don't go always the way we plan them. As with meetings in this Convention, it sometimes happens that when we say that the committee will meet at a certain time the Convention will stay in session and you couldn't meet at that time. And so it's true with the legislature, too, that when you schedule a committee meeting it sometimes happens that the public is inconvenienced by coming to what it considered to be a hearing and find that the committee is unable to sit at that time because members are tied up in other committee meetings, or because - -

KELLERMAN: Point of order. This has nothing to do with the hearing. I don't think the speaker is speaking to the proposed amendment.

PORTEUS: May I point out to the delegate from the fourth district that when I discussed - -

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute, I'll have to rule on the point of order. What is your point of order, Delegate Kellerman? The Chair was not paying too strict attention.

KELLERMAN: I think the speaker was referring to getting a notice of hearings from the secretary of the committee and attending hearings on the bills. This amendment has nothing to do with the hearing. I did not think that he was speaking to the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: It does appear to the Chair that it has to do with the power of coercing bills out of the committee and I think that's what he is getting around to. Will you proceed, Delegate Porteus?

PORTEUS: Thank you. The point that I wish to make is that the public, while it is sometimes inconvenienced as to the time the committees meet, we try to give - - or the legislature tries to give them notice and you aren't always able to reach a bill within the limited period of time. In the first 30 days of the legislature there is a good deal of committee work. I think the members will tell you, as will those who have followed legislative sessions, that during that time there is a tremendous influx of bills. The problem of just trying to find out what's been introduced to the legislature is really tremendous. If you try to keep track of what's there, what bills are similar to others, to give the chairman of the committee a time to start groupings, to start laying out a program, 15 days, I think, would upset the orderly workings of the legislature. I think a longer time perhaps would be better.

Even if you have a longer time, however, I do think for a question of getting a matter through when you are so very busy, that perhaps it would be a little better to leave it to the rules of the house. At the moment, those rules require a majority vote. The person who's interested in getting it, he asks the other members if they are interested in seeing the matter come to the floor of the house. They sign a resolution, and it is not unknown for that to happen, it's happened several times as the various members that are here - - delegates that have been in the legislature can testify to.

Once the measure has been brought out, however, if it's brought out too soon, before the committee has been able to have adequate hearings on it, before they have been able to consider the amendment and work it over, I think that it would interfere, as I say, with the orderly operations of the legislative body. I feel writing this into the Constitution is not the place to tackle it.

If the public is anxious to find out where the people stand in these matters, I don't think it's very difficult to find out. I think that all legislators are delighted to find that there are people interested enough to come to them and to discuss measures with them and to find out what their position is. Not to read whether they said "yes" or "no" to a slogan or just to a bill but to have their attitude fairly, extensively explained. I've always been delighted to have groups invite me to appear before them or appear before groups to explain the matter in detail because many things which on the surface sound quite desirable, when you go into them you find that it doesn't work out very well as a law. There are certain disadvantages. There are other matters, there's an overlap, and consequently these matters involve a great deal of study, study that not only involves one committee but the work of other committees as well.

The work of the legislature is handled a great deal in committee rather than on the floor. There's where most of the work is done on the bills and preparing them and having the amendments made, so that they are in as good shape as possible when they hit the floor for consideration.

And I think that we would do well not to put this in the Constitution if this Convention feels as it does in certain other matters that the matter should be directed to the attention of the legislature. The legislature certainly is -- can always find room for improvement, and I'm sure that they'd be very happy to listen to a respected body of opinion. As I say, I've been wrong on the vote on several of these legislative matters, and as they say, even a blind pig will find an acorn once in a while. So on that theory, I hope I've found an acorn on this one.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Porteus, are you against the entire amendment or specifically the 15 day limitation?

PORTEUS: I'm against --

CHAIRMAN: The entire amendment, are you not?

PORTEUS: I'm against the amendment. I am not against the original discussion in the committee where it was proposed that the matter be referred to the legislature for its attention and for consideration, Mr. Chairman.

FONG: In this Convention here we've been sitting for over 60 days, we have had 195 proposals. I've asked the Clerk a little while ago how many proposals were introduced in this Convention, and she has just notified me that 195 proposals were introduced in this Convention. You will note in the 1949 Legislature there were 2,384 bills introduced in the legislature. Now, you can see how the Committee of the Whole works. Many of you are now sitting in the Committee of the Whole and you can see how Committee of the Whole works. Now if every one of the 195 proposals were brought before the Convention, I venture you will not go home for the next two or three months.

Now, what Delegate Kellerman is trying to do here is to force the legislature to discuss almost every bill in the Committee of the Whole. You will note that out of 2,384 bills introduced in both houses, and if we are to spend as much time on the bills as we have been spending on these proposals, you can imagine how long your legislature is going to sit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if you haven't got the vote, if you haven't got the majority of the vote, it's no use talking. You may have one-third of the votes of the assembly to bring the bill out of committee for consideration. Now if the majority says O.K. you can bring it out, we'll send it back to the committee again, you have done the useless act and as we attorneys know, equity courts will not force you to do a useless act, and I think this amendment is trying to force the legislature to do a useless act. If you haven't got 15 votes there is no use talking.

All the bills that are introduced and are filed by the committee are brought before the house by committee reports. All the bills are reported back to the House or to the Senate. So there you have some semblance of what the committee has done. I feel that this is a useless amendment, it serves no purpose. If you haven't got 15 votes when you bring the bill out and discuss it on the floor, you'll wind up in the same old committee again. The majority can send the bill back to committee and you haven't got the discussion that you had planned. Now, the legislature certainly will be in an uproar if you had a Committee of the Whole almost every day to discuss 2300 bills.

WIRTZ: I'd like to speak in favor of this amendment. First, I, like the Chair, was somewhat puzzled by the delegate from the fourth district's argument. I thought what was bothering him was the 15 days. However, in answer to the request of the Chair, he indicated that that was not the whole problem. However, since there might be some doubts by the arguments used by him in the minds of the delegates, the 15 days in the first place was hit upon as being half way through a budget or special session. I would like to point this out too that there is nothing mandatory about the 15 days. It just says after 15 days one-third of the membership shall have the power. But I am sure that if a committee is diligently working on a bill they won't try to force that bill out within that time.

Now this other thing about the futile act, about having the majority, quite true, but sometimes how does the legislature know the merits or demerits of a bill unless it is brought out and thrashed out on the floor. This amendment is nothing more than to put democracy to work.

CHAIRMAN: I think Delegate Sakakihara had risen for recognition.

SAKAKIHARA: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I wish to speak against the amendment. I was one of those members of the committee who voted down this amendment before the committee. I do feel this way, Mr. Chairman. When in a 51 member House any 17 member block can bargain and bring before the floor of the House all bills which have been pending before a committee, I feel very strongly in the face of the amendment proposed by the same movant of this amendment to curtail expenses of the legislature limiting the expenses of the legislature to $1,000 a day, what size of a journal would we be required to print?

It's going to be an expensive proposition in the first place and it will not serve the best interest of the public because, as you know, when a bill is brought before the house, it is going to entail considerable debate and argument on the floor, and consequently after the argument is held on the bill, the majority of the committee will again recommit the bill back to the same committee where the bill has been pending.

I regret very much that the movant has not had experience in the legislature. Some of us who have been there for many years do realize and appreciate this obligation, and it is not going to benefit the public at all, and I am against this amendment.

J. TRASK: As the junior member of the House of Representatives, and also a member of the minority group in the House, I can fully appreciate the amendment introduced by Delegate Kellerman. As it was pointed out by Delegate Wirtz, how are we going to weigh whether a bill is worthwhile or not unless we bring it out. Delegate Nielsen can bear me out that we have gone through some trying days in the legislature. So I urge, gentlemen and ladies, that deep consideration be given this amendment by Delegate Kellerman.

MAU: I think I can remind the delegate who last spoke that whenever he is in a minority he always goes through trying times. But I believe that this amendment is a very good amendment. If the history of our legislative sessions had been different, I believe that no such amendment would have been offered, but there have been times when meritorious bills have been iceboxed and there is no reason why the representatives of the people as members of this legislature should be unwilling to discuss such bills on the floor of either the Senate or the House. If the minority can bring it out to the floor, it will give them an opportunity to express their views, and it seems to me that the people ought to know how the members of the legislature feel and stand on certain measures. I don't believe in any type of hidden form of government, I believe that everything should be out in the open, and I think that this amendment will provide for what Delegate Wirtz designated "putting democracy to work," and I believe that this amendment will help do it, and that is why I am in favor of it.

SMITH: I am speaking opposing this amendment, primarily for the fact that before a bill can be iceboxed in a house it will take the majority, and there's going to have to be a big majority from now on. Another thing is that if the amendment was more in the line where a bill having passed one house and then referred to another one, why then I can see that it has been considered by one and is very worthy of being considered by the other. I don't feel, as I know many a time, maybe one individual will put in a hundred bills which will be absolutely worthless, but they are using it for their propaganda purposes of going back to their citizenry and saying, "Look what I tried to put in but they wouldn't let me." Some of them, like right here in this Convention, have put in amendments in many instances knowing full well they wouldn't pass, but it would sound good to the public. I am in strong favor of the idea, but after it has passed one house then referred to the other house. I believe that say 40 per cent or round about of that other house, having a chance of bringing it out of the icebox and placing it on the calendar for consideration.

A. TRASK: I am partial to lady Delegate Kellerman and I am more partial to this amendment of hers. In Hawaii we call freezing legislation iceboxing a bill. I think where the lady comes from in North Carolina they call it anti-freeze. In Hawaii I think we are all against anti-freeze.

To me, and I appeal directly to all the delegates elected here in a non-partisan election, and believing in the two party system, that it is vital for all of us that we insert this provision into the Constitution as an improvement of the legislative process that Delegate Porteus says there should be room for improvement. I say this is the contribution to that improvement. It is for the preservation of the two party system. Let's not forget that it is not without surprise that the two leaders, the speaker and the vice speaker of the House of Representatives, leaders of the dominant party, would say, "Let us do what we want with all of our men in charge of the committees," and they are the dominant members. Let's have a little democratic action; let us preserve the two party system; and let us have some faith in the legislators—which I am surprised with their remarks because sometimes it is difficult to follow the logic. Sometimes this argument is all right in one way, and when you consider another provision it is not all right in the other direction.

The remarks by Delegate Porteus and Fong are that the members of the legislature are going to cause a lot of bills to come out when they shouldn't come out and cause a lot of confusion, and the arithmetic is brought out that the number of bills here - - proposals is 195. Let us not forget the amendments that have come into consideration on the floor. I think that number would exceed perhaps 1000 because equal consideration has been given to these thoughts and contributions.

But I do say that if we are really interested in the practical operation and preservation of the two party system we should not overlook and vote and kokua this solid amendment.

HEEN: I have an amendment to offer.

CHAIRMAN: Is it printed?

HEEN: Not yet. In the second line after the word "committee," delete the comma and delete all of the rest of the words thereafter, and substitute for the words deleted the following: "In either house, the same may be recalled from such committee by the affirmative vote of one-third of the members to which such house is entitled." So that the entire section will read - - these are the substituted words: "In either house, the same may be recalled from such committee by the affirmative vote of one-third of the members to which such house is entitled." So that the entire section will read as follows:

> Fifteen days after a bill has been referred to a committee in either house, the same may be recalled from such committee by the affirmative vote of one-third of the members to which such house is entitled.

KELLERMAN: I will accept the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

A. TRASK: May I ask a question of the movant?

CHAIRMAN: The amendment has been accepted.

A. TRASK: Does one-third of the members mean one-third of the members of either house then voting on the measure?

HEEN: "One-third of the members to which each house is entitled." If the house is entitled to 25 members, then you have to have one-third of 25.

Now the purpose of this amendment is this. If a resolution or a motion is made in a house to have a bill recalled, then that will give the members of the committee the opportunity to state why they haven't been able to act upon that particular bill. They may be considering it, have some difficulty in having hearings, calling witnesses, and so on, and with that explanation I am sure that no one-third of the membership of each house will insist upon such a recall of the bill.

WIRTZ: As a seconder of the motion, I will likewise accept the amendment. I think it's a very fair one.

HAYES: As a member of the legislature I should like to say a few words of my experience in regards to some of the measures that I have introduced that I wanted to get on the floor of the House because it would not come out of the committee.

CHAIRMAN: Is this iceboxing experience?

HAYES: Yes, iceboxing experience. So I introduced a resolution with one-third majority and it came out of the committee and it passed the House of Representatives. Now any member can do that. If some of the members are saying to some of the people that, "You can't get a bill out of the committee; I'd vote for it if it would come out of the committee," well, that member had that same privilege to bring it out on the floor of the House with one-third membership to vote for it, and I did the same thing and it passed.

I also have had experience as chairman of the Education Committee when many bills have been introduced. Some I felt were not very good measures and sometimes we had many, many letters from the public saying, "Please icebox bill so and so." Now you have the opportunity there, if people believe that you are a good member of the legislature, and the chairman of that committee is strong enough to know, if it is a good bill it should be brought out on the floor of the House, and I have not iceboxed a bill that they told me to icebox, because I brought it out on the floor of the House.

MAU: Might I ask the chairman of this committee a question on procedure? After it is recalled, if the bill is recalled from the committee, how does it get on the calendar?

HEEN: It is on the calendar after it is recalled. Then the members of the house, of that house, can act in such manner that they may deem wise.

CHAIRMAN: And send it back to committee again, if they choose. Is that it?

HEEN: It might be sent back to the committee if it is explained that owing to difficulties in having hearings, it should have further time to reconsider.

MAU: If that is the case, I see a defect in the amendment -- to the amendment. The original amendment automatically places this bill that is recalled on the calendar for consideration. If a bill is recalled to the house, then if the members vote to recommit, there is nothing that the one-third can do unless automatically it goes on the calendar for consideration on the floor so that it can be discussed and debated.

CHAIRMAN: Same thing could be done under the Kellerman amendment, unless there is subsequent language inserted, "and it shall not thereafter be sent to committee until a vote is taken."

MAU: That's why I'm against the amendment as proposed. It has been accepted though, hasn't it? I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the Kellerman amendment does the job. After it has been recalled, it is placed on the calendar for consideration, not to be sent back to any other committee or to the same committee.

TAVARES: I am opposed to the suggestion of Delegate Mau, and I believe that as long as the bill is brought back to the floor and the members have a chance to decide whether they want to pass it now or send it back to committee, it has served its purpose. I don't think we should go further than that. I do realize that iceboxing is a very convenient method, and in 75 per cent at least of the cases, if not more, the bills deserved to be iceboxed. Most of them are a general nuisance or they are a drug on the market. There are just too many bills. But every once in a while there is a bill which ought to be brought up, and if it is important enough to attract the attention and support of one-third of the total membership of a house to be brought back on to the floor after 15 days in committee, I agree with Delegate Heen that I don't see too much harm in that. I realize it may be a nuisance but I think there are other deterring influences.

It is an insult to a committee to take a bill away from them, and every member knows that when he does that, unless he's got strong minority support on that committee, he's going to make an enemy maybe of that whole committee. So that he is not going to do that all the time without thinking about what it is going to do to him. There's an esprit de corps among members of committees. If it can happen to my committee it can happen to yours, and if one-third of the members try to take it away from my committee, the rest of the committees are likely to stand together unless there is an unreasonable refusal to work on the bill. And I agree with Delegate Heen that if a committee has not had opportunity sufficiently to examine the bill and needs more time, I believe they won't be able to get one-third under those circumstances because of these other deterring influences.

A. TRASK: Just one brief remark with respect to what was said by Delegate Tavares. I think it should be brought strictly and very, very solidly to our minds that it was just this type of abuse by Senator Butler, the United States Senator, that prevented us getting statehood in 1947, and we want to correct such abuses. There might be a time when we will have a Butler in Hawaii and we want to put him where he belongs.

MAU: I would like to offer an amendment to the amendment by adding at the end thereof, the following words, "and shall be placed on the calendar for consideration."

A. TRASK: Second that.

H. RICE: I am against this amendment. I will give you a practical example of how it works. I agree with Delegate Tavares in this matter. There's an esprit de corps amongst committees. In 1947 they were very anxious to get an aeronautics commission formed and I was on the Ways and Means Committee. There were members in the Senate that tried to get that bill withdrawn from the Ways and Means Committee—Senator Heen will remember, I'm sorry Senator Silva isn't here—but when the Senate attempted to withdraw that bill from the Ways and Means Committee, although I was in favor of the aeronautics commission, I voted to leave it in the committee. The governor immediately sent for me and said, "Harold, you've killed the aeronautics commission bill." I said, "No, I think I helped pass it, because the boys in the committee know how I feel and I can go down and talk to them and we can get the bill out, but not in that way." And they did put it out on the floor in a few days and we got the bill finally through. That is the practical way it will work out.

I realize sometimes -- I think we old legislators have learned a lot in this Convention on the minutes kept of each committee. I think we should pass that on to the legislature. I think if they kept minutes of their meetings in the legislative committees so that those could be printed if necessary, so that everybody would know that every bill is being considered and they'd know how they stand, I think things would be a little different. I don't think this way; I don't go along with them. I think sometimes an icebox is a good thing.

WIRTZ: I would just like to point out that I think my good colleague from Maui has proved the point by the action that was taken on the example given on the aeronautics commission bill. Sufficient attention was focused so that the committee got busy.

Now my other colleague from Maui has also pointed out to you that there's going to be a tremendous majority in this new legislature we create. As I argued the other day, with so many members it's going to be very difficult for them to keep track of all the bills and keep working after the committees.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will put the question. It is on the amendment of Delegate Mau which would add to the amendment of Delegate Kellerman as revised by Delegate Heen, the words "and shall be placed on the calendar." Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Chair is in doubt. Chair will call for a standing vote. All those in favor of Delegate Mau's amendment. Against. Amendment is lost.

Chair will now put the amendment. For convenience we might number that 23, so we will know what we are talking about, I suggest.

NIELSEN: Can I talk on the bill now? Well, during the '47 and '49 session, at both sessions I introduced a bill so that it would require that the committees show a record of the vote on iceboxing or passing out bills. It died both times. The reason is because legislators don't like to go on record as to how they vote in committee.

Now another thing that happened in the '49 session was that we had a horse racing bill and Maui wanted it. It didn't make a bit of difference to me, there won't be a race track in Kona for the next thousand years probably, but Maui really wanted it and they need it because they are going to go broke on their horse racing if they don't. Their county fair is in the dumps. So that bill was in the Judiciary Committee and I found that I had what I thought was a vote to pass it out on a four to three vote, and we had discussed it for I don't know how many days. One day I demanded that we take a vote on it, figuring to get it on the floor and then let the floor have a chance at it because it was going to let each county say through their board of supervisors whether they want horse racing in that county or not. What happened when we took the vote? Mr. Fong and Mr. Porteus voted on the bill although they were not members of the committee. Chairman Marcellino, he says, "Well, Nielsen, there goes your horse racing bill; it's in the icebox." Well, I blew up, and started to leave the room. Well, the first thing I grabbed when I did leave was the rule book, and they had changed it in the past 50 years and instead of the speaker and vice-speaker being ex officio members without vote, they had left out those two little words "without vote" and that's how the horse racing bill got killed. That meant - - and I took it up with Paschoal who had 32 years in the legislature, Doc Hill and the rest, and never had the vice-speaker and the speaker been able to walk into a committee and either kill or pass a bill out of committee.

CHAIRMAN: Well, you learned something, then.

NIELSEN: I learned something.

Now, I think this is a good bill and it doesn't mean that if we introduce 2000 bills that every bill is going to be brought out by a one-third vote to the floor. It only means very important bills will be brought out. On the basis of majority, like it is at present, it is ridiculous because if you can get a majority vote on the floor why, the bill is passed, you can bring it out anytime. But in this way you do get an expression, a record of how the legislators voted on the bills that are introduced. I'm for it.

FUKUSHIMA: I think the delegate that last spoke gave ample reason why this amendment should be defeated.

ROBERTS: I'd like to amend this section by substituting the word "twenty" for "fifteen."

CHAIRMAN: Is that accepted by the movant, Delegate Kellerman? Otherwise, the Chair will put the question on the amendment.

KELLERMAN: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the last movant a question. In view of a 30 day session, Mr. Roberts, a budget, a special session - -

CHAIRMAN: I suggest we get back into order, Delegate Kellerman. Do you make that as an amendment?

ROBERTS: I'll make it as an amendment, and I'd like to indicate - -

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

CASTRO: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: Question is on the amendment.

ROBERTS: May I speak to the amendment. I believe that adequate opportunity ought to be given to the committee to study. The 20 day period would provide approximately three weeks in which to give consideration to the bill. I assume most of the major bills will come in your regular session and not your budget session, which will be at least a 60 day session and I think this will provide adequate time for basic consideration.

CHAIRMAN: Question is on the amendment.

KELLERMAN: I will accept the amendment in view of the explanation. I think Mr. Roberts is right.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment has been accepted. The main question will now be put. This is on the proposed amendment on Section 23.

KELLERMAN: May I ask for a roll call on this?

CHAIRMAN: Clerk will please call the roll.

Ayes, 33. Noes, 24 (Apoliona, Ashford, Bryan, Cockett, Fong, Fukushima, Hayes, Holroyde, Kauhane, Kido, King, Noda, Okino, Porteus, C. Rice, H. Rice, Richards, Sakai, Sakakihara, Smith, St. Sure, White, Yamamoto, Yamauchi). Not voting, 6 (Doi, Mizuha, Ohrt, Phillips, Silva, Woolaway).

CHAIRMAN: Amendment is carried.

PORTEUS: For the sake of the record, I'd like to point out that I sure missed that acorn an awful long way on that one.

CHAIRMAN: It's a bad day for the Secretary.

WIRTZ: Mr. Chairman, if we take a recess, I'll buy him a bag of peanuts.

J. TRASK: I move that Section 23 be adopted as amended.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

FUKUSHIMA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It seems to the Chair that the section has been adopted, it is not an amendment to anything. Is that not correct, Delegate Trask?

J. TRASK: We haven't taken a vote on the section yet, Mr. Chairman.

PORTEUS: Mr. Chairman, as the Secretary, I'm sorry to inform the body that I've already lost on that. The motion was an amendment to the proposal itself and being carried, I think, that's it.

CHAIRMAN: That's the way it appeared to the Chair.

TAVARES: Mr. Chairman, I believe Section 10 was deferred.

CHAIRMAN: Chair will declare a five minute recess.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegates and the housewives please take their seats.

C. RICE: I believe the next section is 22, is that right?

CHAIRMAN: Thought we'd go to 21; there was a deferment of 21, Delegate Rice. I believe Delegate Okino has an amendment to 21. The Chair will recognize Delegate Okino. It has been moved and seconded that Section 21 be adopted. This has been deferred at the request of Delegate Okino to prepare an amendment.

OKINO: There have been several drafts circulated on the floor within the last 15 minutes. Apparently the judges here don't seem to agree. I'd like to refer the delegates' attention to the last draft. Now when I say the last draft, I suppose I will have to read a portion of it so that you all can intelligently follow. The first paragraph reads - -

CHAIRMAN: Is that the one dated July 7?

OKINO: I believe both are dated July 7.

CHAIRMAN: Both offered by yourself.

HEEN: One was 3:30 and the other 3:35 p.m.

OKINO: Will you refer to the draft of the single sentence which reads as follows: "The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment." Do you have that draft? Now if you do have the draft I would like to make a further amendment on that by adding, remove the period, insert a semi-colon or comma and add the following words, "subject to the provisions of this section."

DELEGATE: May I ask if the delegate is referring to the long or short draft.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is trying to identify two drafts of the same date offered by the same delegate, and the Chair is in doubt what he is talking about.

OKINO: I'm sorry, both drafts are just about the same length. I suppose the best thing to do is to read the whole thing.

CHAIRMAN: Will you read the one you want to offer?

OKINO: Yes, I shall do that.

SECTION 21. Removal of officers. All elective executive officers, and any appointive officers for whose removal the consent of the Senate is required, may be removed from office on impeachment for such causes as may be provided by law, and upon conviction of the charges against such officers.

The House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment and the Senate the sole power to try all impeachments of all elective executive officers. No such elective executive officers shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present.

The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment, subject to the provisions of this section.

The rest, the fourth paragraph is the same, in both drafts.

Judgments in cases of removal from office shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit under the state; but the person convicted may nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment according to law.

NODA: I second the motion.

KING: Delegate Okino changed his original amendment to comply with the suggestion I made, that the procedure for the impeachment of the chief executive and the lieutenant governor might follow the usual form of having the House of Representatives authorized to prefer the charges and the Senate to act as the judges, and to have the conviction require a concurrence of two-thirds of the members present at the trial. So he has inserted that paragraph in there and then followed on to harmonize with the original section.

FUKUSHIMA: I have an amendment to offer. The first paragraph of Section 21 reads: "all elective executive officers." I move to delete those four words and insert therein: "the governor, the lieutenant governor." I don't think we should have any subterfuge, we have only two elective officers.

J. TRASK: I second the motion.

SHIMAMURA: May I ask if it is the intention of the proponent of this measure that there shall be conviction by only two-thirds of the members present instead of the two-thirds of the full house?

CHAIRMAN: It says two-thirds of the members present. That's perfectly clear.

SHIMAMURA: Well, I want to find out if that's his intention.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. That is the same as the Federal Constitution.

OKINO: That is correct; that is the same as the judiciary article.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? The question is on the amendment.

RICHARDS: The amendment speaks of two offices only. In what category is the auditor? He is elected by the House.

CHAIRMAN: No, he is appointed by the legislature.

RICHARDS: Appointed?

CHAIRMAN: Appointed. He stands no popular election.

HEEN: I would like to inquire whether or not there is any provision in the articles on the executive branch of government which would prevent the legislature from creating some office, elective office, other than those provided for in the Constitution itself.

CHAIRMAN: I think the answer is no to that, Delegate Heen.

FUKUSHIMA: I think the answer is very obviously no.

OKINO: To my recollection, the answer is no, but the reason why this particular expression was used is to meet with future condition in the event there is a revision and there should be any other elective officer.

CHAIRMAN: Meet with what condition?

OKINO: Future; no one knows; there may be some other elective officer. There have been several attempts made on the floor that we shall have some more elective officials.

TAVARES: It's my very distinct recollection from the Committee on Style that the legislature can provide for the election or appointment of officers for whose election or appointment the Constitution doesn't otherwise provide. However, as to those other elective officers, I presume the legislature could in the same law or by general law provide for a different method of removal, because they have general powers of creating the office and tenure. So that if it's agreeable to the movant to accept "the governor and lieutenant governor," I don't think any harm will be done except we've got to amend the rest of the section then to conform.

WHITE: There is one question I'd like to ask and that has to do with the auditor. This first paragraph reads: "and any appointive officer for whose removal the consent of the Senate is required." That isn't required in the case of the auditor; it's, "the legislature, by two-thirds majority vote of members in joint session." Is there a conflict there?

CHAIRMAN: I think this has to do with popularly elected officials, Delegate White.

TAVARES: It is my understanding and I'm sure the movant will agree with me that the purpose of this is not to include the auditor, that he is not considered as a person for whose removal the consent of the Senate is required. As a matter of fact the consent of both houses is required in that case, and it wasn't intended to cover that particular type of officer.

PORTEUS: I wonder whether in the debate on this matter I heard correctly as to the two-thirds of those present. I think if the delegates will turn to Committee Proposal No. 7, being that of the judiciary article and being Section 3, it states there with respect to the various justices of the Supreme Court, "They shall be subject to removal from office upon the concurrence of two-thirds of the membership of each house of the legislature," and not just two-thirds of those present.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. This follows the Federal Constitution and refers to those present.

A. TRASK: Point of information of the movant, Mr. Chairman. The Senate will impeach and - -

CHAIRMAN: No, no, the House will make the charge; the House will impeach and the Senate will try.

A. TRASK: The question is the word on the fifth line. Shouldn't the word "or" be there instead of the word "and," so that it will read "or upon conviction of the charges against such officers," referring to a judicial conviction as such?

CHAIRMAN: Not a judicial conviction, as such. It has to do with conviction in the Senate. I think the word "and" is correct, Delegate Trask.

A. TRASK: In that case, if the movant agrees with the Chair's interpretation, I move for an amendment, therefore, that the words in the fourth line, "removed from office," insert "upon conviction of impeachment for such cause as may be provided by law" period, because otherwise you would have a consideration as to conviction by a court which may precede proceedings of impeachment in the House.

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute, Delegate Trask, there is already one amendment to this and I think we're piling them up. We'll take that later.

The question is on the amendment proposed by Delegate Fukushima which would amend the proposal of - - the motion of Delegate Fukushima to delete the words "elective executive officers" where they appear in each instance, and substitute therefore, the words, "the governor and the lieutenant governor." Are you ready for the question? All those in favor, signify by saying "aye." Contrary.

I wish the members would pay attention and vote on this question. Chair couldn't hear anything to speak of. All those in favor of the amendment will signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it.

A. TRASK: I renew my suggestion here that before the word "impeachment," in the fourth line of the first paragraph, strike the word "on" and insert for the words "on," the words "upon conviction of," and then on the fifth line after the word "law," replace the comma by a period. I believe that this is necessary because the word "conviction" may be interpreted to refer to a judicial conviction. We may have a situation, and properly so, where there might be a conviction before the proceedings or conviction of impeachment by the House of Representatives will take place. So if the intention is a conviction of impeachment by the House of Representatives, the word "conviction" should precede and be tied up with the word "impeachment." So if that's the thought of the movant, it seems to me an amendment is necessary so that after the word "office " in the fourth line, strike the word "on" and insert the words "upon conviction of impeachment for such causes as may be provided by law." I move for the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Before you ask for a second on that, may the Chair invite your attention. This is taken from the language of the Federal Constitution, Article I, which reads: "and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present." I believe that's where Delegate Okino got his language. It seems to be clear.

A. TRASK: But we don't have that here, do we?

CHAIRMAN: This says, "No such - -

KING: You're talking about something else entirely. Mr. Chairman, Delegate Trask was referring to a different part of the proposed amendment. As I understood it, he was referring to the first paragraph, had no reference to the question of concurrence.

CHAIRMAN: What paragraph are you on?

A. TRASK: I am referring to the first paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: I'm sorry; I misunderstood you, Delegate Trask.

A. TRASK: In other words, if a conviction refers to a House of Representatives conviction it should be tied up with that; otherwise the interpretation would be misleading to refer to a judicial conviction, and I so move.

TAVARES: Am I correct in my understanding that impeachment means charges?

CHAIRMAN: Impeachment does mean the charge.

TAVARES: Therefore, I think Delegate Trask's motion is probably all right. "Upon conviction of impeachment" would mean upon conviction of the charges of impeachment - -

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

TAVARES: - - and therefore, I believe there would be no harm in the movant accepting that amendment. I wonder if the movant will accept that?

J. TRASK: I will second that motion to amend.

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute. Delegate Trask, will you state clearly to the Chair what your proposed amendment is? In the first paragraph.

A. TRASK: Delegate Okino's amendment to Section 21, the first paragraph, the fourth line, after the third word, strike the word "on" and insert three words "upon conviction of impeachment for such causes as may be provided by law" period, deleting the rest and replacing the comma with a period.

CHAIRMAN: I'm sorry, the Chair still didn't get that. The fourth line?

A. TRASK: The fourth line, after the word "office," "remove from office," strike the word "on" and insert "upon conviction of" and continue "impeachment for such causes as may be provided by law" period, deleting the rest.

OKINO: I will accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino has accepted the amendment. I presume the second will accept it.

TAVARES: I move, to conform to the first paragraph, the following further amendment of the second paragraph. In the third line, delete the words, "all elective executive officers," and insert in lieu thereof, the words, "the governor or lieutenant governor."

CHAIRMAN: I believe that's already been put and carried, Delegate Tavares.

TAVARES: That was just the first paragraph, Mr. Chairman. Will the movant accept that?

OKINO: The movant accepts the amendment.

TAVARES: Then in the next sentence, the second sentence of the second paragraph, in the second line of that sentence where it says "no such elective officers," I move to delete the words "elective executive" and the "s" on the word "officers," so that it will read, "no such officer shall be convicted," and so forth. Does the movant accept the amendment?

OKINO: I do.

TAVARES: Now, I don't know whether the movant will accept this next amendment, but to satisfy some of the members who want to conform to the judiciary article, I would suggest that the last two words of the second paragraph, the words, "members present," be changed to "membership of the Senate."

OKINO: Delegate Tavares, would it not be better to follow the language of the judiciary article consistently and to clarify the situation, finish it up by saying "two-thirds of the membership of each house of the legislature sitting in joint session"?

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute. Is this in the form of a motion, Delegate Tavares? Is this in the form of a motion?

TAVARES: Well, I will make it a motion, Mr. Chairman.

HEEN: May I interrupt at this point? As I recall it, someone read in connection with the similar provision in the article on judiciary. The words used were "the membership present." Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN: No.

PORTEUS: I think I was the one who read that and I believe that you will find that the words are "upon the concurrence of two-thirds of the membership of each house of the legislature, sitting in joint session." You'll find that on page 4, Committee Proposal No. 7, redraft 2.

TAVARES: So that my language does conform as far as it can when we have only one house instead of both houses trying the impeachment. The words, "membership of the Senate" in lieu of the words "members present" conforms as far as practicable to the judiciary language.

OKINO: Delegate Tavares is correct, and I do accept his amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair might point out the two procedures for removal are quite different, the one under the judiciary article and this one proposed, so of necessity they do not have to be in conformity.

TAVARES: I understand that, but it is my understanding that the members felt that if you needed two-thirds of each house's as membership to remove a judge, you should have two-thirds of the membership of the Senate to remove the governor and lieutenant governor.

HEEN: This language here follows the language in the Federal Constitution.

CHAIRMAN: The language unamended.

HEEN: That's right.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Tavares would amend the language to require an absolute two-thirds of all members whether they are present or not. Is the amendment accepted, Delegate --

OKINO: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

A. TRASK: May I ask a question on this second paragraph, if you please, Mr. Chairman? "The House of Representatives shall have the power of impeachment." In other words, the House of Representatives acts like the grand jury and charges, and that the Senate will be the court trying that person. Now, it seems to try only the governor and the lieutenant governor. Now does it mean that the appointive officers -- how will they be impeached and tried?

CHAIRMAN: They're not dealt with at all in this section.

TAVARES: I think I can answer that. The answer is that only for the governor and lieutenant governor do we actually prescribe the requirements and procedure to that extent. In the case of the others, the legislature can provide a different method of impeachment for appointive officers. If that is the intention of this Convention, I think that's all right, and I'm for it because I think they can adjust it any way they want. They could say the Senate shall present charges or somebody else. However, Delegate Heen raised a point. He asked whether there was a possibility that the legislature could create an entirely separate body to remove appointive officers, and I think the answer probably is yes as this thing stands.

HEEN: Before going into that point, Mr. Chairman, with reference to the use of the term "the members present." As I stated a moment ago, that's the language used in the Federal Constitution, and that was intended, Mr. Chairman, to prevent one-third of the house remaining away from the hearing in order to defeat any trial of the impeachment charges.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. That would thwart the impeachment process.

PORTEUS: That is not a correct statement. I beg to differ with the chairman. The house has the right to compel the attendance of all the members. If that's so, then the lawyers will fix something so that the justices of the Supreme Court aren't subject. There's an opening there. What we're trying to do is be consistent here. If the statement is correct, that one of the houses, by an absence of members, can stop impeachment, then that's a defect in the judiciary article. And as I understood it --

CHAIRMAN: That has nothing to do with the judiciary article. I'm sorry.

PORTEUS: Why hasn't it, may I ask?

CHAIRMAN: This is the impeachment process.

PORTEUS: That's right, and there's impeachment process in the judiciary article referred to.

CHAIRMAN: No, you're in error. There's no impeachment process in the judiciary article.

PORTEUS: There is a removal from office.

CHAIRMAN: Correct, which is very different.

PORTEUS: Not very different. It's a very similar procedure. In effect there you are requiring the two-thirds. In other words then, if it's the opinion of the chairman of this committee, who was also chairman of the judiciary article, then there is a defect in the judiciary article because you are making it too tough and almost impossible to have a removal. But I don't agree with the opinion of the chairman because I say that I believe that each house has the right to compel the attendance of all members.

CHAIRMAN: Well, are you ready for the question? The question is on the amendment.

TAVARES: I take it that means now that the whole section is to be voted on since all the amendments have been agreed to by the movant.

I should like to point out one more thing which I believe is the proper interpretation of this section, and that is that the third paragraph which authorizes the legislature by law to provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment subject to the provisions of this section will, in my opinion, authorize the legislature to lay down rules even for impeachment of the governor or lieutenant governor, under which the Senate could delegate to a committee the actual hearing of the charges, as is done by a court for a master; and then the charges could be referred to the Senate and the final hearing held in the Senate, as if on the master's report, with such further hearing as the law should provide. I believe that that third paragraph would permit that and I think that is desirable because I think one of the dangers, one of the defects, one of the real defects of the system of impeachment is not the requirement for two-thirds but the requirement for holding a quorum of the whole Senate in session for a long tedious trial, and I believe that is the proper interpretation and I believe the movant will agree with me that that is the proper interpretation of the third paragraph.

ROBERTS: I believe that the process of removing a governor and lieutenant governor is quite serious and the charges ought to be heard by the body that's going to remove him and not by a sub-committee of that group. I certainly do not think that's proper. I believe that the entire body should hear him and the entire body should act on the evidence as presented to them.

CHAIRMAN: Well, I'll point out that this does not follow the Federal Constitution. It permits legislative changes in the method of impeachment and would permit what Delegate Tavares is suggesting be done.

FUKUSHIMA: I don't believe that's a correct statement. The second paragraph reads, "and the Senate the sole power to try all impeachments of the governor or lieutenant governor." That's certainly inconsistent with the statement made by Delegate Tavares.

KING: I subscribe to the remarks of the last speaker. Delegate Tavares had in mind, perhaps, that the legislature might delegate some of its authority to a committee but that should not apply to the trial of the lieutenant governor or the governor by impeachment. It might apply to these others. I think the article reads for itself, the section reads for itself and that no such implication should be accepted by the Committee of the Whole.

TAVARES: Because this question has been raised, may I make a suggestion?

A. TRASK: I think in view of the expression in paragraph one that - -

CHAIRMAN: Would it not be in order to defer this until we get a redraft? Delegate Tavares, do you think there should be a deferment on this?

TAVARES: No, Mr. Chairman, in order to resolve that question I think we should take a sense vote as to whether it's the sense of this Convention that in the trial of the governor or lieutenant governor on impeachment the whole Senate should conduct the whole trial or whether they should be able to - - authorized by law to have a hearing first before a committee and then a final hearing before the Senate.

CHAIRMAN: May the Chair ask you a question, Delegate Tavares? The sentence which reads: "The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment, subject to the provisions of this section," wouldn't that authorize the legislature to create a committee?

TAVARES: That was my interpretation, Mr. Chairman, but it is challenged now by men of equal - - certainly for whom I have high regard, and I think it ought to be settled by the Convention.

CHAIRMAN: I think it's perfectly clear to the Chair that there is that legislative power.

LEE: I move that we defer this section until we take the other sections.

CROSSLEY: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we defer action. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary.

CROSSLEY: I move that we rise, report progress and beg leave to sit again. I would like to point out that it's nearly 5:30 and the Committee on Style meets tonight at 7:30.

CASTRO: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair had hoped that we'd get through with this. All in favor of rising, reporting progress, signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Motion is lost.

CROSSLEY: While it's not pertinent to the discussion, I'd just like to announce to the chairman of the Committee on Style that I won't be available for a meeting tonight. I can't do these hours and do justice to the work.

CASTRO: Neither will I, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a meeting of the Style Committee tonight, Delegate Wist?

WIST: There definitely is a meeting tonight and we definitely need Mr. Crossley, who is the chairman of the subcommittee on the article on taxation and finance that we'll be dealing with tonight, and unless we can meet tonight I don't see how we're possibly going to get through with our work.

KING: May I call the attention of the delegates to the fact we won't complete this article till half past six or seven o'clock.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no objection, the Chair will put the question again.

KING: I would like to ask the Committee of the Whole to rise, report progress and sit again. We can start with these problems fresh tomorrow morning.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the committee rise, report progress and beg leave to sit again. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried. The ayes have it.

JULY 8, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: The committee will take up the section, Section 21 of Committee Proposal No. 29, dealing with impeachment. Delegate Okino is recognized.

OKINO: I believe there is a new draft on the desk of each delegate this morning after a few of the delegates got together to iron out some of the differences of opinion so far as interpretation of some of the sentences in my offered amendment are concerned. The amendment before the Committee of the Whole is my amendment to Committee Proposal - - Section 21 as amended by Delegate Fukushima's motion to specify the elective officers. I think that is before the Committee of the Whole at this time. The new draft is dated July 8th.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would suggest that if it's agreeable to the movants of the numerous amendments, that they all be withdrawn and we start with this draft. Delegate Fukushima, would you accede to that?

FUKUSHIMA: That is acceptable to me.

CHAIRMAN: And I believe Delegate Tavares had made a number of amendments.

TAVARES: I withdraw any amendments I may have moved for.

CHAIRMAN: I think that would clear the decks, so if we pull them all together in this one amendment the thing can be offered.

OKINO: It definitely does so, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: And you offer this amendment?

OKINO: That is correct, Mr. Chairman. Amend Section 21 of Committee Proposal No. 29 to read as follows:

SECTION 21. The governor and lieutenant governor, and any appointive officer for whose removal the consent of the Senate is required, may be removed from office upon conviction of impeachment for such causes as may be provided by law. The House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment and the Senate the sole power to try all impeachments of the governor and lieutenant governor. No such officer shall be convicted without concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the Senate.

The Legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment, subject to the provisions of this section.

Judgments in cases of removal from office shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit under the state; but the person convicted may nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment according to law.

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

TAVARES: I second the amendment. And in view of the fact that yesterday different people expressed different opinions as to the meaning of the second paragraph of this redraft which says that "The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment, subject to the provisions of this section," in view of the differences of opinion on what it means as far as the procedure for trial - - for impeachment of the governor and lieutenant governor is concerned, and since now it is limited only to those two officers, I move that it is the consensus of this Committee of the Whole and shall be inserted in the report of this Committee of the Whole that this paragraph does not authorize a trial of an impeachment charge against the lieutenant governor or governor by a committee of the Senate, but that the trial must be by the Senate itself, this relating however only to the impeachment of the lieutenant governor or governor.

CHAIRMAN: The parliamentary situation is the motion for the amendment is before the house, as the Chair understands it. I don't know whether I can put both questions at the same time.

TAVARES: This is a motion relating to this. We've taken many consensus votes on different measures in this Convention, and this is a construction of the section which apparently is ambiguous because men of ability, I believe, on both sides have expressed opposite views of its meaning.

KING: If the parliamentary procedure permits of such a motion, I would be glad to second it.

CHAIRMAN: That's what the Chair is in doubt about. I don't see how the Chair can put both motions. That could be done separately I should think. I don't know.

CROSSLEY: I see no reason why it couldn't be done subsequently, but if you want to combine them it seems to me the first motion could be amended for the adoption of this amendment, that there be contained in the committee report relating to this amendment the following words, that is, the sense that Mr. Tavares has just given us; and that motion I believe would be in order, inasmuch as they are related subjects.

CHAIRMAN: What was the language that Delegate Tavares wanted in the report? The Chair didn't understand it.

TAVARES: The language was that it is the consensus of this Committee of the Whole, and that it be inserted in the written report of the Committee of the Whole, that the paragraph authorizing the legislature by law to provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment does not authorize the Senate to delegate to a committee of the Senate the hearing of the charges of impeachment against the lieutenant governor or the governor, that the requirement is that such charges must be heard by the Senate itself.

CHAIRMAN: And as to other officers, they could delegate the authority under the same identical language, is that it?

TAVARES: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Well, the Chair doesn't see how you could have two interpretations for the same words, frankly.

ASHFORD: I leave the proponents of the measure to answer that, although it seems clear to me by the specification of the governor and lieutenant governor in the first paragraph. What I wished to do was to inquire whether the provision of two-thirds of the members of the Senate could be changed in the opinion of the proponent by the Style Committee to conform to other language which is to be used in other sections following the language of the Organic Act, "two-thirds of the members to which the Senate is entitled."

TAVARES: As the seconder of the motion, I am sure that we agree that the Style Committee can do that. The intention is to have two-thirds of the total membership of the Senate concur in the removal of the lieutenant governor or governor, and that being the case, as a matter of style the language can be made to conform to other articles which have been approved with slightly different language.

KING: The only ambiguity is in this phrase in the second paragraph, "subject to the provisions of this section." Both Delegate Tavares and, I believe, the Chair in an informal discussion yesterday interpreted that qualification to authorize the legislature to try the governor or lieutenant governor by a committee or by some group of members of the Senate designated for that purpose. Delegate Roberts expressed his opposition to that and I concurred in his remarks that for the impeachment of the governor and the lieutenant governor the whole Senate should act as the judge, and not a committee designated as such under the provisions of this second paragraph.

Now, all that we are trying to do this morning is to incorporate in the proceedings of the Committee of the Whole and then the Committee of the Whole report our interpretation that "subject to the provisions of this section" may apply to appointive officers but shall not apply to the trial by impeachment of the governor and the lieutenant governor. Now, if it is not proper to have a motion expressing the consensus of opinion of the Committee of the Whole, then it may be adopted as a separate motion after the section itself has been approved, if it is approved.

HEEN: I would like to ask the sponsor of this amendment this question. The first paragraph, the second sentence, you find the following language, "The House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment." Does that mean sole power of impeachment not only of the governor and lieutenant governor but also of the appointive officers?

OKINO: In reply to the question, I should like to say that insofar as my interpretation of the same is concerned it applies strictly to the governor and lieutenant governor. It was for that reason that amendment was inserted in this amendment of mine.

HEEN: Then as I understand it according to that interpretation, the impeachment of appointive officers may be made in some other way.

OKINO: That is correct and that is the reason why you find paragraph three. Originally the second sentence in paragraph one was not in the amendment.

HEEN: Now another question, following the first question. You find this language, "and the Senate the sole power to try all impeachments of the governor and lieutenant governor." Does that imply that so far as the appointive officers are concerned they may be tried by another body or tribunal, is that correct?

OKINO: That is correct. That is intended to be covered by the second paragraph of this new draft.

HEEN: Then it seems to me that the second sentence should be rephrased so that it will apply to appointive officers. "The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal of appointive officers."

CHAIRMAN: You mean officers other than the governor and lieutenant governor?

HEEN: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: That would fix it up.

HEEN: You don't need any further statutes or legislation to provide for the procedure in the trial of the -- in the impeachment of the governor and lieutenant governor and the trial because you have it all there. The House shall impeach the governor or the lieutenant governor, and the Senate shall try the charges on impeachment.

TAVARES: I don't think that necessarily follows. There might be some slight areas with relation to procedure alone. Perhaps it is the manner of issuing subpoenas and various other things that can still be legislated on by the legislature in aid of the impeachment procedure provided for the lieutenant governor or governor. For instance, if the legislature saw fit to provide for the form and manner of compelling attendance of witnesses by law rather than leaving it to implied powers, I believe the legislature could implement that. If it wished to provide for contempt for failure to obey such subpoenas, it could also legislate in that field. I believe there is a field where it can operate in both, but because of the fact that the field is not the same as to the lieutenant governor and governor as it is with respect to appointive officers, my motion to take a concensus vote was for the purpose of clarifying that.

CHAIRMAN: If it is ambiguous, the Chair feels we ought to clear up the ambiguity rather than leave it to some report.

A. TRASK: Pursuing the same line of thinking with respect to the appointive officers which I asked yesterday of Delegate Tavares also, the second paragraph seems to imply that the only manner whereby appointive officers could be removed would be by impeachment. That seems to be, since in the first paragraph there is "the causes for impeachment may be provided by law"; the second paragraph refers to impeachment only; the third paragraph refers to judgment issued upon conviction of impeachment; so that there is no other provision whereby the legislature could, pursuing the thought of Delegate Heen, allow and provide for the removal of appointive officers by any other remedy except by impeachment. I don't think that is right.

TAVARES: Of course it isn't and if you write other portions of this Constitution in relation to that, I don't think it necessarily follows. I don't think it follows at all. This is simply an additional method of removal giving to the legislature the power of removal by impeachment in addition to any other which is provided in the Constitution, or which under general powers the legislature may provide, simply to give to the representatives of the people one more method of removal in addition to any others provided or permitted by the Constitution.

SHIMAMURA: May I state that I concur with the observation made by the Chair a few moments ago with respect to the difficulty of interpretation in the light of the second sentence of paragraph one and the second paragraph. I believe that the proponent of this measure and the other persons who are in favor of this proposition favor the principle of a trial of the impeachment by the entire body of the Senate, but on that principle I am not quite inclined to agree. Perhaps they feel that the appointive officers are not as important as the governor or lieutenant governor, but when we impeach a man it's a very serious charge. I don't see why as a matter of principle we don't include the appointive officers and not limit the trial of impeachment by the Senate as a whole body merely to the governor and lieutenant governor.

BRYAN: I may be a little out of place being strictly a layman on this subject. However, I think that in my mind the ambiguity can be cleared up very easily using the same language that we have here but rearranging it somewhat. I'd like to ask the movant and others to consider this. To withhold the first sentence and start the paragraph off with the House of Representatives. "The House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment and the Senate the sole power to try all impeachments of the governor and lieutenant governor. No such officer shall be convicted without concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the Senate. The legislature shall provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment," and going back to the first sentence, "of any appointive officer for whose removal the consent of the Senate is required," then continue on.

HEEN: It seems to me there should be some amendment along those lines. Of course, the last speaker hasn't completed the amendment of the entire provisions of the second paragraph. May I ask at this time for a short recess. I think we can iron this out.

CHAIRMAN: Short recess.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The committee will please come to order. There are two proposed amendments to this section presently being printed and it seems advisable that we proceed with the discussion of the section relating to legislative council while that work is being done. The Chair will entertain a motion to defer Section 21 until later.

OKINO: I so move at this time.

SAKAKIHARA: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HOLROYDE: I move for the adoption of Section 22 to get it before the house.

BRYAN: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 22 relating to legislative council be adopted.

LAI: I move to delete this whole Section 22.

DOI: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that this section be deleted. Is there any discussion?

LAI: May I speak on that? This council will add another burden upon the State's finances. Creation of this legislative council will mean more compensation for employees and its members. Because of the annual session of the legislature as provided in this article, emergency legislation does not need to wait for two years for its consideration. There is no guarantee that any member of this council will be elected the following term and therefore his service and his study of different legislative problems is not certain to render any value to the following legislature.

We have created a twenty-five member Senate and a fifty-one member House. A legislature of this size will form a better deliberating legislative body. It is harder for a larger body of this type to railroad through any bad legislation. Therefore any emergency that arises, a legislature can always create or appoint a commission to study a particular problem. Therefore I am against this section and I move to delete this section.

LARSEN: I would like to speak against this. I also have an amendment to suggest. It seems to me, what the previous speaker said, it isn't the cost of a few extra salaries that's important in a democracy, it's whether democracy is efficient and whether we can prevent the abuse of power. We know that democracy is cumbersome but what we're after—and after I've listened to the floor discussion, it's very evident that we all of us feel—how can we prevent abuse and how can we increase efficiency? In all these studies and in the ancient days when we began this Convention I was particularly interested in this and had occasion to look it up and a good many of the states have it and more of them will have it. With a short legislature, it still is more important to have some group, an analytical group, working between sessions, and if they are not working between sessions then the terrific rush of the sixty-day session will be inefficient and we won't get what we're after.

Now I notice in the committee report itself, they say, "While such a provision," for a legislative council, "might be considered legislative and the inclusion of such provision objected to on that ground, your committee believes that the work of the legislature must be implemented by a continuous study by some agency under the control of the legislature in the interim between sessions, and that it is a matter of such importance that it should not be left entirely to legislation."

Now we have heard a lot of criticism lately about the holdover committee. We have heard that they got $150,000 and did very little. I suspect that much of that is newspaper analysis without perhaps going into what they actually have done. I hope they have done more than one of the newspaper editorials suggests.

But it isn't a choice made by the previous speaker of not having a legislative council. The legislature can vote for a holdover committee. The legislative council does what the holdover committee is supposed to do. We are trying to prevent, as much as possible, abuse.

The amendment that I have, if this present motion is defeated, is to insert the following: "There shall also be one member of the legislative [council] from each county, appointed to the council by the governor. Neither house shall have a greater number of members in the council than that of the number of non-members." So theoretically we have a total council of twelve members. This is an efficient body and can be working. I feel it's so important to prevent abuse by having too many people, by having a critical analysis between times. I believe from the standpoint of our community there are a good many people who believe in initiative and referendum, and academically initiative and referendum is an ideal way of democracy but by actual practice it's been abused, and it's the abuse of power, and we all recognize I think that wherever power is put into a few hands, there is abuse of power.

Now this legislative council is not criticising the legislature. Putting on lay members is not criticising legislators but it's putting that ear into the community of a few men, one in each county, who shall not have to think about being reelected and who can critically analyze legislation, who can propose things, who can work together with the legislature more analytically than critically. I believe if we're going to save money in this setup we need something working between times and we need this ear in the community to listen to the criticisms of laws and government. I believe it's an essential thing and I would be very strongly in favor of killing this deletion movement, and if it's killed I would like to suggest the amendment.

CASTRO: I'm not opposed to the idea of the legislative council. However, I am aware that the legislative council -- the idea of the legislative council and the matter in which it is worked out varies greatly in the various states which have tried it. I therefore am in support of the motion to delete and I would say that I would like to have had the pleasure to make the motion myself.

Now the argument that a provision is statutory, I realize, has been overdone in this Convention from time to time, but in most cases the argument is a valid one. In this particular case it is a valid one. The supreme court of the State of Washington, when a statutory provision that set up a legislative council was challenged on the basis of the fact that it was not constitutional, the supreme court brought out an opinion which indicated that in its view the legislative council was nothing more than a body to aid the legislature in its work and was not adding any powers to the legislature, and therefore it was perfectly within the statutory provision and properly a subject for statutory provision.

Now, I don't think we ought to put anything into our Constitution that we are not too sure about, and if you examine the record, the efficacy of this kind of a legislative council is something we cannot be too sure about. I can indicate several weaknesses in this provision. One, there is no limit to the number of members. According to this provision, Section 22, the whole legislature could be a member of the legislative council. I know that's carrying it to the ridiculous extreme but according to this provision, that's true. They've got salary provisions, they've got power provisions in here that make this council more than what it -- actually the original concept and the accepted concept is, and that is that it should be an organization merely for collecting information and outlining the legislative program.

Now there have been states which have tried this. In New Jersey, a state whose Constitution many of the more able members of this delegation pay a great deal of attention to, the State of New Jersey, despite the recommendation of its Constitutional Revision Commission, did not include the legislative council in its Constitution of 1947. Now, the State of Missouri did include the legislative council in 1945 but it cost the State of Missouri $110,000 a year. We already have a holdover committee which in 1947 received an appropriation of $50,000 and in 1949 received an appropriation of $150,000. We have a Legislative Reference Bureau which as far as I can see actually carries out the true function of the legislative council.

Michigan established a legislative council in 1933. Six years later they got rid of it. That was by statute. If we should establish a legislative council here in our Constitution and decide it is running away with us, possibly costing more money than it's worth, we can't get rid of it as easily because it's a constitutional matter.

Wisconsin tried an executive council which is more along the line of the proposed amendment of Delegate Larsen, appointments by the governor. They found it pretty successful but they kept changing the membership. In 1931 they had five senators, five assemblymen and ten citizens at large, private citizens. In 1933, two years later, they made it three senators, three assemblymen and three citizens. In 1933, the citizens were replaced by heads of the major state departments, indicating that these councils from time to time as the needs arise vary in the functions that are demanded of them, and if you tried to set out these functions the section would be weak unless it spelled them out correctly, and I am not so sure we know exactly what we want as to a legislative council.

Now I think that actually the legislative council idea, while very laudatory and I say I agree with the idea, it is still in the experimental stage. Kansas was the first state to try the legislative council, that was in 1933, but actually outside of Kansas the experiment is only about ten years old in the United States. We find each year that a different type of legislative council is set up in the various states as they come around to this thinking, all through statute and the statute is never challenged. The fact that it is still in its early stages would be a very sound argument against placing it in the Constitution.

Now the charge was made in the Honolulu Advertiser the other day that the legislative council is something of a pork barrel, and I am inclined to agree that if you should allow a council to be set up with no brakes on it, it could become a pork barrel. Now in deference to our honorable legislators, I think that they would not have the temerity to make it such, but according to this Section 22 it could become such.

What kind of salaries are you going to pay to these people, and how about all the rest of the expenses? And it says "other powers and duties," what kind of powers are you going to give them, extra judicial powers? I thought that this was an organization for the gathering of information and for the proposal of legislation. They've gone so far in some states as to take away the right of the legislative council to propose legislation. They have said that it is merely a fact finding body. I present to this group we have a fact finding body, a very efficient one, the Legislative Reference Bureau.

So, I think, Mr. Chairman, in view of the rather unusual status of this idea throughout the country, varying as it does from one state to the next—some include private citizens, some don't, some have fifteen members, some have five, some have clerks, some have salaries, some don't have salaries—I think that if we place something in the Constitution that is so unsettled we are merely taking a chance. We are experimenting with our fundamental document. There's room enough for experimentation in the statute and I think that is the place where this belongs.

MAU: I wonder if the last speaker would agree that there shall be a prohibition against legislative holdover committees, and permit only the Legislative Reference Bureau to function? Is that his idea?

CASTRO: I made no such statement, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair did not understand him to say that, Delegate Mau.

FONG: I am convinced that we should not write into the Constitution this legislative council. I believe that the legislature could, by its powers in the enactment of statutes could provide for a holdover committee or a legislative council by statutory enactment. I presume that would be sufficient. I don't think we should copper rivet it by putting it in the Constitution.

Now in defense of the legislative holdover committee, irregardless of what the newspapers have stated, I would like to say that when the report will be finally in, you will find that we will be able to save millions of dollars as far as the Territory is concerned. We are now working on the problem of insuring all the buildings of the Territory, which would mean a saving of several million dollars to the Territory. We are now taking a look at all the institutions, taking a look at the hospitals, trying to centralize the hospitals. We have a group of doctors who are advisors to the committee and we will be able to present to the community a centralization program which will mean millions of dollars to the Territory. The public lands problem is being gone into. We have an expert working on the problem and by the end of the year when all the reports are in, the people will find that the Territory will be given legislation by which millions of dollars will be saved. So let us withhold our comment on what the legislative holdover committee is doing, or is not doing, or has done. The committees are busily working on the problems. We have laymen from the community who are experts in the problem helping along in the work and I feel that when the whole matter will be presented to the legislature that millions of dollars will be saved. I believe that the question of a holdover committee can be taken up by statutory enactment rather than by constitutional enactment.

WHITE: I'd like to speak in favor of Mr. Lai's motion to delete it. I think in theory such an organization, such a legislative council, sounds all right. I think in practice though, it has a great many problems.

