CERTIFICATE

We hereby certify that the proceedings of the Hawaii State Constitutional Convention of 1978 are true and correct, that the originals have been duly signed by the President and Secretary of the Convention and that they have been prepared and printed in two volumes as follows:

Volume I consisting of the official journal and documents of the Convention;

Volume II consisting of the debates of the Committee of the Whole as assembled by article.

The two volumes have been prepared and printed in accordance with the provisions of Act 17, Special Session, Session Laws of Hawaii, 1977.

President of the Convention

Secretary of the Convention

Editor's Notes

Volume I of the Proceedings of the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 consists essentially of the journal, prepared for each day of the Convention and approved by the presiding officer, and the documents and communications of the Convention.

In contrast with 1968, the 1978 Convention met for 7 more days than the 1968's 58 days and had 20 more delegates than the 82 of 1968, from 51 districts throughout the State, 33 more than in 1968.

For these reasons, as well as the particularly "grass-roots" character of the Convention, the volume of material produced in 1978--as evidenced in both books--was substantially greater than that produced in 1968. In terms of Volume I, this resulted in: more than twice the number of pages of the 1968 volume; the addition of a new section in the Convention Documents recording the 18 committee proposals and indicating their step-by-step revisions; elimination or streamlining of some of the more traditional phraseology used in previous journal editions; and a complete rewriting of the Second Reading debates, changing the former verbatim style of dialogue (as in the debates in Volume II) to a much shorter, more concise and less expansive summarization style.

Preface

When the third Constitutional Convention convened on July 5, 1978, it was to examine a document that had had its foundations laid in 1950. At the time the Constitution was written, Hawaii was still hoping for statehood and 9 years would pass before it came about. The framers of the Constitution were hoping in a sense to impress Congress with Hawaii's stability and readiness to become part of the union, and they drafted essentially a conservative document.

Having the experience of older states to draw upon, the drafters of the new Hawaii State Constitution came up with what the National Municipal League said "set a new high standard in the writing of a modern state constitution by a convention." This Constitution became effective on August 21, 1959.

In 1968 another state constitutional convention met to review the document which was still in its teens. The driving force behind the 1968 meeting was the U.S. supreme court ruling on one man, one vote, which called for big changes in the method of establishing senatorial and representative districts.

The 82 convention delegates met at the McKinley High School gymnasium and after a long, hot summer recommended 23 amendments. All but one, which lowered the voting age from 20 to 18, were approved by the voters; after the United States adopted a constitutional amendment lowering the voting age to 18, however, Hawaii followed suit and in 1972 amended its Constitution to set the voting age at 18. This amendment was one of only five constitutional changes made prior to the 1978 Convention that had been proposed by the legislature and then ratified by the voters.

In 1976 Hawaii voters were given an early chance by the legislature to vote for another constitutional convention and by a wide margin they approved.

Under Act 17, Session Laws of Hawaii, Special Session of 1977, the legislature provided for the election of 102 delegates from 51 districts throughout the State. This is in contrast to the 82 delegates elected from 18 districts for the 1968 convention. The legislature provided for a total budget of $2.5 million, which was not fully utilized. The election for constitutional convention delegates was held on May 20, 1978. The compensation mechanism under which delegates were paid $1,000 a month, beginning May 21, for a period of 4 months, was designed to foster a deadline-oriented attitude.

It should be noted that a substantial effort was made, beginning in 1976, to educate the public on the possible issues and the importance of the delegate election. The Citizens for Con-Con Education Committee originally started by the League of Women Voters and Common Cause Hawaii did an outstanding job, both with the public at large and particularly for the delegates prior to the actual Convention. The media gave full support to this effort. They did, however, advocate that the Convention be a "grass-roots" convention. Legislators, council members and other officeholders were discouraged from running as delegates. As a result, few did. In the 1968 convention, 1/3 of the 82 delegates were legislators and most of the rest were close to the political scene and relatively well acquainted before they convened.

In the 1978 Convention, there were only 7 delegates out of the 102 who had even held political office. Most delegates met for the first time at our first caucus. In 1968, there were 8 women; in 1978 there were 30. It was a relatively young group, with almost half the delegates under 34.

Finding a suitable site for the Convention was something of a problem. The historic old federal building, recently vacated, was finally selected as it afforded the best combination of location and office space. While some of the delegates were crowded for office space, after some renovation it proved quite workable. The large former office of the internal revenue service was used for plenary sessions, and the old courtrooms proved useful for large committee meetings.

Through the support and assistance of Senate President John Ushijima and House Speaker James Wakatsuki, the senate auditorium and conference rooms at the State Capitol were also used to accommodate committee hearings and informational sessions.

From the time of our first meeting, Governor Ariyoshi lent his personal support to facilitate the work of the Convention. However, he steadfastly refrained from taking any position on any of the amendments before the Convention. After the end of the Convention, the governor endorsed the work of the Convention and recommended acceptance of the amendments by the voters.

The social dynamics of putting together 102 people new to the political forum and charging them with organizing, electing officers, adopting rules, forming committees, studying issues, hearing testimony, debating and voting on amendments, and putting the recommended amendments in ballot form for the voters, all in a 2-1/2-month period, is asking almost too much for any such convention. In addition, an extension of time was not feasible. Aside from the pay terminations of delegates and staff, the proposed amendments had to be in the lieutenant governor's office by September 22 in order to be on the November ballot.

In organizing, the delegates adopted rules similar to those followed in the 1968 convention. The rules allowed the president to name the committee chairpersons, vice-chairpersons and members of the various committees. Provision was made for eight vice-presidents, one from each senatorial district. They were elected by the delegates from that district. The president, secretary and assistant secretary were elected by the Convention as a whole in closed balloting.

The vice-presidents met with the president on a regular basis to assist in the coordination of convention activities and represent the concerns of the delegates from their respective senatorial districts regarding the conduct of the Convention. The convention secretary and assistant secretary, to minimize conflicts, coordinated the task of scheduling committee meetings.

Provision was made for 14 standing committees and 2 administrative committees. Two new committees were provided for in this Convention--a Committee on Hawaiian Affairs and a Committee on Ethics. To reflect current concern with environmental matters, the agriculture committee was renamed the Committee on Environment, Agriculture, Conservation and Land (EACL).

In making committee assignments, each delegate was polled as to committee preference; every delegate was then assigned to the committee of first choice. Most delegates sat on three or four committees. The committee chairpersons had a heavy load; with 25 to 30 members on most standing committees, they presided over a group larger than the state senate. All delegates worked hard at educating themselves on all aspects of their committee responsibility. They had available extensive study material on each article of the Constitution prepared before the Convention by the Legislative Reference Bureau. They heard dozens of people, expert and lay, tell them how they should make changes. To afford voters on the neighbor islands input on proposals of concern to them, hearings were held on every island. At these neighbor island meetings, the work of each committee was reviewed by the chairperson or vice-chairperson. The convention vice-president from that island presided at these meetings.

The various proposals were referred by the president to the appropriate standing committees for review and action. The president was ably assisted in the work by his administrative assistant. Subsequent to the cutoff for submission of proposals, the various committees labored through the dozens of proposals that had been referred to them. In all, 835 proposals were introduced during the Convention. Under the Convention's rules, a committee chairperson could not sit on a proposal. If the committee did not vote it out, a delegate could bring it up in the Committee of the Whole, which was comprised of all 102 delegates. It was also possible to make amendments on Second Reading following the report of the Committee of the Whole. The Proceedings of the Convention will attest to this. It was in the Committee of the Whole as well as at Second Reading that most of the debate took place. The Committee of the Whole sessions were chaired by one of the vice-presidents or a delegate named by the president.

For the first half of the Convention, plenary sessions were limited largely to procedural matters in order to allow as much time as possible for committee hearings. In the latter part of the session, scheduling of the committee reports and proposals for action by the Convention also involved the various committee chairpersons and the chief clerk. A tight schedule was necessary to afford adequate time for debate on the proposed amendments. Evening meetings were often scheduled in order to accomplish this; a number of sessions on key issues ran well past midnight. Toward the end, the strain on the delegates was noticeable.

Numerous resolutions were introduced but as a matter of policy and in view of time constraints, introduction of resolutions was generally discouraged. In the closing days of the Convention, action was taken on a number of resolutions that were either "mahalo" in nature or designed to provide guidance to future conventions.

The Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing developed a budget for the $2.5 million authorized by the legislature. The convention president was authorized to modify and administer the budget as required by circumstances. The Convention was kept informed of budget allocations. The total amount authorized was not fully used.

Each delegate hired his/her own staff, and committee chairpersons retained added staff assistants to handle the committee workload. The attitude, effort and dedication of this group were noteworthy.

That this Convention had two groups, the so-called majority group and the independent group, has been well chronicled by the media and fully recorded in the debates. There is no question that this division detracted from the work of the Convention. There were many unnecessary parliamentary wrangles. Whether as a practical matter this could have been avoided is problematical. The schism developed when the Convention was first organized and a temporary chairman elected. A key issue pervading the Convention was that of initiative, recall and referendum (IRR). There was strong support by a large and vocal group for IRR and it was generally favored by the media. The majority group of the Convention was opposed to it--the independent group favored it. The division between the groups was further aggravated by the fact that in naming chairpersons for key standing committees, none were identified with the independent group. It should be noted that in spite of sometimes heated differences on the floor and in debate, delegates rarely aired feelings off the floor. Admittedly, the Convention was not helped by the factionalism, but in any political body a majority group with its leadership is a necessary function if the job is going to get done. This was especially true in the tight time-frame faced by the Convention.

The activities of the Convention were well covered by the press, radio and television stations. The coverage was excellent and the public was kept well informed. KHET-Hawaii Public Television taped many of the actual proceedings.

Space here does not permit a review of the many key issues that were examined and debated by the delegates. As previously noted, the IRR question was the big public issue before the Convention. The media devoted much time and attention to it, and lobbying for and against the measure was heavy. There was naturally considerable disappointment expressed when the Convention voted down any form of IRR.

On other issues, the delegates were all but unanimous in their support of some form of expenditure ceiling by the state government. Control of water resources and the need for a clean, healthful environment received considerable attention. The Convention examined the judicial system and provided for an appellate court and a new system for the selection of judges. In the legislative area, the delegates were concerned about providing adequate time checks to assure public awareness of pending legislation and review by legislators; one of the measures adopted was the requirement for a recess of 5 days, mid-term in the legislative session. With regard to elections, the Convention provided for staggered terms for state senators. It also supported a provision for a modified open primary where the voter can choose the ballot desired.

Although the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs was a new one, the Convention saw fit to afford strong support to a number of amendments designed to assure residents of Hawaiian ancestry greater control of policies and administration of, and recourse to, the benefits promised by the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act. Other amendments were made to provide for a comprehensive Hawaiian education program in the curriculum of the public schools.

Initially, many saw the majority group of the Convention as a stand-pat group and predicted little significant change to the Constitution, especially in view of their opposition to IRR. However, with 102 delegates change was inevitable. Unquestionably, some amendments were more legislative than constitutional. More than 100 amendments were proposed--some very minor, some largely significant. In all, the delegates tried in the short time available to address those matters of concern to the citizenry and, in so doing, to provide a better working document for the State. Time alone will be the judge of the accomplishments of the third Constitutional Convention.

In view of the number of amendments, the Committee on Submission and Information had a difficult time developing a ballot that would provide the citizens a fair opportunity to accept or reject individual amendments. A major effort to educate the voters on the proposed amendments was made. A public relations firm was retained to develop a broad-based program of information in the newspapers, radio and television. The theme of the program was "You can make a difference." In addition, a special information supplement covering all of the proposed amendments was published prior to the general election on November 7, 1978.

In addition, arrangements were made for the convention president to address a wide range of business, civic, union and trade groups to explain and review amendments and issues of interest. Other delegates also spoke to various community groups. A number of delegates expressed strong reservations or recommended "no" votes on some of the proposed amendments. This reflected their positions during the Convention. At the general election on November 7, 1978, the amendments as proposed were overwhelmingly approved by the electorate.

These amendments were challenged in both the state supreme court and the federal district court. The federal court dismissed the challenge and, except for a few minor proposed amendments, the state supreme court upheld the ballot and the ratification election and procedures.

However, beyond the legal controversy, a larger question remains as to whether 35 percent of those voting is sufficient for ratification, and the requirement may well be amended. Whether also there should be another constitutional convention in 1988 will be decided in 1986.

That the Convention was able to accomplish the work that it did within the time allotted was due in no small measure to an outstanding group of people, well experienced in their field, who were in charge of key support functions for the Convention. George M. Amimoto served as chief clerk and was responsible for the many faceted duties of that position. James T. Funaki, who also served with the 1968 convention, headed our legal support team. Richard F. Kahle, Jr. was responsible for the Legislative Reference Bureau staff. Tom Lee served as administrator of the Convention. Parliamentarians Benedict Goo and Masato "Opu" Sugihara earned their stipend. Harry K. Lee of the federal General Services Administration and Richard M. Nakamura and Akira Kubota of the state Department of Accounting and General Services were most supportive in our varied demands for space and supplies.

CONVENTION JOURNAL

FIRST DAY

Wednesday, July 5, 1978

In accordance with the provisions of Act 17, Session Laws of Hawaii, Special Session of 1977, the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 9:35 a.m. on Wednesday, July 5, 1978, by Delegate Floyd Pulham from the First Representative District who acted as temporary Chairman.

Upon welcoming the congregation, Chairman Pulham then appointed Delegates Andrews, Blake, Sterling, Rachel Lee, Peterson and Sakima to escort the Reverend David Kaupu of the Kamehameha Schools to the rostrum.

Reverend Kaupu then invoked the Divine Blessing.

Delegate Pulham thereupon addressed the Convention as follows:

"Good morning. I am rather reminded at this moment of the mosquito who found himself in a nudist colony--he didn't know where to begin either.

"We are gathered here to go about the very serious business of reviewing our State Constitution. I would remind you the word 'constitution' by itself doesn't mean very much. For there are states and nations with written constitutions and very little individual freedom or liberty, and there are others with no written constitution at all, but the people enjoy great civil liberties. It is, then, not the document but the political system contained therein which is important.

"In his Farewell Address of 1796, George Washington stated: 'The basis of our political system is the right of the people to make--and to alter--their constitutions of government.'

"It was toward that very end that all of us were elected as delegates to this Convention. I ask you to take special note of Washington's use of the word 'people.' Constitutions belong in that province of the people, by the people, and for the people, and no group or individual, regardless of purpose, has any right to usurp that basic right of the people.

"We have already spent over a month tied up with organizational and logistical considerations. I don't need to remind you that groups have been formed based upon other than constitutional issues.

"It is indeed a pity the established political system lacked the wisdom to foresee these problems. We now find ourselves using the same personnel and resources available to them, and through which much of these problems could have been handled in advance, freeing the Convention for its larger role, without the added burden of establishing its own political system.

"That was yesterday; today it is history--and let us hope both we and future legislators profit by its lesson. My job today is to charge each and every one of us with the moral responsibility of being a better person than we were yesterday.

"While democracy must have its organization and controls, its vital breath is individual liberty.' [Charles Evans Hughes] If we as delegates are to accomplish the task we were elected to perform, and if we expect the general public to accept the results of our deliberations, some of you are going to have to clean up your act.

"Let us proceed with the following in mind: 'Democracy means not "I am as good as you are" but "You are as good as I am."' [Theodore Parker] Yes, my friends, democracy means many things; certainly it is majority rule, but much more, for it requires freedom of expression for minorities and even minority representations.

"Some of you are saying, 'Okay, okay, so we're organized; let's get on to issues.' I would be remiss in my duties as your temporary Chairman if I did not remind you we are organized as an oligarchy, not as a democracy. This body needs to make a decisive move to reestablish its credibility with the public, or our future deliberations will remain forever suspect.

"It has been said that after this session is over, only our work or lack of it will be remembered. I do not agree with that. Just as we look back to the conventions of 1950 and 1968, history will look back at this Convention and as your individual actions are judged, so will your contribution to history be judged. By your winning a single election, each of you was elevated to a position in the history of this State. You may not be ready for it, but it is here and the results are up to you. I repeat, are you capable of being a better person than you were yesterday?

"Do I believe you can do it? Yes, I certainly do. Why? Because I believe in another principle that says, 'Democracy is based upon the conviction that there are extraordinary possibilities in ordinary people.' [Harry Emerson Fosdick]"

There being no objection, the Chairman at this time appointed George Amimoto as temporary Chief Clerk of the Convention.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Hashimoto, for the Committee on Credentials, presented a report (Spec. Com. Rep. No. 1) reading as follows:

July 5, 1978

The Honorable Floyd W. Pulham
Temporary Chairman
Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978

Sir:

Your Committee on Credentials begs leave to report that it has examined the Certificates of Election of the Delegates to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, which were issued by the Lieutenant Governor of the State of Hawaii as provided by law, and finds that the delegates certified thereby have been legally elected and are duly qualified to sit as delegates from their respective constitutional convention districts, as follows:

District 1

Floyd W. Pulham
Gil Silva

District 2A	Helene H. Hale Lawrence H. Kono
District 2B	Bruce C. McCall Philip I. Yoshimura
District 3	Lester T. Fushikoshi Marcelliano K. Villaverde

District 27C	Hartwell K. Blake James M. Shinno

Your Committee, to which were referred a letter dated June 6, 1978 from Joseph A. Ryan to the Convention and a letter dated June 26, 1978 from Clarence Ching to the Convention, reports thereon as follows:

The letter dated June 6, 1978 from Joseph A. Ryan requested that all of the 16 candidates from District 8A be declared elected as delegates to the Convention because no candidate in the district received a majority of the votes cast. Your Committee finds that the two delegates from District 8A have been legally elected pursuant to Act 17, Session Laws of Hawaii, Special Session of 1977, which provides in part that the "candidates receiving the highest number of votes in the election, not to exceed the number of delegates to which the respective district is entitled, shall be elected as delegates to the convention."

The letter dated June 26, 1978 from Clarence Ching alleged that Warner (Kimo) Sutton does not meet the residency requirements to be a qualified voter necessary to be a delegate from District 15B. Your Committee has examined the evidence presented to it by both Mr. Ching and Mr. Sutton and finds that Warner (Kimo) Sutton is a qualified elector of District 15B from which he has been duly elected.

For the reasons aforesaid, your Committee recommends that the persons named in the Certificates of Election of the Delegates to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 be seated as delegates from their respective constitutional convention districts as aforesaid.

Respectfully submitted,

On motion by Delegate Hashimoto, seconded by Delegate Hamilton and carried, Spec. Com. Rep. No. 1 was adopted.

At this time the roll was called, showing all delegates present.

The Chairman announced the appointment of Delegates Blean, Calvin Ching, Chong, Hale, Harris and Hirata to escort the Honorable William S. Richardson, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Hawaii, to the rostrum.

Chief Justice Richardson then administered the oath of office to the delegates to the Convention.

At this time, the Chairman appointed Delegates Fernandes Salling, Hanaike, Hino, Odanaka, Penebacker and Villaverde as a committee to escort the Honorable George R. Ariyoshi, Governor of the State of Hawaii, to the rostrum.

Governor Ariyoshi then addressed the Convention as follows:

"You are gathered here today for a very solemn and almost sacred task--the review of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii. Into the hands of a few has been placed the trust of many. You are the architects of our future. What you do, or choose not to do, will affect all our lives for many years to come.

"I am sure that I do not need to impress upon you the importance of your tasks. Their magnitude was known to you when you sought election to this Convention, and I am sure have been further impressed upon you in your preliminary deliberations.

"I do not intend to speak here this morning at any length. But permit me a few observations based upon my experience as a constitutional convention delegate ten years ago, and also as Governor of this State during some of the most trying and challenging years of our existence.

"I hope that none of you come to this Convention with such a rigidity of ideas that you are inflexible. You all have convictions, and that is as it should be. You also have areas in which you feel very strongly, and again that is as it should be. But please do not be so strong either in convictions or areas of concern that you cannot approach the proceedings here with an open mind. Please do not be so convinced of the correctness of a certain position that you cannot listen to another side or a contrary point of view. It is the sharing of ideas and viewpoints and wisdom that will make this Convention a worthwhile exercise for the people of Hawaii. It is your flexibility to expand beyond what you now feel is possible that will determine the success or failure of this Convention.

"I am not advocating that you abandon long-held beliefs and philosophies, but I am advocating a tolerance for contrary points of view and a spirit of cooperation. The democratic process is best served when we have free and open discussions, and when we have a willingness to consider points of view other than our own. No one at this Convention can afford to have tunnel vision. There must be a wide field upon which the issues of this Convention can be played. It would be tragic, in my view, if this Convention failed to consider all the alternatives to all of the issues. It just might be that an alternative not now in favor, or even considered, might be the best ultimate choice.

"I do not feel that the success or failure of this Constitutional Convention will be measured either by how few or many changes are made. Rather, success or failure will be measured by the approach to the problems and the process by which decisions are made. The acceptance and rejection of ideas--that is what is important and that is what history will remember. Also, I hope that the delegates to this Convention will continue to recognize the uniqueness of our State. We are unique in so many ways. In geography. In people. In resources. In problems. And in solutions.

"We have a unique approach to living. We have a unique concept of the dignity of all persons, regardless of ethnic origins or economic circumstances. We have a unique quality called the Aloha Spirit, which possibly is our most prized, but yet fragile, possession. Our uniqueness is precious and it must be preserved, and I hope that the document ultimately emerging from this Convention will reflect that. We are the only island State in this Union of States, and we have become accustomed--partly because of our geographical isolation--to finding our own solutions and developing our own style.

"That independence of spirit and action and style must be continued. We must adopt Hawaiian solutions to Hawaiian problems. Certainly, we can borrow from the wisdom and the experiences of others, but we cannot and we should not blindly assume that something is good for Hawaii merely because it happens to be good for some other area.

"At present, we have a very strong central government. For instance, we are alone in having a statewide school system and a statewide system for the delivery of health, social and other human services. Is that bad? The proponents of 'home rule' would say yes. The proponents of equal opportunities for all of our citizens, regardless of where they live, rural or urban, affluent or not, would say no. Home rule is a catch phrase with much appeal. But equal opportunities and equal services for all also have great appeal. Are the two philosophies inconsistent? Can they be reconciled? Should they be reconciled?

"I will not attempt to answer these questions here today. I bring them up only as being illustrative of the issues you will confront. They are indeed worthy of your best efforts, and I urge once again that you approach the challenging tasks ahead of you with an open-mindedness that will do credit to this assembly and to this State.

"The Preamble to our present Constitution notes that the people of Hawaii are 'mindful of our Hawaiian heritage.' This says volumes about our approach to government, and I hope that these words would become a living slogan for this Convention. The Preamble also says that we approach all the world with 'an understanding heart.' These are not just words. They represent a credo of life in these Islands, a credo that has served us so well over the years and one that can carry us forward into the years ahead.

"During the course of your deliberations here in the coming weeks, you will hear, I am sure, many discussions of the rights of citizens. I have always cherished human rights--as a person, as an attorney and as an elected official. But at the same time, I also have cherished the collective and individual responsibilities that have made these rights possible. For every right, there has to be a counterbalancing responsibility. If there is not, anarchy will result.

"We have a bill of rights, both in the federal and state Constitutions. This guarantee of rights sets our governments apart from all others and provides basic guarantees to our citizens that exist nowhere else. But somewhere in your deliberations, I feel it is very important to acknowledge that responsibilities go hand in hand with rights.

"Today is the start of a significant event in the history of Hawaii. It merits the most extensive public input that can be obtained, and with that in mind, I am releasing funds to enable KHET-TV to provide news and interpretive coverage of this Constitutional Convention. You cannot and should not operate in a vacuum, and I feel that it is very important that the public share to the greatest possible extent in this important process of government. Also, I want you to know that my office and our departments will render every assistance to the delegates of this Convention. Please feel that state government is a resource for information and assistance whenever and wherever it is needed.

"In closing, I would like to share a few words and thoughts of Thomas Jefferson. He is a man, without question, who was experienced in the ways of constitutions. In a letter written in 1816, President Jefferson said:

'Some men look at constitutions with sanctimonious reverence, and deem them like the ark of the covenant, too sacred to be touched. They ascribe to the men of the preceding age a wisdom more than human, and suppose what they did to be beyond amendment. . . . I am certainly not an advocate for frequent and untried changes in laws and constitutions. I think moderate imperfections had better be borne with. . . . But I know also, that laws and institutions must go hand in hand with the progress of the human mind. . . . [A]s new discoveries are made, new truths disclosed, and manners and opinions change with the change of circumstances, institutions must advance also, and keep pace with the times. . . . Each generation is as independent of the one preceding, as that was of all which had gone before. It has then, like them, a right to choose for itself the form of government it believes most promotive of its own happiness. . . .'

'I know of no safe depository of the ultimate powers of the society but the people themselves; and if we think them not enlightened enough to exercise their control with a wholesome discretion, the remedy is not to take it from them, but to inform their discretion by education.'

"These words were written 157 years ago, but they could have been written today.

"Indeed, the power of our government rests with the people, and you, the delegates to this Constitutional Convention, are their chosen representatives. Exercise that power well. Seek to reflect the spirit and the ideals of this society rather than its instant problems and anxieties. Allow the Constitution to express Hawaii's unique relation to our environment, our nation and our world. Allow it to continue to set broad guidelines for the governance of this State, and allow it most of all to represent our philosophies, our hopes and our collective wisdom.

"The challenges you face, beginning today, are great. But even greater is the opportunity to serve, in a unique way, our State and all of its citizens.

"You have my prayerful support as you begin your deliberations.

"Mahalo and aloha."

At 10: 35 a. m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 10: 38 a. m.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTIONS

A resolution (Res. No. 1) relating to the adoption of the rules of the Convention was offered by Delegate Nishimoto and read by the temporary Chief Clerk.

On motion by Delegate Nishimoto, seconded by Delegate Takehara and carried, Res. No. 1 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 2) extending congratulations and thanks to Delegate Teruo Ihara was offered by Delegate Barr and read by the temporary Chief Clerk.

On motion by Delegate Barr, seconded by Delegate De Soto and carried, Res. No. 2 was adopted.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT

Nominations for the office of President of the Convention being next in order, Delegate Anae placed in nomination the name of Delegate William W. Paty, Jr., seconded by Delegate Stegmaier. Delegate Liu then placed in nomination the name of Delegate Walter K. Cabral, seconded by Delegate Chu.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Taira and unanimously carried, nominations for the office of President of the Convention were closed.

The Chairman then announced that prior to appointing a committee to conduct the election, he would allow time for any interested delegate to speak on behalf of the nominees.

Delegate Marion Lee addressed the Convention as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, my fellow delegates:

"I would like to speak today in support of a man who, within the last 30 days, has been able to gather all resources in organizing 102 people to bring about the smooth opening of this Convention today. That man that I speak of is Bill Paty. In this short span of time, he has been able to meet the challenge of a task which is frustrating, demanding and time-consuming.

"Bill Paty has demonstrated his ability as a responsible presiding officer, one who is experienced, capable and dedicated. This, I feel, is a true reflection of the kind of person he is--one who is fair, just and considerate. This is especially evident in his equitable treatment of young people, as well as women. The fact that he has recognized these two very important considerations is highly commendable. With the kind of insight that he has shown, I feel assured of his genuine concern for the people and by the people.

"The citizens of this great State of Hawaii have entrusted us with an important responsibility, and whatever changes we propose will govern the behavior and lifestyle of every man, woman and child in Hawaii for at least the next decade. I think we must all remember that we are public servants of the people, not their masters. I personally am new to this arena and am learning a lot. And although I am not one of the 'independents,' I certainly consider myself a very independent person. And for the big job ahead of us, I feel that through Bill Paty's leadership, we will produce the kind of changes in our Constitution that will be accepted by the people of Hawaii.

"Bill Paty has been active on business and professional boards and commissions in Hawaii over the past 30 years. His well-respected record in government, business and community service speaks for itself. We are fortunate to have a man of such qualifications and extensive background.

"I am confident that Bill Paty will keep this Convention moving rapidly and effectively to a successful ending. Therefore, I urge all delegates here this morning to support the election of Bill Paty as President of our 1978 Constitutional Convention."

Delegate Villaverde then addressed the Convention as follows:

"I would like to speak in behalf of the candidacy of Mr. William Paty as our permanent Convention President. I had the opportunity and privilege of seconding his nomination in the area of temporary President, and I made my points then and would like to make my points in favor of this great man and a man who will prove himself as a great President for this Convention. I would like to inform the public here and the delegates that I wasn't too happy with the committees I have been assigned to. I had selected certain committees and I have not been put on these committees that I had asked for. However, as President here on a temporary basis, he saw fit that I serve on the committees that will come. I am looking forward to these committees because he saw fit that I should be on them, and I feel that his appointments have been very fair. I speak also as a delegate from the Big Island and ask you to vote for this man when the time comes to vote, in a few minutes--and to vote for an outstanding man, Mr. William Paty."

Delegate Hagino then addressed the Convention as follows:

"I first heard the name Bill Paty two weeks before our election from a friend who works with me. He said that Bill was the general manager of Waiialua Sugar Company and that he was a real nice guy who helped the community a lot. The very word 'manager' set me against Bill and I hoped that he would not get elected, even though he was born and raised here. But since then I have heard nothing but kind words about Bill from all types of people; in fact, I sometimes wonder if that kind of person really exists.

"We elected Bill temporary President of this Convention over a month ago, with the warning that he was on trial and that if he did not meet our expectations he could not hope to become the permanent President. From that very moment he has been under fire from all sorts of people and groups. He has weathered these trials and tribulations and I admire him for the way he conducted himself at the caucuses we have been to.

"I want to remind all of you that just a few weeks ago everyone was praising Bill for his leadership in settling the very controversial open versus secret ballot issue. Use this secret ballot to vote your conscience and not as a means of protest. Remember you are serving the people and not yourselves.

"A rumor was started and it has been fueled by the media that this Convention will suppress certain issues and not give equal time to all sides. This is the very reason why I am for Bill, because he has been very open and fair to all of us, no matter where we stand. I feel that Bill has passed his trial with flying colors and I am proud that I voted for him as temporary President. And I urge all my fellow delegates to continue supporting him by electing Bill Paty as our permanent President. Mahalo."

Delegate Barnard then addressed the Convention as follows:

"I'd like to express my support of Delegate Paty's candidacy for the presidency of this Convention. I feel that as temporary President, Delegate Paty has proven himself qualified, patient and understanding.

"I feel Delegate Paty is a person who genuinely likes people, and I'm confident that he is eager to work hard to help us, his fellow delegates, serve the people of Hawaii."

Delegate Chung then addressed the Convention as follows:

"My fellow delegates:

"You have heard the complimentary remarks from four previous delegates in behalf of Delegate Bill Paty, nominee for the President of this 1978 Constitutional Convention in our Aloha State of Hawaii. It is a pleasure to offer a few remarks advocating Delegate Bill Paty as our President.

"He is a kama'aina--up from the land we love. He excelled in athletics at Punahou School and at Cornell. He always demonstrated the capacity for hard work, self-sacrifice and teamwork--fundamental qualities of leadership.

"He carried these same qualities to Waialua Sugar plantation 32 years ago when he first worked as an assistant agriculturist--and today he is the manager, loved by all from all walks of life at Waialua.

"Bill served with distinction in World War II with the 101 Airborne Division and on D Day, June 6, 1944, he was one of the first to parachute into Normandy. Bill was subsequently injured and captured by the enemy and held in captivity, and the old Hawaiian courage motivated him to escape several times and he was again recaptured. He is not a quitter. Finally, Bill was honorably discharged from our United States Army because of injuries, with the rank of major. Our Bill Paty is one who can lead because he is not one to alibi or blame others in case the going gets rough. He can lead because when things go well Bill will be the last to say, 'I did it.' But he will be the first to say, 'We did it together.' This is the kind of quality we need in this Convention, dear fellow delegates. Bill believes in a phrase we originally heard at one of our last workshops--to be well governed is to be well informed. And truly Bill subscribes to that, and therefore I urge you all that Bill is our man. Mahalo."

Delegate Liu then addressed the Convention as follows:

"Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in support of the nomination of Walter Cabral to permanently chair as President the 1978 Constitutional Convention for the entire State of Hawaii. There can be no question as to Delegate Cabral's qualifications to handle the tasks of President--he has been an effective organizer in his community, a commander of rank in our armed forces, and a capable administrator in business. But today we must look beyond the resume qualities of leadership. We must look beyond the ability to prepare this hall and distribute paychecks. We must assess what has transpired these past 6 weeks and ask: Does good leadership allow an issue like postponement of an election to divide this important body?

"Would a fair and open-minded leader have allowed himself to speak in terms of 'my group' when he is in fact supposed to lead the whole group?

"Would it not have been more statesmanlike to have influenced the outcome of our rules by addressing the rules committee as a whole rather than meeting with just a few members?

"And finally, would we not have had any images of stringman dispelled if the selection of committee leaders had been done either in a room closed to all or else closed to none?

"We must ask these hard questions today, for if we do not, how will we be able to honestly deal with the much harder questions that face us tomorrow, and the next day, and every day after that? The time has come to reject leadership based on so-called human nature that cuts the world into friend and foe, supporter and opponent, victors and vanquished. This style of leadership may be fine for a legislature, but I would hope that all of us realize by now that we are not a legislature. We must be free to treat each other as individuals and free to judge each other on merit. Simply, we must be free to think for ourselves.

"I feel no self-righteousness in what I have said to you--I take no great pleasure in bringing clouds on an otherwise bright and joyful occasion. But my heart and spirit desperately call for a fresh wind of leadership to take us into calmer and clearer waters. Walter Cabral is that evenhanded helmsman we need to steer us, from this day forth. Mr. Chairman, I nominate Walter Cabral."

Delegate Cabral made the following nomination acceptance speech:

"As we begin this Convention, we would do well to recall the motto of our Hawaii: Ua mau ke ea o ka aina i ka pono--the life of the land is perpetuated in righteousness.

"I now stand before this body and declare my acceptance of my nomination for the presidency of this historical and significant Convention with the pledge that, if I am elected, I will strive to the utmost to lead our most important undertaking in this Convention toward preserving the people's right to be judiciously represented--for they are the life of our land.

"In further acceptance of the nomination, I will not stand before you and tell you that I am beholden to no one, for I am beholden--I am beholden to my constituents and all of the people of the State of Hawaii, to represent their interests fairly and determinedly, just as all of you are likewise.

"Throughout my campaign I pledged a philosophy of working together with other delegates in a spirit of cooperation to ensure openness in this Convention, that we might more dutifully represent the interests of the people of Hawaii, as opposed to the favor of minority or singularly special interest groups. This, however, does not construe denial of organized special interest groups from presenting their concerns to this body in an overt fashion.

"If elected, I am committed to a Convention that advocates the highest standards of openness and fairness and to a Convention united in its task though not always in its opinions. Before this Convention was called to order this morning, it was marked by deep divisions among its membership. Continuing these divisions will not serve the people we represent. Almighty God has blessed none of us with all the knowledge needed to address the challenges of this Convention, and certainly no group of us can claim a monopoly on that knowledge. Our task demands the best from all of us.

"In this regard I have, upon searching my conscience deeply, felt an obligation that if I am elected to the presidency, I would need to seriously consider a more democratic process of assigning committee leaderships and the equitable balancing of the committees' members.

"I submit to you that while I am a neophyte in the political arena, I assure you I am not a stranger to leadership responsibilities. Thank you for your kind attention. Mahalo nui kakou, me ke aloha pumehana."

The Chairman then announced the appointment of Delegates Dyer, Lacy, Marumoto, Nozaki, Takahashi and Takitani as members of the Elections Committee.

At 11:20 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:25 a.m.

Delegate Dyer, Chairman of the Elections Committee, announced that 102 ballots had been cast and that 52 votes were necessary for election. She then announced that Delegate Paty received 69 votes and Delegate Cabral received 33 votes.

The Chairman thereupon appointed Delegates Barnard, Crozier, de Costa, Hoe, Liu and Yoshimura to escort Delegate Paty and Delegate Waihee to escort Mrs. Paty to the rostrum.

The Chairman then received the committee with Delegate Paty in attendance, discharged the committee with thanks and handed the gavel over to Delegate Paty.

The President then assumed the Chair and the temporary Chairman took his seat on the floor of the Convention.

President Paty then made the following acceptance speech:

"Governor Ariyoshi, Lieutenant Governor Doi, Chief Justice Richardson, distinguished guests, fellow delegates, ladies and gentlemen:

"First, let me thank Delegate Floyd Pulham for doing an excellent job in convening this Convention, conducting this election and getting us started on the Constitution trail. I want, too, to thank those who were so complimentary in my nomination and all those who supported my candidacy. I feel it an honor and a rare privilege to serve as President of this 1978 Constitutional Convention of the State of Hawaii. I am well aware that my election was anything but unanimous, although at no time did I ever expect that it would be. I am also aware of the basic concerns that triggered this contest and I fully intend to work hard to try to allay those concerns as we proceed into the business of this Convention. I hope those who have these concerns will afford me this opportunity.

"Now what lies ahead? As I sat listening to the opening ceremony--the oli to Pele and Liliuokalani, and to the chant by Auntie Edith Kanakaole--it seemed to me that perhaps never before in our island history are we as an island people reseeking so strongly our Hawaiian heritage on the one hand, while on the other we try to cope with the multi-faceted problems of an electronic age and with it the dynamic changes in knowledge, values and lifestyles. Drawing in, if you will, our 'aina, those things that have served us so well for so long as we try to chart ahead a course that will afford the best in safeguards, and the best in opportunity for the people of Hawaii. Comparably, we as delegates will be looking at what is and has been a sound document--our State Constitution. As Thomas Jefferson noted, in reflecting on the Constitution, that he was not as he put it 'an advocate of frequent and constant changes in laws and constitutions.' He said that moderate imperfections had better be borne with, but he also noted that our fundamental values change with the acquisition of new knowledge and our task is to identify those fundamental changes in attitudes and values in our society and translate those changes into amendments to our Constitution. This is no small task. I know that all of us here are only too aware that what we do in this Convention will determine the social, political and economic environment that we and a succeeding generation will live in. As a matter of fact, as I have come to know my fellow delegates, I must concede that I am a trifle older than most (like maybe a quarter of a century) and I suspect they will have to live with the efforts of this Convention far longer than I.

"I believe it critical to the success of this Convention that every delegate have the opportunity to expound fully his/her ideas, vigorously advocate desired amendments and that in this process and during this time the public will have full opportunity to make known its views to the delegates and to the respective committees.

"This will come about as each standing committee makes its report to the Committee of the Whole which comprises all the delegates. At this time, each delegate, whether he served on that committee or not, would have the opportunity to propose changes and to engage in debate. After the Committee of the Whole has reported its recommendations to the Convention in regular session, the final vote on each proposal would be taken and again each delegate would have the same opportunity to make known his/her views.

"It is my express intention as your presiding officer to see that this does indeed happen. It is my hope that, as we move on to the task ahead, we can put aside our organizational differences and work effectively, efficiently and, with your support, harmoniously.

"In the spirit of the ho'okupu, I pledge to you my best effort and look forward to working with you, for you and for all the people of the State of Hawaii."

ELECTION OF VICE-PRESIDENTS

The President then stated that each senatorial district had elected its respective vice-president and called upon each district caucus chairman to report on the election.

Delegate Fushikoshi announced that Delegate McCall was elected Vice-President from the First District.

Delegate Andrews announced that Delegate Barr was elected Vice-President from the Second District.

Delegate Anae announced that Delegate DiBianco was elected Vice-President from the Third District.

Delegate Crozier announced that Delegate Donald Ching was elected Vice-President from the Fourth District.

Delegate Campbell announced that Delegate Uyehara was elected Vice-President from the Fifth District.

Delegate Barnard announced that Delegate Goodenow was elected Vice-President from the Sixth District.

Delegate Haunani Ching announced that Delegate Les Ihara was elected Vice-President from the Seventh District.

Delegate Blake announced that Delegate Shinno was elected Vice-President from the Eighth District.

ELECTION OF SECRETARY

The President called for nominations for the office of Secretary of the Convention.

Delegate Hokama put in nomination the name of Delegate Haunani Ching as Secretary of the Convention, seconded by Delegate Chong.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Laura Ching and carried, nominations for the office of Secretary of the Convention were closed. The President thereupon declared Delegate Haunani Ching unanimously elected as Secretary of the Convention.

ELECTION OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY

The President then called for nominations for the office of Assistant Secretary of the Convention.

Delegate Lewis then placed in nomination the name of Delegate Nakamura as Assistant Secretary of the Convention, seconded by Delegate Tamayori.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Laura Ching and carried, nominations for the office of Assistant Secretary of the Convention were closed. The President thereupon declared Delegate Nakamura unanimously elected as Assistant Secretary of the Convention.

The next order of business being the nomination and election of the Chief Clerk, Delegate Waihee placed in nomination the names of George Amimoto as Chief Clerk of the Convention and Colin Miyabara as Assistant Clerk of the Convention.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Taira and carried unanimously, the President announced the elections of George Amimoto and Colin Miyabara as Chief Clerk and Assistant Clerk of the Convention.

At this time, the President announced the names of the chairmen, vice-chairmen and members of the standing committees, as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS COMMUNICATION

The following communication was read by the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

A communication from U.S. Senator Spark Matsunaga (Misc. Com. No. 1) expressing best wishes to the delegates was placed on file.

The President directed the Clerk to acknowledge receipt of the communication.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:53 a.m., on motion by Delegate Taira, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the Convention adjourned until 9:00 a.m. Thursday, July 6, 1978.

Dear President Paty:

This is to acknowledge your letter of July 6, 1978, in which you ask for approval to sign vouchers for the Constitutional Convention.