In reading the second paragraph here it says that, "It shall be the duty of the legislative council to collect information concerning the government and general welfare of the state and to report thereon to the legislature." Well, I think that's a function of your executive branch of the government, to collect all the information on the state of affairs of the government for presentation to the legislature.

As I view this thing, I think it could become a super-organization. I think that you've got to take into account human nature. You set up an organization of this kind and I think that I'd be just like everybody else if I were director of it. I'd like to make sure that the thing grew so that my job became still more important. I think as far as the economies are concerned it would work just the other way, and I know no better way of developing a cleavage between your executive branch of the government and your legislature than by having such an organization.

TAVARES: I feel compelled to speak against the deletion of this, with one qualification. Unless it is amended to put laymen on it I am not in favor of it. I believe that some laymen on the committee will tend to keep too much of the superpolitics from getting headway. I think the laymen will tend to call the shots more non-politically than the members of the legislature.

However, as Dr. Larsen has pointed out, you have pressures in your community from people who want legislation and in between times you have no central body to go to to discuss or present ideas for laws which you think are needed. To be sure, you can go to individual legislators, but they don't have the office set up for it and they aren't always available to listen to you. If people have a central agency to go to that has some degree of impartiality—and I believe that if it is set up that the legislature will be careful in choosing the members of that council and it would have some measure of impartiality, particularly with some laymen on it, not a majority of laymen—that you will relieve that pressure for the initiation and the referendum. You will have a place where people can go any time of the year, present ideas and have them studied.

Therefore I shall vote against the deletion but as I say, with the qualification. I shall vote for some amendment such as Dr. Larsen's.

AKAU: Mr. Chairman, I think we have been very much interested in what has been said here for and against the legislative council. Mention has been made of the council being rather new and being tried out in several states in the past ten years. Since we are growing in status here and we are reaching out to various countries in the world and knowing and interested in what they're doing, I thought with just one quotation from New Zealand—and I am not from New Zealand—that you might be interested in knowing how the legislative council has worked in New Zealand and I just quote one sentence. "The legislative council in recent years," and this is from New Zealand, "has played a very small part in the country's affairs. Very little legislation originates there and has been used merely as a revising chamber to make minor changes voted by the government after bills have passed the lower house."

I think that meeting every year here that we really don't need a legislative council at all, and I would go along very much with the idea that our Legislative Reference Bureau and our Reference Bureau in the University does an all year round job and the research that is needed for any of these bills or any potential bills could easily be done there. I think we need no council at all.

CHAIRMAN: Counsel for the defense want to say anything in regard to this proposal? I think we should hear from the committee.

HEEN: I've gotten in the position that I'm almost neutral now.

NIELSEN: I question this council because I think it is absolutely another pork barrel opportunity and any one that says that the holdover committee at present is not a pork barrel job, they just haven't looked into it. All you have to do is see who got on the holdover committee in the House. Only one man that was for the closed primary got on it. Anyone else that voted for the closed primary didn't have a chance. In addition to that - -

CHAIRMAN: Are you a member of the committee, Delegate Nielsen?

NIELSEN: Absolutely not for that very reason, that I voted and stuck for the closed primary.

Further, they voted themselves $20 a day and here they argue we shouldn't be paid $15 a day, us outside island members, if we serve in the next state legislature. I could go on and on, but I won't take any more time. I'm against it.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question.

ROBERTS: I was sorry to hear the chairman of the committee indicate his neutrality in view of the strong position made in the report. I thought we were going to support the Legislative Committee report on the floor.

I recognize that there is some problem in terms of cost. There are also some problems in terms of potentiality of abuse. I don't think the question before us is either a legislative council or no legislative council. I think the question is a legislative council or a holdover committee. It seems to me quite clear that if we make no provision in the section, in the Constitution, then you have greater potentiality for abuse. I'm not suggesting that there has been abuse. I think that there's a very definite job which needs to be done in between sessions, not a matter merely of compiling materials but a matter of reviewing legislation which may be needed and which ought to be prepared for the next session. I think that the work of the Legislative Reference Bureau to us here has been very useful and I think it ought to be continued, and the legislative council, I think, can continue such function and can provide for additional research work to be done by the Legislative Reference Bureau.

I think the question basically is how do you best achieve that particular end, and it seems to me that the best way to achieve it is by providing a body, not to go into the executive functions, not to take over the power of the executive, but as the section clearly implies and states, only with regard to legislation to be proposed at the next session of the legislature. I believe that, as Dr. Larsen has stated, that a group of laymen on that board would be extremely useful and valuable in terms of finding out as close to the county as possible what legislation is required and what type is required, and also to see to it that the expenditures of such a group be maintained within reason.

I therefore believe, Mr. Chairman, that we should make a provision, in view of the other sections that we have adopted, that there ought to be a legislative council, that it ought to consist of legislators and laymen, and therefore I hope that the motion to delete be acted on unfavorably, that we retain the section and subsequently amend as proposed by Dr. Larsen.

MAU: I wonder if any one can explain to me the difference between the present legislative holdover committee and this legislative council without the suggestion of Dr. Larsen. The only difference I see is that constitutionally we say that the members of the legislative council shall receive a salary in addition to their salaries as members of the legislature. The holdover committees do exactly what is called for in the legislative council. Maybe there is some difference and yet no one has mentioned it.

CASTRO: May I answer that question? The difference is only in the name is the answer to the question. The duties of the legislative councils throughout the states vary completely. They vary from mere clerical work to extra judicial bodies, bodies that can subpoena witnesses, and the legislative council as set up by this constitutional section is in duties no different than your holdover committee. I think that's the answer, the difference is in the name.

LAI: Could I answer what the difference with the amendment is? It limits the number; it brings in the layman; it also recognizes there shall be a critical analysis and there shall - -

CASTRO: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

CASTRO: Delegate Larsen's amendment nor my proposed amendment, if the motion to delete fails, is not before the house. The motion before the house is to delete the section.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct. Delegate Lai was seeking my attention. Oh, excuse me, Delegate Mau still has the floor.

MAU: One more question. If this motion to delete carries there will be an opportunity to insert a new provision in lieu of this legislative council provision, is that correct?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would say yes because this is confined to the members of the legislature, and you could have a different section which would be comprised of other people. The Chair will recognize Delegate Lai. He's been endeavoring to get the attention of the Chair.

LAI: I just want to add one more thing. A problem of today may not be the problem of next year or tomorrow or next month, therefore the service of a council of this type as suggested by the committee or as stated by Dr. Larsen is not of much value.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. The question is upon the adoption or the deletion of Section 22.

DELEGATE: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: Delegates want roll call? Show of hands for a roll call. The Clerk will please call the roll. The motion is that Section 22, relating to a legislative council, be deleted. In other words, if you vote "aye," there will be no legislative council consisting of members of the legislature.

Ayes, 42. Noes, 14 (Heen, Holroyde, Kanemaru, Kawahara, Larsen, Lee, Loper, Mau, Roberts, Shimamura, Tavares, A. Trask, Wirtz, Anthony). Not voting, 7 (Ihara, Mizuha, Phillips, Sakakihara, Silva, Wist, Woolaway).

The section is deleted. The motion is carried.

LARSEN: I would like another trial balloon, if I may. I would like to introduce a resolution which reads as follows:

> Legislative council. There shall be a legislative council consisting of twelve members to be chosen in the following manner: four members to be selected by the Senate from its membership; four members to be selected by the House of Representatives from its membership; four members who are not members of the legislature to be appointed by the governor, one from each county.
> The legislature shall provide by law for selection, tenure, compensation - -

CHAIRMAN: Shouldn't that be done in the Convention rather than in this committee? We're adopting proposals for the legislative article.

LARSEN: Well, I am proposing a legislative article to take the place of the one that was defeated.

CHAIRMAN: You said resolution, Dr. Larsen.

LARSEN: Well I'm sorry, I misspoke.

MAU: For the purposes of discussion, I second the amendment.

LAI: I think that motion is out of order, because the substance of that motion is the same as that one just defeated.

ROBERTS: I'd like to suggest that it's perfectly proper for Delegate Larsen to submit a new section, Section 23, specifying the proposal which he has as a new section to the Constitution. As the Chair previously pointed out we have acted only on the proposal submitted by the committee which deals with a specific question. This provides for an entirely new proposal.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will so rule, Delegate Roberts. The point of order is overruled.

ROBERTS: I move that the proposal submitted by Delegate Larsen be added as a new section to the Constitution, Section 23, to read as he has previously indicated on the floor.

AKAU: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State the point of order.

AKAU: The proposal presented yesterday was called 23, so if this could be called 24, I think you would be in order.

ROBERTS: I accept the amendment, Section 24.

SHIMAMURA: I second Delegate Roberts' motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair thinks that is in a rather amorphous state, is it not? Delegate Larsen, is it ready for offering at this time?

LARSEN: I'm ready to offer it. I have it here all written out but - -

CHAIRMAN: Not printed.

LARSEN: Not printed.

CHAIRMAN: Will you read it again so the Chair can understand it? The Chair would like to hear it so the Chair knows what we're acting on here, to make sure that we're right.

LARSEN:

> There shall be a legislative council consisting of twelve members to be chosen in the following manner: four members to be selected by the Senate from its membership; four members to be selected by the House of Representatives from its membership; four members who are not members of the legislature to be appointed by the governor, one from each county.
>
> The legislature shall provide by law for selection, tenure and compensation - - and if it doesn't work they can - -

CHAIRMAN: Wait a minute. Is that the end of the proposal?

LARSEN: I'm sorry, I was going to comment. May I just add the final word:

of members of the council and for such research staff as the council may require to perform its duties.

Then I have a second section on duties, but that's much like what we have. May I comment for one moment?

CHAIRMAN: You have the floor, Dr. Larsen.

LARSEN: The idea, of course, is this does take the duties of the legislative council. However, I call your attention that if the legislature feels that it's not working well they can delete compensation, it's left open to that. This is much like an organization before any -- It's an organization that will outline the list of what's to be done at the next session; they also hear the criticism of the community. However, that discussion seems to me has been full here but the idea of limiting it seems important.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate White has been endeavoring to get the floor.

ROBERTS: I would like to make a suggestion on procedure. We already have the Okino amendments; I would suggest that we defer action on this to give the delegate a chance to print the amendment.

CASTRO: Before that's done, I appeal for a ruling from the Chair. I submit that Delegate Larsen's proposal is nothing more than an amendment to Section 22. It's an amendment insofar as the make-up of the membership. It is not an amendment as to the subject of the legislative council. It is a legislative council.

Now the amendment as to the make-up was not the argument that went back and forth here a few moments ago. The argument was as to the establishment of a legislative council. If there were delegates who felt that the legislative council should be established if its membership were amended, they should have voted no. But they voted aye and the aye vote was simply to delete the legislative council.

DELEGATE: Point of order on the speaker.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Castro has the floor. Proceed, Delegate Castro.

CASTRO: The vote, Mr. Chairman. I'm asking for a ruling from the Chair. The vote, as I understood it, was against the establishment of a legislative council. It did not go to the make-up of the membership and I would like to ask whether or not the Chair agrees.

BRYAN: I think that question is out of order. I would like to call the previous speaker's attention to the fact that the Chair made that ruling before the motion to delete was put. If there was any objection to the ruling of the Chair at that time, it should have been made at that time. The Chair distinctly ruled before the motion to delete was put that it would not prevent a new section or an amendment of the question.

CHAIRMAN: That was the purpose of the Chair's ruling, Delegate Castro.

CASTRO: I withdraw my objections.

CHAIRMAN: Withdraw the appeal. No appeal.

CASTRO: "No appeal" is the word.

SMITH: I would just like to correct one statement there. I believe that the chairman stated before the deletion motion -- the motion for the deletion that he would recognize any amendment to the section, not saying any new section.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair ruled in response to the inquiry of Delegate Mau that in the opinion of the Chair a negative vote on the present section would not preclude a different legislative council consisting of persons not exclusively legislators.

WIRTZ: At this time I would like to second the motion of Delegate Roberts to defer this to give the movant an opportunity to have it printed. There may be some other amendments to it.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the matter be deferred. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The Chair is in doubt. The Chair will put the question. This is on the deferment. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes seem to have it. The ayes do have it.

There has been printed and on the desks of the delegates, two proposed amendments to Section 21, one offered by Delegate Heen and the other offered by Delegate Trask. The Chair would suggest that all existing amendments to this section could be withdrawn in order to get this on the floor and straighten out the parliamentary situation.

OKINO: Mr. Chairman, apparently there has been a bandit around here. The amendment designated as being offered by Judge Heen is really my amendment.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. I didn't mean to deprive you of that. Could we first have all prior amendments to Section 21 withdrawn by agreement?

BRYAN: I think we are a little bit out of order. I'd like to move for the adoption of Section 21. It was deferred so that we could reconsider it.

CHAIRMAN: That has been moved, the Chair believes.

BRYAN: That's right, but there's no reason that it should be the next matter of business other than some other section. We have deferred what we are on.

CHAIRMAN: You're quite right.

HOLROYDE: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we adopt Section 21. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried. The Chair was in error, that we debate Section 21. Will the Clerk please note.

HEEN: There is now on the desks of all the delegates an amendment to Committee Proposal No. 29, RD. 1. This bears the endorsement that it was offered by myself. That's a mistake. It really should have been in the name of Delegate Okino. This amendment now reads:

> Section 21. The governor and lieutenant governor, and any appointive officer for whose removal the consent of the Senate is required, may be removed from office upon conviction of impeachment for such causes as may be provided by law.
>
> The House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment of the governor and lieutenant governor and the Senate the sole power to try all such impeachments, and no such officer shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the Senate. Subject to the provisions of this paragraph, the legislature may provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment of such officers.
>
> The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment of the appointive officers hereinabove mentioned.
> Judgments in cases of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit under the state; but the person convicted may nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment according to law.

CHAIRMAN: You are now seconding Delegate Okino's motion to amend the section, I gather.

OKINO: I move the adoption of this amendment.

HEEN: Second the motion.

ASHFORD: May I ask a question? In the second paragraph, "the Senate the sole power to try all such impeachments," does that "all" refer to the impeachment of any appointive officer or does it refer merely to the governor and lieutenant governor, and if it be the latter should it not be stricken out?

HEEN: By putting that in the same paragraph it was intended to refer to the impeachment of the governor and lieutenant governor.

ASHFORD: May I address a question? Would not the chairman of the Legislative Committee feel that that interpretation would be strengthened by leaving out the "all"? In other words, it is "such impeachments," the impeachment of the governor and lieutenant governor.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Ashford, the Chair understands your difficulty. The word "such" would refer back in your judgment to either appointed officers or the governor and lieutenant governor when the word "all" was in there.

ASHFORD: When "all" is in there, yes.

CHAIRMAN: The chairman can quite agree with that.

HEEN: I move the deletion of the word "all."

OKINO: I accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegates strike out the word "all" and that's the amendment that's before the house.

A. TRASK: On a redraft, RD. 2, which is indicated by myself, it's a mistake also and should be Delegate Okino. The only difference between the draft 1 and draft 2 lies in the liberality that will be awarded and given, vested with the legislature, to try in whatever manner and for what causes appointive officers may be removed.

CHAIRMAN: Excuse me, Delegate Trask, you're moving for an amendment are you not?

A. TRASK: I am moving for an amendment, yes.

CHAIRMAN: Let the Chair get this straight. Is there a second to Delegate Trask's amendment?

A. TRASK: I move the amendment of RD. 1 by RD. 2. Amend Section 21 of Committee Proposal No. 29 to read as follows:

Section 21. The governor and lieutenant governor may be removed from office upon conviction of impeachment for such causes as may be provided by law. The House of Representatives shall have the sole power of impeachment and the Senate the sole power to try all impeachments of the governor and lieutenant governor. No such officer shall be convicted without concurrence of two-thirds of the members of the Senate.

The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment subject to the provisions of this section.

Judgments in cases of removal from office shall not extend further than to removal from office and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust or profit under the state; but the person convicted may nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment and punishment according to law.

Any appointive officer for whose removal the consent of the Senate is required may be removed for such causes and in such manner as provided by law.

NODA: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the amendment to Section 21 offered by Delegates Heen and Okino be amended and be substituted therefor by RD. 2, which is likewise printed and on the desk. Delegate Trask has the floor. It has different names, endorsements at the bottom. Does Delegate Tavares want to be recognized?

TAVARES: I raise a point of order, that actually I don't think Delegate Trask's proposed amendment is different in substance in any way from the other one. I think he may have intended it to be but as I read it, it doesn't change it at all, it just shifts the language around a little bit.

A. TRASK: May I discuss that. There is a substantial difference. The confusion in the discussion of this section is due to the fact that the governor and lieutenant governor and appointive officers are discussed in the commencement of this section. That's where the confusion is. In other words, I think it is the sense of this Convention that the governor and lieutenant governor shall be given a dignified state trial as such with all the proper attention that should be given such a trial of state. With respect to the appointive officers I do not think it is the sense of this Convention that they should be given a trial and impeachment process of equal dignity and order. So, that being the case, I have removed the expression "appointive officers" and relegated it to the last paragraph of that Section 21.

Now the difference, in answering Delegate Tavares' inquiry, if you will direct your attention to the Okino-Heen RD. 1, the third paragraph, you will note that, "The legislature shall by law provide for the manner and procedure of removal by impeachment of the appointive officers hereinabove mentioned." In other words there is no other process than by the process of impeachment whereby a person may be—an appointive officer particularly—may be removed, whereas if you will direct your attention to the last paragraph of the Okino-Trask amendment you will note that the removal of appointive officers shall be prescribed by law "for such causes and in such manner as may be provided by law."

Now it is my interpretation and understanding—that's where Delegate Tavares seems to differ with me—I say that the causes and the manner is certainly more elastic and broader than by the only one procedure of impeachment which is advocated by the Okino-Heen amendment. It certainly is my understanding that the sense of this Convention is not to make the removal of appointive officers difficult, but if the governor doesn't remove a more or less difficult - -

CHAIRMAN: Pardon me. May the Chair direct one thing to your attention. I just want to straighten out whether or not there's any difference. If you will examine the first sentence of RD. 1 it says "for such cases as may be provided by law." Wouldn't that be the same as the substance of your amendment?

HEEN: "For such causes."

A. TRASK: "For such causes." The situation is this, Mr. Chairman. I conferred with Judge Heen and his interpretation to me of how an appointive officer may be disposed of or removed, he says it shall be only by the process of impeachment. That is Delegate Heen's interpretation of the Okino-Heen amendment. I feel that the causes and the manner, the procedure for the removal of an appointive officer should be more elastic than mere handling by the House and Senate.

In other words I feel that if the House may decide to act as a grand jury and bring a charge against a rascal appointive officer whom the governor refuses to remove and the legislature therefore feels that it is in honor bound to act, therefore it may do so by impeachment, by the selection of a joint committee of both houses, or just by the Senate or just by the House, in whatever manner and for whatever causes. So I do feel that that is the sense of this Convention and that's why I urge that the language be made broader to include eauses and remedy and not to have the removal of appointive officers by impeachment only.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has got to dispose of this point of order. It seems to the Chair that this is a close question. Delegate Tavares, you have any further views on the point of order, whether Delegate Trask's motion is in order?

ROBERTS: I have a point of information which if answered might dispose of the question.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

ROBERTS: The question I want to raise is this. If we adopt the article as submitted by the committee on impeachment and leave out any reference to other appointive officers, doesn't the legislature have the power to provide by law for procedures and methods of impeachment?

CHAIRMAN: Absolutely.

ROBERTS: If they do, it seems to me that we ought to adopt the committee proposal and then leave it to the legislature to make such other provision as they may want to with regard to impeachment.

TAVARES: I beg to differ with the last speaker. The impeachment provision applies only to elective officers as it now stands. That's fine, but we want to extend it to appointive officers.

CHAIRMAN: His question was whether or not it could be by legislation.

TAVARES: I disagree there. The Constitution has now prescribed two methods of removal. One, impeachment of elective officers; the other one, the removal with the consent of the Senate, removal by the governor of appointive officers with the consent of the Senate. By implication you have excluded other methods of removal of those particular officers. As to those officers for whom no particular method is prescribed, it is true the legislature in setting up the office can also provide for methods of removal, but as to those officers for whom provision has been made, such as heads of principal departments, for a method of removal by the governor with the approval of the Senate, I say by implication you can't remove them any other way unless in another section of the Constitution you give that express power to provide by law.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is inclined to agree with that, Delegate Roberts. The Chair was in error a minute ago.

SHIMAMURA: Speaking to the point of order raised by the Chair - -

CHAIRMAN: It wasn't raised by the Chair.

SHIMAMURA: Very well, raised by someone, Mr. Chairman. I feel that this amendment by Delegate Trask, with all due deference to him, is out of order for this reason. The first paragraph of Delegate Trask's amendment is substantially similar to the first two paragraphs of Delegate Heen's amendment, but in the additional paragraphs Delegate Trask's amendment diverts from the matter of impeachment. It provides for removal for all causes not limited to impeachment. Therefore, I respectfully feel that at least as to the latter portion of this amendment, it is out of order and the amendment being whole and not separable should be ruled out of order.

MAU: With all due deference to the last speaker, although I don't agree with the amendment offered by Delegate Trask, I believe that his amendment is in order. There is a substantial difference in the method of removal of appointive officers. In the first instance, the amendment by Delegate Heen proposes that the removal of such appointive officers shall only be by impeachment. Under the Trask amendment it provides that the legislature may provide any other means, whether by impeachment or any other procedure. So I think there is a substantial difference.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is prepared to rule. This question is not free from doubt, but the Chair will rule that the Trask amendment is in order, and will now put the question.

FUKUSHIMA: In that event I wonder if Delegate Trask will accept an amendment by inserting the fourth paragraph before the third as it appears in his amendment. The paragraph reading, "Any appointive officer for whose removal," etc., insert that paragraph before the paragraph which reads, "Judgment in cases of removal," and that will clarify the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Will you state that again?

A. TRASK: I accept that, which is to make paragraph four of RD. 2, paragraph three, so that paragraph three would become paragraph four, Mr. Chairman, beginning with the word "Judgment" as the last paragraph.

KING: I would like to speak against the amendment offered by Delegate Trask for the simple reason that that paragraph four, which would now become paragraph three, would permit the legislature to dismiss an executive officer who had been confirmed by the Senate and whom the governor refused to remove with the consent of the Senate, on any cause at all not with any formal impeachment. By law, the legislature could provide some means of removing from office any one of the appointive officers of the governor's cabinet, heads of departments, with no formal impeachment and perhaps very little trial. It broadens the purpose of the original amendment very greatly.

This whole issue arose by Delegate Okino's desire to provide a means of removing officers who are appointed to office by the governor with the approval of the Senate when the governor refuses to remove them. It provides, and I think very properly, that such officers should be impeached. The legislature is left with the procedure of impeachment, the manner of trial, and that should be the limit of the legislative jurisdiction over that. Otherwise it could very easily be possible that the legislature could harass a department head without very much of a formal charge or trial. And therefore, I am opposed to the RD. 2 of this amendment but feel that the original amendment revised from Delegate Okino's offer by Delegate Heen should carry.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor of the amendment—this is the Trask amendment—signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The noes seem to have it. The motion is lost.

The question is now on the amendment.

ROBERTS: I am sorry to bring an amendment on this but I think the original proposal submitted by the committee had two sections in it which were extremely valuable and I think ought to be retained. If we are going to adopt the amendment proposed now, the Okino-Heen amendment, in the second paragraph of 29, RD. 1, at the beginning of the second sentence which starts "Subject," I would like to include a new sentence in there which would read as follows – this applies only to the impeachment trial of the governor and the lieutenant governor by the Senate – and the language would read as follows: "When sitting for that purpose, the members of the Senate shall be on oath or affirmation and the chief justice shall preside."

If I have a second to that, I'd like to speak to it. It's in the committee proposal.

TAVARES: For the purposes of enabling the speaker to discuss, I will second the motion.

ROBERTS: The language proposed by the committee followed very closely the language of the Federal Constitution. I am not arguing that everything in the Federal Constitution ought to be adopted by us. I haven't so argued before and I don't plan to argue that now. I do feel, however, that the removal of a governor or lieutenant governor on impeachment charges requires as careful a procedure and method for disposing of him, if he needs to be disposed of, in accordance with the best rules that we can lay down. It seems to me when the Senate sits for impeachment that it ought to sit and that it ought to be on oath or affirmation and that the chief justice ought to preside in those cases.

The argument might be presented that the governor is going to appoint the chief justice. That may be true, but so does the President of the United States appoint the justices of the Supreme Court. The justice who may preside may not be the one appointed by the specific governor on trial. We have provided for long tenure for our justices and it's possible obviously that the justice presiding will not be the one appointed by the governor. In any event, the justice presumably has to preside and the justice is required to give justice in any event.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the procedure with regard to impeachment of a governor is a pretty serious problem and it ought to be circumscribed in such manner that he be given adequate and full and careful trial. It seems to me these amendments, Mr. Chairman, to conform to the provisions of the Federal Constitution and the committee recommendations are in order.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts, just where would that amendment go.

ROBERTS: It goes in the second paragraph of the draft RD.1 as a new sentence after the word "Senate."

ASHFORD: After having the extremely agreeable experience of having the delegate endorse something from the Constitution of the United States, in counter-distinction to actions in the Style Committee, I would like to say that I am heartily in favor of having the chief justice preside. If he doesn't preside fairly, he can be impeached. But I would also like to know what's meant by "upon oath or affirmation." The Senate is upon oath or affirmation all the time.

CHAIRMAN: That is taken from the Federal Constitution and they are sitting as a high court of impeachment specifically when they try impeachment cases.

FUKUSHIMA: The Federal Constitution, when it provided that the President when he is being tried for impeachment the chief justice should preside, there was a reason for that. As you know the presiding officer of the Senate is the Vice President. It would be hardly conceivable for the Vice President to preside over the impeachment of the President. Here we don't have such a thing. So if we have the lieutenant governor here, he is not the presiding officer of the Senate. Therefore the amendment proposed by Delegate Roberts doesn't seem to be in order. There was a reason for the provision in the Federal Constitution which does not exist here in our Constitution.

FONG: What would happen in the case if the governor knew he was going to be impeached and he refused to appoint the chief justice.

CHAIRMAN: Then the office would succeed under the judicial article.

FONG: He is not chief justice, he is only acting chief justice.

CHAIRMAN: The judiciary article provides for succession and the associate justice will succeed to all the powers of the chief.

SHIMAMURA: I should like to speak in favor of Delegate Roberts' amendment. I believe this is a sound amendment because I think it will more greatly assure justice and fairness of the trial where the chief justice, who has knowledge of the law, is the presiding officer.

OKINO: The amendment offered by Delegate Roberts was in one of my amendments. It was left out. I was rising to accept the amendment so that the matter can be put to a vote. I do accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Is that amendment accepted, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: It's accepted.

MAU: I wonder if the movant would also accept this amendment to his amendment, "Two-thirds of the members present." It appears in line five of the second paragraph.

HEEN: That question came up before this committee I think yesterday and it was voted down to have it read this way.

MAU: It was discussed but I don't believe a vote was taken.

CHAIRMAN: Well, all prior amendments have been withdrawn. If you wish to make that amendment, the Chair will entertain it at this time.

MAU: I do make that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

SHIMAMURA: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: The word "present" would be added.

HEEN: That I think is a separate amendment, not tied up to the amendment made by Delegate Roberts.

CHAIRMAN: No, the Chair is not going to put that amendment in view of the fact that both the movant of the original amendment and the second have accepted the proposal of Delegate Roberts. Therefore, the parliamentary situation is there is one amendment by Delegate Mau, who would add the word "present" at the end of the expression "two-thirds of the members of the Senate present."

MAU: I had in mind as a matter of style, "two-thirds of the members present."

CHAIRMAN: In other words, you would conform to the Federal Constitution.

MAU: That's correct. I don't think "of the Senate" is necessary. Just surplusage.

H. RICE: I think we should defeat this amendment because you should have all the Senate present.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion is lost.

The Chair will now put the question on the amendment to Section 21. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

SAKAKIHARA: I now move that Section 21, as amended, be adopted.

ROBERTS: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 21, as amended, be now adopted. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

GILLILAND: Having voted in favor with the majority, at this time I move that this committee reconsider the action taken on Section 11 from Committee Proposal No. 29, the last paragraph there with respect to expenses of $1,000 a day for the legislature.

KAM: Second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we reconsider our action in regard to Section 11.

A. TRASK: Will that section be read, if you please. There are so many drafts of it.

CASTRO: Point of information. Is it proper to ask a movant of a motion to reconsider the reason for the motion? I think it would enlighten the vote. In other words, there is considerable in this section and I am sure that a motion to reconsider in this particular case, the movant probably doesn't have the entire section in mind, and I'd like to know so that I may vote more intelligently, the reason for the motion to reconsider.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Gilliland, do you desire to state your reason?

A. TRASK: Point of order. Since the Chair is having some time getting that particular amendment and since Mr. Gilliland has proposed it, let's have Mr. Gilliland read the section he is referring to, please.

NIELSEN: Point of order. Mr. Gilliland voted "aye" on the limiting of legislative spending, so he can't move for reconsideration, I don't think.

CHAIRMAN: That is just the reason he can, Delegate Nielsen. The Chair will declare a few minutes recess so we can get these amendments together.

(RECESS)

CASTRO: In regard to my question as to whether or not it is proper to ask the movant of a motion to reconsider his reason for wanting a reconsideration, if it is proper, I would like to direct that question to the Chair.

CHAIRMAN: As soon as the delegates take their seats, the Chair will acquaint the body with the status of the section. The Chair will endeavor to state the status of the section, the substance of it, without reading the exact language, unless the words are requested.

There was a motion by Delegate Roberts to amend Section 11, which would provide that the legislators receive salary and allowance prescribed by law. There was also a motion that the salary be fixed in the schedule. The second part of Delegate Roberts' motion involved a schedule for the first legislature. That schedule was adopted and provided for a salary of $2,500 for the general session and $1,500 for each budget session and $750 for each special session. There was also an amendment -- I might state that Delegate Roberts' motion was an amendment to the amendment offered by Delegate Rice, which left the second paragraph of Delegate Rice's amendment intact. That was voted upon and it was that paragraph which fixed the limit which the legislature could expend for employees. That was adopted. And that was fixed at $1,000 per calendar day during any general session and $500 per calendar day during any budget or special session. Those provisions now constitute, added up together, Section 11.

Does Delegate Gilliland desire to enlighten the body as to the reasons for his request for reconsideration?

ASHFORD: I'd like to correct part of that. I think Mr. Rice's amendment was an amendment to my amendment.

CHAIRMAN: That is technically incorrect because if the delegate will recall she withdrew her amendment at one time to permit Delegate Rice to put in the substance of the same thing in the delegate's amendment. Substantially you are correct, Delegate Ashford.

GILLILAND: Since voting on this Section 11 I have had further time, ample time, to study the cost and expenses of the legislature. Having been a member of the legislature at one time in 1947, I have come to the conclusion that the legislature cannot get along on $1,000 a day or $500 a calendar day as we voted for on this Section 11, so my intention is to have this section of the second paragraph of Section 11 be deleted altogether. That's the reason I'm asking for a reconsideration.

CHAIRMAN: And you are asking for a reconsideration of the entire section, is that correct?

GILLILAND: Of paragraph two of Section 11.

CHAIRMAN: Just the paragraph relating to fixing the maximum of expenses per diem of the legislature?

GILLILAND: That's right.

KING: He has to ask to reconsider the action taken in the adoption of the section before he can vote on a certain paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. The Chair will so rule. It has been moved and seconded that we reconsider the action taken.

ARASHIRO: Point of information. Are we going to reconsider the whole section or the second paragraph?

CHAIRMAN: The whole section.

PORTEUS: May I point out to the delegates, as I understand this particular motion, it is the intention to get at the particular section with respect to the $1,000 limitation, but because of having adopted the entire section you can't get after the paragraph unless you reconsider the action on the entire section.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

PORTEUS: But insofar as the salaries of legislators are concerned, that's in the schedule and that is not included in this motion.

CHAIRMAN: No, the Chair will rule otherwise on that.

PORTEUS: Pardon me, if you will read Section 11, the schedule of $2,500 is not in Section 11. The motion was to reconsider the action taken on Section 11. That leaves the $2,500 as set in the schedule quite apart from this motion. It will not be in order to vote again with respect to the pay of legislators because that is not written out in Section 11. That is put into the schedule and it's not in the motion and that's not what the gentleman is after. He's after the $1,000 limitation, as he stated.

FONG: I believe the speaker is correct in that attitude and I don't think there is any move here to reconsider the salary of $2,500. There is no move here to reconsider that salary, that salary will stay.

H. RICE: When you consider the section the whole section is open to amendment, not just part of the section.

CHAIRMAN: It is the Chair's understanding. Certainly, it was the substance of Delegate Roberts' motion. He made it very clear to this body that when he was changing the stated figure, the numbers that he didn't want, that he was doing so in abiding by the figure that this body had already voted upon, and he would offer at the appropriate time a schedule which would have the identical figures in it and that was done and that was carried. It seems to the Chair that in that framework it's improper to consider the section apart from the schedule.

FONG: May I ask for a ruling? The movant asked for reconsideration of the last paragraph of Section 11, paragraph two. Under that request I believe it is proper for us just to discuss paragraph two.

CHAIRMAN: Don't you agree that the entire matter of the salary and the expenses were tied up in Delegate Roberts' motion? You do not agree with that?

FONG: No, I do not agree with that.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will ask Delegate Roberts, being the author of this impasse, to enlighten the body.

ROBERTS: I am not the author of the impasse. I would like to state that so far as my amendment was concerned and the rulings of the Chair are concerned, they apply to Section 11. It is true that the section, the second paragraph, would appear in the schedule. Technically I think the Chair could rule either way on this question, that having adopted Section 11, Section 11 consisting of two parts, paragraph one of Section 11, paragraph two to go into the schedule, he therefore could rule in favor of reopening the second section. The section dealing with paragraph two of the Rice modified amendment deals with another part of that same proposal.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that once you open the section, however, you open the section to any amendment unless the Chair clearly rules beforehand that opening Section 11 will not permit the opening of the section dealing with the salaries. Then it would be open for amendment when it came in. If the Chair would rule that it's not open, then the question could be opened on reconsideration.

KING: I have before me a copy of the amendment to Committee Proposal No. 29, amending Section 11 to read as follows: "Section 11. Compensation of members. The members of the legislature shall receive such salary and allowances as may be prescribed by law," and something about "the amount thereof shall neither be increased nor diminished during the term for which they are elected." That language was changed. Then, "No salary shall be payable when the Senate alone is convened." Then there's quite a break in the amendment offered by Delegate Roberts and the language goes on, "The following to appear in the schedule." So I think that the point raised by Delegate Porteus is well taken, that the action on the salaries is not a part of Section 11 but is going to be a part of the schedule. We adopted it to be incorporated in the schedule when the schedule is taken up, and this first paragraph pertains only to the first paragraph of Section 11 and that has only one more short paragraph.

ASHFORD: I am not in agreement with some of the previous speakers. I think that first section, if we choose to amend it now, we can go right back to where it was before the amendment and write in the salaries.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is trying to get its bearings here. Will you just hold that a minute?

PORTEUS: I wonder if you would give me the opportunity to make a suggestion which may bring this matter to a head. That is if the movant—if I can get his attention, Delegate Gilliland—if the delegate were to make a motion that he moves to reconsider Section 11 for the purpose of dealing with the paragraph with respect to the limitation of expenditures for employees of the legislature, that it would mean that the section was being reconsidered for that purpose only and the motion to reconsider carrying on that basis would leave that paragraph alone for consideration. That would dispose of this other question.

CHAIRMAN: That doesn't seem to dispose of the Chair's problems.

BRYAN: Might I help the Chair, please? As I recall, there was a ruling on this very subject yesterday in terms of whether we could vote on Section 11 and the part appearing in the schedule at the same time. Does the Chair recall that? It was finally ruled that they were actually separate things. I think that that might help clarify the present problem.

H. RICE: I move to reconsider the whole Section 11.

FONG: Second the motion.

FUKUSHIMA: I rise to a point of order. There's another motion pending.

CHAIRMAN: The point of order is sustained.

H. RICE: I'll amend the motion that we consider the whole section.

CHAIRMAN: That's the basic question that the Chair has to decide. I think we'll take about a two-minute recess while I read the minutes.

A. TRASK: Delegate Gilliland has withdrawn his motion.

DELEGATE: No.

(Confusion)

KING: Just one small point. Delegate Rice, I think, is not qualified to move to reconsider. If the Chair wants a two minute recess I think it might be quite in order.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The Convention will please come to order. Will the delegates please take their seats.

It is the ruling of the Chair that Section 11 alone is being reconsidered in view of the fact that we voted upon the schedule separately. However, the Chair will point out that in the event Section 11 is reconsidered, it would then be open to any member to incorporate or make by reference or otherwise the schedule, so therefore the entire subject of the salaries of the legislators would be open by that method.

Are you ready for the question? The question is on the motion for reconsideration. The Clerk will please call the roll.

MAU: I wonder if you would ask the delegates to use their mikes. We can't hear those who are voting in the front.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has requested that several times.

[Delegate Tavares entered the Hall during the voting and voted on the question.]

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule that Delegate Tavares is out of order at this time.

KING: Delegate Tavares has entered the hall before vote was announced and he may vote.

CHAIRMAN: He may vote any time before the vote is -- He can't participate in debate.

TAVARES: I simply asked and I vote "aye."

Ayes, 34. Noes, 22 (Akau, Arashiro, Ashford, Castro, Corbett, Kanemaru, Kawahara, Kawakami, Kellerman, Larsen, Luiz, Nielsen, C. Rice, H. Rice, Roberts, Sakai, Serizawa, A. Trask, J. Trask, Wirtz, Wist, Anthony). Not voting, 7 (Ihara, Lee, Mizuha, Ohrt, Phillips, Silva, Woolaway).

CHAIRMAN: The motion to reconsider is carried.

ASHFORD: May I now ask if there were some who voted "kanalua" whose names were not subsequently called?

CHAIRMAN: They were all called.
Section 11 is now before the body.

FONG: I now move that we delete the second paragraph of Section 11.

FUKUSHIMA: Second it.

CASTRO: Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute, Delegate Castro.
The Chair will direct your attention to the fact that the only thing that is left is the committee proposal. The entire Section 11 is reconsidered. And what is your motion then, delegate? Should there not be a motion to adopt the section originally? The Chair will entertain a motion that Section 11, as reported by the committee, be adopted.

CASTRO: I so move.

FUKUSHIMA: I second that motion.

FONG: Mr. Chairman, I now move that that Section 11 be amended to delete the second paragraph.

FUKUSHIMA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair does not understand at all what Delegate Fong is talking about. There's only one paragraph in Section 11.

BRYAN: I think, in order to clarify the thing, I will move that we adopt Section 11, as amended.

CHAIRMAN: That has been moved by Delegate Castro and appropriately seconded. Now the question is the vote on Section 11.

BRYAN: Point of information. That means my motion was Section 11 as reported by the Committee of the Whole yesterday?

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole has not made any report.

BRYAN: All right, as amended by the Committee of the Whole yesterday.

FUKUSHIMA: That motion has already been made and seconded.

KING: The motion offered by Delegate Fong referred to the amendment which I think was originally proposed by Delegate Harold W. Rice which split Section 11 into two paragraphs. The first paragraph was amended and adopted, and then the second paragraph was adopted.

CHAIRMAN: That's not now before the house. We've reconsidered everything that we did yesterday. The only thing before the house is Section 11.

FONG: May I restate my motion? I move that Section 11 be amended to read as follows: substitute the word "$2,500" for the word "$1,500."

ROBERTS: Mr. Chairman.

CROSSLEY: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Fong has the floor. Proceed, Delegate Fong. One at a time.

CROSSLEY: Point of order. The Chair has just ruled that the section before us is the original Section 11. That is not what we voted to reconsider. We voted to reconsider our action yesterday in adopting Section 11, as amended. That is what we reconsidered.

DELEGATE: Point of order.

CROSSLEY: I have not finished stating my point of order, please. Therefore I think the Chair is out of order in stating that what we voted to reconsider was the original section, not what we had adopted. We voted to reconsider the action that we took yesterday.

FONG: I think the point is well taken.

A. TRASK: Point of order. I had requested the Chair, when Mr. Gilliland first brought up this subject of reconsideration, to inform this body what the movant wanted reconsidered. He failed to do so and I think the Chair is right in opening up the subject and leave it to the committee proposal Section 11. They refused to bring up that subject and to read the precise matter at hand because they were fearful of bringing up the question of compensation. They wanted to limit the attention of this body just to what they were interested in and nothing else.

CASTRO: My motion, which has been duly seconded and is before this committee, was that Section 11, as amended, be adopted. That has been seconded and that is what is before this house. So that my understanding is that Section 11, as amended, starts out with a paragraph on compensation of members and the second paragraph is regarding the calendar day limitation of the expenses of both houses, and the intention of my motion, Mr. Chairman, was to place whatever motion the opponents of the amended section have before the committee. So I really believe that at the moment the motion that Delegate Fong was about to make is in order because the motion to adopt is now before the committee.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair was trying to get Delegate Fong's motion and all these points of order were raised. Will you please state your motion, Delegate Fong?

FONG: I believe that the points raised by Delegate Crossley and Mr. Castro are well taken. My amendment is that Section 11 be amended to delete from that section the second paragraph - -

CHAIRMAN: Just a minute, what Section 11 are you talking about?

FONG: Section 11 as we have before this assembly, which is the Section 11 which we adopted.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understands that.

FUKUSHIMA: I now second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: What paragraph do you want to delete, Delegate Fong?

FONG: The second paragraph.

ROBERTS: I think it would help the situation if Delegate Fong would read the specific section he would like to have deleted so that the body would know specifically what he wants deleted.

FONG: The paragraph to be deleted will be - -

A. TRASK: Point of order, let us have stated for now and all time what the entire section is that we are considering.

FONG: We have been stating that for the last two minutes, Mr. Chairman.
The paragraph reads as follows:

> In no case shall the total expenses for officers and employees for each house exceed the sum of $1,000 per calendar day during any general session, nor the sum of $500 per calendar day during any budget or any special session, based upon the average - -

I didn't get the other words on that.

HEEN: That is not correct. I think the word "expenses" was changed to "compensation."

FONG: I think that was it, yes.

CASTRO: There's also a period after the word "session."

CHAIRMAN: We will leave that to the Style Committee, if it ever gets it.

CASTRO: I have a question which I think goes to the very root of this motion and I'd like to direct it to the Chair. I'd like to ask the movant what the reason for his motion to delete is, because if it is my understanding that his reason is that the limitations are too tight then I would gather from that that he would have no objection to further amendments to this section which would attempt to make the financial operation of the legislature more efficient. My question is, what is the reason for the motion to delete?

FONG: The reason for deleting that was well expressed yesterday by the speakers who spoke against this amendment. We feel that we shouldn't hog tie the legislature, that we should have no limitation as far as the legislature is concerned in this matter.

RICHARDS: I feel that it is perfectly proper to delete this. We do not know what the legislature is going to be faced with; we do not know what type of inflation might come along which would change salary schedules, we do not know what can happen in the next ten years. It's the same situation as faced this Convention when the last legislature in a matter of less than two years ago picked the figure of $250,000 out of the air to run this Convention and we find out that they were very wrong. Now we are putting in something in the Constitution that isn't just two years away but is going to run ten years. I think that it's entirely out of order for this body to put something in when we don't know what the conditions are going to be and will not be able to take care of the situation.

AKAU: As a direct antithesis of what is just being said, why then did we stipulate the money for the governor, the money for the lieutenant governor and other purposes that we have been incorporating. In other words we are being very inconsistent, we stipulate something in one place and then we say it smells wrong if we put it elsewhere.

RICHARDS: In answering the statement of the last speaker - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Lai is recognized.

LAI: I can answer that question. I think the salaries set in this Constitution would be more than enough to support the governor himself, but I am in favor of this motion to delete this paragraph because we have no concrete evidence that we can run the legislature with a thousand dollars a day. Nothing has been shown to us yesterday or today with figures that we can run with that amount. Another thing, the fluctuation of the American dollar has gone up and down the last few years and you know we talk about basing our value of the dollar on the cost of living. I don't think we can do that because the value of the dollar in buying merchandise or cost of living is not the same as the value of a dollar in hiring help. Sometime you have foodstuff plentiful, that's where you have prices that are low. That's not the case with help. If you have a shortage of special help, of special type of help, you find that the salaries are going to be high. So I don't think to set a specified amount of $1,000 would be very practical and I think this is dangerous.

MAU: I was one of those who voted for reconsideration because I wanted to give the proponents of any new motions they would make a chance to give us any new material they have. So far I'm not convinced that this paragraph should be deleted. Yesterday, I recall, the figures that were presented by Mrs. Kellerman, and I'm very, very grateful to her for the information she gave to this Convention, and I think the people at large would be very interested in that information. But until I can be shown that it was necessary, for instance, in the last session to spend close to a half a million dollars for clerical help, I'm not ready to delete this paragraph.

H. RICE: When the great sovereign state of California can limit their regular expenses of salaried employees to $300 per regular session and $200 for a special session, it seems to me that we're very liberal here in setting a limit of $1,000. Of course, I know there is a lot of unemployment in the territory and probably the body in power would like to spread their patronage over more people, build up the printing committee with a lot more people than they need, but it doesn't make sense to me. If we don't put a limit here, the legislature themselves will not be able to do it. It's shown how the expenses of the legislature have grown year after year. It just doesn't make sense.

HAYES: I would like to state my reasons here why I voted against this section here. For the simple reason first that I do not wish to put restrictions on those who will come into the future state of Hawaii in this section. I'm not one of those legislators - - I can say, and look you in the eye and say that I have had a lot of pies to split in quarters. I am not that type of legislator that has had or has ever done such a thing as that. In spite of that, in spite of the fact that I do not have about ten or three or four people to work for me in the legislature, I still feel that there is a certain principle in this section, that I have no right to come here and put restrictions such as this for the new legislators that may come in to be elected to the legislature.

Then, too, Mr. Chairman, right here in this convention, you and I know that as we look around here we have had many people who are working here that perhaps we should have done away with them. Have we? The principle is the same, Mr. Chairman, and let's leave to the leadership of the legislature to decide for themselves, and if the people don't like that kind of leadership, then let them defeat them at the next election.

SMITH: I was one that voted for reconsideration for one fact, that—more on the sentiments of Delegate Richards—I'd like to ask the Reference Bureau for the information as to how they arrived at their figures and how the $1,000 was arrived at. I think it's very important that if we sit down and try to figure out -- I don't know a single thing about the clerical staff, but I do know this, that if we sit down and take into consideration the cost of lawyers and the clerks and the overtime that they do work, the time that is needed, I'm very leery of putting down in the Constitution a statement that they shall only be able to work under a set figure. If they would limit the number of persons working, as some of the other states I believe have, maybe that's a different thing, but I certainly am reconsidering it on that thought.

FONG: I'd like to give the members some idea of how the people work in the legislature. When I first went into the legislature I had no inkling of how hard the clerks worked, but being Speaker of the House in the last session I was faced with the problem of seeing that all these things were to come out on the calendar for the next day, seeing that these bills that were enacted into law were sent to the governor and seeing that everything was run right. As Speaker of the House I feel that the people who work for the legislature are really doing a service to the Territory of Hawaii. We begrudge them the salary of say $17 a day but do you know, Mr. Chairman, that those people come to work at 7:30 or 8:00 o'clock and they don't go home until 3:00 or 4:00 o'clock the next morning, that again the next day they've got to get to the legislature and report to the legislature at 8:00 o'clock and sometimes they are excused for another hour at 9:00 o'clock and they work throughout. Many of them work for fourteen, fifteen, sixteen hours a day doing the work of the legislature.

Now you have seen some of the stenographers here in this Convention work. I understand that some of our clerks do not go home until 1:00 o'clock in the morning or 12:00 o'clock at night. Now, do you begrudge these people paying them $17 or $20 a day for doing work which ordinarily will require three people's time to do the work?

Now as Speaker of the House I feel that those people who come to the legislature to work for sixty days only—remember this is not permanent work, it is temporary work, work for sixty days—working during those long hours of the day, they are really doing a service to the Territory and I can't see how we can set a limit on the amount of pay we are going to give those people, aside from the economic factors in the community.

DOI: I am in agreement with the ideas expressed by the amendment. Yesterday after Delegate Tavares' amendment to the amendment was defeated, I cannot see how we can vote for this amendment as is in the present form. Delegate Tavares' amendment was to meet the fluctuation in the value of the dollar. Now that that has been defeated there is no sense -- reason why we should vote for the amendment in the present form. I am more fearful of freezing the expenses at $1,000 than the abuse that might be exercised by the legislators.

ROBERTS: I voted against the proposal which was adopted on the floor yesterday. I believe the record is clear as to the basic reasons. I think the action yesterday has served its purpose. The purpose was to call attention to the fact that our legislative expenses other than salaries have been high, comparatively. I do believe that it is not appropriate to place in the Constitution an intent to criticize actions of a group or body.

Our Constitution has to be regarded as a document which will remain in existence for many years to come. We have written a very difficult section in our Constitution dealing with revisions and amendments. I say it will be extremely difficult to amend our Constitution. I can't see writing anything in our Constitution dealing with specific funds and allotments of money, regardless of the basic value and purposes for which the amendment was intended. As a matter of statute I think we could do it. As a matter of publicity and action in the community I think we ought to do it, but I cannot see how we can write into our Constitution a limitation of this type, no matter how desirable, because of the difficulty of amendment and because we've made no allowances and no provision for modification based on the appropriate changes either in prices or other methods as suggested yesterday by amendments. I think the proposal ought to be defeated.

KING: I rise to support the motion to delete this last paragraph. I voted against the paragraph for somewhat the same reasons just mentioned by Delegate Roberts. I don't think it's good constitutional law to write a limitation into the Constitution on the expenses of the legislature. As a matter of fact, the legislative branch as one of the three coordinated branches of government is the least expensive branch to the taxpayer. When you add the salaries together and the expenses of the legislature it does not compare in dollars and cents with the executive branch or the judiciary.

Now I feel that we're going way out of line to say that for the next ten years at least, until there's another Constitutional Convention, the legislature shall be restricted in its expenditures to $1,000 a day per house, and we've made no provision in there for the expenses that carry over after the legislature has adjourned, and there is a great deal of clean up work that needs to be done. So I feel that the original paragraph should be deleted and I speak in favor of the motion made by Delegate Fong.

I'd like to add one more word. I am neither a member of the legislature nor a prospective one and those who may feel that the members of the legislature are speaking from personal interest—because I do believe you're doing them an injustice when you do that—they are speaking from experience. But certainly you cannot apply that criticism to my opposition to this paragraph.

LAI: I want to ask the Convention one question. Can you tell me sincerely, that the help for the last legislature, half of them are useless and not necessary? Now, if you can't answer the question, I hope you vote to delete this paragraph.

RICHARDS: I would like to point out something here. We've been talking a great deal about how the payroll has been padded. In this sheet that was prepared by the Legislative Reference Bureau that was discussed the other day when we took our previous action, there was one line that wasn't pointed out, I think inadvertently, but that is the line, "Percentage employee cost to total cost." In 1929 it was 63.8 per cent. In 1949 it was 63.4 per cent. In other words, all the costs have gone up and it hasn't been just the padding of payroll that seems to be indicated here.

ASHFORD: I would like to say that I voted against this amendment yesterday because it seemed to me clearly a restriction that should not be in the Constitution and I followed the reasoning that has been discussed here on the floor repeatedly, but this morning I voted against reopening it because I am very much concerned by the apparent growing tendency to reopen what has been amply discussed and voted on.

ARASHIRO: As I have stated yesterday that I thought that the intent of the amendment was a very good one except that I had a grave doubt in myself whether the $1,000 was sufficient, but after thinking it over and voting for it I prefer the legislature to be a legislative body and not an employing body and that is the reason why I thought maybe the printing and other jobs can be contracted out to some contractor and we need not worry about how long the clerks work or how late the clerks work and we could get away from that worry and forget about employees completely.

I also made a suggestion that maybe we'd rather have the Civil Service Department or the Unemployment Department of the government to furnish us with the employees that are necessary, and the $1,000 that was limited to us was for the caring of the chief clerk and other employees or officers that were of that particular profession. That is the reason why I voted for it and I still think that we can go by with it, except if some amendment should be made, then I would vote for it. But I'm still in favor of the intention of that amendment and if that amendment is killed I prefer the employment part of the legislative body will be completely divorced from the legislature and some other agent should handle that.

KELLERMAN: If there is no one else who would wish to speak I suppose I -- Mr. Rice has granted that I may close the debate since this paragraph was originally my motion.

MAU: I desire to speak if the lady desires to close the debate.

CHAIRMAN: The lady has yielded, Delegate Mau.

MAU: Thank you. There's been a remark, Mr. Chairman, that the lady always wants to have the last say.

CHAIRMAN: Housewife politicians yesterday.

MAU: There's been no answer given to the figure, for instance, that was used yesterday and is on the sheet that was furnished to show why in the legislative session which lasted for sixty-three days, for instance, one of the officers, the sergeant-at-arms, was present for one hundred and forty-one days. However, I don't believe that there has been any padding of payroll. I agree that there possibly have been raises in the salaries of the various employees due to the high cost of living.

But I think essentially we must come down to this basic point that this paragraph does not belong in the Constitution. There have been many of us who have argued that the Constitution should be a concise document, that legislative matters be left to the legislature. I think that we must look at it in this sense, that if we disagree with the enormous amounts of money that may be spent for legislative employees during the sessions, then we must place that responsibility upon the legislators. After all they are elected by the people and let them carry that responsibility. By voting to delete this it does not mean that I give my consent or agree to a total of close to half a million dollars that was spent in the last session. I do believe that economies could have been practiced, but I do not believe that such a provision belongs in the Constitution.

TAVARES: As one of those who advocated this amendment and voted for it, I think I owe this Convention and myself an explanation if I vote contrary, which I'm going to do. I believe very strongly in the principle of what this thing is trying to accomplish but I have now been convinced by talking to others and thinking the matter over myself that there are so many holes in it anyhow that I don't think it will accomplish its purpose.

However, I want to say that I can't help but feel that this Convention has demonstrated that by pooling employees and by choosing more competent employees they can save money. I do believe there is substantial ground for improvement in the legislative expenses, and without trying to point the finger at any one I do believe that our legislature owes it to the public now and in the future first of all to choose more competent help. We won't resent paying help that's really competent. We do resent, for instance, employing clerks who leave out a whole line when they're checking and don't pick it up, which has been my experience. Have it picked up after the law has passed and sent to the governor. Even in engrossing that has happened. That was not the job of competent clerks, it was the job of some clerks who at times were not fully first class stenographers. I am not pointing the finger at any clerk either. That type of clerk should be given a clerkship other than engrossing and things like that. But I do say there is plenty of grounds for taking out some of the water and I believe that this is going to have some effect in that respect.

I am going to vote now to delete the amendment because I am convinced it would not accomplish its purpose.

APOLIONA: I voted against this amendment yesterday for two reasons. First, because I believe that it is purely statutory and secondly, the proponents of this amendment referred only to the compensation of the hired help. Why is it so that no reference was made to the cost expense of carrying out the work of the legislature, and that is paper costs, pencils, ink, and so forth. I would contend that the proponents of this amendment know that the cost of the different items necessary to carry out the successful work of the legislature varies and so does the hired help vary. And in response to my good friend Delegate Rice from Maui saying that the California hired help costs -- compensation is much less than the Territory of Hawaii, I would say that our people here are much better than the people in California.

NIELSEN: In this large book it says, "The temptation to reward the politically faithful and to repay political favors through appointment to legislative office or employment has resulted in the establishing of both constitutional and statutory limitations on the legislature's power to choose its officers and employees," and in the Lord's prayer it says, "Lead us not into temptation." I think we ought to lead the legislators away from temptation.

ARASHIRO: One more word I want to inject over here is that it's hard for a politician to correct its own evil and a non-political assembly of this sort may be able to help. Because I had an experience in the legislature where people from Kauai came over specially to work in the legislature and the number of jobs that we were entitled to were limited and we only can give so many jobs, but the moment we gave to the one that we thought were most qualified, the one that couldn't get the job went back and said I was a no-good legislator and everything that I did in the legislature was no good. Maybe they're right. I don't know. But if we can have something that we do not have to go into the employment business, then I think this will be something good for the legislature. And that is the thing I want to prevent, I don't care how it is done, but I'd like to have something in that line to correct that sort of a thing.

KELLERMAN: May I answer some of the points that have been made against my proposal and I think there are answers to every point that has been made. I'll begin with number one. No figures have been given to support the reasonableness of the figures of $1,000 per house per calendar day. I don't think we need a complete breakdown for the future to obtain those figures. I call to your attention one more time, because it has been misunderstood and misunderstood by the press also in one instance, we are running this Convention with 63 delegates, 78 employees, paying rent, paying for a loud speaker system, paying for all of our supplies for less than $1,200 per day. That includes the salaries of the 63 delegates, it includes all supplies, it includes rent, it includes loud speakers and it includes the salaries of the 78 employees. I think they've done an excellent job. Admittedly they have worked hard and they have worked overtime.

That leads me to the second point. I think the first point is answered. The second point, my proposal to limit the expenses was not directed against the per diem pay of those who worked and performed their jobs. I know they work overtime. I know they come early and they stay late. I know it would be impossible to fix a classified pay for people who work on that type of schedule and that wholeheartedly. I know there are many others who do not work that way. It was directed against an overall which includes the many who are not capable and efficient and working in that manner and it includes those who, according to the schedules of payment, have been paid for days as much as sixty days in excess of the length of the full session, including the calendar days within that session. On the work, I think Mr. Fong brought out the point that those who worked so hard worked only sixty days. That's one reason that I mentioned the extension of time. In many cases I must believe that extension is not and cannot be justified.

On the point of this being the least expensive of three of the branches of the government, I think that argument is extremely weak. As also was pointed out yesterday, the amount of money spent by the legislature on its own expenses is something like one-twentieth of one per cent or one-tenth of one per cent of the total amount appropriated. Ladies and gentlemen, the Congress of the United States is about to adopt an appropriation bill for one fiscal year of twenty-eight billion dollars. I wonder what per cent of that the Congress of the United States costs and if that makes to you any sense as an argument whatsoever. If I put my hand in your pocket and take out ten dollars I am guilty of stealing, whether it's ten dollars or $10,000. It is not a question of diminumus, it is a question of if we are paying more than we need to pay and we are paying it for political patronage, let's cut it out. It isn't a question of the dollar value.

Now the question has been brought up also on "leave it to the citizens to correct the evil." I think that's a very excellent idea. I would like for all of the citizens to know the evil. I would like for them to carry it in their minds long enough and have the ability to direct it against the legislators who are responsible. I would like to ask the proponent of that idea how are the citizens going to know which legislator is responsible. He'll never get it from a confession of the legislator and he will always get the answer that it wasn't my doing, it was everybody else. And if you suggest that the citizens can turn down at the next polls every member who was elected in the preceding legislature on the theory they'll get them all because we can't tell which ones are guilty of this, then I think you are mistaken. The citizens don't act that way, they would be unjustified in acting that way. I had it from one of the members who has proposed the deletion of this amendment only yesterday the flat statement that the memory of the public is very short and if you make friends with them in the interim between anything that occurs in one session they don't like, they are very, very prone to forget it by the next.