I am enclosing with this letter a copy of my memorandum to State Comptroller Hideo Murakami which advises him that I am delegating to you authority to expend funds appropriated by Section 7, Act 17, SSLH 1977, and so much thereof as may be necessary as authorized under Act 243, SLH 1978, to defray expenses of the Constitutional Convention. The memorandum authorizes the Comptroller to honor warrant vouchers signed by you.

With warm personal regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,

(s) George R. Ariyoshi

The President thereupon directed the Clerk to place Gov. Msg. No. 2 on file.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 5) informing the Convention that Proposal Nos. 98 through 115 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 5 was adopted.

At this time, Delegate Lacy, on a point of personal privilege, stated:

"In this morning's paper there was an article concerning a meeting of the budget committee yesterday, in which it was indicated that I was the single dissenting voter. And I want it known that I did not vote against the President's authority in relation to the budget as it implied in that article.

"My negative vote was in full and honest support of the President against what I consider to be an irresponsible ratification of a budget that, in my opinion, may embarrass our President, with the desire that it go back to him for review before being presented to the Convention. If this is not done, I will then make my reasons known before the assembly."

DEFERRED MATTER

Spec. Com. Rep. No. 2 (Ad Hoc Committee on Ethics--Deferred from July 13, 1978):

Delegate Okamura, for the Ad Hoc Committee on Ethics, presented a report (Spec. Com. Rep. No. 2) recommending adoption of Spec. Com. Rep. No. 2 and approval of the Code of Ethics of the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

On being recognized by the President, Delegate Okamura spoke in favor of adopting Spec. Com. Rep. No. 2, as follows:

"Mr. President, in drafting this report, your ad hoc ethics committee has put together a strong ethics code for the delegates of this Convention--one that is as stringent as the code that applies to all other public officials in this State. This code was carefully developed after in-depth committee deliberations in which the many factors involved in the code were weighed very carefully.

"This Code of Ethics is, I believe, a reflection of the openness and sincerity that has and will continue to prevail over the proceedings of this Convention. Equally important, the adoption of this comprehensive code will insure the unquestionable integrity of the activities of this Convention, thus reassuring the public's confidence and trust.

"In enacting the first ethics code for a constitutional convention in the nation, we are voluntarily assuming the highest standards of conduct applied to any public official in this case. It is a noteworthy and positive way in which to begin this Convention.

"I therefore urge the adoption of the Code of Ethics now before us. Mahalo."

Amendments then being in order, a motion was made by Delegate DiBianco and seconded by Delegate Donald Ching to amend Section 5, subsection (1) of the Code of Ethics by inserting the words "or defeat" after the word "passage," to read as follows: "No delegate or employee shall assist any person or business or act in a representative capacity for a fee or other compensation or under a contingent compensation arrangement to secure passage or defeat of a proposal, or other transaction in which he has participated or will participate as a delegate or employee."

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend Section 5, subsection (1), was put by the Chair and carried.

At this time, a motion was made by Delegate Pulham and seconded by Delegate Goodenow to amend Section 4 of the Code of Ethics by adding a fourth subsection, to read as follows: "(4) No delegate shall employ or cause to be employed by this Convention any person related by blood or through marriage in any position for which public funds are expended."

Speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Pulham said that public acceptance of the decisions of government in a democracy was based upon legitimacy and confidence and that nepotism undermined the basic fabric of public trust. He further stated that the Convention already suffered from a credibility problem that would only be worsened if it allowed nepotism to continue.

Delegate Campbell also rose to speak in favor of the amendment. She stated that the question was not whether nepotism was illegal, but whether the hiring of family members would affect the public's confidence in the deliberations of the Convention.

At 11: 37 a.m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11: 41 a.m.

Delegate Souki rose to oppose the amendment, stating that the hiring of blood relatives would not have any major impact on the drafting of the State Constitution and that it would not be detrimental to the public interest.

At this time, Delegate Chu moved that the proposed amendment be further amended. On request that Delegate Chu's amendment be put in writing, the Chair called for a recess.

At 11: 47 a.m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11: 58 a.m.

Delegate Pulham at this time informed the Chair that he wished to withdraw his motion. Delegate Goodenow then withdrew her second to the motion. There being no objection, Delegate Pulham's motion was withdrawn.

Delegate Chu then moved to resubmit her amendment, seconded by Delegate Kimball, to read as follows: "(4) Employing members of the delegate's immediate family in the Convention. Immediate family shall include parents, spouse, offspring and siblings."

Delegate Kaapu, speaking against the amendment, argued that barring relatives from the Convention would violate an individual's right to an equal chance for employment and that it might be in violation of the federal Constitution's prohibition on discrimination by ancestry.

Delegate Okamura also spoke against the amendment, stating that the committee, in its deliberations, had considered the issue of hiring family members and had concluded that such a practice was not in itself against the Convention's interest. He further stated that it was only when the employee was not qualified and took unwarranted advantage as a family member that hiring a relative became a problem.

At this time, Delegate O'Toole requested a roll-call vote. Delegate Donald Ching, on a point of inquiry, asked whether under Rule 32 of the convention rules there was enough support for a roll-call vote, the provisions requiring at least ten votes.

The Chair thereupon put Delegate O'Toole's request to the Convention. With only eight supporting votes, roll call was denied.

A vote on Delegate Chu's amendment then being in order, the question was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

At this time, Delegate Hale moved, seconded by Delegate Ellis, to amend Section 1, subsection (6), by deleting the words "July 5, 1977 to July 5, 1978" and substituting in lieu thereof "July 5, 1978 to September 21, 1978."

Delegate Hale, speaking for the amendment, pointed out that it was not the prerogative of the Convention to require financial disclosure for the period July 5, 1977 to July 5, 1978 and that such information should not be required of the spouses and dependent children of delegates.

Delegate Burgess then informed the Convention that the delegates' financial disclosure requirement recommended by the committee was similar to that of the legislature. He further stated that to limit the disclosure period to the period of the Convention would make the financial disclosure meaningless.

Delegate Okamura also spoke against the amendment, pointing out that the committee had decided on a 1-year period beginning a full year prior to the convening date of the Convention. He said that between the date of the initial disclosure statement and October 31, 1978, all delegates would be required to file an updated statement if they incurred any major financial changes.

There being no further discussion, Delegate Hale's motion to amend Section 1, subsection (6), was put by the Chair and failed to carry.

At this time, Delegate Hale made a motion, seconded by Delegate Kimball, to amend subsection (1) of Section 7 by deleting the words "the delegate's spouse and dependent children."

At 12:40 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 12:46 p.m.

Delegate Hale's motion to amend subsection (1) of Section 7 was then put by the Chair and failed to carry.

Delegate Funakoshi then introduced a motion, seconded by Delegate Hale, to amend subsection (1) of Section 7 by adding the words "and any member living in the same household" after "dependent children."

Delegate Waihee, speaking against the amendment, expressed his concern about having to disclose the financial conditions of people merely living in one's household and stated that he felt this was going too far.

Delegate Funakoshi's motion was then put by the Chair and failed to carry.

At this time, a motion was made by Delegate Kimball and seconded by Delegate Dyer to amend Section 7, subsection (1), paragraph (A), by adding the following sentence: "In exercising his or her right to privacy, a delegate's spouse or dependent may decline to disclose his or her source and amount of income, provided said income is derived from a source separate and unrelated to the delegate's."

Speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Kimball noted that a spouse's as well as a child's right to privacy was guaranteed under the Constitution, and the disclosure requirement should not therefore mandatorily be applicable to them.

There being no further discussion, Delegate Kimball's motion was put by the Chair and, by a show of hands, failed to carry.

Delegate Pulham then moved, seconded by Delegate Hale, to amend Section 4 by adding a fourth subsection, to read as follows: "(4) All delegates employing or causing to be employed by this Convention any member of his or her immediate family, to include parents, spouse, offspring and siblings, will make immediate disclosure of said action by filing a letter with the Clerk of the Convention, listing his or her name, the name, relationship, position held and salary paid of the employee."

Discussion being in order, Delegate Burgess stated that, since all employees and pay schedules were a matter of public record, he felt the amendment was not necessary.

Delegate Kaapu, speaking against the amendment, stated that to single out any group or treat any group differently was wrong. He pointed out that hiring an incompetent relative was bad but that there was nothing wrong in hiring a relative who was competent.

Delegate De Soto also expressed opposition to the amendment. She spoke for fair and equal treatment for all, not the polarization of people because of birth or blood.

Delegate DiBianco then spoke in favor of the amendment. He said that the foundation of any ethics code was full and complete disclosure by its members. He further stated that the public had the right to know and that the pending motion merely asked that the public be advised as to who these people were.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt the amendment was put by the Chair and failed to carry.

At this time, a motion was made by Delegate Campbell and seconded by Delegate Hale to amend Section 4, subsection (2), by deleting the words "except as provided by law" and substituting in lieu thereof "whether said compensation or other consideration is derived from government employment, private employment, unions or other groups."

In speaking for the amendment, Delegate Campbell stated that the purpose of the amendment was to prohibit delegates from receiving supplemental income from any source, whether government, private employer, union or other group. She said that no distinction should be made between income received from any of these sources. She then pointed out that it was improper to establish two sets of rules--one governing individuals who receive supplemental income from unions and another governing employees of private business. She stated that the basic rule of ethics was that no man should serve more than one master.

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend Section 4, subsection (2), was put by the Chair and failed to carry.

Delegate Harris then made a motion, seconded by Delegate Waihee, to amend Section 7, subsection (1), paragraph (H), by inserting the words "at least $50,000 but less than $75,000" after "less than $50,000" in the seventh and eighth lines.

Delegate Harris explained that the proposed amendment was a technical one to correct a typographical error that unintentionally omitted these words.

The motion to amend Section 7, subsection (1), paragraph (H), was put by the Chair and carried.

Delegate Hale then moved to amend Section 8 by deleting the words "suspension or removal from office or employment," seconded by Delegate Ellis.

Speaking for the motion, Delegate Hale stated that there was no purpose in suspending or removing a delegate for failing to comply with the provisions of the code, as public reprimand would be punishment enough.

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend Section 8 was put by the Chair and failed to carry. Delegate Wurdeman then requested a division of the house. The Chair proceeded to retake the vote, this time by a rising vote, and again declared that the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Kaito at this time moved that subsection (2) of Section 7 be amended by inserting in the blanks in the second line the dates "July 14" and "July 28." The motion was seconded by Delegate Waihee.

Delegate Kojima then moved, seconded by Delegate Sutton, to amend Delegate Kaito's amendment by changing the latter date to read "July 31." He explained that neighbor island delegates would require more time to meet the disclosure requirements.

Delegate Kaito concurred with the amendment and changed her motion to the amended dates of "July 14" and "July 31," seconded by Delegate Waihee.

This motion was then put by the Chair and carried.

At this time, the President recognized Delegate Hale. Delegate Hale then stated:

"Mr. President, I would just like to say that I want to clear the air on any misapprehension or misinformation that might have come forth because of all my amendments.

"I'd like to compliment the Committee on Ethics for doing what I realize is a very difficult job and handling some very difficult questions. I certainly sympathize with them, because I know it must have been a very difficult job.

"However, I'm going to have to vote against this whole Code of Ethics, not because I do not believe that we should adopt a code of ethics. I am firmly of the opinion that this Convention should have a code of ethics, and I was so firmly of the opinion that on the very first day I was notified that I was elected, I sat down and wrote a letter to the Ethics Commission.

"Unfortunately, all of the material that I received from them in those pre-Convention days is back in Hilo, and I was not able, within 24 hours, to get my hands on it to properly make amendments that possibly could have been done a little better. I was very concerned from the very beginning that this Convention adopt a code of ethics, and I still feel that we should adopt a code of ethics.

"However, I think during this meeting--this is going to be very misleading to the public. If we are basing this on the precedents set by the legislature, we have to realize that the legislature has an Ethics Commission before which any complaints regarding a legislator or employee can be brought for a full disclosure and public hearing, and that the Ethics Commission will then decide whether anybody has violated the code of ethics of the State.

"There is no provision in this Code of Ethics for us to go to a commission or to any other body set up by this Convention to find out whether or not we violated this Code of Ethics. I think this is a basic defect in the proposal, because I can't see how the Convention is going to carry out this last Section 8 without setting up a committee or allowing us to go before the State Ethics Commission.

"Therefore, I'm going to have to vote against the whole proposal. I feel the wording in the disclosure [section] is very confusing, and I don't understand it. I am not able to give a lot of the information asked for, as I pointed out before, and therefore I just cannot vote for it.

"But I want it clearly understood: I am for a code of ethics. I am for the highest standards of conduct for each individual delegate. I certainly believe in all the ideas that are proposed here, and I would not want anybody to think that because I vote no that I am voting against this Convention having a code of ethics."

There being no further discussion, Delegate Okamura moved, seconded by Delegate Uyehara, that Spec. Com. Rep. No. 2 be received and placed on file and the Code of Ethics, as amended in RD. 1, be approved. The question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

The President then made the following announcement:

"The Chair has an announcement, if I may. I have a memo and a letter [Dept. Com. No. 1] from the lieutenant governor's office, which I think is of concern to all of us. We don't have time to review it at this point. Very briefly, we are informed by the lieutenant governor's office that if we are to get the results of our deliberations--amendments--on the ballot for the November general election, he is asking that it be in his hands by the 20th of September.

"Obviously, this is going to put a real strain on all of us, and in my memo I tried to outline the Chair's concern on that. I'll be prepared to review that with you when we convene on Monday."

ADJOURNMENT

At 1:45 p.m., on motion by Delegate Shon, seconded by Delegate Andrews and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a.m. Monday, July 17, 1978.

NINTH DAY

Monday, July 17, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Marcelliano Villaverde, delegate from the Third District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates de Costa and Pulham who were excused.

The President announced that the Journal of the Eighth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE

A message from the Governor (Gov. Msg. No. 3) informing the Convention that the governor had approved the request of the Hawaii Public Broadcasting Authority for funds to provide television coverage of the Constitutional Convention was read by the Clerk as follows:

Executive Chambers
Honolulu

July 13, 1978

The Honorable William W. Paty, Jr.
President
1978 Constitutional Convention of Hawaii

Dear President Paty:

I write in response to your letter of June 28, 1978, in which you support the request of the Hawaii Public Broadcasting Authority for funds to provide television coverage of the Constitutional Convention.

I am pleased to report that I have approved the Authority's request. I am in agreement with you that publicizing this significant political milestone is a valuable public service project providing for citizen education on the Constitutional Convention. I further believe that the State should play a major role in informing and educating the public on the issues introduced before the Constitutional Convention.

I wish you and your colleagues well as you enter into your important deliberations on the Constitution of Hawaii.

With warm personal regards, I remain,

Yours very truly,

(s) George R. Ariyoshi

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 8) informing the Convention that Proposal Nos. 184 through 222, Res. Nos. 6 and 7 and Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 8 was adopted.

P. No. 222 was referred to the Committee on Environment, Agriculture, Conservation and Land.

Announcements being in order, the President announced that the Chair intended to set some policy guidelines with respect to limiting the type of resolution acceptable for submission to the Convention.

The President then stated his concern relative to the correspondence from the lieutenant governor's office informing the Convention that all proposals must be submitted there by September 20 if they were to be placed on the November ballots. The President said that he was trying to arrange a meeting with a representative of that office to find out why such a lead time was required.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:40 a.m., on motion by Delegate Goodenow, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a.m. Tuesday, July 18, 1978.

TENTH DAY

Tuesday, July 18, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Russ Palsrok of the Christian Reformed Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present.

The President announced that the Journal of the Ninth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 10) informing the Convention that Proposal Nos. 223 through 244, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 11 and Res. No. 5, RD. 1, had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Anae, seconded by Delegate Blean and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 10 was adopted.

Delegate Takemoto, for the Committee on Rules, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 11) recommending the adoption of Res. No. 5, as amended in RD. 1, relating to proposals, and thereupon moved for its adoption, seconded by Delegate Shinno.

The President called for discussion and recognized Delegate Takemoto, who then spoke in favor of adoption as follows:

"Mr. President, your Committee on Rules met yesterday and reviewed the deadline for introduction of all individual proposals. We also discussed the problems of meeting the September 20th deadline of the lieutenant governor's office in order that all the amendments will be assured of being on the general election ballot in November.

"We therefore decided, Mr. President, to set July 24, 1978 as the cutoff date for the introduction of individual proposals. The rules committee will be meeting with Morris Takushi of the lieutenant governor's office this afternoon, jointly with the Committee on Submission and Information, to see whether the September 20th deadline could possibly be pushed back to a later date. If the lieutenant governor's office indicates that such a modification is possible, we will submit to this Convention another amendment to reflect such a change. I therefore respectfully request that this body adopt this resolution. Thank you."

Delegate DiBianco then rose to speak against adoption, stating:

"Mr. President, as you are well aware, I submitted the other day a resolution which has yet to be circulated among the members of this delegation. I would like to read that resolution into the record now because I rise to speak in opposition to the adoption of Standing Committee Report No. 11. My resolution is as follows:

"WHEREAS, the 1978 Constitutional Convention has been entrusted by the people of the State of Hawaii with the task of carefully evaluating and proposing amendments to the State Constitution; and

"WHEREAS, the fulfillment of our duties makes any artificial time limitation inappropriate; and

"WHEREAS, the Lieutenant Governor has indicated his desire that this Convention complete all its work no later than September 20, 1978 for the convenience of his office and the Diamond International Printing Corporation; now, therefore,

"BE IT RESOLVED that the 1978 Constitutional Convention formally request of the Lieutenant Governor's office that it explore alternate means of providing ballot service for the November 1978 election so as not to interfere with this Convention's deliberations.'

"Now, Mr. President, you explained to me yesterday that one of the reasons for holding up this resolution was because the lieutenant governor was going to be sending a representative over here to speak with us. Based on that understanding, I was willing to have this resolution held up. I then went to the permanent rules committee meeting later on Monday afternoon and when the issue of whether we should have a July 24th proposal deadline came up, I said--and I thought I was echoing your own words--let's wait until the lieutenant governor's office sends a representative over. When the lieutenant governor's office explains to us their position on the September 20th deadline, then we will have the information available to determine whether or not the July 24th proposal cutoff is appropriate. The rules committee ignored those remarks; as a matter of fact, Mr. President, you were there as an ex-officio member and urged the July 24th proposal deadline, and the July 24th proposal deadline consequently wound up being Standing Committee Report No. 11 which is before us for a vote today.

"My position has not changed. I think my resolution now may be a little awkward because of the fact that we do have this resolution before us. However, I do think that we should defer all further action on this until we've heard from the lieutenant governor's office. More importantly, speaking to the merits of this particular matter, I think what we're doing here--and it really concerns me--is that this Convention is letting the tail wag the dog. We're so concerned about meeting this November deadline and we're so concerned about meeting the September 20th cutoff date, that I think we're just going to rush judgment through the rest of the summer. If we allow the September 20th cutoff date to interfere with our proposal submissions, we're going to let it interfere with our committee deliberations, with our public hearings and with everything else that we do, including our arguments here and in the Committee of the Whole.

"I think it is the duty of everybody in this Convention to work as diligently and as deliberately and as cautiously as we can in amending the Constitution, which is what we were all sent here to do. If we make the September 20th deadline, fine. If we don't, too bad. Then we go to a special election, or we go to the next November election. My own feeling is that the lieutenant governor has given himself so much lead time that we could miss the September 20th deadline that he's trying to impose on us and still make it on the November ballot. But if we can't, we can't. I don't understand what the concern is here--that after spending $2.5 million, we rush through the completion just to make it on the November ballot, whether we've got good, bad or indifferent constitutional amendments. I think we should just concern ourselves with revising this Constitution properly, and we should rip up the calendars and not pay any attention to them. If we make the September 20th deadline, fine. If not, who cares."

At this time, Delegate Lacy moved that the motion be laid on the table, seconded by Delegate Hale. The question was put by the Chair and failed to carry. A division of the house was then called for by Delegate Wurdeman. The question was again put by the Chair, and the motion failed by a rising vote.

Delegate Hale then moved that action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 11 and Res. No. 5, RD. 1, be deferred until Wednesday, July 19, seconded by Delegate DiBianco.

Delegate DiBianco rose to speak in favor of the motion. He said to defer action for one day would be appropriate inasmuch as it would afford delegates who were not members of the rules committee an opportunity to read the report and to confer with other delegates.

At 11:48 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:52 a.m.

The motion to defer action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 11 and Res. No. 5, RD. 1, until Wednesday, July 19, was put by the Chair and carried.

Delegate Iwamoto then announced that there would be an afternoon meeting with the Administrator of Elections, Morris Takushi, relative to the suggested timetable and printing of ballots. She invited all interested delegates to attend.

INTRODUCTION OF PROPOSALS

On motion by Delegate Hirata, seconded by Delegate Fujimoto and carried, the following proposals (P. Nos. 245 through 292) passed First Reading by title, were referred to the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing and were placed on the calendar for further consideration on Wednesday, July 19, 1978:

A proposal (P. No. 245) entitled: "Relating to the Uses of Hawaiian Home Lands," was introduced by Delegate Wurdeman.

A proposal (P. No. 246) entitled: "Relating to Equal Treatment for Local Governments," was introduced by Delegate Wurdeman.

A proposal (P. No. 247) entitled: "Relating to Bifurcated Criminal Trials," was introduced by Delegate Funakoshi.

A proposal (P. No. 250) entitled: "Relating to Bonds and Debt Limitations for the State," was introduced by Delegate Liu.

A proposal (P. No. 251) entitled: "Relating to Constitutional Conventions," was introduced by Delegate Taira.

A proposal (P. No. 252) entitled: "Relating to Legislative Sessions," was introduced by Delegate Taira.

A proposal (P. No. 253) entitled: "Relating to Right to Privacy," was introduced by Delegate Anae.

A proposal (P. No. 254) entitled: "Relating to State Militia," was introduced by Delegate Anae.

A proposal (P. No. 255) entitled: "Relating to Equal Protection," was introduced by Delegate Anae.

A proposal (P. No. 256) entitled: "Relating to Board of Education," was introduced by Delegate Hironaka.

A proposal (P. No. 257) entitled: "Relating to Segregation and Discrimination in Public Education," was introduced by Delegate Goodenow.

A proposal (P. No. 258) entitled: "Relating to Public Health and Welfare," was introduced by Delegate Souki.

A proposal (P. No. 259) entitled: "Relating to Restricting the Total Appropriations of the State," was introduced by Delegate Andrews.

A proposal (P. No. 260) entitled: "Relating to County Costs," was introduced by Delegate Andrews.

A proposal (P. No. 261) entitled: "Relating to the Recall of Elected State Officials," was introduced by Delegate Hanaike.

A proposal (P. No. 262) entitled: "Relating to the Recall of Elected State Officials," was introduced by Delegate Hanaike.

A proposal (P. No. 263) entitled: "Relating to the Constitutional Convention Delegates," was introduced by Delegate Blean.

A proposal (P. No. 264) entitled: "Relating to the Designation of Counties, Including Molokai," was introduced by Delegate Blean.

A proposal (P. No. 265) entitled: "Relating to Apportioning the Board of Education," was introduced by Delegate Tamayori.

A proposal (P. No. 266) entitled: "Relating to Legislative Rules," was introduced by Delegate Tamayori.

A proposal (P. No. 267) entitled: "Relating to Staggered Terms for Senators," was introduced by Delegate Tamayori.

RE-REFERRAL OF RESOLUTION

The President re-referred Res. No. 6 from the Committee on Judiciary to the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections.

DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9 (Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing--Deferred from July 17, 1978):

At this time, the President, to avoid any possible conflict of interest since he was instrumental in modifying and developing the current budget, appointed Delegate McCall,

Vice-President from the First Senatorial District, to preside over the Convention.

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9) recommending adoption of the 1978 Constitutional Convention budget and thereupon moved for its adoption, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi.

Discussion then being in order, Delegate Ledward informed the delegates that the $118,500 allocated in the budget for per diem payment was based upon 79 calendar days, including Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

Delegate Eastvold then rose, on a point of information, to ask whether the President, under Rule 20, had the power to make necessary budgetary adjustments or whether he must go before the Convention for approval. In line with this, he questioned whether the President and the chairman of the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing could be given such a discretion without seeking the approval of the Convention.

When told that the Convention was free to govern itself and that the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9 would in effect give the President and the committee chairman the authority to exercise such a discretion, Delegate Eastvold then spoke against the motion. He pointed out that Rule 20 of the Rules of the Convention stated that all resolutions "authorizing or contemplating the expenditure of money shall be referred, as of course, to the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing for its report thereon before final action by the Convention." He then stated that the fourth paragraph of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9, which authorized discretionary powers to the President and the committee chairman, was therefore in contradiction with Rule 20.

Delegate Lacy also spoke against the motion. He said his first concern regarding Rule 20 was covered by the previous speaker. He proceeded to point out, however, that he had other misgivings about Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9 and the budget. He said he disagreed with the report in that the funds that were appropriated by the legislature were released by the governor to the officers of the Convention; the officers, he said, consisted of the President, the eight Vice-Presidents, the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary.

His other concern, Delegate Lacy continued, was the $125,000 listed in the budget as unemployment. He felt that the amount being set aside for unemployment compensation might be too low and that the Convention should be allowed more time to obtain a more supportable estimate for budgetary purposes; to do otherwise, he added, would be acting in a fiscally irresponsible manner and could result in public reprimand in the future.

Delegate Sterling then rose to speak in favor of adopting Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9 and the budget because it was a functional budget geared to the production of the Convention. He added that he had asked some friends in the insurance business about some of the concerns expressed regarding unemployment compensation and they advised that the amount in the budget was workable.

Delegate Waihee also spoke in favor of the motion and the budget. He expressed his concern about the allegation that the committee report violated Rule 20, as he felt it did the exact opposite, representing the Convention and the President's efforts to carry out the intent of that rule. The President, he said, had had a number of delegates, from early days, prepare recommendations for the ad hoc budget committee, which took final action in accordance with the rules and then reported it out on the floor.

Delegate Waihee then stated that if the committee recommended that kind of a discretion to the President, this was also in accordance with the rules, and that it was up to the delegates to accept or reject it. He stated that he felt there was ample justification for granting that discretion to the President, that budget adjustments were necessary from time to time and someone must be entrusted with the discretion to make them within the appropriated sums--including any necessary adjustments in unemployment compensation. He added that the figure listed in the budget was the result of some analysis.

Delegate Waihee concluded that giving the President this discretion would be in accordance with the original statute, in which the legislature gave the President authority to expend those funds, and that the Convention should trust the President to the same degree that an outside body did.

At 12: 12 p.m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 12: 21 p.m.

At this time, Delegate Hornick moved to separate the budget and Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9, seconded by Delegate Eastvold.

Delegate Hornick, speaking for the motion, pointed out that instead of delaying approval of the budget because of disagreements in the committee report, she felt that separation of the arguments would allow the Convention to proceed, with each of the questions given distinct and separate consideration.

The motion to separate the budget and Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9 was put by the Chair and carried.

At this time, Delegate Pulham moved for approval of the 1978 Constitutional Convention budget as submitted by the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, seconded by Delegate Hayashida.

Delegate Hoe, on a point of information, inquired as to how the $50,000 allocated for submission and information was to be spent and also whether there were other moneys to be used for these purposes.

Delegate Iwamoto, in response, informed the Convention that the $50,000 itemized in the budget was to be used for disseminating information to registered voters while the Convention was still in session. Under consideration at this time, she said, was a plan for mailing Con Con publications to all registered voters. She also pointed out that the 1978 Hawaii state legislature had provided a $200,000 appropriation under Act 243 for citizen education programs, and that the committee was studying the best possible use for this money.

At this time, the motion to approve the 1978 Constitutional Convention budget as submitted by the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing was put by the Chair and carried.

The business before the Convention then being the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9, Delegate Ellis rose and moved, seconded by Delegate Kono, to recommit Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9 to the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, with the recommendation that the committee delete all references to the delegation of authority to the President for the purpose of modifying the budget.

At 12: 32 p.m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 12: 42 p.m.

At this time, Delegate Hale rose to speak against the motion to recommit. She said that all those concerns being discussed had been given due consideration by the committee, and that the Convention should get on with business rather than getting bogged down with administrative details. She added that the committee report delegated responsibility to the President and the committee chairman and this was perfectly proper.

Delegate DiBianco, on a point of information, inquired whether by adopting the committee report, Rule 20 was being suspended or altered, and if so whether it would not require a two-thirds rather than majority vote.

The Chair in reply ruled that a two-thirds vote was not required since the Convention's rules were not being amended.

Delegate Kono, speaking in favor of recommitting Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9, stated that although he agreed that the President should have a free hand in the interest of efficiency, an executive acting without the full knowledge of the Convention was not exercising proper fiscal accountability. If the committee report were recommitted, he said, he would suggest to the committee that the vice-presidents be kept informed on all fiscal transfers.

President Paty then rose to speak concerning the powers of the President in allocating the funds available for operation of the Convention. He stated that he intended to work very closely with the chairperson and members of the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, and that he would be prepared to review the budget with any of the delegates at any time. He further stated that he would be reviewing it with the budget committee periodically as disbursements came in.

President Paty then said that he felt his responsibility as administrator was one of trying to best coordinate available funds with necessary activities. He concluded that he would provide full disclosure to the budget committee, and if he felt the Convention should be appraised he would review it with the entire delegation.

The Chair noted that one of the questions concerned whether he would share the information with the vice-presidents.

President Paty then stated that the vice-presidents had been included in his remarks concerning his willingness to share with everybody. He pointed out that the vice-presidents met with the President on a regular basis and that he was more than willing to talk over problems, as sharing a problem always helped.

There being no further discussion, the motion to recommit Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9 was put by the Chair and failed to carry.

The Chair then put the main motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9, and it carried.

At 1:09 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 1:12 p.m.

At this time, the President resumed the Chair and Delegate McCall returned to his seat.

ADJOURNMENT

At 1:18 p.m., on motion by Delegate Pulham, seconded by Delegate Stegmaier and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a.m. Wednesday, July 19, 1978.

ELEVENTH DAY

Wednesday, July 19, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by Dr. Curtis Askew of Olivet Baptist Church.

RE-REFERRAL OF PROPOSAL

The President re-referred P. No. 232 from the Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry to the Committee on Environment, Agriculture, Conservation and Land.

The President at this time made an announcement requesting that delegates use discretion relative to introducing resolutions. He asked that they exercise restraint in submitting resolutions not germane to the provisions of the Hawaii State Constitution or the amendments, in light of the workload and schedule of the Convention.

DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 11 (Res. No. 5, RD. 1) (Committee on Rules--Deferred from July 18, 1978):

Delegate Takemoto, for the Committee on Rules, moved for the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 11 and Res. No. 5, as amended in RD. 1, seconded by Delegate Shinno.

Delegate Blean then moved, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 11 be separated and placed on file and Res. No. 5, RD. 1, be adopted, seconded by Delegate Eastvold. The motion to separate and file Stand. Com. Rep. No. 11 was then put by the Chair and carried.

Delegate Takemoto moved, seconded by Delegate Waihee, to amend Res. No. 5, RD. 1, by deleting in the fourth paragraph the words "waived or" and substituting the number "52" for "68," to read as follows:

"BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that said time and date of 4 o'clock p.m. of July 24, 1978 may be amended only by the affirmative vote of at least 52 delegates,"

There being no further discussion, the motion was put by the Chair and carried.

At this time, Delegate Blean moved to amend the third and fourth paragraphs of the resolution by deleting in both paragraphs the date "July 24" and substituting "July 31" in lieu thereof. The motion was seconded by Delegate Barr.

At 12:00 noon, the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 12:02 p.m.

Delegate Blake, speaking against the amendment, said that the basic concern of all delegates should be to have the constitutional amendments ready for the public to ratify in November rather than to have a special election.

Delegate Lewis rose to speak against the amendment also. He said that at yesterday's joint meeting of the committees on rules and submission and information, the lieutenant governor's office had satisfactorily answered all questions regarding the timetable for submission of proposals in order for the amendments to be on the general election ballot.

Delegate DiBianco, in rebuttal, said that he on the other hand thought most of the answers given by the representative from the lieutenant governor's office were rather evasive. Looking over the schedule, he stated, additional days could be gained by having someone from that office work out of the mainland printing company during the period the ballots were being typeset and corrected; and further, that instead of the 7 days set aside for printing, an advanced press capable of printing 40,000 ballots an hour, which the company owned, could release a few more days.

Furthermore, Delegate DiBianco continued, he could not understand why the ballots required 6 days for delivery from California when they could be flown in if necessary. In light of these facts, he questioned whether the Convention should concern itself with the lieutenant governor's time-frame to the point where it would affect their deliberations.

Delegate Goodenow then rose to speak against the amendment, stating that the delegates had had approximately 3 weeks to submit their proposals and, with the weekend still to come, Monday's deadline was not an unreasonable one. She said that the delegates' input should instead be concentrated on committee work and on floor debates.

Delegate Haunani Ching, also speaking against the amendment, said that it would be unfortunate if the cutoff date were extended to July 31, since public hearings for the neighbor islands had been scheduled beginning July 26. She said that the delegates would be doing people on the neighbor islands a disservice by appearing before them with an incomplete listing of proposals.

Delegate Harris, speaking for the amendment, said that the major concern of the Convention should be a well-thought-out review of the State's Constitution rather than expediency. He said both the delegates and the public had been assured that the cutoff date was July 31, and based on that information the delegates had proceeded to plan their research schedules and meetings with constituents. He further stated that he saw no reason why the Convention could not accept both the September 20th deadline of the lieutenant governor and the Convention's July 31st deadline for introduction of proposals.

Delegate Takemoto then rose to speak against the amendment, stating that much of the public contact and research work could have been done as early as the day the delegates were officially elected, and that to seek public input at this late date would not produce any well-thought-out plan. She added that all individual proposals would be filed by the committees and replaced with committee proposals, and that at the time these committee proposals were considered, each delegate would have another opportunity to make his feelings known.

Delegate Sterling, speaking against the amendment, said that he was very frustrated at the inflexible schedule presented by the lieutenant governor's office yesterday. However, he added, as a member of the Convention, his responsibility was to see that suitable legislation was presented to the public in time to give the people of the State of Hawaii the opportunity to study the Convention's amendments.

Delegate Silva also spoke against the amendment. He said that the issue was not when the deadline was but whether one was willing to put in the extra time to meet the July 24th deadline. He also expressed concern regarding the number of duplicate proposals being introduced.

Delegate Blean, in supporting his amendment, said that changing the date at this point in time would mean the Convention was changing the rules in the middle of the game and this could lead to a loss of credibility with the public. He also pointed out that haste makes waste, and that cramming now could lead to sloppy work. As for the neighbor islands, he said, the plans for these trips had been made with the July 31st deadline still in effect, so that argument was totally irrelevant.

Delegate Dennis Ihara also spoke in favor of the amendment, saying that he had planned a community forum to discuss with his constituents any concerns they might have, which he would offer in the form of proposals to the Convention. Only by placing the deadline back, he said, would there be enough time to meet with his people.

Delegate Waihee, speaking against the amendment, mentioned that the Convention never officially set July 31 as the cutoff, as insinuated by some previous speakers. He said this was merely the date originally proposed in Res. No. 5. Whichever date was agreed to by the Convention, whether 24 or 31, he pointed out, would be the first date established. He added that the rationale that a constituent's input was cut off with the deadline for introduction of proposals was not correct because each delegate would have further opportunities to update his constituents' requests in the committee deliberations.

Delegate Yamashita also spoke against the amendment, saying that the delay would impose a hardship on the committees inasmuch as public hearings must be scheduled, and that unless the committees had in their possession all proposals referred to them, they might find it difficult to organize such hearings.

Delegate O'Toole rose to speak in favor of the amendment. He said that public hearings need not await the deadline for introduction of proposals but may be held before as well as after such cutoff. He also said that by holding public hearings on Saturday and in the evening, the Convention could still come out with well-thought-out committee reports and proposals.

At this time the Chair announced that although some delegates had requested the previous question, the Chair intended to permit further discussion as needed. But, he cautioned, as much of the debate was repetitious, the Convention should be ready to consider voting soon.

Delegate De Soto, speaking against the amendment, said that she empathized with the proponents of the amendment as she too felt she was being pushed unfairly by the time constraints, but that she was voting against the amendment because there was no alternative.

Delegate Ontai then rose to speak for the amendment. He said that there were 51 days between July 31 and September 20 and, if everyone put his nose to the grindstone, the Convention might be able to save its credibility with the public.

Delegate Cabral also spoke in favor of the amendment. He said that he might be amenable to the July 24th date if the Chair or the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing would allow additional funds to pay for staff researchers' overtime work. Otherwise, he stated, he viewed the July 31st date as a very acceptable compromise enabling the delegates to receive necessary evidence for inclusion in their proposals.

Delegate Chu also spoke in favor of the amendment, saying that 3 working days was simply not enough notice. She questioned whether moving the cutoff date up a week to July 24 would make any significant difference in meeting the September 20th deadline imposed by the lieutenant governor. Where July 31 was only the 19th day of the Convention, and the state legislature normally cut off introduction of bills on the 30th day of a 60-day session, she pointed out that the 19th day in a supposed 55-day convention calendar (to September 20) should not make any difference.

Delegate Sterling, who had earlier spoken against the amendment, rose at this time to announce that, after listening to the delegates, he had changed his mind about voting against the amendment. He reiterated his frustrations regarding the inflexible schedule presented by the lieutenant governor's office and told the delegates that many of these problems could have been prevented had they been properly addressed at the conclusion of the 1968 constitutional convention.

At 12:55 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 1:01 p.m.

At this time Delegate Blake, who had also spoken earlier against the amendment, rose to withdraw his objections.

Delegate Kimball, on being recognized, spoke in favor of the amendment not only because of the artificial constraints already placed on the Convention but also because he could not see the correlation between the July 24th and September 20th deadlines. He also said that the July 31st date would be more suitable for him as he looked at proposals as his personal means of contributing input on issues for consideration in committees to which he was not assigned.

Delegate Laura Ching also spoke in favor of the amendment, saying that she had a meeting scheduled with her constituents for July 26 and adopting the July 24th deadline would mean shortchanging her constituents.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Delegate Blean's amendment was put by the Chair and carried.

The President then called for discussion on the adoption of Res. No. 5, RD. 1, as amended. There being no further discussion, the question of the adoption of Res. No. 5, as amended, was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

MISCELLANEOUS COMMUNICATION

There being no further business, the Chair asked that the Clerk read a letter from the convention attorney (Misc. Com. No. 2) regarding Delegate Ledward's motion on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 9, relating to the budget.

The following communication was read by the Clerk and placed on file:

July 19, 1978

The Honorable William W. Paty, Jr.
President
1978 Constitutional Convention of Hawaii

Sir:

Re: Delegate Ledward's motion relating to discretionary power of the President to adjust budget

If a matter authorizes or contemplates the expenditure of money, the matter must be referred to the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing for its consideration and report under Rule 20. Delegate Ledward's motion relating to the discretionary power of the President to adjust the budget covers a subject for referral to and report by the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing under Rule 20. Thus, action by the Convention of such a motion would be in contravention of Rule 20.

Inasmuch as the subject of the motion was already reported on by the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing under Standing Committee Report No. 9 which was duly adopted by the Convention, Delegate Ledward's motion is unnecessary.

Yours very truly,

James T. Funaki, Chief Attorney
Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978

ADJOURNMENT

At 1:12 p.m., on motion by Delegate Hayashida, seconded by Delegate Fernandes Salling and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a.m. Thursday, July 20, 1978.

TWELFTH DAY

Thursday, July 20, 1978

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Donald K. Johnson of the Lutheran Church of Honolulu.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present.

The President announced that the Journal of the Twenty-Fifth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 25) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 26, Com. P. No. 1 and Res. No. 9 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Ishikawa, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 25 was adopted.

Delegate Okamura, for the Committee on Ethics, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 26) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed; and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 1) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading. He then requested that action be deferred.

There being no objection, action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 26 and Com. P. No. 1 was deferred until Friday, August 11, 1978.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 9) relating to conflicts of interest concerning public employees was offered by Delegate Ellis, who moved for its adoption.

The President responded that it was the Chair's intention to refer all resolutions to standing committees.

Delegate Ellis, on a point of parliamentary inquiry, indicated that under Robert's Rules of Order initiative rested with the initiator on the reading of the resolution. He pointed out that if the Chair wished to modify that procedure, he should do so formally rather than by edict.

The Chair stated that the resolution had been printed and distributed to all delegates, and it was not the intention of the Chair to permit resolutions to be read by delegates on their whim. He further stated that the resolution would be promptly referred, as had others, to committee. The Chair then declared the reading of Res. No. 9 to be out of order.

Delegate Ellis at this time appealed the ruling of the Chair. The question appealing the Chair's ruling was then put and the Chair's ruling sustained.

There being no objection, Res. No. 9 was referred to the Committee on Ethics.

At this time, Delegate Sakima introduced former Senator Fred Rohlring, who was recognized by the Convention.

ORDER OF THE DAY
RE-REFERRAL OF PROPOSALS

The President re-referred the following proposals:

P. No. 480 was re-referred from the Committee on Taxation and Finance to the Committee on Taxation and Finance and the Committee on Education jointly.

P. No. 607 was re-referred from the Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions to the Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions and the Committee on Taxation and Finance jointly.

DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 24 (Res. No. 8, RD. 1) (Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing--Deferred from August 8, 1978):

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, moved for the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 24 and Res. No. 8, RD. 1, relating to the budget, seconded by Delegate Hayashida.

On a point of information, Delegate Hoe inquired whether the $240,547 referred to in the resolution was in addition to the $2.5 million convention budget.

Delegate Ledward replied in the negative, explaining that the aggregate sum of $2.5 million included the $240,547 which was funded by the legislature for specific purposes.