I think the last point made that this is statutory only, I give you gentlemen an example of what you can expect from a legislature curtailing its expenses by statute. If you have had ears to the ground or to the ceiling or just in the middle of the room in the last 24 or 36 hours, I think you will note that there has been a great deal of work to obtain a necessary vote of 32 to 34 people to get reconsideration of this proposal and that work has been done by the legislators. Some of them, I shall not include all. I think that certainly points very clearly the fact that the legislators need the help of others than themselves to clear their houses. I do not believe the citizens' body are capable of doing it as well as this body.

For that reason, those many reasons, I feel the proposal that was introduced and adopted yesterday was well thought out and was well adopted, and I would ask that you defeat the amendment to delete.

Before I sit down I'd like a ruling from the Chair on one point. If by any chance this proposal -- the amendment -- I beg your pardon, the motion to delete carries I propose to introduce a second amendment. Will that be in order under the ruling that we now have Section 11 before us?

CHAIRMAN: Relating to what section?

KELLERMAN: Relating to the same subject.

CHAIRMAN: Well, if it is just a re-hash of what we're voting on it would be out of order.

KELLERMAN: It is not, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Well, the Chair will say it would be in order then.

LYMAN: I heard a figure of $1,200 per day mentioned. I am a little curious as to how that figure was arrived at. It seems to me that the average cost per day that we were paid was $1,000 a day for the delegates alone and I can't understand how the $200 would cover the cost of all other help, plus all other expenses.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Castro, you have those figures?

CASTRO: I gave Delegate Kellerman some figures. The Convention has or will by July 15th have spent $181,000. Those figures can be broken down to three items; $136,000 which is the balance of the appropriation available to us for the running of the Convention, $30,000 which we received from the Governor, and an additional $15,000 which we received from the governor; $181,000. The pay of the delegates—and this is the point that needs correcting—the pay of the delegates is $63,000. We have run -- by July 15th we will have run one hundred days. If you subtract the pay of the delegates from the $181,000 you'll get $118,000 for 100 days, which is $1,180 cost for this Convention exclusive. Now, if you add the cost of the delegates it is still under the $2,000, it is in fact $1,810.

Now, I gave Delegate Kellerman a round figure, the $1,200 was without the salary of the delegates, and I wish to apologize for giving her the incorrect figure because it was quickly arrived at.

However, this does not shake the point of view and the argument that Delegate Kellerman brings forth which is that this Convention with its volume of work has proceeded in one hundred days of work at the mean cost of $1,180 per day which is just short of $1,200.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question.

DELEGATE: Question.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the motion to delete the paragraph and that relates to the paragraph the Chair will read:

> In no case shall the total expense for officers and employees for each house exceed the sum of $1,000 per calendar day during any general session, nor the sum of $500 per calendar day during any budget or any special session.

FONG: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: A roll call demanded? Voting aye will favor the deletion of the section which was adopted yesterday. Clerk will please call the roll.

Ayes, 35. Noes, 19 (Akau, Arashiro, Castro, Dowson, Kanemaru, Kawahara, Kawakami, Kellerman, Larsen, Luiz, Nielsen, C. Rice, H. Rice, Serizawa, A. Trask, J. Trask, Wirtz, Wist, Anthony). Not voting, 9 (Bryan, Crossley, Ihara, Lee, Mizuha, Ohrt, Phillips, Silva, Woolaway).

The paragraph is deleted.

KELLERMAN: I have another amendment that I'd like to make to Section 11.

CHAIRMAN: Has it been printed?

KELLERMAN: I have it here for distribution. While it's being distributed I will read it: Section

> There shall be an executive secretary of the legislature - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kellerman, wouldn't it be a good idea if we distribute this? The Chair could declare a few minutes recess while it's distributing.

(RECESS)

KING: I move that we take a recess until 2:00 o'clock p.m.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. So ordered.

Afternoon Session

CHAIRMAN: The committee will come to order.

HEEN: At the time we took the recess this morning we were considering an amendment that was offered by Delegate Kellerman.

CHAIRMAN: It has now been printed and is on the desks of the delegates. You offer that amendment, Delegate Kellerman?

KELLERMAN: I offer the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

> Section ___. There shall be a secretary of the legislature who shall be selected by the legislature in the same manner as the auditor and shall serve for a term of eight years. All employees of the legislature other than the chief clerk and sergeant-at-arms of each house shall be appointed by the secretary from lists of those who have qualified for the respective positions by civil service examination, and shall be supervised by the secretary.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

KELLERMAN: May I make a slight correction in the draft which you have on your desks before we start discussing it?

CHAIRMAN: Has the amendment been seconded?

CASTRO: I'm waiting for the chance to second.

KELLERMAN: Insert the word "executive" before the word "secretary" in each of the three places in which the word "secretary" appears. That's line one, line six and line eight, "executive secretary."

CHAIRMAN: It would read "an executive secretary."

KELLERMAN: "There shall be an executive secretary," and then in the other two places the preceding word is "the" so that will not have to be changed. The word "executive" appears before "secretary" in line six and again in line eight or nine, whichever it is.

HEEN: Shouldn't that be "legislative secretary"?

CASTRO: I second the motion to adopt the amendment as changed by the movant.

KELLERMAN: If I may, I wish to speak very briefly on this. I don't think the point need to be belabored.

I think all of the expressed opposition to my preceding proposed amendment, which was eventually deleted, went to the fact - - two facts. One, that it would be impossible to estimate in advance what expenses, what the employees' compensation might necessarily become due to fluctuating value of the dollar. Also that it was bad constitutional drafting to write into a constitution a maximum dollar figure which would be very difficult to amend were that found to be inadequate due to now unforeseen circumstances either in volume of work or in the value of the dollar.

My proposed amendment deletes all reference to money. It incorporates the expressed statement of almost every speaker who spoke against the preceding amendment that he was deeply in sympathy with the idea of curtailing legislative expenses where they were unjustified, that we need persons who are qualified to perform the work and those unqualified should not be employed, that we needed to put this on a much more businesslike basis. It seems to me my proposed amendment accomplishes all of those expressed beliefs, intentions and ideas.

You will notice that this provision would authorize the selection by both houses of the legislature, in the same manner that it appoints an auditor, to select an executive secretary who shall serve for a term of eight years, therefore will not be subject to pressure by any one legislature, which was our reason for putting an eight year term for the auditor. He would serve as what I would call an administrator, a business manager of the legislature to get away from the evils of the political system of patronage, to get away from unnecessary expenditures of the tax dollar.

I think it may amuse the delegates and also be a point of interest that it has long been recognized that just plain political patronage is an evil of the political system. I have often heard it expressed that it is unfortunately a necessary evil. I would put that "necessary" in exactly the same position as the arguments that were made against women being given the vote when I was a child. I remember it very well. I wasn't too young, I'll admit that.

CHAIRMAN: How old is the delegate?

KELLERMAN: Old enough. I don't mind, we can call that personal privilege. I would just as soon tell you, but the point is this. I lived in a small town in Virginia and before women were given the vote, election day was a day when women and children stayed off the streets entirely. The men went to the polls, many of them got drunk. There were a great many fights around the polls, the election booths therefore were no places for ladies. During the evening there were torch light parades when the returns came in and there was more drinking and there were more fights. Now perhaps none of that ever occurred in the Paradise of the Pacific. It occurred in the good old states of Virginia and North Carolina.

Those very reasons were used against women getting the vote. They were necessary evils of the political system. On election day no lady who justified the title would be caught dead at an election booth because she would be disgraced to be in the presence of such drinking and such uncouth behavior which always went on. May I point out that since women have been given the vote the election booth has changed its character. It is now the place where children play all day with the campaigners' cards and have a beautiful time. I've seen no fights, I've heard no obscenity, and it is all very well behaved. I think the evil of patronage in the legislature can go the same way as the disgraceful election booth.

CASTRO: This gives to the delegates of this Constitutional Convention a chance to show the way to all of the sister states where they in their own time have failed. This attempt is not new. If incorporated into the Constitution it will be new. It will be the first incorporation into a constitution of its type, but to show you that the thinking is not new, I would direct your attention to the fact that Wisconsin's Constitution provides for selection of staffs - - only provides for election of presiding officer and chief clerk, and then a statute was followed up on the basis of a recommendation by the Convention that the staff of the legislature should be chosen on a merit basis. Now, that was Wisconsin's attempt to solve this situation of political patronage, milking the public fund.

California, the state which has given a great deal of attention in these latter years to the expenses that result from political patronage, has in its Constitution a rather newer amendment to the Constitution, the requirement that the legislature so far as advisable will select its employees and attaches under the provision of the law governing civil service, but the direction of the Constitution has never been followed by the legislature. And while I have not had the time to investigate into the debate of that particular - - when that amendment was adopted, I feel sure that those voters who could have gone along with a stronger provision were lulled away from it on the basis of the legislature will provide in view of the sentiments of the Convention.

Now six other states have attempted to meet the problem and their legislative session - - the provision in the legislative session as to what the merits shall be have always failed.

So, I think the delegates, if they feel that they would like perhaps to take an initiative in a new and rather prideful attempt to aid the citizens, whom all of us sooner or later have come around to saying we represent, in having his tax dollar spent wisely, then a provision - - the support of such an amendment would not only be wise in my estimation but on the basis of the statistics and the information we have, would indeed make history.

ARASHIRO: If it's acceptable to the proposer of this amendment, I wish to offer an amendment to this amendment by the insertion of the following words in the seventh line after the word "position," "by an examination given by the civil service department."

CHAIRMAN: That's already in, is it not, Delegate Arashiro?

ARASHIRO: No, the addition I am making is that "by an examination given" and then goes on "by the civil service department."

CHAIRMAN: It seems to be substantially the same thing to the Chair unless you can enlighten the Chair. Is that not right?

KAGE: I was going to second that motion. May I explain a little further on that?

CHAIRMAN: Will you please explain the difference?

KAGE: As it is here in the amendment here, these employees will become members of the civil service system of the state. But if you have it the other way, they take the examination from the civil service department but are not members of the civil service system.

KELLERMAN: I think I was asked if I would accept that amendment. May I speak on that point first? I think we might arrive at that proposal, which I think is a very good one, by a slightly different change of language there. If we say "respective positions by examinations prepared by the civil service department and given by the executive secretary," then that takes it entirely out of the civil service authority, and it also gets away from the difficulty of classification and classified pay schedule which you will observe in my amendment I have not proposed realizing that employees of the legislature work under such extremely different conditions from ordinary governmental employment. The usual even part-time employment for the government is so many hours per day but throughout the year, it is not limited to intensive work of 17 or 18 hours a day for two months, so that I have carefully omitted any reference to classification or pay schedule. And I think to make it even more clear that this does not place them under civil service, if we say there "respective positions by examinations prepared by the civil service department"—if that's the proper word; I don't know about the word department—"and given by the executive secretary."

CHAIRMAN: The Chair was going to suggest to Delegate Arashiro if the following - -

KAGE: According to the amendment there, it calls for a civil service department or civil service system. We do not have a civil service system in our Constitution. I think it's wrong. I think it should be amended in this particular fashion; strike out the words "civil service" and after the word "examination" insert "as may be prescribed by law," because you cannot call for an examination from a body which has not been created. And it serves the same purpose.

KELLERMAN: I think then if that language is advisable we have to say "who have qualified for the respective positions under a merit system by examination as may be prescribed by law." "Under the merit system by examination as may be prescribed by law" - - "such examination as may be." I would appreciate any further thinking on phraseology from the delegates to arrive at what is obviously what we're trying to get at. I don't know just the language to put it in.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will suggest this language to Delegate Arashiro. If you will examine the line, third from the bottom of the proposed amendment, if it should read "for the respective positions by a civil service examination which shall be supervised by the secretary," would that meet the delegate's point? "By a civil service examination which shall be supervised by the secretary."

C. RICE: I don't think this amendment is going to accomplish anything. I don't think so.

HEEN: May I ask -- rise to a point of information. What amendment is the speaker talking about? The last --

C. RICE: I am talking about the one under consideration.

HEEN: The one proposed by Delegate Arashiro?

C. RICE: No.

HEEN: Oh, the whole thing.

C. RICE: Delegate Kellerman.

CHAIRMAN: The delegate is talking about Delegate Kellerman's amendment to which there has been a suggestion of an amendment.

C. RICE: Nobody is going to say how many employees there are. You talk about the governor being all powerful, the secretary of the legislature is going to be the next all powerful. It's not going to curtail expenditures, just has someone to appoint. I was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee for several years. I always took a qualified man for my clerk. You mean to tell me that some administrator is going to send me a list, I've got to pick one from that? I can't see that this is going to accomplish what we want. We want to hold down the expenditures of the legislature. I don't think Mrs. Kellerman is getting at it the right way. I am opposed to this amendment.

LAI: As I see it here the position of the secretary will be a permanent position. Now what is the status of -- are they all permanent?

CHAIRMAN: Well, they'd be temporary employees, to serve during session presumably.

LAI: I am not saying I'm for it, but I think something to this effect "to serve during the term required" or "during the time required."

RICHARDS: I would like to move an amendment to this amendment, if the proponent would accept it. Instead of the words "selected by the legislature," delete those words and insert "elected by the qualified voters of the state."

FONG: Second the motion.

RICHARDS: If I may speak on that point? This particular little Napoleon --

CHAIRMAN: Mr. Richards, may the Chair get the parliamentary situation --

KELLERMAN: I do not accept that amendment.

CHAIRMAN: I didn't think you would. The Chair wants to get the parliamentary situation straightened out. As the Chair understands there was an amendment proposed by Delegate Kellerman to which there has been an amendment suggested by Delegate Arashiro. The Chair would like to get straightened out the status of Delegate Arashiro's amendment before entertaining your amendment.

APOLIONA: I appeal to the ruling of the Chair. Delegate Kellerman has already stated her cause to this Convention by saying that she welcomes any amendments to her amendment. I think Delegate Richards is offering an amendment to this amendment. He is perfectly in order.

CHAIRMAN: She did not welcome an amendment such as Delegate Richards gave.

KELLERMAN: I welcome the amendment of phraseology to bring out the point which we were trying to word. It had nothing to do with the election by the public body, I mean by the public at large of the executive secretary of the legislature.

KAUHANE: That being the case, I'd like to move that, if it is proper at this time, that this proposed amendment offered by Delegate Kellerman be referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Affairs.

CASTRO: When I seconded this motion I was prompted to make a remark which I thought possibly would be considered impertinent, so I didn't, but in view of the ham stringing tactics going on at the moment I would like to make a statement; that the defeat of the previous amendment was based, with prefacing statements of sympathy with the attitude of the amendment, but the opposition was placing dollars and cents in the Constitution. Now here is an amendment which tries to go to the same evil, the same trouble, and I find that the speakers who were speaking against the amendment on the basis of dollars and cents are now finding a new way in which to trip up an honest attempt to --

RICHARDS: I rise to a point of personal privilege. Are those remarks directed at my remarks?

CASTRO: They're not directed to your remarks.

CHAIRMAN: Will you please state your point of personal privilege, Delegate Richards? You are recognized.

RICHARDS: I made my point. It was the fact that the remarks sounded as though they were directed to my remarks. I have been apologized to, or rather stated that they were not directed to me, therefore the point has been cleared.

CHAIRMAN: Proceed, Delegate Castro.

CASTRO: Possibly it would be better at this time to ask if it is really the sense of the delegates of this Convention that some provision should be put in the Constitution to try to --

FONG: Out of order, Mr. Chairman, out of order.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair's inclined to agree, Delegate Castro. The question is on the amendment. The Chair would like to get straightened out, if it could, the status of the proposed amendment.

KING: My understanding is that the amendment suggested by Delegate Arashiro and in essence accepted --

CHAIRMAN: That's what the Chair wanted to get straightened out.

KING: -- by Delegate Kellerman --

RICHARDS: Mr. Chairman, may I --

KING: Let me finish, please.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate King has the floor.

KING: Let me finish.

CHAIRMAN: Will you please give the delegate the floor, Delegate Richards.

KING: There was a further suggestion from Delegate Kage, but as a matter of fact there's no concrete amendment to Mrs. Kellerman's proposed amendment before the Convention. So in that case Delegate Richard's amendment is in order. In other words, there've been suggestions and suggestions on top of suggestions. Now if Delegate Arashiro, Delegate Kage and Delegate Kellerman can get together and suggest to the Convention what language they would like to put in there after the words "respective positions," then we'd have something concrete to discuss.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair's understanding was that there had been a proposed amendment by Delegate Arashiro, which was seconded by Delegate Kage and it was in indefinite form, and the Chair was trying to find out what the purport of the amendment was.

KELLERMAN: I rose to that point.

RICHARDS: In order to clear the atmosphere I'm willing to withdraw my amendment temporarily until the other point has been decided.

CHAIRMAN: Very well, it has been withdrawn.

KELLERMAN: May I suggest this language then. Line nine, "the executive secretary, from lists of those who have qualified for the respective positions by examinations prepared by the civil service commission and given by the executive secretary, and shall be supervised by the executive secretary." I am very much afraid to leave to the - -

CHAIRMAN: Would you locate that amendment? The Chair did not follow it. I'm sorry.

KELLERMAN: After the word "positions" in the eighth line, I think it is, or seventh, insert the words "by examinations prepared by the civil service commission"—if the word commission is wrong, I'd like some one to correct that, I don't know the departmental setup—"by the civil service commission and given by the executive secretary, and shall," then the rest of the language follows as was originally prepared.

My reason for not accepting the language, "as may be prescribed by law" is because with the obvious dislike at least of the present members of the legislature, many of them, and the direction which that leads my thinking, I can see how the legislature could defeat most of this by not prescribing any examination if left to them by law. So I think perhaps it's better to spell it out. The civil service commission would prepare an examination. It would be given by the executive secretary who would do the grading and the analysis of it. It would not come under civil service. It would not be passed by civil service.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kellerman, inquiry from the Chair. Then the language, "by civil service examination and shall be supervised by the executive secretary," would be deleted, is that correct?

KELLERMAN: No, Mr. Chairman. After - - I will read again beginning with the word "position," "by examinations prepared by the civil service commission and given by the executive secretary, and shall be supervised by the executive secretary." Your confusion probably arises, the supervision means their work shall be supervised by the executive secretary. The other phrase is an insertion that would come in lieu of the word "by civil service examination."

CHAIRMAN: Is that acceptable to Delegate Arashiro?

AKAU: Point of information. I wonder if Delegate Kellerman means exactly what she's saying here. In view of my experience in correcting examination papers, being on one of the civil service committees, it does take a great deal of time, Delegate Kellerman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kellerman, - -

KELLERMAN: I'm sorry.

CHAIRMAN: - - the statement is being addressed to you.

AKAU: I was wondering if you actually meant these words because in view of the fact that it takes a great deal of time to correct examination papers - -

DELEGATE: Address the Chair.

AKAU: I was wondering if you would eliminate "given by the executive secretary" the first time. In other words have what you have there, "by the civil service commission," and that's the idea. The civil service commission would prepare the examination and give it, but then the work itself would be supervised by the executive secretary. Isn't that actually what you meant?

CHAIRMAN: Do you care to comment on that, Delegate Kellerman?

KELLERMAN: I am trying to arrive at a basis by which these examinations will be given - - prepared and given on the merit basis and not bring the employees under civil service. That's the only - - I'm trying to arrive at a method of expressing just that.

CORBETT: I'd like to ask a question. I don't understand what the objection is to these employees being under civil service. As I understand civil service, any employee is paid a full day's wage and then time and a half for overtime, and so objection to the long hours seems to me to be out of line. I wonder if there is any other objection to their being members of the civil service? It seems to me a very sound basis for setting up this group of workers. Certainly those people who are habitually employed by the legislature would be at the top of every list because of experience and ability and some of the people who may wish to get on that list would have an opportunity to do so. That list would be constantly available to an executive secretary such as is set up in this proposal. I would like to ask the delegate who made this proposal, and is in the process of amending it, if there is any other objection to the employees being on the civil service list.

CHAIRMAN: Well, it's not a permanent position, you understand.

CORBETT: Do they need to be permanently employed to be on the civil service list? That is not my understanding.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understood that they won't fall under any classification system. Delegate Kellerman, do you care to answer that?

KELLERMAN: That's the reason I had left out the classification system, because I thought there were too many practical difficulties. I think the civil service could certainly prepare the examination and they could - - but I had been led to believe by someone who knew more of the civil service than I that you have difficulty with your classification where your workers work at such unusual hours and under such difficult circumstances and different from the usual system, that you're just running into a headache and that it won't be practical, and I was trying to make it practical. I had no personal objections.

KING: Let me say frankly that I'm opposed to this amendment. Nevertheless, I would like to insist on clarifying the language so it may be presented to the committee in some form that they can vote for up or down. When we refer to a civil service commission, we're referring to an organization that does exist today but may not exist under the state, that is, it has not been re-established by law. We're referring to an agency that has no being insofar as the Constitution is concerned. It seems to me the language that I think the Chair suggested, "who have qualified for the respective positions under a merit system subject to an examination," or something of that sort, "to be given by the secretary," and not refer to any agency of the government which now exists and which may or may not exist under the state of Hawaii.

Now, in view of the difficulty in arriving at satisfactory language, I'd like to move that we defer further action on Section 11 at this time and go to Section 10 and Section 22, both of which are pending. There's an amendment that Delegate Tavares has ready and has had distributed to Section 10 which seems to be one on which there may not be much controversy. So I move now, Mr. Chairman, that we defer action on Section 11 for the time being and take up Section 10.

BRYAN: Second the motion.

SAKAKIHARA: I would like to ask the introducer of this amendment - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Sakakihara, the motion is on the deferment which has been seconded.

SAKAKIHARA: I apologize to the Chair. I thought the second was not recognized.

CHAIRMAN: The second is Delegate Bryan. Are you ready for the question? All in favor of deferment, signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Deferred.

KING: May I ask the committee now to call up Section 10?

HOLROYDE: I move we consider Section 10 at this time.

BRYAN: Second the motion.

ROBERTS: May I have that put again, please? Are we going to reconsider Section 10?

CHAIRMAN: No, consider. That has been deferred. Section 10 was deferred by prior action of this committee. Am I not right in that, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: That's correct. There was a motion to adopt Section 10 as written in the proposal and that was seconded. Now it's up for amendment or whatever action the committee may decide.

CHAIRMAN: What is pending before the body is a motion to adopt Section 10 as prepared. It's open for amendment at this time.

TAVARES: I move to amend Section 10 so as to read as set forth in my amendment which is on the desks, entitled, "Proposed amendment to Committee Proposal No. 29, Section 10," and bears my name at the bottom thereof and the date of July 8, 1950.

> Section 10. Disqualification of members. No member of the legislature shall hold any other public office, nor shall he, during the term for which he is elected or appointed, be elected or appointed to any public office or employment which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased, by legislative act during such term.
> This section shall not apply to the offices or employments of notaries public, reserve officers of the police, or of the armed forces of the United States, members of the State Militia or National Guard, or members of emergency organizations for civilian defense or disaster relief.

SAKAKIHARA: I second the motion.

TAVARES: May I explain that my amendment has this effect. If the members will look at the old Section 10, they will find that I have deleted the words "position" and "of profit," so that the first sentence reads, "No member of the legislature shall hold any other public office," that part; then further on I have provided, "nor shall he, during the term for which he is elected or appointed, be elected or appointed to any public office or employment which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased, by legislative act during such term."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that if you disqualify members of the legislature from holding office rather than employment before they take office, you can leave to the legislature any further disqualifications the legislature may want to lay down as a condition of public employment. It can be taken care of by statute.

Now, furthermore, the second paragraph of my amendment removes some of the objections or most of them which were made that the original provision disqualifies a legislator from holding any office, position or employment of profit. It, for instance, included notaries public and reserve officers and so forth and my amendment would exclude from the disqualifications notaries public who just get fees for work they do from time to time paid by the parties concerned and who don't get salaries or money from the government, reserve officers of the police who now are very important and will be increasingly so as the need for security increases—and who don't get paid by the way, Mr. Chairman, as I understand it—and reserve officers of the armed forces of the United States. Some of our legislators are reserve officers and they cannot resign, as I understand it, Mr. Chairman, without the consent of the United States authorities in some cases. Finally, I think it important that we encourage people to go into our state militia or national guard particularly at this time, and so I propose to exempt them. And, in deference to the atomic bomb and other weapons of the day, and the tidal waves and so forth, I've also proposed to exempt members of the emergency organizations for civilian defense or disaster relief. I think, Mr. Chairman, there is ample ground to exempt all those.

The only one I can think of any objection to would be the officers in the state militia or national guard, but I believe they're high officers, they probably won't run for the legislature. I can't imagine the general in charge of the national guard running for a legislative office.

APOLIONA: Second the motion.

RICHARDS: Point of information. In line three, the sentence reads, "during the term for which he is elected or appointed." I raise the question, would this prohibit a judge from resigning his position as judge and accepting the attorney generalship, or would this prohibit a senator whose term has not expired from resigning and accepting a cabinet position of the governor?

TAVARES: As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the way this is drawn it doesn't apply to judges at all unless the judges - - Well, as far as the judges are concerned, their right to run for office is taken care of in another section under judiciary, entirely separate. But these are legislators and unless the pay has been increased or the job created during the legislator's term, he could resign and take the office, but if the office had been created or the emoluments had been increased by legislative act during his term, then he would be disqualified during the remainder of his term from taking those particular offices.

RICHARDS: I raise this particular question because of the fact that it will be perfectly possible to perhaps create a new department within the government during the time when a senator is a holdover member or rather would be a holdover member. Now the newly elected governor may desire that man's services. Now, is that man disqualified from accepting that position? Also the same point might be true of a judge. They might raise the attorney general's pay, or they might create some other job. Now, if he is appointed for a six or seven year term, does this language preclude his resigning his particular position and accepting such other position?

CHAIRMAN: The prohibition is addressed to the members of the legislature, Mr. Richards, not to judges.

RICHARDS: Well, if he is a senator then. Let's go back to just the first part of my remarks.

PORTEUS: As I understand this provision, it is the design of such a provision to prevent a member of the legislature or a holdover senator to push for the creation of a new position in order that he may be able to have it. He can assist in the creation of new departments and new positions, but he knows at the time that he does it he cannot hold it until after his term of office has expired. That's to prevent a legislator, after a number of terms, deciding that he hasn't a job in prospect and having other friendly legislators join him in creating a position which the governor agrees that he'll appoint this man to. I think it's specifically designed to prevent a man from taking such a position.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will give you this suggestion. In the event the office of the attorney general is increased from $10,000 to $15,000, no senator who voted for that increase will be eligible for that office during his term of appointment, as the Chair understands it.

RICHARDS: I raise this point, not on any particular deal of a particular governor, but there can be assumption where a minority senator may have been in the minority and a new governor—he's a holdover senator—when a new governor comes in, and the new governor may wish to place him in another position. Now, is that new governor precluded from placing said senator in such a position?

CHAIRMAN: If it meets this prohibition, "which shall have been created or emoluments thereof have been increased by the legislative act during the term."

ASHFORD: I have another problem. As I read this—I think it is sometimes difficult to distinguish between an office or an employment—but let us say that the cadastral engineer in the Department of Public Works is an employee and not an officer for the purposes of pointing out what I think is a defect in this. He takes leave of absence, he runs for the Senate or the House and is elected. He takes leave of absence from his office, or his vacation, as the case may be, because he is not disqualified, being an employee, and in the legislature he increases very substantially the pay of that employment. He is not appointed because he goes back to the job which he held before and yet he has increased his own pay.

TAVARES: The reason why I don't put that in is because it's so difficult to handle all possible types of employees, and the legislature has under the civil service law now prohibited those people from running for office, so you don't need it. There is now a law prohibiting civil service employees from running for office and I think that it's such a minute thing. It's not in the Organic Act, we only prohibit officers. It's worked all right so far with supplementary legislation. I don't think it's necessary to put that provision for employment in, otherwise you, as they say, you're going into very great legislative detail.

KING: One small change of language, which I've discussed with Delegate Tavares. Where the second paragraph reads, "This section shall not apply to the offices or employments of notaries public, reserve officers of the police or of the armed forces of the United States," in the reserves of the United States there are more than officers, there are a lot of enlisted personnel who are members of the reserve of the armed forces. So I suggest that in the third line of paragraph two, after the word "or," insert "or members of the reserves of the armed forces of the United States, the state militia or national guard."

TAVARES: I accept that amendment. I ask my second to accept it also.

CHAIRMAN: "Members of the reserves," is that it, Delegate King?

KING: I would like permission to check the official designation and submit it to the Committee on Style, but it's merely to broaden that clause to include not only the reserve officers but reserve enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps Reserve.

CHAIRMAN: Subsequent to your suggestion, would delete officers and apply it to officer and men, is that it?

KING: That's right.

TAVARES: That isn't quite accurate. In the third line of the second paragraph the delegate suggests we insert after the word "or" the words "members of the reserves," so that it will read in that line, "the police, or members of the reserves of the armed forces of the United States," in that line. We have accepted that amendment, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Will the word "officers" remain or not, Delegate Tavares?

TAVARES: Which officers, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: Reserve officer.

KING: That would only apply to the police. It would read "reserve officers of the police, or members of the reserves of the armed forces of the United States, members of the state militia or national guard, or members of the emergency organizations for civilian defense or disaster relief."

HEEN: I rise to a point of information. I'd like to ask Delegate Tavares this question. Does the term "offices or employment" apply to members of the reserve officers of the police or did you cut out that phrase, "offices or employment"?

TAVARES: The way it reads now with the amendment is this: "This section shall not apply to the offices or employments." Those words "offices or employments" relate to every category mentioned thereafter, meaning offices or employments of notaries public, offices or employments of reserve officers of the police, offices or employments of the reserves of the armed forces of the United States, and so forth as the case may be, is what it means.

HEEN: When they are not on active duty, these reserve officers, are they in employment at that time or out of employment?

TAVARES: I still think they are officers. If they are either officers or employees I think they are covered by that terminology.

HEEN: Well, Mr. Chairman, I'm opposed to the amendment designed in the second paragraph of this amendment, except as to notaries public. Now reserve officers, if they are on active duty they should not be in a position to choose what they should do. They might find it difficult to legislate -- perform their functions as legislators. They might have orders to do something else contrary to what the legislature might want to do, and the military should be kept apart from the operation of the civil government. That's my stand.

APOLIONA: Looking over the language of this amendment in the second paragraph, I wonder if the introducer of this section will agree to this change? Now, we have no reserve officers of the police, what we have is members of the police reserve. I wonder if Delegate Tavares --

CHAIRMAN: You mean ordinary persons as distinguished from the officers of the police reserve?

APOLIONA: That's right. We are members of the police reserve. Will you accept that, Tavares?

TAVARES: A member of the police reserve is an officer. A police officer is an officer and nothing but an officer.

DELEGATE: Question.

APOLIONA: In the police department you have all kinds of ranks, from sergeants to lieutenants to captains and chiefs.

CHAIRMAN: Well, what Delegate Tavares is pointing out, they're all called officers. Flippantly speaking, we call them cops. They are all officers.

TAVARES: By way of further explanation I might say there is a distinction in law between a person who holds an office and a person who holds a mere employment as distinguished from an office. Now, within the police department they may be called flat feet and sergeants and lieutenants, but before the law they perform duties of officers of the law and therefore they are officers, no matter what they are called in the department.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question on the amendment.

HEEN: I would like to reiterate my stand. Anybody connected with the police force or connected with the Army should not be placed in a position where he might have to, under the command of his superior officer, do something against what he should do as a legislator. Those people should always be subordinate to the civil authorities.

PORTEUS: It is not often that I find occasion to differ with the senator and fellow delegate from the fourth district. However, I do have a great deal of sympathy with those people who went away in the armed forces of the United States and after their services, specifically let's take the last war, after their services in the last war have risen to a position where they may be members of an organized reserve of the United States of America. If those people have gone to war and come back, I think that they're entitled to hold a reserve commission or be a member of an armed reserve and still perform their other duties to the state which is, among those, that of running for office and serving in the legislature. If they are ordered to active duty, they no longer would be serving in the legislature.

I think members of Congress came up against this very same thing the last war. Those of them who had reserve commissions were finally given the choice of either getting out of Congress or going off to war. Some went off to war but they didn't stay in Congress subject to orders. I don't think the kind of man that is willing to run for office and get elected and the kind that has served his country is the kind that's going to take anybody's orders as to how he's going to vote in the legislature. I think we ought to give those men that consideration.

KING: In further reply to Delegate Heen's objections, a good many officers are reserve officers with retainer pay but not on active duty. Now I quite agree with Delegate Heen that the minute they go on active duty they should resign from the legislature.

Now the reserve officers who were serving in Congress at the time of the outbreak of World War II used to take leave of absence, serve on active duty, and then return to Congress. Then the President decided that it was improper procedure and laid down that no reserve officer would be called to active duty unless he resigned his seat in Congress. Senator Magnuson served out here when he was a representative, in the Pacific area. Representative Jimmie—the name fails me—also served on active duty a long part of the war while he was still a member of Congress. But I do agree that no officer on active duty should be a member of the legislature.

However, our medical officers and many other officers are reserve officers in the organized reserves, get some retainer pay, and might possibly run for office and serve in the legislature without impairing their ability to give first allegiance to their legislative duty. After they are ordered to active duty, then they should resign from the legislature.

HEEN: If the particular paragraph is amended to take care of that situation, then I would have no objection. But when they are on active duty they should no longer serve in the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would suggest "members of the reserve, except during time of active duty," or some such language, if that is acceptable.

KING: I rise to another question entirely. A good many members have suggested that we are not in the mood to do any constructive work this afternoon and wanted to suggest that we rise, report progress and sit again. I feel that we ought to finish the legislative powers and functions, so I just raise the point now. Do we wish to continue or do we wish to rise, report progress and sit again.

CASTRO: I suggest we continue because from the headlines it's possible that Major Fong and myself and two or three other people won't be here in two or three days. We'd like to see that the amendment gets properly passed so that when we get back we'll be able to get into the legislature.

FONG: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate King, there has been a suggestion by Delegate Heen that in the event -- that he would welcome the suggestion or withdraw opposition if the membership of the reserve "except during active duty" was incorporated. Is that desirable or --

KING: If Delegate Heen will actually put it in writing, that is desirable. I agree with him that no officer of the armed forces on active duty shall serve in the legislative body.

SAKAKIHARA: May I move for the disqualification of reserve officers from participating on this amendment? They have a definite pecuniary interest.

DELEGATE: Out of order, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: You are overruled. Delegate Heen, do you have language that will fix that up?

HEEN: Not right at the moment, but I can prepare one. I object, though, to reserve officers in the police force serving at any time.

WIRTZ: I'd like to suggest language.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate King, in the absence of Delegate Heen's suggestion of language, the Chair might suggest this, "members of the reserves of the armed forces of the United States while on active duty" or "except upon active duty." Otherwise the Chair will put the question without the suggestion.

WIRTZ: I suggest we take a short recess subject to the call of the Chair.

KING: May I just make this brief statement. I didn't propose this amendment but I did propose the language "or members of the reserves of the armed forces of the United States." The language suggested by the Chair is perfectly agreeable. The intent is that officers serving in the organized reserve, going to drills one night a week, going on a fifteen day active duty once a year shall be eligible to serve in the legislature. The minute they are called to active duty they shall not be eligible. That is my understanding of the purpose to be served.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has no predeliction one way or the other. He just wants to get this put to the floor. In the absence of an amendment, the Chair will put the amendment as it now stands and it is in the absence of any qualifying language.

CASTRO: Just a point of explanation. I think there are a few who feel that possibly they couldn't vote for this amendment because they're afraid of members of the reserves, whatever reserve that might be, serving while on active duty. While I'm not completely familiar with the Articles of War or the Articles of the Navy, I believe there is a higher law than the State Constitution which forbids a reserve officer or a regular officer, when on active duty, from participating in the employment under any basis of another government, whether it be Federal or a subordinate government to the Federal government. So I feel that if we should look into this further, we would discover that there is a higher law that would keep your reserve officer on active duty out of the legislature even though no provision would be placed in our Constitution.

HEEN: I think I have the proper amendment here. Delete the words "or employments" following the words "offices," which word "offices" appears in the first line. Then after the word "public" in the second line insert "or to," Delete "reserve officers of the police or of" appearing in the second and third lines, then insert "members of the reserves of," after the words "United States," "who are not on active duty." Then delete the words "members of the state militia or national guard" in the fourth line, and after the word "or" in the fourth line add the word "to." So that that paragraph would read: "This section shall not apply to the offices of notaries public or to members of the reserves of the armed forces of the United States who are not on active duty, or to members of the emergency organizations for civilian defense or disaster relief."

CHAIRMAN: Is there a second?

HEEN: I move that amendment to the second paragraph of Section 10 as offered.

CHAIRMAN: Is the amendment acceptable to Delegate Tavares? It would save us putting the question twice.

TAVARES: No, Mr. Chairman, it isn't. I'd rather have the Convention vote the way it feels. I've made my suggestion and I'm not going to argue one way or the other.

CHAIRMAN: Very well, the Chair will put the question.

HEEN: I move that amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Yes, the Chair will put your amendment.

APOLIONA: Speaking against the amendment, especially to the deletion of the phrase "reserve officer of the police," I want to call to the attention of this Convention here that there are hundreds of us who are members of the Honolulu police reserves that do not go into active duty until such occasion arises where we are called by our country to active duty. We are subject to call twenty-four hours of the day. We are given our instructions as to the security of our country which I have not the power to make known at this time. We are called by the police department to perform functions in case of tidal waves, warnings, evacuation of people, and guarding the premises and property and health and safety of people. Without your Honolulu police reserve, Mr. Chairman, your police department is inadequate in numbers to take care of the safety of the people's property and public safety.

So, we as members of the police reserve put in our own time, we buy our own guns, we pay for our own uniform, we even supply our own car, and even take care of our own insurance so that the health of the people of this territory may be protected.

We, as members of the police reserve, have served this community faithfully during the war. Without our organization this Territory of Hawaii would be overrun by your Marine guards. That's what the Navy wanted to do, but because of the existence of your Honolulu police reserve, your commanding general of this Territory during the war saw fit that the Honolulu police department could actually police the entire territory and it was done so because of the existence of the Honolulu police reserve.

At this time I ask that this Convention do not delete the members of the Honolulu police reserve from having a chance of becoming elected in your state legislature.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Apoliona, the Chair will ask Delegate Heen if this would be any prohibition against police reserves—the Chair does not so understand it—from serving on the legislature. Am I right about that, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: Well, if they are holding a public office, it might apply. If a reserve in the police force is holding a public office then this would apply.

RICHARDS: The Honolulu police reserves are a portion of the emergency organization for civilian defense and disaster relief. Now, why single them out as to be not permitted while other members of these other organizations are permitted.

HEEN: Then if they are members of the emergency organization, they are there because they are member of that organization, not because they are reserve officers in the police force.

RICHARDS: If that is definitely understood and so written in the committee report, that is all right. But I want to make certain that it is considered an emergency organization for civilian defense and disaster relief. The fact that it is being stricken out would tend to think it was otherwise unless the committee report so states.

J. TRASK: I might inform the chairman of the committee that the members of the police reserve receive no compensation whatsoever, that they just perform in the case of emergency. They have police powers as police officers but they receive no compensation whatsoever.

APOLIONA: That is why a few moments ago I wanted to change the wording "members of the Honolulu police reserve." Now we have a police department here, but we have a police reserve and a police reserve is a member of the emergency organization for civilian defense or disaster relief. Your reserve is a member of that. That's why I wanted to change the wording there, "members of the Honolulu police reserve."

ASHFORD: If, as it has been said here, the members of the police reserve are such really because they are members of emergency organizations for civilian defense or disaster relief, wouldn't they be covered even though you don't refer to them specifically? In other words, if you strike out this reference to police reserves they would still be protected under that last provision of the second paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: That was the Chair's view when it addressed that question to Delegate Heen. Would you care to comment on that, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: Well, I did. I said they would be members of the emergency organization for civilian defense not by virtue of being a reserve police officer but by being a member of the organization.

CHAIRMAN: Does that clear up your difficulty, Delegate Apoliona?

APOLIONA: Then, I see nothing wrong in retaining this phrase here, "reserve officer of the police."

BRYAN: That brings up another little point here, that I'd like to have the attorneys look at. I would like to have added at the end of this, or some language to do the same thing, the words "solely because of membership therein," In other words, some one may be disqualified for some other reason but he can go and say, "Well look here, I am a notary public and therefore I am eligible." Under this language it appears so to me.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. The question - -

ASHFORD: In reply to that, doesn't the fact that it refers to offices, it doesn't refer to the people who hold the offices?

KING: The difficulty comes in the first sentence of Section 10, disqualification of members. "No member of the legislature shall hold any other public office." Now, we asked what's the interpretation of "public office." Does a commission under the Medical Corps Reserve of the Army become a public office? Yes, it does. Is a reserve officer in the organized reserve of the Marine Corps or the Naval Reserve a public office? Yes, it is. Well, then you are barring those men and there are many thousands in Hawaii who belong to the organized reserves of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, Medical Corps Reserve and police reserve and then the civil defense. So the effort was made to qualify that disqualification by this second paragraph.

Now, the only difficulty there is the point raised by Delegate Heen that members of the armed forces should not serve in the legislature when they are on active duty. All we need to do is to say this section "does not apply to the offices or employments of notaries public, reserve officers of the police or members of the reserves of the armed forces of the United States who are not on active duty, members of the state militia or national guard, or members of the emergency organizations for civilian defense or disaster relief." The only thing we have done is to qualify the exemptions granted members of the organized reserve when they are not on active duty. That would seem to me to meet all of the points that have been raised.

TAVARES: Let me point out one thing more that causes difficulty, and that was my trouble in drawing this. You are going to have a lot of vacancies all of a sudden if a man is allowed to run as long as he is not on active duty and then in the middle of a session he is called into active duty. Then what's going to happen, a vacancy in his office. That's not desirable. You either ought to bar them entirely or not leave the legislature liable to be decimated by a call to active duty. That's the pilikia that I found in trying to make those exceptions.

KING: One point to answer that. When an officer in the reserve or enlisted man is called to active duty, if he's a member of the legislature he can almost invariably get a waiver of it or resign. He can take his choice just as they did in Congress when World War II broke out. The Navy Department or War Department would ask them, did they want to go on active duty. If they did so, they got their orders and resigned from Congress. If they did not, they resigned their reserve commission. None of the armed forces would require a man to leave the legislature under orders if he preferred to serve in the legislature. The armed forces are usually cognizant of the fact that service in the legislative body is equally important to the welfare of the country.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will put the question. The question is upon the amendment offered by Delegate Heen, substance of which would prevent members of the armed forces while on active duty from being eligible to be elected or to hold a seat in the legislature. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The Chair's in doubt. All those in favor raise their right hand. Contrary. It's carried.

KING: I would have voted for the amendment but as I understood Delegate Heen when he read it, he cut out members of the state militia, national guard, members of the emergency organization and the reserve officers, is that correct? I wasn't able to follow Delegate Heen's amendment closely when he read it.

CHAIRMAN: Will the President hold just a moment to see if the Chair is correct in announcing the result. The Chair believes the motion carried. Evidently the Clerk is unable to get the call. The Chair thought the motion - -

DELEGATE: Roll call, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: We'd better have a roll call on this.

PORTEUS: I think a roll call would take some time. A division of house would require the members to stand in order to make the vote quite apparent.

CHAIRMAN: Very well. All those in - -

KING: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate King is recognized.

KING: Point of information. I request that Delegate Heen's amendment be re-read so we can all understand it. I'd like to vote for it because that would simplify matters and get this out of the way.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, before we take the vote will you re-state your amendment?

HEEN: As amended, this paragraph reads as follows:

This section shall not apply to the offices of notaries public or to members of the reserves of the armed forces of the United States who are not on active duty or to members of the emergency organizations for civilian defense or disaster relief.

CASTRO: In all respect to the senior statesman - -

CHAIRMAN: Elder statesman.

CASTRO: - - elder stateman, this amendment doesn't make sense.

CHAIRMAN: Well now, the Chair has got to put the vote, Delegate Castro.

CASTRO: I am about to ask - -

CHAIRMAN: I'm sorry.

CASTRO: - - that Delegate Heen reconsider this amendment.

CHAIRMAN: If it does not make sense, then you can vote against it. The Chair has no alternative.

KING: That's the problem. I would like to vote for it but he has stricken out "reserve officers of the police and members of the state militia or national guard." If that were included, I'd be happy to vote for it.

HAYES: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: I don't understand why that was stricken out either.

HAYES: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Hayes.

HAYES: I voted on the opposite side, so I therefore move to reconsider the action.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair hasn't announced its ruling yet. It's in doubt as to what happened here.

DELEGATE: Let's vote on it.

HEEN: May we take a short recess.

CHAIRMAN: Two minutes.

HEEN: Two long ones.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The Convention will please come to order.

HEEN: I now withdraw the amendment that was offered by me, which was pending at the time the committee took a short recess. At this time I offer the following amendment: In the third line of the first paragraph after the word "office" delete the comma and insert after the word "office" in the third line the following: "under the state, except notaries public and reserve police officers," period.

CHAIRMAN: You don't want the period, do you, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: No, no period, comma.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CASTRO: The amendment isn't completed yet.

CHAIRMAN: Seconded anyhow.

HEEN: Delete the entire second paragraph. All officers designed to be covered by the first paragraph must be officers of the state. All officers in the United States Army, national guard would be officers not under the state but under the United States, so this section will not apply to those officers who are officers of the United States.

CHAIRMAN: Then, an army officer could be elected as legislator.

HEEN: That's correct. But as I understand it, I've been assured that if they go into active service, under some military regulation they must resign their office as a member of the legislature, if they are members of the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Apoliona is recognized.

APOLIONA: I now second that motion.

ASHFORD: Then the United States District Attorney could be elected to the legislature and serve as United States District Attorney and as a member of the Senate at the same time?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct, or a colonel or a general.

KING: That would apply if the United States permitted them to do so. They could only do that if the United States permitted them to do so.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct.

TAVARES: I will accept the amendment and move to add a further amendment reading as follows: "The legislature may prescribe other disqualifications."

ASHFORD: I second that amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair doesn't want to pile these amendments up. Is that acceptable to Delegate Heen?

HEEN: Not at the moment, without giving it some thought. Supposing we act on the amendment that was proposed by me first. Then we could take up the other.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the amendment proposed by Delegate Heen. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It's carried.

Delegate Tavares, you desire to make a further amendment, I believe.

TAVARES: I believe that I was in error. What I had in mind was this, as it stands now I do believe it's too tight. While I would like to have the legislature authorized to prescribe further disqualification, it seems to me when we don't exempt members of civilian defense organizations – we are all going to be called on to do civilian defense work – that means that any man who wants to run for the legislature or is in the legislature is going to have to stay out of these emergency wardens and disaster relief councils and everything else.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understood that that language was deleted. Is the Chair in error?

HEEN: That's correct. Those who may become members of the relief organization become members not as officers but perhaps become members as employees only.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair's understanding was that section was deleted and your objection thereby will be met, Delegate Tavares.

TAVARES: Well, I was probably a little out of order. I want to point out that if we create a civilian defense organization and we make a man a warden and give him power to go around with a star and keep people from putting on their lights, he is going to be an officer no matter what you call it. He is going to be exercising the sovereign functions of the state in defending the state, and you are not letting him act as a legislator if he joins one of these relief organizations. If that's what this Convention wants, that's all right. I think we have voted on it but I think it's too tight.

CHAIRMAN: Well, we can always fix it up if it is too tight.

CASTRO: I believe that the term "public office" has been given enough adjudication to indicate that it is properly an office of profit. Now civilian defense organizations, at least up to the atomic age, have not been offices of profit under the state, and I don't think that any of the civilian defense organizations are touched if the Committee of the Whole report will indicate that these various civic volunteer functions are not covered, are not within the intent of this prohibition. It seems to me that that is going to be adequate, but if we can't satisfy the motion now it probably would be better to defer until we can go into the history of similar constitutional provisions in other states, because there are, in almost all of the forty-eight states, there are similar provisions, and it would be interesting to find out whether or not there has been some court adjudication on these words. Is that the thing to do now or should we just push the thing through and be stuck with it?

CHAIRMAN: If Delegate Tavares desires to loosen it up, the Chair would invite suggestions. The legislature could add further qualifications as prescribed by law.

CASTRO: The objection to that provision, that the legislature may prescribe further, would be that a legislature in a fit of pique could prohibit from its membership the very people that we are trying to protect here who are the reserve officers of the United States of the various branches, so I don't think we could leave it to a matter of law, that is, a matter of statute. We have to be very well satisfied we are covering the ground here. I think possibly it would be better for us to defer.

HOLROYDE: I can't see the legislators barring the reserve officers from serving on the legislature. There are so many of them in the Territory it would be political suicide to attempt to do anything like that.

CASTRO: I quite agree that it might be political suicide but that isn't the point. The point is that the provision does not mend whatever illness might be in this section. It merely leaves it open at both ends.

ROBERTS: I have a further amendment to this section. At the end of that sentence add the following: "No person holding any federal or state office or position of profit shall be entitled to a seat in the legislature."

YAMAMOTO: I second the motion.

CASTRO: The objection to that is substantially the same as the previous one and that is that in the reserve corps, the Army and the Navy, the armed forces, there is a distinction between the volunteer reserve and the organized reserve. Now the volunteer reserves are those people who are furthest away from a call to active duty, but there is an in-between group.

I might even quote from the Honolulu Star Bulletin, the most current quotation I can find here, by way of an explanation of the current call for enlistment -- for volunteering that has come out in Washington today. The last paragraph of the article on page six, column four states: "The organized units of all branches are considered close to fighting trim. If the situation worsens they will be called into active service."

Now, the organized is a group of officers and men who are paid for their participation part time, usually once a week and two weeks active duty a year, and these are officers who are under the Federal government, offices of profit because they are paid, several hundred dollars up to and over a thousand dollars per annum for their duties, and this again would not mend the situation because in an era of peace you have this large number. In Hawaii today we have some three thousand, I think the number is larger now, organized reserve who would be barred by Delegate Roberts' proposed amendment. I don't think that cures it.

TAVARES: I think it's still necessary to defer this further and I think if we have another five minutes we can try to iron this out a little further. I still think the Heen amendment is not quite all that we need.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on Delegate Roberts' amendment. Is that -- what is the status of that? Does the delegate care to withdraw it to clear the decks?

ROBERTS: I will withdraw the amendment, but I might suggest that we're not saving any time by staying here and working on this. I suggest that we rise and report progress to give the chairman a chance to work on his report and we start fresh on it Monday morning.

FONG: Second the motion.

PORTEUS: The chairman of the committee, I might tell the delegates, informed me not long ago that he hoped we would be able to bring matters to a close so that he would know that he was finished with this and could write a complete report. I don't think that we have too far to go. I think, after consultation with the chairman of the committee, that language such as the following: "The legislature may provide for further disqualifications," would enable the legislature to take care of the situation where there are federal employees or federal district attorneys. We haven't, of course, said here just how far the legislature could go, but it would by necessity mean that they would operate by general law as to disqualification. They could then by statute spell out that reserve officers of the United States were eligible under certain circumstances or were not, depending on the conditions as they appeared to them.

CHAIRMAN: That would fill in the gap, would it not?

PORTEUS: That would fill in the gap. I make that as a motion, that the following language be added: "The legislature may provide for further disqualifications."

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the section be further amended that: "The legislature may provide for further disqualifications."

TAVARES: I would like to move a further amendment to that amendment by adding thereto before the period, the following language: "and may by general law provide for exemptions from such disqualifications with respect to members of emergency organizations for civilian defense or disaster relief."

CHAIRMAN: That wouldn't take care of the U.S. attorney situation, would it, Delegate Tavares?

TAVARES: That would be taken care of, Mr. Chairman, by the right to disqualify further.

FONG: I second the motion made by Delegate Roberts to rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

CHAIRMAN: That motion is out of order at this time.

FONG: Why is it?

CHAIRMAN: There is pending before the house a motion to amend, and under the Rules of this house - -

FONG: I now move that we rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

SAKAKIHARA: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion is lost.

Delegate Tavares, you had the floor when you were interrupted.

TAVARES: I don't think anybody seconded my motion and therefore, apparently I am out of order.

CHAIRMAN: Not at all.

APOLIONA: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Would you be good enough to restate your motion, Delegate Tavares?

TAVARES: May I have the Clerk read it. I gave my copy to Delegate Heen and I don't have it before me.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Apoliona appears to have it.

APOLIONA: I have the language, Mr. Chairman. Delete the period and insert the following language: "and may by general law provide for exemptions from such disqualification to members of the emergency organizations for civilian defense or disaster relief."

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? All those in favor of the amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It is carried.

The question is now on the amendment, as amended. All those in favor of the amendment signify by saying "aye." Contrary. It is carried.

The question is now on Section 10, as amended.

J. TRASK: Have we a motion to that effect, Mr. Chairman?

HOLROYDE: I make a motion to that effect.

J. TRASK: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we adopt Section 10, as amended. All those in favor signify - -

CORBETT: Would you please read us the amended section? I think there are a number of us here who are confused about what we are voting on by now.

CHAIRMAN: It's a big order, Delegate Corbett.

SAKAKIHARA: May I rise at this time and ask that the amendments be printed before we take a vote on the amended section of Section 10, so that we may understand what the amendments are and how Section 10 will read with these amendments.

LYMAN: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will declare a five minute recess to get that printed.

BRYAN: Before we declare a recess, wouldn't it be possible to defer this for printing, while we take up the last section that we deferred?

CHAIRMAN: I think that's highly advisable if the Clerk can attend to the printing. Just a moment. The Clerk advises me that it would be impossible to get it printed without a short recess, so the Chair will declare a few minutes recess.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will invite the committee's attention to the fact that there are only three matters pending, one of which is on the press or shortly will be, the other relates to Dr. Larsen's amendment and the other relates to Delegate Kellerman's amendment. I suggest that we defer action on the pending matter and take up Delegate Larsen's amendment, if that's agreeable to the body.

APOLIONA: I so move.

SMITH: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The motion is carried.

LARSEN: Just a few words, hoping we won't get too tired. This is again not the question of whether we're going to vote for a legislative council but whether we're going to vote for this type of holdover committee, a legislative council that will take the place of a holdover committee. It will limit the size to twelve, it will put on four laymen, one from each county. It will be the ear to the ground of whether legislation can be analyzed between sessions. They will have at their beck and call the research council and it is one more attempt to prevent abuse and to make law making more efficient and I move for its adoption.

Amendment to Committee Proposal No. 29.

Section ___. Legislative Council. There shall be a legislative council consisting of twelve members, not more than six from any one political party to be chosen in the following manner: four members to be selected by the Senate from its membership; four members to be selected by the House of Representatives from its membership; four members who are not members of the legislature, to be appointed by the governor, one from each county. The legislature shall provide by law for the selection, tenure and compensation of members of the council, and for such research staff as the council may require to perform its duties.

Section ___. Organization and Duties of the Legislative Council. The legislative council shall choose one of its members as chairman and shall adopt its own rules of procedure, except as such procedures may be established by law. It shall be the duty of the council to collect information relating to the government and general welfare of the state and to report thereon to the legislature. The council shall consider the desirability and efficacy of existing legislation, and shall receive for consideration suggestions of individual citizens and of citizen organizations for changes in the laws of Hawaii. Proposed legislation may be submitted to the council and shall be considered and reported to the legislature with its findings and recommendations. The legislative council may also recommend such legislation as in its opinion may further the welfare of the state and its people. Other powers and duties may be assigned to the council by law.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

CASTRO: Prior to the defeat of the original section on the legislative council the Chair made a ruling which has permitted this amendment. I respect the ruling but I would like to say nevertheless that this is still a legislative council. The arguments have gone back and forth and I'm sure that every delegate here has them in mind and is weary of them.

But there is one argument that I would like to direct to the amendment as proposed by Delegate Larsen which was not brought up previously because it was not pertinent to the committee proposal section, and that is as to this membership, the make-up of the membership. This morning I pointed out to the delegates that in Wisconsin the council started out in 1931 with twenty members, five senators, five assemblymen and ten citizens. That was a matter of statute. Then in 1933 that was changed down to three senators, three assemblymen and three citizens, and in 1933 they fired the citizens and replaced them by the heads of major state departments.

Now, the argument I have to make is this, that we should not—granting the legislative council is still in an experimental state and the efficacy of it and the proper membership make-up of it in Hawaii is still not known—we should not bind this council with a make-up of membership that we have no basis to prove will be efficient, and on that basis I feel that that particular point is not going to improve the council, and therefore all of the arguments against the council which this committee voted down still stand.

LAI: I am against this proposal for the same reason I have stated this morning. The abuses are just as great. The chances of the layman hiring his family and friends to work is just as great as the case of the legislator. After all a layman is just as human as a legislator.

CHAIRMAN: For convenience the Chair will identify Dr. Larsen's amendment as Sections 24 and 25. I believe that would follow in consecutive numbers, if that is agreeable to the delegates.

ROBERTS: I'd like to speak in favor of the amendment, I am going to vote for it.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will now put the question. It is on the amendment offered by Delegate Larsen, Sections 24 and 25 relating to a legislative council.

DELEGATES: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary.

PORTEUS: I think we should have a division of the house.

CHAIRMAN: I think we will have to have a division, as the secretary suggested. All those in favor will please rise. Against? The amendment is lost.

KELLERMAN: I think the delegates have on their desks a redraft, and I'm sorry to bother them by asking them to add one or two subsequent thoughts that I think improve it. In the second sentence - - I'll read from the beginning. Incidentally, this is not to amend Section 11 to read as follows, it is to amend Section 11 to add this paragraph. That should be in the record of the proceedings.

> Section 11. There shall be an executive secretary of the legislature who shall be selected, and be subject to removal, by the legislature in the same manner as provided for the auditor in Section 8 of Article ___, and shall serve for a term of 8 years.

That's a two-thirds vote of each house as you recall from that section.

> All employees of the legislature, other than the chief clerk, sergeant-at-arms, chaplain and attorney for each house shall be appointed by the executive secretary from lists of those who have qualified for the respective positions after examination prepared and administered in accordance with the merit principle. All employees shall be supervised by the executive secretary, and he shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law.

May I add that further duties, that I think would be highly feasible, have been brought to my attention and would be justified as follows. We know that the executive secretary would have to be on deck some time before the session convenes and some time after to carry through the full administrative or business management of the legislature for the work that is necessary to be done after the session closes. There is also the matter of holdover committees, the Legislative Reference Bureau accumulating facts and information in connection with that. There are various duties which can be performed and should be well fitted into the full legislative procedure. Remember we also have an annual session. The next session also has to be prepared, and so forth.