Delegate Hoe then inquired whether the $200,000 earmarked for the citizen education program was to be expended by the Legislative Reference Bureau or the Committee on Submission and Information.

In response, Delegate Iwamoto stated that by approving the resolution, the Convention could, by way of recommendations of the Committee on Submission and Information, utilize these funds for the intended purposes.

The President reassured the Convention that the Legislative Reference Bureau was not concerned at this point and that it was the Chair's intention to work closely with the committee relative to the use of the funds.

There being no further discussion, the question of the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 24 and Res. No. 8, as amended in RD. 1, was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At this time, Delegate Chong rose to inform the Convention that petitions containing over 20,000 signatures favoring the inclusion of initiative and referendum in the State Constitution had been presented to interested delegates earlier that day.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:47 a.m., on motion by Delegate Burgess, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a.m. Thursday, August 10, 1978.

TWENTY-SEVENTH DAY

Thursday, August 10, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by Mrs. Dorothy Shimer of United Church of Christ.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Sasaki who was excused and Delegate Hirata who was absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Twenty-Sixth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 27) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 and Res. No. 7, RD. 1, had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Ishikawa, seconded by Delegate Lacy and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 27 was adopted.

Delegate Nishimoto, for the Committee on Legislature, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28) recommending the adoption of Res. No. 7, as amended in RD. 1. He then requested that action be deferred.

There being no objection, action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 and Res. No. 7, RD. 1, relating to a bicameral legislature, was deferred until Friday, August 11, 1978.

At this time Delegate Cabral, on a point of parliamentary inquiry, objected to the submission of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 on the grounds that it was improperly submitted to the Convention, and requested a ruling from the Chair.

The Chair thereupon ruled that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 and Res. No. 7, RD. 1, had been properly reviewed in the committee and that the committee had followed the proper procedures.

Delegate Cabral then appealed the ruling of the Chair and requested a ruling from the parliamentarian.

Upon inquiry by Delegate Donald Ching as to whether the original Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 had a sufficient number of signatures, the Clerk informed the Convention that the original report did have sufficient concurring signatures.

The question appealing the ruling of the Chair was then put and the Chair's ruling sustained.

The President then announced that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 had been properly submitted and, as earlier stated, action would be deferred until August 11, 1978.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:50 a.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Fukunaga and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a.m. Friday, August 11, 1978.

TWENTY-EIGHTH DAY

Friday, August 11, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Richard DuFresne of the Community Church of Honolulu.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Ontai who was absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Twenty-Seventh Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 29) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 30 and Com. P. No. 2 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Ishikawa, seconded by Delegate Lacy and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 29 was adopted.

Delegate Izu, for the Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 30) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed and that Sections 2 and 3 of Article XIII be retained without amendment; and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 2) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading. She then requested that action on it be deferred.

There being no objection, action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 30 and Com. P. No. 2, relating to the state boundaries and motto, was deferred until Monday, August 14, 1978.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 10) urging financial disclosure statements by certain newspaper editors and publishers was offered jointly by Delegates Waihee and Taira.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 10 to the Committee on Ethics.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTERS

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 26 (Com. P. No. 1) (Committee on Ethics--Deferred from August 9, 1978):

On motion by Delegate Okamura, seconded by Delegate Kojima and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 26 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; and Com. P. No. 1, relating to codes of ethics, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Monday, August 14, 1978.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 (Res. No. 7, RD. 1) (Committee on Legislature--Deferred from August 10, 1978):

Delegate Nishimoto, for the Committee on Legislature, moved for the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 and Res. No. 7, RD. 1, relating to a bicameral legislature, seconded by Delegate Hokama.

Discussion being in order, Delegate Nishimoto, speaking for the motion, explained that it was necessary for the Committee on Legislature and several other standing committees to have the matter of a bicameral system considered at that time since this subject would be affecting the deliberations of this and other committees. He said that the Committee on Legislature would be considering such questions as the number of members of the legislature, the question of reapportionment, the terms of the members of the legislative body and the qualifications, salary and length of the legislative session, and that deliberations would be facilitated if the committee had some idea as to how the body as a whole would be going on the question of unicameralism v. bicameralism.

At this time, Delegate Cabral rose on a point of order, stating that the resolution did not address itself to the subject of unicameralism and requesting that reference to unicameralism not be used.

The Chair stated that the point was not sustained and reminded Delegate Cabral that Delegate Nishimoto still had the floor.

Delegate Nishimoto then continued that adoption of Res. No. 7 would in no way preclude the Committee on Legislature from discussing the unicameral/bicameral issue. He reiterated that the resolution was merely for the committee to get some idea as to where the Convention stood on the issue, as this would facilitate deliberations on other matters that depended on the type of legislature to be proposed.

At this time, Delegate Blean moved to recommit Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 and Res. No. 7, RD. 1, to the Committee on Legislature, seconded by Delegate DiBianco.

Speaking for his motion to recommit, Delegate Blean stated that the resolution was improper and unnecessary and that the standing committee report was biased, inaccurate, incomplete and did not accurately reflect the deliberations of the Committee on Legislature. He stated that he shared with some of the delegates the embarrassment of wasting the assembly's time with a meaningless resolution that had been debated to an almost absurd extent for 3 hours previously--it being generally conceded that it had no meaning in the Convention.

In summarizing the deliberations of the Committee on Legislature, Delegate Blean noted that a subcommittee on unicameralism had been formed and would submit a joint unicameral proposal to the legislative committee on August 17, which would follow the guidelines established for every proposal submitted to the body.

Delegate Blean then stated that the wording of this resolution had been picked up verbatim from the one introduced in 1968, and he strongly objected to the implication that conditions in 1978 were identical to those in 1968. He said that the 1968 convention was essentially a reapportionment one and that because there was a reapportionment standing committee, an early determination of the issue was necessary to aid that body. He further stated that a reapportionment commission was now in existence in Hawaii and that it had been decided by consensus in the legislative committee that any issue, whether bicameral or unicameral, which concerned the details of reapportionment would be referred to that commission. He therefore concluded that the need for an early decision was moot.

The resolution, he continued, had been introduced before any unicameral proposals had reached the delegates' desks, indicating that the authors came with closed minds and not to openly discuss and debate the issue. He further stated that to support and adopt the resolution would be condoning a narrow-minded, lightweight approach to the heavy burdens placed upon the Convention; and that taking major issues and reducing them to one-line resolutions to be either passed or disapproved was a great danger and had ominous implications down the road. Pleading with the body to heed his warning, Delegate Blean stated that it was their duty to fully discuss issues and not to use shortcuts that would circumvent the democratic process.

At this time, Delegate Sterling rose to speak in favor of the motion, stating that he could not resolve the difference between the "Whereas" and the "Be it resolved" sections of the resolution.

Delegate Campbell then spoke in favor of the motion to recommit, stating that if the resolution was adopted the Convention would have taken substantive action affecting proposals regarding which there had been no decision-making as yet by the legislative committee. She said that the thrust of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 was to induce the delegates to make a decision in favor of the resolution and then, to allay their fears, it stated that their vote would in no way preclude the committee from dealing with and deciding upon the issue of bicameralism v. unicameralism at a later date. She cautioned the delegates to be mindful of the fact that this might be one of the most significant issues to be decided by the Convention and therefore urged a careful examination of the procedural aspects of the resolution and the effect it might have on the deliberations of the other committees.

Delegate Cabral, speaking in favor of the motion to recommit, indicated that inasmuch as the resolution was a part of the committee report, he would speak against the committee report as it was presented in a biased, slanted way that depicted an aura very detrimental to the Convention. He further stated that approval of Res. No. 7 would hamstring the total Convention.

Delegate DiBianco, on a point of parliamentary inquiry, inquired of the legislature committee chairman whether Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 was an official statement formally adopted within the reporting body.

Delegate Nishimoto responded that it was, having been authorized by the committee from the signatures that were attached, 22 of which were affirmatively signed and just a few indicating "do not concur."

Delegate DiBianco then requested a ruling from the parliamentarian as to whether it was sufficient to formally adopt a committee report simply by circulating it among the committee members to sign, as he noted that some had signed "do not concur," "not proper," etc. He questioned whether that constituted formal adoption of a committee report, as reflected in Robert's Rules of Order.

The Chair then called a recess in order to confer with the parliamentarian.

At 11:54 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 12:02 p.m.

At this time the Chair stated that according to the parliamentarian the fact that a majority of the committee members did sign the report supporting the resolution--the prima facie evidence that they did concur--indicated that the resolution was properly before the house.

Delegate DiBianco thereupon appealed the ruling.

Speaking in support of the appeal, Delegate Blean pointed out that since their rules did not address standing committee report procedures, according to Convention Rule 33, Robert's Rules of Order "shall govern in all cases in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the Convention." He then quoted from Robert's Rules, referring to committee reports, that a committee report contained only what was "agreed to by the majority of the members present at a meeting" at which every member was notified, and concluded that unless they voted not to follow Robert's Rules, they had no choice but to follow what was there in black and white.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak in support of the appeal of the Chair's ruling. She stated that since Americans believed in a system of laws, were ruled by laws and believed that all people should be guaranteed rights under the Constitution, and since the delegates were there to lay the basis for laws in a constitution, that they should follow the rules governing that constitutional convention or go home.

At 12:08 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 12:18 p.m.

Delegate De Soto then rose on a point of personal privilege. She stated that, speaking for herself, she was saddened by some of the members who, in their exuberant effort to convey their opinions, felt it necessary to make personal comments about other members, and that underhanded innuendos did no good. Tempers, she observed, were short due to the time constraints and delegates should make their opinion or stance known without references to personal differences.

At this time Delegate DiBianco withdrew his appeal.

The Chair then announced that the issue before the house was the recommitment of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 and Res. No. 7, RD. 1, and that questions relative to the committee report, except in support of the motion to recommit, were not in order. He then called for further discussion on the motion.

Delegate Blake, on a point of information, asked if the committee chairman would explain about the report on unicameralism before the vote.

Delegate Nishimoto then explained that Delegate Blean had said the committee would be coming out with a minority and a majority report on the issue of unicameralism and bicameralism but that this was not correct; that the Committee on Legislature did have an ad hoc subcommittee looking into the question of unicameralism, whose report was to be submitted to the committee on Thursday, and that at that time the committee would look into the question of unicameralism v. bicameralism. But this report, he emphasized, would not be a part of the committee's total proposal package as it was a report only to the committee itself.

Delegate DiBianco then spoke in favor of the motion to recommit, stating that in his opinion this resolution was a very bad precedent, and that although the format was identical to that in 1968 this was without the reason or rationale which supported that resolution. He was, he said, very disturbed at the resolution format, there being no rules regarding resolutions, which could go from the Clerk's desk to committee with no power on the delegates' part to call it out of committee. He added that a resolution was biased according to one or the other delegate, and that a report was representative of the majority but not the minority, there being no benefit of the minority's thinking in a report. The vote, he explained, was on the resolution rather than the report of the committee, which was why he had withdrawn his motion.

Delegate DiBianco then continued that this was an awkward procedure with no rules to guide them, and that rules seemed to be established as they went along. He then referred to Robert's Rules of Order, citing the address that set the framework for the book, wherein it was stated that the object of rules was "to assist an assembly to accomplish the work for which it was designed, in the best possible manner." He further commented that the majority knew whether they had the votes, and that he couldn't understand their not wanting to follow the procedures as they were set up, or their rushing matters in haste and ignorance and in violation of rules that had been set up at the very beginning to which the Convention should be bound.

Delegate Taira then spoke in opposition to the motion to recommit. He said it was his understanding that the Committee on Legislature had had a series of comprehensive and open hearings, and that after due deliberation the decision by the majority had been to bring out a resolution recommending an early preliminary decision in favor of bicameralism and retention of Article III. This early decision, he continued, would give a sense of direction to other committees with issues that were closely connected, and he added that it would be decided at a later time whether Hawaii should have a unicameral or bicameral legislature. He then said he didn't see why they couldn't make the real decision then, that it was good to have debates but some indication should be given as to whether they thought one or the other kind of legislature was better for the State.

Delegate Blean then contended that this was merely rubber-stamping what had been done 10 years ago. He pointed out that the resolution had been introduced on July 17 but hadn't come out on their desks until August 11, and that one month indicated there was no such urgency.

Delegate Nishimoto, in response, explained that the delay was due to the committee's holding public hearings on the unicameral and bicameral issues, and that it had been felt unwise to bring out a resolution before completion of the hearings on both issues.

Delegate Dennis Ihara, speaking for the motion, stated that like many other delegates he was for a bicameral legislature. However, he noted, his objection was to the procedure and handling of the resolution, and that if they allowed this resolution, in all fairness they must allow others, which would hamper or prolong procedures.

Delegate O'Toole then spoke in favor of the motion, saying that there was no testimony for or against Res. No. 7, that the testimony was for or against unicameralism, and that therefore a proposal on unicameralism should have come out, or no proposal at all. He further stated that it was his understanding the full legislative package was supposed to come up for discussion in the Committee of the Whole on the 21st. He then pointed out that in 1968 the argument for getting a quick and early indication of the sentiment on bicameralism was valid because of reapportionment, but that this was not the main question at this time. He added that, according to the lieutenant governor's office, in 1981 the reapportionment issue, with either a unicameral or bicameral body, would be discussed.

Delegate Chun then rose to support the motion to recommit, stating that the resolution gave the impression that bicameralism would be approved and that if unicameralism passed, the committees would have to start all over. He then stated that he wanted the committees to go ahead and make quick decisions on the issue of bicameralism versus unicameralism.

Delegate Harris, speaking in favor of the motion, contended that they must not allow critical issues to be decided by resolution without proper hearings and fair debate and that every proposal should be decided based on its merit after hearings. They should not, he stated, allow proposals to be killed by railroading techniques such as this.

Delegate Hirata then spoke against the motion, saying that the reason for a resolution was to have it serve as useful guidance. The Committee on Legislature, he stated, would not make the issue moot and would definitely consider the question of a unicameral v. bicameral legislature. He added that the resolution would help not only the Committee on Legislature but also other committees in their deliberations. He then remarked that it would be senseless to come out with a proposal on unicameralism, present it to the body and have it voted down, adding that he was sure that in the deliberations both sides of the question would be examined. He stated that the chairman had allowed a subcommittee to be formed to present ideas on unicameralism, and that this was to serve as a guide for that as well as other committees. He then called for the main question--to accept or defeat the resolution--and added that they all had a lot of work and deadlines must be met. This was a motion, he said, to prolong the plenary session by stalling tactics and the body should vote on the resolution.

Delegate Uyehara, on a point of personal privilege, asked if the committee had had adequate time to discuss this concern on the unicameral and bicameral proposals that had come up.

Delegate Nishimoto responded that discussion had been held for 3 hours on the question of the resolution, and that committee members had been well aware that those issues were open for discussion. Unfortunately, he added, the discussion had been based mainly on the resolution itself and its propriety, and the concepts of unicameralism and bicameralism were still open for discussion.

Delegate Kimball, speaking for the motion to recommit, pointed out that resolutions should not be used to debate or decide issues, that there were no convention or committee rules on how to process a resolution, and that resolutions did not have the details necessary to make an objective decision on any issue. He then remarked that there were in Res. No. 7 inconsistencies between the "Whereas" and "Be it resolved" paragraphs.

A meaningful comparison of a unicameral with a bicameral legislature, he pointed out, could not be made without an examination of the vital parts, such as compositions of the houses, districting, sessions, terms, organization, passage of bills, etc. He mentioned that there were at that time proposals before the legislature committee addressing various alternatives to the current bicameral system, and added that these proposals would be examined in detail. He then affirmed that the chairman of the legislature committee had authorized a subcommittee to develop a proposal on a unicameral legislature with all of the vital parts mentioned. Only then, he added, could the Convention discuss the merits or demerits of a proposed unicameral system and compare it meaningfully with the present bicameral system.

Delegate DiBianco then spoke in favor of the motion, observing that it was dangerous to use procedures about which there were no rules and nothing to guide. He then stated that nobody was trying to stall, and that it was not fair to say that those who demanded adherence to rules and to Robert's Rules of Order were stalling.

Delegate Goodenow, speaking in favor of the motion, expressed concern about the public's response, stating that she didn't feel the adoption of such a resolution would be understood. Referring to the individualism of each committee, she advised that they didn't need any guidelines, that they were all acting individually, especially the legislative committee.

Delegate Eastvold then inquired if the Chair was going to allow discussion on the merits of unicameralism. He asked how a delegate not privy to the committee's or any other discussion on the merits of unicameralism could make a decision. The Chair responded that the motion was whether to recommit, and that they could make that decision at a later time.

Delegate O'Toole, speaking for the motion to recommit, pointed out that by bringing up Res. No. 7, which reaffirmed a bicameral legislature, the idea of discussing a unicameral legislature was moot at that time.

Delegate Cabral then moved for a roll-call vote relative to Res. No. 7. The Chair ruled the motion out of order.

At this time Delegate Hokama rose to speak against the motion. He remarked that a majority of the members of the legislature committee saw fit that this resolution pass, and that it had passed under proper procedures whereby a majority decision was recorded. He said that the same tactics used on the committee level that failed were being used at that time.

Delegate Kono, speaking in favor of the motion, pointed out that the intent of the motion was to have a straw vote in order to expedite proceedings, and observed that this was a worthy intent. However, he said, the effect would stifle discussion and debate, which were important on an issue in which the public had expressed strong interest. He explained that the arguments in 1968 didn't have much merit now, that the reason for expediting then had been reapportionment. In 1968, he continued, the question of reapportionment took a full 3 months to resolve and required volumes of computerized evidence and significant public input, the decision being made on the basis of a proposal and allowing for full and free discussion. Even if this decision were made early in the Convention, he continued, it was not possible for them to reapportion districts and an early determination would have no effect.

Delegate Burgess, speaking in favor of the motion to recommit, said that while he appreciated the desire of the drafters of the resolution to have an early decision on the question of a bicameral or unicameral legislature, they should do it in a way that would not cut out the heart of democratic decision-making--that was, by full debate on the merits of each important issue before the delegates made their decision.

The committee chairman, he continued, had related that 3 hours had been spent discussing the merits of the resolution, that there had been no discussion at all on the merits of unicameralism v. bicameralism, and yet they were being asked to make a decision on the very question that the committee hadn't decided on. How, he asked, were constituents going to feel if they heard that this Convention, by resolution, had decided that issue before there had even been any debate, either for or against. The resolution, he concluded, should be recommitted and brought back after debate and free and open discussion.

Delegate Hironaka then asked the committee chairman, if they voted to adopt the resolution, if this would mean all discussion and debate on unicameralism v. bicameralism would stop.

Delegate Nishimoto responded that it did not mean all discussion would end, that the subcommittee was working on that question, and the committee report indicated that consideration would go on.

Delegate Hironaka then spoke against the recommittal, saying that it was not going to stop any discussion and that it would still allow a decision on unicameralism v. bicameralism after the committee hearings. He emphasized that it would not affect the final decision.

Delegate Kaapu, speaking against the motion to recommit, said he preferred to have the issue brought before the Convention in order to have an early determination and that he would have favored using the vehicle the unicameral advocates had wished--a proposal on unicameralism--which would have been reported out with a negative vote by the committee. It seemed, he continued, debate ought to be heard by the Convention before they voted, but it was not felt by the majority of the committee that that vehicle be used. He then mentioned that he had signed the report sending forth the resolution because it did not of itself preclude full, fair and open debate.

He noted that those who preferred the proposal route objected to discussion of the issue in the context of the resolution, and that unicameralism was an important issue and should be debated. But sending it back to committee, he concluded, would not facilitate getting an early indication by the committee, and regretfully he would vote against the motion to recommit.

Delegate Cabral, speaking as a member of the legislature committee, stated that his vote would be against Res. No. 7, against the use of a resolution in principle. Speaking in favor of the motion, he related that he was against the resolution because of the language in the report, and that he did not take exception to the fact that the resolution itself was deliberated in the committee, voted on and passed. Had that resolution been sent to the body to stand on its own merit, he emphasized, he would not support a motion to recommit, but the language in the report presented a biased outlook on it.

Delegate De Soto, on a point of inquiry, questioned whether, if the resolution were adopted, there would be no other consideration on unicameralism down the road.

Delegate Nishimoto explained that adoption would not mean that the unicameral issue was dead, that the issue would be considered. The subcommittee, he explained, was now in the process of formulating a unicameral proposal and the question would be coming up in the Committee of the Whole.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak for the motion. She reminded the delegates that whether or not the issue came up again was not the point. She stated that she personally was for bicameralism, but the point was that using the vehicle of a resolution for such an important issue was not proper as there was no provision in the rules for proper discussion on a resolution. To debate, she maintained, meant submitting it as a proposal and going into Committee of the Whole. She urged recommittal so that it could come out in proper order, under proper rules, and the public would not be misled.

Delegate Stegmaier then rose to speak against the motion, saying that it appeared the resolution would hurt the Convention, yet it had been the judgment of a majority of the legislative committee that a resolution was necessary and the compelling rationale had been the need to provide all relevant committees with a realistic context in which to proceed.

Delegate Silva then asked, if the resolution was adopted, whether the legislative committee would then come up with a proposal on unicameralism or bicameralism that could be debated on the floor, or if this would stop a proposal from coming from the committee.

The Chair answered that the committee chairman had indicated that full opportunity would be given for a discussion on unicameralism v. bicameralism.

Delegate Silva then spoke against the motion, stating that a majority would like the resolution passed, and to recommit it only meant that they would go back in meeting and then come out and say they would like it adopted. He then moved for its adoption.

Delegate DiBianco, on a point of inquiry, asked if, as indicated by the committee chairman, there was to be full and open discussion on the resolution, why there was no minority report attached to it.

Delegate Waihee, in response, stated that the responsibility for a minority report belonged with the minority. Speaking against the motion, he observed that what they had was a resolution, not a proposal, and that it had no binding effect on any changes in the Constitution. He compared it to a poll, to determine what the delegates thought on a particular issue. He then remarked that he was disturbed by the constant references to a lack of debate, adding that a motion to refer if anything was a vehicle to cut off debate and that this was their opportunity to fully debate in front of the entire Convention the merits and the concept of unicameralism. The effect of recommitting, he concluded, would be to stop debate, and the Convention should have as free and open a debate as possible on the issue.

Delegate DiBianco, on a point of parliamentary inquiry, remarked that he would still like an answer from the committee chairman as to the minority report.

Delegate Nishimoto responded that it was not the chairman's responsibility to prepare a minority report, that the chairman prepared a report for the majority of the committee, and that since the committee went along with the resolution, it did not prepare a minority report.

Delegate Wurdeman, on a point of information, indicated that she was having problems with definitions. She inquired as to what was meant by the language, "Be it resolved by the Constitutional Convention... that a bicameral form of legislature be retained," taking all the arguments into consideration.

The underlying thing, Delegate Nishimoto answered, was that the document was a resolution, which by itself was not a proposal and not mandatory from the Convention. He then explained that this meant it was just a straw vote to give the Convention a guide as to where they were going, as far as that issue was concerned.

Delegate Sutton, on a point of information, asked if they could get a legal opinion on that, to which the Chair replied that legal opinion was not available at that time.

Delegate Hornick then stated that she expected the legislative committee to research the merits of bicameralism and unicameralism and report to the Committee of the Whole, after which she would be able to decide if she were for unicameralism or bicameralism. Speaking for the motion to recommit, she asked how at that point she could know whether she was for bicameralism or unicameralism, that she was waiting for the legislative committee to make its recommendation, to which she could respond. She remarked that it seemed they were asking for the Convention's recommendation and then they would say how the committee report would come out.

At 1:15 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 1:23 p.m.

The Chair then called for further discussion on the question to recommit Res. No. 7, RD. 1.

Speaking in favor of the motion, Delegate Kimball said that the resolution was intended to provide a guideline to the other standing committees, and that the areas of concern included those relating to the advice and consent on appointments and the required percentage of approval on specific legislative actions. He then observed that neither of these was a basic structure or policy decision, being more or less standardized procedures in these types of matters, which would in any case be reviewed by the other committees in the course of their deliberations.

Delegate Hagino then rose to speak against the motion to recommit. He noted that one of the arguments being used was that a delegate couldn't vote wisely on a question that had not been debated, and he reminded the delegates of the Con Con newspaper supplement, which most had replied to and in which nearly all had indicated whether they were for or against. He concluded that if they could make a judgment then, they could make a judgment today.

Delegate Liu, speaking in favor of the motion, observed that a previous speaker had aptly pointed out that the resolution was unnecessary, and if so, only a poll would be needed on their positions on the subject. He said he could thus see no reason for taking up the resolution, that there was a right way and a wrong way and the resolution was the wrong way.

Delegate Yamashita, noting that all the arguments had been heard, then moved for the previous question, seconded by Delegate Waihee.

Delegate Cabral then requested a roll-call vote.

The Chair stated that the previous question had been called for and it was nondebatable, and then advised Delegate Cabral that ten delegates were needed to support his motion for a roll-call vote.

The motion calling for the previous question was then put by the Chair and carried. The question to recommit Res. No. 7, RD. 1, was put and, there being ten seconds, roll call was ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion to recommit failed to carry by a vote of 35 ayes, 65 noes and 2 excused; with Delegates Barr, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chu, Chun, DiBianco, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Funakoshi, Goodenow, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hoe, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Odanaka, O'Toole, Peterson, Shon, Sterling, Takitani, Wurdeman and Yamashita voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Blake, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Okamura, Penebacker, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Chang and Ontai being excused.

The Chair then announced that the question before the house was the main motion to adopt Res. No. 7, RD. 1.

Discussion being in order, Delegate Chu rose to speak against the resolution. She stated that, having listened to the views on whether this would prevent discussion on the unicameral v. bicameral question, she could not understand the purpose of bringing the resolution to the floor when the report itself specifically said that it would not preclude further discussion or be binding in any way. She said she had come to the Convention to consider the merits and demerits of the two systems, but that since she had not had the benefit of the committee's thinking on it, she was simply not going to vote.

Delegate Pulham then asked the Chair to clarify whether resolutions could now be introduced on those subjects not introduced prior to the deadline for proposals and if they would then go to the committees and be handled as that resolution had been and brought back on the floor. He stated that if a precedent was being set that would allow them all to introduce subjects by resolution and expect decisions, that he would then have to vote against the resolution.

The Chair reiterated that this was the intention for only this particular issue. He noted that the chairman of the legislature committee had stated they were really looking for a straw vote, and added that he doubted anybody there felt this was the way to do business. It was the committee reports, he added, that produced proposals and it was in that fashion they would expect to debate the issues before them.

Delegate Sterling then moved to amend the resolution by adding the word "temporarily" in the second paragraph before "resolved." The motion was seconded by Delegate DiBianco.

Delegate Hokama questioned whether the motion was proper at that time since the resolution and committee report had not yet been separated.

The Chair announced that the parliamentarian advised the motion was not in order, that it was not germane, and that the question was whether to adopt or not.

Delegate DiBianco, on a point of information, noted that the Chair had indicated it was the sense of the resolution to take a straw vote on the question of unicameralism v. bicameralism and that it would only occur on that one issue. He then questioned which rule said that only that issue would be handled by resolution, and asked if they would have to depend on the discretion of the Chair.

The Chair indicated it was the intention to proceed with the business of the Convention through the committee, observing that this was a separate issue and there was no rule other than the inquiry directed to the Chair and the Chair's intention therefrom.

Delegate Hale, on a point of information, questioned the parliamentarian's ruling on the motion by Delegate Sterling, asking why it was out of order and if there was therefore no way of amending a resolution.

The Chair answered that resolutions could be amended but that that amendment, he had been advised, was not in order.

Delegate Donald Ching then rose to speak in favor of the resolution, stating that he wanted to allay the fears of those who felt this was binding on the body as a whole. He explained that there was no need for Delegate Sterling's amendment as the action taken was only good on a day-to-day basis, and that if they were subsequently asked to take a different action, majority vote would again prevail, whatever action taken by the adoption being good only until the next action came along. He emphasized that the only thing being sought was a straw vote on how the body felt, so the committees could then go about their work.

Delegate Sterling, speaking in favor of the motion to adopt, observed that what had happened there that morning was one of the greatest arguments against unicameralism.

Delegate Sutton, referring to the provision in the ethics code on conflicts, mentioned that he had a family member in a bicameral legislature at that time, and that he did have a conflict.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak against the motion to adopt, stating that she was for a bicameral legislature but not being a member of the legislative committee she had had no chance to debate the issue. Whether or not it was brought up later, she continued, was moot since the public would know that the Convention had gone on record for a bicameral legislature. She then observed that if it had been the intent to take a straw vote, it could have been done by polling the delegates in their offices, and that this information had already been published. She further pointed out that this was not the proper vehicle, that it should have been submitted as a proposal, on which the Committee of the Whole would have afforded free and open debate; but that as a resolution it could come up only in plenary session, where there was only one chance to vote on a very substantive issue. Remark that she deplored the tactics used by the majority in the Convention to force through the majority opinion without allowing debate, she then observed that that resolution was not the proper form to debate unicameralism as it did not even address itself to the unicameral issue.

Speaking against the motion, Delegate Cabral expressed the hope that the members of the media would offer the public a caveat to de bene esse.

Delegate DiBianco pointed out, in response to the delegate who had said they needn't fear passage of the resolution because it was not binding, that the resolution was therefore useless. He then commented that this resolution seemed to have a unique position within the Convention, being the only proposal subject matter to come up labeled a resolution.

Delegate Pulham then remarked that he had previously supported Res. No. 7, being essentially a bicameralist, but that since this was a straw vote, on which they should indicate how they were feeling at that particular moment, he wanted to go on record then as favoring unicameralism, which Res. No. 7 was opposed to.

Delegate De Soto, speaking in favor of the motion, pointed out that a majority of the committee members had indicated what their mana'o was, and that she respected their mana'o and consequently supported the motion to adopt Res. No. 7.

Delegate Rachel Lee then spoke against the motion. She explained that she had signed the report because the members had been made to understand that discussion on unicameralism and bicameralism would take place and the resolution would in no way be the final act.

Delegate Harris also spoke in opposition to the motion, maintaining that procedures there were improper and that he refused to vote on the matter.

Delegate Campbell then observed that, whether the vote was described as a straw vote or any other kind of vote, each delegate to the Convention owed it to the people who had elected him to make his decision based on knowledge. Not having been privy to the committee's hearings on unicameralism, she continued, she would like to know more before making any decision but she couldn't on the basis of the material in front of her. Therefore, she concluded, she was speaking against the resolution.

Delegate Hamilton also spoke against the resolution--not, he said, because of the straw vote but simply because he was convinced that the unicameral form of legislature was in the modern era very much superior to the bicameral. When the time was appropriate, he added, he would argue the case.

Delegate Barnes then rose to speak against Res. No. 7, observing that since they had voted not to recommit, the only alternative was for the committee to present the benefit of its thinking to those not on the committee. He added that he spoke against the resolution because where the public was split, it was their primary role to present the alternative on the ballot.

Speaking in favor of the resolution, Delegate Sterling suggested that they could debate the question of unicameralism right there on the resolution.

Delegate Blean then rose and stated that he felt Res. No. 7 was improper and not in accordance with the rules of the Convention. And, he added, he would not condone that action by voting on the issue.

Delegate Crozier then spoke for the resolution, first because he was for bicameralism and second as a vote of confidence in their fairness.

Speaking against the motion, Delegate Wurdeman stated that she believed the resolution was poorly worded. She added that she was also on record as being for a bicameral legislature.

At 1:55 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2:02 p.m.

Delegate De Soto at this time moved for a roll-call vote. The Chair then questioned whether discussion was complete. Delegate Blake thereupon moved for the previous question, seconded by Delegate Donald Ching.

The motion calling for the previous question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Roll call then being in order, the question on the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 28 and Res. No. 7, RD. 1, was put by the Chair and the motion carried by a vote of 68 ayes, 32 noes and 2 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Blake, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kojima, Kono, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Okamura, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Barnes, Barr, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chu, DiBianco, Eastvold, Ellis, Goodenow, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hoe, Hornick, Kimball, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Odanaka, O'Toole, Peterson, Pulham, Shon, Sterling, Takitani, Wurdeman and Yamashita voting no; and Delegates Chang and Ontai being excused.

ADJOURNMENT

At 2:19 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Sutton and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a.m. Saturday, August 12, 1978.

TWENTY-NINTH DAY

Saturday, August 12, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Lynette G. Schaefer of St. Peter's Episcopal Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Burgess, Donald Ching and Taira who were excused and Delegates Blake, Blean, Chun, Fernandes Salling, Kojima, Lacy, Lewis and Ontai who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Twenty-Eighth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 31) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 32 and Com. P. No. 3 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Ishikawa, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 31 was adopted.

Delegate Fukunaga, for the Committee on Executive, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 32) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed, and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 3) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading. She then requested that action on it be deferred.

There being no objection, action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 32 and Com. P. No. 3, relating to the executive, was deferred until Tuesday, August 15, 1978.

At 11:38 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:43 a.m.

At this time, Delegate Hale made a motion, seconded by Delegate DiBianco, to have the Committee on Rules consider the convention rules to clarify procedural questions concerning introduction and adoption of resolutions, introduction of committee proposals for First Reading, submission of minority reports, new business, recall of proposals from committee and such other matters as may be necessary for this Convention.

Delegate Waihee, on a point of order, suggested that the proper procedure for this motion would be for Delegate Hale to submit her request in the form of a resolution so that it might be referred to the proper committee.

Delegate Hale, speaking for her motion, expressed her deep concern relative to the lack of definitive guidelines regarding convention procedures. More specifically, she mentioned the lack of sufficient clarity in the convention rules in dealing with committee reports and committee proposals. She noted that Rule 46, for instance, did not mention anything about committee proposals for First Reading, except to say that they laid over for four days and were given Second Reading and consideration by the Committee of the Whole.

Although the Convention seemed to be following the pattern established by the 1968 convention, she continued, procedures regarding the introduction of committee reports as compared to the introduction of proposals were different at this Convention.

Delegate Hale also mentioned that there was no rule covering the introduction of resolutions, and she suggested the rules committee come up with some rules. Similarly, she said, the convention rules should include procedures for introducing minority reports as well as for introducing new ideas to the Convention. She continued that Rule 43, on recalling proposals from committees, should also be rewritten so that it could be more easily understood.

Delegate Takemoto rose to speak against the motion, pointing out that the proper vehicle for requesting rule changes should be a resolution rather than a motion on the floor.

Delegate Crozier then spoke in favor of the motion. He said that much of the confusion experienced by many of the delegates could be minimized if convention procedures were more clearly defined.

There being no further discussion, the question was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Hale then called for a division of the house.

At 11:48 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:52 a.m.

A division of the house having been requested, the question was again put by the Chair and failed to carry.

The President informed the Convention at this time that the rules committee chairman had apprised him earlier of the committee's willingness to consider requests for review of convention rules, provided the requests were submitted in writing.

Delegate Hale acknowledged the committee's offer and said that she would introduce a resolution on Monday, August 14, 1978.

ADJOURNMENT

At 12:06 p.m., on motion by Delegate Takemoto, seconded by Delegate Shinno and carried, the Convention adjourned until 7:00 p.m. Monday, August 14, 1978.

THIRTIETH DAY

Monday, August 14, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 7:00 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by Pastor Craig Klatt of the Aiea Seventh-day Adventist Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Burgess who was excused and Delegates Ontai and Sutton who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Twenty-Ninth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

PETITION

A petition (Pet. No. 1) respectfully requesting that the President answer 17 questions enumerated therein was offered by 20 delegates and presented by the Clerk.

Delegate Kono, rising on a point of parliamentary inquiry, apologized for not having had enough time to circulate the petition to all delegates, and asked to speak to the intent of the petition.

Delegate Taira, on a point of order, stated that when a petition was presented to the Convention, it was the Chair's prerogative to either act on it or refer it to the proper committee or officer.

Delegate Kono again asked to speak on the petition.

At this time the Chair ruled that as a matter of principle and policy, Pet. No. 1 would be referred to the President's office and that he would personally respond to all delegates who had signed it.

Delegate Kono then announced that the petition had been circulated to the media and would probably appear in the newspaper the next day, and therefore he would like to give the Convention the rationale behind it.

Delegate Taira, on a point of order, stated that once the Chair had made a ruling on a point, the delegates could, if not satisfied, appeal the ruling of the Chair.

The Chair again ruled that the convention floor was not the proper place to debate the petition, and expressed regret that Delegate Kono's strong feelings on the matter had been played up by the media.

Delegate DiBianco, on a point of personal privilege, advised in support of the petition that it was not the intent of anyone to debate the matters contained in the petition but simply to urge the President to carefully consider the matters.

Delegate De Soto, also on a point of privilege, stated that she was deeply offended that the media had had the privilege of reading the petition before she as a delegate had had a chance to see it, and she thought this was a personal insult.

Delegate Kono apologized to the Convention, explaining to all delegates that this was due to unfortunate logistics on their part.

The Chair again announced his intention to sit down with all concerned and review the questions at a later time since he had not yet had a chance to read, much less respond to, the petition.

Delegate Kono then rose to appeal the ruling of the Chair. The question appealing the ruling was put and the Chair's ruling sustained.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 33) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 34, Com. P. No. 4 and Res. No. 11 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Rachel Lee and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 33 was adopted.

Delegate Izu, for the Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 34) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed, and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 4) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 34 and Com. P. No. 4, relating to the Preamble, general and miscellaneous provisions, revision and amendment, on the calendar for further consideration on Wednesday, August 16, 1978.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 11) requesting amendment of the Rules of the Convention to clarify the procedures therein was offered by Delegate Hale.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 11 to the Committee on Rules.

At 7:15 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 7:17 p.m.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 30 (Com. P. No. 2) (Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions--Deferred from August 11, 1978):

On motion by Delegate Izu, seconded by Delegate Kaito and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 30 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; Sections 2 and 3 of Article XIII were recommended to be retained without amendment; and Com. P. No. 2, relating to the state boundaries and motto, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Wednesday, August 16, 1978.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 1--RELATING TO CODES OF ETHICS:

Delegate Okamura moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 1, relating to codes of ethics, seconded by Delegate Calvin Ching.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 1 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Barr to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 7:18 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Barr assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 11:01 p.m., Delegate Barr vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Barr, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 1, as amended, and that a written report would be filed later.

Delegate DiBianco, at this time, moved to recommit Com. P. No. 1, seconded by Delegate Hale. Speaking for the motion, Delegate DiBianco said that he did not object intrinsically to the ethics code but felt that some of the language in the proposal needed further clarification before it was referred to the Committee on Style.

Delegate Okamura then spoke against the motion, explaining that the Committee on Ethics had intentionally drafted the document as presented so that definitions could be left to the respective legislative bodies when they adopted their own ethics codes.

The motion to recommit Com. P. No. 1 was then put by the Chair and failed to carry.

On motion by Delegate Barr, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the oral report of the Committee of the Whole was adopted.

At this time, Delegate Chong was recognized and made a brief statement congratulating the chairman and the members of the Committee on Ethics for a job well done.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:12 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Taira and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a.m. Tuesday, August 15, 1978.

THIRTY-FIRST DAY

Tuesday, August 15, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by Pastor Lyle Arakaki of the Japanese Seventh-day Adventist Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Fernandes Salling and Villaverde who were excused and Delegates Donald Ching, Hirata, Kojima, Peterson and Taira who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Thirtieth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 32 (Com. P. No. 3) (Committee on Executive--Deferred from August 12, 1978):

On motion by Delegate Fukunaga, seconded by Delegate Souki and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 32 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; and Com. P. No. 3, relating to the executive, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Thursday, August 17, 1978.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:45 a.m., on motion by Delegate Nakamura, seconded by Delegate Goodenow and carried, the Convention adjourned until 4:30 p.m. Wednesday, August 16, 1978.

THIRTY-SECOND DAY

Wednesday, August 16, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 4:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Masu Dyer, delegate from the Twenty-Fifth District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Fernandes Salling and Stegmaier who were excused and Delegate Takehara who was absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Thirty-First Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 35) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 36, Com. P. Nos. 1, RD. 1, and 5, Res. No. 12 and Com. Whole Rep. No. 1 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Rachel Lee and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 35 was adopted.

Delegate Fushikoshi, for the Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 36) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed, and that Section 4 of Article VIII and Sections 1 and 2 of Article XII be retained without amendment; and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 5) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 36 and Com. P. No. 5, relating to public health and welfare, on the calendar for further consideration on Friday, August 18, 1978.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 12) relating to the scheduling of convention meetings on Sundays was offered jointly by Delegates Peterson and Sterling.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 12 to the Committee on Rules.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 34, Com. P. No. 4--RELATING TO THE PREAMBLE, GENERAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS, REVISION AND AMENDMENT:

On motion by Delegate Izu, seconded by Delegate Kaito and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 34 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; and Com. P. No. 4, relating to the Preamble, general and miscellaneous provisions, revision and amendment, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Friday, August 18, 1978.

SECOND READING

Com. Whole Rep. No. 1, Com. P. No. 1, RD. 1--RELATING TO CODES OF ETHICS:

Delegate Barr, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Okamura, for the Committee on Ethics, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 1) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 1 be adopted and Com. P. No. 1, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

Discussion being in order, Delegate Hale moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate Cabral, which amended the first paragraph of section 1 of Com. P. No. 1, RD. 1, by substituting the following:

Section 5. The legislature and each political subdivision shall adopt a code of ethics, which shall apply to appointed and elected officers and employees of the State or the political subdivision, respectively, including members of the boards, commissions and other bodies.

Speaking for her motion, Delegate Hale made the following statement:

"I would just like to explain to the delegates what I've done. In 1968 the constitutional convention adopted a code of ethics and this is the language that is presently in our Constitution. Under this language, the State and the counties all have codes of ethics. It is my belief that this is as far as the Constitutional Convention should go. We were warned early in the game that our Constitution is a model because it has as little verbiage as it seems reasonable to have.