So I feel that this justifies the full time position and working in that administrative capacity. His salary will be well repaid by the amount of money that he can save justifiably in a good businesslike administration of the legislative process.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Kellerman, in view of the fact that you have prepared several amendments to your proposed amendment, and in view of the further fact that the amendment to Section 10 is now on the desks of the delegates, would you care to have your amendment reprinted as redraft No. 3 and have that on the desks when it's voted upon? Or do you want to proceed now?

KELLERMAN: I don't think that's necessary. These amendments are very slight.

If you'll take the second sentence of the paragraph, "All employees of the legislature, other than the chief clerk, sergeant-at-arms, chaplain and attorney of each house" all right, then in the ninth or tenth line, "respective positions," instead of the words "by examination," if your copy has not been corrected change the word "by" to "after." In the beginning of the last sentence, "such employees" should read "all employees shall be supervised by the executive secretary," and add the following language, "and he shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law."

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels there's been adequate debate on this, and accordingly will put the question. Is the roll call demanded? The Clerk will please call the roll. This is on the amendment to Section 11 offered by Delegate Kellerman.

Ayes, 23. Noes, 24 (Apoliona, Ashford, Bryan, Cockett, Doi, Fong, Gilliland, Hayes, Holroyde, Kam, Kauhane, Kido, King, Lai, Lyman, Noda, Porteus, Richards, Sakai, Sakakihara, Smith, St. Sure, Tavares, Yamauchi). Not voting, 16 (Crossley, Fukushima, Ihara, Kawahara, Kawakami, Kometani, Lee, Mau, Mizuha, Ohrt, Phillips, C. Rice, Shimamura, Silva, White, Woolaway).

The amendment is lost.

FONG: I now move that we adopt Section 11, as amended.

KAUHANE: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 11, as amended, be adopted. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary? The ayes have it.

DELEGATE: Mr. Chairman, does that complete the business for this Committee?

HEEN: Section 10. The delegates have on their desks a copy of the amendment RD 1, dated July 8, 1950. I think this is almost the ultimate of perfection now.

CHAIRMAN: Got all the commas in there, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: No, there should be one "s" in the word "organization," in the third line from the last line, "organizations." That section now reads:

> Section 10. Disqualification of members. No member of the legislature shall hold any other public office under the State, nor shall he, during the term for which he is elected or appointed, be elected or appointed to any public office or employment which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased, by legislative act during such term. The term "public office," for the purposes of this section, shall not include notaries public, reserve police officers or officers of emergency organizations for civilian defense or disaster relief. The legislature may provide for further disqualifications.

I move the adoption of the amendment.

APOLIONA: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to ask the movant a question. Delegate Heen, this would permit army officers and the United States attorney to serve in the legislature, would it not?

HEEN: That's correct, but the last provision there, "The legislature may provide for further disqualification," would permit the legislature to bar district attorneys and the like.

CHAIRMAN: That would take care of that.

KING: It would permit army officers and the United States District Attorney and the United States District Judge to serve in the legislature provided he was a citizen of the State of Hawaii and could get elected and was not on active duty and barred from that office by Federal requirements, so I think the danger is very remote.

PORTEUS: And I might add, if the legislature didn't say he couldn't run.

RICHARDS: May I ask one further question? The statement, "The legislature may provide for further disqualifications," could the legislature provide for a disqualification of a man already elected and serving? I am thinking of a hold-over senator.

PORTEUS: I think the intent of that is to provide that the legislature may by putting in effect general law provide other disqualifications, such as being a Federal office holder, such as a district attorney or some one in that category, but that the legislature need not go all the way and say that a person who holds a reserve commission in the organized reserve of the United States is disqualified. So we are getting at the problem in that fashion.

RICHARDS: That does not quite answer my question.

TAVARES: I think I can answer that question. Would that not be an ex post facto law, that was made retroactive?

CHAIRMAN: I was going to suggest to Delegate Richards, any further disqualification would be prospective in its operation. While it's true that ex post facto laws only apply to criminal laws, it's unthinkable that the legislature would make its disqualification retroactively.

NIELSEN: I happen to be an officer in the Civil Air Patrol. Is that taken care of?

CHAIRMAN: Is that an office under the Territory of Hawaii?

PORTEUS: I believe under the Army Air Service, so I believe that's all right.

CHAIRMAN: This is only a prohibition against state office.

Are we ready for the question? All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary? It is carried. Unanimous. Excuse me, not unanimous. Still carried.

FONG: I now move that we rise and recommend that Proposal No. 29 be adopted.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, does that complete in its entirety our deliberations on this? According to the Chair's notes that completes everything.

HEEN: There's one more section, Section 20 of Committee Proposal No. 29. I believe there has been distributed to each delegate a copy of an amendment proposed by Delegate Sakakihara under the date of July 7, 1950.

WIRTZ: My recollection is that that was passed.

CHAIRMAN: We acted upon Delegate Sakakihara's amendment. That amendment, in substance I think it literally copied its section from the Organic Act, was adopted by this committee.

HEEN: Oh, did it pass?

CHAIRMAN: I invite the chairman's attention to that description—whether or not that should be acted upon. Committee Proposal No. 30, does that require any action?

HEEN: I don't know whether any changes were made in reference to these districts during the discussion. If no changes were made with reference to these districts, then there need not be any discussion on that. Is that the schedule?

CHAIRMAN: That is Committee Proposal No. 30 relating to a schedule describing representative districts. It is the Chair's recollection we did change one on the island of Hawaii.

HEEN: That's correct. The district of Keaukaha or that part of the area known as Keaukaha was eliminated from the first draft of the proposal, so that would just mean a correction in that regard to conform. I don't see the necessity for going through that.

CHAIRMAN: Would it be in order to adopt 30 -- Committee Proposal No. 30, the schedule, as amended to conform with our prior action in regard to the proposal itself?

HEEN: I so move.

WIRTZ: Point of information. The motion to conform to our prior action, that would take care of the situation of the change on Maui?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

HEEN: That is the other change. That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: Several minor changes in the motion, general in its terms, would take care of all of them. The President indicates there are four.

HEEN: Therefore I withdraw my motion and make it in this form: I move that Committee Proposal 30 be adopted with appropriate amendments to conform to changes that were made in connection with the adoption of Committee Proposal No. 29.

FONG: Second the motion.

SAKAKIHARA: Point of information. What is the status of the amendment to Proposal No. 29 relating to the redistricting of the second district into two districts. Has that amendment been taken care of?

HEEN: That's not in the schedule. That's in the article itself.

NIELSEN: I don't know why, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Sakakihara is so interested in the second district.

CHAIRMAN: That's a private feud you have, I guess. I don't know either.
The Chair will put the question.

PORTEUS: I think possibly because we have always returned to the Committee of the Whole to clear the report that the motion would be to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is ready to put the question. The question is that the proposal, as amended, together with Proposal No. 30 to be amended in conformity with the action taken by this body in committee, be adopted. All those in favor will signify by saying "aye." Contrary? It appears to be unanimous. Not unanimous, but it's carried.

PORTEUS: May we now rise, report progress --

HEEN: I would like to move for a reconsideration of our action in adopting Committee Proposal 29, as amended, for the reason that I would like to insert by way of amendment a matter that will take care of hearings of impeachment cases in a budget session.

OKINO: I so move.

BRYAN: I second it.

PORTEUS: I think that the motion to reconsider should only be directed to the particular section, rather than to the entire article, because we haven't adopted the entire article. What is the section number?

HEEN: Section 12.

CHAIRMAN: You have an amendment prepared, Delegate Heen? It has been moved and seconded we reconsider our action in regard to Section 12 in order to permit Delegate Heen to present a proposed amendment, simple in form, the Chair understands it. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary? The motion is carried.

HEEN: One minute recess, please, Mr. Chairman, just one minute.

CHAIRMAN: Half a minute recess.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The committee will come to order.

HEEN: Section 12, dealing with the second paragraph of that section, insert after the first sentence of the second paragraph of Section 12 the following:

> The legislature at such budget session shall also be authorized to consider and act upon matters relating to the impeachment or removal of officers.

FONG: I second the motion.

HEEN: That will then permit the legislature in a budget session to consider impeachment cases or cases relating to the removal of judicial officers. I move the adoption of the amendment.

FONG: I second the motion.

ASHFORD: May I ask whether that fits in with the amendment made the other day, which I frankly confess didn't make sense to me, which was designed not to relate to impeachment but to provide for expenses, as I understood, for the staff made necessary by reconvening to consider bills which the governor vetoed?

CHAIRMAN: That was defeated, the Chair recollects. Was it carried?

HEEN: No, it was an amendment to that first sentence in the second paragraph, which was added to the first sentence, reading as follows:

> and the special session to be convened thereafter in accordance with the provisions of Section 18 of this article.

So this amendment follows that period. Now if this amendment as I have proposed is adopted, then the class can be dismissed for the day.

CHAIRMAN: You've heard the amendment. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary? The motion is carried.
The Chair will now put the question on the adoption of Section 12, as amended.

HEEN: I so move that.

PORTEUS: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 12 as amended be adopted. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary? The motion is carried.

FONG: I now move that we adopt Committee Proposal No. 29, as amended.

DOWSON: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Committee Proposal No. 29 as amended be adopted. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary? The motion is carried.

HEEN: I now move that this committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, that in the meantime a written report be prepared by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole in accordance with the actions taken by this committee.

FONG: Second the motion.

PORTEUS: Did the chairman announce the results of the vote?

CHAIRMAN: The Chairman tried to. It carried. Not quite unanimous.
Question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary? It's carried.

JULY 13, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegates please take their seats. Will the committee please come to order. As soon as we have order here, we can dispose of this in a few minutes. Delegate Lai is recognized.

LAI: Is it in order now, Mr. Chairman, to make a motion to adopt Committee Proposal 29?

CHAIRMAN: It is.

LAI: I so move.

BRYAN: I'll second that motion.

ASHFORD: Is the motion to adopt the Committee of the Whole report for recommendation out to the Convention as a whole, because I have a question on that report.

CHAIRMAN: That is the motion, Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: On page 27 of the report.

CHAIRMAN: Before taking that up, may the Chair make one statement. The Chair has not checked the proposal attached to the report. I am advised it has been carefully checked by the staff, and will endeavor to do it before it is presented to the Convention for second reading or third reading, but I do believe it's accurate. I just want to make that statement to the members.

ASHFORD: At the end of the discussion on page 27, just before the recommendation, there is a short paragraph which reads: "It is the further intent - -"

CHAIRMAN: Oh, could we have the page first? Twenty-seven? Proceed, Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: "It is the further intent of your committee that, should the legislature fail to convene on the day required, the bill nevertheless would not become law." Mr. Chairman, I do not think that that conforms with the language of the section. I think it is the intent that it shall not become law unless the Governor notifies the legislature or the members thereof that he intends to veto.

CHAIRMAN: You're suggesting an amendment?

HEEN: Point of information. May I ask the last speaker what page she is reading from.

CHAIRMAN: Page 27, Delegate Heen.

ASHFORD: Of the report.

CHAIRMAN: Of the report, and it's addressed to Section 18 of the proposal.

HEEN: That part of that particular section relating to pocket veto is not too clear in the language that was finally adopted, and because of that I have prepared an amendment that clarifies the situation and removes a great deal of the ambiguity that existed in the draft as adopted by the Committee of the Whole and which is now incorporated in the proposal attached to the report of the Committee of the Whole.

CHAIRMAN: Has it been printed, Delegate Heen? Your amendment?

HEEN: It has. It's ready for distribution.

CHAIRMAN: Committee may stand in recess while the clerks are distributing the proposed amendment.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Committee will come to order.

HEEN: I might state that this proposed amendment is an amendment to the second paragraph of Section 17 instead of 18. This was prepared before one of the sections of the committee proposal was deleted the other day, so I would ask the delegates to change the figure 18 to 17 in the second line on this RD 1 draft.

CHAIRMAN: You offer that as an amendment, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: I now offer this amendment.

HOLROYDE: I move we reconsider our action on that section so that Delegate Heen can present his amendment.

HEEN: Second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we reconsider action upon Section 17.

HEEN: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

HEEN: I now offer an amendment to Section 17 as set forth in this written amendment which has been distributed to the members of this committee. Perhaps I should read it and read it slowly.

> The governor shall have ten days, Sundays and holidays excluded, to consider bills presented to him ten days or more before the adjournment of the legislature sine die, and if any such bill is neither signed nor returned by the governor within that time, it shall become law in like manner as if he had signed it.

That is in the Organic Act at the present time. Now the next paragraph reads as follows:

> The governor shall have 45 days after the adjournment of the legislature sine die, Sundays and holidays excluded, to consider bills presented to him less than ten days before such adjournment, or presented after adjournment, and any such bill shall become law on the forty-fifth day unless the governor shall have given by proclamation ten days' notice to the legislature that he plans to return such bill with his objections on the said forty-fifth day. The legislature may convene at or before noon on the said forty-fifth day in special session, without call, for the sole purpose of acting upon any such bill returned by the governor. In case the legislature shall fail to so convene, such bill shall not become law. Any such bill may be amended to meet the governor's objections and, if so amended and passed, only one reading being required in each house for such passage, it shall be presented again to the governor, but shall become law only if he shall sign it within ten days after presentation, Sundays and holidays excluded. No salary shall be paid to the members of the legislature when convened for this purpose.

The last one there is already in the bill, and perhaps should not have been included because this was designed to amend only the second paragraph of Section 17. The Style Committee, however, can take care of this situation.

I move the adoption of that amendment.

FUKUSHIMA: I second that motion.

ROBERTS: I'd like to have Delegate Heen explain the purpose of his amendment and the changes made from the from the one we previously adopted.

CHAIRMAN: Will you do that, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: In the form adopted by the Committee of the Whole in the third sentence there, "on the said forty-fifth day the bill shall become law notwithstanding the failure of the Governor to sign it within the period last stated unless at or before noon of that day he shall return it with his objections to the legislature which shall convene on that day in special session without call, for the sole purpose of acting upon bills returned by the governor, unless he shall fail to give the notice hereinafter provided." It's a little confusing there with that second "unless" being in the picture. That's at ten days' notice.

ROBERTS: When we first amended this section it was to make sure that the legislators were given adequate notice to appear if the governor planned to return some of those bills with his veto. Ten days' notice having been given, they then knew that the governor was going to present that. Now, if he gave no notice, then it was the intention that the governor did not plan to veto any of the bills but adopted them all.

HEEN: Now, there's been a change of position of that "ten days' notice" and "any such bill." In the proposed amendment, "and any such bill shall become law on the forty-fifth day, unless the governor shall have given by proclamation ten days' notice to the legislature," when the ten days' notice is given then that bill does not become law.

ASHFORD: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen still has the floor.

HEEN: Then the legislature may convene on the forty-fifth day in special session without call for the sole purpose of acting upon any such bill. Then this goes on further to say, if "In case the legislature shall fail to so convene such bill shall not become law," notwithstanding the fact that it has not been returned to the legislature for failure of the legislature to convene. However, it shall not become law. Then the latter part of this makes it clear whether or not after making any amendments there should be three readings or one reading only. This makes it clear that the bill may be amended in order to meet the objections of the governor, which then will require only one reading by each house.

ASHFORD: I'm opposed to this amendment and I am opposed to it because of the insertion of that one sentence, "In case the legislature shall fail to so convene, such bill shall not become law." In effect that transfers the veto power from the governor to the legislature. In other words, the governor advises the legislature that he is going to veto certain bills. Now the legislature can then fail to convene to consider his reasons and to act in accordance with their desires upon the matter and the bill becomes law. In other words, a failure of a majority of the legislators to come can override the governor's veto, and to me that's wrong.

HEEN: That does not override the governor's veto.

CHAIRMAN: It's just the reverse.

HEEN: That sustains the governor's veto. If the legislature wanted to override the governor's veto, then, of course, they will meet, convene, and by a two-thirds vote override the governor's veto.

ASHFORD: I submit that that is an incorrect reading of the sentence. "In case the legislature shall fail to so convene, such bill shall not become law." In other words, they veto by a majority failing to convene.

CHAIRMAN: Wouldn't this be the situation. The governor would already have indicated his pocket veto by saying he wasn't going to sign it. So the failure to convene would simply uphold the exercise by the governor. Is that not the situation?

ASHFORD: No, not at all, because the law -- Oh, I'm wrong. I'm wrong. I'm wrong. I apologize and recede.

ARASHIRO: Does this mean then that the legislature is going to convene every time that the governor intends to veto a bill, which bills do not go to the governor all on the same day, and it goes on to the governor a different day, and every time he vetoes one bill we're going to -- the legislature is going to convene?

CHAIRMAN: No, no. This is designed to cure the so-called evil of the pocket veto. It will make the governor give ten days' notice within a forty-five day period after the adjournment that he proposed to do that.

HEEN: I think I can answer the delegate's question. We had in mind that these bills will be presented to the governor at different times where he can exercise the pocket veto. If he sends it on the ninth day before adjournment sine die, that's one bill that he can pocket veto. If he sends another bill say, ten days after adjournment, that's another bill that may be pocket vetoed. But all these bills become law on the forty-fifth day after the adjournment unless he notifies the legislature that he plans to veto the bill by sending the bill with his objections. They all have to go into effect, all on the forty-fifth day, the same day, no matter when they are presented to the governor by the legislature. That is, they must, of course, be presented not more than ten days before the adjournment.

ARASHIRO: That means that the last bill that goes to the governor, and the governor had the intention of pocket vetoing the bill, then the governor must notify the legislature that that bill is going to be pocket vetoed on the thirty-fifth day. Is that right?

CHAIRMAN: That's right.

RICHARDS: I have a question to ask the movant. The situation as I interpret the reading is that if a bill is returned by the governor on the forty-fifth day with some suggestions for amendment and the legislature does follow those suggestions, he still has the right to veto. Now a situation can arise where the legislature, who has the power to override his veto, would prefer to override his veto on the original bill and not conform to the governor's suggestions, Whereas, by conforming to the governor's suggestions, they give him a power to veto.

HEEN: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: That's up to the legislators, isn't it?

HEEN: At the last stage of the proceedings, when the legislature sees fit to do so and amends the bill in order to meet the objections of the governor, the presumption is, of course, that the governor will approve that bill when it is again presented to him. Otherwise, it wouldn't make sense. If the legislature does not approve the objection or does not agree with the governor as to his objections, then they can override the governor by a two-thirds vote.

CHAIRMAN: I think what Delegate Richards is pointing out is that there's a certain amount of risk in amending, which, of course is inevitable as the Chair sees it. You may not override it.

TAVARES: For the purposes of the records, I would like to ask if the movant agrees with me that in the second line, the words "Sundays and holidays excluded" applies to every period of days thereafter mentioned. In other words, that interpretation, "Sundays and holidays excluded," also applies to the other periods mentioned later in the section.

HEEN: The second paragraph, I might answer that question, says, "The governor shall have forty-five days after the adjournment of the legislature sine die, Sundays and holidays excluded."

TAVARES: There is another provision, though, in the first paragraph, in the second and third lines. "The governor shall have ten days, Sundays and holidays excluded, to consider bills presented to him ten days or more before adjournment." I take it that ten days or more means Sundays and holidays excluded to coincide with the first portion. That's what I mean.

HEEN: Where about is that?

TAVARES: In the first paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: The first paragraph of the amendment, Delegate Tavares?

TAVARES: Yes, Mr. Chairman. It reads: "The governor shall have ten days, Sundays and holidays excluded, to consider bills presented to him ten days or more before adjournment." That ten days or more I presume, as I read it, means Sundays and holidays excluded also. I think that's obvious intent, otherwise those two periods wouldn't coincide.

HEEN: There is some slight -- it's a little indefinite there as to whether or not the second ten days --

CHAIRMAN: Don't we have a statute that covers this, Delegate Tavares?

TAVARES: Whether we have or not, if it's the sense of the Convention -- we take a sense vote that we mean Sundays and holidays excluded in all these other ten-day provisions mentioned, why we're -- that I think is sufficient. I think that is the intent I read from the whole section. Otherwise, some periods won't coincide. For instance, the forty-five day period, Sundays and holidays excluded, after the legislature adjourns, in order to have the ten days' notice come out properly, the ten days' notice the Governor gives before the forty-five day period expires should be ten days, holidays and Sundays excluded.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Tavares, would it be your view that it'd be better to take it out of here and have a sense vote and have that situation apply to the whole amendment?

TAVARES: No, Mr. Chairman. I think if we take a sense vote that it means the same whether we put that "Sundays and holidays excluded" or not in each place. I think we've taken care of it. And I so move, Mr. Chairman.

ASHFORD: I don't believe that will do it. In other words, I don't think a sense vote will be sufficient where we express in two places the fact that Sundays and holidays are excluded, and then two other places we don't. My own suggestion would be to leave out "Sundays and holidays excluded" there, and then put at the end that the number of days in each instance shall exclude Sundays and holidays.

TAVARES: I believe that if we make that sense vote, the Style Committee will then make the proper adjustment, because the Convention will then have gone on record and Style can take care of that.

LEE: I believe with that understanding, in order to facilitate the work here, I second the motion made by Delegate Tavares with the understanding that the Style Committee will follow the suggestion outlined by Delegate Ashford which, I think, is a good one.

CHAIRMAN: In other words, for the purposes of dealing with this section wherever the period of days is contained, Sundays and holidays will be excluded.

MIZUHA: I rise to a point of information. In order to eliminate any headaches for our future attorney general, this convening of the legislature after the forty-five days, it's presumed and understood by the members of this Convention that they will be eligible for travel pay and per diem. Is that our understanding? I ask that question to the movant of the amendment.

FUKUSHIMA: If the delegate was present at the time when the Committee of the Whole met to discuss this matter, that question would be unnecessary because that was adequately discussed. It does not preclude the payment of travel expenses or any other expenses but the salary alone.

MIZUHA: This is a new amendment.

DELEGATE: Question. Question.

CHAIRMAN: The question is on the sense of the interpretation of this proposed amendment. All in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

TAVARES: One more question. In the sixth line from the bottom of the second paragraph of this amendment, the sentence reads: "And such bill may be amended to meet the governor's objection, and if so amended and passed" and so forth. Now, the legislature may not want to amend it the way the governor wants. They may want to amend it some other way, and I don't think they should be forced to amend it just the way the governor wants to. And I, therefore, move to delete the words "to meet the governor's objections." And then the legislature -- if the legislature wants to take a chance on the governor pocket-vetoing it after that with those other amendments, they can do so. Perhaps, they'll meet the governor half way. This forces the legislature to either take everything the governor says or nothing. And if the legislature is going to convene again, I don't see any reason why, if they want to take a chance of a pocket veto, they shouldn't say, "All right, Mr. Governor, we'll give you half of what you ask but we won't give you all." And maybe the governor will sign it.

SAKAKIHARA: I second that motion to delete.

PORTEUS: I think that this is a reasonable scheme for permitting the legislature to come back and reexamine the various bills in order to see whether or not that in the opinion of the legislators the bill should become law despite the governor's objection. However, I'd like to point out if you don't look out, with the sixty day session one year, that's two and a half months; thirty day session the next year, that's at least a month and a half; it takes you two months to get elected; then you've got to come back after the general session; then you've got to come back after the budgetary session. Then instead of just dealing with the veto, yes or no, we want the bill as it is, and also instead of just saying yes, we'll meet certain of the governor's objection, the legislature apparently can write a new bill on the same subject. Now all we're doing is going to get into another extended legislative session, with no pay and only a per diem. And I don't like to see the legislature have to return and I don't like to see the opportunity of sitting down and taking a bill on a certain subject and rewriting the thing entirely differently and be there for I don't know how long.

It seems to me when the legislature has passed it, the governor points out the objections, the legislature wants to override his veto, they can try it. If they fail, that's the end of it. If they want to try to meet his objections, they may try. But to start writing new legislation is just providing that we'll have another session. Now if we're going to have another session, let's just have another session and start all over again. So that if we want to divide the subject into two bills instead of one, why we can do it and start all over, but let's not get into a third session on top of the two sessions we've provided.

TAVARES: That argument sounds all right on the face of it but let me show you what it leads to. The governor often in his veto message sends back his objections in general terms, and if you leave this in here then the courts will have to decide whether the amendment actually adopted by the legislature and even signed by the governor actually did meet his objections, and if it didn't the law is void anyhow. You're bringing yourself a lot of trouble in the courts if you leave that statement in.

Secondly, the governor may be wrong in his objections. He may say that certain things should go in and they may actually be wrong grammatically and otherwise. And if the legislature does the thing substantially correct but not the way he wants it, but meets his objection substantially in a way a little different from what he said, again you have the question of whether their action is valid even if the governor approves it. And, Mr. Chairman, you're running yourself into an awful lot of trouble. I say that if you leave that in there, you're making it very difficult and you are making the legislature swallow everything the governor wants, word for word, even if the governor is wrong and even if he, upon being told, thinks it was O.K.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to ask Delegate Tavares a question. Delegate Tavares, is it your opinion that under this language, if the two executive and legislative branches of the government would reach an agreement on a subject matter, that it would be a judicial question whether or not the legislature had then met the governor's objection?

TAVARES: I think that is a possibility there; that is, that the governor might agree to it afterwards. But the objections he made are made at the time he submits his report. Now here's what can happen. The governor says the legislature made a mistake. The legislature says, "Yes, we made a mistake and we'll correct it, but the correction you want isn't the right correction. We will correct it a little differently." Now they don't have time to go up to the governor, back and forth and get an absolute signed agreement that they have complied to his objections. They may want to pass several bills in succession and adjourn. And so they pass these bills admitting they're wrong to some extent, admitting the governor's right, but saying that the particular way he wanted it corrected isn't the right way to do it. And my fear is that in so doing they are running a question of whether they have complied with the governor's objections.

SAKAKIHARA: Will Delegate Tavares accept further amendment to his amendment by including in the amendment the deletion of, after the word "objections," "and if so amended." So that it will read, "any such bill may be amended and passed - - " I'm speaking on the amendment that Delegate Tavares offered here which I seconded.

TAVARES: Mr. Chairman, the veto - -

CHAIRMAN: There's been a request to see whether or not you accept that amendment.

TAVARES: The veto power is covered by another section which will apply if they override his veto.

CHAIRMAN: The answer is no, Delegate Sakakihara.

TAVARES: I don't think this would cover it. I think if it is amended, it should be made clear they can amend it on one reading. There is a protection. The bill must be one subject matter, which is always a restriction on the legislature going too far afield in making the amendment.

Suppose for instance, Mr. Chairman, the governor sends back an objection. "You want ten new teachers. We think that's too much." The Governor says, "You have got too many, ten too many." The legislature says "No, we'll make it five then." You have the question of whether they have complied with the governor's objection.

LEE: I wonder who's talking tweedle-de-dee and tweedle-de-dum right at this moment. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, your question wasn't fully answered. When you asked a question, I believe you knew the answer. It was a political question.

CHAIRMAN: That's the Chair's view.

LEE: Furthermore the matter of meeting the objections of the governor, it's very plain when a governor vetoes a bill. He states his reason and if the legislature has to override it, they can override it or they can meet his objections. And some of his objections may be substantially met, they don't have to be met in full. We've got to take the word in its common sense meaning. We can't divide the word "objection" into 100 bundle of sticks and as long as one bundle, one stick isn't - - the objection isn't met, that therefore it might develop a judicial question. I can't see any objection to the present language.

HEEN: With a constitutional provision such as this, the governor is going to be very careful in stating his objections specifically. If the bill says that they must have ten teachers over in Hilo and he objects to that and says that they should have five, it's very easy to meet that objection by changing the ten to five. And if it's a question of policy which does not meet with the approval of the governor, he can say so, that this bill is not a sound bill. Then that question is one that can be overridden by the - - When a veto is based upon a matter of policy, then it's up to the legislature to either sustain him or override his veto.

ROBERTS: I think we ought to keep in mind the basic purpose of this section in the Constitution. As I understand its meaning, it cuts two ways. One, it is a basic prohibition against the legislature putting bills to the governor, passing bills and then going home and saying, "We passed a law and the governor has vetoed it." It puts a pressure on the legislature to submit bills and pass them only when they want them passed. It makes it quite clear that the governor can put them right on the spot by calling them back in session.

It also cuts the other way. It makes sure that the governor, when he has an objection, states it, and if he thinks that the veto is improper, then gives these individuals in the legislature a chance to override it.

It cuts both ways, but it seems to me that once you present a bill, once you pass it, you submit it to the governor, The governor then very clearly spells out in what specific ways the bill is objectionable. The legislature's hands ought to be tied, and to meet the specific issue, if they pass the bill, then they ought to be able to back it up and to override the veto of the governor. They ought not to write new bills. We provide here that there shall be only one reading. If they're going to write new statutes, then we ought to have at least three readings to make sure that it's properly understood. So that they can't pass the buck again to the governor, either you mean it specifically as you have in the present language or else you remove the entire section. You've got to put an end to the proposal some time along the way.

PORTEUS: I wonder whether or not we might be able to meet the difficulties that we seem to be discussing at the moment by the insertion of the word after "meet"--

CHAIRMAN: After what?

PORTEUS: After "meet," where it says, "Any such bill may be amended to meet the governor's objection and if so amended," etc., to insert the words, "any of" after "meet" so that it could be --

CHAIRMAN: The Chair can't hear you, Delegate Porteus.

PORTEUS: I'm sorry. In the last sentence of the second section -- second paragraph where it starts, "Any such bill may be amended to meet the governor's objections and if so amended," etc., I'd like to insert the words "any of" after the word "meet," so that it would read as follows: "Any such bill may be amended to meet any of the governor's objections," and then we would go on. By making an amendment such as that, I think that we could meet the difficulty posed by Delegate Tavares. I wonder if I might have his attention.

CHAIRMAN: It doesn't appear to the Chair, Delegate Porteus, that that would present any judicial question. I would doubt that very much.

PORTEUS: I'm speaking, Mr. Chairman, to the attention of the delegate here.

CHAIRMAN: The delegate was wandering around the floor.

TAVARES: Sorry, Mr. Chairman.

SAKAKIHARA: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Porteus has the floor.

PORTEUS: I think that the use of the words "any of" would meet the argument presented by my fellow colleague from the fourth district when he says that the legislature might want to meet some but not all of the governor's objections, as the legislature might determine that some of those objections were not well taken. I think the insertion of those words would completely dispose of that argument.

I think it would also be better to restrict, as Delegate Roberts has indicated, the activities of the legislature to meeting the objections—either overriding the veto of the bill as passed, meeting some or all of the governor's objections, or putting an end to the matter there. Because if you're going to go in and start amending, then we've got to really get into the whole legislative procedure, and I don't think we want to do that.

TAVARES: My only thought was this. The governor may not suggest the exact wording of the amendment. He may send the bill back with general objections. The governor may interpret it one way, as we do here, and the legislature another, and so they pass an amendment thinking they have met his objection. But if they are mistaken, if in fact, as interpreted properly, the governor's objections was not actually met by the amendment, the question in my mind is even if the governor thereafter approves the bill, is it going to be valid? I think there is a question unless you are going to say that when the governor approves it, he then signifies that his objections have been met. I am not sure the courts will so interpret it.

CHAIRMAN: Well, what better evidence of his approval could you have than that?

SAKAKIHARA: In order to shut off any further debate, I withdraw my second to Delegate Tavares' amendment.

FUKUSHIMA: I believe we've had enough debate on this. This was proposed by Delegate Heen as a perfecting amendment. So I now move the previous question.

CHAIRMAN: No, the question is on the amendment of Delegate Tavares, the Chair believes.

FUKUSHIMA: The second was withdrawn.

CHAIRMAN: Oh, it was withdrawn. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor of the amendment, signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

DELEGATE: May we have a short recess for the benefit of the clerks?

FUKUSHIMA: I now move the adoption of Section 17 as amended.

J. TRASK: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 17 as amended be adopted.

SAKAKIHARA: That is as amended by Senator Heen's amendment?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. The ayes have it. Carried.

Chair will declare a short recess.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Will the committee please come to order.

KING: I move that the committee rise and recommend the adoption of Committee of the Whole Report No. 24, and the passage of Committee Proposal No. 29 on second reading as amended, and Committee Proposal No. 30, without amendment.

NODA: I second the motion.

HEEN: I think the motion should be to adopt the committee report subject to the amendments which have been made.

KING: I accept the amendment. Pass second reading subject to amendment to the Committee Proposal No. 29.

ASHFORD: As I see it, the report will have to be amended by striking out the paragraph I objected to, to meet the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to avoid that, if he could get your permission.

ASHFORD: That wasn't the intention of the Committee of the Whole. I didn't want that staying in the report.

CHAIRMAN: Very well. The action is on the report and proposal as amended.

HEEN: The motion is to adopt the committee report subject to the amendment made to the committee proposal.

KING: That will be all right. The adoption of the committee report is to be insofar as it is not inconsistent with the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question? All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Contrary. Carried.

TAVARES: One further motion, that this motion also includes leave to file a supplementary report setting forth the amendment recommended.

CHAIRMAN: I gather that is obligatory in view of the amendment.

Debates in Committee of the Whole on

EXECUTIVE POWERS AND FUNCTIONS

(Article IV)

Chairman: EDWARD C. BRYAN

JUNE 20, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: Committee of the Whole please come to order. The Chair will recognize Delegate Okino, chairman of the Committee of Executive Powers and Functions.

OKINO: I believe it is fair for me to assume that all of you have already read our Committee Report No. 67 and two other committee reports filed by the minority. I believe it is also fair for me to assume that you have read Committee Proposal No. 22, attached to the Standing Committee Report No. 67. May I at this time briefly refresh your memory and read two paragraphs of Committee Report No. 67.

> The fundamental principle upon which your committee proposal was drafted is that of concentration of executive power in the governor, which would give the best government. Consistent with this principle, your committee proposal provides for the election of only the governor and lieutenant governor and for the appointment of principal department heads to serve at the pleasure of the governor. There shall then be a very short ballot. The principle is comparable to that found in the management of corporate enterprises. Its advantages may be summed up in the statement that, in concentrating executive power, it fixes responsibility for the efficient conduct of governmental affairs and enables the electorate to judge the merits of the administration.
> Your committee has subscribed, by and large, to the principle that a constitution should state only basic fundamentals, and that many desirable matters, for which there is strong temptation to make constitutional provisions, should be left open for legislative treatment as future conditions may require. Your committee believes that it is only through such delegation to the legislature that the flexibility necessary to keep government in step with economic and social development is possible.

I suggest that we go to Committee Proposal No. 22 at this time and that we take the proposal section by section, and if any section contains more than one paragraph, then we take that particular section with more than one paragraphs -- more than one paragraph, by paragraphs.

CHAIRMAN: That is satisfactory. Just a second please, Delegate Lai. I'd like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has any recommendations on the method of taking up the minority reports. Can they follow afterwards or shall we take them up with any particular section?

OKINO: I suggest that we take it up together with the Committee Proposal No. 22. If you will study the minority report filed by Delegates Ohrt, Kage and Loper, it pertains to a new subject matter which is not covered in the Committee Proposal No. 22. It is an amendment offered to include a new section to be numbered 11, namely, for the establishment of the administrative manager. Now the minority report filed by Mr. Crossley pertains to only two paragraphs of Section 10 of the Committee Proposal No. 22. The committee minority report filed by Delegate White makes -- suggests amendments to various sections in Proposal No. 22, and for that reason, I feel it would expedite matters if Delegate White will offer his amendment as we proceed with each section of Proposal No. 22.

CHAIRMAN: Is that satisfactory, Delegate White?

WHITE: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: Is that satisfactory with the Delegates Kage, Ohrt, etc.?

OKINO: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: Is it? Yes, it is.

LAI: I move for the adoption of Section 1.

APOLIONA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 1 of Standing -- of the proposal attached to Standing Committee Report No. 67 be adopted.

DOI: I thought we had agreed a few seconds ago that we were to take it up paragraph by paragraph where one section contained more than one paragraph. Therefore, I think the motion is out of order.

CHAIRMAN: Well, can we do this? Can we consider paragraph 1 and when that is finished vote on it, and then consider paragraph 2? Or would you like to have a motion for each paragraph?

DOI: I think it's proper to go -- a motion for each paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will so rule.

LAI: I so move. I move that we adopt the first paragraph of Section 1.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we adopt the first paragraph of Section 1, Committee Proposal No. 22. Are there any questions?

TAVARES: For the record, I should like to have the reason explained for this provision: "The person receiving the greatest number of votes shall be the governor."

OKINO: That's paragraph 2.

TAVARES: Oh, I'm sorry.

OKINO: Mr. Chairman, that's paragraph 2.

CHAIRMAN: Are there any questions on paragraph 1?

MAU: Just a question, Mr. Chairman. Are we tentatively agreeing to paragraph 1? If we adopt it, in order to reconsider we have to move to reconsider. Isn't it better, because we don't know what the effect of other paragraphs would be in the other sections that we just tentatively agree without actually taking formal action so that a motion for reconsideration need not be made?

CHAIRMAN: Well, I think that in the paragraphs that are to follow, some of which may be little bit more complex, that if we don't move and vote on each paragraph, we'll never know when we're tentatively agreed on it. So if -- perhaps if Delegate Lai would change his motion that would satisfy you, but I think we should still have another motion in order to reconsider after it's been voted on. The delegate accepts that suggestion.

All those in favor of tentative agreement on Section -- the first paragraph of Section 1 say "aye." Opposed.

DELEGATE: I move for the tentative --

CHAIRMAN: That vote was carried incidentally.

LEE: I notice that one of the delegates sought to speak. We are in the Committee of the Whole. It seems to me that where a delegate desires to speak, the Chair should recognize the delegate before putting the vote.

CHAIRMAN: I'm sorry but I did not notice the delegate until after the vote had been called. Would you like to speak on that subject, Delegate --

[Delegate's reply inaudible.]

LEE: The delegate was standing up to be recognized.

CHAIRMAN: I'm sorry.

ASHFORD: Is the executive power vested in the governor? Won't there be commissions and other matters which are not, which are at least semi-independent from the governor and perhaps independent from the governor, who will have some of the executive power?

CHAIRMAN: I'd like to refer your question to the chairman of the committee.

OKINO: Maybe so, if the legislature should provide a special board and commission. By this -- by and large this particular power has always been vested in the governor of the Territory of Hawaii. The expression is found in the constitution of all the states, I believe.

CHAIRMAN: Is that satisfactory?

OKINO: The 48 states of the United States, and it also appears in the Constitution of the United States of America. Exceptions, special exceptions have been made at times by the legislature when a special board or commission has been created, which board or commission may be vested with special executive functions.

LAI: I move for the tentative adoption of paragraph 2 of Section 1.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we tentatively adopt paragraph 2 of Section 1.

DOI: I would like to amend Section -- rather paragraph 2 of Section 1 by providing in lieu thereof one sentence to read: "The governor shall be elected as provided by law."

CHAIRMAN: Do you make that in the form of a motion?

DOI: Yes.

SAKAKIHARA: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that paragraph 2 be amended to read: "The governor shall be elected as provided by law." Any discussion?

DOI: A few words in favor of the motion. The sentence there, "The person receiving the greatest number of votes," to begin with is very ambiguous, is not clear. Also, the subject matter, as I gather, covered in this section can be easily covered by statute. It is a legislative matter. And I think the question of contested elections is partly covered in the suffrage section of this Constitution. Therefore, I think a short single sentence for this paragraph here is sufficient.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, did you ask for the floor?

ROBERTS: I have a question to ask the previous speaker. The proposal as I gather is to delete the paragraph and to substitute one sentence, "The governor shall be elected as provided by law." Law is established by legislature. I assume that the legislature that you have in mind under this Constitution will be elected at the same time that the governor is elected in the first Constitution. You don't have any law until the legislature meets.

DOI: If that is the problem we could provide for that in the ordinances and continuity section of the schedules.

CHAIRMAN: I believe that's correct. Any further discussion on this question?

PORTEUS: I take it that we are assuming that "The governor shall be elected as provided by law" means that the governor shall be elected by popular vote. That's not what this amendment says, however. If it says the elected governor shall be elected as provided by law, the legislature might elect the governor. It does not cover popular election, statewide election.

ASHFORD: In the event that we continue to have a primary and a general election, this would not be covered because the one receiving the greatest number of votes at the primary, even though not a majority of all votes cast, would still be the governor.

OKINO: It would seem to me that the legislature, in providing laws relative to election, would specifically provide that any candidate running for the office of governor in the primary election will not be elected governor of the State of Hawaii, and that the election will result from the result of the general election, and by reason of that fact, it would seem that this particular clause appearing in paragraph 2 of Section 1 would be so construed.

DOI: The suggestion made by Delegate Porteus is well taken and, with the permission of the Chair, the movant at this time would like to amend the amendment to read, "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this State as provided by law."

CHAIRMAN: Is there any second? Just a moment, please.

SAKAKIHARA: Second it, Mr. Chairman.

OKINO: I'm sorry, what was that motion?

CHAIRMAN: Would you restate your motion please, Delegate Doi? I might ask that you withdraw your former motion.

DOI: That is right; I withdraw my first motion. The motion would read: "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this State as provided by law."

HEEN: I rise to a point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Will you state your point?

HEEN: What is the purpose of having that phrase added, "as provided by law"?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Doi, would you like to answer that?

DOI: I have been debating that question myself and probably Delegate Heen can help resolve the question.

CHAIRMAN: Do you have a suggestion, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: It seems to me it's not necessary there. Let the Constitution itself state how he is to be elected, that he is to be elected by the qualified voters, as stated now, by the qualified voters of this State. The New Jersey provision in this connection reads as follows: "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this State." Going on beyond that particular sentence, I might read from the New Jersey Constitution. "The person receiving the greatest number of votes shall be the governor; but if two or more shall be equal and greatest in votes, one of them shall be elected governor by the vote of a majority of all the members of both houses in joint meeting at the regular legislative session next following the election for governor by the people. Contested election for the office of governor shall be determined in such manner as may be provided by law."

ANTHONY: I'd like to pose this question to the committee -- that is the Committee on Executive Powers. Should not the Constitution contain a section that'll have within its own framework the method of electing the governor, just exactly as the Constitution of the United States does, in order that we need not go to the legislature or any other place to establish by law that framework? I just pose that as a question to the committee.

OKINO: The constitutions of all 48 states, including that of the United States, have apparently given special attention to the election of the governor, who is the highest executive officer of the state. And it is for that reason that the method of election of a governor has been singled out by enacting a specific -- by enacting specific provisions with reference to that subject matter.

ANTHONY: That doesn't quite reach the question. The question is whether or not we should have in the Constitution, without resort to legislation, a method of electing the governor. In the Federal Constitution, like in the New Jersey Constitution, there is such a method, a constitutional method. In this proposed section, it is a method but it is to be provided by law. In other words --

OKINO: It's an amendment. That is the amendment offered by Delegate Doi. Then I take it you are speaking against the amendment. What the committee did was follow the provision in the New Jersey Constitution. Section 1 of this article, Committee Proposal No. 2, is basically from the New Jersey Constitution, the section with reference to a tie vote.

HEEN: This provides that the person receiving the greatest number of votes shall be the governor. Now, it may mean that the candidate running for election and receiving the greatest number of votes may not receive a majority of the votes. It might be a plurality vote, and therefore, is not an elected governor representing the majority of the votes. We, I think, were thinking in terms of there being only two parties, political parties, putting up candidates for election to the office of governor. There might be four parties in the field, four political parties, and when you split the votes up, the one receiving the greatest number of votes may not receive the majority of all the votes.

CHAIRMAN: I'd like to ask the delegate from the fourth who just spoke, Delegate Heen, do you have an amendment to propose?

HEEN: No, I have not. I thought I'd pose that question for the consideration of the Convention. If it's deliberately intended that a person receiving the greatest number of votes may be one who does not receive a majority of the votes, then this is all right. I don't know whether it was so intended.

OKINO: The committee did so intend. That particular question raised by Delegate Heen has been considered by the committee members. The history of -- the political history of the Territory of Hawaii has shown that there have been no more than two parties. We have studied the constitutions of other states wherein are more than one -- more than two major political parties, but history has shown that no third party has shown any strength to be considered in the matter of an election of a governor of that particular state.

ARASHIRO: I wish to at this time make an amendment to the amendment by inserting "in a general election" after the word "votes" in the third line of the second paragraph, to read as follows: "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of the State. The person receiving the greatest number of votes in a general election shall be the governor."

KAWAKAMI: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the amendment of Delegate Doi be further amended.

ARASHIRO: I think that amendment will take care of the question raised by the delegate from the fourth district and also the question raised by the delegate from the fifth district, whether the governor will be elected in the primary or not. And the person receiving the vote, the highest number of votes in the general election, will mean whether we have three or four parties doesn't make any difference, because it is the final election when the person who receives the greatest number of votes in the general election should be the governor.

CHAIRMAN: I'd like to ask Delegate Arashiro to read his amendment once more, please.

CROSSLEY: Before he reads it, a point of information.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

CROSSLEY: I believe that the amendment should be to the section rather than to the previous amendment, so it would be an amendment to the section.

CHAIRMAN: If it's an amendment to the section, I think the Chair will have to rule that it be held in abeyance until we vote on the pending amendment.

SHIMAMURA: May I speak to the original amendment proposed by the gentleman from Hawaii? If we proceed on the premise that our government is founded on the separation of powers, and if we believe in the fundamental doctrine of the separation of powers, then I feel that it's inevitable that we adopt within our Constitution a definite procedure of electing the governor, just as in the Federal Constitution the President is provided for in detail, the method of election and so forth. If we leave it up to the legislature, I feel that the chief executive may be at the mercy of the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: I would ask the delegate if he has an amendment to that effect.

SHIMAMURA: I am speaking against the proposed amendment by the gentleman from Hawaii.

LOPER: That was the point I wished to make when I rose to get the floor a moment ago, that the amendment which is being considered apparently is designed to do two things; one is to abbreviate this particular section, and the other is to leave it to the legislature. It would be quite possible to boil down this paragraph and the two following paragraphs into one sentence: "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this State for a four year term, and he shall have such qualifications as may be prescribed by law." But if, as the previous speaker has said, we wish to provide for a separation of powers, it seems to me that the executive should not be left entirely to the legislature. It seems to me it's almost as important to provide for full coverage on the executive as for the judiciary.

TAVARES: Before voting on the proposed amendment I'd like to see if my understanding of this original set out paragraph is correct. As I understand it, the purpose of the second sentence reading: "The person receiving the greatest number of votes shall be the governor," is first to make it clear that the governor does not have to be elected by a clear majority of all of the persons voting at an election. That is one of the purposes.

OKINO: That is correct.

TAVARES: As I understand it, using the ordinary meaning of such terms, ordinarily the courts would understand that to mean the vote at a final election rather than a primary, because generally speaking a primary election is not really considered an election in the technical sense of the term under constitutional provisions. Just like our Organic Act. It has been held a primary election is not an election within the meaning of our Organic Act.

There is one more matter I would like to clear up and that is that speaking—although I'm a little out of order—to Delegate Arashiro's proposed amendment, I think since it's understood and will be understood in the courts that a final election is meant, we do not need to put this special wording in about a general election, because you may have to elect an interim governor if you have a special election, in which case that wouldn't apply.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any more discussion on the proposed amendment?

OKINO: Before we take action - - No, I shall hold the matter in abeyance.

DOI: I, too, believe in the separation-of-power doctrine. What has been said in that principle was very nice. But theory standing alone is meaningless. Theory here as propounded, applied to the several facets as is before this committee here, will show that insofar as the term of office of the governor is concerned, it's contained in a different paragraph than that we are considering here, and insofar as the qualification of the governor goes, it's also contained in different paragraphs before us. The paragraph we are dealing with only has to do with the method of election of the governor, and as to the method of the election of the governor, the amendment already provides that he shall be elected by the qualified voters. Therefore, the rest, if it should be left to the legislature, does not go to the basis of the power of the governor, does not affect it in such a - - does not affect his power in such a degree as to render the separation-of-power doctrine meaningless. Therefore, I think the amendment should be adopted.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, did you wish to speak?

OKINO: No, I wish to speak on another phase of the paragraph.

ANTHONY: I'd like to have the amendment read, if we could.

CHAIRMAN: I would like to ask Delegate Doi to restate his amendment.

DOI: "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this state as provided by law."

ANTHONY: That's exactly what we don't want in the executive article. We don't want to leave the possibility of whether or not we are ever going to have a governor, namely "as provided by law," to any legislation. There should be provided in this Constitution the framework of electing the governor, and I don't know why we don't simply take Section 4 of the New Jersey Constitution which is perfectly clear. "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this state. The person receiving the greatest number of votes shall be the governor, but if two or more shall be equal and greatest in votes, one of them shall be elected governor by the vote of a majority of all the members of both houses in joint meetings at the regular legislative session next following the election for governor by the people. Contested elections for office of governor shall be determined in such manner as may be provided by law."

Now in such an article you have complete constitutional framework for the election of the governor. The only time that you have to resort to legislation is in the event of contest. The suggested amendment would leave it to the mercies of the legislature to make a provision. In other words, you might get a legislature that wouldn't make any provision, then what are you going to do?

SMITH: May I ask a question of the last speaker? Is that an amendment you were just proposing?

ANTHONY: I was speaking in opposition to the amendment of the delegate from Hawaii. I don't think it reaches the fundamental problem here. We want to incorporate in the executive article complete workable framework for the election of a governor, and this does not do it.

CHAIRMAN: Are there any other comments on the proposed amendment? If not, all those in favor of the amendment as stated by Delegate Doi will say "aye." Opposed. The motion is lost.

ARASHIRO: I now offer my amendment, as I have stated previously, by changing the word "general" to "final election."

CHAIRMAN: Your amendment as I read it will be "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this state as provided by law."

ARASHIRO: No, and - -

CHAIRMAN: "The person receiving the greatest number - -"

ARASHIRO: "The person receiving the greatest number of votes in the final election shall be the governor."

CROSSLEY: I would second that if I understand that the balance of the section continues as is. That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the section be amended.

HEEN: I rise to a point of information. What does the word "final" mean? What is the intent of the using that word?

ARASHIRO: When Delegate - - when Delegate Tavares mentioned it, the thing that came into my mind was that probably there might be a special election, and in that special election they might have a primary and a general. Will that then be considered as a general election, or will "general" be more appropriate than "final"?

HEEN: As I understand it, the general election is the regular election that is held for the election of legislators and the governor. Now, you may have a special election for the election of a governor when the original governor dies or vacates his office. So I don't see the sense in using the word "final" in this particular paragraph.

TAVARES: I believe our committee report can make it clear enough so that we don't need to put another word or a few more words into this article. I think that if the explanation goes in, there will be no question about what is meant.

OKINO: I think that explanation has been adequately made by Delegate Tavares. The word "election" has been construed, as used in the Federal Constitution, to mean the final or general election of the governor. Now, in qualifying by putting in the word "final," to contra - - distinguish from the words "special election," the committee proposal does not contain any special election for the governor in the event of a vacancy by reason of the governor's death or resignation. The officer, namely the lieutenant governor, is to succeed to that particular office, and thereafter it is provided in the section relating to the succession of that particular office that the matter would be regulated or prescribed by law. So there is no - - there will never be a special election for the governor.

MAU: Do I understand that the movant of this motion to amend has withdrawn?

CHAIRMAN: I do not believe so.

MAU: And it has been seconded?

CHAIRMAN: It has been seconded. Is there any further discussion?

FONG: Do we understand - - I'd like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Do we understand that the words, "The person receiving the greatest number of votes shall be the governor," does that mean that if there are ten persons running in the final election representing ten different parties that the person receiving the greatest number of votes, irregardless of whether he receives the majority of votes, should be elected governor? Is that the intent?

OKINO: That is the intent of the committee.

FONG: A plurality of the votes?

OKINO: Presupposing there are ten parties in the final election, general election with ten candidates running for the office of governor on each ticket.

FONG: Then that will be decided at that general election.

OKINO: Yes.

FONG: The vote for governor will be decided at the final election, which is the general election - -

OKINO: That is correct.

FONG: - - regardless whether he receives the majority of votes or not.

ARASHIRO: If the statement made by the chairman of the Executive Committee and the statement made by the delegate from the fourth district that an election means a general election is clearly understood by the committee and will be clearly understood in the future, I withdraw my motion.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Arashiro's motion has been withdrawn.

ANTHONY: I move that this paragraph be amended to read as follows: "The governor"—and this is from Section 1 - - Article 5, Section 1, subparagraph 4 - -

CHAIRMAN: Is that going to be verbatim from that section?

ANTHONY: From the New Jersey Constitution. I will supply it later. "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this State. The person receiving the greatest number of votes shall be the governor, but if two or more shall be equal and greatest in votes, one of them shall be elected governor by the vote of a majority of all the members of both houses of the legislature in joint meeting at the regular legislative session next following the election for governor by the people. Contested elections for the office of governor shall be determined in such manner as may be provided by law."

LOPER: I would like to second that motion, but in doing so I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, Delegate Okino, if he had some special reason for omitting this particular provision, that in the event of a tie the legislature in joint session should determine the one to be elected. My question is, did you have some special reason for modifying what is apparently taken from the New Jersey Constitution?

OKINO: I think you will recall, Dr. Loper, I mean Delegate Loper, that the purpose of rephrasing that particular sentence was to make it as brief as possible. You will know - - you will note that the sentence submitted in paragraph 2 of Proposal No. 2 [sic] is much shorter than that expressed in the New Jersey Constitution and yet the context or the idea is incorporated. That was the only reason why it was shortened.

RICHARDS: I would like to further amend the proposed amendment by the delegate from the fourth district by striking out the last sentence: "In a contested election, the selection of the governor shall be determined in such a manner as may be provided by law."

ANTHONY: I accept that amendment.

RICHARDS: The purpose of that is that in Committee Proposal No. 8, which we have already acted on, we state that the contested election shall be determined by the supreme court of the state according to law.

MAU: I'd like to ask the chairman of the committee what the situation will be in the event of a contested election. Does the governor who has been elected by a prior election continue in office until the situation is cleared by the supreme court?

OKINO: It is presupposed that the lieutenant governor will qualify on that particular day and carry on the office of governor because of inability on the part of the governor elected to serve and fulfill his functions.

CHAIRMAN: Is that a satisfactory answer?

TAVARES: I should like to point out that if the section as originally - - or paragraph as originally drawn by the committee is adopted, we will not be leaving a hiatus here because Section 173 of our Revised Laws takes care of ties. It may not be the best way, but there will be provision for a tie vote by statute. Now it says: "In case of the failure of an election by reason of the equality of votes between two or more candidates, the tie shall forthwith be decided by lot," and so forth.

OKINO: I have referred to that particular section in my report. But the only reason why it was left in is because the particular statute now existing under the laws of the Territory of Hawaii may not be the law of the future State of Hawaii. The Chair was about to move that the matter of contested election be deleted from each proposal also. You will recall that the Chair was the one who raised that question when paragraph 5 of that proposal submitted by the Committee on Suffrage and Elections was debated on the floor.

CHAIRMAN: The motion before the house now is to amend paragraph 2 of Section 1 to read as the New Jersey Constitution with the deletion concerning contested elections.

CASTRO: Was that amendment seconded? I mean, it is before the - -

CHAIRMAN: The amendment was accepted by the original movant.

CASTRO: Oh, I see, it was accepted. I'd like to, for the sake of having a chance to read that, move on to the next paragraph while Delegate Anthony has a chance to get his amendment printed. So, if the Chair will accept the motion to defer action until the end of the section - -

CHAIRMAN: The reason that I did not suggest deferment is, I thought that most delegates had a copy of the New Jersey Constitution.

CASTRO: Do all of the delegates have a copy?

CHAIRMAN: That was my understanding.

CASTRO: Well, if there are copies around, I would like to request one from the Sergeant-at-Arms.

FUKUSHIMA: I'd like to speak in opposition to the amendment proposed by Delegate Anthony. It doesn't add anything to the proposal as submitted by the committee. The only thing it does is [cover] the situation when there is a tie vote, and that is determined by the vote of the legislature. The committee, as I understand it, when we took this up went through the New Jersey Constitution and the provisions very thoroughly and deleted that portion of a tie vote because that happens so rarely. And I believe that is the reason for this language here. The language as proposed by the New Jersey Constitution, as proposed by Delegate Anthony now, doesn't add anything to this. The tie vote is so remote that the committee felt that it should be left out and left to the determination by the legislature.

ANTHONY: I think that the last speaker is absolutely right, and I regret wasting the time of the Convention. I would like to withdraw my motion for amendment.

OKINO: Now that the offered amendment has been withdrawn, I should like to briefly explain this particular point. As one of the delegates called to your attention, the Chair has no objection to deleting that portion of sentence 3, "or a contested election," by reason of the fact that that matter is now covered by Section 5 of Suffrage and Election. Now, if we are certain that a matter of tie vote will also and likewise be covered by the statute of the future State of Hawaii, then it would seem to the Chair that that last sentence may just as well be deleted. Because of the fact that the Committee on Suffrage and Elections contained nothing with reference to a tie vote, the committee felt that that particular portion of the third sentence, "In case of a tie vote, the selection of governor shall be determined in such manner as may be provided by law," should be included herein.

ARASHIRO: Do I understand that there is no amendment right - - pending now.

CHAIRMAN: There is no amendment pending.

ARASHIRO: Then I move to the previous question.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The previous question has been called.

KELLERMAN: I have an amendment to offer.

CHAIRMAN: Would you hold that? Mrs. Kellerman, you have the floor. The previous question was not seconded.

KELLERMAN: As I read this section, it provides that the term of office of the governor shall begin - - shall be four years beginning at - - [Discussion in background inaudible.]

KELLERMAN: Mr. Chairman.

PORTEUS: Did the chairman of the Executive Powers Committee agree that the "or a contested election" should be deleted?

OKINO: Yes, Delegate Porteus. The matter is covered by article on suffrage and election.

PORTEUS: Well, if the chairman would care to make that motion, I would be happy to second it.

OKINO: I so move.

PORTEUS: And I second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the words "or contested" - -

ROBERTS: I have a question to raise on that.

CHAIRMAN: - - that would be deleted.

ROBERTS: I have a question on that. That would be with the understanding that our Committee of the Whole report will show that that question is covered by another part of the Constitution.

CHAIRMAN: Right. Delegate Kellerman, did you wish the floor?

KELLERMAN: This amendment has come in now before I was able to make mine. I was discussing my proposed amendment by referring to the third paragraph, but my proposed amendment will be to the second paragraph, as soon as you take the vote on this one.

SHIMAMURA: Point of information, please.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

SHIMAMURA: Does the last motion consist of deletion of the entire last sentence or only the words "or a contested election"?

CHAIRMAN: "Or a contested election," only.

SHIMAMURA: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN: All those - -

MAU: Point of information. If I understood Delegate Kellerman correctly, she wants to propose an amendment to paragraph 2.

CHAIRMAN: She has a further amendment to offer. The question before the house at the moment is the deletion of the words "or a contested election."

MAU: Oh, I see, Thank you.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the motion to delete will say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

KELLERMAN: I have begun discussing the third paragraph to explain my motion. If you will read it through—and to understand it, you'll have to read through this section—it provides that the governor shall take office as of a certain Monday following or after -- next following his election. It doesn't say when the election is to take place. Now, if we should become a state say next July it's quite possible there would be an immediate special election to elect a governor. There is nothing in this provision nor in our provision on suffrage and elections which would not necessarily require that governor being re-elected four years from the date of that special election. There's nothing in the report and there's nothing in this section that says that the governor must be elected at a general election. So under the absolute language of paragraph 3, with nothing in here to the contrary, the governor's term would be four years from the date of that special election, and that four year term would continue at that odd time.