"There are 39 words in this section of the Constitution. The new proposal would make a section of 268 words. Many of these words are not clear--not clear to the delegates and therefore I am sure they will not be clear to the public. I'm very concerned that when we put our amendments before the people we put amendments they can understand and will vote for--because these, as we must all realize, are only recommendations. If on the one hand we are going to tell people that we have a model constitution because it does have concise language, and then on the other hand we are going to expand various sections in what I consider a not-very-meaningful way, there is a great possibility that the people will vote down our whole document, or certain parts of it.

"I have great faith in the people and their ability to understand and their integrity and willingness to study issues. But when the delegates here cannot even understand fully what is being proposed, I don't see how we can possibly go out and sell this concept to the people. I'd like to also point out that there were some very serious compromises made in making all of this verbiage. The chairman of the Committee on Ethics had two very good proposals--Proposal No. 94 which would have added nepotism as one of the concerns of the ethics commission and Proposal No. 734 which would have added judges and justices. Both of these were deleted from the recommendations of the committee, and other suggestions to make this a stronger ethics code were turned down in the Committee of the Whole.

"And therefore I don't really think we're going to fool the public, and I would rather not be a party to it. So in the interest of simplicity and in the interest of compromise, I'm suggesting that we just leave the language as it is, and that we adopt this amendment which will substitute the present language for the proposal. Thank you."

Delegate Okamura rose to speak against the amendment, pointing out that it would take out every revision the ethics committee and the Committee of the Whole had recommended and leave no constitutional reforms in the area of ethics. He further pointed out that the same amendment had been fully debated in the Committee of the Whole and had been overwhelmingly rejected.

Delegate Harris also spoke strongly against the amendment, pointing out that the quality of a constitution was not measured by its scarcity of words. He further noted that there was no rationale for reverting to a less stringent regulation simply because the provisions were not as strong as some of the delegates would have liked.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 1, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 1 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Waihee requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining that there were ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 4 ayes, 93 noes and 5 excused; with Delegates Cabral, DiBianco, Hale and Hokama voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Campbell, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, O'Toole, Penebacker, Peterson, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Fernandes Salling, Lewis, Ontai, Stegmaier and Takehara being excused.

At this time, Delegate Burgess questioned the language in Com. P. No. 1, RD. 1, which now permitted members of ethics commissions to hold office in political organizations.

Delegate Taira, on a point of order, noted that the change in language was the result of many hours of debate in the Committee of the Whole. To question it at this time, he pointed out, was not in order.

The Chair thereupon reminded Delegate Burgess that if he intended to offer an amendment at that time, unless he had a good proposal a verbal motion would not be in order.

At 4:53 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 4:55 p.m.

There being no further discussion, Delegate Barr moved, seconded by Delegate Okamura, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 1 be adopted and Com. P. No. 1, RD. 1, pass Second Reading. The question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 2--RELATING TO STATE BOUNDARIES AND MOTTO:

Delegate Izu moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 2, relating to the state boundaries and motto, seconded by Delegate Kaito.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 2 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Les Ihara to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 4:58 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Les Ihara assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 5:59 p.m., Delegate Les Ihara vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Les Ihara, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 2, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Les Ihara, seconded by Delegate Izu and carried, the oral report was adopted.

Delegate Les Ihara then moved, inasmuch as the Committee of the Whole had thoroughly considered Com. P. No. 2 and as no amendments had been made in its deliberations, and there being no objection, that Com. P. No. 2 pass Second Reading without amendment, seconded by Delegate Tamayori.

Delegate Tam rose to speak in favor of the motion and asked that the Convention go on record that the approval of Com. P. No. 2 would authorize the prosecution of all crimes occurring in archipelagic waters of the State of Hawaii by the proper departments in the State or the county.

On a point of order, Delegate Waihee commented that such an interpretation would not be proper at Second Reading. The Chair ruled in agreement with Delegate Waihee.

There being no further discussion, the motion to pass Com. P. No. 2 on Second Reading was then put by the Chair and carried.

At this time, the President complimented Delegate Les Ihara for his performance as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and also extended thanks to the chairperson and members of the Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions for their work.

On a point of personal privilege, Delegate Alcon rose to inform the Convention that in one way he was very happy that his amendment had been voted down, as it indicated that there was no such thing as a minority or a majority when it came to issues and that everyone voted according to his conscience.

Delegate Les Ihara then rose to announce that a baby boy had been born to Delegate and Mrs. David Stegmaier that morning.

ADJOURNMENT

At 6:10 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Dyer and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:00 p.m. Thursday, August 17, 1978.

THIRTY-THIRD DAY

Thursday, August 17, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:00 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by Pastor George Munson of the Diamond Head Seventh-day Adventist Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present.

The President announced that the Journal of the Thirty-Second Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 37) informing the Convention that Minority Rep. Nos. 1 and 2 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 37 was adopted.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Com. P. No. 3--RELATING TO THE EXECUTIVE:

Delegate Fukunaga moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 3, relating to the executive, seconded by Delegate Souki.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 3 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Weatherwax to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:07 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Weatherwax assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 5:20 p.m., Delegate Weatherwax vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Weatherwax, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 3, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Weatherwax, seconded by Delegate Fukunaga and carried, the oral report was adopted.

At this time, Delegate Cabral, on a parliamentary inquiry, inquired about the procedure for Minority Rep. Nos. 1 and 2, which were submitted relative to consideration of Com. P. No. 3 in the Committee of the Whole.

The Chair explained that minority reports were printed and distributed to each member of the Convention in the same manner as all other reports, and that the information contained in the reports would be recorded in the Convention Journal. It was assumed, the Chair added, that arguments relative to the reports had been presented in the Committee of the Whole.

Delegate Hale suggested that if possible minority reports and amendments should be made available to all delegates one day prior to being considered, to allow the delegates more time for review.

Delegate Goodenow rose on a point of inquiry and asked whether it was possible to vote on a minority report.

The Chair answered that a minority report might or might not be voted on, that a motion could be made for adoption if presented as an amendment to a committee proposal. A minority report, the Chair added, was not a right but a privilege which was rarely refused.

Delegate Goodenow then asked whether amendments to committee proposals could be presented in a minority report or whether they should be in the form of floor amendments, to which the Chair replied that the latter would be more appropriate.

At this time, Delegate Weatherwax rose to recommend that Com. P. No. 3 pass Second Reading without amendment inasmuch as the Committee of the Whole had thoroughly considered Com. P. No. 3 and no amendments had been made in its deliberations.

Delegate Barr rose on a point of personal privilege, saying that his integrity was being challenged since so often in the past the delegates had been assured that they would have two opportunities to speak on an issue--once in the Committee of the Whole and again at Second Reading. He then reminded the delegates that that chance had been taken away yesterday and was being taken away again by that motion. He therefore requested that Com. P. No. 3 not be scheduled for further consideration for 2 days.

Delegate Hale then moved, seconded by Delegate Crozier, that no further action be taken on the matter until the Committee of the Whole had presented its written report to the Convention.

At 5:34 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 5:38 p.m.

The President announced that the concerns expressed just prior to the recess had been resolved to the satisfaction of all parties and, there being no objection, the previous motion was withdrawn.

The Chair then thanked Delegate Weatherwax for his able job as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

ADJOURNMENT

At 5:44 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi and carried, the Convention adjourned until 7:00 p.m. Friday, August 18, 1978.

THIRTY-FOURTH DAY

Friday, August 18, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 7:00 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Robert Shimoda of Central Union Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Chung, Teruo Ihara, Kono, Odanaka, Stone and Takitani who were excused and Delegates Blean, Donald Ching and Sutton who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Thirty-Third Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 38) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 39, Com. P. No. 6 and Res. No. 13 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Dennis Ihara and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 38 was adopted.

Delegate Teruo Ihara, for the Committee on Education, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 39) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed, and that Section 4 of Article IX be retained without amendment; and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 6) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading. He then requested that action on it be deferred.

There being no objection, action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 39 and Com. P. No. 6, relating to education, was deferred until Monday, August 21, 1978.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 13) providing for the use of nondiscriminatory nouns, pronouns and adjectives in the State Constitution was offered jointly by Delegates Dyer and Waihee.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 13 to the Committee on Style.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 36, Com. P. No. 5--RELATING TO PUBLIC HEALTH AND WELFARE:

On motion by Delegate Fushikoshi, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 36 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; Section 4 of Article VIII and Sections 1 and 2 of Article XII were recommended to be retained without amendment; and Com. P. No. 5, relating to public health and welfare, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Monday, August 21, 1978.

Com. P. No. 4--RELATING TO THE PREAMBLE, GENERAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS, REVISION AND AMENDMENT:

Delegate Izu moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 4, relating to the Preamble, general and miscellaneous provisions, revision and amendment, seconded by Delegate Hirata.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 4 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Les Ihara to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 7:08 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Les Ihara assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 11:01 p.m., Delegate Les Ihara vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Les Ihara, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 4 as amended, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Les Ihara, seconded by Delegate Izu and carried, the oral report was adopted.

The President thereupon placed Com. P. No. 4 on the calendar for Second Reading on Monday, August 21, 1978.

At this time, Delegate De Soto rose, on a point of personal privilege, to apologize to the Clerk for the many roll-call votes. She stated that roll-call votes were requested on almost every issue up for vote, whether or not the votes seemed close.

On a point of information, Delegate Taira stated that he noticed handwritten amendments were still being submitted and inquired if the Chair could clarify the proper procedure on amendments.

The Chair reminded the delegates that amendments should be typed and given to the Clerk for distribution and consideration by the body. The Chair further stated that although amendments to an amendment could not be anticipated, the amendments themselves would not be accepted if not in proper form.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:13 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a.m. Saturday, August 19, 1978.

THIRTY-FIFTH DAY

Saturday, August 19, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Ruth Senter of Waialua United Church of Christ.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Sterling who was excused and Delegates Blean, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Crozier, Eastvold, Marion Lee, Ontai, Stegmaier and Takitani who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Thirty-Fourth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 40) informing the Convention that Com. Whole Rep. Nos. 2 and 3 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Ledward, seconded by Delegate Lacy and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 40 was adopted.

At 11:45 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:50 a.m.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Com. Whole Rep. No. 2--RELATING TO STATE BOUNDARIES AND MOTTO:

Delegate Les Ihara, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Izu, for the Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 2) and recommended its adoption.

On motion by Delegate Les Ihara, seconded by Delegate Izu and carried, Com. Whole Rep. No. 2 was adopted, Com. P. No. 2 having passed Second Reading on August 16, 1978.

Com. Whole Rep. No. 3, Com. P. No. 3--RELATING TO THE EXECUTIVE:

Delegate Weatherwax, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Fukunaga, for the Committee on Executive, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 3) recommending adoption of Com. Whole Rep. No. 3 and passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 3.

On motion by Delegate Taira, seconded by Delegate Goodenow and carried, action on Com. Whole Rep. No. 3 and Com. P. No. 3 was deferred until Monday, August 21, 1978.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:59 a.m. , on motion by Delegate Silva, seconded by Delegate Taira and carried, the Convention adjourned until 7:00 p.m. Monday, August 21, 1978.

THIRTY-SIXTH DAY

Monday, August 21, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 7:00 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Famika Anae, delegate from the Twenty-Second District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Laura Ching who was excused.

The President announced that the Journal of the Thirty-Fifth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 41) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 42 through 44; Com. Whole Rep. No. 4; Com. P. Nos. 1, RD. 1, S. 1; 2, S. 1; 4, RD. 1, and 7; and Minority Rep. Nos. 3 and 4 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate O'Toole, seconded by Delegate Villaverde and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 41 was adopted.

Delegate Sakima, for the Committee on Local Government, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 42) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed and that Sections 1, 2, 4 and 5 of Article VII be retained without amendment; and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 7) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 42 and Com. P. No. 7, relating to local government, on the calendar for further consideration on Wednesday, August 23, 1978.

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, presented reports (Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 43 and 44) recommending the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 43 and 44 and passage on Third Reading of Com. P. Nos. 1, RD. 1, S. 1, and 2, S. 1.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 43 and 44 and Com. P. No. 1, RD. 1, S. 1, relating to codes of ethics, and Com. P. No. 2, S. 1, relating to the state boundaries and motto, on the calendar for Third Reading on Wednesday, August 23, 1978.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTERS

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 39 (Com. P. No. 6) (Committee on Education--Deferred from August 18, 1978):

On motion by Delegate Teruo Ihara, seconded by Delegate Takehara and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 39 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; Section 4 of Article IX was recommended to be retained without amendment; and Com. P.

No. 6, relating to education, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Wednesday, August 23, 1978.

Com. Whole Rep. No. 3 (Com. P. No. 3) (Committee on Executive--Deferred from August 19, 1978):

Delegate Fukunaga moved, seconded by Delegate Taira, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 3 be adopted and Com. P. No. 3 pass Second Reading.

At 7:18 p. m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 7:25 p. m.

Delegate DiBianco, on a point of inquiry, asked whether the matter of the attorney general would be taken up again by the executive committee. The Chair responded that this was not his understanding.

Delegate DiBianco then observed that if this was the case, the office of the attorney general to be set forth in the Constitution would be decided by its passage on Second Reading. The Chair responded in the affirmative, whereupon Delegate DiBianco moved to amend the committee report.

The Chair stated that the question before the house was not the committee report but rather Com. P. No. 3.

Delegate Kaapu, on a point of information, stated that it was his understanding that the amendment for an appointive attorney general selected by a merit system had been circulated, though not in final form. He added that the matter, though it might not be taken up in committee, would be considered later when a committee report from the executive was brought before the house, and at that time amendments could be offered.

The Chair then stated that it was not his understanding that the executive committee would be reporting anything further. He then asked Delegate Fukunaga for clarification.

Delegate Fukunaga replied that the Committee on Executive had one further decision-making meeting, at which time a number of proposals relating to the executive department and administrative matters within the executive branch would be taken up.

The Chair then informed Delegate DiBianco that further discussion would be in order at the time when the executive committee report was taken up.

Delegate DiBianco stated that the executive committee would only be discussing the rearrangement of various departments within the executive, and he inquired whether Delegate Kaapu was correct and he could bring up the matter of the attorney general at that time.

Delegate Kaapu then stated that it was his understanding that Com. P. No. 3 did not contain a provision pertaining to the attorney general, and that amendments relating to that matter could be offered after the Committee of the Whole as amendments to it.

Delegate Waihee then requested a recess to clarify the matter.

At 7:30 p. m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 7:45 p. m.

At this time, on motion by Delegate Weatherwax, seconded by Delegate DiBianco and carried, action on Com. Whole Rep. No. 3 and Com. P. No. 3 was deferred until Thursday, August 24, 1978.

SECOND READING

Com. Whole Rep. No. 4, Com. P. No. 4, RD. 1--RELATING TO THE PREAMBLE, GENERAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS, REVISION AND AMENDMENT:

Delegate Les Ihara, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Izu, for the Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 4) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 4 be adopted and Com. P. No. 4, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

Discussion then being in order, Delegate Wurdeman moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate Hanaike, which amended Section 2 of Article XIV of the State Constitution, to read:

Membership in any employees' retirement system of the State or any political subdivision thereof shall be a contractual relationship, the accrued benefits of which shall not be diminished or impaired. The legislature shall not provide special benefits for any class of employees unless it is based upon occupational hazards.

Delegate Wurdeman, speaking for her amendment, stated:

"Fellow delegates, this is the third time I shall make a plea to this Convention to correct a gross inequity in the public employees' retirement system. I would like to do this because 12 delegates were absent at our last discussion and because I don't think everyone there understood it.

"Retirement is the inevitable end of our more productive years. When we look ahead, we like to believe we are preparing the financial cushion or reserve we shall need when we are no longer able to work. When we look back several years hence, we should have the satisfaction of knowing that we did everything to protect our future, and possibly the lean years that may come with retirement.

"A method by which those who are close to power obscure personal privilege from public view is to bury the source of their privilege in complex legislation. The public tends not to get outraged about subjects which do not readily fit into headlines or television newscasts. On the national level this trait can be seen in the many special interest tax loopholes that dot the Internal Revenue Code. Locally, a prime example is the special treatment which those close to power have legislated for themselves in the public employees' retirement system. Regular employees and elected officials and judges contribute the same amount to the system. This alone would appear to possibly be an abuse in how the goods come back. But closer inspection shows that this abuse becomes even greater.

"Those with service as judges or elected officials can retire at any age with 10 years of service. To add more inequity, they get back their entire contribution in the form of an annuity which is added to their pension. So for instance, if two people, one an elected official and the other a regular employee, put $6 into a pension plan, the elected official or the judge would get back $10--the regular employee only $2.

"Currently, this system classifies state and county employees in three categories: first are the regular employees; second are those employees whose jobs involve danger to life, such as policemen or firemen; and third, the specially favored elected officials and judges. It is between the first and the third groups that the discriminatory nature of the system can be most clearly seen. Each pays that $6 into the fund, but there the similarity ends. When retirement comes, the regular employee receives a benefit computed at a rate of 2 percent of the high average salary for each year of service. Thus, someone with 20 years of service who retires at $20,000 annual pay would receive 40 percent of that amount, or $8,000 annually. The favored group of elected officials and judges, however, receives a benefit of 3.5 percent for each year's service. Thus our hypothetical employee, were he in the favored group, would receive a benefit of 70 percent of his high average salary, the other one only 40 percent. The taxpayers shoulder the difference.

"The affluence a society such as ours enjoys colors our expectation that retirement shall indeed make our remaining years comfortable and secure. The post-industrial stage the United States has attained is supposed to guarantee that we have more leisure hours, more fringe benefits and greater expectations about a higher standard of living or choices of lifestyle. Yet Hawaii, through complex revisions introduced in the employees' retirement system by decision-makers, would cheat us and threaten our future. Our retirement fund is being seriously depleted for the benefit of an influential class.

"I have no objection to adequate compensation for either judges or elected officials, because the American system encourages contributions toward a retirement system that will aid all when no longer able to work. An open government, however, requires that such compensation be public and not hidden in the complexities of a pension plan that is supposed to benefit all public employees. Please, delegates, help the silent majority out there who can't do anything about this retirement plan. Thank you."

Delegate Ellis then spoke in favor of the amendment, further explaining:

"Let me express to you what the situation actually is. The legislator getting a 3.5-percent return on his retirement payments in the form of the fund may carry that 3.5 percent over into administrative employment. As you probably know, we have many legislators who have moved into high salary executive and administrative positions in the State, and they are not paid 2 percent as other employees are. They carry along their 3.5 percent. So we're looking at a legislator with 10 years of service who, having made himself eligible for 3.5 percent, now carries that over when he goes into employment earning $35,000, $40,000 or $42,000 a year, whereas public employees--and myself, as a retired public employee, when I am looking at a 2-percent return, the legislator has the distinct advantage of getting a 3.5-percent return--not 2 percent. So I strongly urge you to make the situation a little more equitable and in some fashion return it to the status quo in terms of equal payment for time served. Put the legislator on the same 2-percent basis as other people."

Delegate Izu, speaking against the amendment, pointed out that the 3.5-percent return of legislators that carried over into administrative work applied only to those years during which they were legislators and only if they had already vested 10 years. The return when in administrative work, she specified, would be at 2 percent. She then added that the matter had already been thoroughly discussed in the Committee of the Whole.

Delegate DiBianco then spoke in favor of the motion. He noted that at the last vote many of the delegates who presumably contributed into the system had voted against the amendment, and remarked that the inequity apparently didn't bother them. He then inquired as to whether those delegates who were legislators, on the city council or HGEA members had a conflict of interest and should not be allowed to vote.

The Chair in response reiterated that each delegate must vote his or her conscience when the time came.

Delegate DiBianco then referred to their code of ethics, which forbade voting when there was a conflict of interest, and he requested that the Chair refer the matter to the ethics committee.

At this time Delegate Weatherwax moved for the previous question, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching.

Delegate Blean, on a point of parliamentary inquiry, asked whether a motion for the previous question required a two-thirds or a majority vote. The Chair responded that a majority vote was sufficient and referred to Rule 15 of the convention rules.

Delegate Lacy at this time requested verification of the rule, explaining that all his information indicated that a two-thirds vote was required. The Chair responded that although Robert's Rules might show a two-thirds vote as being in order, the convention rules, where applicable, would take precedence, and he again cited Rule 15.

On a point of parliamentary inquiry, Delegate Blean then referred to Convention Rule 36, requesting an interpretation.

At 8:04 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 8:13 p.m.

At this time, the Chair announced that a review of the rules showed nothing to substantiate the fact that a majority vote was not in order for the previous question, adding that that "may or may not be what the Convention intended, but that is what the rules as they are written--as interpreted by our parliamentarian--read."

Delegate Weatherwax then rose to withdraw his motion for the previous question. There being no objection, the motion was withdrawn.

Delegate Hale, speaking for the amendment, mentioned that she had done some research on the subject and then offered the following information:

"In order to make a wise decision, we need some historical perspective. We need to realize that in 1950 the standing committee report did not recommend this language in the Constitution. It had been suggested as a proposal and was referred to the taxation committee, and the taxation committee reported that it was not in favor of including anything in the Constitution regarding a retirement system. I'd like to read you why. 'It is the opinion of your Committee that to include such a provision in the Constitution would be unwise and unsound, for it would be committing the State forever, practically speaking, to continue the present benefits'--and remember this is in 1950--'and it is conceivable that some adjustments may become necessary at some future time. Further, it appears to be unsound as class legislation. Government employees are protected by law and it is the belief of your Committee that no provision should be placed in the Constitution which would interfere with the free action of the legislature who can take necessary action as the times may warrant, after they have had an opportunity to complete a careful review and analysis of the system and of the then financial condition of the State.' And during the debates Delegate Sakakihara, from the Big Island, who for years had been the chairman of the house finance committee, pointed out that 16 years before that time the legislature had failed to make its contribution to the employees' retirement system, and the whole system was in danger of falling down. The fear of the delegates in 1950 was such that they felt this could become an intolerable burden on the State.

"I did some further research on government statistics, and I found that in 1966 there was a total of $31,500 in the state retirement system, and the State contributed $10,945,000 to the system--county and State. In 1976, which are the latest figures we have, there were 44,500 members in the state retirement system, but the state contribution went up four times--$45,861,000. I think that perhaps some of these delegates in 1950, were they watching our deliberations today, would say, 'I told you so.' This amendment is going to correct an inequity that was put upon the people of this State from 1969 on.

"I also had the Legislative Reference Bureau do some research for me, and this is what they found: 'Retirement allowance is based upon a certain percentage--2, 2-1/2 or 3-1/2 percent--times the number of years of service. The 2-1/2 percent is for the hazardous occupations; elected officers receive 3-1/2 percent as an allowance, whereas general employees receive 2 percent, or 2-1/2 percent for police officers and so forth, who also pay more into the system. Thus, even though a general employee and an elected officer have the same average final compensation--for example, $1,000 a month--and the same years of service--for example, for ten years--the elected officer would receive more. The general employee would receive 2 percent times ten years, or $200 a month for life, whereas the elected officer would receive 3-1/2 percent, or $350 a month for life. Since the retirement provision is for life, the elected officer would probably receive more in the long run; and since the officer is eligible to retire at an earlier age, the officer could retire after ten years of service (for example, at age 35) and receive benefits for 30 years, until he dies at age 65. The general employee may have to wait until age 55 to retire, and if he dies at the same age will have received benefits for only ten years.' It goes on to point out that if an employee works for 40 years for the State and county, he then might get 80 percent of his average final compensation, but it also says he would probably be so old that the total benefits received by him during his lifetime might be less than an elected officer, who would get a maximum of 75 percent.

"There is an inequity in having different benefits applicable to different public employees, especially since there is no maximum limitation, such as benefits limited to compensation made. Furthermore, although both the elected officer and the public employee contribute the same percentage of wages, and since the elected officer receives more in benefits, it is arguable that such benefits are eventually paid out of the share contributed by the general employee. In other words, those of you who are paying are going to get 2 percent to that 3-1/2 percent. It may be argued by your opponent that the proposed amendment would take away vested retirement benefits--this was given to me by the Legislative Reference Bureau--the amendment could not, constitutionally, take away vested retirement rights. This amendment is effective only as to future benefits. Their conclusion is that there is no valid reason to distinguish elected officers from general employees. In talking to some of the delegates, I find that they have a concern that our elected legislators, and maybe judges, are not getting enough money. I would have no objection--and I understand from reading the papers that the legislative committee will come out with some new plan to adjust legislators' salaries by way of a salary commission. This may be the way to do this. I do not have objections to paying people more, but I do have objections to the way in which this is done. The general public is not aware of it. I don't believe that the 45,000 employees in the state retirement system are fully aware of what is happening. I urge you, please, to vote your conscience and support this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Souki, although acknowledging that there was some merit in the discussion, pointed out that this was a problem for the retirement system members to resolve, and not a constitutional matter.

Delegate Uyehara then spoke for the amendment, explaining that it was the intent to "grandfather" all those in the present system, including those entering office in September. But the inequities, he observed, would otherwise perpetuate the system and this was the purpose of the amendment--to change the inequities.

Delegate Barr then rose to make one observation against the amendment. Referring to the language prohibiting special benefits "for any class of employees unless it is based upon occupational hazards," he submitted that a crucial occupational hazard of an elected official was that he could lose an election.

Delegate de Costa, on a point of inquiry, questioned Delegate Hale as to the salary of a policeman compared with that of a legislator, if the policeman made less than the $12,000 salary of the legislator. Delegate Hale answered that she did not know.

At this time Delegate Liu rose to disclose a potential conflict of interest, as he was running for political office that fall.

Delegate Harris then declared that he also had a financial conflict in the matter, being a public employee and a candidate for office.

Delegate Wurdeman then rose to request a roll-call vote and, there being ten seconds, it was so ordered.

At this time Delegate Funakoshi requested that she be excused from voting as she also was running for office.

Delegate Marumoto then rose to state that as a candidate she felt she should declare a conflict of interest, but that since she was voting for the amendment she thought she should be permitted to vote.

Delegate Barr thereupon inquired if it was the intent of the Chair that all delegates who were candidates and public employees had a conflict of interest.

In response, the Chair stated that it was not his intent, explaining that each delegate had to view the question in his own mind and "if in conflict for whatever reason, he can either ask to be excused or abstain or whatever other course he chooses. The Chair is not ruling on that. It's a personal matter."

Delegate Barr then asked to be excused, and it was so noted by the Chair.

Delegate Kaapu commented that the newspapers had shown which delegates were candidates, public employees, etc., and that "if everyone in this body were to abstain from the vote, and those wishing to abstain were to vote for the amendment, I think that form of exercising good judgment and carrying out the public trust that we have would lead to a circus in terms of our proceedings." He then observed:

"I myself am a taxpayer like everybody else. If I were to reduce this discussion to an absurd degree, then I would like to declare myself in conflict because of that. I don't think that's the way we're going to get good proposals considered, and I don't think that we are obligated to pass only those things which do damage or which are felt to be disadvantageous to public officials in order to make them right. For that reason I intend to vote my conscience on this and all other matters. In my own legislative body, we are required to declare conflicts of interest when we have them. We are also entitled to vote on all matters and may only be excused by a vote of the entire body. That principle should hold here. If we all flee and run for cover every time something hot comes up, we are not discharging our duties to the public who elected us."

Delegate Harris rose to point out that according to their ethics code it was not necessary or even allowed for delegates to abstain from voting because of a financial interest. All that was required, he explained, was that the delegate disclose his interest and then vote, which was what he intended to do.

Delegate Donald Ching then rose to declare that he had no conflict of interest, observing that his term of office ended on November 7, when the amendment if passed would go into effect, after which he did not know what the future held for him.

Delegate DiBianco, on a point of information, verified Delegate Harris' statement on delegate disclosure in conflicts of interest, quoting from subsection (2) of Section 5 of their ethics code. He then declared that since he was a candidate but hadn't won yet, he had no conflict.

Delegate Chu then rose to voice her support as she felt the state legislature would not deal with the matter. She then disclosed that she was a candidate for office but as she was voting in favor of the amendment did not feel there was a conflict.

Delegate Barr then asked, based on this reasoning, if he could recapture his vote, to which the Chair replied that it was his choice.

Delegate Wurdeman then rose to make a final point, stating:

"I am a part of the pension plan at present. I was a part of the pension plan before I became an elected official. I'm really trying to stop this perpetuation in the system."

On a point of inquiry, Delegate Hamilton asked if all the delegates had conflicts because they would qualify for 3-1/2 percent by serving in the Convention. Delegate Hale responded that they did not qualify as it was first necessary to serve 10 years.

Delegate Ontai then rose to declare his conflict as he was one of the "notorious 31" running for elective office, adding that he felt he was qualified to vote on the matter.

Delegate Chung then declared that he too was a candidate. Referring to a newspaper cartoon in which the Convention was depicted "with a lot of Mickey Mouse goings on," he commented that it was ridiculous for them to be afraid.

Delegate De Soto thereupon rose and announced:

"Mr. Chairman, I would like to inform you, sir, that I am a proud member of the HGEA. I work hard for my money. This amendment in no way jeopardizes my retirement--should we live through this farce. So consequently I want you to know that I am an HGEA member and I feel that I am not in conflict. Mahalo."

At this time Delegate Nakamura stated:

"To dispose of the necessity for each of the 31 potential candidates for office to get up and disclose his interest, may the record reflect that there are 31 of us who are potential members of the legislature--so that each of us won't have to get up and we can get on with the vote."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 4, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 1 was put by the Chair. Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 45 ayes, 54 noes and 3 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Barnes, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Goodenow, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hoe, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Odanaka, O'Toole, Peterson, Sterling, Sutton, Takehara, Takitani, Tam, Uyehara, Wurdeman and Yamashita voting aye; Delegates Andrews, Barnard, Barr, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, de Costa, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Okamura, Ontai, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Stone, Taira, Takahashi, Takemoto, Tamayori, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Laura Ching, Funakoshi and Pulham being excused.

Delegate Wurdeman then rose on a point of personal privilege to thank the delegates for listening a third time.

At this time Delegate Pulham moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Chu, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 4, RD. 1, to read:

Insofar as practicable, all [All] governmental writing meant for the public, in whatever language, should be plainly worded, avoiding the use of technical terms.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Pulham made the following statement:

"Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, I would thank you for your support of this plain language proposal and I would hope that by offering the amendment tonight, that in saying, 'Insofar as practicable,' this will bring it in line with the Oregon constitutional amendment, taking into account our unique language capabilities here in this State--and also for those delegates who felt that the original amendment might interfere with the paperwork distributed by the university and other governmental agencies having a unique purpose. By saying, 'Insofar as practicable,' we are saying that there are those cases in which non-plain language is unique and necessary for that particular problem. This pretty well covers the situation. I would just again ask your support for this proposal."

Delegate Chu then moved to amend the amendment by deleting the section in its entirety, seconded by Delegate Takemoto.

Delegate Waihee, on a point of order, indicated that this would be "an amendment to an amendment to an amendment."

The Chair then ruled that Delegate Chu's motion was out of order and that action on the amendment would be in order.

At 8:45 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 8:48 p.m.

Delegate Burgess rose to speak against the amendment. He pointed out that the new language violated the purpose of the provision in the first place, which was to make government writing more simply worded, noting, "'Insofar as practicable' is an atrocious phrase and has no part in any governmental writing."

Delegate Hagino, speaking for the amendment, said that he had raised the same objection and that Delegate Pulham had assured him that the style committee would take care of it.

Delegate Lacy, also speaking for the amendment, mentioned that his objection had been to the "technical" wording as it was almost impossible to be able to write it, adding that Delegate Pulham had taken care of that.

Delegate Chu then rose to speak against the amendment, explaining that the additional language would not solve the problems and would in fact just add another phrase for the courts to have to deal with. She pointed out that the provision should not be given constitutional status at all as it was vague and subject to constitutional attack, and would be more appropriately dealt with by statute or executive order. She further pointed out that it might infringe upon the right of free speech as there was no specific definition of "governmental writing." It also, she continued, depended on whose standards were to be applied, as far as what was "plainly worded" or what a "technical term" was. The word "practicable," she added, could also cause problems as to who it applied to, how it was practicable, etc.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Villaverde read from a letter he had received from the Big Island, which supported the plain language provision.

Delegate Pulham, speaking last for his amendment, observed:

"I'm very touched by the letter that Delegate Villaverde read. We're dealing with the language 'insofar as practicable' and, although I respect very much the views of my colleague and delegate who is an attorney, I think that her words will probably be the best testimony we could get that we do need this provision. I realize it's going to be hassled out by other attorneys and in court, and I say to you--so be it. The people need it. I would prefer to be heard on this measure in a roll-call vote, if you would indulge me this once."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 4, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair, and a determination made that there were ten seconds.

Roll call being in order, the motion was carried by a vote of 73 ayes, 26 noes and 3 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Kaapu, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Odanaka, Ontai, O'Toole, Penebacker, Peterson, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chang, Chu, Chun, Ellis, Goodenow, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Teruo Ihara, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Kimball, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Nozaki, Okamura, and Takemoto voting no; and Delegates Laura Ching, Les Ihara and Weatherwax being excused.

At this time, Delegate Barr remarked, "Before the vote is reported, I'd just like to exercise my right to enter in the journal that my 'no' reflects my disgust that we took time for a roll-call vote."

The President announced that the motion was carried and then called for a short recess.

At 9:03 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 9:12 p.m.

Delegate Chu moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 3, seconded by Delegate Harris, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 4, RD. 1, by deleting the section in its entirety.

Delegate Tam, on a point of parliamentary procedure, questioned whether the amendment was in order since it negated what they had spent the last half hour doing. In response, the Chair explained that the motion was in order on the basis that an amendment had been made to the section and that until it was passed the delegate had the right to reserve judgment on whether to delete.

Discussion being in order, Delegate Takemoto rose and made the following statement:

"I speak in favor of the motion to delete this plain language section since there are many problems in determining what is plain language and what is not plain language. What standards are we to use? The comprehension level of a person in kindergarten? A high school student? A college graduate? Or will we establish a blue-ribbon commission to ascertain what is plain language and what is not?"

"The attempt to regulate and to determine standards for writing in the political arena is not new; it has existed since the Counter-Reformation, when the politically powerful attempted to set minimum standards for writing. The first instance known to me was in Italy, followed a century later in France. In 1682 the leaders in Florence decided to purify the Italian language by establishing an academy for language. The academy developed criteria for writing, emphasizing structure and proper vocabulary. The emphasis on form rather than content resulted in the non-growth of the Italian language. It voided spontaneity and enthusiasm. It forced poets, writers, intellectuals and government officials to foresake originality and meaning for good grammar, form and sentence structure. It was also used as a means of censorship and repression, with the academy aiding in a position of persecuting those who would not follow the official line. For example, the great astronomer Galileo was branded a heretic for his original thesis that the earth revolved around the sun. One of the accusations included the charge that he had violated the dictates of language stipulated by the academy.

"Thus, the attempt to regulate the written word has been tied to political considerations. It has been used as a tool for attacking freethinkers, scholars, intellectuals and the common man. It has been used historically to censor and stifle expression and originality. It can be used again, even today, as a repressive measure. Thus, a plain language amendment could be used today as a means of intimidation, especially of state employees. It could be employed as the rationale for demoting, denying promotion or even dismissing an employee who disagreed with a supervisor, for not following the 'official' line of today. It would in essence create a state bureaucracy of grammar teachers.

"In conclusion, fellow delegates, by placing this plain language amendment in the Constitution, we are regulating language, forcing linguistics into the procrustean bed of politics where it does not belong--stated plainly, attempting to regulate the English language and using it as a political tool."

Delegate Lewis then made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I rise to speak in favor of the amendment. Our Constitution has been cited as a model because of its brevity. Although I fully subscribe to the intent of this provision, I feel very strongly that this type of language does not belong in the Constitution of the State of Hawaii. Hawaii has received much favorable commentary by constitutional observers across the country. The inclusion of an amendment like this will, I submit, not be received with the same favorable commentary from these constitutional critics. I request that all the delegates vote in favor of this amendment to delete this provision."

At this time Delegate Tam moved for the previous question, seconded by Delegate Souki. The motion calling for the previous question was put by the Chair and carried.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 4, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 3 was put by the Chair and, by a vote of 35 ayes and 64 noes, failed to carry.

At this time, Delegate Harris rose on a point of inquiry, to confirm that it was the Chair's ruling that only a majority vote was required to move the previous question. In response, the Chair affirmed the ruling, adding that it would be reexamined at a later date but that there was nothing in their rules to substantiate the two-thirds vote.

Delegate Harris then appealed the ruling of the Chair. Delegate Blean rose to request discussion on the appeal, to which the Chair declared that it was not debatable and the vote was in order.

Delegate DiBianco, on a point of information, questioned this, noting:

"I think that the rule regarding appeals is that they are debatable. If the ruling itself would be debatable and since what we have here is a ruling on our rules, and our rules of course are freely debatable, would not the appeal be debatable? I wonder if the parliamentarian could answer that?"

The Chair, noting that Delegate DiBianco's point was well taken, observed that they could debate the basis of the ruling.

Delegate Lacy then rose to state:

"I ask your indulgence to follow with me on Rule 15, which I agree is just a motion--a majority would have been the proper thing to have decided. But if you read Rule 36 carefully: 'When a question is under consideration'--at the time we made the ruling there was a question under consideration--'. . . a motion to close debate at a specified time is permissible; it is not debatable but is amendable and shall require two-thirds vote of the delegates present.' If we never have to require a two-thirds vote, I don't understand the reason for that rule."

Delegate Takemoto then proposed:

"Mr. President, may I suggest that we follow what exists with the ruling of the Chair, and any complaints or problems delegates may have with the rules, I suggest that they come to the rules committee meeting on Wednesday and discuss them and perhaps try to amend them if they feel it necessary."

Delegate Hale then asked if the appeal could be referred to the rules committee rather than voted on, to which the Chair responded that it had to be taken up at that time and called for further discussion.

Delegate Burgess rose to offer the following suggestion:

"Since there really is no motion or vote that is being appealed, I think, in effect, what the movant is asking is that the Chair issue an advisory opinion--almost like going to court for an advisory opinion. There isn't really an issue before us at this point. There may well not be any further need to have this point determined tonight. The Chair has already indicated that it can be looked into after tonight. In the interest of expediting, I would ask that the matter be deferred until tomorrow, or the next time it comes up as an important issue."

Delegate Harris then offered to withdraw his appeal "if it's clear that that is not the final decision of the Chair."

On the Chair's assurance that the matter would be examined more in depth before meeting again the following day, Delegate Harris withdrew his appeal.

Delegate DiBianco then moved that the matter be referred to the rules committee.

At this time Delegate Donald Ching, on a point of order, submitted that before the motion to appeal could be withdrawn, it had to have the consent of the assembly. He then added that he did not consent to its withdrawal.

Delegate Kaapu then rose and expressed his agreement with Delegate Burgess, remarking:

"We had already taken up the business, it had been acted upon, the vote had been taken. Subsequent to that Delegate Harris raised a question concerning what had already happened. In line with that, there was an appeal of the general idea of what the Chair was doing. There had not been a motion for which the Chair had ruled, and there was no appeal of any particular ruling of the Chair at that time. I think that the suggestion of a practical way is in order."

Repeating that the motion to appeal the Chair's ruling was still pending before the body, Delegate Donald Ching then urged that they vote on it.

At this time Delegate Hale asked if a motion to refer the matter to the rules committee was in order, to which the Chair replied that the motion to appeal was still on the floor and must be taken up first.

Delegate Hale then spoke against the Chair's decision, stating:

"I would like to say that the Chair made an honest decision and, backed up by the parliamentarian, was necessarily put in the position today of standing up for his ruling. However, I think the intention of a motion for the previous question is to cut off debate. Robert's Rules of Order is very clear that when any discussion is going to be cut off, it's going to take a two-thirds vote of the assembly to do it. If it didn't, you'd have an absolute rule by a majority, which would not take into consideration a minority opinion or a very close division of the house. That's the reason Robert's Rules of Order was written that way. I'm sorry that this had to come to this kind of a decision--I think we'd have a much better feeling in this body if we didn't have the vote to uphold or not uphold the Chair based on signals from a majority. But I really think that we should consider the purpose in moving for the previous question, which is to cut off debate. If that is our purpose, then I see no reason for our complex rules of going to Second Reading in addition to the Committee of the Whole. Those of you who have read and studied the debates in 1950 and 1968 will certainly realize that many decisions that were made in the Committee of the Whole were changed when they came up at Second Reading. We cannot change decisions unless we're going to have free and full debate. Whether it's a question of leaving here at 9:30 tonight or at 12:30 tonight--we're being paid by the taxpayers to do a good job. I would appeal to you--don't cut off debate that easily."

Delegate Blean then made the following observation:

"I find this ruling most distressing. I came here to play by the rules. I say my piece and I count the votes. If I win, fine; if I lose, fine. But this interpretation is the most dangerous precedent I have seen established in this Convention to date. The whole virtue of a democracy is how we treat the minority--the unpopular opinion which is not shared by the majority. This ruling established tonight is essentially that we are going to cut off minority opinion, we're going to cut off unpopular opinions. To establish that precedent in a body that is here to write a constitution to protect minority rights is just dead wrong."

Delegate Crozier rose on a point of personal inquiry to ask if they sustained the appeal, "are we just going with the majority for tonight and then the rules committee will take care of it for next week?"

The vote to sustain, the Chair responded, would not necessarily preclude examination of the rules by an action of individual delegates.

At 9:31 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 9:33 p.m.