So, I, therefore, would propose an amendment to the first sentence of the second paragraph: "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this state at a regular election." That makes possible the interim term to be provided for elsewhere under continuity of laws, but it would make it impossible for the interim term to be construed as the four year term referred to in the third paragraph.

LOPER: May I ask the previous speaker if it would not also make it impossible to elect the governor at a special election in the event of the death of the governor?

KELLERMAN: I think it possibly would, unless that is provided for elsewhere. I was under the impression that the lieutenant governor would take over the governorship in case of the death of the governor.

CHAIRMAN: That's the Chair's understanding.

KELLERMAN: It seems to me that if it is not so provided, that would have to be provided for separately. But this language, leaving it like this, leaves the interpretation that the four year term will be four years from the election of the first governor, whenever that may be, which may be at a special election at a time that does not conform with our general election period.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any second to the amendment?

KAM: I have the New York Constitution. It says here that the governor shall be chosen at the general election held in the year -- even number of years, and the person receiving the highest number of votes for governor shall be elected. So in the second paragraph, it just says that "the person receiving the greatest number of votes shall be the governor." It doesn't say what election, so I'll second Kellerman's motion, that we have the "regular election" there.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the paragraph be amended to read, "qualified voters of this State at a regular election."

TAVARES: I think again this is a situation in which there are enough variations so that we had better explain in our Committee of the Whole report and not try to add too many words. I think it is proper, and that we should have an ordinance at the end of this Constitution which would take care of the special situation where, when we become a state, we may have to have a special election. And I think it'll be dangerous to try to cover every situation by putting a word here or a word there.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Shimamura, chairman of the Committee on Ordinances.

SHIMAMURA: May I state that there is already a special election ordinance proposed. That situation is provided for.

CHAIRMAN: Thank you.

CROSSLEY: That situation was discussed in committee, and it was felt that that, as I understand it, was to be covered by a provision, an ordinance, or in the Committee of the Whole report setting forth the manner just so that we would not clutter this section up with language that we felt might be restrictive rather than helpful.

HEEN: It seemed to me that there should be a statement here somewhere that the governor is to be elected at a regular election, because there is no special election provided here for the governor in case of a vacancy. Of course, starting off, there may be, or shall -- I think there ought to be a special election for not only the election of a governor but also the election of the members of the legislature. If we state here that the governor is to be elected at a regular election, then the other matter can be taken care of by -- in the schedule or by an ordinance.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understands that an ordinance section has been provided for that purpose. Is there any further discussion on the motion to amend? Delegate Heen, are you through?

HEEN: I'd like to have that amendment read again, please.

CHAIRMAN: Would you care to read it, Mrs. Kellerman? Delegate Kellerman.

KELLERMAN: "The governor shall be elected --" This is the first sentence of paragraph 2. "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this State, at a regular election." Now I notice in just referring to Committee Proposal No. 8 which we have adopted on suffrage and election, they use the term "general election" rather than "regular election." So in the interest of uniformity, I would say change my -- the original language that I had given to read, "at a general election." "The governor shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this State, at a general election."

CHAIRMAN: Thank you.

HEEN: I think that is correct. In the article on legislative powers, there is a section dealing with the sessions of the legislature and as I recall it -- if you'll bear with me for a moment. I don't know, it's not covered there, but I think in the article on elections and suffrage, I don't know what is used there in that article. May I ask what committee proposal that is, in the files?

RICHARDS: Committee Proposal No. 8.

KELLERMAN: You wanted the section on election?

RICHARDS: The last section.

KELLERMAN: May I read that section from elections -- suffrage and elections?

CHAIRMAN: Is that from elections? Is that covering election of the governor?

KELLERMAN: It just says, "General elections shall be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in all even-numbered years. Special elections may be held according to law," and so forth.

HEEN: That's the correct term then. "General election" is the term.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any other further discussion of the proposed amendment?

SHIMAMURA: I'm not speaking against the amendment - -

CHAIRMAN: Are you speaking for the amendment?

SHIMAMURA: - - but I just wish to comment that the officers are all elected at the general election. They are not elected at the primary. So even if you left the word "general election" out, it means general election.

CHAIRMAN: I understand it that that question has been discussed.

SHIMAMURA: They are only nominated at the primary election.

KELLERMAN: My amendment does not go to the idea of a primary versus a final election. It goes to a general versus a possible special election. That's the reason for putting in "at a general election."

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the amendment as proposed by Delegate Kellerman will please say "aye." Opposed. The amendment is carried.

Unless there are further amendments, a motion to adopt the section as amended is in order.

LAI: I move that we adopt paragraph 2 as amended.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: May the Chair restate the motion that we adopt paragraph 2 tentatively of Section 1. All those in favor of the motion will say "aye." Opposed. Paragraph 2 is adopted, tentatively.

Paragraph 3.

LAI: I move for the tentative adoption of paragraph 3.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded for the tentative adoption of paragraph 3, Section 1.

TAVARES: It is my understanding in voting for this, as I intend to, that this refers of course to what has just been said about the regular term of a governor. In other words, it is intended that that four-year term begins after a general election of a governor.

CHAIRMAN: That's the Chair's understanding. All those in favor of adoption of paragraph 3 tentatively will say "aye." Opposed. The paragraph is tentatively adopted.

LAI: I move for tentative adoption of paragraph 4.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Any discussion on paragraph 4?

ASHFORD: I would like to amend that by substituting for the words "five years," the words "ten years."

SAKAKIHARA: I second the motion - - amendment.

ASHFORD: May I speak to that?

CHAIRMAN: You may.

ASHFORD: We provided in our courts not merely that the justices and judges should be residents for ten years, they must be residents for more than ten years, I think, because they must have been members of the bar for ten years, and they would have had to be residents for at least a year prior to that. Now when it comes to the chief executive, it seems to me that he should be a resident for at least ten years.

CHAIRMAN: It was moved and seconded that we adopt paragraph 5 tentatively. Is that correct?

DELEGATE: That's correct.

CHAIRMAN: Did we put the question on paragraph 5?

DELEGATES: No, no.

WIRTZ: We did put the question on paragraph 4, however.

CHAIRMAN: I stand corrected.

HEEN: We are now discussing the fourth paragraph and there has been a motion to adopt that tentatively.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair stands corrected. Thank you.

All those in favor of the amendment to paragraph 4 deleting the five years and substituting ten years in the next to last line - -

ROBERTS: I don't think we've given this thing adequate consideration. The committee reports out for the recommendation for five years and we move to amend for ten without, it seems to me, giving adequate consideration as to the recommendation of the committee. I'd like to hear from the committee as to their reason for the recommendation.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has no way of knowing how much consideration the movants of various amendments gave the question.

ROBERTS: I recognize that, Mr. Chairman. It's not addressed to you. I think it's addressed to the delegation in terms of the problem.

OKINO: The committee considered the following facts. In the Organic Act of the Territory of Hawaii, the residential requirement is three years. There are only three states in the United States of America which require ten years' residential requirement. These three states are Louisiana, Missouri and Oklahoma. There are seven states requiring seven years' residence; there are three states requiring six years; there are 18 states requiring five years, which is the prevalent residential requirement. There is one state, four years; one state, three years; eight states, two years; one state, one year, and six states, not specified. The committee simply adopted the prevalent residential requirement of five years.

CHAIRMAN: Is that residential requirement of five years for office of governor or for - -

OKINO: Office of governor. This article is restricted for the office of governor.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion?

LEE: On a point of information from the chairman of the committee. Was it the conclusion on the part of the committee—I understand the committee was unanimous on this point because there was no minority view expressed on the five year limitation—that as we progress to a longer residential clause that it would be more of a definite step backward as compared with a shorter period for a progressive type of limitation?

OKINO: In reply to that question, I would like to reply, Delegate Lee, that the committee members felt that a resident should live here for a period of above five years in Hawaii before he would become familiar, become acquainted with the somewhat peculiar problems here of the State of Hawaii. It is not like the 48 states of the Union.

LEE: As I understand it then, your committee was unanimous on that point.

OKINO: After some debate, yes, the committee was unanimous.

FONG: I'd like to talk against the amendment. If this office was an appointive office, I think the amendment would be well taken. But due to the fact that this office is going to be an elective office and a man, if he's any good at all, and he can prove to us that he's a good man, I think if he's been here for five years, we should put him into office, and I'd like to say that ten years is a little too long. Five years, going along with the majority of the states, would be in good order.

CROSSLEY: I would like to concur with the remarks of the last speaker. As a matter of fact, that was one of the main considerations that was given to putting this at five years. It was the feeling of the committee. Some of us thought it should be only three, some thought seven, some thought ten. We all agreed that if any man can be elected after living here for five years, then he deserves to be elected.

MAU: I'm in agreement with that statement. If any citizen in the United States who desires to reside in the Territory of Hawaii comes here and becomes a good citizen and wants to run for office and can get elected after five years of residence, he must be a very good man.

LEE: I see -- I notice that all those that run for office many times concur in that viewpoint, because it is a handicap for those who have not been born and raised here to be elected to office. And I say I take my hat off to anybody who can get elected who hasn't been here for a long time.

C. RICE: The committee, in discussing this, felt that this Constitution was going to be looked over by the Senate and Congress of the United States, and if we put five years where the majority of the states had that, it looked as though we weren't trying to bar any malihini coming here, and we might have a little more favorable attention.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion of the motion to amend? The motion to amend is to delete the word "five" and insert the word "ten" next to the last line in paragraph 4. All those in favor of the motion will say "aye." Opposed. The motion is lost.

Are there any further amendments to paragraph 4?

DOI: I would like to direct a question to the chairman of the committee. That is, what reasons prompted the committee to decide on the age 35 as being the minimum age?

OKINO: In reply to that question interposed by the delegate from Hawaii, I should like to reply by furnishing him with the following facts. The Organic Act prescribes that the governor of the Territory of Hawaii shall be 35 years of age. There is only one state which requires the age of 31 years. There are 35 states which requires the governor, the candidate for governor, to be 30 years of age. There are four states requiring the candidate to be 25 years of age. There are eight states not requiring any particular age for any individual for the office of governor. We simply followed the Organic Act, that document which was given to us, the Territory of Hawaii, by the United States Congress.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion?

DELEGATE: I think it ought to be 60.

CHAIRMAN: I'm glad I did not hear you. The motion before the house is for the adoption of paragraph 4, tentatively, of Section 1. All those in favor will say "aye." Opposed. The paragraph is adopted tentatively.

LAI: I move for tentative adoption of paragraph 5.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we tentatively adopt paragraph 5. Is there any discussion?

AKAU: Point of information from the chairman of the committee. Does this statement appear in any other constitutions regarding the governor holding office, "no other office for profit"? The reason I ask the question is, isn't it implied and understood that the governor who has, let us say, a great many responsibilities wouldn't be able to handle other work for profit. Is it -- I just raise the question, is it necessary to put it in?

OKINO: The expression "of profit," whether the same should be retained or deleted, met with considerable discussion. It was eventually resolved by the committee that the committee adopt the language of the -- basically the language of the New Jersey Constitution. If you will refer to the Constitution of New Jersey, you will find the following sentence in paragraph 3 under the executive department. "No member of Congress or person holding any office or position of profit under this State or the United States shall be governor."

AKAU: Does a statement appear in any other part of the Constitution and in any other section that would take care of -- in general of all the groups, judiciary, executive and legislative?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Crossley, would you like to answer the question?

CROSSLEY: I'd like to answer part of that. There is a restriction, of course, on justices and judges in the section that we adopted the other day. That was spelled out specifically in that case.

RICHARDS: I would like to ask the chairman of the committee another question. Will this, if it is put into the Constitution, require the resignation of any elected official? For instance, if a member of the State House of Representatives or a member of the State Senate desired to run for governor, would it require his prior resignation?

OKINO: Is your question directed to this point; if the governor who is -- if an individual who is in office as governor seeks appointment to any other governmental offices, or if he would desire to become a candidate, say, to the Senate of the United States?

RICHARDS: Well, yes. That's stating my question in reverse, but both conditions apply.

OKINO: I believe my committee report explains that point in the following manner. If the governor should seek election to any other public office, there will be legally a resignation upon his part from the office of governor if he shall assume the new office to which he has been elected or appointed. That is predicated upon the principle of incompatibility of offices.

RICHARDS: I see. Then would that also take care of the situation of a holdover state senator who runs for the office of governor, that upon his -- that he will qualify but upon his assuming the office of governor he automatically gives up his state senatorship?

OKINO: Logically --

RICHARDS: If he loses the office he may retain his state senatorship? Loses the election?

OKINO: That's correct.

RICHARDS: Thank you.

CHAIRMAN: Are there any further questions?

ROBERTS: I'd like to suggest that as we go through the sections that we follow along with the committee report. The committee report is one of the best that's been put out on the floor so far and covers very adequately each of the points as they come up. I think if we follow through with the report, I think we can move along very promptly on it.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would be very glad to second that motion. Is there any further discussion? All those - -

MAU: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

MAU: It might be that other offices are covered by the same type of prohibition, including the judiciary and the members of the legislature. I wonder if it would be wise to have a general clause. I was trying to think and I can't think of any officer who could possibly hold two offices under authority of the State on the theory of incompatibility of offices. Should we give some consideration to that?

HEEN: In the proposed committee proposal of the Legislative Committee we have this provision: "Disqualification of members of the legislature. No member of the legislature shall during the term for which he is elected or appointed, be elected or appointed to any public office, position or employment which shall have been created or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased by legislative acts during such term."

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that possibly the Committee on Style could take care of them if they are identical provisions.

TAVARES: I think that the question of incompatibility is a common law question which is determined by the courts on the basis of the facts as they exist, as to whether the duties of one office actually conflict with the duties of another. And it's quite possible, and it is done in this Territory, for a person to hold more than one office, providing they are not incompatible. For instance, there are many officers who are also notaries public and that's an office.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion?

HEEN: In the report, I see no remarks on paragraph 5 of this Section 1.

CHAIRMAN: Can someone supply the page reference.

ROBERTS: On page 3, I think, on paragraph 4, "Under the provision set forth in the last paragraph of Section 1, a person holding any other office under the State or United States could seek election to the office of governor, but will be required to resign such other office before qualifying as governor. Conversely," and so on.

CHAIRMAN: Does that answer your question, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: It seemed to me that paragraph 5 really controls. "The Governor shall not hold any other office or employment of profit under the State or of the United States during his term of office." In other words, he may seek election to the United States Senate, but as soon as he takes that office, which is an "office of profit," then he can no longer remain as governor under this very provision, this paragraph 5.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: I think that is the understanding of the chairman of the committee. Is there any further discussion?

ROBERTS: I have a question on that. Is it the intent of the article that if a person who is governor runs for the United States Senate that he may run and still retain his office as senator [sic] until he qualifies as senator of the United States? I just want that in the record. Is it clear?

OKINO: That is the intent of the committee.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion?

TAVARES: To correct an obvious error, he would still retain his office as governor while running for the Senate. The gentleman said, "He would retain his office as senator."

CHAIRMAN: The record will show the correction.
Is there any further discussion? All those in favor of the tentative adoption of paragraph 5, Section 1, will say "aye." Opposed. So carried.
The Chair without objection will declare a five minute recess.

CROSSLEY: Second the motion.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole please come to order. When we had recessed, we had completed Section 1.

CROSSLEY: I would at this time like to move the adoption of Section 2.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

LAI: I think - - Point of order. I think we'd better adopt Section 1, entire section as amended. I so move.

J. TRASK: Tentatively, Mr. Chairman.

SILVA: Point of order is out of order.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will recognize Delegate Lai's proposal.

J. TRASK: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we adopt Section 1, tentatively, in its entirety.

DELEGATE: As amended.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair stands corrected. All those in favor say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

CROSSLEY: Mr. Chairman, I now move that we adopt Section 2 in its entirety.

CHAIRMAN: Tentatively?

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we adopt Section 2 tentatively in its entirety. Is there any discussion?

A. TRASK: I move for an amendment. In the second sentence, at the end of the third line, after the word "elected," insert the following words: "from the same party as the governor."

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Trask, where would you insert your amendment?

A. TRASK: After the word "elected," at the end of the third line of Section 2, Committee Proposal No. 22, insert the words "from the same party as the governor."

J. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the words "from the same party" be inserted in the line -- after line 3 -- at the end of line 3, after the word "elected."

CROSSLEY: Point of information. I'd like to ask the movant of that last motion if he could explain just how it would work.

CHAIRMAN: Are you referring to the present situation?

A. TRASK: Well, the suggestion only recently came from President Dewey of a certain American political party. I haven't yet communicated with him, but I do think that the suggestion, however impromptu it's now proposed, should be worked out.

My reasons are as follows: first, the very theory upon this executive article is to have a strong executorship. It's based upon the theory that there shall be harmony in the administration of the executive department. Consistent with that, it is almost inconceivable to have the governor of one party and a lieutenant governor of another party, particularly when there is some thinking here in the Convention that the lieutenant governor perhaps should be the president pro tem of the Senate, so that the number in the Senate instead of being 21 should be 20 by -- because of economy. As recent as last week, Governor Dewey did suggest the situation of the governor and lieutenant governor being of the same party. I'm almost convinced he's right.

I think, thirdly, that we must certainly provide for continuity upon the death of the governor with the same people in office continuing. Otherwise, we would have quite a wide open breakup of the spoils system, of course, which we don't want to have unless done by the proper party.

C. RICE: May I ask him a question?

CHAIRMAN: Would you yield to a question?

A. TRASK: Yes, indeed.

C. RICE: If he belongs to the same party, should he belong to the same wing of the party?

CROSSLEY: Would the gentleman yield?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Trask has the floor.

A. TRASK: I refuse to give myself further embarrassment.

CROSSLEY: Well, I will not embarrass him. I wonder if he will yield to a question.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Trask has the floor. Would you yield for a question?

A. TRASK: I will yield to another party.

CROSSLEY: The question I had is this. Would you consider that the governor should be the one who would run for office and the lieutenant governor would simply be an associate name on the ballot, not running separately? They would thus be joined together and they could both campaign but the vote itself would need to go only to the one office.

A. TRASK: It would be in the theory of the closed primary. You vote for one, you stay on that side. That would be the theory.

HEEN: May I make --

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Trask, do you yield?

HEEN: -- a little contribution to this discussion. I think it is a very serious problem because if you elect a Republican governor and a Democratic lieutenant governor, you can rest assured that the governor will appoint persons to his cabinet or to the various offices created by law from his own party. Now in case of a vacancy in the office of governor, the Democratic lieutenant governor will succeed under the terms of this article. And where these cabinet officers and other officers hold their term at the pleasure of the governor, you can see where the lieutenant governor is going to throw them all out and elect -- and appoint members from his own party. So there you create confusion, chaos and lot of political skulduggery.

It seems to me that we should follow the idea that was stated by Governor Dewey the other day, and I believe he's right. I don't say that I almost believe he's right, I think he's right, I believe he's right, even though he is a Republican governor.

The way to handle that seems to me would be in this manner, by a separate section, "The governor and the lieutenant governor shall be voted for together upon the same ballot."

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, did you make that as a motion?

HEEN: Sure, well as a suggestion. I'd like to have a little -- some views expressed upon that, but the idea is a good one.

A. TRASK: May Delegate Heen yield to an inquiry on that? Maybe paragraph 2 of Section 1, Delegate Heen, where you say that the selection of the governor shall be determined in a manner as may be provided by law would do it, inasmuch as Section 2 refers to the governor -- the lieutenant governor being appointed in the same manner as the governor.

HEEN: I think it should be a new section. We can designate it as Section 2A for the time being.

A. TRASK: In view of this, as I say, impromptu suggestion coming up at this time, may we defer action on Section 2 so that we may have something prepared on this point?

CHAIRMAN: You may so move.

PORTEUS: I wonder if I could speak --

CHAIRMAN: Are you through, Delegate Trask? Are you through?

A. TRASK: Yes.

PORTEUS: I wonder if we can speak to -- for the moment, to the suggestion before the matter is deferred. I'd like to point out to the delegates here that this was a subject wrestled with by your subcommittee in the Statehood Commission, and also by -- and also wrestled with by your committee here in the Constitutional Convention. The scheme as presented provides that there shall be a governor and a lieutenant governor, the only two elected offices of the executive department. If you say that both shall run on the same ticket, it means that you do not have a popularly elected lieutenant governor. What you will have is the man who is nominated on the ticket with the governor automatically carried into office by the election of the governor of that particular party. There's no point in allowing the voters to vote, one for the governor, next for the lieutenant governor, because if you elect a Republican governor but the Democratic lieutenant governor has by far the vast number of votes, you then have to say those votes don't count because he's not of the same party. Therefore, the Republican lieutenant governor is elected though he got but a few votes. Now, therefore, if you have a situation such as that there's no point in letting the people vote on the lieutenant governor.

A. TRASK: Mr. Chairman.

PORTEUS: A point of order, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman please sit down till I've finished.

You might just as well - -

CHAIRMAN: I do recognize the point of order.

A. TRASK: I'm afraid that's an extraordinary request.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has so ruled.

PORTEUS: Under those circumstances, therefore, you will find that it will only be necessary to cast a ballot for the governor, and the lieutenant governor will automatically go into office with him.

Now under the scheme as presented here, you will also have no special election in case the governor goes out of office. If there is to be no special election, the lieutenant governor succeeds to the office of the governor. He then becomes the governor. If you have a strong executive, it is right that he should choose the heads of the departments. From then on out it is his responsibility to the people of the Territory for the administration of the executive branch of the government. Now, how in the world is a man going to be responsible for the executive branch of the government if he is of one political party and all the heads of the departments are of another political party. He's not going to be able to have a controlled administration carrying out his particular policies. He's the one that must answer. Therefore, he should have the right of making the choice.

And I think the scheme as presented by the chairman of the Executive Powers Committee and of the members of that committee to be a wise one. Certainly, we haven't provided for the election of very many people to the - - in the executive department and it seems to me that we would - - could reasonably leave a vote on the governor and a separate vote on the lieutenant governor.

CROSSLEY: I'd like to address myself to the amendment that was offered. The reason I asked the questions that I did as to how it would be put on the ballot, was because—to carry out the thought so well expressed by the Secretary—it would seem to me that if you did that, if you put both men on the same ballot from the same party, that you might do what I advocated in the very first instance, that is appoint the lieutenant governor or the secretary of state or the man who will perform both of those duties, because that is in effect what you would be doing.

I'm not sure that isn't a better way than to have the confusion because I agree with the delegate from the fifth district that there is something to be said for continuity in this office, once the people have made their choice. And the only way that you can assure yourselves of that continuity is by having a man of the same political faith go along with you. That can be done in two ways. You can either have it on a joint ballot or you can have the office not an elective office but an appointive office and you will be sure then that the governor would be appointing a man of the same political party.

I even went further in the committee in suggesting that the lieutenant governor so appointed only serve until such time as a new election could be held to determine who should be governor. In other words, when people vote for the governor they should be voting for the governor, and in that manner they would have an immediate chance to vote again for governor, and in doing so would get the continuity of office the governor would bring with him.

At the proper time I would like to offer an amendment but I would like to hear the debate on this subject before I do.

HEEN: What the last speaker said, I think, is quite in order. In other words, if you want to have continuity of policies the lieutenant governor or the secretary of state should be appointed, but if you are going to elect two officers, one a governor and one a lieutenant governor, then it seems to me that they should represent the same political party. That's what is being done with reference to the office of President and Vice President of the United States. They vote in such a way that there's always an assurance that they belong to the same political party, and I think this can be taken care of by this language: "The governor and the lieutenant governor, representing the same political party, shall be voted for together upon the same ballot." In other words, you put the name of the governor, and the lieutenant governor below that of the governor, and then have just one box for one cross only, voting for those two at the same time. I think that'll take care of that - - this situation.

TAVARES: I don't think that will work either. Are we going to permit no non-partisans to run? As long - - as soon as you have a non-partisan on the ballot, that whole thing goes out of the window anyhow. I don't think it's practical. I feel very much the same way as the delegate from Kauai. If we are going to have a popularly elected lieutenant governor and have him something more than a mere nonentity, dictated and controlled by the governor, we've got to give the people the right to choose which man they want.

I can imagine the situation where you'll have a very strong man running for governor, a very weak man running for lieutenant governor on the same ticket, and on the other hand a weak man running for governor on the other ticket and a very strong man for lieutenant governor. And if the people are going to be governed by those - - have the possibility of being governed by the lieutenant governor, they may not wish to elect that lieutenant governor. You're not giving them the right to choose. I would rather see an appointive lieutenant governor than this situation.

A. TRASK: I'd like to forthwith reply to the Secretary who made the observation that you would, should you have the governor and lieutenant governor on one ballot, you'd be taking away the right of popular selection. I think that's erroneous and invalid, for this reason. When people vote, they vote for a certain particular political theory at that particular time. Now we're well aware what took place in 1933 when Roosevelt was swept into office. The people of America voted for one political theory as against another. It wasn't so much the person as it was the revolt of the people against a certain theory of government doing nothing. Now, it is on the theory of government, it's the theory of action or inaction, it's the theory of policies, the policy of one political party as against the policy of another political party.

The observation has been made by Delegate Tavares that you might have a lieutenant governor who might be weak. Well, we have the situation of President Truman who they thought was weak, but certainly not even the Republicans today would say, "He is weak." I say to that observation that the people have a right in a democracy to make their own mistakes and we have - - we're not endowed by any appellate jurisdiction to say that they shall not make their mistakes.

So I cannot help but feel strongly that when we all observe as we do that the political party is bigger than the man, why is that political axiom so strong? It is because people who are of political parties advocate a certain philosophy. And how wrong it would be to the people if after the people vote for a certain philosophy followed by a certain governor to have upon one week later this same governor dying and another person with an absolutely different faith taking over and denying the people the continuity of their philosophy at that particular time.

So I again move, with Senator Heen agreeing, that we defer action on this matter so that his amendment may be printed and distributed. And I move for deferring Section 2 at this time.

LARSEN: I sit here listening to this political chatter. Actually, it seems to me the one weakness in American government is that parties can take control and subvert the good of the people. Let the people choose. Why should we write this in the Constitution. If a political party puts up a very weak man as a lieutenant governor, that political party doesn't deserve to stay in power if their strong governor dies. Let the people choose. Why should we try to manipulate for the people. It seems to me if we're going to have an elective office, then let the people choose it and make the various political parties see that they put up just as strong a man for lieutenant governor as governor, and if they put a weak one up just because they want to give him a political plum, then they deserve to have it taken away from them.

So, as far as I'm concerned, it seems to me we are leaving so little to the people that we hear this cry, "Let the people do it." In this case let the people choose and let's not write it into the Constitution.

LEE: I believe there's been enough debate on this matter and having considered out the people's feelings here. There're only two persons in the entire executive branch of the government we'll be providing an election for, and I am ready to move the previous question.

LARSEN: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Previous question has been called.

A. TRASK: Point of information. What is the previous question?

CHAIRMAN: The previous question is your amendment. There was no second to the motion to defer.

A. TRASK: At this time I withdraw my amendment in favor of the amendment suggested by Delegate Heen, and I do second his motion, and I ask that his amendment be printed so that we may have the benefit of his thinking on it so that we can more intelligently vote on the amendment.

HEEN: I only made a suggestion which I thought merited some discussion and thought, and I think it does.

Now, the gentleman from the fourth district, the one who spoke before the last speaker, didn't express any views as to the chaotic condition that might come about if the one governor -- if the governor represented one party and the lieutenant governor represented another party, and the lieutenant governor succeeds the governor upon a vacancy existing in the office of governor. There's no question that there would be a condition of chaos and confusion if that were to occur. He expressed no views upon that at all. That's the meat of the whole situation.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, would you care to read your suggested amendment?

LEE: On a point of order. Do I understand then the movant of the amendment has withdrawn his amendment?

A. TRASK: I've withdrawn my amendment in favor of the amendment suggested by Delegate Heen, and I do second his amendment.

LEE: Well now, Mr. Chairman --

CHAIRMAN: Just a moment. The Chair will have to rule that you have withdrawn your original motion and have substituted therefore the language proposed by Delegate Heen.

A. TRASK: That is correct.

CHAIRMAN: Therefore, I wanted him to state that so a second would be in order. The withdrawal of the motion by Delegate Trask to me indicates that the motion for the previous question has also been withdrawn.

HEEN: I will make that as a direct motion, if I may. I move that a new section be added to this Committee Proposal No. 22, after Section 2, to be designated Section 2 A, reading as follows: "The governor and the lieutenant governor shall be voted for -- " I withdraw that. "The governor and the lieutenant governor representing the same political party, shall be voted for together upon the same ballot."

A. TRASK: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Just a second, the Chair is trying to record the motion.

A. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: I think it will be up to Delegate Heen to second the motion. The motion is your motion. You made it. Unless you wish to withdraw.

A. TRASK: Well, whatever way the Chair, the Chairman rules.

CHAIRMAN: Would you second that motion, please.

HEEN: I'll second that motion.

TAVARES: It has just been stated that I said nothing about the supposed chaotic conditions that will exist if there's a change of parties in the middle of an administration. Although this is the first time I've mentioned it, I don't like to be goaded into political talks. But although I have been a Republican for a long time, I am not one of those people who thinks that there are not good people in both parties. So, first of all, there won't be chaos because I assume that the Senate will not lie down on its duty, and if the governor removes people of the opposite political faith, the people he puts in will be approved by the Senate and they'll have to be good people or reasonably good. So that I do not think there will be chaos at all.

Furthermore, I am still naive enough to believe that if a lieutenant governor of the opposite party is a good enough man to get elected when his opposite is elected governor, he'll be a good enough man to have the courage to keep some of those people in for the sake of continuity, and I don't think there will be chaos.

ANTHONY: I would like to speak for a moment to the amendment. The difficulty with the Federal Constitution was that it initially framed a perfect frame of government which was completely unworkable, unworkable because at the time of its adoption there were no political parties. It wasn't until after the Jefferson administration came in, and from then on, that political parties began to play the part which they now play in our government, thus making the Federal Constitution a workable instrument.

Now, to my way of thinking, it would be impossible, an impossible situation to have a governor and lieutenant governor of different political faith. The governor would step out of a state and his duties would devolve upon the lieutenant governor and then you'd have all sorts of back fighting and what not.

I certainly believe that this amendment is a valid one. It will make our Constitution work, it will make our governorship work, it will have two men of the same political faith, one to succeed the other in the event of a death or a vacancy.

AKAU: Regarding this amendment, perhaps if we got some information, maybe the chairman of the committee could give it to us so that it could clarify our thinking before we voted. Regarding the lieutenant governor, in most states, is he elected?

OKINO: In each of the 37 or 38 states where you find the office of lieutenant governor, the lieutenant governor is elected by popular vote.

AKAU: All right, thank you.

Now then, if he is elected by popular vote, then it seems to me in regarding this amendment that those of us who are feeling as the delegate from the fourth, as Mr. Tavares, that we should have an opportunity as people of the State of Hawaii to vote for the fellow we want, not to have him shoved down our throats.

DELEGATE: Question.

FONG: I'd like to talk against this amendment. Now, we're going to make the lieutenant governor run for office and say that we should put him on the same ballot with the governor. I think it is meaningless. If you're going to do that, why don't you put the attorney general, the auditor and the treasurer and all the other offices and say, "Well, we'll lump them together and we'll all throw them together and you can cast one ballot and all of those people will be declared elected." Now, if we're going to have an election, let's have an election. If we want him of the same political faith, let's appoint him. Now, I have stood consistently for the election of our public officals, but I think that this method by which you say that you elect two men with one ballot is sort of an empty gesture. I think if you're going to demand that this man be of the same political faith as that of the governor, then let us appoint him. But if you feel that he should be elected, then let us elect him by popular vote and let us leave it to the people and let the people choose and I think that the people will not make a mistake when they are given a choice on the ballot.

H. RICE: I'd like to ask the delegate from the fourth, to spoil this amendment, wasn't there a kind of a chaotic situation in California when they had a governor of one party and a lieutenant governor of the other? Wasn't the governor afraid to leave the state because the lieutenant governor might change things considerably?

ANTHONY: That has occurred not only in California but in Connecticut and several other states. And I might state that I have just discussed this very problem with three learned gentlemen that are sitting in the audience, all representatives of government, professors at the university, and they are of the view that they should be of - - the lieutenant governor and the governor should be of the same political party. I think it would be very unwise to have anything different.

KING: I'd like to speak against the amendment for two reasons. One is if you elect the governor and the lieutenant governor from the same party, there's no assurance that the lieutenant governor isn't going to do things that are against what the governor would do if the governor were present. The lieutenant governor might have aspirations to succeed his chief, and electing them from the same party doesn't solve the problem. On the other hand, if the governor and the lieutenant governor were of opposite party and the governor should die or otherwise become incapacitated for his office very early in his session, then the lieutenant governor should be entitled to change the administration and make new appointments. He might succeed to the office with three years and nine months to go and would have the right to make changes.

Now I don't anticipate there'll be chaos or any other jam-up for the government, and if the lieutenant governor was serving temporarily he'd have to be a pretty bold man to upset the policies set by his senior in office for a temporary period of three months or so. On the other hand, if he succeeded to the office for a long period, he ought to be entitled to make such changes as might seem best in his judgment with the advice and consent of the Senate.

So I feel the amendment doesn't accomplish any useful purpose and it anticipates a situation that will probably never exist in a hundred years of history.

SILVA: I move the previous question.

GILLILAND: Mr. Chairman.

A. TRASK: Will the gentleman from Hawaii yield for a moment? I'd like to reply to the President.

CHAIRMAN: I think he yields, there's been no second. The Chair recognizes Delegate Gilliland. He was up before you.

GILLILAND: I am against this amendment for the reason that I don't believe in electing, for instance, the president of the bank and the janitor of the same bank on the same ticket, or having the vice-president riding on the shirt tails or coat tails of the governor.

A. TRASK: In replying to the remarks of the President, after all, the main thing we're concerned about is security in our governmental operations. Now let's look at this thing with realistic eyes. A governor is appointive of one political faith, the lieutenant governor is of another political faith. The immediate job, therefore, is to secure people as heads of the departments. Now I'm concerned about one particular situation. What would be the attitude with respect to security of people who may be selected as department heads? Let's take the attorney general, for instance. Now if I had the good opportunity to be a candidate for attorney general under a certain setup, and I see where the governor is a Democrat and a Republican is - - the lieutenant governor is a Republican—the observation is, this situation won't occur in a hundred years—but the immediate situation is, what would be the thinking of those people who would be available as department heads? The governor who would be elected, say, as a Democrat, would be about 80 years or 75 years of age and the Republican is a young fellow 35 years of age, and I have the opportunity to probably be attorney general. I would not consider going into a situation knowing full well of the precarious health of this Democrat and knowing full well that the lieutenant governor is a Republican. It doesn't make for security, gentlemen and ladies. We must have something whereby we could carry through securely in a shape and a form of government, and it's all a question of degree. But certainly the opportunity of the lieutenant governor to break down the program is greater than it would be if the lieutenant governor was of the same political faith.

CROSSLEY: I would like to speak against the amendment, and I would like to say for the benefit of the delegate from the fourth district that what I have to say is not "political chatter." I have an amendment to offer which I think, far from being in line with "political chatter," is something that is designed to make a stronger executive department, and that is the only thing to which I have been speaking. The amendment that I have to offer reads as follows:

> There shall be a lieutenant governor who shall be appointed by the governor and whose term of office shall be the same as that of the governor. In the event there occurs a vacancy in the office of the governor, the lieutenant governor shall assume the duties of the governor until a successor has been elected, such election to take place within sixty days unless the unexpired term of the governor shall be less than six months.

Now, that is not finished language; I have just jotted it down here while the debate's been going on, but I would like to offer that amendment in place of the section that now stands - -

RICHARDS: May I second that?

CROSSLEY: - - as an amendment to the amendment that has been made.

RICHARDS: I second that.

PORTEUS: Point of order.

HEEN: Is that point of order - -

CHAIRMAN: Who has a point of order? Delegate Heen.

HEEN: I don't think that can be made as an amendment to the other. It doesn't seem to be germane to the other one. I think it's a separate amendment that might be offered depending upon what action is taken upon the first amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels there's some merit in your point.

CROSSLEY: I would like to speak against the suggestion. I think it is germane. We're talking now about the office of the lieutenant governor, as to how he shall be elected on a same ballot. It seems to me that we're - - that the amendment that I have proposed is germane. It's certainly to the office, it's to the method.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that the question before the house actually is whether or not the lieutenant governor shall be of the same political faith, and the amendment to that only went further in that it set up the mechanics for obtaining that end. Therefore, I feel that your motion should be held in abeyance and we will vote on the present motion unless there is further discussion.

ARASHIRO: Point of information.

CHAIRMAN: State your point, please.

ARASHIRO: Does that mean that we are not adopting tentatively Section 2 but we are only voting on whether the lieutenant governor should be from the same political party or not?

CHAIRMAN: The amendment reads, as I recall, "The governor and lieutenant governor shall be members of the same political party and appear on the same ballot."

MAU: It is a new section, designated Section 2A.

CHAIRMAN: A new section, correct.

C. RICE: I'd like to speak against the amendment. It doesn't matter whether the lieutenant governor and governor belong to the same party. If the lieutenant governor takes office, he will have his own ideas. You take when McKinley died, was shot, and Theodore Roosevelt went in. It wasn't very long before he had all his own way. They belonged to the same party. If the lieutenant governor is a strong man, he'll have his own ideas, and I believe that the man should be voted for by the people. I was the one that put in there, in the Committee, that he should be elected, and I think as it reads in here in our proposal is right. I'm against all these amendments.

CHAIRMAN: There's only one amendment before the house.

SMITH: I'd like to speak against the amendment for the simple reason that if we are to vote for a - - or have an elected governor and lieutenant governor, I am strongly in favor of the sentiments of President King in the very fact that any governor or lieutenant governor that is elected by the people in the State of Hawaii, I'm quite sure will have to be impartial, very much so, if he wants to stay in. And I think only in fairness to the popular vote that the section as read is sufficient, and if - - I am strongly in favor of that. If there are amendments where they are trying to tie it down, as this last amendment, why then I would go very strongly for the amendment of Mr. Crossley.

HOLROYDE: I'll second the motion for the previous question that was made a while ago.

CHAIRMAN: I'd like to call attention, there are a few delegates who have not spoken on this question.

MIZUHA: In order to assist me in voting, I'd like to ask a question of the exponents of Section 2 as it is written in the proposal. The arguments that they have advanced, would they consider those same arguments in favor of an election of the attorney general of the State?

CHAIRMAN: I don't think that that subject pertains to what we have before us particularly. Would you care to answer that, however?

OKINO: I'm willing to answer that question. There is a big difference between the office of attorney general and that of lieutenant governor. The office of lieutenant governor apparently was created with the idea that a man who is to succeed the governor elected by the people should be an officer elected by the people. The office of lieutenant governor is an independent office, not like that of an attorney general whose function is one that will concern purely or strictly administrative matters, more technically, legal matters. An attorney general should be one who should work in absolute harmony with the governor.

CHAIRMAN: Does that answer your question?

A. TRASK: Point of order. The amendment as offered by Delegate Heen and I together - -

CHAIRMAN: By you.

A. TRASK: - - is Section 2A, so the immediate question, wouldn't it be, for consideration and vote, wouldn't it be a vote on Section 2 as such, and then later proceed to the second paragraph as offered, Section 2A?

CHAIRMAN: I don't believe - -

KING: Point of order. The amendment - - excuse me. Am I recognized on a point of order?

CHAIRMAN: You are.

KING: The amendment was offered to Section 2 by the addition of a new section to be numbered 2A and it won't be 2A later when it's revised and renumbered. It will be 3 or something else. But it was offered primarily as an amendment to Section 2.

CHAIRMAN: The delegate, I mean, the Chair does not wish to limit debate. However, I would like to recognize only those who have not spoken on this subject. I think there's been sufficient said.

MIZUHA: I rise to a point of information.

CHAIRMAN: State your point, please.

MIZUHA: I would like to ask the delegate from the fourth district who is the movant for this amendment whether his amendment applies only to general elections or do - - are we going to have just a single election for the governorship and the lieutenant governorship, or will we have a primary election and a general election?

HEEN: The provision of course, in the Constitution, relates only to the general election. Primary elections are matters taken care of by legislation.

Now the language that was mentioned in the amendment reads as follows, a little different from what the Chair stated.

> Section 2A. The governor and the lieutenant governor, representing the same political party, shall be voted for together upon the same ballot.

That's the language of the amendment that was offered - -

LARSEN: May I ask, with only one X - -

HEEN: - - by Delegate Trask and seconded by myself.

LARSEN: Question. May I ask, with one X for the two of them?

MAU: Point of information.

HEEN: Yes, one cross instead of a double cross.

MAU: I wonder if the chairman of the committee could give us some idea as to the other offices of the states. How many of those offices are elected or appointed? He was speaking in answer to a question put to him on the office of attorney general. I think it would have some bearing on how we vote on this amendment and Section 2 of the proposal itself. The offices of attorney general, treasurer, and other offices. How many states provide for the election, the appointment or other methods of selection?

CHAIRMAN: With reference - -

NIELSEN: Point of order. I think we're discussing - -

CHAIRMAN: Will you state your point.

NIELSEN: - - lieutenant governor now.

MAU: It would have a direct bearing as to whether or not we would vote for Section 2A which is an amendment proposed to Section 2, or whether we would stand by Section 2 because it provides for an election, or whether we would vote for Delegate Crossley's - -

KING: Point of order.

MAU: - - proposed amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Will you state your point, please, Delegate King.

KING: The gentleman can read the Proposal No. 22 and the committee report that goes with it. All of the other executive offices are to be appointed and the answer's right there. In the meanwhile, he's not discussing the amendment.

MAU: We know that, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair's understanding of this question was - -

MAU: That's true, we know that. That's the report of the committee. But we're trying to find out how - - what the other states provide for in their other offices.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, do you have an answer to that question?

OKINO: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I have been interrupted and not been able to - -

CHAIRMAN: The question as I understand it is in the other states, how many of them have elected officers other than the lieutenant governor and governor. Is that correct?

OKINO: I can give you a very general answer for that question, Delegate Mau. In many states of the 48 states there are constitutional officers elected by the people just like the governor. Now, most of the officers elected in the majority of the states are the attorney general, secretary of state, auditor and superintendent of public instruction. Now, if you can give me say about thirty seconds, I may be able to refer to the manual prepared by the Legislative Reference Bureau. But insofar as this Committee Proposal No. 22 is concerned, you will note from Section 10 thereof that all other administrative offices, boards and commissions are to be created or established by the legislature. There will be no other elective officers in connection with the executive branch of our government.

MAU: Thank you very much.

LEE: I'm wondering whether that information is correct. Isn't there a clause which says "unless provided by law" in Section - -

OKINO: "As may be prescribed by law," I think that is the language, is it not?

LEE: No, the word is "unless." Page 4 of your proposal. "Each principal department shall be under the supervision of the governor. The head of each principal department shall be a single executive unless otherwise provided by law."

OKINO: Yes, the legislature will retain the control in the first place to determine whether or not that that department shall be headed by a single executive, that depending upon the nature of the functions; and if not, the legislature would have the discretion to set up a board or a commission department.

LEE: I see, so it was the intention of the committee that all other officers shall be appointed by the governor. Is that it?

OKINO: That was the consensus of your committee.

CHAIRMAN: I think there has been sufficient debate and other comments on this section. All those - - on this amendment rather. All those in favor of the amendment made by Delegate Trask, seconded by Delegate Heen, will please say "aye." All those opposed. The amendment is lost.

The only thing before the house now is the adoption of Section 2 as written.

CROSSLEY: I now offer the amendment that I offered a moment ago that was ruled out of order at the time.

CHAIRMAN: Have you had time to have that printed?

CROSSLEY: I haven't even had time to review it. I believe the clerks have it. I can read it from here again.

CHAIRMAN: Unless there is any objection, we'll take it from the reading. If there is any objection, we'll defer and have it printed.

A. TRASK: I think that's out of order, your -- Mr. --

CHAIRMAN: I said unless there is any objection. Do you wish to object?

A. TRASK: I certainly object.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Trask, what is your objection?

A. TRASK: We haven't been shown the same courtesy that is now being shown here.

CHAIRMAN: I beg your pardon.

A. TRASK: I said, we haven't been shown the equal treatment here with respect to the other. I've asked for a deferment and the attitude of the Chair has been more or less against it, and now the Chair very, very softly says, "If there's no objection." I think the treatment is unequal.

CHAIRMAN: I believe the delegate misunderstood the Chair. The delegate misunderstood the Chair, I believe. My point was that if it was sufficient for the rest of the committee, they could take the amendment as read. If they did not want to take it that way, it would be necessary to move for deferment.

CROSSLEY: I move that this section be deferred till the end of the total proposal.

A. TRASK: I object to such action.

LEE: I believe we should proceed. We're going along at a snail's pace here and since we've already considered and acted upon a proposed amendment on this matter, let's hear what this amendment is so that we may act on it and pass on the section before we go to lunch.

WOOLAWAY: I'll second the amendment to speak on it.

CHAIRMAN: Will you read the amendment please.

CROSSLEY: The amendment is an amendment to Section 2, amending the section to read:

> There shall be a lieutenant governor who shall be appointed by the governor and whose term of office shall be the same as that of the governor. In the event there occurs a vacancy in the office of the governor, the lieutenant governor shall assume the duties of the governor, until a successor has been elected at a special election to take place within sixty days unless the unexpired term of the governor shall be less than six months, in which case the lieutenant governor shall serve the balance of the term.

HEEN: May I suggest an amendment to that, and I hope you'll accept it, that instead of "lieutenant governor" it'll be the term "secretary of state."

CROSSLEY: I accept that amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The word "lieutenant governor" has been stricken from the amendment, and the word "secretary of state" put in its place.

LEE: I would like to speak in opposition to the proposed amendment. It seems to me that if that amendment is accepted there will be only one person elected representing the executive branch of government. It seems to me also that those of us who may believe in a certain amount of efficiency in the executive branch of government, to have other offices such as the attorney general, the superintendent of public works, the land commissioner and all other heads of the departments to be appointed by the chief executive where in many other states they call for the election, would be prone to object to fastening the mantle of so great an authority upon one man. And after all, this one man is a human being who will serve for a period of four years. Not only will the matter of a great political machine be built but it would seem to me that this Convention, which has been characterized by some of the other speakers as being anti-people, will certainly end up with that symbol. I for one believe that the Committee on Executive Powers and Functions as well as the Statehood subcommittee which has gone into this problem, realize that it is a tough problem, but, believing that the authority should finally rest in the people, supported this proposal which called for the election of the governor and the lieutenant governor. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, unless there is further debate on this matter, I would like to table the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will rule that in Committee of the Whole, the motion to table is out of order whereas the motion to the question itself can be put and won or lost.

KING: I desire to speak in opposition to the amendment also. The model we are following on the whole is the election of the chief executive and one standard. The President and the Vice-President of the United States are elected by the people of America. Should the President be incapacitated, then the Vice-President takes his place. That's the model we're following in the State. I certainly believe the lieutenant governor should be elected. I don't think it matters whether he's of the same party or of the opposite party. And then there'll be two persons elected by all of the people of Hawaii to act, one in the capacity of chief executive and the other to stand by to fill that place should the first one be unable to fulfill the duties of his office.

Now, we've heard a good deal here about this Convention being against the people. I rather resent that, I think that goes to the privilege of the Convention. There are 63 of us here and we're all working for the people. We're all elected by the people, and I feel that this implication that because we do not want to elect the janitor and the gardeners and somebody else down the line in an administrative position then we are against the people. We elect the governor and the lieutenant governor, we elect the legislature, and this Constitution will grant that legislature very great powers. The other night I was in sympathy with most of the action taken in striking out of the report of the Committee on Taxation and Finance several powers that would have been given to the governor at the expense of the legislature. If it had come to a voice vote, I mean a roll call, I would have voted in favor of deleting those particular powers. But, the question now we have is whether the number two man in the State shall be appointed or elected and I certainly do believe he ought to be elected.

LEE: Point of personal privilege.

CHAIRMAN: State your point, please.

LEE: I'd like to state that the remarks which I used came from the remarks which were made by a former speaker at a former debate, one of the vice-presidents of this Convention, a Republican.

KING: Mr. Chairman, also a point of personal privilege.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

KING: I was not referring to the last speaker when I said I resented the implication that we're working against the people, but that remark had been made several times, not only today but in previous days, and I think it's about time we forget imputing the motives or the character of our fellow delegates and say we're all working for the people.

HEEN: The President of this Convention relies upon the fact that the President and the Vice-President of the United States are both elective officials. That's all right so far as it goes, but he overlooks the fact that they run upon the same -- from the same political party. That's where the big difference comes in.

CHAIRMAN: I believe that question's been settled, however.

FUKUSHIMA: I'd like to speak in opposition to the amendment. It will be very brief. I do not believe in a pseudo-Democratic government or a pseudo-Republican form of government, and I also do not believe in a government by "cocktail appointment."

FONG: The proponents of this amendment presuppose that the governor and the legislature are going to be of the same political faith. Now, they are talking about the party affiliation of the governor and the lieutenant governor. They assume that by appointment the lieutenant governor will be of the same political faith as that of the governor. We are giving to the legislature the right of confirmation, that is to the Senate. It is to be conceived that the governor may be Democratic and the Senate, Republican. Now, under those circumstances, are we to assume that the Democratic governor is going to have a Democratic lieutenant governor, and vice versa? There is no assurance that the lieutenant governor is going to be of the same political faith as that of the governor because the confirmation power lies with the Senate.

I would like to state that I'm beginning to get a little worried about this governor, the position that he is going to have in this State of Hawaii. We are building here in Hawaii the biggest political machine that the State will ever see. In no other state has the responsibility been placed upon one man and one office, and in this Convention we are going to give that man superhuman powers. Where is this superhuman person that's going to guide this State of Hawaii? Who is this superman that will have the intelligence of a Solomon, that is going to solve all the problems of this Territory by his appointments? And I'm beginning to get a little worried about this superhuman governor that we're going to have, who's going to appoint all the other officers, who's going to run this State the way he sees it, only subject to the weak confirmation of a weak Senate.

ANTHONY: I was one of those who was in favor of having the governor and lieutenant governor run on the same ballot and be from the same political party. I still think that that is wise, but I would vote against this amendment because, as the delegate that last spoke has pointed out, in this Constitution we are concentrating the executive powers of government in one man. Now suppose the governor dies, what we are doing in effect is to say, not only during his term of office may he exercise all of these powers but in effect by his last will and testament he can pick out the fair-haired boy that's going to be the heir apparent. I think that the people ought to have some voice in who is going to succeed the governor in the event of a death or a vacancy. Therefore, I vote against the amendment.

APOLIONA: I'm not going to make a political speech but I agree very heartily with the findings of our future judge of Hawaii and his committee. And at this time, I'm going to vote against the amendment and I call for the previous question.

ARASHIRO: I second that motion, Mr. Chairman.

RICHARDS: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the --

CHAIRMAN: The previous question has been moved and seconded.

WOOLAWAY: Point of order.

ROBERTS: Point of order.

WOOLAWAY: You allow the others --

CHAIRMAN: State your point. The Chair would like to state that I didn't have a chance to allow these speakers to speak because I was interrupted by a point of order from the delegate from Kauai -- Maui rather.

ROBERTS: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Will you state your point, please.

ROBERTS: I think we're still in the Committee of the Whole. I haven't raised any objection to questions put before on the previous question in the Committee of the Whole. That motion is an entirely improper motion in the Committee of the Whole.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair did not have a chance to rule on that motion. I will ask the --

ROBERTS: I'll wait until the ruling of the Chair.

CHAIRMAN: Thank you. I will ask the person who seconded the motion if they would withdraw to allow speakers who have not spoken on this question to speak. Delegate Arashiro.

ARASHIRO: I'm just wondering, but I will withdraw for the sake of those that want to express their views on this matter.

CHAIRMAN: Thank you.

GILLILAND: I am opposed to this amendment, proposed amendment on the ground that the people of the Territory have enough confidence to elect the man as the lieutenant governor, and if anything happens to the governor, why shouldn't he fill out the rest of the term. I think we should not make a puppet or a rubber stamp or a dummy of the lieutenant governor if we're going to elect him the same as we elect the governor.

CROSSLEY: In order to stop all of this debate, I withdraw my amendment.

WOOLAWAY: I shall withdraw my second.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment and its second has been withdrawn.

TAVARES: I rise to a point of special privilege.

CHAIRMAN: State your point, please.

TAVARES: It is my privilege to announce that the Bar Association has endorsed Delegate Okino for the appointment to the Third Circuit judgeship.

DELEGATE: Tom Okino happens to be absent for just a moment.

CHAIRMAN: I will call on the delegate from the fourth district to make that announcement. We'll have a short recess in a minute. I think it's time to vote on this question.

A. TRASK: Point of information, please.

CHAIRMAN: You have a point of information. State your point, please.

A. TRASK: Will Delegate Tavares give us the score, if he desires.

CHAIRMAN: I would like to have that held until we vote on this section, please, since Delegate Okino is not here.

APOLIONA: I'd like to correct Delegate Tavares. I made the announcement before he did, when I said "the future judge of Hawaii."

CHAIRMAN: The question before the house is the adoption of Section 2, committee report. Is there any further discussion on this section?

DOI: I would like to direct a question to the chairman of the committee. I would like to have an explanation of the meaning of the last clause there, the last line of Section 2, "or as may be delegated to him by the governor."

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, would you care to answer that question?

DOI: Probably I should venture another step and say, does that create indirectly a two-headed executive?

OKINO: The purpose of including that particular phrase in that Section 2 was to empower the lieutenant governor with functions which normally would not be delegated to him by the legislature. It is on the strength of the recommendation of the subcommittee of Hawaii Statehood Commission that that clause was incorporated. On page 29 of this report, under the title of "Lieutenant governor," the last sentence of the first paragraph, you will note that he should also be acting governor at such other times and with such power as the governor might delegate to him from time to time.

CHAIRMAN: Is that a satisfactory answer to your question?

DOI: Another question. Does it mean that the governor may delegate such duties such that after the duties are delegated, the lieutenant governor becomes fully responsible for the execution of those duties and that it removes the governor from responsibility as to the execution of those duties?

OKINO: I do not think so; I think the governor is still responsible [inaudible] if he does delegate any particular administrative functions or duties to a lieutenant governor.

ROBERTS: I have a question. Does that clause give him powers which he would not have if that clause were absent?

OKINO: I believe that is the real reason why that clause is incorporated. You will note that most of the duties will be prescribed to the lieutenant governor by legislative act and there may be some question - -

ROBERTS: I have a question on the matter of delegation of power. It's one thing when the governor leaves the state and asks the lieutenant governor to take charge, he has his functions. It's something quite different if, for example, the governor should turn over to a lieutenant governor certain jobs which are, let's say, a little "messy." The lieutenant governor is - - suppose he happens to be of a different political faith, he'll do the dirty job for the governor and the governor says, "I have the authority to delegate this job to you, you do that," even though it may mean that this individual has jobs to perform which the governor should be performing as the head of the government. Now, I think that the governor does have power where the lieutenant governor is there, to turn over certain ministerial tasks. But when you delegate the power to the lieutenant governor, the governor is giving up his basic rights.

OKINO: I do not think that the governor is giving up any basic rights, but I shall yield the floor to Delegate Porteus. He, I believe, will be able to give a more detailed explanation of this particular clause.

PORTEUS: We felt that if we were going to have an elected lieutenant governor that the governor ought to be able to delegate to that man a number of the duties that he is performing today. There are here in the islands, of course, separate islands. It is often necessary for the governor, or I think the governor should, visit the other islands and spend some time on them. During the time that he is absent from the island of Oahu, if the capital is here, he ought to be able to delegate certain ministerial duties to the lieutenant governor. If he's on the island of Hawaii and there's certain routine business which requires his signature, I see no objection to the governor having the clear power to delegate certain authority to the lieutenant governor for him to exercise certain ministerial duties when he is absent.

I think that this provision enables the governor to delegate such powers as may be consistent with the abilities of the lieutenant governor. If we tried to describe those duties by law, we may find that the particular abilities of the particular lieutenant governor do not lend themselves well to the assumption of certain of that authority. There's no doubt that in the delegation of the authority, the governor remains the one that is responsible. He hasn't forfeited his right. Such duties as he may assign he may take back to himself. But this allows for a little more ease of administration in the delegation of certain functions to the lieutenant governor. The subcommittee thought that this was a very desirable thing from an administrative point of view.

It does not rule out, however, the idea that somehow, that the governor should have an administrative assistant. That's perfectly all right. But we do know from our experience with past Secretaries of the Territory that there have been people of particular abilities who are able to handle certain situations and it ought to be clear that the governor can utilize those people fully in those areas.

HEEN: In considering this particular problem, we might go over to Section 4. "In case of the failure of the governor to qualify, or his removal from office, death, resignation, inability to discharge powers and duties of the office, or absence from the State." In other words, if he's absent from Honolulu, which will be the capital, and is on the island of Hawaii, the lieutenant governor cannot perform those duties; and the governor cannot delegate those duties to the lieutenant governor under that Section 4.

A. TRASK: Point of information, if you please. Chairman of the committee, what particular duties are to be delegated by the governor to the lieutenant governor that was in the mind of the committee?

OKINO: The committee relied, principally, upon the representation made by Delegate Porteus and the language as it is set forth in that Hawaii Statehood Committee report. We felt then that there were some minor ministerial or administrative duties which could lawfully be delegated by the governor to the lieutenant governor, taking into account the particular fact that has been stated to you by Delegate Porteus, the governor of the Territory of Hawaii may be going from one county to other counties.

A. TRASK: Well, you - - does your reply, therefore, fill in the situation that Delegate Heen has suggested, namely that absence from the territory does not mean absence from the island of Oahu on the island of Molokai, perhaps? But, in that situation would therefore the power of delegation come in to fill in that particular absence that is not an absence as intended in Section 4?

OKINO: No. Section 4 covers an entirely different situation and I think that has been adequately expressed by Delegate Heen, because the expression "absence from the state" as it appears in Section 4 under the title of "Succession" is something which is entirely different. I have a case to substantiate that point, a very recent case decided by Nebraska in 1942.

ANTHONY: I'd like to ask the author of this language, the Secretary, what acts he thought would be accomplished under this delegation?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Porteus, would you care to answer that question?

PORTEUS: I had specifically in mind, or the committee had specifically in mind, that should the governor go to the island of Hawaii to attend certain functions there, that in the meantime the routine work in the capital could be continued, the presentation of proclamations for Health Week, for National Youth, for tuberculosis drives, for cancer drives, for all the other things that are required, the governor can let him do that in his absence. In fact -- if you'll just wait until I've answered the question.

ANTHONY: I've got enough of an answer. I'd like to address myself to the sentence.

PORTEUS: Well, I'd like to go on a little further if I may because I haven't finished the answer.