At this time Delegate Kaapu repeated his earlier statement that the appeal was on a moot matter that had already been voted upon, explaining, "There was no appeal at the time the Chair made its ruling. No other vote was taken on the question. We've gone past it. What we're doing here is improper. I inquire of the parliamentarian whether that's true or not."

It was proper, the Chair ruled, to withdraw a motion provided there was no objection, but a motion could not be withdrawn if there was one objection.

In response, Delegate Kaapu argued:

"Mr. President, that was not the point of my parliamentary inquiry. The whole question of appealing was not on any ruling the Chair had made, except in a previous motion that had already been voted upon and passed. I'm just wondering if indeed the appeal of the Chair itself was out of order, and therefore any subsequent motions pertaining to it are themselves out of order as well."

The Chair responded that, although the point was well taken, it was felt that Delegate Harris' motion was in order at the time.

Delegate Harris then rose to protest:

"If that is the ruling, I would like to speak to my appeal. I believe this is an outrage--the greatest outrage we've seen yet in this Convention. One of the mainstays of democracy is the production of minorities. I think that it's clear to every one of us that the move for the previous question is a two-thirds vote. That was the intent, in my understanding, of the rules committee when they wrote that. I sat through those meetings. That's a clear reading of the rules as they are today. To change that now and to run by tyranny of the majority I truly believe is an outrage. I believe the public will view it as such."

Delegate Hale thereupon requested that the Chair "appeal to the good sense and fair play of Delegate Ching to withdraw his objection."

Delegate Donald Ching, in response, commented:

"Mr. President, I don't have to be appealed to. I think that some of us on this floor ought to think twice before we jump up and yell and scream and appeal the ruling of the Chair. We've had so many appeals on the ruling of the house--in all the years I've been in the legislature I've never heard as many appeals as I've heard in the month and a half that we've been here. It's about time that we stop and think twice before we jump up and"--

At this point, Delegate Harris rose to object. The Chair thereupon ruled that Delegate Ching had the floor and would proceed. Delegate Donald Ching then continued:

"I think that maybe we ought to all think twice about what we do on this floor, instead of making a big sham of this whole Convention. I've sat here quietly, minding my p's and q's. But enough is enough."

Delegate Crozier then rose to speak for the motion, requesting that the Chair settle the problem at that time. The Chair in response advised that, as indicated earlier, the matter would be referred to the rules committee.

Delegate De Soto, on a point of personal privilege, expressed her feeling that some of the delegates were attempting to destroy the proceedings, stating:

"There are definite efforts by some of the members of this body to destroy the integrity and the proceedings of this Convention, with the hope perhaps that when it is put on the ballot everything will be struck down--and will discredit all of our activities here. I think it infringes on my personal rights."

Delegate Chu then rose to state her objection that she had not been given the opportunity to speak last on her motion, pointing out that she had reserved that right.

Delegate DiBianco at this time voiced his concern about the public's reaction if the Chair's ruling were sustained, urging the delegates to "consider the manner in which this debate is taking place and what the public is going to think about us if they find out that the minority's right to speak has been cut off."

On a point of inquiry, Delegate Barr asked whether, if the Chair were overruled, it would have the effect of making a new rule requiring a two-thirds vote. The Chair replied that it would still have to be reviewed by the rules committee.

Delegate Chun, speaking for the motion, commented that anybody "with 52 votes can come in, lay their proposal on the table, move for the previous question and then vote on it. There would be no discussion at all. We can go home next week."

Delegate Blean, speaking in favor of the motion, noted that if the ruling were upheld, it would be "one of the blackest days in the State of Hawaii's democratic history."

On a point of parliamentary inquiry, Delegate Chang referred to the question Delegate Kaapu had raised, as to whether following the appeal of the Chair's ruling there would be a pending motion, and observed:

"Is there a pending motion for the previous question? If there is not, I don't believe there is, as Delegate Kaapu said, a legitimate appeal of the ruling of the Chair, but merely a parliamentary inquiry which, as Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised states, is not subject to an appeal since it is an opinion and not a ruling. A ruling can only be made on an immediately pending question. That is, I believe, the question Delegate Kaapu raised."

The Chair, agreeing with the viewpoint, recognized Delegate Kaapu, who suggested, "Since the Chair has ruled that Delegate Harris' motion is in order, perhaps one way to solve that is--I'd like to appeal the ruling of the Chair that his motion is in order."

Delegate Donald Ching then stated that, on the basis of this new evidence, he would withdraw his objection.

The Chair then stated that if there were no objections the appeal would be withdrawn, adding that it was his intention to refer the matter to the rules committee.

There being no further discussion, Delegate Les Ihara then moved, seconded by Delegate Izu, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 4 be received and placed on file and Com. P. No. 4, RD. 1 as amended, pass Second Reading. The question was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 5--RELATING TO PUBLIC HEALTH AND WELFARE:

Delegate Fushikoshi moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 5, relating to public health and welfare, seconded by Delegate Silva.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume its deliberations later that day.

At 12:43 a.m., the Convention stood in recess until 6:00 p.m. that evening.

EVENING SESSION

The Convention reconvened at 6:00 p.m.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 47) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 48 and 49; Com. Whole Rep. No. 5; Com. P. Nos. 4, RD. 2, S. 1, and 5, RD. 1; and Res. No. 14 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate O'Toole, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 47 was adopted.

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 48) recommending the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 48 and passage on Third Reading of Com. P. No. 4, RD. 2, S. 1.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 48 and Com. P. No. 4, RD. 2, S. 1, relating to the Preamble, general and miscellaneous provisions, revision and amendment, on the calendar for Third Reading on Monday, August 28, 1978.

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 49) recommending the adoption of Res. No. 13, RD. 1, providing for the use of nondiscriminatory nouns, pronouns and adjectives in the State Constitution, and requested that action be deferred to Friday, August 25, 1978.

There being no objection, action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 49 and Res. No. 13, RD. 1, was deferred until Friday, August 25, 1978.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 14) requesting the state legislature to review and redress the problems of the public libraries as part of the department of education, was offered jointly by Delegates Lacy and Goodenow.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 14 to the Committee on Education.

At 6:12 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 6:13 p.m.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTER

Com. Whole Rep. No. 3 (Com. P. No. 3) (Committee on Executive--Deferred from August 21, 1978):

Delegate Fukunaga moved for the adoption of Com. Whole Rep. No. 3 and passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 3, seconded by Delegate Taira.

The President called for discussion and, noting that Delegate Barnes was not present, recognized Delegate Crozier.

Speaking on behalf of Delegate Barnes, Delegate Crozier moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi, which added a new section to Com. P. No. 3, to read:

Section . There shall be an attorney general, who shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by law and who shall be the chief legal officer of the state.

The attorney general shall have the same qualifications as the governor and, in addition, shall have been admitted to practice law before the supreme court of the state for a period of at least five years. The attorney general shall be elected at the same time, for the same term and in the same manner as the governor, and removal shall be by the same manner as for the governor. In the event a vacancy occurs during a term, succession to office shall be as prescribed by law.

The President then called for discussion and recognized Delegate Hale.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Hale urged the delegates to seriously consider giving the people a chance to decide whether they wanted an elected attorney general. She pointed out that people felt alienated from government because they didn't have much input into the process. She then noted:

"The attorney general is our chief prosecuting attorney for the State, and as such he has power over county attorneys. But in some counties, as in the County of Hawaii, the county attorney is elected, and I don't feel an appointed attorney should have power over an elected attorney on the county level. But if the attorney general were elected, then I would have no qualms about this situation. It is true that one of the jobs of the attorney general is to advise the governor and the legislature, but there is no reason the governor can't hire counsel on his own staff to give him the legal advice that he needs, and the main job then of the attorney general would be to see that the laws of the State are properly carried out. So I would hope that you give consideration to this proposal."

Delegate DiBianco, speaking for the amendment, urged those delegates who had earlier voted against an elected attorney general to support this amendment, pointing out that they were only deciding whether to put it on the ballot for the people to decide. He further stated that according to the polls there was strong support in the community.

Delegate Fukunaga then rose to speak against the amendment. She pointed out that the basic issue was how one perceived the role of attorney general--whether he should function primarily as an advisor to the governor and the executive departments or should act as a "watchdog" on the executive. The proponents of the amendment, she observed, saw a need for the attorney general to act as a watchdog, but she did not. She then stated:

"Our present Constitution provides for various checks on abuse of the executive power; presently the legislature, the county governments, the judiciary and the electorate fulfill this role. We could add another watchdog, with the title of attorney general. Then we might need to elect another watchdog to watch our new attorney general, and on. At what point do we stop and trust that the electorate has chosen someone who will do his or her job and do it well?"

"The assumption that we need more elected officials to watch our elected officials shows a basic mistrust of the electorate's ability to choose trustworthy individuals to fill public office. I personally have faith that when the electorate chooses a governor or a legislator, they understand the power they are giving that individual and their vote is an expression of trust in that individual. In those rare instances where that trust is misplaced, I firmly believe that our present system of checks and balances can and will work. Thank you."

Delegate Barnes, apologizing for his earlier absence, then spoke for his amendment, stating:

"My first point is that over 60 percent of the people in the State do favor an elected attorney general and we strongly feel that this should be placed on the ballot, as was mentioned earlier.

"There were two points raised in the committee report that people who support an elected attorney general could accept. One of these is that the function of the attorney general is to advise the various agencies within the executive branch; and it would seem that an elected attorney general could very easily appoint deputy attorney generals who were familiar with these agencies to handle that portion of the job, unless the elected attorney general could advise the various executive agencies just as easily as an appointed could and still carry out the strong public consumer advocacy role we would desire.

"Secondly, we would have no objection to some type--perhaps a 3- or 4-year hiatus, or a cooling-off period, after the term of an attorney general when he could not run for higher office. In other words, some mechanism such as this could be provided so that our attorney general would not be directly perceived as a threat to the incumbent governor at that time, and we would then get candidates who were clearly interested in the job of attorney general as a representative of the people.

"I hope some of the delegates who originally indicated their interest in having an elected attorney general but on the last vote went the other way and who now seem to be having second thoughts on this issue have had time now to fully digest all the arguments. And again, we hope you will give the people a chance to vote on this. Thank you."

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Blean indicated that, according to the polls and his constituents, a majority of the people in the State favored an elected attorney general. As delegates to the Convention, he maintained, they had a duty to put the issue on the ballot, whether they favored it or not.

Delegate Tamayori then spoke against the amendment, observing:

"There is no assurance that any elected attorney general will strive to maintain true impartiality, detachment and faithfulness to the law; there is, however, an assurance in a change of constituency that any person elected or appointed to this position, if such person is so motivated, can abuse the powers vested in that role. Whether the attorney general does so to secure reappointment or election does not give favor to the act itself. Again, lest we forget, the code of ethics, the canons, the courts and other agencies of the State and the legislature exist, should citizens or a citizen desire a redress of grievances. Thank you."

Delegate Souki, speaking against the amendment, observed that the public wanted the State as efficient as possible, for which there must be good teamwork, no adversary relationship or the potential for one, and where there could be total confidence, for advice, assistance and counsel. The appointive system, he concluded, should be retained to provide this efficient management.

Delegate Kaapu then spoke against the amendment--not, he explained, because an elective system didn't work since in some cases it did, but because there was a better way to achieve the ends for those advocating both the elective and the appointed systems. He then explained:

"Those who want the appointive system to continue say that the attorney general should be compatible with the governor and the legislature and this is achieved by the fact that the governor appoints and the legislature confirms, through senate approval, which must also approve the attorney general's removal. The cons--against the existing system--are that the office may become political, the attorney general may become supportive of the governor at the expense of the people, and that public confidence because of that potential suffers with respect to his opinions and actions.

"However, there are also faults with an elected attorney general, as well as some pros which I would first like to mention. First of all, I think we would all agree that he would have to be independent since he would have to run for office on his own account. And he is also accountable to the people directly by the elective process. But in spite of these persuasive, favorable aspects, there are some dangers: the elected attorney general presents a potential evil, which would be contrary to the best interests of the public also, in that the office could fall into the hands of a demagogue, who would render opinions and pursue cases, his eyes gleaming with an evil lust for political opportunity, who, with election in mind, would pander to and excite the baser instincts of the human animal, which in vestigial form still lurk within us all. I ask you to spare us the limitations and doubts of the direct appointive method and the evil specter of the elected demagogue attorney, by supporting a method which gets the best points and prevents the worse points of both of these."

The Chair called for further discussion and, there being none, put the question to amend Com. P. No. 3 by Amendment No. 1 providing for an elected attorney general.

Roll call then being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 35 ayes, 56 noes and 11 excused; with Delegates Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chu, Crozier, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hoe, Hornick, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, O'Toole, Peterson, Pulham, Shon, Stegmaier, Takemoto, Takitani and Wurdeman voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Andrews, Barnard, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Chong, Chung, de Costa, De Soto, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Souki, Sterling, Stone, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Anae, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chun, Goodenow, Dennis Ihara, Ontai, Penebacker, Sutton, Tam and Yamashita being excused.

At this time Delegate Kaapu moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Alcon, which added a new section to Com. P. No. 3, to read:

ATTORNEY GENERAL ESTABLISHMENT; QUALIFICATIONS

Section . There shall be an attorney general who shall serve as the chief legal officer of the State for a term of four years, concurrent with the governor. No person shall be eligible for the office of attorney general unless that person shall have been admitted to the practice of law before the supreme court of this State for at least five years. The attorney general shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by law.

No person holding the office of attorney general shall be eligible to become a candidate for election to any state or political subdivision elective office while holding the office of attorney general.

SELECTION; MERIT SELECTION COMMISSION

There shall be a merit selection commission composed of nine members to nominate persons to serve as the attorney general. Within thirty days of a vacancy or notification of vacancy, the merit selection commission shall be established consisting of three members appointed by the governor, the initial appointments to be for terms of two, four and six years respectively; the senate and the house of representatives shall each appoint one member for a term of two years; the supreme court shall appoint two members for an initial term of four and six years respectively; and members in good standing of the bar of the State shall elect two of their number in an election conducted by the supreme court or its delegate, the initial election to be for terms of four and six years respectively.

The commission shall propose a list of not less than six nominees to fill any vacancy in the office of the attorney general. The governor shall appoint one person from this list to fill the office of the attorney general with the advice and consent of the senate.

Each commission shall establish its own rules and procedures in a manner prescribed by law.

If a judicial selection commission is established by this constitution, it shall perform the functions of the merit selection commission and there shall be no such commission.

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Kaapu explained that this alternative had first been proposed in the Committee of the Whole and provided for the merit appointment of an attorney general by the governor from a panel of nominees submitted by a commission. Due to some technical problems, he continued, he had at that time suggested that the judicial selection commission be used as the nomination body for the attorney general, but this had been impossible at the time as the judicial commission had not yet been considered by the Convention. Since then, he added, there had been other suggestions and there were now before the assembly three amendments that addressed merit selection of the attorney general. He then discussed the differences between the amendments, as follows:

"The amendment I have submitted involves the use of the judicial commission to submit names to the governor from which, after reviewing the list of persons already screened for competence, high community regard and legal expertise, he would choose one, hopefully that person who reflected the high quality of the legal profession and also had the personal quality necessary to work compatibly within the administration. My amendment, however, requires senate confirmation of the nominee, as is now prescribed by law, and removal of course would be by the current process. The amendment submitted by my neighbor, Delegate Marumoto, contains all the same provisions except that the governor's selection would not require senate confirmation.

"The other amendment, which was submitted by Delegate Goodenow in collaboration with Delegate Blake, has good merit in its present form. It would require that the nominating commission be composed of representatives selected by each of the county councils for a total of four, one by the Hawaii bar association and one each by the two houses of the legislature. This body would be convened at the time there was a vacancy and would dissolve upon the filling of that vacancy, whereas the other two amendments, would, since they use the judicial commission, not require dissolution of the panel.

"And that in essence describes the three methods being proposed and I think any one of them would serve well. There are some limitations, but these are greatly overcome by the fact that we would avoid those pitfalls I mentioned earlier. It would allow for a greater degree of public confidence, it would allow for senate review since the legislature must also be served, and it would, by the preliminary screening, assure the public that those being considered by the governor are not necessarily of his own nomination but are recognized by a broad cross section of the community as having exceptional merit. Therefore I speak in favor of the amendment--in fact, of any one of the three."

Delegate Fukunaga, speaking against the amendment, pointed out the following areas of concern:

"First of all, the commission plan places control for the attorney general's selection in the hands of a limited number of people. For those of you who have been urging the election of attorney general, I suggest that you think about this point very carefully. The commission plan removes the selection process one step further from the electorate: the commission is not elected, it is appointed.

"Secondly, a nominating commission diffuses responsibility for the selection of the attorney general. The governor can point to the commission as giving him a list of few worthy nominees and the commission can point to the governor as the final decision-maker.

"I think it should also be noted that no other state presently has this type of commission plan for the selection of attorney general, although similar plans exist for judicial selection. Although Hawaii has often been in the forefront in making progressive changes, I would be very hesitant to experiment with such a crucial office. For these reasons I oppose the amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Waihee then spoke against the amendment, explaining that initially the idea of using an independent body to select the nominees had interested him, but that he had subsequently found it was not workable. He then continued:

"Now I have two problems with the amendments using a merit selection commission, the first one being, if this is the same commission that we have established for the selection of judges--and in my opinion we have done such a fine job on it that it guarantees this commission would be so independent that using it as the basis of selecting the nominees for attorney general would, in my opinion, negate any of the good points of having an attorney general working with the governor. In other words, they would have no connection; the attorney general would not be part of the governor's team at all, and if so, in my humble opinion we should have elected the attorney general.

"I think what we have here is just nine people really electing the attorney general, and if we were to go this route we should have given it to the voters as a whole. So having decided not to do that, I think that we ought to stay with the present appointive system."

Delegate Marumoto, speaking for the motion, argued that the explanation that the selection commission would produce an independent attorney general was not a very good reason for voting down the amendment. She pointed out that they needed an independent attorney general and the commission would be ongoing and would produce fine attorney generals as well as judges.

Delegate Liu then spoke in favor of the motion. Referring to a previous speaker's statement that the merit commission plan would put the selection of the attorney general in the palms of a few people, he pointed out that presently it was in the palm of one person.

There being no further discussion, the question of amending Com. P. No. 3 by Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Marumoto requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining that there were ten seconds, so ordered. Delegate Tam, on a point of clarification, then asked if they would be voting on the concept of merit selection or on each amendment separately. The Chair explained that, based on Delegate Kaapu's remarks, in effect they were voting on the concept, and that if the concept were approved the question of how the commission would be developed would be in order.

Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 38 ayes, 53 noes and 11 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Barnes, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Laura Ching, Chu, Chung, Crozier, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Hale, Hamilton, Harris, Hoe, Hornick, Kaapu, Lacy, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Nozaki, Odanaka, O'Toole, Peterson, Shon, Sterling, Takitani, Wurdeman and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Andrews, Barnard, Barr, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Chong, de Costa, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hanaike, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Ledward, Lewis, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Okamura, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Stone, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax and Yoshimura voting no; and Delegates Anae, Haunani Ching, Chun, Goodenow, Dennis Ihara, Ikeda, Ontai, Penebacker, Sutton, Tam and Yamashita being excused.

There being no further amendments, the President called for discussion on Com. P. No. 3 and recognized Delegate Kimball.

Delegate Kimball then spoke against its passage on Second Reading, expressing the following concerns:

"Com. P. No. 3 does not address the basic political problem that Hawaii has experienced with respect to the relationship between the governor and the lieutenant governor. Three alternatives have come before this Convention: (1) to elect a governor and lieutenant governor as a team, (2) to assign the lieutenant governor executive power and functions, and (3) to abolish that office. We have not developed or adopted any of those alternatives and have failed to address the problem that faces Hawaii. Our failure to address this problem, I believe, if we approve Com. P. No. 3, will jeopardize the Convention's other work that we present to the voters, because we have failed to address a basic problem in one of our basic branches of government. Thank you."

Delegate Hale also spoke against the motion, indicating that her reasons were basically the same as those outlined by Delegate Kimball. She then requested a roll-call vote.

Delegate O'Toole, speaking against the motion, referred to the concerns already cited and then suggested that the lieutenant governor's office should be expanded and separated from the governor's during the general election.

There being no further discussion, the question on the adoption of Com. Whole Rep. No. 3 and passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 3 was put by the Chair. On determining that there were ten seconds and roll call then being in order, the motion carried by a vote of 72 ayes, 20 noes and 10 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Blake, Campbell, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Chong, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Barr, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Chu, DiBianco, Eastvold, Ellis, Hale, Harris, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, O'Toole, Peterson and Takitani voting no; and Delegates Anae, Haunani Ching, Chun, Goodenow, Dennis Ihara, Ikeda, Ontai, Penebacker, Sutton and Tam being excused.

SECOND READING

Com. Whole Rep. No. 5, Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1--RELATING TO PUBLIC HEALTH AND WELFARE:

Delegate Uyehara, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Fushikoshi, for the Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 5) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 5 be adopted and Com. P. No. 5, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

The President, after reviewing the order of the amendments, called for discussion.

Delegate Odanaka moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi, which amended section 2 of Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1, to read:

Section 2. The State shall have power to provide for treatment, [and] rehabilitation and domiciliary care of handicapped persons.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Odanaka stated:

"I disagree with the committee report's contention that domiciliary care is included in the definition of treatment and rehabilitation. It is a vital state service for patients who are beyond either treatment or rehabilitation and their families. The language as proposed may allow the legislature in a fiscal crisis to cut off funds for such facilities as Waimano home, the state mental hospital and facilities for leprosy patients. So I am simply adding the words 'domiciliary care' and leaving the balance of the committee's proposal unchanged."

Delegate Fushikoshi rose to speak against the amendment, arguing:

"Domiciliary care refers to care provided to elderly or handicapped persons who are unable to live independently and therefore require placement in nonmedical institutions, such as an adult family care home or a personal care home, the former licensed by the department of social services and the latter by the department of health.

"The authority to place and provide payment for such care is clearly established by the State's statute in Chapter 346, which gives the department of social services this authority. Provision and payment for domiciliary care is a function of public assistance and the constitutional authority is already established in Article VIII, Section 3, on public assistance. Therefore, deletion of 'domiciliary care' in section 2 does not potentially reduce any services or care to the handicapped, nor is this the intended purpose of this deletion. Thank you."

Delegate Shon, on a point of information, asked if the committee chairman could specifically confirm that the language would not adversely affect the care of leprosy patients.

Delegate Fushikoshi replied that all were included in that particular wording.

Delegate Hale, speaking in favor of the amendment, remarked that from the reasons given in the committee report she couldn't justify the deletion. Quoting from the committee report on eliminating "specific categories of handicaps so that the legislature would not be constrained in its actions," she then pointed out that the chairman had indicated certain statutes that included domiciliary care but they were writing a constitution, not a statute. Questioning whether there were legal ramifications not explained in the committee report, she stated:

"I would hesitate to take out words that were obviously put in for a purpose, and statutes that have been drawn under the previous Constitution might eventually not be constitutional. I'm not sure what we're doing and I really can't see any reason for taking out the 'domiciliary care' from the original constitutional language. Therefore, unless there is a very good reason for taking it out--and the only reason they gave was that they wanted to 'broaden the philosophical statement... to include all categories of handicaps,' but I don't see that. It seems to me that Delegate Odanaka's proposal would be broader than the specific language recommended by the committee, and therefore I'd like to speak in favor of her proposal."

Delegate Campbell then asked the committee chairman whether the statute he had cited--Chapter 346 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes--predated or postdated the constitutional language "domiciliary care."

Delegate Fushikoshi requested a short recess to check on it.

At 7:08 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 7:10 p.m.

Noting that the researcher was still checking on Delegate Campbell's question, Delegate Fushikoshi then explained:

"In regard to Delegate Odanaka's amendment, the phrase 'domiciliary care' was taken out because treatment and rehabilitation define this word 'domiciliary.'"

At this time, Delegate De Soto questioned whether removing the words "domiciliary care" from Section 2 of Article VIII would "release the responsibility of the State to provide same." She mentioned that earlier she had heard that it was already provided for in Section 3, and added that she was concerned because "there are many people in care homes whose families do not meet the low-income criteria that is required for public assistance."

Delegate Fushikoshi, in response, confirmed that it was taken care of and assured:

"They are not being cast aside. They are taken care of, because 'rehabilitation' and this word 'treatment' cover that word 'domiciliary,' meaning that basically under this particular statement those people in care homes are going to be covered, so it's no problem."

Delegate Hale then requested legal opinion as to whether care homes would specifically be covered, because "domiciliary to me means keeping them confined in a certain place and rehabilitation could be in a private home or outside."

The Chair remarked that it could be assumed the language had been cleared with the language staff prior to presentation.

Delegate Chung then stated:

"The word 'domicile,' according to the dictionary, first is a 'place of residence' of an individual or family; 'a place with which a person has settled connections' for determination of his civil status, etc. But we interpreted domiciliary care, when we discussed this with Mr. Yuen, the director of the health department--domiciliary care is part of the program, or subprogram, which is inherently necessary to carry out treatment or rehabilitation goals, such as mini-hospitals. Delegate Odanaka mentioned her concern about Waimano Training School possibly being closed in an economic crisis. Well, Waimano home is an inherent program for the care of those patients there. I don't see how the program can exist without such a domiciliary place, and likewise the state hospital, or the Halawa jail for public safety. You've got to have a place for incarceration and a jail or prison is totally part of the program for the treatment or control of a certain problem. And I believe the words 'treatment' and 'rehabilitation' are the broad statements under which the type of programs to fulfill the goals are referred and this is why Mr. Yuen felt that this word may be omitted. Thank you."

Delegate Souki, while sympathizing with Delegate Odanaka's concerns, explained:

"Under the state health planning administration, they do consider these factors--the factor of domiciliary care, which is providing care for the convalescent, the intermediate and the care home--and they do have a state plan now to provide care for such and my understanding, because I'm very close to this, is that most of the goals have been met. But they do have a state plan to provide for the care and well-being of senior citizens and the handicapped for that kind and type of care. So I believe by the mere fact that you eliminate that word 'domiciliary,' it will still not affect the intent of the Constitution, which is to provide treatment and rehabilitation and what can be carried on statutorily."

Delegate De Soto then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, stating:

"There are too many if's and maybe's and suppositions in this case, and at the cost of being labeled a bleeding heart I think that domiciliary care is not only institutional care but also--the State has continuously over the years paid private homes to take care of people who are handicapped and who do not meet the criteria for staying in an institution-type setting, wherein the State pays people to take care of them. And because it's so obscure at this point, I'm really hesitant to delete this word, because it has not been fully explained as far as I'm concerned, and as long as it's not clearly explained I will have to support the proposition to amend. Thank you."

In response to Delegate De Soto's concern, Delegate Fushikoshi explained that Section 1 of Article VIII specified that the State "shall provide for the protection and promotion of the public health." And, he added, since it was an ongoing program, the State would provide that.

Referring to the question that Delegate Campbell had earlier asked, he answered that "this came after the constitutional convention."

In other words, Delegate Campbell requested, the statute was enacted after the word "domiciliary" was already in there?

Delegate Fushikoshi, in response, stated, "Yes, it came during that constitutional convention when they first had that--they had that worded in."

Delegate Campbell then restated, "My question is simply this, Delegate Fushikoshi. Were the words 'domiciliary care' in the Constitution before that section to which you made reference was enacted?"

Delegate Fushikoshi thereupon responded, "No, it came after."

Delegate de Costa then rose to speak against the motion, explaining that by the deletion the committee was "just getting rid of one of those hard words to pronounce, the rest means the same."

Delegate Rachel Lee then spoke in favor of the amendment. Referring to the assistance program for the elderly which the Convention had approved, she noted:

"What bothers me are the words 'rehabilitation' and 'treatment.'

Now, when we are speaking of the elderly, they are not ever going to be rehabilitated and their illness is chronic. You cannot treat them with medication. They will need a shelter where they can be given care. Are we going to regress, when the 1968 convention put the words in there? Are we, 1978 delegates, going to take that word away? If we do, we are regressing. We have to be very sure that there is still a definite responsibility if we remove the word.

"I am also concerned because anything that is statutory can be removed. Anytime the State goes broke or has financial difficulties, they'll be looking for avenues to cut expenses, and I'm afraid they may find a good excuse to do it in this case. Fellow delegates, let's not regress, let's keep the words in there. Thank you."

Speaking against the amendment with some reservations, Delegate Shon pointed out that this section was not a mandate, that it said the State "shall have the power to provide." He explained:

"If this were a mandate, a policy statement, then I would feel considerably more uneasy about removing the word, but since the State clearly has the power to provide now and this is a reaffirmation of that power, and the definitions of treatment and rehabilitation do seem to include domiciliary care, then I urge you to vote against the amendment."

Delegate Hale, speaking for the amendment, pointed out that the committee had recommended taking away the mandate and had changed it from "shall provide for the protection and promotion of the public health" to "shall have power to..." But, she continued, with the amendment they had adopted, the term "shall provide" had been put back. She then pointed out:

"In the justification of the standing committee report, it seems to be quite a concern of the public health committee that we don't want to mandate the legislature because we don't want to tell them how to spend their moneys. I call your attention to the paragraph under Section 1 where it says: 'The amended section will no longer mandate the legislature to fund public health.' Now this was in Section 1, and that was their justification. It goes on to say that all 'funding and programs for public health require legislative appropriations,' and consequently 'your Committee decided that the legislature will be best suited to determine what proportion of state revenues should go to public health.'

"Now I maintain that if you take out these very important words 'domiciliary care,' you are indicating to the legislature that perhaps this is not an important area. We have put 'shall have power to' in this article of the Constitution in almost every other section, and it was felt necessary that we still have power over the environment and the culture and all of that. And I feel that we should not regress, as Delegate Lee says, that we shall have power--very definitely constitutionally, have power to provide for domiciliary care. I would like to point out the state plan that was developed was developed under the Constitution of 1968, and we are attempting now to change those words so the state plan--we don't know, we haven't competent legal counsel here today to advise us right now, definitely, about this.

"I would also like to point out, in regard to this particular section, the committee was concerned about taking out the words 'mentally or physically handicapped' because they did not want to limit the kinds of power that the State would have, and this amendment also takes out those same concerns. In the committee report it says: 'Your Committee decided that it was important to eliminate specific categories of handicaps so that the legislature would not be constrained in its actions.' It goes on to state that the committee 'did not intend to remove any type of handicapped persons from consideration,' but they decided to delete the phrase 'domiciliary care' because 'the phrase was already included under the definition of treatment and rehabilitation.' I have had enough experience--when the hospitals and the care of pensioners and old people were under the power of the county--to realize that we're getting into dangerous areas when we talk about domiciliary care and geriatrics treatment centers and so forth--and they may be 'hydrobolic' words, Delegate de Costa, but sometimes--as we decided, sometimes technical words are necessary.

"And the final conclusion of the committee, at the end of that paragraph: 'Finally, your Committee felt that these two changes would appropriately streamline Section 2.' I don't think it's our purpose to streamline if we're going to streamline basic needs of our people in the field of health and welfare and care, and I would urge you to seriously consider going back to the original wording--just leaving out the 'mentally or physically,' which goes along with the committee's intent--and adopt this amendment for those reasons. Thank you."

Delegate Funakoshi, on a point of inquiry, asked if in addition to mentally ill patients this would also include the criminally insane. Delegate Odanaka replied in the affirmative.

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 1 was put by the Chair and failed to carry by a vote of 39 ayes and 44 noes. Delegate Hale then requested a division of the house, and on a rising vote the motion again failed by a vote of 42 ayes and 47 noes.

At this time Delegate Odanaka moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Wurdeman, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 5, to read:

The State shall have the power to provide financial and medical assistance and social services for persons unable to maintain a standard of living compatible with decency and health. [, medical assistance and social services for persons who are found to be in need of and are eligible for such assistance and services as provided by law.]

The Chair explained that since this was a substitute amendment, it was in order first to address any amendments to the present section 3. There being no amendments, Delegate Odanaka was recognized.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Odanaka then stated:

"As I understand it, the Constitution is a place for establishing human rights. Among these, as the previous language stated, is the right to be able to maintain a lifestyle 'compatible with decency and health.' Such a broad, general yet effective statement is the proper way to stress the need and compel the establishment of such program.

"By the way the committee has rewritten this section, they replaced this basic statement and definition by too many terms, with the statement a legalistic term that compels the legislature to set their own definition of that need, depending on the fiscal situation. What this says is that if you have a need, but a few legislators don't think they can afford your type of need, you'll be at a loss. Also, the committee's stated rationale that the language would protect the State from being sued runs counter to the concept of a constitution. From the beginning, the purpose of a constitution was to provide the people with legal protection from their government and a means to make government more accountable to them. The motive for including language in the Constitution merely to protect the government from the legal wrath of the public runs counter to all that a constitution is supposed to be."

Delegate Fushikoshi then spoke against the amendment, stating:

"Your Committee decided to change the language describing those who will receive assistance because as a practical matter the legislature or the federal government now sets the qualifications for all types of assistance. The Department of Social Services and Housing expressed concern in oral and written testimony with the terms 'decency' and 'health.' Because these terms are very vague and might allow lawsuits against the State, your Committee felt the new language was needed so that the legislature can develop precise definitions to determine eligibility. For these reasons, Mr. President, I recommend that this amendment be voted down."

Delegate Hale, on a point of inquiry, asked if there had been any specific lawsuits against the State and if the State had had to pay, under the present language. Offhand, Delegate Fushikoshi replied, he didn't know.

Delegate De Soto then inquired as to what the committee intended to do by removing the existing language. In response, Delegate Fushikoshi explained that the new language broke down the types of assistance into specific areas, enabling the legislature to know exactly what areas were involved.

Delegate De Soto then spoke in favor of the motion, observing:

"We took one sentence that said the State 'shall have power to provide assistance for persons unable to maintain a standard of living compatible with decency and health.' And now we've turned it into something else with another intent, and it is my opinion that--do we again leave it to the design of the legislature and those who interpret this constitutional provision?

"For the same reason that I rose to speak earlier--and I told my staff that I would not also speak tonight--however, I have to speak in favor of the motion. What we have done is make it very easy again for the poor people of the State of Hawaii to have to depend on interpretation and intent. I think that this Constitutional Convention has a first priority to provide for the poor and those who cannot have a decent life because they don't have income. I think that what this does is very sad. All of government's workings to date, historically, have been to put the poor people on the side and now we have too many poor and unemployed who require health and domiciliary care. And we overlook these people and leave it up to bureaucracies or bureaucrats to interpret. Isn't it our intention to provide for these people? Then let's say so. Or are we going to leave it to the whim of a legislator or a government official to interpret in the best interests of his particular department?

"I think that this would truly hurt the poor people out there and I ask all of you to consider this, and I ask Delegate Fushikoshi to forgive me. I respect his opinion very much but I feel so strongly on this that it would really truly--because I have had experiences dealing with social workers, department of welfare and the whole system, in Waianae especially. We suffer because we leave things up to interpretation. I think that we should be specific in these kinds of areas. Thank you."

At 7:43 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 7:48 p.m.

At this time Delegate De Soto rose and stated:

"Mr. President, I'd like to report, sir, that my questions and my fears have been allayed. Legal counsel, social workers, welfare recipients have testified in favor of this committee proposal, and that it is specific and meets their requirements. So, with that I rest my case."

Delegate Fushikoshi then made the following statement:

"Mr. President, may I relay this message to my good friend, Delegate De Soto. The welfare recipients are not going to be left out because if you look at the wording, it says 'who are found to be in need,' so we make sure that these people will be taken care of--those who prove to be in need."

Delegate Hale rose to speak for the amendment, maintaining:

"I would like to say that I do think Delegate Odanaka's amendment is a very good amendment. I see no reason to change the words that have been carrying this State forward in a very progressive public assistance program for 10 years, on the basis of some vague idea that maybe somebody in the future is going to sue the State. And that is the reasoning in the committee report; the committee concluded that the present language qualifying persons who are 'unable to maintain a standard of living compatible with decency and health' might some-day be construed to permit lawsuits against the State. And I submit that is not a good reason to change language that has stood this State in good stead for the last 10 years, and I would hope that we would keep the original language. And that's all we're doing."

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Dennis Ihara explained that, besides the testimony given by all the welfare recipients, the language was amended by the committee more as a housecleaning chore, to define the various kinds of assistance as well as who would be eligible.

Delegate Ishikawa, speaking against the amendment, offered further clarification:

"We believe it is a housekeeping matter because in 1975, approximately, the statutes were changed to remove that word 'decency,' and the mere fact that we're being emotionally upset about this kind of language is the reason why the statutes were changed in 1975. And what we're doing now is making sure the Constitution also reflects that in the entitlement programs, where it is in the purview of the legislature to set the standards, that the people who will receive these services are those who are eligible by statute, to relieve all doubt as to other people questioning whether they're also eligible for these services and assistance. I believe this is really a housekeeping matter."

Delegate de Costa then spoke against the amendment, stating:

"I'll make it real fast. It states there that it helps the needy and not the greedy. Really, that's what it boils down to. And they had trouble in 1975, they had a court order, not to sue or whatever--so vote this thing down. It was told by the DSSH and all them guys. Thank you."

Also speaking against the motion, Delegate Chung advised:

"The committee has consulted with Andrew Chang, the director of the Department of Social Services and Housing, and he has strongly recommended that we make the amendment as we have proposed, so that we'd be in keeping with all the complex federal regulations and rules that have to do with federal funding. And by using this language, it will be easier to establish need and eligibility as against the standards of decency and the standards of health. These are beautiful words but very broad and vague, and this is why the committee went along and made the amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Odanaka again spoke in support of her amendment, commenting:

"I want to stress once more that the committee's stated rationale that this language would protect the State from being sued runs counter to the concept of our Constitution, and I really cannot accept ever replacing the rights of humans with the rights of the department of social services."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Odanaka requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 17 ayes, 79 noes and 6 excused; with Delegates Barnes, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, DiBianco, Goodenow, Hale, Hornick, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Marumoto, Miller, Nozaki, Odanaka, Sterling and Stone voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Andrews, Barnard, Barr, Blake, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Chong, Chu, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaïke, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Ledward, Marion Lee, Liu, McCall, Nakamura, Okamura, Ontai, O'Toole, Penebacker, Peterson, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Anae, Haunani Ching, Chun, Ikeda, Lewis and Nishimoto being excused.

Delegate Taira then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 3, seconded by Delegate De Soto, which amended section 4 of Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1, to read:

The State shall have the power to conserve and develop objects and places of historic or cultural interest, provide for public sightliness and physical good order, and for that purpose private property shall be subject to reasonable regulation.

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Taira made the following statement:

"I'd like to point out that in Com. P. No. 5 the words 'conserve and develop its natural beauty, objects and places of historic or cultural interest' were removed from Section 5.

"When this was discovered, a great number of people--including many of my colleagues here in this Convention, who are very close to the scene when it comes to making sure that our places of historic and cultural interest are discovered quickly and action taken to have them preserved, whether private or public property--felt that removing the words 'objects and places of historic or cultural interest' from this paragraph left many of our famous Hawaiian sites, which go back many years in history, with no property to sit on, and nobody would be able to regulate them in a reasonable way. And so by putting back the words 'objects and places of historic or cultural interest' we now make it possible to have these sites on private property regulated in a reasonable way.

"For these reasons--I don't know why the committee took these words out, but I've talked to the chairman and he understands what we're trying to do and I don't foresee any controversy--for these reasons, Mr. President, I would urge my colleagues to accept this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Hale then spoke in support of the amendment, mentioning that they were only putting back into the Constitution the words that the 1968 convention had put in.

Delegate Campbell at this time moved to amend the amendment by reinserting the words "its natural beauty," seconded by Delegate Kaapu. Delegate Campbell then commented that she could see no compelling rationale for the deletion and that she felt the words were beautiful and the intent significant.

Delegate Crozier, on a point of inquiry, asked the movant to explain what "natural beauty" was in everyone's eyes, to which Delegate Campbell replied that she could start with herself but couldn't say for everyone.

Delegate Chang rose to speak against the amendment to the amendment. Referring to the committee report, he explained that the language "its natural beauty" had been deleted because it overlapped with language in Article X on management and regulation of Hawaii's natural resources. He then noted:

"This has been a source of questioning and doubt for the past 10 years and led to overlapping referrals in our present Constitutional Convention, and we felt that it was time this language was cleaned up. There was some fear that the deletion might remove the authority of the State to control such things as billboards and other devices that might mar our landscape, but that authority is still left in the section, with the words 'provide for public sightliness and physical good order. As I expressed during the debate on Delegate Fushikoshi's motion in the Committee of the Whole, the concern with regard to conservation and development of Hawaii's natural beauty will be taken up in the article where it is felt it belongs, Article X."

Delegate Odanaka then inquired how they could say Delegate Campbell's amendment overlapped Article X when Article X had not yet been discussed. Delegate Chang explained that the overlap was found in the 1968 convention's records, where there was some confusion as to where the words belonged. At that time, he added, they decided not to deal with it and it had been a source of confusion since then, especially in this Convention.

There being no further discussion, the question on the amendment to Amendment No. 3 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Fushikoshi, speaking for the original amendment, voiced his concurrence with the thoughts expressed by the movant.

Delegate Barr then rose and expressed his surprise, pointing out that the committee report clearly stated that the language had been deleted because of the new section on cultural resources. He added that if the language was put back in this section, the new section was no longer needed and should be taken out.

Delegate Takemoto then spoke for the amendment, explaining:

"Delegate Taira's is what is called state historic preservation. This means the preservation mostly of objects and places of historical and cultural interest--that is, buildings, also monuments, Iolani Palace, and so on. And what we've attempted to do with this was to provide for the state historic preservation office to continue to carry on its job.

"Now the cultural resources provision is in fact completely different. It doesn't really take care of the state historic preservation office and what we're talking about here is basically just involved with state lands and government.

"Delegate Taira's proposal will also include private property, and private property then means that historic objects or buildings which are on private property can then be restored, developed, conserved, which does not exist.

"The cultural resources one is a completely different attempt. This is more a cultural attempt, to preserve the culture and the traditional arts of the various historic groups. This would then fall under the purview of another area and department, and if Delegate Taira's proposal were in fact deleted or voted down, what we would have is the end of the historic preservation office, and the entire concept of historic preservation in Hawaii would literally take a downfall. And that is why I speak in favor of this amendment."

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Marion Lee argued that the amendment would definitely mean duplication and that the new section on cultural resources provided for the preservation of historical places and objects. Although she agreed with the intent of the amendment, she added, they did not need the repetition.

Delegate Chong, on a point of inquiry, asked if the only deletion, should the amendment be adopted, would then be the words "its natural beauty," to which Delegate Fushikoshi replied in the affirmative.

At 8:23 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 8:28 p.m.

At this time Delegate Taira rose and stated:

"Mr. President, during the recess I believe those of us who had conflicting ideas discussed our mutual concerns in a very sensible way and we have come to, I think, a good solution. So at this time, with the understanding that there will be a verbal amendment offered unanimously with your consent, Mr. President, in a later section of Article VIII, I'd like to recommend that we at this time adopt the amendment that I proposed in its original form."

Delegate Barr then stated that for the record he would withdraw his objections.

On a point of information, Delegate Chang inquired as to the effect of the amendment on the language in the cultural resources section. In response, Delegate Taira explained that the language in the new section on cultural resources would be retained except that the phrase "and historical places and objects" would be deleted to avoid repetition.

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 3 was put by the Chair and carried.

At this time Delegate Waihee moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 4, seconded by Delegate Taira, which amended section 7 of Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1, to read:

Section . The State shall have the power to preserve and develop the cultural, creative, and traditional arts[, and historical places and objects] of its various ethnic groups.

Delegate Sutton, on a point of order, questioned whether the amendment should be in writing. The Chair acknowledged that the point was well taken but explained that in the interest of expediting procedures the Chair was in accord with what was felt to be the sense of the Convention.

Delegate McCall suggested that, rather than violate the rule on written amendments, they let the style committee take care of it. Delegate Hamilton then rose and advised that a deletion of such significance would be better done on the floor, pointing out that the more that was left to style the more difficult it became for style to keep out of the substance field, which they were trying to do.

Delegate Hale then rose to voice her support of the motion.

At this time Delegate Sutton moved to suspend the rule on written amendments so that the issue could be considered, seconded by Delegate Waihee.

The Chair, noting that the motion to suspend the rules required a two-thirds vote, put the question on the suspension and the motion carried.

There being no further discussion on this amendment, the question to amend Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 4 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate Burgess at this time asked to withdraw his amendment deleting Article VIII in its entirety and instead to amend Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1, by deleting sections 2 through 9, including all amendments made by the Committee of the Whole and by the Convention thus far.

On a point of order, Delegate Waihee stated that amendments just passed that evening could not be deleted, adding that "you cannot introduce an amendment that would turn around the sense of the amendment" just acted upon. He then asked for a ruling by the Chair.

Delegate Sutton, on a point of order, indicated that the motion was in order since it was the Chair's discretion as to the order of the amendments. If this amendment had been brought up first, he added, it would be in order.

Delegate Burgess then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 5, seconded by Delegate Goodenow, which amended Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1, by deleting sections 2 through 9, so that Article VIII in its entirety would read: "Section 1. The State shall provide for the protection and promotion of the public health."

Delegate Burgess, speaking for his amendment, made the following statement:

"Mr. President and fellow delegates, Article VIII of our present Constitution now consists of five sections--(1) 'Public Health,' (2) 'Care of Handicapped,' (3) 'Public Assistance,' (4) 'Slum Clearance, Rehabilitation and Housing' and (5) 'Public Sightliness and Good Order.'

"Two days ago this body, sitting in Committee of the Whole, passed five additional sections to be added to Article VIII. Those new sections are entitled 'Preservation of a Healthful Environment,' 'Management of State Population Growth,' 'Cultural Resources,' 'Economic Security of the Elderly' and 'Public Safety.' And tonight we have made some changes and modifications to those amendments.

"Each of those ideas is beautiful. Each of them addresses an important subject, but the question that I ask is--do they belong in our Constitution? I would ask each of the delegates to pause for a moment to reflect on what a constitution is and what our role as delegates to this Constitutional Convention should be. I would submit to you that a constitution is a document which sets forth the fundamental structure of government and sets forth the limitations on government. Those limitations guarantee and secure to the people their rights in the exercise of their liberties.

"I would like to read from an article in the Star-Bulletin, in March of this year, by the state legislative auditor, Clinton Tanimura--this was in the series on Con Con '78 issues--and Mr. Tanimura said:

'A constitution and the process of constitutional revision should be concerned with fundamental law, law which structures the framework of our political system, rather than statutory laws, law intended to cope with the day-to-day and changing problems of society. It is a distinction of no small importance. Already it can be gleaned from the public opinion surveys and Con Con discussions that there is a feeling the next Convention should be some kind of super-legislature established to provide solutions to the problems of crime, inadequacies of the public school system, pollution of the environment, problems which are important but for which a constitution is not the appropriate instrument for remedy. Rather than attempt to provide direct solutions to these problems, the Constitutional Convention should assure that the basic institution and process of government are structured in such a way as to be able to respond to and cope with the current and foreseeable problems of our society.'

"The purpose of this talk is to make the point that all except the first section of Article VIII should not be in our Constitution."

At this time Delegate Taira rose on a point of order to suggest that the speaker should confine his remarks to the subject of public health and welfare rather than speaking in broad terms about what should be in a constitution. The Chair, disagreeing with the point, advised Delegate Burgess to proceed.

"I would like to look to the Constitution--that is, the oldest-written Constitution still in effect today, the Constitution of the United States--and to quote from two historical figures. The first is Henry Clay: 'The Constitution of the United States was made not merely for the generation that then existed, but for posterity.' And I would like to quote Franklin Roosevelt in his inaugural address in 1933: 'Our Constitution is so simple and practical that it is possible always to meet extraordinary needs by changes in emphasis and arrangement without laws of essential form.' That is why our constitutional system has proved itself the most superbly enduring political mechanism the modern world has produced.

"Now, the Constitution of the United States makes no reference to any of the specific types of things which are addressed in sections 2 through 9 of our committee proposal. For example, on the environment, the Constitution of the United States makes no reference whatsoever to protection of a healthful environment, or any reference at all to environment. And yet we all know that the federal government has enacted numerous laws and has taken many steps to promote and to protect the environment. We have the Environmental Protection Act, we have federal auto pollution standards, we have the Clean Water Act.

"The Constitution of the United States says nothing about public assistance or welfare, and yet we all know that many federal programs such as social security, Medicare, Medicaid and innumerable other federal statutes specifically address and attempt to solve those problems.

"I suggest to you, ladies and gentlemen, that the sections following Section 1 of Article VIII add nothing whatsoever to the powers of this State. Every problem there--it is an important problem, but putting it in the Constitution adds nothing whatsoever to solving those problems for the State.

"For example, the provision which we just voted to add, which says that the State 'shall have the power to promote and maintain a healthful environment.' Without that section in the Constitution, our legislature has already enacted some 200 pages of statutory provisions, over some 20 chapters, relating to conservation, water, energy, forest reserves, water reserves, any number of other specific statutory provisions. This section is not necessary and, worthy as it is, it adds nothing.

"The numerous other sections add nothing to the State's ability to solve the problems it faces. And I would suggest to you, ladies and gentlemen, that you look at today's Star-Bulletin and see how our actions are affecting the public. On the editorial page, Corky has a cartoon--a picture of a group of people talking to each other, entitled 'Con Con,' and outside the room, which has a picture of the Con Con convention hall, is a table and on it is a book entitled 'Hawaii Constitution, covered with cobwebs, and there's a spider suspended from the ceiling and he says, 'It went downhill the moment they thought they were the state legislature instead of the Constitutional Convention.'

"Fellow delegates, I ask you to exercise restraint in the proposals you make to this Convention--not because these ideas are not good but because they do not belong in the Constitution. Thank you."

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Sterling stated:

"The sections that have been proposed and have been subject to many hours of deliberation, I firmly believe, despite the fear--since the first article that the previous speaker referred to in the Star-Bulletin editorial, we've had a dramatic change in American government with the passage of Proposition 13. Immediately upon the passage of Proposition 13, there isn't a town in the state of California cut back from the most visible and viable services to the public--fire, libraries and schools--they did not cut back in the administrative costs.

"The sections we've been going through reflect the scare by mandating the State to do certain things because of the unresponsiveness, let's say, of the legislature. If it takes a super-legislature to pass these things and make certain that they are responsive to the needs of the people, then it will take a super-legislature like the Convention to spell these out. We're responding to the fears of the people. Please remember what happened after Proposition 13 was passed and what was cut--welfare, public health, care for the needy, no administrative costs were cut. But us here, particularly this evening, trying to make sure that the legislature will carry out certain functions-- I think it's just improper, and therefore I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment. Thank you very much."

Delegate Fushikoshi then spoke against the amendment, although acknowledging that the Constitution should be in general form. The conventions of 1950 and 1968, he maintained, had formulated one of the best state constitutions in the United States, and further explained:

"In 1950, when Article VIII was first amended--its first present form, the committee unanimously agreed that a state constitution should indicate the concept of the type of health and welfare assistance that should be undertaken. The five sections cover distinct but separate areas of activity which are usually accepted as the State's responsibility in conserving and developing natural and human resources. These sections were thought to be necessary as basic in indicating the State's responsibility in health and welfare. They were broad enough in wording to allow the legislature flexibility in the implementation of programs.

"Delegates to the 1968 constitutional convention agreed with the provisions in Article VIII and made no substantive changes. In adopting the provisions of Article VIII, the delegates stated that the broad grant of legislative power contained in these five sections pinpointed state responsibilities; and that under these broad grants, the legislative and executive branches of the state government had been able to carry on very meaningful, effective public health and welfare programs in cooperation with the federal and county governments.

"I submit that we too should not make substantive changes with Article VIII for the same reasons. The present sections also serve as policy statements that explicitly address the concerns of our people. To delete these sections would lessen state responsibility and in turn weaken the rights of the people. For these reasons, I urge the defeat of this amendment. Thank you."

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Hamilton pointed out that the committee had spent much time analyzing the subject and obviously knew more about it than he did, not having served on that committee. He was therefore willing, he said, to accept their recommendations, adding his thanks to Delegate Burgess "for reminding us that one of the best characteristics of a constitutional writer is a nice sense of restraint."

Delegate Harris also spoke against the amendment, prefacing his remarks by stating that the quality of a constitution was not determined by its brevity. A constitution, he continued, was more than just a simple delineation of powers between the branches of government, as had been stated. He further observed:

"I believe a constitution is a place where the goals and the high ideals of the society are laid out for all to see. And I ask you--are not care of the handicapped, public assistance, management of our population--are not these our high goals and ideals? Is this not the place to lay them out for all to see?"

"I think we have to reject this narrow view of what a constitution is. It encompasses more than that. I strongly urge all the delegates to resoundingly vote down this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate McCall, speaking in support of the amendment, pointed out that the legislature had indicated what the State wanted to do in terms of helping the elderly, the sick, the poor, etc., by the actions they had taken, and that he saw no reason to duplicate it in the Convention.

Delegate Peterson then spoke in favor of the intent of the motion, observing:

"I think many of the subjects which are addressed in the new sections are covered in the language of the first sections. I think the point which was made earlier by Delegate Burgess in simply reading the titles of the new sections points out that, rather than giving a basic mandate, we have provided a laundry list which might better be addressed in a resolution to the legislature than by placing them in the Constitution. While they are all very worthy subjects for discussion by the Convention, I feel they would be better addressed by the legislature, and that by keeping our Constitution simple we will have a more enduring document."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 5 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

The Chair then called for discussion of Com. P. No. 5. There being no further discussion, Delegate Fushikoshi then moved, seconded by Delegate Uyehara, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 5 be received and placed on file and Com. P. No. 5, RD. 1 as amended, pass Second Reading. The question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 6--RELATING TO EDUCATION:

On motion by Delegate Teruo Ihara, seconded by Delegate Takehara and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 6, relating to education.

The President appointed Delegate Goodenow to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 9:05 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Goodenow assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 11:50 p.m., Delegate Goodenow vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Goodenow, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 6 as amended, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Goodenow, seconded by Delegate Teruo Ihara and carried, the oral report was adopted.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:58 p.m., on motion by Delegate Peterson, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Friday, August 25, 1978.

FORTIETH DAY

Friday, August 25, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1: 30 p. m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by Brother Jens Jacobsen of the Makiki Ward of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Laura Ching, Eastvold, Les Ihara, Miller and Ontai who were absent.

The President announced that the Journals of the Thirty-Eighth and Thirty-Ninth Days had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 50) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 51 and 52 and Com. P. Nos. 9 and 10 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate O'Toole, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 50 was adopted.

Delegate Fukunaga, for the Committee on Executive, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 51) recommending that the proposals enumerated within the report be filed, and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 9) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 51 and Com. P. No. 9, relating to the executive, on the calendar for further consideration on Monday, August 28, 1978.

Delegate Ikeda, for the Committee on Judiciary, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 52) recommending that the proposals enumerated within the report be filed and that Sections 5 and 6 of Article V be retained without amendment; and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 10) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 52 and Com. P. No. 10, relating to the judiciary, on the calendar for further consideration on Monday, August 28, 1978.

At this time, Delegate DiBianco rose to inquire of the Chair as to the status of Res. No. 12, relating to scheduling of convention meetings on Sundays. Delegate Takemoto responded that a standing committee report had been written and was being typed up at that time.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 46, Com. P. No. 8--RELATING TO THE LEGISLATURE:

On motion by Delegate Nishimoto, seconded by Delegate Chong and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 46 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; and Com. P. No. 8, relating to the legislature, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Monday, August 28, 1978.

Com. P. No. 7--RELATING TO LOCAL GOVERNMENT:

Delegate Sakima moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 7, relating to local government, seconded by Delegate Alcon.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 7 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Pulham to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:45 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Pulham assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 5:02 p.m., Delegate Pulham vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Pulham, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 7, as amended, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Pulham, seconded by Delegate Sakima and carried, the oral report was adopted.

The President thereupon placed Com. P. No. 7 on the calendar for Second Reading on Tuesday, August 29, 1978.

At this time, the President complimented Delegate Pulham for a firm and able job as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and commended Delegate Sakima and his hard-working committee.

Delegate Sterling then rose to compliment Chief Clerk George Amimoto and his staff for the fine job and long hours they had been putting in at the Convention.

DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 49 (Res. No. 13, RD. 1) (Committee on Style--Deferred from August 24, 1978):

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, moved, seconded by Delegate Kimball, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 49 and Res. No. 13, RD. 1, providing for the use of nondiscriminatory nouns, pronouns and adjectives in the State Constitution, be adopted.

Delegate Hamilton rose to speak for the motion and stated:

"When the style committee first received Res. No. 13, we thought it would be relatively simple to implement. But the facts proved quite the contrary. In the first place, if we followed Res. No. 13, we should have ended up with a speckled Constitution in which those provisions which had come before the style committee had the corrections made but those which had not come before us retained the earlier form. On the other hand, the attorneys were a little uncomfortable with the idea of the style committee initiating a proposal without further authorization.

"However, we have come up with a solution. If you do approve this resolution you do certain things: (1) you determine that in fact you as a Convention want our Constitution to be stated in nondiscriminatory terms; (2) you specifically instruct the style committee to review the entire Constitution, and not just that which comes before it;

(3) you give the style committee the right to initiate a proposal which will be in effect the dilution of the third and fourth lines of Article XIV, Section 13, which says that whenever we use one pronoun we mean either sex, because that sentence will no longer be necessary. We have done one other thing. We were somewhat concerned about how this kind of a stylistic change would be presented to the voters. This is basically a submission and information problem, but I think it can be resolved. Looking back at the ballot used in 1968, there was a single style approval amendment, which the voters voted on. Thus, that one question could be put to the voters.

"Now, anticipating some objections, there are some dangers in this procedure, though they are minimal. This is unprecedented--for a style committee to ever initiate a proposal. However, I have no intention of trying to use this authority any place else. It is specifically limited to this one matter. I recommend that you vote in favor of the motion."

On being recognized by the Chair, Delegate Dyer spoke in favor of the resolution, noting the significance of the day, being the eve of the 58th anniversary of the 19th Amendment ratification which gave women the right to vote. She pointed out that women comprised over 50 percent of the population yet the State Constitution implied they had no place in government or as leaders. Observing that language was a reflection of society and that of the Constitution an affirmation of acceptance in the democratic system, she emphasized the need for the Convention to improve the language of the Constitution, as was being done all over the country. She then related how California successfully amended its constitution in 1974, adding that there had been no financial impact as a result, that the effect had been not in government finances but in the intangible social impact. She urged the delegates to support the resolution.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak in favor of the resolution, pointing out that, with over half the candidates for lieutenant governor being women, the present language would be particularly inappropriate should the next lieutenant governor be a woman.

At this time, Delegate Pulham rose to speak against the resolution, reluctantly as he was a member of the style committee. He pointed out that the resolution would make a substantive change to the Constitution, that they would be changing a portion originally worked on and accepted by another committee in the Convention and that this could set a precedent, with other delegates then by resolution changing sections that they disagreed with. Noting that the section being changed simply stated that the terms used applied to both sexes, he expressed surprise that there had been no resolution to include the "non-gender ... the third or fourth sex," and he advised of that possibility now.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 49 and Res. No. 13, RD. 1, was put by the Chair and carried.

ADJOURNMENT

At 5:22 p.m., on motion by Delegate Taira, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a.m. Saturday, August 26, 1978.

FORTY-FIRST DAY

Saturday, August 26, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Karen Iwamoto, delegate from the Ninth District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Hamilton, Hashimoto, Ontai and Sterling who were excused and Delegates Andrews, Blean, Eastvold, Hornick, Miller, Penebacker, Sasaki, Stegmaier, Takehara, Tamayori and Wurdeman who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Fortieth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

At this time the President informed the Convention that Res. No. 12 had not cleared the committee and inasmuch as there was only one committee meeting on Sunday and inasmuch as to carry it over to Monday could result in serious conflicts, it was the Chair's feeling to continue to schedule it. He stated there was no practical way to avoid the Sunday meeting and although the Chair had done everything possible to minimize work on Sunday, that the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections needed more time and Sunday was the only day they were able to get at it. He further stated that the report of the committee on the resolution would be presented the next week.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:42 a.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Taira and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Monday, August 28, 1978.

FORTY-SECOND DAY

Monday, August 28, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend John Britton of First Baptist Church of Aiea.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Hagino who was excused and Delegates Blean and Sutton who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Forty-First Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 53) informing the Convention that Com. Whole Rep. No. 6; Com. P. Nos. 6, RD. 1, and 5, RD. 2; Stand. Com. Rep. No. 54; Res. Nos. 15 and 16 and Minority Rep. Nos. 6, 7 and 8 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Tam, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 53 was adopted.

Delegate Takemoto, for the Committee on Rules, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 54) submitting a resolution (Res. No. 15) for introduction and recommending its adoption. She then requested that action be deferred to August 29, 1978.

There being no objection, action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 54 and Res. No. 15, amending Convention Rule 15, was deferred until Tuesday, August 29, 1978.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 16) relating to death with dignity was offered by Delegate Goodenow.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 16 to the Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry.

ORDER OF THE DAY THIRD READING

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 48, Com. P. No. 4, RD. 2, S. 1--RELATING TO THE PREAMBLE, GENERAL AND MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS, REVISION AND AMENDMENT:

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Stone, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 48 be adopted and Com. P. No. 4, RD. 2, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time, the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter and recognized Delegate Hamilton.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, explained that most of the changes were stylistic, for consistency with the balance of the document. In the Preamble, he pointed out, the words "Hawaii State motto" replaced "Hawaiian motto," and in Section 2 of Article XV the word "for" was inserted after "provide" in the sentence, "The legislature shall provide the number of delegates" etc. Otherwise, he noted, it might have been possible for the legislature to provide the delegates directly from the members of the legislature.

At 1: 40 p. m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 1: 44 p. m.

Delegate Barr then rose to speak against the motion, explaining that because there would be a roll-call vote he wanted to have on record his reasons for voting against. He then stated:

"I am well pleased with the work of the Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions, but I am still distressed by the amendments that we made in the Committee of the Whole. Most particularly, we were sold a new Preamble on the basis of its symbolic value. I note that we now have the motto in the Constitution twice. It certainly seems to me appropriate to include it in one place or the other, but not both.

"And secondly, I am very distressed that the magic phrase 'with an understanding heart toward all the peoples of the earth' has been changed. And I would like to suggest that understanding does include compassion and I don't see any value in our adding that word. I think it ruins one of the nicest phrases in any constitution anywhere. Therefore I'm going to vote no."

Delegate Hale also spoke against the motion, echoing the previous speaker's sentiments and adding that she couldn't see much reason for changing the Preamble in the first place.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 48 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 4, RD. 2, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 79 ayes, 10 noes and 13 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Blake, Campbell, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, Ellis, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Lacy, Ledward, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, Ontai, O'Toole, Penebacker, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Barnes, Barr, Burgess, Cabral, Dyer, Eastvold, Goodenow, Hale, Liu and Peterson voting no; and Delegates Blean, Chang, Calvin Ching, De Soto, DiBianco, Fernandes Salling, Hagino, Hino, Kono, Marion Lee, Nakamura, Sutton and Wurdeman being excused.

GENERAL ORDER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 51, Com. P. No. 9--RELATING TO THE EXECUTIVE:

On motion by Delegate Fukunaga, seconded by Delegate Okamura and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 51 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; and Com. P. No. 9, relating to the executive, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Wednesday, August 30, 1978.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 52, Com. P. No. 10--RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY:

On motion by Delegate Ikeda, seconded by Delegate Takitani and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 52 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; Sections

5 and 6 of Article V were recommended to be retained without amendment; and Com. P. No. 10, relating to the judiciary, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Wednesday, August 30, 1978.

SECOND READING

Com. Whole Rep. No. 6, Com. P. No. 6, RD. 1--RELATING TO EDUCATION:

Delegate Goodenow, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Teruo Ihara, for the Committee on Education, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 6) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 6 be adopted and Com. P. No. 6, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

At this time Delegate Hale requested a short recess.

At 1:52 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 1:55 p.m.

The President called for discussion and recognized Delegate Harris, who inquired of the chairman of the education committee as follows:

"It's my belief that the intent of the section on the board of education is to provide a representative to the board from each of the neighbor island counties. I have heard an interpretation by a member of the board that in fact it would be very possible for the neighbor islands as a group to receive only one representative on the board, and I would like the chairman of the education committee to clarify that if he would."

Delegate Teruo Ihara, in response, explained:

"Such is not contemplated as of this moment. As a matter of fact, I think I can foresee two board members from the Big Island because of the size of that island--for instance, east Hawaii and west Hawaii--rather than just one for all the neighbor islands. That would make it four for the outside islands, rather than three as envisioned under this proposal.

"Furthermore, as far as the Honolulu district is concerned, they've been talking about dividing the Honolulu district into two, east and west Honolulu. If that happens that will give the Island of Oahu five board members rather than four, as it is envisioned here."

The President called for further discussion and recognized Delegate Teruo Ihara, who spoke in favor of the motion as follows:

"After a long and informative debate on the issue, I feel that the Committee of the Whole arrived at very sound and positive amendments to Com. P. No. 6.

"Granting more power to the board of education and the board of regents was one of the major concerns of the education committee in its deliberations. Judging from the vote, a large majority of the delegates shared this concern. Section 3, dealing with the power of the board of education, received a very strong vote of confidence, and the board of regents' section received unanimous approval. I think the sentiment here is that the two boards, being entrusted with the unique function and responsibility of educating our citizens, should be given some control over their own internal management and operation. I am in complete agreement with this. I'd like to reiterate that the powers granted here will in no way undermine the checks and balances of the legislative and executive branches, but will facilitate smoother internal operations in the DOE and the university system.

"Another area of concern was the apportionment of the board of education. Many delegates and members of the public expressed concern about the lack of adequate representation by the counties of Maui and Kauai, as is the case with the present board. The proposed apportionment plan reaffirms the two at-large districts, the counties of Maui and Kauai, will be assured representation on the board through the provision that at least one member of the board reside in each of the school districts. This proposal, which is a good one, will enable the legislature to provide for more direct citizen accountability on the part of the board of education.

"I'm very proud to say that this proposal will also include very timely amendments to the education article. The prohibition against sex discrimination in the public schools will be a definite step forward in our efforts to provide for equal opportunity for both sexes.

"In addition, the provision for Hawaiian studies is a clear reaffirmation of our pride in our unique and precious Hawaiian heritage. The Hawaiian culture, history and language is the foundation upon which our present Hawaiian culture rests. Hawaii is the only center in the world where Hawaiian studies is really genuine. To this extent, we must take measures to preserve and promote its culture and history.

"In closing, I would like to extend my sincere appreciation to all the delegates for their cooperation and patience in reaching this milestone and I would urge my fellow delegates to vote for the passage of Com. P. No. 6 as amended. Thank you."

Delegate Yamashita then rose to speak in favor of Com. P. No. 6 as amended. Speaking for the proponents of the two-tiered, decentralized educational system, he expressed his appreciation in having had the opportunity to voice his belief. Noting that Com. P. No. 6 offered a definite improvement over the present system, he urged the delegates to support the work of the education committee.

Delegate Barnes then rose on a point of personal privilege. Referring to the last sentence in the first paragraph on page 5 of Com. Whole Rep. No. 6, which read: "[I]t was suggested that the Convention adopt a resolution strongly recommending that the legislature improve the library system," he inquired as to the status of that resolution.

Delegate Teruo Ihara responded that the Committee on Education would be meeting the following day to discuss the resolution and that they hoped to come up with a recommendation thereafter.

On a point of information, Delegate DiBianco asked the committee chairman how many members would have to be elected from Oahu to comply with the one-man, one-vote rule and how big the board would then become if each district were to have one representative.

Delegate Teruo Ihara explained that they were currently discussing having three neighbor island members on the board, which would mean at least 10 members from Oahu. The committee, he mentioned, felt that perhaps the board should be limited to between 13 and 19 members, so the total could be as many as 19 members. But he added, they were very cognizant of the one-man, one-vote principle.

There being no further discussion, Delegate Goodenow moved, seconded by Delegate Teruo Ihara, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 6 be adopted and Com. P. No. 6, RD. 1, pass Second Reading. The question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 8--RELATING TO THE LEGISLATURE:

Delegate Nishimoto moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 8, relating to the legislature, seconded by Delegate Hokama.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 8 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate McCall to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 2:10 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate McCall assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 5:02 p.m., Delegate McCall vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate McCall, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume its deliberations the following day.

ADJOURNMENT

At 5:05 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Barnes and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Tuesday, August 29, 1978.

FORTY-THIRD DAY

Tuesday, August 29, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by Dr. Curtis Askew of Olivet Baptist Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Ontai who was excused and Delegates Laura Ching, Chun, Hanaïke, Weatherwax and Wurdeman who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Forty-Second Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 55) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 56 through 59, Com. P. Nos. 11 through 13 and Res. No. 17 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Tam, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 55 was adopted.

The Clerk then announced that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 56 through 59 would be deferred to the end of the calendar.

ORDER OF THE DAY RE-REFERRAL OF RESOLUTION

The President re-referred Res. No. 16 from the Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry to the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections.

DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 54 (Res. No. 15) (Committee on Rules--Deferred from August 28, 1978):

Delegate Takemoto, for the Committee on Rules, moved for the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 54 and Res. No. 15, amending Convention Rule 15, seconded by Delegate Taira. Speaking for the motion, Delegate Takemoto stated:

"Your Committee on Rules is more than aware of the difficulties that have occurred due to confusion regarding many of the rules that govern this Convention. These rules, like so many parliamentary procedures that attempt to establish a framework in which orderly deliberations on significant issues are to take place, are subject to a variety of interpretations, depending very often on the semantics of key words, the juxtaposition of certain rules and the source of one's authority. And that is the very reason for the continued existence of your Committee on Rules at this time as an administrative standing committee, to attempt to clarify rules referred by the Convention and to consider changes that may better facilitate discussion at this Convention.

"One rule which has been a source of such confusion and was thus referred to your Committee on Rules is Convention Rule 15, which essentially states that a majority of the delegates present is all that is required to pass any resolution, motion or action, except where the Rules of the Convention provide for a greater number. As the rules now stand, only three convention rules provide for such a larger than majority vote: Rule 34, which relates to suspending, re-pealing or amending any convention rule; Rule 36, which relates to the closing of debate at any specified time, which, by the way, was erroneously referred to as relating to motions in Stand. Com. Rep. No. 54; and Rule 61, relating to the adoption of proposals on Third Reading.

"Hence, the motion of the previous question, which is not technically a motion to close debate even though it may substantially do so, is governed by Rule 15 as presently worded, and thus requires a simple majority vote of the delegates present to be carried in this Convention, even though a two-thirds majority vote is ordinarily required under Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised.

"However, in an attempt to bring the convention rules more in line with the conventional rules of parliamentary procedure and thus more justly serve the normal expectations of all your delegates, your Committee on Rules recommends that Rule 15 be amended to accommodate these common rules and ordinary expectations. Such an amendment, in thus clarifying the essence of Rule 15, should also prevent any future confusion and disagreement that may arise in this complex area of parliamentary law and thus incur serious deliberations of substantial issues instead of divisive debate on procedural protocol.

"For these reasons, I strongly urge that the Convention approve the recommendations of your Committee on Rules and adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 54 and Res. No. 15, which incorporates the proposed amendment of Rule 15. Thank you."

The President called for further discussion and recognized Delegate Peterson.

Delegate Peterson, speaking in favor of the motion, commended the Committee on Rules for their deliberations on the matter and for their recommendation, and urged the delegates to adopt the resolution.

There being no further discussion, the President announced that according to Rule 34 at least 52 votes would be required to amend the rule. He then put the question on the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 54 and Res. No. 15 amending Rule 15, and the motion was carried.

Delegate Hale then rose on a point of personal privilege. She commended the committee for the report but added she was somewhat disappointed that the report had only been based upon verbal direction to the committee to come up with a change in the rules. She remarked that on August 14 she had offered a series of suggestions to the rules, some of which would apply to resolutions, and that they were now up to Res. No. 15 and there had as yet been no report to the Convention, even though she had been directed to put it in resolution form before the committee would even consider it.

She then observed that there was another resolution before the house, Res. No. 12, concerning Sunday scheduling, and that some of the delegates from the neighbor islands would like to know what if anything the rules committee would be recommending so that plans for the Labor Day weekend could be made.

The President responded that no scheduling of either committee work or plenary session on Sundays was then anticipated.

Delegate Takemoto then rose to say that the Committee on Rules would be having another meeting, hopefully sometime the following week, on Delegate Hale's resolution. She explained that it had been difficult getting a quorum because of the decision-making that had occurred at the same time.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 8--RELATING TO THE LEGISLATURE:

On motion by Delegate Nishimoto, seconded by Delegate Chong and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 8, relating to the legislature.

The President appointed Delegate McCall to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:45 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate McCall assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 5:35 p.m., Delegate McCall vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate McCall, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 8 as amended, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate McCall, seconded by Delegate Nishimoto and carried, the oral report was adopted.

Com. Whole Rep. No. 7, Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1--RELATING TO LOCAL GOVERNMENT:

Delegate Pulham, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Sakima, for the Committee on Local Government, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 7) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 7 be adopted and Com. P. No. 7, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading. Delegate Sakima then requested that action be deferred.

There being no objection, action on Com. Whole Rep. No. 7 and Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, relating to local government, was deferred until Thursday, August 31, 1978.

At this time, the Clerk announced that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 56 through 59 had been printed and distributed.

Delegate De Soto, for the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs, then presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 56) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed and that Sections 2 and 3 of Article XI be retained without amendment; and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 11) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 56 and Com. P. No. 11, relating to Hawaiian affairs, on the calendar for further consideration on Thursday, August 31, 1978.

Delegate De Soto, for the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 57) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed, and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 12) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 57 and Com. P. No. 12, relating to Hawaiian education, on the calendar for further consideration on Thursday, August 31, 1978.

Delegate De Soto, for the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 58) submitting a resolution (Res. No. 17) for introduction and recommending its adoption. She then requested that action on it be deferred.

There being no objection, action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 58 and Res. No. 17, requesting the return of Kahoolawe to the State for use as a cultural sanctuary, was deferred until Saturday, September 2, 1978.

Delegate De Soto, for the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 59) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed, and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 13) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 59 and Com. P. No. 13, relating to Hawaiian affairs, on the calendar for further consideration on Thursday, August 31, 1978.

ADJOURNMENT

At 5:42 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Shinno and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Wednesday, August 30, 1978.

FORTY-FOURTH DAY

Wednesday, August 30, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Charles Jolly of Waikiki Baptist Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Ontai who was excused and Delegate Hornick who was absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Forty-Third Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 60) informing the Convention that Com. Whole Rep. No. 7; Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 61 and 62; Com. P. Nos. 3, S. 1, 5, RD. 2, S. 1, and 7, RD. 1; and Minority Rep. Nos. 9 and 10 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 60 was adopted.

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 61) recommending the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 61 and passage on Third Reading of Com. P. No. 3, S. 1.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 61 and Com. P. No. 3, S. 1, relating to the executive, on the calendar for Third Reading on Friday, September 1, 1978.

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 62) recommending the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 62 and passage on Third Reading of Com. P. No. 5, RD. 2, S. 1.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 62 and Com. P. No. 5, RD. 2, S. 1, relating to public health and welfare, on the calendar for Third Reading on Friday, September 1, 1978.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Com. P. No. 9--RELATING TO THE EXECUTIVE:

Delegate Fukunaga at this time informed the Convention that Proposal Nos. 428 and 791 had been inadvertently omitted from Stand. Com. Rep. No. 51. She then moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 9, relating to the executive, seconded by Delegate Tamayori.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 9 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Shinno to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:41 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Shinno assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:54 p.m., Delegate Shinno vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Shinno, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 9, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Shinno, seconded by Delegate Fukunaga and carried, the oral report was adopted.

At this time Delegate Kimball moved that Com. P. No. 9 pass Second Reading without amendment, seconded by Delegate Hale. Delegate Kimball stated that the Committee of the Whole had thoroughly considered Com. P. No. 9 and had voted favorably on it with no amendments, adding that its passage on Second Reading at this time would save the Convention both time and money.

Delegate Barr rose to register a strong protest, stating that it had been done before and that it was a mistake to do this again.

There being no further discussion, the motion was put by the Chair and carried.

Com. P. No. 10--RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY:

Delegate Ikeda moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 10, relating to the judiciary, seconded by Delegate Alcon.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 10 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Campbell to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:58 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Campbell assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 4:52 p.m., Delegate Campbell vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Campbell, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume its deliberations on Thursday, August 31, 1978.

ADJOURNMENT

At 5:02 p.m., on motion by Delegate Silva, seconded by Delegate Blake and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Thursday, August 31, 1978.

FORTY-FIFTH DAY

Thursday, August 31, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Marvin Bice of Central Baptist Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Ontai who was excused and Delegates Eastvold and Ellis who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Forty-Fourth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 63) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 64 and Res. Nos. 14, RD. 1, 18 and 19 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Tam, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 63 was adopted.

Delegate Teruo Ihara, for the Committee on Education, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 64) recommending the adoption of Res. No. 14, RD. 1, requesting the state legislature to review and redress the problems of the public libraries as part of the department of education.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 64 and Res. No. 14, RD. 1, on the calendar for further consideration on Friday, September 1, 1978.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTIONS

A resolution (Res. No. 18) requesting the legislature to amend the retirement system law was offered jointly by Delegates Wurdeman and Uyebara.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 18 to the Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions.

A resolution (Res. No. 19) requesting the legislature to refrain from enacting legislation applicable only to certain counties was offered jointly by Delegates Wurdeman and Campbell.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 19 to the Committee on Legislature.

At this time Delegate Laura Ching, on a point of personal privilege, read from an article in The Honolulu Advertiser with reference to the formation of the "Panasonic Club" by certain delegates. She stated that the reason given for forming the club was incorrect and that it was in no way tied in with political maneuvering at the Convention.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 56, Com. P. No. 11--RELATING TO HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS:

On motion by Delegate De Soto, seconded by Delegate Barr and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 56 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; Sections 2 and 3 of Article XI were recommended to be retained without amendment; and Com. P. No. 11, relating to Hawaiian affairs, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Saturday, September 2, 1978.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 57, Com. P. No. 12--RELATING TO HAWAIIAN EDUCATION:

On motion by Delegate De Soto, seconded by Delegate Barr and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 57 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; and Com. P. No. 12, relating to Hawaiian education, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Saturday, September 2, 1978.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 59, Com. P. No. 13--RELATING TO HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS:

On motion by Delegate De Soto, seconded by Delegate Barr and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 59 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; and Com. P. No. 13, relating to Hawaiian affairs, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Saturday, September 2, 1978.

DEFERRED MATTER

Com. Whole Rep. No. 7 (Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1) (Committee on Local Government--Deferred from August 29, 1978):

At this time Delegate Hale moved, seconded by Delegate DiBianco, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 7 be adopted and Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

The President responded that it was the Chair's intention to defer action until Friday, September 1, 1978, in view of the desire expressed by many delegates for more time to study the committee proposal.

Delegate Hale then stated that the proposal had been thoroughly discussed and debated in the Committee of the Whole and that the delegates, without undue pressure, had voted to recommend that it pass Second Reading. She further stated that since that time pressure from certain associations and groups had been exerted on some delegates but that since the issue had been fully debated, it should now be voted on in Second Reading.

Delegate Waihee moved that action on the matter be deferred to September 1, 1978, seconded by Delegate Kaapu.

Delegate Hale then moved, seconded by Delegate DiBianco, to postpone action only to the end of the calendar.

Delegate Kaapu rose to speak against the motion to postpone to the end of the calendar, stating that although he was in favor of giving the counties the powers that were contained in the proposal, he felt that a 24-hour delay by the Convention was necessary to allow more time for study by those who expressed concern. He further stated that he personally was under no pressure from anybody.

Delegate DiBianco then rose to speak in favor of the motion to postpone, stating that there was nothing in the report to indicate any reason for deferring to the next day. He stated that outside associations had had 2 months to express their fears over what the Committee on Local Government had proposed, and that the last-minute rush placed upon some of the delegates was no justification for postponing the matter another day.

At this time, Delegate Sutton inquired if it was correct that there wasn't much on the calendar for September 1, 1978. The Chair responded in the affirmative, noting that deferring action would have no effect on the calendar for the remainder of the week.

On a point of order, Delegate Hale requested that she be allowed to speak last to her motion to postpone.

Delegate Ledward, on a point of inquiry, asked if Delegate Waihee's motion had included a specific time. The President responded that it would be the normal convening time of 1:30 p.m. Delegate Ledward then stated that if Delegate Waihee had not specified a time, it would be a motion to postpone indefinitely, which is not amendable. The President repeated that he presumed the time to be the normal convening hour. Delegate Ledward then inquired of the Chair if that meant Delegate Waihee's motion was amendable even though he did not state a definite time. The Chair stated that it was his intention to take it up at the regular session although 1:30 wasn't mentioned per se.

Delegate Crozier then inquired as to whether Delegate Waihee had used the word "deferred" or "postponed." The Chair responded that he believed it was "deferred" but appealed to Delegate Waihee for confirmation.

The Chair then reminded the delegates that the question was simply whether to take up the matter that day or the next and that they should be able to decide.

Delegate Goodenow requested some explanation as to why the matter could not be taken up that day, whereupon Delegate Kaapu repeated that he wanted the committee proposal to pass by a strong majority but not before the issues were completely understood by all the body.

At 1:50 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 1:53 p.m.

At this time, Delegate Hale withdrew her motion for postponement to the end of the calendar. She then stated that she would vote for deferring the matter but that she was very disturbed about the lobbying behind closed doors that she had read in the newspaper, and that there had been a meeting last night in which neighbor island delegates were caused to find out where they stood. She stated that she was a neighbor island delegate, that she had not been invited to such a meeting, and that should there be caucuses between then and tomorrow she would appreciate being notified.

On a point of inquiry, Delegate Peterson inquired if this would set a precedent in that when other issues came before the body, they could also be postponed. The Chair responded that it was up to the body to decide what would be done.

The motion to defer action on Com. Whole Rep. No. 7 and Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, until September 1, 1978 was then put by the Chair and carried.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 10--RELATING TO THE JUDICIARY:

On motion by Delegate Ikeda, seconded by Delegate Calvin Ching and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 10, relating to the judiciary.

The President appointed Delegate Campbell to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:56 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Campbell assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 5:44 p.m., Delegate Campbell vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Campbell, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 10 as amended, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Ikeda, seconded by Delegate Calvin Ching and carried, the oral report was adopted.

The President complimented Delegate Campbell and Delegate Ikeda for their fine performances.

On a point of personal privilege, Delegate Calvin Ching rose to thank every member of the Committee on Judiciary, especially the chairman, Delegate Ikeda.

Delegate Hale then rose on a point of personal privilege to explain that her stand on any amendments during the Committee of the Whole had been taken in all honesty and that in no way should it be taken as a personal slight toward the chairman of the committee or any of the members.

The Chair voiced his assurance that she spoke for everyone who took a different position.

Delegate Ikeda rose on a point of personal privilege to thank the committee's vice-chairman for his statements and to ask for the continued cooperation and assistance of the members in furthering the work of the judiciary committee.