This will permit the governor to go to one of the other islands and take a week's vacation, if it need be. It isn't an absence from the state, it isn't the inability to qualify or removal from office or inability to discharge his duties. If the governor wants to take two weeks' vacation on the island of Hawaii, if he's been there in office for four years and gets elected for another four years, he can say to the lieutenant governor, "You take over and run the duties of this office. I'm going to Hawaii for two weeks' vacation." And it will mean that the work of the office can go on without it being held up until the governor himself comes and sets his hand to any instrument that may require a signature.

CHAIRMAN: Is that a satisfactory answer, Delegate?

ANTHONY: Now I'd like to address myself [inaudible]

PORTEUS: If the delegate will come over here, I'd be glad to let him speak from this desk.

ANTHONY: The sentence in question is not confined to the proclamation of Poppy Days or pinning things on Boy Scouts. I think the explanation of the Secretary makes it perfectly clear that this is a broad delegation, not confined to simple ministerial acts. And once you have such a broad delegation, you thereby give the executive an "out" on the responsibility for those acts that are delegated.

Now I will give you a specific example. Suppose the governor, and he could well do it under this section, would say to the lieutenant governor, "You take over the entire project in connection with the commissioner of public lands, if there is such an officer, of subdividing areas and opening up homesteads by an appropriate executive order." Now the lieutenant governor would go ahead and do that. The governor would thereby relinquish his authority. He would then not have the responsibility of the office and I assume that this Constitution will have some place in here that the governor shall see to it that the laws shall be faithfully executed. You will be giving this power to the governor, then permitting him to make a delegation. Not a delegation for Poppy Day, but a delegation for the real substance of his office and I am against the sentence.

MAU: [Inaudible]

PORTEUS: I'd be glad to volunteer the loan of my mike, although I seem to be picking up opposition all the time.

MAU: There is always a catch, Mr. Chairman, in using the Secretary's mike. He always says that if you'll join me, I'll let you use my mike.

I wonder whether all of this argument can be resolved by a simple amendment. If it is purely ministerial duties that you desire to unburden from this superhuman of a governor, then all we have to do is to use after the words "law or" in the last sentence and insert "such ministerial duties as may be delegated."

ARASHIRO: The question in my mind is in line with Delegate Anthony's presentation where in case in the future some emergency should arise, and in that emergency the governor now being elected by the people—it will be an emergency which we might call a "hot potato"—in that case, to shirk or to avoid from making a decision on an emergency he will delegate that duty to the lieutenant governor. That is a question pointed to the Secretary.

CHAIRMAN: Do you care to answer that question, Delegate Porteus?

PORTEUS: Was the question, Mr. Chairman, the question of delegating a "hot potato"?

CHAIRMAN: Correct.

PORTEUS: Well, as far as delegating a "hot potato" is concerned, it seems to me that there wouldn't be a state of continual friction between the lieutenant governor and the governor. The idea was to get a working team. Now, if there is friction I hardly think that the governor is going to put himself into a position of allowing a lieutenant governor to take over in a difficult situation and come out of it, because nobody in this territory is going to sit back without knowing that a "hot potato" has been handed over to a lieutenant governor. And they're going to say, if this is the way the governor operates in office maybe we'd better not support him for this office or another political office again. Certainly, there are "hot potatoes" that are around, but I think that this clause, leaving it to the discretion of the governor, will mean that the two men will try to work together for the benefit of the Territory. Now if he passes a "hot potato" on and the lieutenant governor can successfully handle the "hot potato," then he certainly will gain in political stature within the State.

WHITE: If you will refer to -- if they'll refer to Section 5. Section 5 reads that "The governor shall be responsible for the proper execution of the laws." Now, he can't relinquish his over-all responsibility, and as far as this section is concerned, one of the difficulties is that we are setting up a job here that's never been in the executive setup before. In the thinking of the committee he was supposed to take over the duties of the secretary of state, and, therefore, with all the power you are vesting in the governor, he's got to have somebody that he can delegate some of these duties to. So I think it's a very natural provision to have in here and I wouldn't say that it just goes to simple ministerial duties.

HEEN: I now move an amendment to that particular sentence. Place a "period" after the word "law" in the last line and delete the rest of that sentence.

ANTHONY: I second that.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the period be placed after the word "law" in the last line and the remainder of the sentence be stricken.

TAVARES: I think we are having a lot of ado about nothing. There are probably thousands of laws on the books, federal laws, that say the President shall do this and the President shall do that and the courts have held time and again that he -- and have sustained his action through any number of his Secretaries and said that is the act of the President. He has delegated thousands and millions of things to his subordinates. Of course, the governor is not nearly as busy as the President but the principle is the same. It can be delegated. If you take this out now, you are making it appear that the legislature cannot authorize the governor to delegate even ministerial matters. I think it would be wrong to delete it now.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Anthony, are you speaking to the motion?

ANTHONY: Speaking to the motion. That is precisely why I want it taken out, because with the period after the -- as the delegate from the fourth has put it, the governor will, as a matter of law, have the right to delegate ministerial duties. The Federal Constitution provides that the President shall be responsible for the faithful -- shall see to it that the laws are faithfully executed. That does not mean that the President may not delegate certain acts to subordinates. The difficulty with this sentence is that if you put it in, you mean something more than the ordinary law. I am against it because it will be giving away some of the powers of his office, and it's in conflict with the other section which requires the governor to be responsible for the faithful execution of the laws.

A. TRASK: I speak in favor of the amendment striking this latter portion because it leads us into a very indefinite, unsimplified, foggy situation. What is a ministerial duty? What is a substantive real duty? There might be an admixture here and it is not simplified and it calls for further explanation. That's why I'm afraid of that and I think it should be deleted. I'm concerned concretely about the question of the appointment of judges. Will the duty devolve? Is it, the power to appoint a judge, a power that the governor may delegate to the lieutenant governor or not. Now maybe not, but certainly it does raise a question and therefore I'm in favor of the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion on the amendment? If not, all those in favor of the amendment will say "aye." Opposed. I believe the ayes have it.

LEE: I now move that we tentatively agree to that section as amended.

J. TRASK: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved by Delegate Lee, seconded by Delegate Shimamura that we agree on this section as amended.

SHIMAMURA: The Chair has put words into my mouth. I did not rise to second it.

CHAIRMAN: I stand corrected. I heard someone say, "Second the motion."

J. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved, seconded by Delegate Trask.

SHIMAMURA: Before that question is voted upon may I state that under the provisions of HR 49, so-called Statehood Enabling Bill, the governor and the secretary of state are designated to be the officers to certify to the election of representatives and senators to the United States Congress. Under those circumstances, there should be an amendment either to Section 2, or if the delegates see fit, a provision in the election ordinance that the lieutenant governor is authorized to use the title of secretary of state for the purpose of certification merely of the election returns of senators and representatives. I merely make that as a suggestion, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: One question. Did you suggest it be done by ordinance?

SHIMAMURA: Either here or in the ordinance. I think preferably in the ordinance where it would be more of a transitory nature. With that understanding, I won't make the amendment at this time.

LEE: I agree with the chairman of the Committee on Ordinances; so that with that understanding that the matter will be taken care of by the Committee on Ordinances, I believe we are ready to put the question on the section.

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole report will include that statement.

ROBERTS: I'd like to suggest that the Committee of the Whole report show that it's not the intention, in deleting this section, to deny the governor the opportunity to turn over those little small jobs that were mentioned on the floor which need to be done as a matter of ministerial operation.

CHAIRMAN: If there is no objection from the floor, the committee report will show that. All those in favor of the amendment to delete the last line with the exception of the word "law," will say "aye."

LEE: That has already been passed, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: I beg your pardon.

LEE: The motion is the entire section as amended.

CHAIRMAN: Thank you. All those in favor of adopting tentatively the Section 2 as amended will say "aye." Opposed. Carried.
The only thing --

LAI: I move for the tentative adoption of Section 3.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Section 3 is now before the house.

LEE: A point of information from the chairman of the committee. I notice that in your report there is shown that the federal salary of our present governor is set at $15,000 a year and the legislature of the Territory has provided an additional sum to make it $16,000. It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that unless you and your committee can show otherwise that $16,000 is enough money for the governor and I will make an amendment to that effect unless I hear good cause from the committee.

OKINO: On that particular question, I am sure the delegate from Kauai, Delegate Rice, would like to speak.

C. RICE: Mr. Okino asked me to speak on this as I was the introducer in the committee to put this at $18,000. The present governor gets $16,000. I feel that $18,000 compared with other salaries paid in Honolulu is not too much for the governor. I went up to the Collector of Internal Revenue and asked him what the deductions for federal taxes would be and he said if it was a single man, he'd have to pay $5,000 or near that in taxes. I feel, compared with salaries paid in Honolulu—and there's a lot of entertainment, although the legislature did give $75,000 to run the governor's office, Washington Place, and so forth at the present—I think that for $2,000 we shouldn't be niggardly. A man with a moderate income could not run for the governorship and could not support the office. I feel it's a chance for people with moderate income to take the office.

LEE: A point of information from Delegate Rice on this matter. Assuming that your remarks are valid, I notice that in our judiciary article, in cases of depression the salaries of the offices from the judiciary may be decreased in proportion with the salaries of other government employees. Now as I read this section, there's a little inconsistency there which I haven't resolved in my mind. In the third sentence, there it says, "But in no event shall be less than $18,000 and $12,000 respectively, per annum, and shall not be increased or decreased for the term for which they shall have been elected." There might not be an inconsistency. As I understand that section, in case of a depression the legislature would still have the authority to cut that salary except that it shouldn't cut it during that term. Is that the understanding of the committee?

OKINO: Perhaps I can answer that question. The salary or compensation of $18,000 provided in this clause here for the governor is the minimum salary. The legislature would not have the right to decrease the governor's compensation. The legislature may, however, increase the compensation of a governor but not for the term he is serving in office; and if there is an increase over and above the sum of $18,000, then the legislature may, of course, by the power to establish that salary destroy the same. But the minimum of $18,000 will be the minimum salary of the governor. That is the intent of the committee.

LEE: That is during the term for which he is elected?

OKINO: During the - -

LEE: At all times, at any time?

OKINO: $18,000.

LEE: Yes.

OKINO: Yes, because it is a constitutional provision.

LEE: Well, it seems to me that why should the governor be given special treatment as compared with the other officers of the State including the judiciary and other members of the executive branch of government.

OKINO: I believe you will recall that that amendment to the compensation provided for the judiciary was made by the Committee of the Whole.

LEE: That's correct.

OKINO: This report was already filed with the Clerk of the Convention.

LEE: So that, Mr. Okino, in order to have uniformity on this matter, that same provision should apply to the salary of the governor, don't you think?

OKINO: Speaking for myself, I would have no objection, but I cannot speak for the delegate from Kauai.

C. RICE: I think it should be the same.

CHAIRMAN: Will the delegate please address the Chair. Delegate Rice.

C. RICE: I think it should be the same. If everybody has to take the cut, the governor should take the cut too.

CHAIRMAN: I would ask if any of the delegates have an amendment.

KING: I called attention to that provision - - called Delegate Ashford's attention to it and suggested that the same amendment which she sponsored with regard to the judiciary would be applicable to this section, so that if there was a general cut, the governor and lieutenant governor would share that cut. I believe Delegate Ashford has looked up the original amendment she sponsored for the judiciary and may be prepared to offer it.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: I'm sorry, I haven't; but I've been looking for it. It's here somewhere but I can't find it.

MAU: It's very close to noon now and I think the committee ought to be given an opportunity to bring in this amendment. I move that we recess until 1:30 or rather that the committee rise, and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

LEE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: I would ask that you would hold that in abeyance for a second. While we're still in Committee of the Whole, I would like to ask Dr. Apoliona to make the appropriate announcement now that Delegate Okino is here.

APOLIONA: I ask that Delegate Tavares be given that right as he's president of the Bar Association.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Tavares, president of the Bar Association.

TAVARES: Mr. Chairman, it is again my special privilege to announce to the delegate from Hawaii that he has been endorsed by the Bar Association for nomination and appointment to the office of judge of the third circuit court. I wish to extend our congratulations to him.

OKINO: Thank you, Delegate Tavares. I am really overwhelmed and I think I shall be brief by saying thank you, all people who gave me kokua.

APOLIONA: And, Mr. Chairman, when you address Delegate Okino from Hawaii, will you extend him the same courtesy as you give to Judge Wirtz.

MAU: I renew my motion.

CROSSLEY: I believe that we can today, unless there is any other business on the Clerk's desk and in order to expedite our getting back to work immediately at 1:30 and not going through all of the parliamentary procedure, recess now until 1:30.

H. RICE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Is that satisfactory? It has been moved and seconded that we recess until 1:30. If there is no objection, so ordered.

Afternoon Session

CHAIRMAN: When we recessed for lunch, Section 3 was before us. There was a motion for the adoption, and there were delegates who were suggesting amendments. I believe one amendment has been distributed. I recognize Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: In the judiciary article where it provided that the compensation should not be diminished during office, we inserted the following provision as an amendment, "unless by law applying in equal measure to all officers of the State." It appears to me that that is an appropriate amendment relating to the governor's salary which is - - it is now provided should not be increased or diminished during his term of office. I, therefore, move the adoption of the amendment by inserting it after the word "decreased" in the fifth line.

SMITH: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the section be amended with the inclusion of the words "unless by law applying in equal measure to all officers of the State."

HEEN: May I ask the delegate from Molokai whether or not this new phrase should come after the word "elected" at the end of that sentence instead of after the word "decreased"? I think in the judiciary article that was put at the end of the sentence. I'm not certain.

ASHFORD: In my amendment, I think it was adopted in that form, it was put after the word "diminished."

TAVARES: I think that's well taken. This provision says "it shall not be increased or decreased during the term," and to put it at the end of the sentence would then allow it to be increased by a law applying equally to all officers of the State.

ASHFORD: I had thought it meant that wherever it was put; in other words it was intended to apply to both the increase and diminution if it were by general law applying to all officers of the State. Where it goes in is a matter that's immaterial to me.

CHAIRMAN: I believe the Style Committee perhaps could take care of that, knowing the committee's intent.

PORTEUS: Was the intent that the governor should only get an increase if all officers of the State got an increase? Then I disagree heartily with the amendment. I think that the governor's pay ought to be adjusted according to the duties of the office and if -- I agree, however, that in case there is to be a reduction, it's fair enough that it should be reduced according to a proportional reduction. But, there are times when certain offices because of their duties are selected for an increase, rather than giving every officer an equivalent increase.

ASHFORD: As the section reads at present, it couldn't be increased at all during his term.

CHAIRMAN: Is that a satisfactory reply, Delegate Porteus?

CROSSLEY: The section was written so that it couldn't be increased or decreased during his term of office. That was so that there could be no retaliation against the office during the term of office, or if they were in the same political field so that it couldn't be increased as some special consideration. The whole purpose of the section was to be sure that there would be a guaranteed minimum, however, and the reason that they in this section -- that we thought there should be a guaranteed minimum was that this is an elective office as opposed to the appointive office that we've been talking about. For that reason, that there are certain expenses that go along with the office that don't exist in an appointive office, and therefore, we felt that there was a difference between the two, and that there should be some guaranteed minimum preserved to get a man to go into the office.

TAVARES: Another point of information. Harking back over the years to 1932, as I recall it, when we made the 10 per cent cut, we made it apply to salaried officers or per diem offices, I mean salaried officers and employees. But jury commissioners and jurors and masters and various other minor types who don't get paid a regular salary or wage were not included and I would want the record to show that when we say "applying to all officers of the State," we mean by a general law, not necessarily -- we don't mean necessarily if a few jury commissioners or masters are left out that that would invalidate the general cut or increase or decrease. I take it that that's the sense of this Convention because you can't always hit everybody. But as long as it's a general law, not designed to discriminate against the governor or, in the case of the judiciary, against the judges as a special class, but applicable generally to salaried officers, that would satisfy the requirement of the Constitution.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no objection, the report will so state.

AKAU: I wasn't going to talk against or for the amendment, but rather for information since Mr. Crossley has mentioned something about money. I raise the question as to the value of putting in a piece of statutory business in this section. While I realize it says that it shall not be less than a certain amount of money—that's a safety precaution perchance somebody in the legislature would be sore at the governor and want to reduce his salary to some insignificant amount—I'm wondering if, as I've heard other constitutions, if they have mentioned the actual amount.

The second reason, our value of the dollar has fluctuated so in the past years. Let us say, ten years ago, if we dared put down $18,000 that would be heresy. Now then, we're making the Constitution for let us say ten years hence or along that line and while our dollar has fluctuated a great deal in the past ten years, who can tell what is going to be ten years hence. So I raise the question of the wisdom of putting in any amount, since in the first two sentences it actually says that the legislature shall take care of this. I raise that point.

CHAIRMAN: I'd like to refer your question to the chairman of the committee, Delegate Okino.

OKINO: I am not in a position to answer the question whether or not the compensation of a governor has been provided in the constitutions. I can only refer you to the Manual on page 153, and it will give you a pretty good idea of the various compensations provided for in the different states. I made an effort just a minute or so ago to ascertain in this page, whether or not there was any specific constitutional provision covering compensation of governors. Perhaps some states do.

TAVARES: It's my understanding there has never been any difficulty where only a minimum was fixed. The difficulty has come in constitutions when they fixed a flat salary without any possibility of change. I do not think with the huge national debt we have that the dollar is ever going to be much more valuable than it is today until we get rid of that debt. We need inflation to pay off that debt. Heaven help us if the dollar doesn't stay cheap in paying off that huge debt.

LOPER: I wonder if the word "for" shouldn't be changed to "during." "For the term of office," it cannot be increased or decreased "for the term." Doesn't it mean "during the term of office"? Any increase at any time for subsequent governors and lieutenant governors would have to be "for" the four year term. Another suggestion that I have is that—if you wish to get around as I understand the intention of the amendment—is that "it shall not be increased during the term of office nor decreased for the term of office" except as provided in the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, would you like to reply to that.

OKINO: I'm sure the committee would have no objection. Personally, I think it's an improvement.

CHAIRMAN: We can only write it in there one way. Somebody's got to make a motion to that effect.

KAM: I so move that we substitute the word "during" for "for."

CHAIRMAN: I would ask that we dispose of the amendment that's before the house first, however. Is there any further discussion on Miss Ashford's -- Delegate Ashford's amendment? If not, it's all before you. All those in favor of its inclusion will say "aye." Opposed. So carried.

KAM: I now move that we substitute the word "during" in lieu of "for" in the last -- in the fifth line of Section 3.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any second to that motion?

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: The motion before the house is for the inclusion of the word "during" so that the line would read, "shall not be increased or decreased during the term for which they shall have been elected."

WHITE: I'd like to raise a question. By changing that to "during" whether you might not create a situation where the legislature was in session between the time that the man was elected and actually took office, so he could change his compensation. And the purpose of the "for" is to try to protect it for the term for which he was elected.

ASHFORD: I call the attention of the delegates to the fact that that was just what was done before President Truman went in. He was a carry-over, he was elected in November, and then they raised the pay before he entered his new term, and if you'll remember, it was a very close thing as to the days by which it passed.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Loper, do I understand that you've withdrawn?

LOPER: Yes, except that I didn't make the amendment. I think it was Delegate Kam.

KAM: That is correct. I withdraw my motion.

CHAIRMAN: Thank you. The only thing before the house now is Section 3 as amended. We have no motion to that effect.

APOLIONA: I move that we tentatively adopt Section 3 as amended.

HOLROYDE: I'll second that.

CHAIRMAN: Moved and seconded that Section 3 as amended be adopted.

RICHARDS: May I ask one question of the chairman of the committee. We've run into a situation where there's been rapidly increasing prices, or rather we did during the early stages of the war, and they put in a cost-of-living bonus to all employees of the Territory. Now, does this preclude any such bonus being applied to the governor?

CHAIRMAN: If you don't mind, I will not refer that question. That question's been answered twice. It would not.

ROBERTS: I was going to ask the Chair to read the section of the proposal as it's being put.

WHITE: This will not preclude further amendment to the second sentence of the paragraph?

CHAIRMAN: If the motion before the house carried, it would, without reconsideration. The floor is open for further amendment, I mean the section is open for further amendment.

WHITE: We've only dealt with the one sentence and we've been going at it sentence -- I would like to have the opportunity of raising a question in connection with Section 3, but in order to explain it, I really have got to talk more about Section 4 than I do about Section 3.

CHAIRMAN: With that understanding, I think it would be all right to proceed.

WHITE: Well, in the second section it provides that when the lieutenant governor succeeds to the office for the remainder of the term, the lieutenant governor shall receive that compensation of that office. Then if you go down into Section 4, they set forth the number of conditions under which the governor might not serve. He might not -- he may fail to qualify, he may be removed from office, death, resignation, inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office or absence from the State. My main concern has to do with that term "absence from the State" because I feel that in that particular paragraph the distinction should be made between temporary absence or authorized leave as against absence for any of the causes stated in the first part of that paragraph, because if you read on further, it goes on to say that in those instances the powers and duties devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

Now I have an amendment to make as far as Section 4 is concerned, but for the amendment to be any good, I'd have to amend Section 3 to delete that second sentence so that it comes down below. I was wondering whether we could defer action on Section 3 until we have disposed of Section 4. I so move.

SAKAKIHARA: I'll second that.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we defer action on Section 3 until action is complete on Section 4. Is there any discussion of that motion?

TAVARES: Before we do that, may I ask just one more point of information. I'd like to make it clear in my mind for the purposes of the Style Committee that regardless of where Delegate Ashford moved to place the amendment which was adopted, it is intended to apply both to the increase and to the decrease.

CHAIRMAN: Is that correct, Delegate Ashford?

ASHFORD: That is correct. And I was just discussing with the President the place where it should be put. It can very readily be shifted around by the Style Committee.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the motion to defer will say "aye." Opposed. Section 3 is deferred.

KAM: I move that Section 4 be tentatively agreed to.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any second?

HOLROYDE: I'll second that.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 4 be tentatively agreed to. Would you restrict that to the first paragraph?

KAM: First paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any discussion?

WHITE: I have an amendment to it that I'd like to have circulated to the committee.

CHAIRMAN: Would you like to read your amendment?

WHITE: I'll read it.

> Section 4. In case of the failure of the governor to qualify, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office by removal from office or otherwise, or his impeachment, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the remainder of the term or until the disability be removed, and he shall receive the compensation of that office during such period. When the governor is temporarily absent from the state on official business or on authorized leave, then the lieutenant governor shall perform all the functions of the governor within the state.
> During the temporary absence of the lieutenant governor from the state on official business or on authorized leave, the duties of such office may be assigned by the governor. In case of the failure of the lieutenant governor to qualify, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office by removal from office or otherwise, or his impeachment, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon such officers in such order of succession and in such manner as may be provided by law.

Now, that's to take care of the temporary absence and to provide that the lieutenant governor assumes the -- or carries on the functions of the governor's office but does not take over the powers, because if you talk about a chaotic situation, I can't imagine anything worse than the governor leaving the territory and once leaving the territory, the lieutenant governor taking over and with all the powers.

AKAU: Point of information. If the governor leaves the territory whether for personal reasons or business reasons it means --

CHAIRMAN: Are you discussing this amendment?

AKAU: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: I think it should be before the house before we discuss it.

AKAU: I'm sorry.

WHITE: Well, I'll move the adoption of this amendment.

APOLIONA: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that this amendment just read—you didn't read the whole amendment, however, did you—be adopted.

AKAU: The point I raise is this and perhaps others have been thinking about it and I'd like to get an answer. If the governor leaves the State, the State of Hawaii, whether for personal or business reasons, I don't see how you can tie the hands of the lieutenant governor by saying that he can't do this or he can't do that or he can do this. When the governor leaves, it seems to me the responsibilities for the State lie very definitely in the hands of the lieutenant governor and according to this first paragraph which has just been read, it does just the opposite. For example, if there are important decisions to be made, are we going to hang fire and wait until the governor returns?

CHAIRMAN: Would you like to answer that question, Delegate White?

WHITE: I would say that you'd have a pretty difficult situation if the governor was away on official business and you stripped him of all of his powers.

LOPER: I'd like to ask the maker of the motion if he really needs the words, "authorized leave"?

DELEGATE: Who authorized the leave?

WHITE: That's a good question. That was put in to take care of a situation where the governor might be required to go away for medical attention for a period of time or he might be away on vacation, and I would assume that "authorized leave" would probably do. I have no -- there's no pride as to the language. I was trying to get the idea.

TAVARES: May I ask a question? Some of the difficulty here evidently is due to the fact that we are trying to anticipate all possible situations. I'm wondering if the chairman of the committee would see any objection to letting the legislature provide by law for the situation under which the lieutenant governor would take over.

OKINO: Speaking for myself, I would have no objection but the proposal before you is the proposal of the committee.

I'd like to ask the mover of this amendment a question. Delegate White, in your amendment offered, you have the following clause appearing in the third sentence, "in case of the failure of the governor to qualify"; then we go to the third sentence, "or his impeachment, the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor for the remainder of the term." You mean, if the governor is impeached, do you mean by that reason alone, that the lieutenant governor shall serve for the remainder of the term despite the fact that the governor may be acquitted?

WHITE: It was intended that if he were removed from office as a result of the impeachment proceedings.

OKINO: But you haven't said "as a result of the impeachment proceedings." The term "impeachment" means one thing, the initiation of the proceedings by the legislature, likely in accordance with the article that will be provided by the Committee on Legislative Matters. I don't think that was the intent and I don't think the delegates would subscribe to that statement.

I have another question to ask. In the last sentence of your proposed amendment, paragraph one, you have used the expression, "temporarily absent." Now what does constitute "temporarily absent," ten days, three days, two months, three months, half a year?

WHITE: Well, I would say that any reasonable length of time. I don't know if you could ever tie it down to a day or a week or a month.

OKINO: I submit that if the language that has been proposed by the committee is adopted, that particular language has already been adjudicated by many of the courts in the states; that is the language which has been recommended by the Model -- that is the language which appears in the Model State Constitution, and in going over some of the cases I have found out that that particular language seems to have been adopted by most of the states.

Now there is this Nebraska case which was decided in 1942. It gives a very good explanation of temporary disability, permanent disability, and so forth. Permit me to read to you at this time.

> The constitutional provisions upon which the plaintiff relies for the allowance of his claim deal with the disabilities in case of the death, impeachment and notice thereof to the accused, failure to qualify, resignation, absence from the state or other disability of the governor. These are all disabilities within the meaning of the Constitution. Death, failure to qualify and resignation are permanent disabilities. Impeachment is a disability, at least until trial and acquittal, and permanent in the event of conviction. Absence from the state is a permanent disability if the governor abandons the office and becomes a non-resident. But mere temporary absence from the state for business or of a personal nature, not interfering with the interest of the public, does not vacate the office of the governor, and instate the lieutenant governor therein with all the powers, duties, and emoluments thereof. Absence from the state to entitle the lieutenant governor to the emoluments of the office of governor is an absence amounting to permanent disability, or to a temporary disability creating a vacancy, or to a disability which prevents the governor from holding the office.

Now, the language proposed by your committee is the language which seems to have been adopted by most of the states, and courts have already adjudicated on many of the expressions found in that particular clause. It is for that reason that the Committee feels that Section 4 as submitted in Committee Proposal No. 2 [sic] should be adopted. Now if we were to make amendments, then we shall be using language that has never been adjudicated heretofore.

TAVARES: I'm certainly concerned about the language of this amendment. I do not think Section 4 will cover the entire situation as proposed to be amended by the delegate from the fourth district. And if Section 4 as in the original proposal—the first paragraph—has been construed by the courts, I would think it would be safer to follow that unless we study the section - - the amendment a little more. I do not think it covers the situation fully.

HEEN: In the Model Constitution we have similar language, but there you have also the clause "or of his impeachment." Now, as stated by the chairman of the Executive Committee, that could be temporary disability if he's not convicted, and if he is acquitted the disability would be removed.

OKINO: That is correct, and you will note the insertion of that specific sentence appearing in the last sentence of Section 4, "In case of his impeachment, he shall not exercise his office until acquitted," which would mean that he would be under disability at the time when his impeachment proceeding is going on.

HEEN: I think that's correct.

HOLROYDE: I'd like to ask the chairman of the committee, where in the article have they allowed for temporary absence of the governor, to cover what was meant to be covered in the last sentence of the first paragraph of the amendment suggested by Delegate White?

OKINO: That appears in paragraph one of the proposed amendment, the last sentence beginning with - - which reads as follows: "When the governor is temporarily absent." Now the expression "temporary absence" is not provided for in Section 4 of the Committee Proposal 22. The mere fact that the adjective "temporary" is lacking is no reason why the court cannot construe that absence could be permanent or temporary. It is for that reason that I have read to you the Nebraska case.

HOLROYDE: But is there anywhere in your article that you've allowed for that temporary absence or made arrangements to have it taken care of?

OKINO: You mean a special compensation?

HOLROYDE: No, just to allow the lieutenant governor to take over, as is stated here in that sentence.

OKINO: Well, if the governor should leave the State of Hawaii for the State of California for a matter of one hour, during that period of one hour while the governor is away from the State of Hawaii, the lieutenant governor by reason of this clause takes over the duties of the governor. And as soon as the governor returns to the State of Hawaii, he is ipso facto, by that fact, reinvested with the functions of the governor.

WHITE: I'd like to ask Chairman Okino one question, too. What are the governor's powers when he goes away on business?

OKINO: The governor's powers will devolve upon the lieutenant governor.

WHITE: You mean he has no power then. He has no power to act for the state while he's away?

OKINO: That's correct.

WHITE: Well, I don't see how he could go away on official business and be stripped of his power. That's what concerns me.

OKINO: Official powers, but there's nothing to stop him to speak for the State of Hawaii, but it will not be official.

WHITE: Well, I think that that would be an impossible situation, if a governor has to go away, for instance to attend the Governors' Conference, and not be able to speak as the governor of Hawaii. That's the very thing that concerns me. I'm perfectly willing to admit that in sticking impeachment in there, I did - - it was wrong. The point I'm trying to clear up, and I'm not particularly worried about the language of the section otherwise, I'd like to have it cleared up as to what this Convention intends, that when the governor leaves the Territory that he's stripped of all of his powers even though he's on official duty?

HEEN: I think I can answer that. When the governor is out of the state, there's no official duty that he's required to perform outside of the state. If he attends a conference of governors, what is there for him to do officially for the State of Hawaii? All he does there is to talk and talk, and nothing else, and pass resolutions to make the State of Hawaii a territory again.

KING: Right at this moment the Governor of Hawaii is attending a governors' conference in the East somewhere and the Secretary of the Territory is the acting governor. And Governor Stainback has no power that he can exercise in Hawaii while he's absent there even though it's an official or semi-official occasion.

WHITE: I'd like to say in my opinion that's an entirely different situation. The man acts as acting governor and he carries on what duties he's instructed to carry on. Now, you say that you can't imagine anybody - - what if the governor had to go to Washington in connection with the question of public lands that the State is to take back. He would have no power to speak then for the State? There are many, many situations that will develop.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion of that point?

H. RICE: I get Delegate White's point and I would like to say that we've asked the Governor to go on to clear up the situation at Kahului Airport. It seems that the chairman of the House Committee on Expenditures is holding this transfer up. That's been approved, and we've asked the Governor to go along and see if he couldn't see the chairman of this committee. Well, he'll be acting in his official capacity, wouldn't he?

CHAIRMAN: Anyone care to answer that question? I believe he would be.

H. RICE: It's an official duty of his; he's well acquainted with the situation so far as Kahului is concerned.

OKINO: Delegate Heen, would you - -

HEEN: There's nothing to prevent the governor from expressing his views before any body of the Congress in the United States or before any administrative officer of the national government. He can go there and talk all he wants. But there will - - he will not perform any official duty though, over there so far as the State of Hawaii is concerned. All of those duties will have to be performed here by the lieutenant governor while he is absent.

H. RICE: I should say that he was the official representative of the Territory. Isn't that right?

HEEN: He is the official representative of the Territory and there's nothing to prevent him from talking all he wants, and as long as he wants, before any administrative body of the national government or before any committee of the Congress, nothing to prevent him from doing that at all.

ROBERTS: It seems to be quite clear that you don't strip the governor of his office when he leaves temporarily to attend to business which may or may not be in connection with the State. He's still the governor. He doesn't perform any functions within the state because he isn't in the state, and he turns over some of the functions - - or under the Constitution, they are turned over to the lieutenant governor, and he performs the functions of the governor within the state during the period for which the governor is absent. But the governor in his absence elsewhere is still the governor. He still speaks for the State. He just doesn't perform any functions within the State while he's gone. I think with that understanding, we don't have to worry about the language. The language in there, I think is fairly clear. Is that in accord with the intention of the committee?

WHITE: My concern is that it says, this paragraph says very clearly that "the powers and duties shall devolve upon the lieutenant governor." Now under that wording, it seems to me that the lieutenant governor while the governor was away for a short period of time could exercise power that might be contrary to what the governor wanted done. If you talk about having chaos with two different people in, I'd see how you'd just have a nightmare with this.

SAKAKIHARA: I rose to a point of information, and I would like to ask the delegate at large from the fourth district, Senator Heen. I understood from Senator Heen's remarks here a few minutes ago that the governor during his absence from within the state and during his tour of the mainland United States, as governor of Hawaii he may speak for the people. But, what I am concerned [about] is this. If that's what is his power, it limits the governor. If there should be an official act or deed for the governor to execute, will the governor have that right in the name of the State of Hawaii, to execute any documents?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, would you care to answer that question?

HEEN: You mean when the governor is outside of the state?

SAKAKIHARA: Correct.

HEEN: Whether or not he might sign some document, say in Washington, a compact, say, between the national government and the State of Hawaii?

SAKAKIHARA: Yes, sir.

HEEN: I think that the legislature may so empower him. There's nothing in this article that prevents that or prohibits any legislation along that line.

PORTEUS: May I point out that under the Organic Act the language there is similar to that adopted by the committee. "In case of the death, removal, resignation or disability of the governor or his absence from the territory, the secretary shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties of governor during such vacancy, disability or absence or until another governor is appointed and qualified." I don't think there's anybody in the territory who has suffered under misapprehension as to who the governor and the effective authority of this Territory was. When Governor Stainback is away, Secretary Long is the acting governor and has all the powers and duties. But when the governor leaves, he is recognized still as being the governor of this Territory. If he reaches an agreement with governors of other states, votes on matters, when he comes back here, this is his kuleana and he succeeds to all those powers and all those duties. This is the accustomed language. We've had it for fifty years in the Organic Act and I think it's worked.

WHITE: I'd just like to say, I think that that might be entirely satisfactory with an appointive officer, but supposing you do have the situation that was discussed this morning and have a governor of one party and a lieutenant governor of another party. And I thought that we were interested - - we were trying to provide a situation where we weren't going to have chaos.

OKINO: May I read further from this decision which was decided in 1942, it's rather recent.

CHAIRMAN: Please do.

OKINO: It's written on the same language. "A governor does not lose his office by stepping over the boundary line of the state for a purpose or for a time that does not disqualify him from holding the office. During such an interval, the lieutenant governor does not become governor. The Constitution does not provide for two governors at the same time. When the lieutenant governor performs duties in the executive office, during the temporary, non-disqualifying absence of the governor, he still acts as lieutenant governor and his compensation in such an interval is the lawful salary of that officer."

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion on this question? The motion before the house, if I may state it, is the adoption of the amendment presented by Delegate White.

WHITE: In the interest of saving a little time, as long as that's fully understood and will be interpreted that way, I'm perfectly willing to withdraw my amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment has been withdrawn.
I think the motion before the house now is for the adoption of the first paragraph, tentative adoption of the first paragraph of Section 4. Is there any further amendment?

HEEN: At the outset when we first took up the discussion of this particular section, there was some discussion about the amount of the salary, the minimum salary, whether or not $18,000 was too high and maybe not high enough. The expression made at that time seemed to indicate that it might be too high. I was just wondering whether that's a closed matter at the present time.

CHAIRMAN: I think that that matter was deferred until we finish with Section 4. That is in Section 3. We will return to that when we finish Section 4. That was the understanding on deferment.

HEEN: No, as I understand it, the deferment was for the purpose of further considering the last sentence of Section 3, as to when the lieutenant governor is to receive the compensation of the governor.

CHAIRMAN: That section is not before us at the moment, Delegate Heen. We were talking about Section 4, the first paragraph. The motion to defer included, as I recall, the proviso that upon completion of Section 4, we would return to Section 3.

HEEN: I apologize, Mr. Chairman, I'm a little confused.

CHAIRMAN: That's O. K. Thank you.

SAKAKIHARA: It was my understanding when I seconded the motion to defer, it was to enable Delegate White to discuss part of Section 4 with the last sentence of Section 3.

CHAIRMAN: Correct.

SAKAKIHARA: In view of the fact that the matter has been disposed of, I now move that the Committee of the Whole tentatively approve Section 3 as amended.

HOLROYDE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: I don't believe that the motion is in order unless the movant of the motion to consider Section 4 wants to withdraw or we want to reconsider our action on deferment. I believe that unless some other step is taken, the section before us is Section 4, first paragraph.

SAKAKIHARA: Then I move to reconsider our action on deferment.

LEE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we reconsider our action on deferment. All those in favor will say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

SAKAKIHARA: I move that Section 3 be tentatively approved, as amended.

KAM: I second that motion.

LEE: I came in late, but a point of information. Was the amendment offered by Marguerite Ashford adopted?

CHAIRMAN: It was.

LEE: So the only thing left really for discussion is the amount of the salary, whether it's too high or too low. Is that it?

CHAIRMAN: Correct. One of the things.

LEE: Well, I'd like to hear from others on that.

FONG: In the article on judiciary, I believe we did not insert in the article on judiciary the compensation of the judges although at that time we thought that the compensation of judges should be large enough so that the office may be attractive to men of ability and men of learning. Now here we have inserted in the Constitution a provision on what the minimum salary should be for the governor and the lieutenant governor. I was just wondering whether we should leave that to the legislature and have the legislature set it, instead of putting it in the Constitution and freezing the minimum salary of the two positions. Now, we have not done that for any of the other offices which we have provided for and the thought in my mind is that this section could be easily left out.

SAKAKIHARA: I beg to differ with the speaker. The remuneration of the governor and lieutenant governor should be -- the minimum of their salary should be fixed. The governor and the lieutenant governor, whoever they may be, must be elected by the people of the State of Hawaii. They at least should know at the time of their canvassing for the offices, should be in a position to know what remuneration to expect. On the other hand, in regards to the offices of the chief justice and the judges, they will be appointed. They will be -- they are not elected by the people; they are not required to make financial expenditure for their campaign expenses as the governor and the lieutenant governor are required to do. The pay of the judiciary could be provided by the State legislature, but I may add here that at the time of election of the State legislators the governor and the lieutenant governor must run for election. I submit at least in fairness to those who may offer themselves to the office, the governor and lieutenant governor should be in a position to know -- expect the renumeration from those offices, and it should be incorporated in the Constitution.

LEE: I'd like to have a point of information from the chairman of the committee, if he can reply. I notice that the President of the United States had his salary increased by $25,000. Can you inform this committee as to the salary of the President of the United States, how it's determined, whether or not there is a limitation in the Constitution of the United States concerning the salary of the President, or is it left to the determination of Congress?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, would you care to answer that?

OKINO: I can only express an opinion. I do not think there is a minimum compensation provided for in the Constitution of the United States for the President.

LEE: In other words, you doubt that there is any limitation in the Constitution of the United States.

Now, Mr. Okino, can you furnish this other information? How many states of the Union provide for a limitation of the governor's salary or the lieutenant governor's salary?

OKINO: Six states. Legislative Reference Manual, page 153. California, Georgia, Maine, Michigan, New York and Texas.

LEE: And what is the limitation in those six states?

OKINO: California, $25,000; Michigan, $22,500; Georgia, $12,000; New York, $25,000; and Texas, $12,000.

LEE: And the other remaining states do not have any limitation?

OKINO: Apparently other jurisdictions provide the governor's compensation by law.

CHAIRMAN: Are you through, Delegate Lee?

LEE: I notice here a notation concerning the President of the United States. For the information of the committee, "The President shall at stated times receive for his services a compensation which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected and he shall not receive within that period any other emoluments from the United States or any office." There's no specific provision other than a limitation on the salary's increase or decrease during the term for which he is elected.

HEEN: I note in the Manual the salary of the governor of Pennsylvania is $18,000 and that is prescribed by statute. I'm just wondering whether that is a minimum salary which may be -- or I suppose they can raise it or decrease it at any time if that's not within the term of the office.

OKINO: If you will refer to page 152 of the Manual beginning with California, where it is provided by the Constitution, $25,000, you will note the reference A, "Legislature may reduce." Then, we come to Georgia, $12,000, footnote E, "Legislature may change it after completion of the present term of office." Then, we come to the state of Maryland, $4,500, there is no note. We go to Michigan, $22,500, provided by the Constitution, note G, "Constitution specified $5,000, however, the legislature appropriated $2,500 additional for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947." Then we go --

HEEN: What page is that on, if I may ask, Mr. Chairman? What page?

OKINO: 153. You will find the states, length of office, maximum term, annual salary, salary fixed by either law or constitution, and on page 152 proper notes commenting upon the various provisions.

HEEN: What I have in mind is this. Take the great state of Pennsylvania with millions of inhabitants where the governor receives $18,000 a year. It seems to me that $18,000 a year for the governor of Hawaii, with only half a million people is a little out of line.

Now, besides the salary prescribed for the governor, I might call attention to this, that in the general appropriations bill passed in 1949 the governor was given an appropriation of $75,000 for current expenses in connection with his office and Washington Place, the mansion of the governor. My recollection is that in the past that amount allotted to the governor's Washington Place was in an amount around $5,000, which was spent for his help and buying groceries, I suppose, and a little light liquid refreshment, and that's all tax free. No rent to pay and those things, I think, are things of value. I don't doubt but when he has to make his tax return, he may have to state the value of -- the regular value of that place in order to make a proper return, income tax return.

PORTEUS: The subcommittee that worked on this did make a recommendation. They found that in 1947, 37 states provided a salary of $10,000 or less a year, and seven provided a salary between $10,000 and $12,000, so 44 of the states were under $12,000. Now that doesn't make it right. Some states go down as low as three, four, five and six thousand dollars a year. That's not right for the chief executive of a state.

Whether Pennyslvania chooses to pay $18,000 or not, I think what we ought to do is pay what the office is worth. I think the office is worth more than $18,000 a year. I think it's worth much more than that. I think the man guiding the destinies of the State of Hawaii is entitled to enough compensation so that he can -- does not have to be somebody that has a large private income and wishes the honor with the responsibility. I think compensation should be coupled with that responsibility and I think as a practical matter it's a good thing to set a limit, then the legislature cannot play around with that limit. A man knows that under this Constitution as governor he cannot get less than $18,000 a year. If the legislature, in its discretion, decides to provide a residence that's not in the Constitution, it may do so or not. The legislature decides to provide help, food or other perquisites. The legislature may do so. It's not forced to. But I think a man should be able to count on reasonable compensation.

As a matter of fact, there's another thing. We know that it's a little out of line to pay the heads of departments more than you pay a governor or as much. If you're going to pay a governor $10,000 a year or some such sum as that, how in the world can you get the best men possible in order to take the heads of these various important state departments. They're going to have to live. You're going to have to pay them an adequate salary. You may have to pay as much as $12,000 or $14,000 a year. After all this $18,000 has another effect. It's a certain guide in the establishment of pay for other positions, and I don't think we ought to get the governor in a position where if he's only getting $10,000 or $12,000 a year, the argument will then be used that you can't pay the heads of the departments more than that because the governor isn't getting far more. I think it's a fair enough provision, does no violence.

OKINO: I should like to submit this for your further consideration. The governor of our Territory of Hawaii has been receiving about $16,000 a year with perquisites. The governor of our Territory of Hawaii to this date was never elected by the people. But if the governor of the Territory of Hawaii is to be elected by the people, then it would seem that an additional $2,000 a year is not unreasonable. After all I think he would like a few dollars for his campaign fund.

FONG: In looking over this chart on page 153, we find that if our governor is paid not less than $18,000 a year, he will be the -- he will be tied for sixth place as far as salary is concerned. He will only be exceeded by the State of California, $25,000; by the State of Massachusetts, $20,000; by the State of Michigan, $22,500; New Jersey, $20,000; and New York, $25,000. He will be tied for sixth place with the governor of the State of Pennsylvania.

Now, in our talk before the Congressional Committee, we told the Congressional Committee that our Territory is quite a self-sustaining Territory, that we pay into the United States Treasury in taxes more than ten of the other states in the Union. Now if we pay taxes, if our taxes only exceed ten other states, and only five other state governors' salaries exceed us, how can we justify paying our governor $18,000, and remember that is only the minimum. Not less than $18,000. The salaries which I have quoted are the maximum salaries that are now paid the executives of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the State of California and the other states.

Now, it seems to me, although I know the point raised by the Secretary is well taken—that we should pay a man for what his responsibilities are—still we must go somewhat in conformity with the salaries paid by the other commonwealths, and in looking over this chart it seems to me that the salary of not less than $18,000 is far above the salary paid to the other governors. I will say that it would put our governor's salary way out of line with the chief executives of the other states. I don't know what salary should be paid. I know that he should be paid a good salary because I know his campaign is going to cost him $18,000, it'll cost him that if he really wants to make a good campaign, but we should at least adhere to what is being paid to the other executives.

ROBERTS: I'd like to address myself not to the amount of money—that to me is at the moment a little immaterial to the problem—but to the question as to what we should write into our Constitution. I believe that generally we ought not to write any specific figure in our Constitution with regard to the amount of money to be received by an officer of the State, whether he be the executive or the judiciary or the legislators. It seems to me that's a problem that could be determined as the problem arises and as the job is evaluated and the figures set.

I think, and I agree with the previous speakers that we ought to pay enough to attract the most competent and best qualified people for the job, whether it be $10,000 or $15,000 or $25,000. I'm not concerned as to whether we are sixth. I have no objection if we're first among all the states in paying a good executive a decent salary. I also think that we ought to pay more to our legislators so that we can attract individuals to the legislature. I think we ought to pay more to the judiciary. That problem however, it seems to me, is not a problem which we ought to wrestle with and write into our Constitution. I would suggest that we follow the procedure that we followed in the article on judiciary. Put out the general language that provision be made, but provide that they cannot be reduced unless other adjustments are made to all officers of the state.

Now the argument might be presented that a fellow has to run. Judiciary don't have to run, they get appointed. But what we're talking about basically is the first office. That's the only time when they don't know, but after that the executive knows what he is going to get because it's specified in the law. The legislature can't change it, and it seems to me that just for consideration of the first election, that we ought not to spell out the language.

I would therefore move that the following language be inserted in lieu of the existing Section 3:

> The governor and lieutenant governor shall receive for their services such compensation as may be provided by law, which shall not be diminished during their respective terms of office, unless by law applying in equal measure to all officers of the state.

That language is identical with the language of Section 6 in the article on the judiciary which we have already adopted. I'd like to move that as an amendment to Section 3.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any second?

APOLIONA: I second the motion.

AKAU: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that this section be amended.

CROSSLEY: I would like to ask the delegate from the fifth district, Delegate Fong, what is the present salary of the governor of the Territory of Hawaii?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Fong.

FONG: They tell me it's $16,000.

CROSSLEY: $16,000. How much of that is provided by the legislature?

FONG: I think the legislature provides around $6,000. Is that right? $6,000.

CROSSLEY: It used to be that the legislature provided about $6,000; they now provide only $1,000. But the thing I would like to point out is that the reason that the legislature provides that $1,000 is because the federal provision is only $15,000. It used to be only $10,000 and the legislature in their judgment thought the job was worth $16,000 and therefore they provided them with the other thousand. I don't recall that there was any big fight about providing that extra money. I do recall the discussion that they felt at the time that the compensation should be brought up to this level, and therefore raised the salary by providing the amount beyond that which had been granted by the federal government. In addition to that, they provided certain perquisites to go along with the job.

Now then, getting back to whether or not there should be a minimum. I was one of those in committee that thought the minimum should be somewhat less, but went along with the majority which I would support. I'm not concerned either with what place we have in the race for paying the governor the highest salary, whether we're first or forty-ninth. I do think, as other speakers have said, we should have a salary attached to the job that will attract the highest caliber of man possible to get for that job.

Also the thing that the committee couldn't find out in examining the records of salaries for these other people that we talk about was what perquisites they got, what else went along with their salary, and if we had the full story. In other words, if we had what is commonly known as take home pay, why then we might be able to make a comparison and say we are first, second, third or sixth or whatever we stand. But we do not have that information and I don't think that it is proper to make a comparison between something that we know as being all-inclusive and something that we do not know as being all-inclusive. I would support a provision that would permit a minimum salary. I think that should be guaranteed.

MIZUHA: I would like to add one more thought to the previous speaker, that the job should attract the highest caliber of men or women in the Territory regardless of background, so that even the poorest man or woman in this Territory will be able to run for that office and serve the people if he is qualified for the job.

KAM: Speaking of high caliber men, I notice that the State of New York with eight million people will lose a good man in Governor Dewey who will not seek re-election for $25,000, too small for him. Is that right, Porteus? So, I think we should pay a very high salary to the governor of the State of Hawaii.

PORTEUS: I'd like to answer that question. Governor Dewey was such a good governor that the people of the United States decided that he would best serve his country by continuing to be governor of the State of New York.

H. RICE: I think that by writing this into the Constitution you take these figures out of politics and, having been into politics more or less, I think that this is one time when we should not leave this open to political skulduggery, or something like that, and therefore I cannot agree with the delegate from the fourth district. I think we ought to write this in.

CHAIRMAN: The motion before the house at the present time is the adoption of the amendment read by Delegate Roberts. All those in favor of the motion to amend will say "aye." Opposed. The motion is lost.

The question before the house now is the adoption of Section 3 as amended by Delegate Ashford. All those in favor of the motion will say "aye." Opposed. I'm afraid it's carried.

HOLROYDE: I move we temporarily adopt the first paragraph of Section 4.

APOLIONA: I thought that motion was already put.

CHAIRMAN: Well, we deferred and went back. I think it's in order now.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we adopt paragraph one of Section 4 as written. All those in favor - -

J. TRASK: Point of order. I should think it'd be proper to move tentatively that Section 3 be approved as amended.

CHAIRMAN: We just did that.

J. TRASK: Did you?

CHAIRMAN: Yes, we did. All those in favor of the motion before the house to adopt Section 4 tentatively will say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

KAM: I move that paragraph two of Section 4 be tentatively approved - - agreed to.

HOLROYDE: I'll second that.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that paragraph two of Section 4 be tentatively approved. Any discussion?

SMITH: Before we go into that could we have a five minutes' recess for the clerks?

CHAIRMAN: I was thinking we could vote on this and then I would declare a recess. That's the last paragraph of Section 4. All those in favor of the motion will say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

The next section before the house is Section 5. Without objection, the Chair will declare a five minute recess, and I do mean five minutes.

(RECESS)

HOLROYDE: I move we adopt temporarily Section 5.

CHAIRMAN: The delegate is out of order. I haven't called the committee to order yet.

Committee of the Whole please come to order.

DELEGATE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Holroyde is recognized.

HOLROYDE: I move we adopt temporarily Section 5.

J. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we temporarily—did you say temporarily? —tentatively adopt Section 5. Is there any discussion? All those in favor of the motion will please say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

KAM: I move that Section 6 be tentatively agreed to.

H. RICE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 6 be tentatively agreed to.

HEEN: It has been limited to the one - - first paragraph. I understand that the movant has amended that to apply only to the first paragraph.

KAM: Yes, sir, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: I will correct the motion then, to apply to the first paragraph only. Any discussion? All those in favor of the motion will say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

KAM: I move that the second paragraph of Section 6 be tentatively agreed to.

J. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the second paragraph of Section 6 be tentatively agreed to. Any discussion?

HEEN: I think that that paragraph might be deleted because it's adequately covered in the article on the legislature.

ARASHIRO: I second the motion to delete.

HEEN: I think we did that last night with reference to the article on taxation and finance. We deleted a similar section.

ASHFORD: To delete it here and put it in the legislative article would follow the same procedure that is used in the Organic Act at the present time.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, did you make that in the form of a motion?

OKINO: Your Committee on Executive Powers and Functions has no objection to the deletion of that paragraph. It was inserted there purely to call it to the attention of the delegates when this committee proposal was submitted to the Convention. Now, the committee did not want the delegates to feel that your committee had completely forgotten about the veto power of the governor.

CHAIRMAN: I would like to ask the original movant, Delegate Kam, if he would like to amend his motion to read for the deletion rather than the adoption?

KAM: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Will the second accept that?

J. TRASK: I accept that.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the second paragraph of Section 6 be deleted. Any question? All those in favor say "aye." Opposed. Carried. The section is deleted.

RICHARDS: I now move that Section 6 pass tentatively as amended.

CROSSLEY: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 6 pass tentatively as amended.

ASHFORD: I move to amend - - oh, I've got Section 7.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor will say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

HOLROYDE: I move Section 7 be deleted. It is covered in the legislative article.

CHAIRMAN: Both paragraphs? It's been moved that Section 7 be deleted.

ROBERTS: This article, I gather, goes to the power of the governor.

CHAIRMAN: Are you speaking to the motion? The motion has not been seconded.

J. TRASK: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been seconded. Dr. Roberts.

ROBERTS: I gather we are dealing in the article with the powers of the governor. The provision, Section 7, the first sentence, the first part of it at least, provides that the governor may call a special session of the legislature. If you put it in the article on the legislative powers, that's not a power of the legislature. We're talking about the governor's power, the governor's power to call the legislature into special session. That's not a power of the legislature. I would suggest that we retain, but we retain only part of it.

HOLROYDE: I think the delegate has a good point. So I'll move that that section be - - I withdraw my first motion.

CHAIRMAN: There is nothing before the house.

KAM: I move that Section 7, first paragraph, be tentatively agreed to.

CROSSLEY: I'll second the motion, if it's for adoption.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the first paragraph of Section 7 be tentatively agreed to.

ASHFORD: I move to amend by inserting a period after the word "convened" in the fourth line of that section, and deleting the remainder of the section.

ARASHIRO: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and duly seconded that the paragraph be amended to read down to the word "convened" in the fourth line and the rest deleted. Is there any discussion of that amendment? All those in favor - -

ROBERTS: I'd like to speak in favor of the motion to amend, if it is understood that the article does not preclude the legislature from considering other matters than those which have been set forth by the governor in his statement. If that is understood and set forth in the report of the Committee of the Whole, I would support the amendment.

HEEN: The Committee on Legislative Powers has a provision which reads as follows: "Sessions of legislature. Regular sessions of the legislature shall be held annually. The governor may convene the legislature, or the Senate alone, in special session." And if this is to remain in part, at least in the article on the executive powers it should be only the first part of it: "The governor may call special sessions of the legislature by proclamation," period. But insert in that another clause, "or the Senate alone," so as to conform to what we have in the legislative article; so that that sentence will read: "The governor may call special sessions of the legislature, or the Senate alone, by proclamation."

CHAIRMAN: Is that a motion?

HEEN: I so move - -

MIZUHA: I second the motion.

HEEN: - - that the paragraph be amended to read as stated.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the paragraph be further amended.

TAVARES: It seems to me - -

CHAIRMAN: Just a second, Delegate Tavares. Delegate Roberts, were you through or did you want the floor again?

ROBERTS: We have not discussed anything with regard to the Senate in special session. I would suggest that we adopt the first part of the sentence: "The governor may call special sessions of the legislature by proclamation." Now if later on we adopt a section in the legislative article which provides for a special session of the Senate, the Style Committee can then in rearrangement put that section in the section dealing with the power of the governor, so that he could call not only a special session of the entire legislature but also a session of the Senate, if the Committee of the Whole agrees to such inclusion.

TAVARES: This is a report of a committee, and I have heard no argument in favor of Section 7. It seems to me before we vote to delete a substantial portion of Section 7, we ought hear from the members of the committee as to the reasons which led them to recommend this. I think we should consider both sides.

OKINO: Your committee members did consider this particular point which is now being debated before your Committee of the Whole. Some felt that in view of the fact that such provisions exist in the legislative article insofar as the Organic Act of Hawaii is concerned, the matter should be treated by the Legislative Committee, and yet others felt that this was clearly an executive power. For that reason, it was felt by the majority that the matter would be contained in this committee proposal subject to whatever amendment that may be offered by members serving on the Legislative Committee, and it is for that reason that I did not actively participate in the discussion now going on.

HEEN: Speaking for myself, and I think I speak for the other members of the Legislative Committee, we feel that in a special session called by the governor there should be no restriction as to what, or no limitation as to what might be considered by the legislature sitting in special session, and that is the way it is handled in the Organic Act at the present time. There is no limitation.

CHAIRMAN: What is the wish of the committee?

TAVARES: That is something that I think should be thought over rather carefully. I personally feel that governors have been deterred in the past from calling special sessions that were needed because they felt that if they did the legislators were of a mind to go all over the lot and not pay any attention to the business in hand. Now I'm not necessarily opposed to giving the legislature some leeway in going beyond the governor's call, but it seems to me this is a provision that will encourage the governor to call special sessions when needed, and I think we can take care of the legislature's rights by requiring a higher percentage, say, than 50 per cent concurrent resolution to allow special other matters to come in. In that way, you might have a special session that is limited to the business in hand and doesn't go off on horse racing and a lot of other things.

ARASHIRO: As suggested by the delegate from the fourth district, will not this then give the governor the advantage of vetoing all the bills in the regular session, and then from time to time call special sessions for specific items that he is interested in?

TAVARES: I'll answer that question. The answer is yes, but you can take care of it by saying that the legislature by concurrent resolution passed, say, by 60 per cent of the membership of each house, can take up any other matter than the governor provides. In that way you provide a little control instead of having these people that sometimes will copy a whole bunch of bills from the preceeding session just to make a record for introduction of bills, which has happened.

ASHFORD: I'm strongly in favor of the deletion, needless to say. I think that we should observe the division of the three great departments of government and should not be perpetually trying to confine the legislature.

FONG: We are trying here at every turn to really circumvent the power of the legislature. Every time we have something in which we should give free rein to the legislature, somebody jumps up and says that we don't seem to be trusting the legislature. Now your legislature is your legislative branch of the government. It is one of the three branches of government, and I think we should have enough respect and enough confidence in your legislature to know that they will do the right thing. In the special session which was called to deal with the strike, your legislature didn't run wild all over creation and introduce a lot of bills. They handled the strike situation, they handled a few bills according to their executive committee and they went home.

Now I think that our history in the territory for the past fifty years, as far as the legislators are concerned, is that our legislature has done a good job and we can depend upon the legislature to do what is right. Every time when we try to hamper their style and try to put obstacles in their way, we are really not showing the confidence that we should have in our men who will be elected by the people.

HEEN: I know this, that when the special session was called last year to deal with the strike situation, it was called primarily for that purpose, and most of the time was devoted in respect to that matter. Then after the great part of that work was completed we found out that there were many statutes that were passed at the regular session that should have been amended, and through a screening committee these additional bills were allowed to be introduced in order to correct these errors, these very glaring errors in some cases. And they proceeded along that line.

I think that the legislature can be trusted not to go hog wild in the matter of dealing with legislative measures in a special session. In the article on legislative matters, special sessions will be limited to a period of thirty days with the right on the part of the governor to extend that period for another thirty days, Sundays and holidays excluded.

HAYES: I just wanted to remind, following Delegate Fong and Delegate Heen, to remind the rest of the delegates here that the same legislature was also sued.

PORTEUS: I think this is a subject that may well be left for discussion when we hit the legislative article. I believe that there might be some limitation so that one person can't throw a number of bills into the hopper and force the others to either turn them down, ignore them, or otherwise dispose of them. So some limitation may be appropriate, but I think when we come to the legislative article, that's the time to deal with it.

CHAIRMAN: I'd like to remind the committee that the motion that's before us now is for the amendment of Section 7.

H. RICE: Does the amendment - - Mr. Chairman, does that state that "The governor may call special sessions of the legislature by proclamation," period?

CHAIRMAN: The last amendment that was made was made by Delegate Heen.

H. RICE: Is that right?

CHAIRMAN: His amendment was to make it read as the legislative provision in the legislative committee proposal. Would you care to read that again, Delegate Heen?

HEEN: My motion was to amend that section so that the same will read: "The governor may call special sessions of the legislature, or the Senate alone, by proclamation."

APOLIONA: Was that amendment seconded?

CHAIRMAN: I believe it was.

HEEN: I'm not sure whether it was.

APOLIONA: If not, I'd like to ask the delegate from the fourth district a question.

DOI: I seconded the motion. At this time I withdraw my second.

CHAIRMAN: The motion is not before the house. The motion before the house at the present time - -

KING: A point of order, Mr. Chairman. Miss Ashford, Delegate Ashford made a proposed amendment.

CHAIRMAN: That's correct.

KING: Delegate Heen's is an amendment to an amendment.

CHAIRMAN: That's right.

KING: Miss Ashford was trying to get your recognition to withdraw her amendment, which would leave Delegate Heen's amendment pending.

CHAIRMAN: Now, at the present - -

ASHFORD: May I be heard for that purpose? I don't know why the Senate should be called in alone, but I'm perfectly willing to accept the amendment to my motion, making it the original motion.

HEEN: I can explain that, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Just a second. The Chair understands now that Delegate Ashford has withdrawn her amendment. The amendment you accepted has not been seconded.

HOLROYDE: I will second that, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Okay, it has been seconded.

APOLIONA: Now can I ask the delegate from the fourth a question - - I mean fourth district a question. What does he mean by calling the Senate into special session, why the Senate?

HEEN: Because the session - - I mean the Senate has the power to confirm appointments, acting alone, and that's the only purpose for which the Senate may be called in special session sitting alone. That language appears in the Organic Act, and we just followed that Act. And we have provided in various places here that the governor shall have power to appoint judges, justices, with the confirmation of the Senate, and the present article of the executive department provides for the appointment of departmental heads by the governor, subject to the confirmation by the Senate. Therefore, the Senate can be called into session, sitting alone for that purpose, and that's the only purpose. That's why it's been inserted in the article on legislative functions.

APOLIONA: Can I ask another question of the delegate?

CHAIRMAN: I believe you may.

APOLIONA: You mean to tell me that every time the governor makes an appointment, he has to call the Senate into special session?

HEEN: Not necessarily because they may be treated at a regular session when the Senate is sitting and it may be done at a special session when a Senate is sitting. And if we adopt the matter of a budget session, the matter of appointment subject to confirmation of the Senate may be considered at that time also.

TAVARES: In order to bring my suggestion to a vote, because I don't think it's been fully considered yet—I want to give control to the majority of the legislature in special session—I, therefore, move to amend the amendment by accepting Delegate Heen's amendment, deleting Miss Ashford's - - Delegate Ashford's amendment, changing the period to a comma at the end of the first paragraph following the word "session," and adding the following words: "unless authorized by concurrent resolution adopted by a majority of each house of the legislature." That will allow the legislature by a majority of each house to control the type of bills that will come in during the special session and will make for economy of operation of the legislature.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Tavares, as I understand your motion, it would include the present first paragraph of Section 7. Delegate Tavares, you would include the whole of the first paragraph of Section 7?

TAVARES: Yes, Mr. Chairman, with Delegate Heen's amendment and with that addition which would then authorize a majority of each house of the legislature to override the governor's limiting of the session on any particular issue.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen's amendment deletes most of that paragraph and substitutes a short sentence therefor.

HEEN: That's correct. It ends with the word "proclamation."

TAVARES: My amendment reinstates it, Mr. Chairman, but allows the reference to the Senate being called in alone to remain in.

CHAIRMAN: I would ask Delegate Tavares to read his amended paragraph.

LEE: There's nothing before the committee on that amendment. It hasn't been seconded, and furthermore I believe that we should take a vote on this amendment proposed by Delegate Heen, and then after the thing is adopted or rejected, if Delegate Tavares seeks to further amend, I think we can get to the point.

DELEGATES: Question.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the amendment to paragraph one of Section 7 as proposed by Delegate Heen will say "aye." Opposed. The ayes have it.

WOOLAWAY: Now is it in order to second Delegate Tavares' motion then?

CHAIRMAN: You may.

WOOLAWAY: I do second.

CHAIRMAN: You are recognized.

WOOLAWAY: I'll sit down after I've seconded.

TAVARES: I now renew my motion, and I understand the delegate from Maui has seconded it.

CHAIRMAN: Correct. The motion before us now is the --

FONG: I wish to speak against the amendment. As I said, we should have enough faith in our legislators to know that they will do the right thing. The history of our legislation has shown that the legislators have done the right thing when they were called into special session. In all the special sessions that I have sat in your legislators had gone about their work and have done the work that they were called in specifically to do and they have not wandered all over the place except just to do the thing that they thought was the right thing to do.

Now I think this unnecessary limitation upon the powers of the legislators is an infringement upon their rights. The governor is representing the executive branch of the government. The legislators are representing the legislative branch of government. I think if the governor is going to call the session, he should leave it up to the legislators to decide as to what they want to do. I think we have enough men and women in our legislature who are able to do the right thing. And I think this amendment is an unnecessary restriction upon the right of your legislators.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Tavares, would you like to read your amendment throughout, please.

TAVARES: My amendment would cause Section 7 to read as follows:

> The governor may call special sessions of the legislature or of the Senate alone by proclamation, and shall state to both houses when organized the purpose for which they have been convened, and the legislature shall transact no legislative business except that for which they were especially convened and such other legislative business as the governor may call to the attention of the legislature while in session, unless authorized by concurrent resolution adopted by a majority of each house of the legislature.

HOLROYDE: I would like to point out that this is the executive article that we're dealing with, and now we are trying to limit the legislature and what they do in the executive article. I think any amendments or any restrictions on the legislature should be in the legislative article and not in the executive article.

ARASHIRO: If there should be any restrictions as far as the legislature, I think the legislature can take care of themself instead of we having that article again in the executive section.

DELEGATES: Question.

CHAIRMAN: Question. All those in favor of Delegate Tavares' amendment to the amended paragraph will say "aye." Opposed. The amendment is lost.

The question before the house now is adoption of the first paragraph as amended.

SAKAKIHARA: I now move that Section 7 as amended be tentatively approved.

CHAIRMAN: Are you speaking to the first paragraph alone?

SAKAKIHARA: That's right.

WOOLAWAY: I'll second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the first paragraph of Section 7 as amended be adopted tentatively.

ARASHIRO: Will that paragraph be reread again so --

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Heen, would you please read your amendment, please.

HEEN: That section will read as follows:

> The governor may call special sessions of the legislature, or the Senate alone, by proclamation.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the motion will say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

DOI: I move to delete the second paragraph of Section 7.

SAKAKIHARA: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that second paragraph of Section 7 be deleted. Is there any discussion?

H. RICE: I think they are making a mistake if they delete this. In '31 or '32, we had a couple of special sessions, didn't we, and if we hadn't had this in the Organic Act, why we would have had to go out and come in. I think the executive should have this power to extend the sessions.

SAKAKIHARA: This section is taken care of by the Committee on Legislative Functions and Powers.

DOI: I would like to speak in favor of the motion. I think this paragraph here goes to the basis of the legislative power and that is the length of time the legislature deems wise they need to consider certain problems. I think the best judge to determine how much time they need is the body deliberating on the question. In this case it happens to be the legislature. I therefore believe that this paragraph should be deleted.

HEEN: This problem is adequately treated in the article on legislative powers and functions. Among other things it provides, "General sessions shall be limited to a period of 60 days and budget sessions and special sessions shall be limited to a period of 30 days, but the governor may extend any session for not more than 30 days. Sundays and holidays shall be excluded in computing the number of days of any session." So it's adequately taken care of in the article on legislative powers and functions.

ROBERTS: I'd like to speak against deleting of this section at this time. I think that the purpose of the deletion would be to prevent the governor—we're dealing now about the executive functions article—to extend any regular or special session. That is on the assumption that there will be a limitation of time in the article dealing with the legislature. Such a proposal is now in the section. If it carries in there for limitations of the sessions, then it seems to me you've got to provide the power of the governor to extend. If, however, in the article dealing with the legislature, we put no limits on the legislature and its sessions, then it seems to me the Committee on Style can very well present that question and we could delete it. But until such time as we've acted on the legislative article, it seems to me if we delete it now, we will be unable, if the other article goes through, to give the executive the power to extend sessions, if we have a limitation. If we don't have a limitation, then this article could very well go out. But we haven't established that, yet.

KING: I agree with the last speaker that this paragraph should not be deleted at this time. Delegate Heen has quoted from a report that has not yet been submitted to the Convention nor adopted. And any duplication or repetition can be cleared by the Committee on Style. So I think it would be a mistake to delete this paragraph submitted by the Committee on Executive Powers which is now before the committee.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion on the question?

HEEN: As I have stated, that will be reported out in that manner so far as duration of sessions are concerned -- is concerned, and I don't for a moment think that the Convention is going to throw that provision out. If this provision is to remain, it might read this way, "The governor shall have power to extend any regular, budget or special session of the legislature as provided in this Constitution." It might read that way, and the Style Committee can then throw it out later as being unnecessary.

CHAIRMAN: Any further questions? All those in favor of the motion to delete will say "aye." All those opposed, "no." The noes have it.

HEEN: All right, then I move an amendment to that paragraph, so that the same will read as follows: "The governor shall have power to extend any regular, budget or special session of the legislature as provided in this Constitution." I move the adoption of that amendment.

H. RICE: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: A further amendment to this section has been made and adopted -- moved and adopted [sic]. Any discussion? All those in favor of the amendment will say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

CROSSLEY: I move the adoption of the paragraph as amended.

APOLIONA: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the paragraph as amended be adopted. All those in favor will say "aye." Opposed.

AKAU: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

AKAU: The point of order is regarding the amendments that are beginning to come to our desks. I wonder if it would be in order to ask the people who are writing the amendments to kindly sign their names because then we can refer to them, then we'll know that that was such and such amendment, instead of fingering through about four or five amendments and we don't know which one we're talking about.

CHAIRMAN: I believe the delegates have heard the request.

There's nothing before the house now except the paragraph -- Section 7 which has not been adopted.

HOLROYDE: I move that Section 7 be adopted as amended.

CROSSLEY: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 7 as amended be adopted in intent. All those in favor will say "aye." Opposed, "no." Carried.

CROSSLEY: I now move the adoption of Section 8.

SMITH: I'll second that.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that Section 8 be adopted.

ASHFORD: Did we cut out the reference to treason in the Bill of Rights, and where would be the provision for treason?

FUKUSHIMA: In the Bill of Rights, we did cut it out, yes, but still by statute, we may have the crime of treason.

OKINO: In reply to the question interposed by Delegate Ashford, I should like to direct your attention to the report filed by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole relating to Bill of Rights. It pertains to Section 17. I'm sorry, it pertains to Section 18 of the proposal submitted by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole. The original section read as follows: "Section 18. Treason against the State shall consist only in levying war against the same, or in adhering to the enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or in confession in open court."

Then the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole. [Report No. 5]

> This section is derived from Section 3 of Article III of the Federal Constitution, which was adopted at a time when there was fresh in the memories of the revolting colonists the fact that under the then or recent laws of England there were seventeen types of treason punishable by death in a "very solemn and terrible way," and when the modern scientific methods of crime detection and proof, other than eye-witness testimony—such as photography, fingerprinting, handwriting analysis, microscopic and chemical analyses, fluoroscopic examinations, etc., —were unknown. Actually such a provision is unnecessary because it defines only one crime, leaving to the legislature in any event the power to define other crimes, including other capital offenses. Deletion of the section, therefore, would actually strengthen the power of the legislature, or at least render it free from any uncertainty, to deal in any manner commensurate with the needs for protection against modern espionage, fifth column activities . . . and so forth.

Now, in this particular section, you will note that that is mentioned as an exception, that the governor shall not have the right to grant pardon or reprieve if a person is found guilty of the offense of treason. And since the matter is to be left with the legislature, I see no reason why any specific provision covering the same be included specifically in this Constitution.

TAVARES: I think this section raises some very serious problems. I realize that treason is a very serious offense and so is impeachment. But are we to have two crimes that nobody can ever punish [sic] forever and ever and ever? This is what this does. I see no other provision in here for the legislature or anybody else to give relief from these things. And I think therefore that unless you do take care of it, it will be better to leave it to the governor.

Secondly, treason can be defined as a lot of other acts just by giving it a name, and you make it impossible to get a pardon. In other words, a man who is convicted of treason is forever afterward disqualified from holding office, from voting, from having all the other general rights that go with citizen - - with the rights of citizenship when a man is not convicted of crime. I think that is probably going much further than the committee intended. Other constitutions which have that have a provision allowing specifically for some type of reprieve or pardon or relief from some other party than the governor in those particular cases.

There is one more problem that hasn't been covered but I think it can be covered by including it in the report of this Committee of the Whole, and that is, there is very grave doubt whether, unless you make it clear otherwise, the governor's power to pardon extends to misdemeanors created by ordinances of the counties. In this territory, traditionally, the governor has assumed the power to pardon against misdemeanors created by ordinance. The majority rule of the states is that that is not included ordinarily in the governor's pardoning power. It only includes offenses against the state under state law. I believe that we should in our report make it clear that this includes pardoning against offenses under ordinances. And this is no joke because we have one attorney general who has actually ruled that the governor has no power to pardon misdemeanors created by ordinances. I disagree with that ruling but it is a ruling; it is supported by the weight of authority in the states whose history, of course, I believe is different from ours. And for that reason I think that our report should state that this includes the power to pardon against offenses created by county or ordinances of municipal sub-divisions or counties.

CHAIRMAN: The report shall so state.

HEEN: Some reference was made that this matter might be taken care of by legislation. The only legislation contemplated here is one relating to the manner of applying for reprieve or pardon. Now I think that the term "for all offenses" would cover any offense at all, whether created by ordinance or created by legislative enactment. They are all offenses no matter by whom prescribed. All these cases for the violation of ordinances, the case is one of the Territory against the defendant, and it's not the city and county or county against the defendant. It's always brought in the name of the Territory. Now, so much for that.

I am in accord with the views expressed by the last speaker, that a person convicted of treason or convicted upon impeachment should at some time have the right to be pardoned or reprieved. I, therefore, move that the words in the third line "except treason and cases of impeachment" be deleted. You will note, I am leaving the comma after "impeachment," so that that section will read: "The governor may grant reprieves and pardons after conviction for all offenses, subject to regulation by law as to the manner of applying for the same."

RICHARDS: Second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the words "except treason and cases of impeachment" be deleted from Section 8. Is there any discussion?

FONG: I have a question. There are some jurisdictions like the State of California in which a person after being convicted and after having served his time or having been paroled for a certain time can go before the judge and have his crime wiped out. Now, I would like to ask this question. Will this section prohibit a law to that effect?

TAVARES: It's my opinion, rather hastily formed, that such a law would probably be unconstitutional because it would be considered as infringing on the pardoning power, if such a law were passed.

FONG: In the State of California there is such a law.

TAVARES: Well, it must be under a special constitutional provision, I think, of the Constitution of California, which is much longer than ours.

FONG: I believe that - - just posing a thought here, that it would probably be a good thing if we don't leave this pardoning power entirely in the hands of the governor. There are many cases in which a man after having served his time in prison should have the right of every private citizen, and I think he should have the right of going before a court and having himself absolved from all the crimes that he has committed, only to a certain extent. Now, I believe that this section should not be written so that the legislature in its discretion may not be able to grant to persons of this character, for violation of minor offenses, the right of going before the court and, after having served his time and after having paid his price to society and after rehabilitating himself, that he may not be able to restore himself to the good graces of society.

SAKAKIHARA: I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Why was the word "commutation" left out from that provision?

OKINO: Heretofore, the matter of commutation was a statutory matter. I will direct your attention to Section 3910, Revised Laws of Hawaii, with reference to commutation of misdemeanors; Section 3950 with reference to the subject matter of commutation of felonies. That having been statutory matter right along and the matter of commutation having been deleted - - not included in our Organic Act, we thought it would be safer to include in our Constitution merely reprieves and pardons, deleting commutation.

HEEN: May I answer that, also? Commutation, as I understand it, is the power on the part of the governor to reduce the term of sentence or to reduce the fine or to eliminate the fine altogether. That is included in the power to grant pardons. It is something less than a pardon, but it's included in the power to grant a pardon.

SAKAKIHARA: I would like to make sure that that power is vested in the governor under the terms of Section 8. I therefore would like to amend it by placing a comma after "reprieves" and insert the word "commutations."

ROBERTS: I'll second that.

HEEN: Point of order. It seems to me there is a motion pending now to amend.

CHAIRMAN: Correct.

HEEN: That was proposed by myself. Why not get rid of that and then this other matter can be brought up.

CHAIRMAN: Would you place this in abeyance, Delegate Sakakihara, until we dispose of the present motion?

DELEGATE: What is the amendment?

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion?

DELEGATE: What is the amendment?

CHAIRMAN: The amendment before the house at the present time would delete the words "except treason and cases of impeachments." No further discussion? All those in favor of the motion will say "aye." Opposed. The amendment was carried.

SAKAKIHARA: I would like to amend by inserting a comma after "reprieves," and inserting the word "commutation."

YAMAMOTO: I'll second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded - -

OKINO: I believe the committee, your Committee on Executive Powers and Functions would have no objection to including that word "commutation," firstly, to clarify whether or not the term "commutation" or the effect of that term "commutation" is included in the word "pardon"; secondly, it has always been treated in my opinion as a statutory matter; but if the delegates feel at this time that it should be given a constitutional status, then it may properly be included herein.

TAVARES: If the word "commutation" is not included in the word "pardon," the governor's been granting unconstitutional commutations for lo these 30 or 40 years. There's nothing clearer in my mind than that the word "pardon" includes pro tanto the right to give a partial pardon, and that's all a commutation is, a partial pardon.

SAKAKIHARA: Assuming that the governor of the Territory for the last 30 years has granted commutations without that being spelled out in the Hawaiian Organic Act, I do say that it is a safeguard so that there will be no misunderstanding in the future that the State Constitution of Hawaii does provide a power of commutation to the Governor.

LEE: I agree with the speaker before the last, that the commutation is included in the general term "pardon." I believe in order to satisfy, however, the distinguished delegate from Hawaii that the committee report of the Whole might state that the intent of the committee and accepted fact by the committee that pardons do include commutation, would be sufficient. I don't think we should keep on adding words that are already included in the generic term.

SAKAKIHARA: In reply to the gentleman from the fourth district, I say this, that under the Model State Constitution I find the language written as follows: "Executive clemency. The governor shall have power to grant reprieves, commutations and pardons after conviction."

SHIMAMURA: I may also point out that some of the state constitutions also include the word "commutations," Arizona and some others.

FONG: We should remember that we are writing the Constitution for the people. We are not writing a Constitution for lawyers, and if we want to make it specific and explicit, let's put it in the Constitution. Don't say, "Well, let's put it in the report," and you will never find a layman looking at the report. He will read the Constitution. He's going to be guided by what the Constitution tells him. And if we can make it explicit in the Constitution, let us make it. Don't say, "Well, let's put it in the report." We are by all means writing a Constitution for the people and not for lawyers.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion on this point?

LEE: In that case, I believe we should write the whole Revised Laws into the Constitution.

TAVARES: Yes, and let's write "due process of law" then in simple terms so the layman can understand it.

FONG: What is the harm then - - what is the harm in adding the word "commutation" there instead of putting it in the report and using another sentence or ten sentences to explain what "commutation" is?

TAVARES: We have been using the Federal Constitution as a model here in many respects, particularly the Bill of Rights. The President has been granting commutations for a long time, too, and all the power he has in the Constitution is in these words, "He shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States except in cases of impeachment." Nothing said about commutations there.

HEEN: I think the present language of the article in this connection is an improvement not only following the Model Constitution, but also the Constitution of Arizona.

FUKUSHIMA: If the word "commutation" is included in the word "pardon" I believe we have a Committee on Style to fix that up. It's not a matter of substance, it's a matter of form.

CHAIRMAN: I think we can vote on the amendment. The amendment is to include the word "commutation" after "reprieves." All those in favor will say "aye." Opposed. The Chair is in doubt. I'll ask for a standing vote. All those in favor of the amendment will please stand. All those opposed. The amendment is carried by a vote of 29 to 21.

HOLROYDE: I move Section 8 be adopted as amended.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that Section 8 as amended be adopted.

SHIMAMURA: May I inquire the reason for the insertion of the words "after conviction" in the second line?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino.

OKINO: Beg your pardon, Mr. Chairman?

CHAIRMAN: The question was the reason for the words "after conviction" in the second line.

OKINO: Well, that always has been the classical expression followed by most all of the states.

ASHFORD: May I answer that?

CHAIRMAN: You may.

ASHFORD: Perhaps some of the delegates here, my friend Mr. Anthony being absent, who claims to be a Jeffersonian Democrat, Jefferson in the Aaron Burr conspiracy pardoned the witnesses before they were even indicted, so they could be witnesses against Aaron Burr.

CHAIRMAN: Any further questions?

TAVARES: I think that it should be explained, what we're getting into. Actually, the present Organic Act does not have such a requirement. This has actually happened. Maybe we should consider it, maybe it's good, maybe it's bad, but a witness is about to claim privilege against self-incrimination and you need him to get a conviction. In order to eliminate that privilege, you give him a pardon, then he can testify and he cannot claim privilege against self-incrimination If you put this in, you remove the power the governor now has to eliminate that ground of refusing to testify against some one else.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion?

AKAU: Does the -- do the words "as to the manner of applying the same" in Section 8 refer to the regulation by law? What does it refer to, and is it actually necessary to put it in there?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino.

OKINO: I believe it is necessary to put it in so that the legislature may implement the constitutional provision herein provided.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no further discussion, we'll vote on the question.

FUKUSHIMA: I move an amendment at this time, by striking the comma after "pardon" and by deleting the words "after conviction."

SHIMAMURA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the words "after conviction" in the second line including the comma preceding shall be stricken. Any discussion? All those in favor of the motion to amend will say "aye." Opposed.

HEEN: I'd like to have some discussion on that as to what the purpose is.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair believes that the motion was carried. If you want to rise to a point of information and ask the movant the purpose and if there is any further discussion, we'll have to move to reconsider.

HEEN: That's correct. I move for reconsideration.

SAKAKIHARA: I second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we reconsider the amendment just passed. All in favor say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

The amendment is open for discussion. Delegate Fukushima, do you wish to explain the amendment? Delegate Tavares.

TAVARES: I would like to explain again. This power has been enjoyed by the Governor of Hawaii for fifty years, and it is also enjoyed by the President of the United States. There may have been a few abuses, but they have been so few that evidently no scandal has ever been raised to my knowledge about such abuse.

The situation is this. Under our Bill of Rights, there is a right of a person to claim privilege against self-incrimination, and therefore, refuse to testify. There are situations where, in order to convict one criminal, perhaps the more guilty one or the ring leader, it is necessary to have the testimony of his accomplices or some of his partners in crime or some of the lesser fry. By giving a pardon in advance before such a person is even tried or convicted, the governor can eliminate the right of such person to refuse to testify on the ground of privilege against self-incrimination because such a pardon then makes it impossible to prosecute him for the crime. You thereby are able to compel the witness to testify, whether he likes it or not, against his accomplices or against his partners in crime. That power has actually been used and is needed sometimes, and I think it would be rather serious to eliminate that power, particularly since we have had it for fifty years, and as far as I know it hasn't been abused.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion?

OKINO: I should like to ask the speaker this question. Isn't the same power, Delegate Tavares, utilized by or in the prosecutor as a matter of common law?

TAVARES: No. The prosecutor can make no binding promise not to prosecute. He can give this -- they call this -- it's called immunity, but in my opinion no prosecutor can give immunity. All he can do is refrain to prosecute somebody, and if he makes a promise not to prosecute, and then he does prosecute, I don't believe that the courts can prevent such a prosecution.

ASHFORD: I would like to speak against the amendment. The gentleman from the fourth has said that we have no instance of abuse of it. I thought that I had given an instance of the most outrageous abuse of it. A man of contemptible reputation was pardoned beforehand so he could cook up a story against the President's great rival. There's always been a very considerable question as to whether Aaron Burr was guilty or not. But this pardoning power before even a man was charged was used to build up that case against Aaron Burr, and it could be used to build up a case against any one of us.

TAVARES: One more statement and I'll subside, Mr. Chairman. If you eliminate this power to pardon before conviction, you make it possible for every gang, every crime syndicate, every member of a crime gang to refuse to testify, and there's nothing you can do about it, and in that way they can cover up their crime. I think you are playing into their hands if you take away this power.

ROBERTS: Many of the state constitutions make it very specific that the governor may grant reprieves, commutations and pardons, the language that we have adopted, but they also provide that it be after conviction. It seems to me you don't pardon a person until he is proven guilty. There's nothing to pardon him for if he hasn't been proven guilty. Now there is a problem in terms of prosecution. Now, it seems to me if the governor can convince an individual to testify against somebody else to assist the state, he can give his word to that individual that he will grant him a pardon if he is prosecuted and if he is found guilty. I don't see any need to delete that section. It seems to me that before you grant a pardon that a person has to be proven guilty.

FUKUSHIMA: Delegate Roberts' statement and Delegate Okino's statement that a prosecutor may give a pardon, which is not true, and Delegate Roberts who states that the governor may later give a pardon after conviction presupposes that the governor will live. Supposing the governor makes that promise and he dies, and another governor comes in and doesn't keep his promise? What do you have? The same thing can be said of the prosecutor.

DOI: I would like to also state my opinion on the question of whether the prosecutor can in a way give immunity. My answer is yes, I think he can go to court and make a statement as a matter of record and come to an agreement with the court and the defendant that he will not prosecute because he wants to prosecute the most serious offender than as regards the less serious offender. Because he needs him as a witness, he will not prosecute. I think the court will bind him to that word.

HEEN: That statement is not correct, that a prosecuting officer may act in such a way as to grant a pardon. Now, if a prosecuting officer, say elected to office, grants in a way some immunity to an individual from prosecution, when he runs for office and is not reelected, the new prosecuting officer may bring that same individual up before the court for prosecution so long as it is still within the statute of limitations.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion? The amendment before the house is for the elimination of the words "after conviction."

SAKAKIHARA: I rise to a point of information. Will the Chair kindly restate the amendment as it is?

CHAIRMAN: The amendment which is to be amended?

SAKAKIHARA: Amendment, yes.

CHAIRMAN: "The governor may grant reprieves, commutations and pardons after conviction for all offenses subject to regulation by law as to the manner of applying for the same." The amendment on that amendment is the deletion of the words "after conviction."

LEE: If the lawyers are confused on this question, it would seem to me that the laymen in this Convention should be more confused.

LARSEN: Not so, sir, not so.

LEE: And some of my distinguished colleagues in the back were asking me about this matter and asking me how I was going to vote. I'm not sure how I'm going to vote. I have listened to Delegate Ashford's statements and find no contradiction thereto. Based upon that statement, I can't very well vote for the deletion because to the ordinary mind, the only time a pardon comes into effect is when a man has been accused of crime, charged with crime, and convicted with crime. Now, here we are to give an unlimited power to the governor to say to a man who has possibly not even been accused of crime, not even been charged of crime, and not even convicted of crime, a pardon. A pardon for what? And I can see a possible offense which a person might be pardoned for and yet, for that same offense, there may be other crimes committed which the pardon may not include, and you might run into a lot of contradictions here for a purpose which was merely to encourage a reluctant witness to testify. I am trying to weigh the advantages of that effect to the amendment sought to be introduced here, so I would like to defer action, and I so move that action be deferred on this matter until the end of the calendar.

A. TRASK: I'd like to say, one of our axioms here I'm sure in trying to draft this convenant called the Constitution is to follow as nearly - - as far as possible our Organic Act. Now referring to Section 66 under the executive power we have this expression referring to the governor, "may grant pardons or reprieves for offenses." The words "after conviction" are not in our basic Organic Act.

Now, let's get down specifically to the point at hand. Many of us are concerned about Delegate Kageyama's case. To me, this word "after conviction" has direct reference to that situation.

CHAIRMAN: Speak more closely into the mike, please.

A. TRASK: Many of us suspect that Governor Stainback had much to do about whether or not Kageyama would testify and all that resulting situation which compelled his resignation from this body. Obviously it occurs to anybody that if there was any such pact, the governor at this date is authorized under the present existing law to go ahead and pardon Kageyama for whatever crime there was, if any, in his situation, in his particular case. We have this petition now before the county attorney with respect to impeachment pursuant to an offense alleged with respect to violation of the City and County oath taken as a supervisor. There is, however, certainly an offense, an offense existing. It hasn't been wiped out by any statute of limitation as Delegate Heen has observed. So strictly we have right here in our midst the Kageyama case with respect to this word sought to be deleted, and I'm in favor of the deletion, "after conviction." If there was a deal made by the governor with Kageyama and the governor was in praise of Kageyama, I believe he is morally bound to act, to pardon him. Whereas, if tomorrow we would be a state and we pass this thing, "after conviction," the deal, if any was made, could not be followed through, and I think that would be improper.

So, I am in favor of having this "after conviction" deleted because I think it's consistent with our past history of fifty years.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further - -

KAM: I'm not an attorney but I'm still confused myself. I was just wondering, in New York and California they have that phrase "after conviction" and I guess maybe we try to be a little different from them.

KAGE: I'd like to second Delegate Lee's motion to defer action.

WOOLAWAY: I suggest those who are still confused - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate, are you speaking to the motion to defer?

WOOLAWAY: Yes, that they vote kanalua.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the motion to defer will say "aye." Opposed, "no." The noes have it.

All those in favor of the motion to delete will say "aye." Opposed. The motion is lost.

HOLROYDE: I renew my motion to adopt Section 8 as amended.

CHAIRMAN: I think that's well before the house. All those in favor of the motion to adopt Section 8 as amended will say "aye." Opposed, "no." Carried.

DOWSON: I now move that we temporarily adopt Section 9.

LEE: I move that we rise and report progress and beg leave to sit again in one more session. For time, Mr. Chairman - -

KING: I'd like to ask, is it anticipated that Section 9 will take sometime? If not, it might be helpful to clear it before we rise.

SAKAKIHARA: May I ask for a recess, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: There will be a five minute recess at the call of the Chair. If no objections are heard, so ordered.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: Committee of the Whole please come to order.

KING: There is some business on the Clerk's desk, so I suggest and move that the committee rise and report progress and ask to sit again at 7:30 this evening, rather than recess until 7:30.

SAKAKIHARA: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that we rise and report progress, ask leave to sit again at 7:30. All those in favor say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

Evening Session

CHAIRMAN: Will the Committee of the Whole please come to order.

CROSSLEY: I move adoption of Section 9, Committee Proposal No. 22.

APOLIONA: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we adopt Section 9 of Committee Proposal No. 22.

KELLERMAN: I would like to make an amendment to Section 9. In line 7, beginning with "place," "place this state or any part thereof under martial law," I move the deletion of those words because that is covered in Section 13 of the Bill of Rights, in which it states—this is a new draft of the Bill of Rights, the draft that the Style Committee is working on—where it says, "The power of suspending the laws or the execution thereof shall never be exercised except by the legislature or by authority derived from it to be exercised in such particular cases only as the legislature shall expressly prescribe." It seems to me that under that language the executive cannot be given the power to place the state or any part thereof under martial law in any such general terms as in this section. I, therefore, would move to delete the words "place this state or any part thereof under martial law and."

ASHFORD: I would like to ask the proponent of that motion - -

CHAIRMAN: I believe - -

LAI: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: I stand corrected. Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: I would like to ask the proponent of that motion if she will accept an amendment to her amendment, making a "period" after the word "invasion" and deleting the rest of it.

KELLERMAN: I will accept that because under the Bill of Rights, it is stated that "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it." So I will accept that amendment.

ASHFORD: In speaking in favor of this amendment, I would like to say that I think this one of the most dangerous provisions that has been proposed anywhere in this Constitution. We had our dose of martial law and this provides that the governor can declare martial law and suspend the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus when the public safety requires, and I presume he is to be the whole judge of "public safety."

OKINO: I was going to request that that portion with reference to martial law may be deleted in view of the fact that the Committee of the Whole had taken action on that particular subject matter in paragraph two of Section 14 of the Bill of Rights.

But with reference to the subject matter relating to the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, I should like to ask the movant of the amendment the following question. Section 14 with reference to the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus reads as follows: "Section 14. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require." And if you were to read the committee report, there is nothing mentioned as to who is to exercise that right when that occasion arises. Now, it seems to me from the contents of the report submitted by the Committee of the Whole on the Bill of Rights that the executive department is to exercise the power with reference to the suspension of the civil law, but there is nothing mentioned as to who, what officer of the State of Hawaii is to exercise that right. Now in the absence of any clarification along that line, perhaps that clause should be retained.

KELLERMAN: I think that the chairman of the committee is correct. If it isn't stated in the report who is to exercise it, I don't know who else would other than the chief executive. That was my understanding when we passed the section on the Bill of Rights; and if I'm wrong on that I would like to be corrected, but that's my understanding.

ANTHONY: The suspension of the privilege of the writ can only be done by the legislature. This section is in direct conflict with the section that this Convention has already adopted on the Bill of Rights. Now, the suspension of the privilege of the writ was questionable under the Federal Constitution because of the location of the language in the Federal Constitution. It wasn't until Ex parte Merryman that it was determined that it could only be done by the Congress.

In my judgment this entire section so far as it relates to martial law and the suspension of the privilege of the writ should be deleted. In the first place, that power can only be done, under the present Bill of Rights, by the legislature. They can say, implementing the section in the Bill of Rights, when and in what cases the governor may suspend the privilege of the writ. Naturally, it requires an executive act, but it first requires legislation. So much for that.

Now, as to the question of whether or not the words "martial law" should remain in there. Those words have been treated in many decisions as synonymous with the suspension of the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus. We've had an experience here with a declaration of martial law which we should never like to have repeated again. Many state constitutions have no such provision. In fact, the Organic Act of Alaska has no such provision in it, nor does the Organic Act of Puerto Rico. Hawaii is unique. It came from Section 31 of the Constitution of the Republic and the reason it was incorporated as it was in the Constitution of the Republic was because it was not a popular revolution, and the authors of the Constitution of the Republic wanted to make sure that the judges that sat on the bench wouldn't be interfering with any military commissions. That's why they wrote Article 31 of the Constitution of '94.

Now, in my opinion this would be a very dangeous provision. I agree entirely with the delegate from Molokai, and so, therefore, I should think the correct way to handle this would be to put a period after the word "invasion" and delete the rest of the sentence.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair understands that that is the present motion, present amendment.

ASHFORD: I've already spoken once, but I would like to say a few words more.

If you will notice, this goes much, much further than the Bill of Rights. This isn't a question of rebellion or invasion; this is a question of actual or -- "to suppress actual or prevent threatened insurrection, violence, rebellion, or repel invasion." That's very broad language.

HEEN: In the Bill of Rights the matter of suspension of the writ of habeas corpus is dealt with in one paragraph. "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it." Now, that's one subject. Then, in the next paragraph, you are dealing with statutes passed by the legislature. "The power of suspending the laws" – what laws? It must be laws passed by the legislature. "The power of suspending the laws or the execution of those laws," which I say is still limited to statutory laws, "shall never be exercised except by the legislature, or by authority derived from it, to be exercised in such particular cases only as the legislature shall expressly prescribe."

Now, if I am correct in that interpretation, that that second paragraph is limited only to statutory laws, then you have nothing by which the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus may be suspended. Therefore, there must be something either in the Constitution or there must be a change here in the Bill of Rights so that the legislature may prescribe the time when not only statutory laws may be suspended, but also when a writ of habeas corpus may be suspended. That's correct.

ANTHONY: That is correct, and it would be perfectly competent for the legislature, implementing the section that is stated in the Bill of Rights, to state precisely the occasion for the suspension of the privilege of the writ, or the particular occasion for suspending any law, but just like in our Federal Constitution the Congress would have to act. There is no self-executing provision in the Federal Constitution and there should be none in ours. We don't want any dictator here as a governor who is going to look at this section and suspend the privilege of the writ. Call the legislature together if there is an emergency and let the emergency be declared by the legislature. We all know if there is a national emergency the federal troops will take over this place anyhow, but let's not put anything in our Constitution that is going to authorize any governor to place this State under martial law.

The history of this thing on the mainland has been largely in connection with labor disputes. There's been a strike out in Western Pennsylvania or in the coal mines or the mines of Colorado and they called out the militia and declared martial law, and that's the sort of thing we don't want. We want the legislature to deal with that sort of situation. We don't want any dictator dealing with it.

TAVARES: It seems to me that a little further light might be thrown on the question by reiterating something that at least to my mind wasn't made very clear. I have read a little bit since the last meeting. I think that by adopting the provision of the Bill of Rights against suspending the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, we have automatically adopted the interpretation placed on that section by the Supreme Court of the United States which held that President Lincoln did not have power independently to impose -- to suspend the writ unless Congress authorized it, as a result of which Congress then did pass a law.

I do want to point out, though, along Delegate Heen's -- the line of Delegate Heen's argument, that if the legislature does not, in advance, pass a law authorizing the governor to declare martial law in case of invasion and so forth, the governor will then have to call a special session. Now, if Honolulu is invaded, how are you going to call a special session to get the governor authorized? We shall have to get the legislature to pass a law right away after we become a state, giving the governor power under certain conditions to suspend it; otherwise there will be a hiatus. I think that's correct, is it not?

ANTHONY: That is not correct, Mr. Chairman. Delegates, it is absolutely wrong. If there is any national emergency, if we are being invaded, that is a national problem to be dealt with by the general government, the national government, not the state militia. The only thing that they are used for is to put down labor disputes or when there's insurrection or troublesome attacks down at the docks, and things like that. It's only in a rare case in which the state militia is ever called out to provide for the common defense. We don't need anything like this in our Constitution, and you don't find it in Massachusetts' Constitution.

RICHARDS: I would like to take issue with the last speaker. I happened to be here on December 7th. It took some 24 hours later for the Congress of the United States and the President to declare a national emergency. It was here already. We had problems to take care of. We aren't sitting in Massachusetts. We're sitting here on the forefront of where something might happen, and I do not feel that it is up to us to wait for Massachusetts or for the Congress of the United States to act in an emergency.

AKAU: I've been interested in hearing both sides of the picture here, what the delegate from the fourth and the delegate from the fifth have said. It seems to me that we don't want a dictatorship. On the other hand, and by the same token, we do want protection. It seems to me if we change this wording and rather than have the governor -- have it come under here, it would come under the legislative powers, "The legislature shall," with some kind of statement for emergency purposes and perhaps, if I may ask the delegate from the fourth district, would that take care of the situation?

HEEN: As I tried to point out a moment ago, one paragraph of the Bill of Rights gives the legislature the power to prescribe when statutory laws may be suspended, or the execution of statutory law may be suspended, but then in the first paragraph you say nothing about what the legislature may do in reference to the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. Now, I am in agreement with what the other side has said about amending the particular section, Section 9 of the article on the executive branch of the government. If you do that, then in order to clear the situation, the provision in the Bill of Rights should be amended. Then it should be amended this way: "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require." "The power" – this is new – "of suspending the writ of habeas corpus and the power of suspending the laws or the execution of the laws, shall never be exercised except by the legislature, or by authority derived from it to be exercised in such particular cases only as the legislature shall particularly prescribe." Then you give the legislature the power to suspend the writ of habeas corpus as well as suspension of statutory laws.

OKINO: I should like to ask Delegate Anthony a question. Delegate Anthony, you made the point that the legislature would have the power to implement this particular paragraph by legislation, did you not, something like the next paragraph?

ANTHONY: That is correct.

OKINO: Unless the amendment as suggested by Delegate Heen is incorporated in the first paragraph, like the second paragraph, would it not be the function of the court, the judiciary, to determine when there is a state of rebellion or invasion?

ANTHONY: That's an executive determination in the first instance. But under the present section of the Bill of Rights, "The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it," the legislature may suspend the privilege of the writ. It will then be a question of legislative and executive determination whether or not the facts warrant the suspension. That is a judicial question which can come before the courts. You don't need any further implementation of the present section of the Bill of Rights. That is taken directly from the Federal Constitution.

OKINO: Then, in this - -

CROSSLEY: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: Are you finished?

OKINO: No.

CROSSLEY: Mr. Chairman, I was going to suggest a five minute recess and let the "supreme court" agree on language and - -

CHAIRMAN: If there's no objection, so ordered.

(RECESS)

KELLERMAN: If I may restate what has taken place to clear the matter, I moved that we delete the words "place this State or any part thereof under martial law and." The motion was seconded, and then I accepted it and the second also accepted the addition made by Miss Ashford to add - - to put the period at the end of the word "invasion," thereby deleting the rest of the paragraph. I now move the previous question.

ASHFORD: I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Do I understand that Delegate Ashford's amendment is deleted now?

KELLERMAN: Delegate Ashford's amendment was made to my amendment, which I accepted, so there is only one amendment before the floor.

CHAIRMAN: Therefore the period will go after the word "invasion"?

KELLERMAN: After the word "invasion." There's only one amendment now - - one motion before the house. I move the previous question.

HEEN: As I understand it, then, after putting the period after the word "invasion," all the rest of that sentence shall be deleted. Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. The Chair so understands.

HEEN: I am going to support that motion, but I want to give notice now that at some stage of the proceedings, perhaps before we get to the stage of third reading, that the article on the Bill of Rights, Section 13 as now reported out by the Style Committee - -

KING: I'd hate to raise a point of order against Delegate Heen, but - -

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

KING: - - there has been a motion made for the previous question and seconded.

CHAIRMAN: I did not recognize any second.

KING: I apologize to the gentleman.

HEEN: The idea is that that section should be amended in the Bill of Rights.

YAMAMOTO: I rise to a point of information. Will the chairman of the Executive Powers and Functions explain the interpretation of the Committee's Report - - Proposal No. 22, of the word "violence." Would you give me the interpretation of the word "violence."

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, can you answer that question, please?

OKINO: I don't think I could give you a better definition than to repeat the word "violence."

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion?

CROSSLEY: I second the motion for the previous question.

CHAIRMAN: I think there are others who would like to speak on this subject who were unable to clear their minds during the recess. Would you hold that for a few more speakers?

CROSSLEY: Gladly, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that if you don't, we will have to withdraw.

NIELSEN: Now, from our eminent attorneys—I think that's setting them up on a good high level—I would like to know about this word "threatened," because you can shake your fist at a man and threaten him, and it looks to me like you're giving an awful lot of power if you can have that word "threaten" in there. You can have 20 men just walking in a gang and you can say that was "threatening." The governor would have the power to act under this. I'd like to hear about what their meaning of the word "threatened" is.

CHAIRMAN: Does anyone of the delegates wish to answer that question? Delegate Tavares.

TAVARES: I'll stick my neck out a little bit. The word "threatened" is not, of course, a word that you can define exactly, but I can say this. If under the guise of anticipating threatened violence the governor acts not in good faith - - I can find you cases where the Federal courts have enjoined the governor and enjoined anybody else from preventing people from going to a certain place if there wasn't just due cause for it. In other words, if that provision is ever taken advantage of in bad faith, there is a remedy in the courts under the laws of - - under the right of peaceable assembly and other rights under the Constitution, so the courts can protect people who are unjustly discriminated against or unjustly oppressed by such a violation.

ROBERTS: I believe that we ought to have a section dealing with the power of the governor and stating in our Constitution that he shall be Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of the State and to call on such forces to execute the laws, and I think, also, to prevent insurrection, rebellion or invasion, whether real or threatened. I have very serious doubts as to whether you need any section in there dealing with violence or threatened violence. The time when the governor ought have the power to call out the militia is a time when things are serious and there are serious threats to the safety of the State. They ought not be left to the discretion of the governor when he thinks there may be some violence, actual or threatened. If the problem deals with insurrection, if the problem deals with invasion or rebellion, it seems to me that he has a responsibility as chief executive to see to it that the State is adequately protected. I would therefore urge, Mr. Chairman, that the word "violence" be deleted from Section 9; and I would therefore move to amend the amendment by deleting the word "violence."

YAMAMOTO: I'll second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Roberts, the Chair will ask that you hold that amendment in abeyance as it does not apply to the actual amendment that's now before us. Let us dispose of that first, please.

ROBERTS: I will hold it until the action - -

RICHARDS: What is the actual amendment before us?

CHAIRMAN: The amendment before us is to place a period after the word "invasion" and delete the remainder of the paragraph. Is there any more discussion on that point?

ARASHIRO: Yes, I wish to ask this question on the pending motion as to what might be the possibility of the usage of the word "threatened insurrection" and also "violence." What are they referring to as far as - -

CHAIRMAN: I believe that your question falls in the same category as the motion that I just asked to be withheld. Let us vote on the deletion of the last part of the paragraph and we'll get to that point.

SMITH: I'd like to ask the chairman of the committee, when they inserted the words "when the public safety requires it" was that to take care of say earthquakes, floods, etc.?

OKINO: Yes, it does. It would be an emergency from which there might occur tumultuous disturbance. They may result in violence.

SMITH: I believe that "when the public safety requires it" should be left in the section. Therefore, I'm strongly not in favor of having the period ending right after "invasion."

OKINO: Point of order. I think Delegate Smith is out of order. That portion is not included in this amendment. That portion is to be stricken out.

CHAIRMAN: That is the amendment, to strike it out, and he's speaking against the amendment. Is there any further discussion? All those - -

DOWSON: I'd like to ask a question. Are there any states which empower the governor to suspend the law, go under martial law and suspend the privilege of the habeas corpus?

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Okino, did you hear the question?

OKINO: No, I have not been able to find anything from my search. That particular clause - - section is a composite of that which we find in our Organic Act, Section 66 and Section 67. The committee felt that it would be advisable to follow the language of the Organic Act as closely as possible.

CHAIRMAN: Are you ready for the question?

SAKAKIHARA: Question.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the motion to delete or to amend the paragraph by deleting will say "aye." Opposed, say "no." The motion is carried.

SAKAKIHARA: I now wish to offer a further amendment to Section 9. On the fourth line of Section 9 delete, after the word "suppress," "actual or present threatened," and on the 5th line, "violence, rebellion or," so that that section will read: "The governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of this State, and may call out such forces to execute the laws, to suppress insurrection or to repel invasion." I believe that the matter of - -

NIELSEN: Point of order. I'll second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: Proceed, Delegate Sakakihara, you are now in order.

SAKAKIHARA: I believe that the other features, such as violence, rebellion, and so forth, will be purely statutory matter covered in the execution of the laws, for which the governor as Commander-in-Chief will be called upon to call out the forces of the armed forces. I don't see the necessity of enumerating the "actual or present threatened violence or rebellion."

SHIMAMURA: I agree with the amendment and also with sentiments expressed by the last speaker. I do not feel that in our Constitution the prerogative and privilege and power of the governor should be enlarged. It should be restricted, if possible, and the usage of the words in Section 9, "threatened" and "violence" are an enlargement of the governor's powers and not a restriction thereof.

RICHARDS: May I ask the proponent of this amendment that, does he feel that if a mob should get together and start out to burn down the Palace because of something that they particularly dislike, or take particular action against some other individual in government, that the governor should not be empowered to call out the militia to protect State property or protect State officers?

CHAIRMAN: Would the proponent of the motion care to answer that question?

ANTHONY: Mr. Chairman, I can answer that question for the delegate.

CHAIRMAN: Would that be satisfactory, Delegate Sakakihara? Delegate Anthony is recognized.

ANTHONY: If the governor is made the Commander-in-Chief and if he is clothed with authority to execute the laws, he would have every authority to call out the state militia to suppress violence, to keep these mobs in order. You don't have to put it in the Constitution. I have no particular objection to the language going in there, but the simple provision in the Federal Constitution is that the President, the chief executive, is the Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy, that's all it says. Now, under that simple provision, the President has done many things. Witness the sale of the 49 aged destroyers under the war power as Commander-in-Chief. So he would have every power to suppress violence by calling out the militia.

RICHARDS: As long as that is well understood and placed in the committee report, I have no objection. I merely thought that, with my colleague from the fifth district, that when certain things are a little bit uncertain to the general lay mind, why not spell them out, because we are not writing a Constitution for the benefit of the attorneys, as was stated earlier today.

OKINO: For the benefit of Delegate Dowson, and perhaps other delegates, I should like to furnish at this time this information. The right to call out the militia to repel invasion, to execute the laws or to suppress rebellion is specifically conferred upon the governor in 25 states. Would you like to know the names of the states? In Mississippi the governor may also call out the militia to suppress riots; in Missouri, to suppress actual or threatened insurrection.

CHAIRMAN: Thank you.

CROSSLEY: I would like to ask Delegate Anthony, then, in view of his statement, if it wouldn't be better in Section 9 to go back to the period after "State," in the second line of that first sentence, and then it would read, "The governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of this State," if that wouldn't be better than to try and put in limited powers. If you are going to begin to strike out words along here, it seems to me you are putting a restriction by trying to spell out specifically one or two things, whereas the other is a broad power. That's the way it should be.

ANTHONY: There's a great deal in what the last speaker has said. I had put a period after "state" earlier this afternoon when I left the Convention, thinking that if this was coming up that's where I would put the period. So far as I'm concerned, that would be perfectly adequate. The chief executive would have all the power of a chief executive. Of course, he would be answerable in the courts if he wrongfully called out the militia when there wasn't any emergency. But doing it that way, you are following the pattern of the federal government and you are obviating the danger, by whittling away some of these words, that a future court will interpret that to mean that he can't do thus and so. I think there's a great deal in what Delegate Crossley said.

TAVARES: First of all I want to remind the delegates here that this provision has been substantially in our Organic Act, under this language. "That the Governor," and so forth, "and whenever it becomes necessary he may call upon the commanders of the military and naval forces of the United States in the Territory of Hawaii, or summon the posse comitatus, or call out the militia of the Territory to prevent or suppress lawless violence, invasion, insurrection, or rebellion in such Territory."

Now, the abuses that come from martial law came not from this portion of our Organic Act, but from the imposition on this Territory of the unconstitutional "kangaroo courts" or provost courts, as they were called. Nobody here objected to martial law; nobody today says we shouldn't have had martial law. The thing we objected to was those "kangaroo courts" and we're not going to have them here.

Now, if that first portion, as Delegate Anthony says, includes all of the wording of this portion that's to be deleted, and the report so states, I will acquiesce in that. But I think the report should be very firm and specific on that because I want to call again to the attention of the delegates that our supreme court in at least one case has held that the Territory had no war powers. I don't know whether that means the State has no war powers either. Remember the President has war powers and perhaps the states don't, and therefore, perhaps the President has a little more implied power than our governor does. Therefore, I would like it very clearly understood in the record that if we are to delete everything after "State" that it means exactly - - it includes all of the provisions that are deleted, except this placing under martial law and suspending the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus.

CROSSLEY: It was on that basis that I suggested that there be a period after "State." If that is not included in the committee report, and that is not, in fact, what this section means, then I wouldn't be for the deletion of any part of this. Therefore, I would like to move that this section be amended, or I will make an amendment to the amendment, further amendment, to place a period after "State," and that the committee report will show that this is no deletion of the powers contained in the balance of that section as amended, and by that I mean with a period after "invasion."

WOOLAWAY: I'll second that motion.

NIELSEN: I would like to ask the chairman of the Executive Committee how many, if any, states have the word "threatened" as regarding violence, rebellion, etc.?

OKINO: For the benefit of Delegate Nielsen, I refer to page 141 of the Legislative Reference Bureau Manual. In the State of Missouri that language is used, "to suppress actual or threatened insurrections."

NIELSEN: It's just one state that uses that?

OKINO: Yes, one state.

NIELSEN: One out of 48. Well, I think that to write into the Committee of the Whole [report] that we agree with all of this, but we won't write it into the Constitution. I think that what we write into the Constitution is what we agree to. Therefore, I am going to vote against that amendment.

ASHFORD: I can't allow a statement made by one of the delegates here to pass without objection. It was said that no one here objected to martial law. Hundreds of people objected to martial law, I was one of them.

MAU: Two of the delegates who spoke before Delegate Ashford stated that if the amendment were - - if the amendment be to put a period after the word "State," they would agree to that amendment only with the thought that in the committee report everything that is stricken out of Section 9 be made known in the report to be included in that provision. I disagree with that. I don't believe that any one delegate could commit the whole Convention by saying that "I agree to an amendment providing that a committee report be written in such a - - in a certain way."

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Mau, that was part of the motion. Therefore, if you don't agree, you may vote against it. But you're in order. I'm just - -

MAU: But I'm speaking against the amendment for that reason.

CHAIRMAN: O. K., Delegate Mau has the floor.

MAU: If anything be written in any committee report, the eloquent words of Delegate Anthony ought to be written into the report to show the intent of this Convention, rather than that the governor should have such extraordinary powers. Let us go back to the illustration used by Delegate Richards, that in the event mob violence occurred, and this mob went to the Palace and burned the Palace down, or attacked some of the officials of the State, first of all, the police powers of the State, I think, would be sufficient to take care of that matter. If that police power is insufficient, then the laws of the State have been violated and the governor, under the power to call out the militia so as to see to it that the laws are executed and obeyed, I think would be sufficient. So that to say that if the amendment carries with a period after the word "State," that everything after that which had been stricken should be covered by the report, I think is absurd and wrong.

AKAU: I think what has been said is very good. I'm wondering if we realize that when the people will be reading this Constitution that very few, comparatively speaking, will go back, let us say, and read the details that have been discussed by this Committee of the Whole or even by these various committees. I think they will probably concern themselves with the actual sections. Now, then, I'm wondering if the delegate from Kauai - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Crossley, you are being addressed.

AKAU: I am wondering if the delegate from Kauai would withdraw that proviso in his motion so that we might just vote on that part until the word "State," and leave it to the discretion, let us say, of the people who are writing it in. They probably will write it in, but if you would withdraw the proviso I think the people would vote for it.

CROSSLEY: May I answer that question.

CHAIRMAN: Would you yield for a man who has been trying to speak on this subject?

CROSSLEY: Well, I was asked a question. I'd like to answer the question.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Crossley is recognized.

CROSSLEY: When I spoke on the section in the first place, I spoke of putting a period after "State" because I had heard the eloquent speech, the eloquent words of the attorney from the fourth district and agreed with him. I am not an attorney; I don't know what the courts are going to interpret in the first two lines of that with a period after "State," and I don't think that any other lay person here does know. Therefore, I would like to know what this means myself.

Now the people that are going to go and read a report of the Committee of the Whole are the judges and the attorneys who are looking for an interpretation of what we were trying to say. It's not the man in the street that is going to read this report. I doubt that he will even read the Constitution. But for sure, the judges, the attorneys, the people that are trying to get an interpretation of these sections are going to do it; and all I was asking for was that the thing that had been said be clearly spelled out, so that when they did look for interpretation here that they would see it clearly stated that the governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of this State, and that means that he has these rights, and that's all in the world that my amendment was.

RICHARDS: I rise to a point of personal privilege.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

RICHARDS: I was misquoted by my colleague from the fifth district, and I would like to have that corrected before we proceed with the discussion. He stated that where I referred to the matter of the burning of the Palace and the attacking of citizens in government, that I was referring to a fact that had been accomplished. My speech was on the question of "threat," and I wish that fully understood by the rest of the delegates, where I feel that the governor should have the power, or some authority should have the power to take care of threatened actions of that nature, and not actions after they have been accomplished.

CHAIRMAN: I believe that's clearly stated.

SAKAKIHARA: I rise to a point of information. I am the original movant of the amendment. It was duly seconded. Delegate Crossley of Kauai has offered another amendment. Was that amendment to my amendment?

CHAIRMAN: It was.

SAKAKIHARA: May I speak to the second amendment, amendment to the amendment, in opposition to that amendment? As I understand it, Section 9 will merely read as follows: "The governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of this State." Is that correct?

CHAIRMAN: Correct.

SAKAKIHARA: For what purpose are the armed forces for? For what purpose does the State provide a state national guard? I firmly believe that the delegates assembled here were elected to draft a State Constitution. Certainly the people of the future State of Hawaii is entitled to know the purpose for which the state militia is maintained. What are their duties? I strongly feel that among some of the purposes for which the state militia is maintained, that that militia should be used for some specific purpose, for the purpose to execute prevention of insurrection, to suppress rebellion or repel invasion. If enemy forces should invade our shores, then the governor, as Commander-in-Chief, could call out the militia to repel invasion. I believe very strongly that the governor, as Commander-in-Chief, be entitled, under the State Constitution to call out the militia for the purpose of suppressing invasion or insurrection.

There has been times when strikes were going on, riots, and that the forces of the police was inadequate. The governor was called upon to call out the national guard. I believe that the Constitution in certain degree should spell out, and I, in this instance, feel very strongly that Section 9 should provide so that the people can read and understand their own State Constitution, and for that reason I made the original motion so that the Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of this State may call out such force to execute the laws, to suppress insurrection or to repel invasion. Section 5, as tentatively agreed this forenoon, provides that, "The governor shall be responsible for the proper execution of the laws." Among the duties of the guard will be to enforce the execution of that law. The governor, as Commander-in-Chief, will call out that force to execute that law. And I believe that the wording as amended by the gentleman from Kauai is inadequate.

KING: It seems to me the point has been quite clarified and I would like to speak in opposition to the amendment to the amendment because the point made by Delegate Sakakihara has considerable weight. "The governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of this State." That may be sufficient because he is the Commander-in-Chief and he may use them for any legal or proper purpose, but it does seem desirable to add something to it, that he may call those forces out for certain purposes. So I would like to suggest that we vote on the amendment to the amendment and clarify that point, and if that should fail to carry, then we vote on the original amendment and clarify that point and go on to the next section. We've been on this particular section about an hour and a half and it seems to me everybody's mind is about made up how they want to have it written. There are two amendments pending, one is an amendment to amendment and the other is a basic amendment, and all it needs is two votes to decide what we're going to do with Section 9. So I'd like to move the previous question.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would be very happy to put both of those votes, incidentally.

MAU: Point of order. First I'd like to ask about the amendment to the amendment, how it reads.