ADJOURNMENT

At 5:52 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Alcon and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Friday, September 1, 1978.

FORTY-SIXTH DAY

Friday, September 1, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Glenn Harada of the Honolulu Southern Baptist Association.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Ontai who was excused.

The President announced that the Journal of the Forty-Fifth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 65) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 66 and 67; Com. P. Nos. 8, RD. 1, 6, RD. 1, S. 1, and 14; and Com. Whole Rep. No. 8 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Taira and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 65 was adopted.

The Clerk then announced that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 66 and Com. P. No. 14 would be deferred until the end of the calendar, and that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 67 and Com. P. No. 6, RD. 1, S. 1, would be deferred until Tuesday, September 5, 1978.

At this time, Delegate Hale moved that the Convention declare Labor Day a holiday and that Committee of the Whole consideration of the Hawaiian affairs proposals be held on Tuesday, seconded by Delegate Cabral. Speaking for her motion, Delegate Hale stated:

"Those of us from the neighbor islands who are on certain committees have not been able to go home for three solid weeks because there have been session meetings on Saturdays and committee meetings on Sundays. And Labor Day, being a holiday, is going to be the only chance within the last three weeks that we'll be able to go home and be with our families. I would also like to suggest that on Tuesday there is nothing on the calendar except a session meeting and I understand that the Hawaiian affairs committee wanted their hearing at a time when the public could come, and therefore I'm suggesting that the public could come on Tuesday evening, and that this should be a valid reason.

"The other thing I'd like to point out is that those of us from the neighbor islands are going to find it very difficult to come back on the first plane on Labor Day. In fact, some of us may want to sit in at the airport with our Hawaiian brothers. But in any case, I would hate to cross a picket line or a demonstration line to get to the Constitutional Convention at this particular time. And therefore I think it's unreasonable for this body to insist that those of us who go home to the Big Island--and I understand, I've had word this morning, that there will be attempts to close the Kona airport as well as the Hilo airport. And in view of these facts, I humbly ask your consideration to make it easy for all of us to enjoy a Labor Day weekend with our families-- that we do not schedule this on Labor Day, that we take a much-needed rest, and hopefully we'll all come back with clear minds, clear consciences, and be able to conclude our deliberations with a greater spirit of cooperation. Thank you."

Delegate Silva then asked if the reason for the Labor Day session was to have four consecutive working days in order to get things out. The President confirmed this, adding that it would allow decking and procedural aspects to proceed.

Delegate Donald Ching rose to inquire if the matter could be deferred until the end of the calendar so it could be discussed with the chairman of the Hawaiian affairs committee, who was not present at that time. Delegate Hale agreed, adding that she had been unable to speak with the committee chairman, but she had discussed it with one of the vice-chairmen and that they were anxious to meet on Saturday. She remarked that they could just as easily meet on Tuesday night as there was nothing scheduled.

There being no objection, the matter was thereupon deferred until the end of the calendar.

ORDER OF THE DAY THIRD READING

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 61, Com. P. No. 3, S. 1--RELATING TO THE EXECUTIVE:

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Fukunaga, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 61 be adopted and Com. P. No. 3, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time, the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton rose and, speaking for the motion, explained that the only changes made in Com. P. No. 3 were comma deletions, changes to nondiscriminatory terms and consistency changes.

Delegate Hale, speaking against the motion, stated that she did not agree with the committee proposal on the lieutenant governor section, and Delegate O'Toole also voiced his objection for the same reason.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 61 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 3, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 83 ayes, 9 noes and 10 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Burgess, Campbell, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, Dyer, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Rachel Lee, Lewis, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Blean, Cabral, DiBianco, Eastvold, Hale, Liu, O'Toole, Peterson and Takitani voting no; and Delegates Chang, Chu, De Soto, Ellis, Hayashida, Ishikawa, Marion Lee, Marumoto, Ontai and Penebacker being excused.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 62, Com. P. No. 5, RD. 2, S. 1--RELATING TO PUBLIC HEALTH AND WELFARE:

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Fushikoshi, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 62 be adopted and Com. P. No. 5, RD. 2, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton rose and stated:

"As is noted on page 3 of the report, almost all of the changes here are simply stylistic changes in punctuation and the like. The only exception--we had to do a little research on the source of the quotation; neither Dr. Kenneth Emory nor Dr. Donald Mitchell could find that precise quotation anyplace so we have removed the quotation marks and substituted dashes to set it off from the balance, thereby remaining academically pure."

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 62 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 5, RD. 2, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 85 ayes, 8 noes and 9 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Blake, Blean, Campbell, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, Dyer, Eastvold, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Ledward, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Liu, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, O'Toole, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Barr, Burgess, Cabral, DiBianco, Hale, Lacy, Peterson and Wurdeman voting no; and Delegates Chang, De Soto, Ellis, Hayashida, Ishikawa, Marion Lee, Marumoto, Ontai and Penebacker being excused.

GENERAL ORDER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 64, Res. No. 14, RD. 1--REQUESTING THE STATE LEGISLATURE TO REVIEW AND REDRESS THE PROBLEMS OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARIES AS PART OF THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION:

Delegate Teruo Ihara, for the Committee on Education, moved for the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 64 and Res. No. 14, RD. 1, requesting that the state legislature review and redress the problems of the public libraries as part of the department of education, seconded by Delegate Takehara.

The President called for discussion and recognized Delegate Lacy, who rose to speak in favor of the motion. Indicating the "whereas" clauses in the resolution as referring to the problems, he noted that the debate had centered around not whether there was a problem but whether it should be addressed in the Constitution.

He then remarked that he and Delegate Goodenow were both encouraged to proceed with the recommendation that the legislature review and redress the problems of the public libraries, and that the resolution had received the unanimous support of the Committee on Education and deserved the same from the Convention.

Delegate Takemoto then spoke in favor of Res. No. 14, RD. 1, urging that the problems of the public libraries be addressed and constructive solutions instituted. Pointing out the concern conveyed by the resolution, that the purposes and functions of public libraries as centers of information for lifelong learning were distinct from the instructional services provided for children 5 to 18 by the department of education, she then emphasized that the needs would thus be different, and that as long as the libraries were a lesser part of the DOE their concerns would continue to be submerged, especially in the vital budget and personnel areas. If the problems were to be resolved, she observed, the real causes must be addressed and one solution could be the creation of an independent statewide system of public libraries.

Delegate Miller then rose to speak in favor of the resolution, emphasizing the fact that public libraries and school libraries were entirely different.

There being no further discussion, the question of the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 64 and Res. No. 14, RD. 1, was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At 2:00 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2:17 p.m.

DEFERRED MATTER

Com. Whole Rep. No. 7 (Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1) (Committee on Local Government--Deferred from August 31, 1978):

Delegate Pulham moved, seconded by Delegate Sakima, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 7 be adopted and Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

Discussion then being in order, Delegate Hale moved to amend Section 1 of Article VII, seconded by Delegate Wurdeman, to read:

The legislature shall create counties, and may create other political subdivisions within the State, and provide for the government thereof. Each political subdivision shall have [and exercise such powers as shall be conferred under general laws.] all the powers of government not denied by this constitution, general law or by its charter.

Speaking for her motion, Delegate Hale stated:

"I feel very strongly that our county governments have come of age and that it is time we recognize that the government closest to the people is the one in session 12 months of the year, and that we should give them the powers commensurate with the responsibilities they have. This general concept was asked by the Hawaii State Association of Counties, which is an organization that consists of all four counties of this State, and these powers were denied in a similar amendment in the Committee of the Whole.

"However, I feel that with more deliberation, with more thinking on the subject and the implications of real property taxation and other taxation powers, that perhaps the delegates could have another chance to register their opinions on county powers. And that's why I have introduced this amendment and I solicit your support."

Delegate Tam rose to speak against the motion, explaining that there was no clear delineation as to what would happen should a residual power clause such as this be placed in the Constitution. He observed that there would have to be a full going-over of all powers and functions in the State to determine which would be handled by the State and which by the counties.

Delegate Hale then pointed out that this was in fact the practice now, that the counties took over functions not specifically denied by general law, and that her amendment would merely formalize the situation.

There being no further discussion, the question was put by the Chair and the amendment failed to carry.

Delegate Hale then moved, seconded by Delegate Chu, to amend section 1 of Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, to read:

The taxing power shall be reserved to the State except so much thereof as may be delegated by the legislature to the political subdivisions; except that all functions, powers and duties relating to the taxation of real property shall be exercised exclusively by the counties, with the exception of the county of Kalawao and that the counties except the county of Kalawao, may levy a general excise tax at a rate of not more than one percent. The legislature shall have the power to apportion state revenues among the several political subdivisions.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Hale appealed to the delegates to consider the concept of home rule, that the counties, through the Hawaii State Association of Counties, had asked for this power to levy an excise tax at a rate of one percent.

Delegate Tam, speaking against the amendment, pointed out that the counties would have to be ready to take over all responsibilities within their boundaries in order to have this on the books, that with the general excise tax power the counties would have to be basically self-supporting. He added that he would not want to have to tell his constituents that he had had a hand in raising taxes without commensurate benefits.

Delegate Andrews then spoke against the amendment. He stated that, although he agreed with the philosophy, because of the State's very centralized form of government many of the functions that would come forth from an excise tax were with the State and an excise tax could therefore be a detriment to the counties at that time.

Delegate Hale then stated that the amendment said nothing about the counties being self-supporting in every way, that it merely allowed those counties that wanted it to have this power. She further stated that the amendment would have to be voted on by the people and then by the county before any taxes could be raised. Referring to her background as a supporter of home rule, she detailed her early participation in the State Association of Counties in Hawaii county.

There being no further discussion, the Chair put the question of the amendment to section 1 of Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, and the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Hale then moved, seconded by Delegate Wurdeman, to amend section 1 of Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, to read:

The taxing power shall be reserved to the State except so much thereof as may be delegated by the legislature to the political subdivisions; except that all functions, powers and duties relating to the taxation of real property shall be exercised exclusively by the counties, with the exception of the county of Kalawao and that the counties except the county of Kalawao, may levy a one percent tax on the use of hotel rooms. The legislature shall have the power to apportion state revenues among the several political subdivisions.

Delegate Hale then asked that all the delegates accept this amendment in the spirit in which it was offered. She observed that some of the counties seemed to be ready to stop their growth and discourage tourism by levying a tax on hotel rooms--although the County of Hawaii did not seem to be one--and that if the City and County of Honolulu did do this it could perhaps help those neighbor island counties that wanted tourism and would perhaps go after it. Expressing her strong feeling about the amendment, she explained that it could be a tool to direct and limit growth and that it would be up to the counties to decide whether to use it.

Delegate Andrews then rose to speak against the amendment, stating that although many might want this it should not be encouraged in the Constitution, and that placing it there could be construed as an attack on an important industry in Hawaii. He stated that a tax on hotel rooms should be the result of careful deliberation in a body like the legislature, and not encouraged in the Constitution.

Delegate Hamilton also spoke against the amendment, stating that he felt it would be ineffective, and if the counties wanted to limit growth there were other ways to do it. Referring to the abundance of research that indicated this was too imprecise an instrument to limit growth, he suggested that there might be more basis for this as a revenue source.

Delegate Lacy then observed that it might help to analyze the type of visitor coming to Hawaii, that rather than the wealthy those who were now coming to the Islands brought a set amount with them to spend, and if it were paid as a hotel tax it would go to the State. It would not, he emphasized, be spent in the industry supporting the tourist business, and in the end could hinder tourism and jobs in the State.

Delegate Hale, speaking for the amendment, emphasized that this would leave it up to the people to decide if they wanted a hotel room tax. She stated that since there was nothing within the power of the legislature it became a constitutional problem, and that this was in effect providing the people a referendum. She pointed out that the issue had been debated in the legislature, the county councils, throughout the newspapers and communities, yet the people had never been given a chance to vote on it. She further stated that if one fifth of every dollar spent on hotel rooms went to the counties, the counties could provide facilities for tourists and visitors as well as keep the Islands beautiful, safe and clean.

Delegate Wurdeman then rose to voice her support of the amendment.

At this time Delegate Penebacker requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining that there were ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion to amend section 1 of Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, failed to carry by a vote of 32 ayes, 65 noes and 5 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Barnes, Blean, Campbell, Laura Ching, Chu, Chun, Crozier, DiBianco, Eastvold, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Goodenow, Hale, Hanaike, Harris, Hoe, Hornick, Kono, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Odanaka, O'Toole, Penebacker, Sasaki, Souki, Sterling, Takehara, Takitani and Wurdeman voting aye; Delegates Andrews, Barnard, Barr, Blake, Burgess, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chung, de Costa, Dyer, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Okamura, Peterson, Pulham, Sakima, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyebara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Cabral, De Soto, Ellis, Funakoshi and Ontai being excused.

Delegate Kaito then moved to amend section 2 of Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, by deleting in its entirety the provision "Land Use: State and County," seconded by Delegate Sakima. Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Kaito stated:

"Mr. President, I rise to speak in favor of this amendment to delete this section which reads: 'Reclassification of land to urban use shall be subject to approval by ordinance by the county in which the land exists.'

"I submit that the proposed amendment is neither necessary nor an improvement over the existing statewide system of land use planning and regulation. Under the present land use law, the State, through the Land Use Commission, sets the broad pattern of land uses by classifying the entire State into agriculture, conservation, urban and rural districts. The county is made a participant in the decision-making process as all petitions for district changes before the LUC require input from the planning agency of the county in which the land exists.

"If the county concurs in the decision of the LUC, the county implements the decision through its detailed zoning and general plan mechanisms. If the county does not concur in the decision, it may choose not to effectuate the change in land districts by not providing specific zoning for it, or by not amending its general plan. Under the present system, the role of the State and the role of the county are clearly delineated: the State's actions are broad and general; the county implements land use within the district classifications. As such, the existing process already provides for final decision by the county but preserves the statewide approach to land use planning in Hawaii.

"Section 1 of Article X of the Constitution, dealing with conservation and development of resources, now provides: 'The legislature shall promote the conservation, development and utilization of agricultural resources, and fish, mineral, forest, water, land, game and other natural resources.'

"In consideration of this express mandate to the State, the proposed new section on land use raises an obvious inconsistency: on one hand the Constitution requires the state legislature to promote conservation, development and utilization of land resources, while on the other the proposed new section would severely limit that same authority. As I have previously indicated, the proposed new section can be construed as a means of overriding the powers of the State with respect to land use and land use planning and would make for a subrogation of powers assigned to the State.

"It is essential that authority for statewide land use policy be retained in the State in order to guide the future growth and manage the limited resources of the State. Hawaii's land use law has been hailed across the nation as a good example of the type of land use regulation needed at a state level to guide and manage growth. To give the counties the final say on decisions of the Land Use Commission when placing lands in the urban district could indeed lead to conflicts with the statewide comprehensive planning process.

"Whether the proposed new section on land use is 'good' or 'bad' must necessarily be measured in terms of its direct impact upon Hawaii's citizens. It is my belief that the proposal could inflate costs of land development, and therefore lead to higher prices for the consumer. By adding another layer of governmental review over land use decisions, the proposed new section would lengthen considerably the time required in making a decision to place lands in the urban district, as the Land Use Commission decision would then be contingent upon further approval by the county before the decision could be effectuated. In the case of housing, resort or commercial development, time means money, and having the county approve an action of the LUC means public hearings, and more time will be required before a decision is made and before zoning actions are initiated. Ultimately these higher costs mean higher prices for the consumer.

"In summary, the proposed new section does not improve upon the existing system of land use planning and regulation. It can be viewed as being inconsistent and contradictory to the power given to the State to conserve and develop land resources, and in the long term will likely be costly to the consumer. For these reasons, I solicit your support of this amendment to delete from Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, the proposed new section on land use."

Delegate Harris rose on a point of parliamentary procedure and stated that Delegate Kaito's amendment, having been voted down in the Committee of the Whole, was out of order at this time.

Delegate Kaito pointed out that this amendment was different in that it included the words "by ordinance." Delegate Crozier rose to concur.

At 2:57 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2:59 p.m.

The President explained that on checking with the parliamentarian, it was found to be possible in plenary session to amend action taken in the Committee of the Whole, and that therefore Delegate Kaito's amendment was in order.

Delegate Shon rose to speak against the amendment. He pointed out that there were many ways counties could resist urbanization, and that many of these were ministerial and required no public or county legislative participation. He submitted that particularly in the reclassification of land to urban, where there could be instances of an imposition on the county, it was not necessarily unwise to require that the county decide through its legislative body and with public participation. The provision, he stated, did not take away many state powers as it must still go to the Land Use Commission and then to the county for approval, and the county must go on record through passage of the ordinance and public hearings as being in favor of the change. He added that the provision required public participation, which was not necessary now.

Delegate Taira then spoke in support of the motion, emphasizing that as long as the counties had to put land designation changes in the general plan there had to be public input, and as long as the zoning laws had to be changed they had to hold public hearings. He further stated that when there was an urgent need to change agricultural or conservation land to urban, another layer of authority would only slow down the bureaucratic process and could be both very costly and very disastrous.

Delegate Hoe then spoke against the amendment, pointing out that the problem had always been protecting agricultural lands and that this provision would offer one more buffer in this protection. She stressed that this power should be given to the counties, which were much more involved in specific community planning, and that while the State should have overall planning policy controls, the specifics should be left to the counties.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Harris emphasized that the counties did not then have the power given in the provision, although it might appear so. He pointed out that the State had sole power through the Land Use Commission to designate all lands as agriculture, conservation, urban or rural. The counties, he noted, had a chance to testify at the hearings, and that was all they had. And the Land Use Commission, he added, had repeatedly made changes against the wishes of the counties. He related as an example the experience of the Kauai county planning department, which opposed the Land Use Commission's taking 51 acres of subdivision land on Kauai out of agriculture and putting it into urban, that although the county violently opposed it, the commission went ahead and did it anyway. He then discussed, in another instance, the county's opposition to rezoning 30 acres of agricultural land on Kauai, which the Land Use Commission wanted to urbanize into a shopping center, and noted that although the county opposed it the commission did it anyway.

Delegate Harris then reiterated that the counties at that time did not have the power to veto the Land Use Commission's decisions regarding the reclassification of agricultural and conservation land to urban. He further stated that the counties needed that power, that over the past 10 years prime agricultural lands continued to be urbanized, often in direct opposition to the county's wish, and that once land had been designated urban it was almost impossible to stop its development.

Delegate Kaapu then spoke in favor of the amendment, observing that in Honolulu land classified urban could not be developed until appropriately zoned, and that changing the boundaries would not by and of itself make development possible. He specified the requirements for development in the City and County of Honolulu and noted that the provision being deleted would be more of a redundancy than a control.

Delegate Sterling then rose to speak against the amendment. He pointed out that the Land Use Commission, by its rules and regulations, could initiate its own petition and that this reclassifying of agricultural land to urban on its own initiative had happened.

Speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Okamura maintained that the counties did have input and if they disagreed with the Land Use Commission they had the power to sue the commission. He offered as an example the disputed land-designation change in the Kawainui swamp development, in which the State and a number of conservation groups had won a partial victory by the court's ruling which put about a third of the disputed land into conservation protection, against the wishes of the Land Use Commission and the landowners.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak against the amendment, pointing out that the input required by the Land Use Commission was not the same as decision-making, and that deleting the provision would be taking the decision-making away from those responsible to the people for land use decisions. She further pointed out that deleting the provision would undermine the committee report and change the committee's original recommendations.

She then referred to a newspaper article about some 376 acres of eucalyptus forest above Hilo on the Island of Hawaii, owned by Mauna Kea Sugar Company, which had been zoned agricultural by the Land Use Commission when it should have been conservation and which was then rezoned to urban by the commission on its own initiative. She explained that the speculators who had convinced the commission to rezone it urban were then unable to get the development going as fast as they wanted as they were unable to subdivide it into 15,000-square-foot houselots, and Mauna Kea Sugar Company was now suing them to get the land back. The reason they were not able to subdivide, she then pointed out, was because the community rose up in protest. She further observed, "If there had been a chance that the county, by ordinance, could have said that they didn't want this land changed from agricultural to urban, I can assure you that in the year 1974 the county council would not have rezoned that land, not with the kind of protest that came up from the people of that area."

By taking from the county the power to determine whether it wanted urban expansion, she concluded, they would be putting this power completely back in the hands of the Land Use Commission, over which even the State didn't have control.

Delegate Hanaïke also spoke against the amendment. She observed that the problem with the Land Use Commission was that it had become a major rezoning board, although its main purpose was to set policy and guidelines for the State. Recounting commission activities during 1977, when the board considered four major land areas--West Beach, Kawainui, Mililani and Waiahole-Waikane--and rezoned three of them, she commented that it was only due to great public pressure from the community association that they hadn't rezoned Waiahole-Waikane also.

Delegate Hanaïke then pointed out that once the mechanism was started through the commission, it went directly to the county, where a great deal of pressure could be exerted to rezone. Noting that the Land Use Commission was an appointed board and therefore not accountable to the public, she observed that the commission was under a great deal of pressure and could become susceptible to a private landowner who wanted to develop his property. She concluded that the provision under discussion was really an additional safeguard so the public could be aware of, and perhaps participate in, the decision-making before it got to the county level.

Delegate Blean then rose to speak in opposition to the amendment, expressing his distress not only at what appeared to be a direct contradiction to the committee's original recommendation but also at the retraction of additional authority given to the counties. Citing the small percentages of land under county control on the Big Island and Maui, he noted that 96 percent of the land in his county was under the control of the Land Use Commission and the state board of natural resources, both appointive bodies, and that at no time did land use changes go through an elected body. How then, he questioned, could they plan and determine their own destiny if they couldn't even elect their own officials to deal with problems of land use.

Delegate Campbell spoke against the amendment and in support of the concept of giving the neighbor islands control over the urbanization of their own lands. Quoting from the standing committee report, she referred to the committee's recommendation that the counties have power in land use planning over lands within their own jurisdiction.

Delegate Hornick then rose to state that a quorum of the Committee on Environment, Agriculture, Conservation and Land had voted to support the land use provision being discussed. Commenting on an earlier statement, she noted that evidence indicated that when land was changed from agricultural to urban, there was great pressure to develop and that it was the ensuing speculation in great measure that drove the cost of housing up.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Souki pointed out that a county did not have to rezone land that had been changed from agricultural to urban by the Land Use Commission. He further stated that if the county did wish to rezone, it must have hearings to provide public input, but the fact that the county did not have to rezone reclassified land served as a protection against urban encroachment.

Delegate Wurdeman rose to speak against the amendment. She remarked that the Honolulu city council did under certain circumstances have a great deal of pressure put on it and cited the Gentry project on Oahu, in which the Land Use Commission upgraded 525 acres from agricultural to urban.

Delegate Chang then rose and confirmed that the environment committee had voted to support the local government committee's provision on land use, although he had voted against supporting it. Stating his own position and speaking in favor of the amendment, he explained that the function of the Land Use Commission was to classify land and that some of the classifications and the units controlling lands within the classifications included agricultural land, which was controlled by the department of agriculture, conservation land, controlled by the department of land and natural resources, and urban land, the controlling unit of which was the counties. Even though land might be classified urban by the Land Use Commission, he pointed out, urbanization need not take place since the county was the exclusive body to decide what use the land would be put to.

Delegate Tam, speaking for the amendment, pointed out that legal representatives of all the counties had been consulted and it was the consensus that the amendment was basically a duplication of what was already in the books. He noted that the words "by ordinance" indicated the county councils and that this was the same body that was already involved with lands zoned urban.

Delegate Chun then rose to speak against the amendment. Noting the general concern about rising real property taxes, he pointed out that the amendment concerned only one change in land use--to urban. He conceded that any change in zoning or classification would increase that land price as well as prices of adjoining parcels, and the small farmer next to a large development would have to bear the cost of increased property taxes. But, he added, the system should allow the county to come to the aid of those small farmers.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Kojima observed that if, as was stated, the counties already had a say in the development of property, then what the counties, through the amendment, were asking for was a second chance to withstand the pressure. And, he added, if they couldn't handle it the first time they didn't need a second chance.

Delegate Sterling then spoke against the amendment. He mentioned that he had been on the Hawaii county planning commission when the eucalyptus tree property mentioned by a previous delegate had been at issue, and that there had been many hearings. To emphasize the kind of power that the Land Use Commission had, he related that at that time the second term of the commission's chairman had expired and although he was ineligible for a third term, the law had been changed to allow him to continue to serve as chairman.

At this time Delegate Hale rose to express her surprise at the position changes of some of the delegates who had earlier supported the land use provision, pointing out that this amendment was counter to decisions made earlier in the local government committee and the Committee of the Whole. She then predicted that, based on the delegates who had spoken in support of it, the amendment would pass, and she contended that it made a farce of the committee system. Alluding, over objections, to pressures within the Convention, she then referred, in answer to the argument that the counties already had the power to zone, to the reality of the pressure exerted on politicians once land had been reclassified urban by the Land Use Commission.

On a point of order, Delegate Waihee rose to object to personal innuendos on the convention floor, remarking that there had been a great number of resubmitted amendments after the Committee of the Whole.

Delegate Shon, speaking against the amendment, voiced his agreement concerning the pressures to develop land reclassified urban by the Land Use Commission. He referred to a study done on the Land Use Commission which highlighted a case in which land investors were willing to gamble on the likelihood of the Land Use Commission urbanizing a property and the county going along with it, to such an extent that the land value increased nearly 2-1/2 times what it had been as agricultural--this even before it had been reclassified. This, he explained, indicated confidence first that the commission would urbanize and second that the county would go along, and he commented that this was not a rare occurrence.

Referring to the Island of Oahu with a potential population level of 1 million, he further pointed out that if the zoning already permitted by the county after urbanization were developed to its fullest, it could accommodate up to 3 million. This, he noted, indicated that the county not only agreed with the Land Use Commission's decisions but had gone overboard. Stressing the fact that land prices skyrocketed when investors were willing to gamble on Land Use Commission and county decisions, he again emphasized the tremendous pressures exerted on elected officials and warned of the likelihood of this also happening on the neighbor islands.

Delegate Shinno then rose to speak for the amendment, observing that in order to have uniform quality of land use throughout the State, the land use should be in the hands of the central government. As far as urban zoning, he noted, the counties had the last word and the direct control.

Speaking in opposition to the amendment, Delegate Miller remarked that she was from one of the densest areas on the Island, as far as poor zoning, overbuilding and abuses were concerned. She warned that other regions in the State could develop the same problems if the amendment wasn't defeated.

Delegate O'Toole also spoke against the amendment. Commenting on the power of the Land Use Commission, he noted that the commission was a quasi-judicial one with almost dictatorial powers, and that there was no check on it. He pointed out that the original provision had been designed to provide this check and that the amendment would remove it.

Delegate Kaapu then rose to speak on the question of land use and control. Noting that the counties had very little regard for the Land Use Commission, he questioned the mechanics of a provision that allowed the county councils to disapprove a boundary change when they were the very body that later would zone it. He then urged that control over Land Use Commission action be given to another body.

Alluding to the fear that overzoning could result in a population on Oahu of 3 million and to the desire that all further urbanization should be stopped, he then discussed the former zoning philosophy under which these lands had been zoned, which held that all lands that potentially could be developed were to be zoned urban, allowing persons who wished to develop them to do so. However, trusting to the market and the demand to provide the right amount of housing, he added, had not proved satisfactory, and for that reason the city council on Oahu had downzoned--and in fact placed a complete moratorium on--almost the entire central city until the development plan could be completed.

Stressing the importance of the development plan, he explained that it would indicate specifically where growth should be emphasized, where held back, the character of the city, what areas would be developed and in what order. And, he added, should the Land Use Commission change these boundaries so they no longer reflected the wishes of the county, the county would be under no obligation to go along with that rezoning.

Delegate DiBianco then rose to speak against the amendment and to clarify a misunderstanding by a previous speaker. The counties, he stated, did not have the zoning power alluded to previously since, once the Land Use Commission had made a reclassification, it was common practice for developers to purchase the urbanized land, invest heavily in planning or architectural fees and then, with this kind of an expenditure, go to court and force the city to rezone on the basis of their reliance upon the Land Use Commission's ruling.

Delegate Kaapu rose to inquire as to verification or specific instances of the type of rezoning lawsuit referred to. Delegate DiBianco, in response, stated that he knew of filings of such suits but couldn't give the results of any.

Delegate Goodenow, speaking against the amendment, urged the delegates to vote it down, reminding them that the counties had clearly voiced their desire to have control over their land. She further observed that the local government committee had supported this concept. Noting the references made to great pressures that affected decisions, she urged the delegates to consider first the growth and abilities of the counties and what they really wanted.

Delegate Liu, as a proponent of planning, spoke against the amendment, explaining that it violated the concept of coordination inferred in planning by taking away the fulcrum necessary to achieve balance between state and county concerns. He noted further that it removed public input from the planning process and placed the planning in the hands of those he termed "technocrats," who lacked the perception into human interaction which was the purpose of planning.

Delegate Harris then spoke against the amendment, advising that the State, through the Land Use Commission, had the sole power to designate land in the four categories. The counties, he contended, had no power and no official say in the matter, which power, he added, they desperately needed as it would act as a check on the wholesale urbanization done by the Land Use Commission over the last 15 years. Detailing this urbanization, he specified that over 36,000 acres of agricultural land had been urbanized by the Land Use Commission, often over the county's violent opposition.

As indicated in the committee report, Delegate Harris continued, the counties had requested this power. He further noted that allowing the commission to urbanize agricultural land caused contention between the county and the State, pitting one against the other and exerting great pressure on the county government. Tracing the progress of the provision, from committee through hearings to committee approval and Committee of the Whole approval, he emphasized that no new evidence had yet been presented and he urged the delegates to defeat the amendment.

Delegate Hironaka then questioned giving the counties approval of reclassification in addition to their zoning power. Referring to his experience as a realtor on Maui, he described his difficulties in trying to get county zoning on land already classified urban, and he questioned whether giving the additional reclassification power would actually make it more difficult for them to turn down zoning requests, and if without the amendment the counties would actually have more power.

There being no further discussion, the President put the question to amend Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, by deleting the land use provision in its entirety, whereupon Delegate Hale requested a roll-call vote.

Roll call being in order, the motion to amend Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, by deleting the land use provision was carried by a vote of 50 ayes, 40 noes and 12 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Andrews, Barnard, Blake, Burgess, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, de Costa, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hamilton, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Lewis, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Okamura, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Stone, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Anae, Barnes, Barr, Blean, Cabral, Campbell, Laura Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Crozier, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Fernandes Salling, Goodenow, Hale, Hanaike, Harris, Hoe, Hornick, Ikeda, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Nozaki, Odanaka, O'Toole, Peterson, Shon, Sterling, Sutton, Takitani, Wurdeman and Yamashita voting no; and Delegates Chung, De Soto, Ellis, Fujimoto, Funakoshi, Hagino, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hokama, McCall, Ontai and Pulham being excused.

At 4:20 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 4:30 p.m.

At this time Delegate Andrews moved, seconded by Delegate Sakima, to amend section 3 of Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, by substitution, the substituted section to read:

The amendment to Section 3 of Article VII shall take effect on the first day of July after two full calendar years have elapsed following the ratification of such amendment; provided that for a period of eleven years following such ratification, the policies and methods of assessing real property taxes shall be uniform throughout the State and shall be established by agreement of a majority of the political subdivisions. Each political subdivision shall enact such uniform policies and methods of assessment by ordinance before the effective date of this amendment and in the event the political subdivisions fail to enact such ordinances, the uniform policies and methods of assessment shall be established by general law. Any amendments to the uniform policies and methods of assessment established by the political subdivisions may only be made by agreement of a majority of the political subdivisions and enactment thereof by ordinance in each political subdivision. Real property tax exemptions and dedications of land for specific use for assessment at its value in such use as provided by law and in effect upon ratification of the amendment to Section 3 of Article VII shall be enacted by ordinance and shall not be eliminated or diminished for a period of eleven years following such ratification; provided that increases in such exemptions or the additions of new and further exemptions or dedications of lands may be established or granted only by agreement of a majority of the political subdivisions, and such increases or additions shall be enacted by ordinance in each political subdivision.

The President then called for amendments to the original committee proposal section before discussion of the substitute amendment.

Delegate Chun, on a point of information, asked if the movant could summarize and explain the intent of his amendment. In response, Delegate Andrews answered that the amendment was offered to subdue any fears resulting from the abrupt transfer of the real property tax functions to the counties. He further explained:

"Basically, going down some of the provisions: (1) On the transfer schedule--the deadline for the transfer is July 1, 1981. This provides 3 years for the orderly transfer of functions. This is the same as the deadline to come out of the Committee of the Whole. (2) On assessment policy--basically this amendment provides that the assessment policy shall be uniform among all four counties for 11 years. The counties must get together to decide on one set of policies and then each county must adopt the package by ordinance. If they fail to do this before July 1981, the legislature sets the policy. During the 11-year transition period, counties can change this policy but they must do it uniformly. (3) On exemptions--the amendment specifies that the counties must enact into county law all property tax exemptions which the State now provides; this includes dedication. Counties cannot diminish any exemption for the 11-year transition period. If they increase exemptions during this period, they can only do so if all four counties are uniform. Therefore, home exemptions for example would be no lower than the $12,000 now in law but could be increased if all counties act in unison.

"I believe these are the fears expressed by many delegates, and this would just bring about a longer transition period where the counties must share their maturity to act in these matters. And it allows during that 11-year period for the legislature to take a look at how the counties have acted. There are two ways in which they can decide if we are not acting in an adult or mature manner: one is by legislative amendment to the Constitution; or, I believe that--most likely in the next 11 years we will be having another constitutional convention, and this would be another way they could reassess the situation."

The President again called for amendments to the original section, and then to the substitute amendment. Delegate Hale then moved, seconded by Delegate Goodenow, to delete the word "eleven" throughout the amendment and insert the word "five."

Speaking for her amendment to the amendment, Delegate Hale pointed out that an 11-year period was unrealistic and that the amendment was actually saying there would be no real changes until the next constitutional convention. She explained that, as far as uniformity, this was supposedly what they had now, and that what they had been trying to give the counties was a tool by which they could solve their individual problems. And, she added, specifying that two out of three counties must agree and that the State would continue to assess made it impossible to do, and she suggested that a 5-year period would be a more reasonable and rational compromise.

Delegate Sterling, speaking in favor of the amendment to the amendment, questioned the actual time period, whereupon Delegate Andrews confirmed that the term "ratification" was intended to mean November 7, 1978.

Delegate Kaapu, speaking against the amendment to the amendment, explained that the purpose of the 11 years was to provide a period that would extend beyond the time when the next constitutional convention would convene, as this would be the body to review and assess the effectiveness of the amendment and make any changes that were necessary.

Delegate Hale, speaking again for her amendment to the amendment, pointed out that the legislature could consider a constitutional amendment and put it on the ballot at any time, so the 11-year period until the next convention was not necessary. Referring to the real property assessment procedure under the State, she described various properties on the Island of Hawaii, comparing the State's assessments for uniformity. Noting that with the 5-year period, appeals on unfair state assessments could be handled by the county councils much sooner, she urged the delegates to put responsibility back where the little people could get at it.

Delegate Waihee then inquired if the last sentence in the amendment wouldn't allow the county councils to take care of the type of inequity described by the previous speaker.

Delegate Tam, in response, confirmed that Delegate Andrews' amendment would provide for increases in exemptions. On a point of personal privilege, Delegate Hale noted that her reference had been to assessments rather than exemptions.

There being no further discussion, the question on the amendment to the amendment was put by the Chair and the motion failed. The President then called for further amendments to the substitute amendment and, there being none, recognized Delegate Tam.

Speaking in favor of Delegate Andrews' substitute amendment, Delegate Tam mentioned his initial difficulty in accepting it but realized that some delegates did have reservations about granting authority to the counties to handle all real property tax functions, feeling that in some way exemptions--especially for the elderly, the disabled, victims of leprosy, etc.--could be tampered with. He observed that the 11-year period would give assurance to these delegates, as well as those who felt that assessment policies would go all over the place once the counties had the power. Members of the county governments, he advised, had been consulted and this was not their intent, but it had been agreed, to assure those with reservations about uniform assessment policies, to allow the 11-year period to show that the counties could handle these functions in a proper manner and without abusing any of the powers.

Delegate Andrews then spoke in favor of the amendment, assuring that there was no intention of changing any of the functions. Referring to the fear that the counties would make changes that could drastically affect the people who should be protected, he pointed out that this was not the purpose of the counties wanting the property tax function. And, he concluded, the 11-year period should cause no concern as the functions would not be affected at all.

Delegate Blake rose to speak in favor of the amendment, noting that after speaking to the county representatives he couldn't see how the changes that would be made would be so abrupt as to disrupt the county or State. He then mentioned that he was surprised about the 11-year period, remarking that he didn't approve of it. However, he noted, the county representatives had stated that, as it was written, the counties would not hurt, and he urged the delegates to support the amendment.

Delegate Kaapu then rose to address the concerns of the delegates who felt that the proposal, and also the concept of home rule, had been watered down. At this time Delegate Goodenow, on a point of information, requested that the speaker include an explanation of the term "general law." In response, Delegate Kaapu explained that general law involved the legislature passing a law as it normally would and the governor either vetoing or signing it or allowing it to become law without his signature.

Noting that he had been happy with the original committee proposal giving the powers to the counties immediately, he then remarked that in the actual practice of home rule the powers would be no different had the amendment been considered previously or had the original proposal gone through. Its strength, he continued, came from the removal of fear, by specifying exactly in the amendment what could and could not be done. He then compared it to a lizard which when threatened sacrifices its tail to save its life, and observed that the counties would give up even less in that this compromise gave up only doubt and fear and made the concept of home rule palatable to those to whom it might not otherwise be. He further stated:

"In the case of exemptions, I doubt that there would have been any changes anyway for the reasons that the exemptions were given, and it would be unwise for whatever reason to take it away. The dedications and other provisions that are preserved here for 11 years were thought about and were given in order to preserve open space and to cause industries that would otherwise be threatened to survive, and certainly no county council would want to be responsible for changing that.

"Secondly, in the area of uniform assessment policies, the arrangement which probably would have been followed, and I'm sure will be followed if this goes through, would be for the counties to work together, and we would have done this anyway because it's logical. We'd like to use the same definitions, the same practices for arriving at the valuation of the property we're going to tax, and the same persons who will now do it under new supervision would probably have done it anyway, following the same professional procedures which they were taught and would be taught had they come from some other jurisdiction.

"Thirdly, in the matter of increasing the extension, this power is not being denied the counties. However, it requires that they consent mutually and adopt standard policies and practices, and I think that's only right also. So in terms of the fears, either imagined or real, if some of the things that one of the delegates mentioned the other day--things that might happen if the county councils were to lose their sanity--if these were to happen they could happen under the legislature even today, and some of them unfortunately have happened. It's much less likely to happen in the counties, and as a result of the passage of this amendment I think that the counties will exercise the full powers they would have exercised without it, and so those who would otherwise fear it will not, and for that reason I support the amendment."

Delegate Hamilton, on a point of information, inquired as to how, from the counties' point of view, this changed the present situation and what the change was. Delegate Tam, in response, explained that in terms of assessment ratios the counties themselves could now determine what they wanted and that they must keep them uniform, but at least now it was the counties themselves that were working on it and not the legislature.

Delegate Shon then rose to speak in favor of the amendment with some reservations. He commended all the delegates who had participated in the discussion and expressed confidence that a good number of them had read the State's real property tax law and acquired some understanding of the implications of any basic change in real property taxation. He then summarized:

"It does appear that the proposal will not terribly weaken our protection of agricultural land nor significantly alter policies toward other land. I believe that this is in the interest of every person in Hawaii, and in regard to some remarks that were made earlier I think that the future of agriculture goes far beyond the future of a particular group, a particular crop or a scale of operation. The future of agriculture is the future of open space, the preservation of land use options, the potential for promoting diversified agriculture in the future, and the need to increase our self-sufficiency. To those who compromised and to those whose foresight included some reaffirmation of our commitments to agricultural lands, I offer my warmest appreciation. My reservations still include the loss to the State of a major planning tool, primarily an area not yet clearly formulated. It also removes the State's paramount law in encouraging or discouraging new technology, as well as initiating newer provisions in the area of social policy. This is unfortunate but I feel we can live with it. Both sides have compromised, and I think that the compromise is very decent.

"The State still has some role and for those champions of home rule, in spite of any state powers, state laws, state plans, I think it is true that these powers will never negate the inherent character and independence of our neighbor islands. And those of you on the neighbor islands will always be in the position of the Chinese villager who, in ancient times, would smile to himself in appreciation of that age-old saying: 'The mountain is high, the emperor is far away.'"

Delegate Peterson then rose to speak in opposition to the amendment. Referring to his employment with Alexander & Baldwin, which might be considered a conflict of interest by some, he emphasized that the company didn't write his speeches and the thoughts expressed were his own. He then offered the following statement:

"I think one of the arguments used in favor of this amendment is that the counties would be able to prove their abilities to use these powers if they are given a chance to exercise them over the next 11 years. However, I do not believe the counties can prove their ability to be trusted as long as they are strictly controlled, as this proposal requires. Secondly, I think our present system of property taxes has been looked to as a model. Many places believe that we have an excellent system that has statewide assessment and some other valuable characteristics. One characteristic with which I am particularly pleased is the Florida plan of disclosure, which requires that any increases from the market value of property at the same time reduce the rate which the county taxes; when the market value increases, the rates have to be decreased by an equivalent amount. So if the county wants to raise more money, it has to increase the tax, which is a very straightforward way of increasing taxes.