CHAIRMAN: I would be very glad. The first amendment as offered by Delegate Sakakihara would place a period after the word "invasion"; would strike the words "actual or prevent threatened"; and also the word "violence" and "rebellion." The amendment to that amendment, proposed by Delegate Crossley, was to place a period in the second line after the word "State" and to delete the remainder of the paragraph with the understanding - - not with the understanding but as part of the motion that the committee report would state that the substance contained in the rest of that paragraph, up to the word "invasion," was the intent of this committee.

MAU: The point of order I raised was this, whether the second part of that motion can be properly included in one motion, whether or not it shouldn't be divided into two motions. It makes an amendment asking that the period be put after the word "State," and then a second motion that when the committee report is written - - whatever that motion is. I don't believe the two can be tied together.

CHAIRMAN: I believe the same end can be accomplished, and just as quickly, if we put the motion, and depending upon the outcome of the motion, either another motion could be made to add either part of that motion either to the report or to change the language. I think it can be accomplished either way. Do you get my point, Delegate Mau?

MAU: I don't think that's a proper motion.

ANTHONY: I've been trying to get the floor for sometime.

CHAIRMAN: I recognized you a while ago and you didn't want it.

ANTHONY: I didn't notice it.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Anthony. Are you through - -

MAU: I'll yield for a moment because he's so anxious to get the floor.

CHAIRMAN: I will recognize you when Delegate Anthony is through.

ANTHONY: I think there's a good deal in what Delegate Mau has said. I don't think that any statement here on the floor as to the construction of words that ultimately go into the Constitution by any particular delegate can be binding on any court or anybody as to what those words mean. Now, as I understand the motion, the motion is to put a period after "State."

RICHARDS: I rise to a point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Will you state your point, please.

RICHARDS: We have discussed here, since we have been meeting as a Committee of the Whole, the point that interpretation shall be written into the committee report. Now, if this is something new, I'd like to know about it.

ANTHONY: Let's get that straightened out right away. The only time you have resort to the legislative journals is when the meaning is not clear. You don't pick up a legislative report unless there is something in the language that is ambiguous. If the language is perfectly clear, then you read the words. You don't read the report and see what the words mean.

Now as I see it, if we would put a period after "invasion," it would do the same thing as Delegate Crossley's motion would do. And I would not be in favor of taking out the words that Delegate Sakakihara would take out, the words "threatened violence." Now it seems to me that if everybody in this Convention understands that in the event of an emergency sufficiently bad to warrant the calling out of the troops, the governor may do so, then let's put a period after "invasion" and let it go at that.

CROSSLEY: I'll withdraw my motion.

RICHARDS: I still rise to a point of information. We have been going on for some days now in which motions similar to Mr. Crossley's have been acted upon. Unless we proceed - -

CHAIRMAN: The delegate will recall that the Chair did not rule the motion out of order.

RICHARDS: Well, I just really rise for a point of information inasmuch as the last speaker from the fourth district now seems to want to write into our committee reports that the committee reports mean nothing compared to the language that is submitted in the Constitution. Now, if that is so we better start all over from the beginning.

CHAIRMAN: Would you yield a moment? Are you through, Delegate Mau?

MAU: I wanted to see if I couldn't explain the true situation to my colleague from the fifth district. The courts never look to extraneous matters for interpretation. Only when there is an ambiguity in the language. It first looks at what is written. If it understands it, then it goes nowhere else and says this is it. But if there is ambiguity in the language, if there are several ways to interpret the language as written, then they go to your report or your legislative journal. It's only in such instances that the court resorts to extraneous matters for interpretation.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that further discussion of the point so far as it pertains to the committee report is out of order. The motion has been withdrawn. The motion included the language concerning the committee report.

NIELSEN: The motion before the house now is Sakakihara's motion, I believe.

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

NIELSEN: I move for the previous question.

APOLIONA: I haven't spoken on this question here and I shall address myself to the amendment as proposed by Delegate Sakakihara. If our enemies or invaders were all outside of the country proper, everything would be fine. But as far as I'm concerned, there is just as much danger within the country as there is without the country. So at this time I would like to say that I shall vote against the amendment as proposed by Delegate Sakakihara.

H. RICE: There's nothing like the school of hard knocks and having served as president of the Senate of the Territory of Hawaii when Mr. Garner Anthony was the attorney general and fought for the Territory, I think this is one time we should look to the man who has had the experience during that time. I agree with Delegate Ashford. When we were in martial law, I told the Governor, Poindexter, that he let us down so that we were worse off than a conquered territory here in Hawaii. I agree that this is one time where we should listen to Garner Anthony because he's been through the school of hard knocks and he knows what he's talking about.

CHAIRMAN: The question before the house - -

WOOLAWAY: I haven't spoken yet. I'd like to ask this point of information. Maybe Garner Anthony, Delegate Anthony can answer. What is wrong with this section as it is now covered under the Organic Act, as we have been abiding by it for fifty years?

ANTHONY: The section in the Hawaiian Organic Act was the principal cause of all of our trouble. If it hadn't been for Section 67 of the Hawaiian Organic Act we would never have had this nonsense and rigamarole that we had down here during the war. The President could have suspended the privilege of the writ for a few days and it would have been all over. We wouldn't have had those four years of it. That's what we had, these "kangaroo courts" down here under the declaration of martial law. Why? Because we had the words "threatened invasion" in there, and those words should not be in our Constitution.

But I still believe that the governor should have the right to put down violence, and so I say put a period after the word "invasion," and vote against Sakakihara's proposed amendment. Then it would be a question of fact for the governor to determine, whether or not the situation is serious enough to warrant the calling out of the troops, and the governor will have to take his chances with the ultimate facts, and he will be an elected official and you can depend on him to do the right thing.

DELEGATE: Question.

SMITH: I'd like, for a point of information, to ask the last speaker, is it necessary to leave out the words "or he may when the public safety requires"?

CHAIRMAN: No.

ANTHONY: I'm sorry, I didn't get the question.

CHAIRMAN: It was in the first amendment which was not voted on.

SMITH: I just asked, is it—on the question whether or not the words "and he may when the public safety requires" —is it necessary to have that in?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair is in doubt on the point of order here.

A. TRASK: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Perhaps I better check with the Clerk. The words "and he may when the public safety requires" and so forth, was that deleted by a vote?

A. TRASK: That was deleted, Mr. Chairman.

AKAU: Point of order. I think we've had full and free discussion. I move the previous question.

DELEGATE: That was my point of order.

ARASHIRO: I second that motion to the previous question.

ROBERTS: I haven't spoken on the amendment, Mr. Chairman. The previous speaker stated that one of the serious difficulties of martial law in the problem of the Organic Act were the words "threatened invasion." The words "to prevent threatened insurrection, rebellion or to repel invasion" are in the present proviso. That language is in there. It would seem to me that the difficulty isn't met by leaving the same language.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment before the house would delete.

ROBERTS: I understand that, but the speaker before was speaking in opposition to the amendment, and was speaking for the retention of Section 9 with a period after the word "invasion." It seems to me that leaving the language in there does not meet that purpose.

ANTHONY: This is a rather technical discussion, but Section 67 of the Hawaiian Organic Act has two things. One, the first part of it, permits the governor to call out the posse comitatus or the militia, in the event of violence and so on. The other section was the section that we had the most trouble with. It authorized him to suspend the privilege of the writ and to declare martial law. This section that we're dealing with here has nothing to do with the suspension of the writ or the privilege of the writ nor the declaration of martial law, it simply enables him to call out the militia, and I think it's all right.

CHAIRMAN: Is that a satisfactory disposition of your question?

HEEN: I rise to a point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Dr. Roberts still has the floor.

ROBERTS: I'm sorry, Senator Heen. I'll be through in a minute. I'd like to suggest that we either retain the very simple language that "The governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of the State," which section, by the way, is the section which has been used in the State of New Jersey, or a simple section such as the one in the Constitution of the State of Michigan, which provides that "he shall be Commander-in-Chief of the military and naval forces and may call out such forces to execute the laws, to suppress insurrection and to repel invasion." The word "violence" does not appear in any of the state constitutions. It does not appear in the Organic Act. Violence? Well, this doesn't say "lawless violence," and it just says "violence," any kind of violence.

I agree with you, Mr. Chairman, but we're dealing with a basis of a Constitution now. If we're putting in language which is different from the Organic Act, we're going to have to interpret it. That's been one of the arguments which has been raised on the floor and one of the reasons why a good many of the lawyers want to keep the Organic Act in. They say they've had 50 years of experience under it and adjudication. That makes good sense. But if you're changing it, it doesn't make good sense because you're going to have further questions on it.

I go for a very simple clause that "The governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of the State." That's a section which has been adjudicated, federally; a section which is fairly simple and fairly clear. If you are going to make provisos, the provisos ought to be fairly simple and they ought to be confined to insurrection, to rebellion or to invasion. Now, if the governor executes his authority improperly, then he's subject to action in the court.

I would suggest, therefore, that the amendment proposed by Mr. Sakakihara be supported, but I would like to add the word "rebellion" in that section and I would move to amend the section to include the word "rebellion."

SAKAKIHARA: I accept the amendment.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment is accepted by the movant.

HEEN: I rise to a point of information. I would like to know just exactly what Delegate Sakakihara's amendment is, with that amendment proposed by Delegate Roberts which he has accepted.

CHAIRMAN: I will read the amendment. The amendment is to delete, after the word "suppress" in the fourth line, the words, "actual or prevent threatened," skip the word "insurrection," and delete the word "violence," so the section would read:

> The governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of this State, and may call out such forces to execute the laws, to suppress insurrection, rebellion or to repel invasion.

HEEN: I now move an amendment to that amendment, that the word "actual" be deleted in the fourth line, that the word "threatened" be deleted in the fourth line, so that the

- - no, no, he deleted too many words - - so that that part shall read: "and may call out such forces to execute the laws, to suppress or prevent insurrection, violence, rebellion or to repel invasion."

ANTHONY: I was wondering if the movant of the last amendment would accept a further amendment to insert the word "lawless" before "violence."

CHAIRMAN: Insert the word what?

HEEN: "Lawless" before the word "violence," "lawless violence." So that my amendment - - it seems to me that Delegate Sakakihara should agree with my amendment.

SAKAKIHARA: I accept Senator Heen's amendment.

CHAIRMAN: Do you agree with it?

SAKAKIHARA: I agree with it.

CHAIRMAN: The only question before the house is to amend the first sentence of Section 9 so that it would read as follows:

> The governor shall be Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces of this State and may call out such forces to execute the laws, to suppress or prevent insurrection, lawless violence or repel invasion.

HEEN: No, "rebellion" remains.

CHAIRMAN: "Lawless rebellion."

HEEN: No, "lawless violence, rebellion or to repel invasion" period.

CHAIRMAN: Thank you. All those in favor of the amendment as just stated will say "aye." Opposed. The amendment is carried.

CROSSLEY: I now move the adoption of this section as amended.

WOOLAWAY: I now second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded this section as amended be adopted.

RICHARDS: I have a further amendment. My amendment would be: "and he may"—putting a comma after the word "invasion"—"and he may when the public safety requires, place this State or any part thereof under martial law and suspend the privilege of writ of habeas corpus for a period not to exceed 90 days."

J. TRASK: Point of order.

CHAIRMAN: Will you state your point of order, James Trask? Delegate James Trask.

J. TRASK: I am quite sure that we voted on that deletion.

RICHARDS: Was there a period for which he could pass - - suspend the writ mentioned?

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will have to rule that the amendment is in order under that understanding. Is there any further discussion on this? Is there any second?

SMITH: I'll second it.

CROSSLEY: I'll second it for debate.

HEEN: Point of order. At the outset there was a motion to delete that very part of that sentence, and action was taken upon that motion and the motion carried. Therefore, if you want to deal with that same part of that sentence again, there should be a motion to reconsider. Therefore, this motion at the present time is clearly out of order.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair has ruled that the motion is in order in that by placing a time limitation on the suspension of the privilege of the writ, it is a new subject.

ASHFORD: Move the previous question. I move the previous question, Mr. Chairman.

DOI: Second the motion.

RICHARDS: Mr. Chairman, my motion was seconded. Is that the - -

CHAIRMAN: That is correct.

RICHARDS: - - previous question we are voting on, my amendment?

CHAIRMAN: That is correct. The motion before the house is the amendment by Delegate Richards. All those in favor of the amendment will say "aye." Opposed. The motion is lost.

The motion before the house now is the adoption of Section 9 as amended.

DELEGATE: Mr. Chairman, I move that Section 9 as amended be adopted.

CHAIRMAN: The motion has been made. All those in favor will say "aye." Opposed. So carried.

LAI: I move for the adoption of first paragraph in Section 10.

SAKAKIHARA: Second it.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the first paragraph of Section 10 be tentatively adopted.

J. TRASK: I move for a short recess subject to the call of the Chair.

CHAIRMAN: If there's no objection, a short recess of approximately five minutes.

(RECESS)

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole please come to order.

ARASHIRO: I now move that we adopt Section 10.

CHAIRMAN: That motion is before the house.

DELEGATE: I second the motion.

LARSEN: I would like to present an amendment that's on your desks, in the name of Henry White who couldn't be here, to delete the present first three sections and in their place put in the sections as suggested. The one that's on your desk.

CHAIRMAN: The copy that I have is not identified, Delegate Larsen.

LARSEN: It starts: "Amendment to Committee Proposal No. 22. Amend Section 10 of Committee Proposal No. 22 by deleting the first three paragraphs thereof and substituting in lieu thereof the following:" and then comes Section 10. Got it?

> Section 10. There shall be an Attorney General, a Commissioner of Finance, a Treasurer, a Commissioner of Taxes, a Superintendent of Public Works, a Board of Regents, Commissioners of Public Instruction, and a Public Utilities Commission, each of whom shall be in charge of a principal department of the state and their respective functions, powers and duties shall be as provided by law.

All other executive and administrative offices, departments and instrumentalities of the state government and their respective functions, powers and duties shall be established by law in such manner as to group the same according to major purposes so far as practicable.

The legislature from time to time may assign new powers and functions to departments, boards and instrumentalities, and it may increase, modify, or diminish the powers and functions of such bodies, but the governor shall have power to make such changes in the administrative structure or in the assignment of functions as he may deem necessary for efficient administration. Such changes shall be set forth in executive orders which shall become effective as of the dates set forth therein and shall continue until modified by executive orders or specifically modified or disapproved by a resolution adopted by a majority of each house of the legislature. The legislature may create temporary commissions for special purposes or, except for those established herein, reduce the number of departments or boards by consolidation or otherwise.

Each principal department shall be under the supervision of the governor. The head of each principal department shall be a single executive unless otherwise provided herein or by law. Such single executives shall be nominated and appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, to serve at the pleasure of the governor.

Whenever a board, commission or other body shall be vested with the responsibility for the administration of a principal department of the state, the members thereof shall be nominated and appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the Senate. Members of the Board of Regents and of the Public Utilities Commission, and Commissioners of Public Instruction shall serve for staggered terms, as provided by law, and shall be subject to removal only for misfeasance or malfeasance in office. All other appointees of the governor to boards, commissions or other bodies shall serve at the pleasure of the governor. Each board, commission, or other body may, with the advice and consent of the governor, appoint a principal executive officer who may be ex officio a voting member of such board, commission or other body, when authorized by law. Such principal executive officer may be removed by a majority vote of the members appointed by the governor.

CHAIRMAN: I have it.

RICHARDS: A point of order. Are we going to talk about all of Section 10 at once, or are we going to go paragraph by paragraph?

CHAIRMAN: In view of the amendment that has been offered, which would be to amend the first three paragraphs, I'm afraid it would be up to the movant of the amendment to move that this be placed in lieu of the first three paragraphs.

RICHARDS: As I read that amendment, it is paragraphs two and three to be amended and does not affect paragraph one.

CROSSLEY: I don't believe that is correct. Paragraph one deals with the subject that: "There shall be not more than 20 principal departments." If you will read the amendment offered by Delegate White, you will find out that he wants to delete that section. He is, of course, silent on it which would mean that there would be no limitation on the number of departments.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Larsen, do you wish to put this amendment before the house?

LARSEN: I would like to place this before the house.

DELEGATE: I'll second the motion.

CROSSLEY: I would like to speak against this amendment. As I read this amendment, this would eliminate the first paragraph of Section 10. Now, the first paragraph of Section 10 was designed to do a special job. It was designed to do away with the trend towards the multiplication of many departments. It was designed to stop independent agencies being set up one after another, increasing the bureaucracy of government, and to carry out one of the principal functions of the Little Hoover Commission in concentrating the work in fewer departments. Not only would that bring about more economical government, but it would make the job of the governor a lot more precise. It would enable him to pick better men because he would be picking fewer men to head these principal departments.

Now, limiting the number of administrative departments is a constitutional requisite for streamlining the government of the State, for increasing its efficiency and in reducing its cost; and to do those things and to that end, the constitutional limit on the number of departments is desirable. When you do this, you integrate administrative functions, and to that end, of course, later on in this section, you will find that we have recommended that each principal department shall be under the supervision of the governor, the head of each principal department shall be a single executive, except where a board is called for. All of those things would mean that you could build up without any difficulty at all any number of departments. The trend has been in the Model State Constitution, in the New Jersey revision, in the Connecticut report, all of these states have put a limit on the number of departments to bring about the very thing that the Little Hoover Commission has tried to bring about, not only in state but federal government, and that is a limitation upon the number so that there will be a concentration of the number of people.

HEEN: I rise to a point of information.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

HEEN: I was wondering what he means by the "Little Hoover Commission."

CROSSLEY: I mean the "Big Hoover Commission."

HEEN: I thought so.

CROSSLEY: Therefore, inasmuch as this amendment offered by Delegate White would serve to delete that first paragraph, I would like to see the amendment defeated.

CHAIRMAN: Is there any further discussion on the amendment? All those in favor of the motion to amend the first three paragraphs in accordance with the proposal submitted by Delegate White will say "aye." Opposed. The motion is lost.

The motion before the house at the moment is the adoption of Section 10 as proposed by the committee.

LOPER: I have one minor amendment. In the middle of the second paragraph, "The head of each principal department shall be a single executive unless otherwise provided by law." I think - -

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Loper, are you speaking to the first paragraph of Section 10?

LOPER: Second. I understood the - -

CHAIRMAN: I may have stated the motion incorrectly. The motion is for the adoption of the first paragraph. That motion was amended to replace three paragraphs. The amendment was lost; therefore the only motion before the house is the adoption of the first paragraph, Section 10.

LOPER: I thought the motion was to adopt the whole section.

CHAIRMAN: I may have incorrectly stated it. All those in favor of the motion will say "aye."

RICHARDS: May I ask the chairman of the committee as to why the number of 20 principal departments was picked out? Did he have a specific number as to which departments, or why 20 instead of 24 or 16 or 10?

OKINO: I believe my committee member, Delegate Crossley from Kauai, would be willing to answer that question.

CROSSLEY: The committee did discuss a variety of numbers. For instance, the Connecticut Report took the whole State of Connecticut into 14 administrative departments and other states had varying numbers. I believe the highest was 20. However, we did invite the budget director and others of the territorial government over to discuss and propose a consolidation of departments, and the highest number that we came out with was somewhere in the neighborhood of 14 or 15, along in there. The committee felt -- the majority of the committee felt that there should be a cushion over and above anything that we could see or understand, that there should be a sufficient cushion to grow into, but not too great a cushion to use up all at one time. Some of these other states have done just that; they have provided a cushion, and in most cases they still have that cushion because they keep consolidating rather than using that all up because when it's gone, it's gone.

RICHARDS: I can appreciate the idea of the delegate from Kauai and I certainly am in favor of having as few departments of government as possible, but we do arise to the situation that occurred in this particular Convention, where everybody happened to say we can get by with eight or ten committees and yet by the time we added up, we kept increasing.

I have no particular argument with whether 20 is going to be sufficient or not. There is, tomorrow, the committee report on agriculture, conservation and land coming forward. That committee report does not recommend any specific number of boards or commissions to take care of the various aspects of the assets of the State, but it does request that there be a sufficient number available, realizing that there was a limitation suggested in this particular article, to take care of the requirements to properly administer the assets of the State, particularly from the conservation angle. In our committee meetings, we met with people from the fisheries; we met with people from the land board and the land commissioner; and we met with people from the board of agriculture; we also met with people interested in conservation; we met with people interested in the conservation of water as being the lifeblood of the State.

Now, I have no particular bone of contention with 20 principal departments. I merely wish to make sure that there's going to be enough to take care of the problems which will be put before the legislature regarding the various and sundry assets of the State, as well as the functional departments which we all know are necessary for the proper operation. I also wish to state that I do feel that the fewer number of departments the greater efficiency of the State. That point I certainly agree with, but I just raise the question, is 20 going to be enough?

OKINO: I should like to ask Delegate Richards a question or two. I take it from what you have said, Delegate Richards, that your committee is proposing a board, or two or three boards, to take charge of the administration of the agriculture, forestry, maybe fisheries and conservation, something like the proposal that was submitted by the Committee on Education.

RICHARDS. If I may answer that question, we are submitting no suggestions of any number. We are merely suggesting an over-all comparatively short article for inclusion in the Constitution. Our committee report merely suggests that because of the diversity of the problems, and because of the necessity of conservation of our assets, and because certain of those conservation programs might encroach upon each other, that there might be a fairly large number of boards necessary.

OKINO: You mean to be established by law or to be given a constitutional status?

RICHARDS: All to be established by law. The only point involved is that we do state that they should be executive boards with the power of appointing the executive officer. That is the only requirement that we have in our proposal, but there is no question as to the number, that we leave up to the legislature.

OKINO: May I at this time direct your attention to paragraph three of Section 10 of Proposal No. 22. If you have any -- if any board is specifically recommended to be given a constitutional status, then it may be excepted by the first phrase or clause, "Except as otherwise provided in this Constitution." And if it is so, it will not be counted in as one of the 20 principal departments.

RICHARDS: If that is the interpretation, that is perfectly satisfactory with me. I didn't read it that way as I read through the report.

TAVARES: I'm afraid I didn't quite catch all that Delegate Okino said. May I get the meaning of that "principal departments" again?

OKINO: The idea of that clause, "Except as otherwise provided in this Constitution," was to meet with any committee proposal like the proposal submitted by the Committee on Education. That board will not be counted in as one of the 20 principal departments limited in paragraph one of Section 10. Likewise, if the Committee on Education is to submit any such recommendation, and if approved by the Convention, then it would be excepted from the limitation of 20 principal departments.

TAVARES: I am a little bit concerned because, according to my recollection, I just put down all the departments I can remember right now, with the Auditor, Budget Director, Attorney General, Tax Commissioner, Department of Education, Board of Regents, Public Utilities Commission, Public Works, Public Lands, Treasurer, Archives—would Archives be considered a principal department?

OKINO: That I believe will be ascertained by legislature.

TAVARES: Agriculture and Forestry, Hawaiian Homes Commission, Hawaii Housing Authority, Public Welfare and Institutions, I get about 17 or 18 already and if you only have 20, I'm a little concerned really now as to whether that number is enough.

CROSSLEY: I'd like to point out to the delegate that just spoke that if you want to go through and take all of the principal departments, you can get 73, we can save the delegate a counting, you can get 70 some odd departments. But I have here the organization chart of the State of Connecticut, there are 14 operating departments. Under agriculture and natural resources, there would be a head of the department, or the head of the commission, as it's called here—a single executive with an advisory board in this case, and an adjudication board -- administrative board; and under that Agricultural and Natural Resources Department, Commissioner of Farms and Markets, Milk Administrator, Milk Regulation Board, Connecticut Regional Marketing Authority, State Board of Veterinary Registration Examination, State Board of Fisheries and --

RICHARDS: I fully appreciate the remarks made from the -- by the delegate from Kauai and there was one -- the point on which I wish to inform this Convention is that a particular proposal was presented to the Committee on Agriculture, Conservation and Land, providing for just such a setup as is in Connecticut, and it was voted down 100 per cent except for the chairman. Now, I'm just throwing before this Convention a particular thought that because certain delegates do feel that there should be independent boards, that this situation should be taken care of. It is entirely up to the Convention. I'm holding no brief for the particular points involved. I'm just merely stating that I do not know whether 20 is going to be sufficient.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair feels that if 20 is not the proper number, some delegate should propose an amendment to this section; otherwise, I think further discussion is not in order.

CROSSLEY: I'd like to continue, if I could, uninterrupted. I was trying to point out that when you look at states like New Jersey, that is limited and does operate under 20, and some of these other states, that the whole purpose of trying to get a fewer number of boards is just to prevent what the previous speaker is talking about, and that is that every man who is going to be in charge of some division of government will have an entire independent setup of his own. If you limit the number, it will be found that those functions of government that are well related can be brought together and put under a single department without losing any of the efficiency. As a matter of fact, every single study that has been made on this subject, every revision of a state constitution, has brought about a limiting of the number for the sole purpose of bringing together these departments and trying in that manner to cut the cost of government and to bring about a more efficient government in so doing.

Now, as to Connecticut rejecting this a hundred per cent, Connecticut has not yet had the opportunity to vote on the Connecticut report. It has been held up by one section that has nothing to do with the consolidation of departments. It has to do entirely with reapportionment. I went into the National Municipal League when I was in New York last month and talked to the people who have written the report, and they told me that reapportionment is the only thing holding up the Connecticut report, and that is because a few districts, in reapportionment, do not want to lose the representation they now have and under reapportionment they would lose that, and therefore would lose control of the State Assembly; and that is the only thing holding up the report. Every other section has been adopted.

RICHARDS: I rise to a point of personal privilege.

CHAIRMAN: State your point.

RICHARDS: I believe delegate from Kauai misinterpreted my remarks. My remarks had nothing to do with the rejection or not of the State of Connecticut. I was discussing the matter of the Committee of Agriculture, Conservation and Land and it had nothing to do with the State of Connecticut. I am heartily in agreement, personally, with the remarks of the delegate from Kauai regarding the matter of conserving the cost of government by consolidation. I am merely pointing out to this Convention that the report that is coming out from the committee does not favor complete consolidation as is suggested.

LOPER: I wish to speak in support of the committee report and the position taken by the delegate from Kauai and add just this additional argument, which I don't believe has been brought out. Part of the reason for limiting the number to 20 is based upon a principle of organization, good administrative organization whether military, business or governmental, and that is that there is a limit to the spread of supervisory authority and responsibility, and by limiting it—as a matter of fact 20 is too many to be supervised by any one executive—but by limiting it, it's an invitation when some new function of government comes along, to find one of the existing departments to assign it to instead of setting up another commission or department.

HEEN: I rise to a point of information.

CHAIRMAN: Will you state your point, please.

HEEN: I would like to ask the delegate from Kauai, in the setup that he first spoke about, there would be one department relating to agriculture and other related subjects. Now, does that mean that the present Board of Agriculture, Forestry and Conservation would be abandoned or that that particular agency would be within the department that you spoke about?

CROSSLEY: Mr. Chairman, if I may answer that question. It certainly would not be abandoned. It's simply that under a Department of Agriculture, you would probably add conservation and lands; you would add fisheries; you would add a number of things, natural resources, and a lot of other things that would have a natural affinity for the section itself, rather than set up independent departments for all of those things.

HEEN: That is, there would be a separate division, say, of the over-all department. Is that correct?

CROSSLEY: That's correct.

HEEN: I think we have one setup that is similar to that at the present time. That is the Department of Institutions, where you have under that department the territorial penitentiary, the industrial schools, the territorial hospital, and maybe one or two others. But those do not have any separate boards, as I understand it. Is that not so, Mr. Delegate from Kauai?

CROSSLEY: I'm sorry, I didn't hear the question, but my colleague, he says it is.

HEEN: That's correct. Now another question. As you know, we have several boards, like the Board of Dental Examiners, the Board of Engineers, Architects and Surveyors, the Board of Health, the Board of Medical Examiners, the Board of Optometrists, the Board of Osteopathy, the Board of Hairdressers, Cosmetologists and Cosmeticians. What would you do with all those boards? Put them under one department and what would you call that department?

CROSSLEY: I would like to make it clear that what I have proposed, or what the committee has proposed, and the majority have adopted in this first paragraph of Section 10 is not as to how they shall be consolidated, but only to the point that there shall be not more than 20, and if you limit the number to 20, the consolidation will have to be worked out within that number. Under all of those things -- all of those would be consolidated unquestionably under one appropriate department, single executive.

ROBERTS: I'd like to speak in support of the proposal. The section, to me, is a very valuable one. It goes to the very heart of proper executive function and integration of operations so that the governor, the chief executive, has a limited number of departments that he, personally, can keep in touch with and can follow the functions and operations of those departments. The section does not spell out how the existing departments are to be allocated, that is left for the legislature. The legislature then can re-allocate and place the departments where they think they properly belong. This proposal merely provides an adequate method of administration with a limited number of departments so that the executive can keep personally in touch with their operation and see to it that the executive functions are effectively carried out in the State. I think the purpose is good and I think we ought to support the proposal.

TAVARES: I am in sympathy with the purpose of this proposal, but it seems to me there is one missing link here. I notice that in the Model Constitution where they have such a provision, they have a self-executing provision, and so if the legislature doesn't act, the governor can by executive order see that they are consolidated. Now, I am in sympathy with reducing these things, but suppose we miss and leave one too many outside. Now, which ones of the departments are going to be void, and which ones are going to be valid? There is one question that isn't answered. What are you going to do about it until the next legislature meets if you haven't consolidated them all at one time? We're going to go into a new era here where we should have 20 departments, but what's going to happen in the meantime when we become a State? Who is going to do the consolidating if the legislature hasn't done it before that? And which departments are going to be void because they are over the 20 limit? I think by leaving out the Model Constitution self-executing portion giving the governor power to do it, subject to revocation by the legislature, you've only done half the job.

HAYES: A point of information. I would like to know, since the committee has reported this out and recommended that within not more than 20 principal departments, now I would like to know whether they have an idea what the 20 principal departments will be? I would like to see it spelled out.

OKINO: I believe the delegate from Kauai has already given an explanation on that point. The commission established by the Connecticut legislature worked on this problem not only 60 days or 90 days, they have spent a considerable number of years. Before the New Jersey Constitution was revised, there was also a special committee which did considerable work on the subject matter of reorganization of the administrative departments and boards. What our committee has done was merely to accept the benefit of these profound and long studies made by experts serving on these commissions. If New Jersey and Connecticut felt, and it does include several other states, they could have consolidated and allocated the various existing boards, commissions and departments into less than 20 and in some states 18, we felt that the State of Hawaii certainly, with no more than probably about half a million people, should be able to consolidate our 75 boards, commissions and licensing boards. Now, it is for that reason that the committee proposal contains the specific statement, namely, that the method shall be left with the discretion of the legislature.

In reply to the statement made by Delegate Tavares, I think the answer is this. No one expects that the now-existing 75 boards, licensing boards, commissions, departments could be allocated within 20 principal departments. I think the matter could be worked out in a schedule so that the legislature may, within the next two years or perhaps three years, reorganize the existing boards, commissions and departments so that it will comply with the provision of Section 10 now recommended by your committee.

KING: The only point at issue is, is 20 departments sufficient. They're not being allocated in the Constitution; it's merely a provision that the principal executive functions shall be allocated by law. Now if 20 is enough, why let's pass the first section. If 20 isn't enough, why let's amend it to read 24, and I think that's the only point.

Now for the further point that Delegate Tavares raises, that is not covered here. But it simply says, "All executive and administrative offices" and so forth, "shall be allocated by law." Presumably it's an instruction to the legislature to make such an allocation at the first session after statehood has been achieved.

ANTHONY: I think Delegate Tavares has raised a rather serious defect in this proposal. The very thing that we want to accomplish, namely a consolidation, is left up in the air. Now we all know the great multiplicity of bureaus and departments that the federal government has had and the difficulty that the President has had with his reorganization plan. Now, it seems to me if we follow the Model Constitution provision and incorporate some place in this section, or elsewhere, executive power to permit the governor to effect a reorganization of departments and consolidation and, if you will, submit it to the legislature, but nevertheless give the executive the power so that something will be accomplished. If you leave it up in the air completely, then there is no assurance that the consolidation that the committee wants to accomplish will ever be accomplished.

CHAIRMAN: I believe that the delegate is at liberty to propose such an inclusion.

KING: We've discussed this section for quite a long time and no one has offered a specific amendment. Now if either Delegate Anthony or Delegate Tavares has an amendment to offer, I suggest they submit it. Meanwhile, I move that we defer action on Section 1 -- paragraph one of Section 10 and proceed to paragraph two of Section 10.

KAGE: I notice someone mentioning something about the Model State Constitution. There's a very interesting question posed here. May I read the question. It says "Why 20 departments instead of 40, 30 or 10?" It is found on page 32, second paragraph on the right column. Very, very interesting article. If you care to have me read that short little paragraph, I'd be very happy to do so.

CHAIRMAN: I beg your pardon. Is that an answer to the question?

KAGE: Yes.

CHAIRMAN: Read it.

KAGE:

> Why 20 departments instead of 40, 30 or 10? The answer is the result of careful thought and study of much administrative experience. Students of administration have long agreed that the "span of control" or number of subordinates which an individual should supervise must be carefully limited if the supervisor is to know his men and to keep their efforts properly coordinated. In military organizations, span of control rarely exceeds five or six subordinates. In business, it is not likely to run higher than 10 or 15.

WOOLAWAY: I would like to second the motion of President King so that a proper amendment can be written up on this matter.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that this matter be deferred.

ROBERTS: May I speak on that?

CHAIRMAN: You may, Delegate Roberts.

ROBERTS: I think the only question that has been raised is the question of providing an effective date for the setting up of the 20 departments. I think it's extremely difficult, and I think it would require adequate time to study the problem and to make the proper investigations so the legislature can act in setting up those 20 departments. I think if we ask the committee dealing with ordinances and continuity of law, or we can put a section in the present proposal which would have this section effective four years from the date that the Constitution goes into effect, which would give the legislature —the first one—an opportunity to get a commission to study the problem and to act on it subsequently. I will, therefore, move that it be the sense of this committee that four years be permitted for this reorganization to go into effect.

CHAIRMAN: I believe your motion will be out of order unless the motion to defer is withdrawn.

ROBERTS: I indicated the basis for speaking on the motion, and then I would like to ask whether instead of deferring it, we could act on that basis and we could dispose of the problem in that way.

TAVARES: I think that would be satisfactory.

KING: I have no objection, but I'd like to see the Committee of the Whole get along. My understanding is that Delegate Tavares raised two questions, not only as to the time limit, but as to the agency, in case the legislature fails to make such an allocation by law, whether the chief executive would then be authorized to do so. Though I'm not sure that the motion offered by Delegate Roberts will cure it, however if that seems satisfactory, I withdraw my motion to defer action.

DOI: I am convinced that Delegate Roberts' motion will expedite matters, therefore I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded that the sense of this Convention is that Section 10, paragraph one shall be approved in substance and that a further amendment will be made to take care of the situation brought up by Delegate Tavares. Is that a correct statement of your motion?

ROBERTS: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: All those in favor of the motion as stated, please say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

KING: Just to bring it before the committee, I move that we tentatively approve of paragraph two of Section 10.

TAVARES: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that we tentatively approve paragraph two of Section 10.

ASHFORD: I move to amend the section by putting a period at the -- by inserting after "confirmation of the Senate," "and may be removed with the consent of the Senate," deleting the rest -- the remainder of the section.

DOI: I second that motion.

ASHFORD: The purpose of it is that it doesn't seem to me right that department heads should be removed at the pleasure of the governor, particularly the attorney general. The attorney general interpreting the law should not be subject to removal, in my opinion, by the governor if he doesn't accede in his interpretation to the wishes of the chief executive.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the second paragraph be amended.

SERIZAWA: I would like to pose a question to the chairman of the committee.

SILVA: Point of order. I would like to hear the amendment as made, moved and seconded.

CHAIRMAN: I thought maybe some of the other delegates would. Second paragraph of Section 10. It has been moved that it be amended to read in the last sentence:

> Such single executive shall be appointed by the governor subject to the confirmation of the Senate and may be removed with the consent of the Senate.

Is that correct?

HEEN: If we are going to do that, then in that particular provision or somewhere else in that same section, there should be a provision for a definite term of office.

FONG: I would like to amend the amendment by adding at the period of that paragraph the words as follows --

CHAIRMAN: Which period?

FONG: Period after the words, "with the consent of the Senate," the last period in the last paragraph. "Excepting however, that the attorney general shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this State at the same general election as the governor and hold office for the same term. He shall be a licensed attorney at law of the State of Hawaii and shall possess the qualifications provided in the fourth paragraph of Section 1 of Article ___," referring to the qualifications of the governor.

KAUHANE: I second that motion.

FONG: Speaking in behalf of the motion, I would like to refer the delegates to the Manual which has been given to us by the Legislative Reference Bureau, turning to page 187 and 188. You will note that in page 187 and 188, it deals with the attorney general, as to how he is appointed or elected in the various states. You will note in this appendix that there are only four states which appoint their attorney general. All the rest of the states -- There is one state which gives to the Supreme Court the power to appoint the attorney general, four states give the governor the power to appoint the attorney general, and in all the other states out of the 48 states, that is 43 out of the 48 states provide for the election of the attorney general.

The attorney general should be elected because I feel that he is the man who should interpret the laws of the State. He should be independent of the executive because if he is not independent of the executive, he will be prone to construe the laws, that is to interpret the laws to favor the executive. He should be free from the legislature because if he was not free from the legislature, he would be biased towards the legislature. So following the program and following the practice of the 44 states of the Union, I feel that the attorney general should be an elective officer.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Fong, does the Chair understand that your amendment would retain the language inserted by Delegate Ashford's amendment?

FONG: That is true.

CHAIRMAN: That is true?

FONG: Yes.

FUKUSHIMA: Speaking for the amendment proposed by Delegate Fong, I'd like to point out that not only 44 states elect their attorney general, but also it would be well in line to check the Missouri Constitution which was revised very recently. There the attorney general is still an elective official.

The attorney general's function is not only an advisor to the executive. He has many, many functions which are not close to the executive. He is the chief enforcement -- law enforcement officer of the State. He also drafts bills for the legislature; he also deals with public charities; he supervises equitable proceedings for the abatement of nuisances; he intervenes in divorce proceedings where collusion is suspected; and he does a host of other things which are not pertinent to the executive.

Secondly, his function to the executive is merely an advisory one, it's merely ministerial, his opinion is merely an opinion. The executive officers, the administrative heads, do not have to follow their opinions -- his opinions.

I am also inclined to go along with the proponent of the amendment in view of the fact that the attorney general possesses great discretionary powers. He has quasi-judicial powers which is the inherent right of his office in interpreting certain laws, and not even the courts can touch that. The attorney general's office should not be subservient to the executive. That was one of the reasons why the delegate from Molokai introduced her amendment, because she felt that the attorney general should not be at the mercy of the governor when his opinion would not coincide with that of the chief executive.

TAVARES: I have a lot to say about this but it's ten o'clock. I think we ought to defer this until tomorrow. There's going to be a great deal of argument on this. I don't think this ought to be --

KING: I feel that we should go on as long as we can. We are just falling behind. We haven't finished the report of the Committee on Taxation and Finance and if this carries over to tomorrow and we have Agriculture coming up tomorrow, let's go on at least to half past ten.

TAVARES: I move to defer further action on this proposal and to take up the next proposal that the delegate has just mentioned, the next amendment on this.

CHAIRMAN: I beg your pardon, Delegate Tavares, what was your motion?

TAVARES: Well, go on to the next one then, Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: The next what?

TAVARES: Paragraph.

CHAIRMAN: Is that a motion?

HEEN: The motion, as I understand it, was to defer further consideration of the second paragraph at this time, until some later time. I second that motion.

CHAIRMAN: It has been moved and seconded that the paragraph under discussion be deferred until a later date.

FONG: We could dispose of this question right now. There's no need of deferring this question. We must know where we stand on this problem and I don't see any reason for deferring it.

ANTHONY: To discuss this question will take a full hour and I, for one, will want to take as much time as the Chair will allow me to discuss this. And there are a lot of delegates that are not here. I don't see why we can't move on to a less controversial subject than this one. You've got to have a full debate on this. There's no use fooling yourself about it. Just because one quarter of the delegates aren't here, there's no reason to press for a vote at this time.

CHAIRMAN: Any one else wish to speak on the move to defer?

APOLIONA: My mind is still open as far as the selection of the attorney general and I'd like to have more time to study this thing over, and I would go along for deferment of this paragraph.

LOPER: I have a minor amendment which I think might pass, but perhaps I'm out of order.

CHAIRMAN: I think the only motion before the house is for deferment, unless you wish to amend that.

DOI: I believe we should decide the question tonight. If we need more members, ask the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring them in.

FUKUSHIMA: There is no need of delaying this thing. Why should we tackle something which is easy or which is not controversial. What difference does it make whether we take it up tonight or not. The fact that it is controversial should be the very reason why we should take it up tonight.

PORTEUS: Let's not fuss over whether we're going to vote on this tonight. The matter is very easily resolved. We can take a roll call vote and those that want the election will vote "aye" and those that don't want election will vote "no." One side or the other will rapidly analyze to see whether or not they've got the winning vote. And then several of us will stand up and we'll change our votes in order to be able to reconsider. So it's perfectly all right, there's no harm done. It still can be reconsidered tomorrow. It will be. So I think we'll take roll call on the thing and we'll watch the vote, we'll change, and then we can have reconsideration. But we won't dispose of it tonight. That's all right. Let's have the roll call and let's get the vote.

SAKAKIHARA: Let's have roll call.

CHAIRMAN: The motion before the house is a motion to defer. All those in favor of deferring this section will say "aye." All those opposed. The Chair will ask for a standing vote. Is a standing vote satisfactory?

DELEGATES: Roll call.

CHAIRMAN: How many want roll call? Roll call is called. The motion before the house is a motion to defer.

ROBERTS: May I speak to that question before we vote?

CHAIRMAN: I don't think it's proper to speak to it at this time. It's already -- the vote has been called in one instance. This is just a case of dividing the house to see whether the motion shall carry or fail. Will the Clerk please call the roll?

LOPER: What are we voting on?

CHAIRMAN: The motion before the house is whether or not paragraph three shall be deferred or not. Paragraph two, I'm sorry.

APOLIONA: In substance the motion before the Committee now is whether the attorney general shall be elected.

CHAIRMAN: In substance, the motion before the Committee is whether this paragraph shall be deferred or not.

DELEGATE: Take it easy, take it easy.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair will not recognize any more speakers. The Clerk will call the roll.

Ayes, 27. Noes, 23 (Akau, Ashford, Doi, Fong, Fukushima, Ihara, Kage, Kam, Kanemaru, Kauhane, Lai, Luiz, Lyman, Mau, Nielsen, Noda, Sakakihara, Serizawa, Shimamura, St. Sure, J. Trask, Yamamoto, Yamauchi). Not voting, 13 (Arashiro, Gilliland, Holroyde, Kawahara, Kido, Lee, Mizuha, Phillips, Sakai, Silva, A. Trask, White, Wirtz).

CHAIRMAN: The motion is lost - - the motion to defer is carried.

FONG: I move that we rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

FUKUSHIMA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: It's been moved and seconded we rise, report progress, ask leave to sit again. All those in favor say "aye." Opposed. Carried.

JUNE 21, 1950 • Morning Session

CHAIRMAN: The Committee of the Whole please come to order. When we gave up last night, we were on the second paragraph of Section 10 of Committee Proposal No. 22. That paragraph was amended first by Delegate Ashford, amended again by Delegate Fong, then there was a motion to defer which was duly carried. When that motion was carried, we moved to adjourn. What is the wish of the Convention?

LOPER: Will you please review for the committee the two amendments that have been made to this paragraph?

CHAIRMAN: I will attempt to do so.

ASHFORD: Were those amendments made or were they merely offered and under discussion?

CHAIRMAN: The amendments were moved and seconded. Your amendment was then amended by Delegate Fong.

ASHFORD: Well, I would like to withdraw my amendment, if that is proper.

CHAIRMAN: I think the question is whether this matter which was deferred last night, is it in order to take it up today, Section 10, without any formal motion? The Chair understands that is proper. I will recognize Delegate Ashford.

ASHFORD: I would like to withdraw my amendment. It was directed primarily to the attorney general. Upon further consideration, it seems to me that a weak attorney general is subject always to direction and a strong attorney general if he were dismissed would result in the failure of re-election of the governor. So it is not quite as serious as I had thought upon my first impulse.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to state that the withdrawal of your amendment would automatically leave the paragraph before us as written. Is there any further discussion on that paragraph? Delegate Fong, that means that your amendment is washed out by the withdrawal of the amendment which you amended.

FONG: Under those circumstances I would like to renew my amendment.

CHAIRMAN: You may proceed.

FONG: Put in a comma after the word "governor."

CROSSLEY: Has the gentleman from the fifth yielded the floor? I have an amendment.

CHAIRMAN: He wants to state his amendment. Delegate Fong, is your amendment of this morning the same as the one of last night?

FONG: I have it now. "Excepting, however, that the attorney general shall be elected by the legally qualified voters of this State at the same general election as the governor and hold office for the same term. He shall be a licensed attorney at law of the State of Hawaii and shall possess the qualifications provided in the fourth paragraph of Section 1 of Article_____." The qualifications which I refer to are the qualifications set down for the governor, that is, he must be 35 years old, a resident, and so forth. I move for the adoption of the amendment.

FUKUSHIMA: I second the motion.

CHAIRMAN: The amendment has been duly made and seconded. Is there any further discussion on this point?

TAVARES: Just one short statement. I should like to remind the delegates present that the people of this territory through their duly elected legislators have spoken on this problem as far as the City and County of Honolulu is concerned. It has been significant to me that in speaking of popular election of officers the delegate who proposes this amendment has very carefully refrained from mentioning the two legal officers of the City and County who, after great deliberation by the legislature, have been made appointive because the elective system didn't work.

CHAIRMAN: Any further discussion on the motion?

FONG: I'd like to take exception to that remark. We were in Congress before the Congressional Committee of the Senate, the Senate Insular Affairs Committee, and it was there that Seth Richardson, who was sent down here to review the Massie case and to make recommendations to the Senate, spoke to the members of the Insular and Interior Affairs Committee and told them that we were on the verge of being given a commission form of government. And due to the fact that we were on the verge of being given a commission form of government, we were forced to accept the recommendation made by Mr. Seth Richardson, and that was the only reason why the city and county attorney and public prosecutor are not elected by the people of the Territory of Hawaii - - by the people of the City and County of Honolulu. If that was so, why wouldn't the city and county attorney of Maui or the city and county attorney of Kauai or the city and county attorney of the island of Hawaii, that is the county attorneys of the islands of Hawaii, Maui and Kauai, why aren't they appointed? The legislature didn't speak in their behalf because there was no pressure brought upon the legislature to change those officers from elective to appointive offices. But it was due to the fact that pressure was levied on your legislature, pressure was levied to the extent that if we did not follow the recommendation of Seth Richardson that we would be given a commission form of government, and it was Mr. Seth Richardson who stated that we did not know how close we came to a commission form of government.

CROSSLEY: I would like to ask the last speaker when that recommendation and report was made, when was it that they were under pressure—1931, 1932?

FONG: 1931 according to - -

CROSSLEY: Well, what has happened then? I'd like to ask if that was the pressure at that time, that pressure no longer exists, it hasn't existed since - - certainly since way after that time, and why wasn't the system changed then? If it was only done under duress and to accomplish a purpose, which it apparently did accomplish, I don't argue that with them, but I can't see why it wasn't changed then. It's been a long time since 1931, nearly twenty years.

FONG: Mr. Crossley has been in the legislature. He knows how difficult it is to change a bill. Reapportionment has been with us for 50 years and we have tried to change reapportionment and we haven't been able to succeed yet.

CHAIRMAN: The Chair would like to say that we intend this morning to eliminate the debating society. I would like the delegates to say all that they have to say when they get up, so they won't have to speak more than five or six times.

SILVA: Mr. Chairman.

KING: Mr. Chairman.

CHAIRMAN: President King.

SILVA: You look me in the eye and recognize somebody else. Thank you.

CHAIRMAN: He has been waiting to be recognized.

KING: I yield to Senator Silva if he wishes to be recognized.

CHAIRMAN: Delegate Silva.

SILVA: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was just about to say that I disagree with Mr. Fong in its entirety, as long as I remember about county attorneys. We have a county attorney here, former county attorney, the good chairman of this committee, and he's asked me time and again that he thought for the best interest of the counties that all county attorneys should be appointed rather than elected. There's no question - - and I believe there is something to that. Now, these county attorneys get elected every two years and there's no question that they get around. They have to do it otherwise they just can't get elected. And just to show you what kind of good county attorney he is, he was so good in fact that he tried to do the right thing that he got defeated. So you can see that the fellow that gets around and makes the most promises gets elected. So I think if you want a good county attorney, I think he better be appointed rather than elected, and I think your attorney general of the Territory, like the attorney general of the United States, should be appointed rather than elected. That's my speech and that's all.

KING: I'd like to speak in opposition to the amendment. I do so with a certain amount of hesitation. There is always the imputation that we are speaking here in some anticipation of future political fortune. That certainly is not the basis on which I oppose this particular amendment.

We are trying to establish a State Constitution that would have a strong executive and leave that executive with sufficient authority to carry on his duties. Now if the government attorney general is elected and has a mandate from the people direct, he may and often will cross swords with his superior, the governor of the State. In California, where they have an elective attorney general, there have been two very sad illustrations of that point. When Governor Warren was serving in a previous term, the attorney general was a Mr. Kenney of the Democratic Party who immediately used his office as a springboard to run against Governor Warren in the next election. As it happened, he was defeated. More recently the attorney general, also elected, of the State of California is a gentleman who has refused to cooperate with the governor in order to root out organized crime in California. Those of you who read the current periodicals will read that this gentleman, I've forgotten his name, has pooh-poohed the idea that crime exists in California and is almost ready to be indicted as being hand in glove with the criminals. He is an elected attorney general of the State of California and he's beyond any control by the governor of California. So, the elective system hasn't worked too well.

Now, I am sympathetic towards the point that has been made by others, that perhaps we are trying to create a superman out of this governor of the State of Hawaii. But, I don't think that's true. He has to run for election every four years. He has to answer to the people of Hawaii on the hustings or he won't be re-elected, and you're also electing a lieutenant governor.

Now, there's another angle. There are two balances to the governor's powers. First, the legislature. If the legislature doesn't give him the money or doesn't give him the authority to carry out the duties of his office or refuses him additional grants that would allow him to exercise powers beyond those granted in the Constitution, he'll not be able to do very much. We have a very fine illustration of that in recent American history, where there was a Democratic Congress in the last two years of President Hoover's term and he was unable to do anything for those two years. Every proposal he made was put in the wastepaper basket by the Congress, and after he went out of office, we had a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress and everything went through fine. So, I think the legislature is the first great brake on the governor. Now, I'm one of those who believes that the legislature is the senior one of the three equal branches. There isn't any question about it, because they come direct from the people and they're re-elected every two years and they hold the power of the purse strings. So that's one barrier against the governor's actions.

The third is the power of the judiciary to find certain things illegal, not in accordance with statutes or not in accordance with the Constitution.

So, whoever this governor of Hawaii may be, he'll not be any superman. We've had right here under appointive power a governor with all the powers that we are proposing to grant this governor whom we are going to elect and he hasn't been any superman. There hasn't been anything he's been able to do against the wishes of the people and against the wishes of the legislature. So I think we may disregard that fear that the State Constitution is clothing one man with too much power. On the other hand, if you do not give him sufficient power to carry out the duties of his office, he'll be unable to function properly as the chief executive. So I am opposed to the amendment on that basis.

CHAIRMAN: Are there any other delegates who wish to speak?

LEE: I am sure that the Chairman didn't mean fully about cutting off debate on this rather important question. We're in the Committee of the Whole and we're supposed to probe into all phases on this question so that every delegate in this committee would have resolved in his own mind and conscience how he wants to vote on this matter. So that cutting off the "debating society" I am sure was meant in a humorous light rather than in a serious light.

CHAIRMAN: May the Chair state he, the Chair, is sympathetic with the point raised. However, my point was we wanted to give everyone a chance to speak.

LEE: The first question that comes to my mind would be to ask, what are the duties of an attorney general of the new State, and in checking the Revised Laws of the Territory—I'm sorry I wasn't here last night, I'm not sure whether it was read last night—in Section 1501 of the Revised Laws, it states the duties of the attorney general under Chapter 22. Let us analyze it then. "The attorney general shall appear for the Territory personally or by deputy in all the courts of record, in all cases criminal or civil in which the Territory may be a party, or be interested, and may in like manner appear in the district courts in such cases." We may assume safely from that languaage that it has no connection with the office of the governor.

"Section 1502. Prosecutes offenders, enforces bonds." The language reveals that he has the duty to be vigilant in detecting offenders against the laws of the Territory and prosecute the same with due diligence, and the matter of enforcing bonds. These are two duties that are placed upon the attorney general for which he would be responsible regardless of whether or not he was appointed by the governor or elected by the people.

"Section 1503. Gives opinions. He shall, when required, give his opinions upon questions of law submitted to him by the governor, the legislature, or the head of any department." These duties, it would seem to me, would have some connection with the governor's office, certainly a strong governor under an appointive system. I'm speaking of the possible disadvantage it would be to make a stooge out of the attorney general. In other words, a strong governor could have an attorney general render an opinion according to the policies that he desires. I believe the late President Franklin Delano Roosevelt was accused of that as well as many other presidents. However, the duties of the attorney general in giving opinions includes, besides giving opinions to the governor, his duty includes giving opinions to the legislature as well as to all heads of the departments.

The other, "Section 1504. Advises public officers. He shall, without charge, at all times when called upon, give advice and counsel to the heads of departments, the high sheriff, magistrates and other public officers" et cetera. Well, that's part of his duties which would relate, it seems to me, to the executive branch of the government.

Section 1505 relates to giving aid to the poor. In other words, besides acting as the so-called legal advisor of the governor, legislature and heads of the departments, he owes a duty beyond that, his duty goes right to the heart of aiding the citizenry who cannot afford legal counsel.

And Section 1506 relates to "No fee, not to act as attorney. He shall not receive any fee or reward from or in behalf of any person or prosecutor, for services rendered in a prosecution of his business . . . nor be concerned as counsel or attorney for either party in any civil action depending upon the same state of facts."

Then 1507 relating to accounting of money which comes through his hands; the next one relates to his salary; then the next section relates to the attorney general and his assistants and his power of removal of his assistants and the using of his seal.

Now, analyzing these duties, it would seem to me that it would be incumbent upon all the delegates here to weigh the questions of wherein lies the duty of the attorney general of the State of Hawaii. Where is it to be, to the executive branch of the government or is it to the people in general? In my mind I came here to this Convention with an open mind on this question and as a lawyer would have felt that the attorney general as an advisor to the governor should be appointed and confirmed by the Senate. However, I came here this morning, and realizing that there was some question on it, asked to look into the problem from its inception and find and come to this conclusion right at this moment, when I've read this matter, that his duty is not only to advise the governor but his duty is first and last to the people of this Territory, of this new State. I can see a situation where the legislature and the governor may be in conflict as to a policy. If he is appointed by the governor, would not his loyalty tend by human nature to favor the person who he appointed -- who appointed him?

Furthermore, it is in cases of conflict that we must test this question of whether or not he should be appointed or elected. And as I said, when I first came to this Convention, my opinion was that the attorney general should be appointed by the governor and confirmed by the Senate. As these questions arise, if the answer to my question is that the attorney general is responsible to the people and not to one branch of the government, then I say that he should be elected. Unless I can be shown good cause otherwise this morning, it would seem to me that looking at this question from a de novo basis, the attorney general should be elected. I point to these duties of the attorney general, and weighing the advantages as well as the disadvantages of appointment and the elective system and come to this conclusion.

What is then the danger under which an attorney general would be placed in if he were elected. The dangers would be that he would be just like any other politician, so to speak. Well, you mean just like the governor? The governor is elected. Where the judiciary might be well construed to be different from the attorney general because the judiciary interprets the laws and takes into consideration not only a conflict between the legislative branch of the government, but also the executive branch of the government, I could see well a distinction between the appointment of the judiciary as compared to the appointment of the attorney general. And, therefore, I would like to hear full debate on this matter, if that matter has not been fully debated before, and that's why I say that it seems to me, on such an important question as this, we should not try to close debate on this matter.

A. TRASK: I am wrestling with my soul on this question like the rest of the delegates here, but I cannot help but feel that the relationship of client and attorney is a privileged one. What is said between a client and an attorney is a sacred confessional matter, privileged in the law, and no one can give evidence if they do not care to do so. Of course, that's in private conference of a private nature between a client and his attorney.

Let's move it into the realm of public affairs. We're still concerned, however, with the question of a philosophy. When a political party is moved into office, it is moved into office because it has put forth to the people a program which the people have adopted, adopted for that particular time to solve certain problems that confront the people. The question is, therefore, should there be an election in Hawaii by a group, by a party which advocates even as severe a thing as the breaking up of the Bishop Estate. Do you think for one moment a program such as that advocated by a governor could have elected an attorney general who would be opposed to that? Would not the will of the people be frustrated when you elect a governor to make more lands available to break up existing situations here if it's deemed advisable. I'm not saying I'm for breaking up the Bishop Estate, but that is a stark problem. It is a problem. It is in the thinking of all of us here. What shall we do, because the problem is here.

Now, pursuing that thought for a moment. It would be unfair, it seems to me altogether, to have a legal advisor elected who would be opposed to the program of the governor. There is a confidential nature of a public character, however, whereby to put a program into effect you must have legal advice from a person who is sympathetic to that particular philosophy. And it is not a trivial matter. Just imagine, for instance, when this country in 1933 in the direful condition of poverty, when people were hanging sheriffs, threatening judges, turning over milk wagons, people lining up outside of restaurant doors ready to dig into the garbage for food. Those were the conditions in America in 1933 because I was back there in the East. I was in Havana when Roosevelt was shot at and Cermak of Chicago died. It's a real situation and the problem can very well arise when the two parties have programs so divergent in viewpoints that upon the election of an attorney general advocating such a program would determine the welfare of the people.

It would seem to me, therefore, consistent even with the provisions that the delegate from the fourth district has cited, namely, Chapter 22, the powers of the attorney general. They are not extraordinary powers. They are powers that are usual to any attorney general, namely the enforcement of the law. He is the civil and he is the criminal prosecutor, he must uphold the law. That is nothing extraordinary at all. That is his usual, traditional duties. But what we're concerned, and we are primarily concerned with is drafting a convenant for the people which will promote assiduously the program and welfare of the people. And since we are an organization, a society that goes from time to time with changing views as to politics and to welfare, we must have a person learned in the law who will advocate the program which the people have voted for. So, I cannot help but feel strongly, I am quite torn in soul about negativing an election to office of a public person. I think everybody -- I believe sincerely in elective offices as much as possible, but I cannot help but feel that with experience back of us we must have as near as possible a confidential relationship between the governor and his attorney general who will support his, the governor's program.

LEE: A point of -- question. Will the speaker yield to a question?

CHAIRMAN: State the question, please.

LEE: Now, the duties of the attorney general is also to -- from the attorney-client basis, would also go to the legislature, wouldn't it?

A. TRASK: Yes.