"A third issue which hasn't been addressed this afternoon is the cost of assessing, collecting and appealing property taxes, which would be assumed by the counties. In the taxation and finance committee, there were several people who testified that the amount which would be shouldered by the counties would be $200,000 to $400,000 more, so they're assuming these additional costs but without receiving any additional freedoms, as I read this amendment.

"Another issue that has not been raised would be the third level of government, which would be instituted into the State if this amendment were accepted. Right now we have the state government, with the legislature and the governor and so forth; we also have the county government, which includes the mayor of each of the counties. But this proposal would provide a third level of government, a parliament of city councils, where the city councils would get together and decide policies of statewide concern, providing a third level of government, and we cannot foresee what kinds of decisions would be made in it.

"Another issue is that Oahu property tax laws would be hostage to the outer islands. One fourth of the State's population is on the neighbor islands, but they would have--by agreement of three of the four political subdivisions--the power to restrict property policies for the other three fourths of the population in the State, living on Oahu. So Oahu residents are not properly represented in this plan.

"In summary, this compromise has significantly more cost for the counties without significantly greater freedoms; it does not allow the residents of Oahu to be properly represented; it changes the present property tax system, which has some unique and very worthy characteristics; and it provides a third level of government, in which we cannot foresee what kinds of actions would be taken. And for these reasons I urge you to vote against this amendment."

Delegate Blean then rose to speak against the amendment, stating that while some said half a loaf was better than none he felt this was not half a loaf but a crumb, and that the counties were being made to sit up and beg. He added that he'd rather go home empty-handed and say he lost than go home with crumbs and say he went there to beg.

Delegate Andrews, speaking for the motion, pointed out that in the total property tax function there was more involved for the counties in the assessment function than just exemptions, that the counties had not been earning the interest on property tax prepayments or money in the bank before distribution. He referred the delegates to the Hawaii Revised Statutes for some of the other functions.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Crozier referred to the area of accountability as one of the main reasons to give the counties full control in the tax function, noting that in the existing situation the legislature and the counties both dealt with parts of the same product and each tended to blame the other for the tax problem. Instead of making one body accountable, he observed, the amendment created a new level of government, a council of counties, which could only magnify the problem of accountability. He added that if the amendment passed it would reaffirm his belief that standing committees were not necessary.

Delegate Sterling then spoke against the amendment, indicating his confusion in being expected to fear his elected councilmen yet trust an appointed body like the Land Use Commission.

Also speaking against the amendment, Delegate DiBianco pointed out that with the 11-year requirement there would probably be another constitutional convention before the county's taxing authority went into effect, and that because it had never been in effect that convention would probably make changes and the law never would go into effect. Therefore, he concluded, the counties were not even getting Delegate Blean's "crumb" but instead would get nothing, and they would have to wait 11 years to find out.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak against the amendment, observing that those who said there were powers the amendment gave to the counties but wouldn't specify what should define exactly what these powers were.

Delegate Villaverde, speaking for the amendment, made the following statement:

"In spite of overemphasis and slanting which a newspaper placed upon the delegates who felt responsible to the people as a whole in the State, I take exception to the claim that we were strongly pressured by lobbyists 'to weaken our stance on counties' taxation powers.'

"Contrary to this claim, I felt the need to receive overall input from all affected. Moreover, this kind of input contributes to a better representative form of government. We now will have counties more responsible to their people, as they are given time to put their efforts together with others to assess the problem areas of decentralization. We have a package that will be protective, fair and accommodating for all concerned.

"The severities in the limitation of land and its values are matters of concern. With this amendment, I feel the counties can now offer coordinated policies more democratically and more efficiently. As Lincoln said: 'Property is the fruit of labor: property is desirable; it is a positive good.'

"Our generation must consider that the system of private property is the most important guarantee of freedom, not only for those who own property but scarcely less for those who do not. We can't disregard fragile industries for the sake of a conceptual home rule. We must maintain some order of uniformity, and with this package we do. And this has been accomplished, I say again, without pressure; it was accomplished through an excellent deliberative process by those who were mindful of the problems.

"I would like to congratulate all who felt this awesome responsibility to make timely decisions. I therefore again urge my fellow delegates to support this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Cabral then spoke against the amendment as a matter of principle, comparing its effect on the work of the local government committee to an aspiring politician who was promised a high place in office if he would prostitute his life to gain it and who did.

Delegate Campbell also spoke against the amendment, observing that it would be a travesty of justice to allow it to become a reality, not so much for its contents as for the manner in which it had been accepted. Referring to the purpose for which the delegates had been elected, she remarked that if it had indeed been agreed to give the counties home rule then it should be given, so that they could exercise it responsibly and openly. She questioned how, if all the counties must agree on matters, the voice of 85 percent of the people would be heard in the assemblies.

Speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Burgess appealed to the delegates not to let their anger over the method affect the reason for the amendment, which was a good one. He noted that the amendment would give the counties substantially more immediately than they had now and referred to the areas of accountability, administration and the actual collection.

Delegate Waihee also spoke in favor, noting that the amendment was an indication of the body's ability to deliberate and reassess. He described the questioning that one delegate had done and how this had raised doubts, and the various groups that had raised the same concerns--one of these, he noted, being the uniformity of property taxation across the State. The present protections for the blind, the elderly and for agricultural lands, he added, had also been guaranteed for 11 years by the amendment.

Delegate Lacy then rose to ask if the counties could grant individual exemptions or if it would have to be in a class action through the three-fourths vote. Delegate Kaapu responded that if the exemption existed on the effective date of the amendment, it would continue for 11 years and would be available to anybody that met those criteria; if it was an additional exemption not in existence before the effective date, the counties by a majority vote could establish the new exemption under a standard practice.

Delegate Crozier, speaking against the amendment, observed that if the counties were not to have full control of their taxes, then the delegates should vote the amendment down and get back to the status quo. He then remarked: "One of the delegates commented that this amendment was not written under pressure. I totally believe that no pressure was involved in this. I think that it was written in the dark."

Delegate Alcon then rose to speak in support of the amendment, recalling the many attempts by committee members to revise or amend the original committee proposal. He then referred to outside pressures that were now being exerted and questioned where these groups had been when public hearings had been held, as well as the Committee of the Whole debate.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Souki pointed out that the counties would have additional new powers under the amendment, such as policy-making powers in the areas of assessments and exemptions. Although frozen for 11 years, he continued, there was nothing to preclude the counties from increasing the exemptions or adding more. Referring to the strong centralization of the State, he concluded that the mere releasing of these powers was a tremendous victory for the counties.

Delegate Kimball requested a definition of the term "uniform policies and methods of assessment" and asked what that entailed. In response, Delegate Sakima explained that if a county wanted to change the manner of handling by the tax office, three of the four counties had to agree on the new method.

Adding to this, Delegate Tam offered an example: using the current policy of assessing residential real property at 60 percent, he explained that if one county wanted to change it to 70 percent all the counties would first have to agree.

Delegate Kimball then requested a definition of "dedications of land," to which Delegate Sakima explained that current laws required that agricultural lands be dedicated for 10 years.

Delegate Kimball further questioned the amendment's use of the words "ratification" and "effective date of this amendment" and inquired as to the difference. Delegate Andrews responded that the effective date was specified as "two full calendar years" after the ratification, and what the amendment was saying was that the counties must adopt uniform policies by ordinance before July 1, 1981 or the legislature would do it for them by general law.

Delegate Hale, on affirming that this could be done if, within the 11 years, three of the four counties agreed, then stated:

"You're giving the power then to three of the four counties, and I would warn you people of the City and County of Honolulu--this means that the neighbor islands, with 15 percent of the population at the very most, are going to control your growth."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend section 3 of Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, by Delegate Andrews' substitute amendment was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Cabral requested a roll-call vote, and the Chair, on determining that there were ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion to amend section 3 of Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1, was carried by a vote of 79 ayes, 14 noes and 9 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Burgess, Cabral, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, de Costa, Dyer, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, O'Toole, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Blean, Campbell, Crozier, De Soto, DiBianco, Fernandes Salling, Goodenow, Hale, Hornick, Izu, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Peterson and Sterling voting no; and Delegates Eastvold, Ellis, Funakoshi, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hokama, Ontai, Pulham and Tamayori being excused.

Delegate Burgess at this time moved to reconsider the amendment deleting the land use provision, seconded by Delegate Harris.

Delegate Taira then questioned whether this was in order and requested a short recess.

At 6:00 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 6:02 p.m.

On ascertaining that Delegate Burgess had voted on the prevailing side, the Chair declared the motion in order and called for discussion.

Delegate Harris rose to speak in favor of the motion, reiterating the main points that had been made--that the counties did not have this power, that it was a power they needed and that it was also one they wanted. He then stated his belief that the decision made had been hasty and that the earlier votes on the issue had been based on merit and on facts.

Delegate Blake then voiced his support for reconsideration of the motion, as did Delegate Hale.

There being no further discussion, the motion to reconsider the amendment deleting the land use provision was put by the Chair and failed to carry. Delegate Harris then called for a division of the house and, by a vote of 36 ayes and 46 noes, the motion again failed to carry.

Delegate Alcon then rose and withdrew his amendment. There being no further amendments, the President called for discussion on Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1.

At this time, Delegate Hirata informed the Chair that he had a written statement and to expedite the proceedings he requested that his remarks against the committee proposal be entered in the Journal.

[The following is written testimony as submitted by Delegate Hirata.]

"Mr. President, permit me to preface my arguments with some remarks of personal privilege. I am extremely frustrated and angry that everybody and her brother has been using this forum for their particular special interests, including the counties, to try to get what they couldn't get passed across the street at the legislature. I resent this because I believe that a constitution should set forth the basic principles of the formal organization known as state government. This document should be short, concise and not cluttered with needlessly complicated formulas which will complicate this constitutional structure and not allow government to react with sufficient flexibility in times of crisis. I believe that each lawmaking body with its technical expertise is then responsible for making decisions and developing the specifics. I believe that our job here is to lay those cornerstones of our governmental system, not provide all of this specificity and detail. I believe that we are beginning to act worse than the state legislature which many here chastise as being nearsighted and bureaucratic.

"Hawaii has a centralized governmental system which is unique. We differ from most other political jurisdictions because of our specific and different needs as an island State. We also differ from most other political jurisdictions because we provide the majority of public services, including education, welfare and health. This form of centralized government allows us to provide more public services on a more equitable basis and of generally higher quality. This is why Hawaii is often envied and studied for its model system of government. On the other hand, our counties only assume primary responsibility for public safety, recreation and sanitation, unlike other mainland counties which are charged with responsibilities for education, welfare and health. Our state government spends over $670 billion, or more than 52 percent of the State's budget, on these services. We spent over $377 billion on education in fiscal year 1975 alone.

"Yet in terms of state and federal resources, the counties do already receive a lion's share of funds. For example, although they do not provide a significant amount of welfare and social services, they receive about 70 percent of the State's allocation of federal revenue-sharing monies, totaling about $18 million annually. The state government, on the other hand, receives only $9.1 million per annum, or 30 percent of federal revenue-sharing dollars for Hawaii, in spite of the fact that it provides many more services than the counties.

"At the same time, a local political subdivision continues to drain state resources by practicing the poor fiscal management policy of funding capital improvements on a cash-only basis. This has drained away precious and finite state dollar resources from other areas where these resources are more needed. This has also caused the State to incur considerably more bonded indebtedness. I have some great fears because of this. The additional power that we may vest with them demands better exercise of fiscal discretion.

"We have recently witnessed one of the most massive expressions of taxpayer frustration in the country, in California's recent elections. The average taxpayer, it appears, is fed up. He does not appear willing to bear or to understand the additional demands being placed upon him. The fine lines of distinction dividing state, city and federal taxes do not mean anything to him. For the average taxpayer, the bottom line is the number of dollars he or she cannot spend because it is being diverted to governmental coffers. Can we not see that those California taxpayers are saying, 'I'm mad as hell and I'm not going to take this anymore.' Can we not see that Hawaii might be close behind? In giving real property taxing powers to the counties, will the average taxpayer and property owner reap the benefits of this change? What difference will home rule make in the kind and quality of services provided the public?

"May I state for the record that I believe that the counties are 'coming of age.' I understand and sympathize with the cry for local accountability with concomitant responsibility. However, what we are attempting to do here can be much more appropriately dealt with through legislative action, where detrimental or unworkable solutions can be remedied and repealed much more responsively and simply than constitutional conventions held every decade. I have a hard time understanding the urgency to vest constitutional taxing powers with the counties.

"I think that some of us have started to lose sight of why we are here and the people we are supposed to be servicing. We are here to draft a constitution, not to write laws. Mahalo for your indulgence."

There being no further discussion, the motion that Com. P. No. 7, RD. 1 as amended, pass Second Reading and Com. Whole Rep. No. 7 be received and placed on file was put by the Chair and carried.

At this time, the Clerk advised the President that Com. Whole Rep. No. 8 and Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, relating to the legislature, and Stand. Com. Rep. No. 66 and Com. P. No. 14, relating to taxation and finance, were up for decking purposes. The Clerk then advised that there was a motion by Delegate Hale regarding the Labor Day schedule which had been deferred from earlier in the calendar. The President called for discussion, pending consultation with the chairman of the Hawaiian affairs committee, and recognized Delegate De Soto.

Delegate De Soto then rose to speak against the motion to postpone, requesting that the delegates follow the schedule so they could get on with the business at hand.

Delegate Hale then requested that they convene a little later in the morning to allow extra time for neighbor island delegates who would be returning. Delegate Haunani Ching assured the delegates that this could be worked out. She also pointed out that although Tuesday, September 5, looked like an unscheduled day, it had been left open deliberately as a protection should Second Reading on either the legislature or Hawaiian affairs proposal need extra time.

Delegate Waihee then requested a short recess to determine if accommodation could be made without taking a vote on the motion. Delegate Hale then withdrew her motion, whereupon the President confirmed that the starting time would be delayed until noon.

ADJOURNMENT

At 6:18 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Shinno and carried, the Convention adjourned until 12:00 noon Saturday, September 2, 1978.

FORTY-SEVENTH DAY

Saturday, September 2, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 12:00 noon.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Abraham Akaka of Kawaiahae Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Andrews, Hashimoto and Kojima who were excused and Delegates Donald Ching, Chu, Chun, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Hokama, Pulham, Takehara and Tamayori who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Forty-Sixth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 68) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 69 and Com. P. No. 15 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Tam, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 68 was adopted.

Delegate Weatherwax, for the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 69) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed, and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 15) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 69 and Com. P. No. 15, relating to the Bill of Rights, on the calendar for further consideration on Wednesday, September 6, 1978.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 20) amending Rules 24 and 32 of the Convention was offered by Delegate Les Ihara.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 20 to the Committee on Rules.

At this time, Delegate Cabral rose on a point of personal privilege and stated:

"Yesterday, the first of September, marked the first anniversary of my retirement from active duty as a member of the United States Armed Forces, after having served our country for over 22 years with honor, pride and distinction. As a member of the armed services, I took an oath of office and placed my life in support of the defense of the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic, that I would bear true faith and allegiance to the same without mental reservations or purposes of evasion, and that I would defend our country against tyranny, aggression or oppression.

"I say to you that until this day and beyond I have not, nor will I ever, relinquish that oath. More than once I have placed my life on the line to defend that oath and my belief in individual human rights, and I would do so again. That is how strongly I feel about my beliefs and that particular oath.

"As a member of this delegation, I also took a similar oath, as all of you did. Yesterday I also made some disparaging and mindful remarks, primarily to call the attention of this body, as I have often done in the past, to remind them of the commitment we made by our oath of office to serve the interests of the people of the State of Hawaii first and not special interest groups, which appear to have permeated a decisive influence upon this delegation for singular interests. My remarks yesterday were obviously disturbing to some members who interceded to cut off my address and thus stem the truth from being made public. Perhaps my remarks were not statesman-like and would be deserving of an apology.

"However, after sleeping on the matter overnight, I have come to the conclusion that the truth is always disturbing, especially to those who know they have broken a trust. To those who would want and expect an apology from me, I would simply say that my convictions in what I said yesterday are steadfast."

On being recognized by the Chair, Delegate Silva brought to the podium a bowl of fruit representing the unity of the people of Hawaii.

Delegate De Soto then offered ho'okupu in memory of Queen Lydia Kamakaeha Liliuokalani.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 58 (Res. No. 17) (Committee on Hawaiian Affairs--Deferred from August 29, 1978):

There being no objection, the President deferred action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 58 and Res. No. 17, requesting the return of Kahoolawe to the State for use as a cultural sanctuary, until completion of the Committee of the Whole consideration of Com. P. Nos. 11, 12 and 13.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 11--RELATING TO HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS:

Delegate De Soto moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 11, relating to Hawaiian affairs, seconded by Delegate Barr.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 11 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Blake to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 12:23 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Blake assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:45 p.m., Delegate Blake vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Blake, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 11 with no amendments, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Blake, seconded by Delegate De Soto and carried, the oral report was adopted.

The President thereupon placed Com. P. No. 11 on the calendar for Second Reading on Tuesday, September 5, 1978.

Com. P. No. 12--RELATING TO HAWAIIAN EDUCATION:

Delegate De Soto moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 12, relating to Hawaiian education, seconded by Delegate Barr.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 12 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Blake to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:50 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Blake assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 4:55 p.m., Delegate Blake vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Blake, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume its deliberations at that time.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate De Soto and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 12.

The President appointed Delegate Blake to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 4:57 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Blake assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 5:10 p.m., Delegate Blake vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Blake, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 12 with no amendments, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Blake, seconded by Delegate De Soto and carried, the oral report was adopted.

Com. P. No. 13--RELATING TO HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS:

Delegate De Soto moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 13, relating to Hawaiian affairs, seconded by Delegate Penebacker.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 13 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Blake to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 5:11 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Blake assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 6:04 p.m., Delegate Blake vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Blake, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 13 as amended, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Blake, seconded by Delegate De Soto and carried, the oral report was adopted.

The President thereupon placed Com. P. No. 13 on the calendar for Second Reading on Tuesday, September 5, 1978.

At this time, there being no objection, the President deferred action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 58 and Res. No. 17 until Thursday, September 7, 1978.

On being recognized by the Chair, Delegate De Soto rose on a point of personal privilege and stated:

"I want to extend thanks to those convention members who have stuck through what may appear to other members as a boring afternoon. This Convention, if it so desires to adopt these proposals set before it on behalf of the Hawaiian community, can go down in history as being the only elective body truly representative of the people throughout Hawaii, which gave any consideration that had meaningful and lasting impact on the native Hawaiian community.

"I am humble this day and very, very grateful for your indulgence and your support, in sight of the heavy pressure brought on by special interest groups. I want to say to you on behalf of the kupuna who have been here all day long and flown in from the outer islands, mahalo nui loa kakou."

The President then congratulated the chairman of the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs and all the members for their fine job, as well as the hardworking chairman of the Committee of the Whole, Delegate Blake.

ADJOURNMENT

At 6:12 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Monday, September 4, 1978.

FORTY-EIGHTH DAY

Monday, September 4, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Thomas H. Hamilton, delegate from the Eighth District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Kojima and Yoshimura who were excused and Delegates Barr, Blean, Cabral, DiBianco, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Hanaike, Hashimoto, Rachel Lee, Ontai, Penebacker and Sutton who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Forty-Seventh Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 70) informing the Convention that Com. Whole Rep. No. 9 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Tam and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 70 was adopted.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 66, Com. P. No. 14--RELATING TO TAXATION AND FINANCE:

On motion by Delegate Lewis, seconded by Delegate Takahashi and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 66 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; Section 1 of Article VI was recommended to be retained without amendment; and Com. P. No. 14, relating to taxation and finance, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Wednesday, September 6, 1978.

SECOND READING

Com. Whole Rep. No. 8, Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1--RELATING TO THE LEGISLATURE:

Delegate McCall, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Nishimoto, for the Committee on Legislature, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 8) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 8 be adopted and Com. P. No. 8, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

At this time the President announced that there were two amendments to be considered and recognized Delegate Stone.

Delegate Stone moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate Sasaki, which amended section 4 of Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, to read in part:

...Not later than the fortieth legislative day of the 1979 regular legislative session and every eight years thereafter, the commission shall submit to the legislature and the governor recommendations for a salary plan for members of the legislature, and then dissolve; provided that no salary recommended shall be for an amount less than seventeen thousand dollars a year....

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Stone made the following statement:

"While this proposed amendment may appear superfluous and/or intrusive because said Section 10 of Article III as amended on August 23, 1978 provided for a commission on legislative salary, I urge you to accept my proposed amendment because I believe it is important that this Convention go on record in support of a minimum annual salary of $17,000 for state legislators, as did a previous constitutional convention set forth in Section 3 of Article V for the judiciary--that the annual salaries may be prescribed by law but be no less than $28,000 for the chief justice, $27,000 for associate justices and $25,000 for circuit court judges. Today these salaries for all three levels of the judiciary are at least 40 percent higher.

"Another reason for this amendment is for this Constitutional Convention to let the electorate know that we believe our legislators are grossly undercompensated and that they are deserving of a salary to meet their basic cost-of-living needs, and to provide them a salary which will make them less dependent on persons outside their immediate family."

Delegate Donald Ching rose to speak against the amendment, mentioning that the legislative committee had considered a similar proposal setting forth a $17,000 salary and voted it down. Explaining that it was the reaction of the public that he was concerned about, he recalled that in 1968 the convention had recommended a $12,000 salary which was ratified, but subsequent to the passage there was quite a bit of public reaction. He then observed:

"In tracing the $12,000 salary from 1968, if the legislators felt that they were underpaid, they could have in the last years--especially in the last 8 years--taken the matter into their own hands and passed a bill making a raise possible for succeeding sessions of the legislature. This they failed to do, leaving it for action either by this Convention or, as was proposed in the committee proposal, by way of a legislative pay commission with negative or veto power by the legislature or the governor. I think that this is the safer way to go.

"Already the press has played it up by saying that this makes it easier for pay raises to be had by the legislature. This may or may not be so, depending on how the commission comes about. If we were to go along with the recommendations set forth in the proposed amendment, again the press might misconstrue it. Now this Convention is not dominated by legislators, as the '68 convention was. However, there are enough of us running for the legislature in the coming election that action such as this might be misconstrued. as innocent and well meaning as it might be by the proponent of this amendment. My recommendation to this Convention is that we not pass this amendment at this time."

Delegate Harris spoke against the amendment, mentioning that he was a candidate running for the legislature. He pointed out that the legislature was a part-time one and their existing $12,000 salary more than adequate, adding that it would be inappropriate for the Con Con to greatly increase that amount.

Noting that Delegate Lewis had been a member of the previous salary commission, Delegate Hale inquired as to what that commission's recommendation had been. Delegate Lewis responded that the recommendation had been $17,000 per annum, in 1975.

Delegate Hale then spoke in favor of the amendment, remarking that if the legislature was so fearful of public reaction that it could not accept the recommendation of a legally authorized salary commission, then a provision of this type would be a good thing for them. The amendment, she observed, offered an honest, open way to let the people know the minimum salary that they expected the commission to recommend. She further stated:

"Although this Convention is not dominated by legislators, supposedly, and 1968 was, in 1968 they really were more honest, because they put the $12,000 on the ballot. And I think that the confidence the people had in the 1968 constitutional convention was shown by their passing it. And the fact that out of 23 amendments they chose to vote down only one, the 18-year-old vote, shows that the people are discriminating and they do know what they're voting on. I say that if the people did not want their elected representatives to have at least $17,000, then they shouldn't have it. And this would be an indication to the salary commission to be set up, as to what the people really think.

"I feel that if the people do vote for these constitutional amendments, they will not vote against this particular proposal. They may vote against many others, but I see no basis on which they would vote against this proposal--if a commission that was designated to study this came out with this recommendation as being fair 3 years ago, it certainly is fair now. I believe the electorate is fair in its judgment. If we don't vote this in, I think we are really in the position of trying to pull the wool over the public's eyes, and for that reason they may vote down the whole constitutional package. I urge you to vote for this amendment. I think it's an excellent one."

Delegate Sterling spoke in favor of the amendment, explaining that although he could appreciate the concern of a previous speaker about unfavorable public reaction, he would go on the merits of the proposal. He then added that this had been considered by the commission when they came up with the recommendation.

Delegate Pulham, speaking against the motion, gave the following reasons for his opposition:

"Although the $17,000 may be fair and may have been the result of that commission's work, as a member of the legislative committee that put out the original proposal, in all honesty we did not do this research. Therefore, I don't see how we can pluck this particular figure out of the air, or take someone's word for it.

"Secondly, we built in that a number of things should be taken into consideration when this salary figure is being arrived at. All of these things we do not have before us; they have not been taken into consideration. Therefore this body, in all honesty, has no basis for plucking $17,000 out of the air and saying this is the minimum they should receive, much as they may or may not deserve it. I have just returned from spending time to get some much-needed rest, which I didn't get because I was answering constituents. One of the things they were upset about was that we went as far as we did in the legislative salary area. I certainly do not intend now to pluck this $17,000 figure out of the air and say, 'Here. This is what I want you to do.' There's no way that's going to make it, and there is no way I'm going to vote for it. Thank you."

Delegate Souki then moved to amend the amendment by changing the amount from $17,000 to $21,000 a year, seconded by Delegate Calvin Ching. Speaking for his amendment to the amendment, Delegate Souki explained:

"Some of the previous speakers have mentioned that there is no basis for an increase, because there was none in the committee. However, on a very general basis--and relatively simplistic but hopefully with some logic--since 1968 there has been a cost-of-living increase in the State of Hawaii of 77 percent. So you take the 77 percent, times $12,000, and come out with $21,000. In purchasing power, it provides no more dollars than in 1968; in fact, we've given them no increase.

"Also to be considered--the other legislative bodies in the State have given themselves, through commissions, salary increases. The respective county councils--most recently the Maui county council--all saw fit to give themselves a salary increase. The members of Congress gave themselves a salary increase 2 years ago. The legislature of Hawaii is the only one that somehow is prohibited from doing this. I would say that we have every right to provide them a salary commensurate with the work they do. Further, I would like to see this salary go beyond this $21,000. We speak of ethics, where the legislators should not be participating in outside activities--they shouldn't be working. That is all fine, but we can't expect them to stop by paying them a salary of $12,000 a year, or even $17,000 a year, when it costs a family on a lower level of income just to barely subsist in this State--and this is from the department of labor--$12,000 a year. That is barely to subsist. So, ladies and gentlemen, this is not an unreasonable amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Kaapu, speaking against the amendment, remarked that he did not dispute the figures cited by the movant, that in similar research he had found the $12,000 figure, calculated in today's dollars, to be close to $20,000. However, he pointed out, since this was the floor below which the commission wouldn't go, it should be somewhat lower than the actual figure to be proposed, and a $21,000 figure was too close to the estimate of the total amount they were to be paid. Acknowledging that from his own experience a $17,000 salary was barely adequate, he then observed:

"I think it's proper for the Constitutional Convention to consider the salary and rate of pay of legislators. It's very difficult for them to consider this themselves--and that's not the reason we ought to--but we should be concerned with the pay of all people who come under the Constitution, and we should set their salaries and the relative pay which they receive. It was unfortunate in 1968, I believe, that we set aside a fixed amount. We should have set a salary in relation to other salaries so that the legislative responsibilities would permit a pay that would be in relation to all others. I hope when the salary commission does study this matter, if this is passed by this Convention, that they will consider the recommendation of a moving salary rather than a fixed amount."

He then suggested that the floor option be put on the ballot as a separate provision from the salary commission as these were two distinct questions, and let the voters decide whether there should be a floor amount in the salary commission's consideration or even a salary commission at all.

Delegate Crozier then spoke against the amendment. He pointed out that while the original amendment dealt with a minimum rate, leaving some leeway for the commission to make adjustments, the amendment to the amendment would make this the actual rate, since the commission couldn't go much higher than that figure. This, he concluded, would take away from the purpose of the commission.

Delegate Souki, speaking last for his amendment, stated:

"I wish to advise the delegates here that the $21,000 was never meant to be the rate that we would want, but would merely be the minimum rate. Again I wish to impress upon the members here that it was arrived at with some logic. It merely provides for the same purchasing power provided in 1968. So it's not an unreasonable request. I would certainly hope that the commission in its wisdom would provide more than this $21,000."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend the amendment by changing the $17,000 salary to $21,000 was put by the Chair and the motion failed.

Speaking against the original amendment, Delegate Barnes explained that he simply felt the commission would come up with a similar amount and the $17,000 figure would be incorporated anyway. He then pointed out a possible conflict of interest for those delegates like himself who were candidates for the legislature, and he stated that he would not vote.

Delegate Stone, speaking for his amendment, observed:

"I look at our legislature as being the State's board of directors. I think our state board of directors is certainly worth more than $12,000 a year. I would like them to be comfortable with the compensation they get as members of the State's board of directors. Thank you."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 1 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Harris requested a roll-call vote the Chair, on determining fewer than ten seconds, declared roll call was not in order. The question was then put and the motion failed.

Delegate Laura Ching then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Kaapu, which amended Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, by adding a new section to Article III, to read:

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

Section . The legislature shall apply, in accordance with the provisions of Article V of the United States Constitution, for an unlimited national constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing amendments to the United States Constitution.

Delegate Laura Ching, speaking for her amendment, made the following statement:

"I'm proposing that this Constitutional Convention direct the legislature to apply to Congress for an unlimited national constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing amendments to the U.S. Constitution. This method of amending the Constitution is in accord with the provisions of Article V of the U.S. Constitution.

"Up to the present time, all amendments have been proposed by Congress and all but one have been ratified by the state legislature mode. The Twenty-First Amendment was ratified by conventions called in the various states. Although there has not been a national constitutional convention since 1787, there have been more than 300 applications from state legislatures over the past 184 years seeking such a convention. Every state at one time or another has petitioned Congress for a convention. These state applications have ranged from applications calling for a general convention to a convention dealing with a specific subject--for example, slavery, anti-polygamy, presidential tenure and repeal of prohibition.

"Despite an absence at the national level since 1787, conventions have been the preferred instrument for major revision of state constitutions. As one commentator on the state constitution-making process stated: 'The convention is purely American--widely tested and used.' There have been more than 200 conventions in the states, ranging from 15 in New Hampshire to 1 in 11 states. In a substantial majority of the states the convention is provided for in the state constitution; in the remainder it has been sanctioned by judicial interpretation and practice. According to Robert D. Adams, founder of Conservatives for a Constitutional Convention, in the past 14 years 46 of the 50 states have petitioned Congress for a convention in 138 separate petitions.

"James Madison gave these reasons for including Article V in the Constitution:

"That useful alterations [in the Constitution] will be suggested by experience, could not but be foreseen. It was requisite therefore that a mode for introducing them should be provided. The mode preferred by the Convention seems to be stamped with every mark of propriety. It guards equally against that extreme which would render the Constitution too mutable; and the extreme difficulty which might perpetuate its discovered faults. It moreover equally enables the general and the state governments to originate the amendment of errors as they may be pointed out by the experience on one side or on the other.'

"There are few articles of the Constitution as important to the continued viability of our government and nation as Article V.

"The Constitution was written by our founding fathers more than 200 years ago. Over the past 200 years our country has changed dramatically--socially, economically and politically. America is not the same today as it was 200 years ago, yet we are forced to live under a Constitution that reflects ideals and standards of the 18th century and not our 20th century.

"A constitution should reflect the values of the citizens it governs. A national constitutional convention is necessary to restructure the Constitution so that it will reflect social and economic conditions of the present day and age. Hawaii's Constitutional Convention is necessary, but even more necessary is a national constitutional convention.

"Some people fear that if the convention method of amending the U.S. Constitution were to be used, a dangerous and radical force would be unleashed into our system. This charge of radicalism does a disservice to the ability of the states and the people to act responsibly when dealing with the Constitution. Hawaii's 1978 constitutional convention is a fine example of how the citizens and the Con Con delegates can responsibly review and amend their Constitution.

"I believe that the United States Constitution should be amended so that our prosecutors and other law enforcement officers can more effectively combat crime. Therefore, we should consider revising the U.S. Constitution's Amendment IV, which protects people against unreasonable searches and seizures, and Amendment V, which prohibits deprivation of liberty without due process of law and guarantees a person against self-incrimination.

"These are merely a few of the amendments that I personally feel should be studied and perhaps changed. I am confident that comprehensive research and examination of all the constitutional provisions together with the amendments would result in many effective and responsible changes in our national Constitution. The effects of these changes would provide a better and more meaningful life for all the citizens of 20th century America. Therefore, I would urge each of my distinguished delegates to join with me in supporting this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Nishimoto then rose to speak against the amendment. He pointed out that the committee had received testimony from the American Civil Liberties Union and the ILWU opposing a national constitutional convention. These organizations, he advised, had indicated several areas of concern as being problematic. He then discussed the following considerations:

"A significant historical fact is that since the original Constitutional Convention in 1787, there has been no other such convention. This presents the problem of having no precedent with which to guide the convention's actions. Mr. Reinhard Mohr, executive director of the ACLU, said in his written testimony to the committee: 'The convention method has no precedent, is fraught with almost unimaginable difficulties and would require legislative, and probably judicial, resolution of numerous controversial constitutional questions before it could be implemented.' The business of holding a national constitutional convention is too serious to carry out in such a 'blind' manner.

"Another problem with a federal constitutional convention involves the various logistics necessary to accomplish the task. Questions regarding the number of delegates to be elected, the type of representation desired and the internal rules to be used must be dealt with. Assuming the presently required figures, it is conceivable that 34 states, or two thirds of the total, representing only 30 percent of the population, could call the convention; 26 states, a majority, representing only 16 percent of the population, could propose new amendments; and 38 states, or three fourths of the total, representing less than 40 percent of the population, could ratify them. It is easy to see that a gross underrepresentation of the people could occur under this system.

"Also, unlike 1787, modern-day conflicts and pressures render a national convention nearly impossible. Situations created by our urbanized industrial society are far too complex to provide equitable representation and attention to all issues. The formulation of a convention today would be handicapped. Membership would be made up mainly of political partisans representing either economic forces, racial or religious affiliates and party ideologies. Proceedings would be conducted under the intense glare of publicity, making conscientious decision-making difficult to accomplish. Further, the influence of big business and other political interests would permeate the process and alter the Constitution's language to their own benefit.

"I must also address the fact that this particular amendment calls for an open or 'unlimited' constitutional convention. This type of freedom prevents congressional control over the types of amendments to be submitted. The problem this presents is the potential for revolutionary, radical distortions to be made to the constitutional document. Professor Lawrence Tribe of Harvard University states: 'If and when a new convention is called, its potential for radical change will be hard to confine; there are numerous opinions about what such a convention could and could not do, but there are no precedents and there can be no confident answers.'

"Finally, a convention of state and national delegates would serve to bypass Congress and its nationalistic scope. State or district representatives would surely emphasize their own local desires and might fail to regard the overall ramifications such actions may hold upon the country. It seems that a national constitutional convention opens the avenue for unnecessary and possibly undesired changes. Amendments to our Constitution by Congress have been made by a system which has served well.

"Mr. President, my feeling is that this amendment calls for a convention of such widespread proportions as to be totally impractical in view of the representative and more than satisfactory system that our present Constitution has established. Furthermore, I believe that the State of Hawaii will not benefit from such a convention, in that our representation would be miniscule compared with that of other states. Therefore I urge the delegates to oppose this amendment."

Delegate Goodenow, speaking in favor of the amendment, suggested that the national convention should be on a nonpartisan basis and could be backed by such groups as the Daughters of the American Revolution, the Historical Society of Valley Forge, etc. Referring to business and union conventions, which seemed to produce benefits for society in general, she remarked that the Constitution was a most appropriate place for such benefits. She then observed: "I do think that the realism of today is change, constant change. I think this should be reviewed with that in mind and a nonpartisan group could do it very well."

Delegate Pulham then spoke in opposition to the amendment, voicing his agreement with the committee chairman. He then stated:

"My concern is that apparently we're using our State Constitution at this Convention to give the state legislature a one-time, one-shot order--in other words, you shall do this. What happens to this in the Constitution after that? The Constitution we're working on should not be a document which is alive today and dead tomorrow. What we put in here is hopefully for the next 10, 20, 200 years, and certainly nothing that is going to be dead the moment it's accomplished. Thank you."

Speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Hale commented:

"I want to know--who is afraid of change? Change is a basic fabric of our life. Change is something we have to adapt to. This Constitution seems dedicated to very little change. I don't see how you could think, being a member of this Constitutional Convention, that a national one is going to be so radical that they're going to do something we couldn't do here on a local level. Be that as it may, I think if change is necessary, so be it. There should probably be some restrictions written into this, and I don't think it's going to be a one-shot deal, as previously stated. I think it will probably be 10 years before we actually get a national constitutional convention, so the legislature can work on it every year for the next 10 years, and then if it's accomplished they can take it out of the Constitution. The taking out of one-shot deals, such as apportionment put in by the 1968 convention--I really don't see that that's an argument against it. Nor do I see the argument of change as being against it. Our country has changed a lot. Meanings in the Constitution have changed; the supreme court has found it necessary to put new meanings into the same words over these past 200 years.

"I think maybe it is a good time to sit down and reexamine our principles and where we're going. Whether minority or majority, I don't see that this makes much difference, just as long as we get equal input. I would also hope that this constitutional convention would be brought back not to the legislatures, as our constitutional changes presently are, but brought back to the people to vote upon. Then I think we could have some very dramatic changes in our society. I think it's an excellent idea."

Delegate Anae then spoke against the amendment, explaining:

"I feel that the constitutional convention idea on a national level is not a sound one because of the many changes that need to take place in the case of amendments from year to year. I also feel that the basic values contained in the federal Constitution are values that need to be nurtured, kept and preserved, for this is the basis on which this country was organized. I feel that we do have a vehicle today in which amendments can be proposed, and the federal Constitution can be changed without another national convention. I also feel, in order for our children to understand the basis on which this country was formulated, that our Constitution needs to remain as it is. Thank you."

Delegate Laura Ching then spoke for her amendment, stating:

"I would like to address Delegate Nishimoto's remarks on the representation that Hawaii would have. First of all, I think his argument is a little premature at this time. I feel that it would be up to Congress to formally approve a plan of representation for the various states. However, of the various plans that will assuredly be proposed--I am obviously against a one-person, one-vote theory, as Hawaii would literally have no representation when aligned against larger states--I would be more in favor of a senatorial kind of representation in which each state would be represented by the same number of people."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair and the motion failed.

The President then called for discussion on Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, and there being none, Delegate McCall moved, seconded by Delegate Nishimoto, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 8 be adopted and Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, pass Second Reading. The question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. Whole Rep. No. 9--RELATING TO THE EXECUTIVE:

Delegate Shinno, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Fukunaga, for the Committee on Executive, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 9) and recommended its adoption.

On motion by Delegate Shinno, seconded by Delegate Fukunaga and carried, Com. Whole Rep. No. 9 was adopted, Com. P. No. 9 having passed Second Reading on August 30, 1978.

At this time, Delegate Miller rose to make the following remarks concerning the Labor Day holiday:

"We all know that this is one of the important holidays. That august body of the United States Congress has convened only three times for Labor Day--in 1918, in 1942 in the midst of a world war, and once more in 1959, the latter for the dubious reason that they wished to adjourn permanently before the imminent arrival of Premier Khrushchev. You see, Khrushchev, as head of a government, had the diplomatic privilege of addressing Congress should they be in session when he arrived. So on Labor Day morning, Senator Wayne Morris gained the floor and chided the senators for dishonoring Labor Day. He engaged in filibustering and proceeded to read from a three-volume history of the labor movement. Senator Morris was unable to prevent the senate from conducting business that day, but he was able to embarrass the senate into passing a congratulatory resolution on behalf of the working men and women of America.

"Now, under the rules of this body, I will not be able to filibuster. However, I would like to comment a little more on Labor Day. Near the end of the 19th century in New York City, there was a young labor leader, the tenth child of an immigrant Irishman, who had begun his working life at the age of 11 in a piano and furniture factory. His name was Peter James MacGuire, and by 1882 he would become the leader of the Knights of Labor and founder and president of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters. During that year, MacGuire urged the central labor union of New York City to recognize the American labor movement. Said MacGuire: 'There are worthy holidays representing religious and military spirits but none representative of the industrial spirit, the great vital force of every nation.'

"Everyone was quick to agree and, on September 5, 1882, 10,000 workers marched in Union Square, New York. There was picnicking, fireworks and much political rhetoric. The actual date had no particular significance except that it was chosen because it fell approximately mid-way between the 4th of July and Thanksgiving, and this seemed a good time to celebrate a work holiday. The idea of a holiday paying homage to the dignity of honest work began to catch on. The first state to establish it by law was Oregon, in 1887; by 1893, 30 states honored Labor Day. On June 28, 1894, President Grover Cleveland declared the day a holiday for the District of Columbia. Now of course all 50 states observe it.

"Since organized labor is playing such a significant roll in whatever results from this Convention, I would like to make my own Labor Day tribute by quoting Daniel Webster. Said he:

'Labor is one of the great elements of society, the great substantive interest on which we all stand. Not feudal service or drudgery by one race of mankind subjected on account of their color by another, but labor that is intelligent, manly, independent, thinking and acting for itself, earning its own wages and turning those wages into capital, educating in childhood, maintaining worship, claiming the right of election franchise and helping to uphold the great fabric of the states. That is American labor and all my sympathies are with it....'

"I sincerely hope that when this Convention is concluded, the people of Hawaii will still feel as did Daniel Webster."

ADJOURNMENT

At 2:38 p. m. , on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:30 a. m. Tuesday, September 5, 1978.

FORTY-NINTH DAY

Tuesday, September 5, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Ned Brown of Pali View Baptist Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Kojima and Villaverde who were excused and Delegates Chung, Nakamura and Ontai who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Forty-Eighth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 71) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 72 and 73; Com. P. Nos. 9, S. 1, 10, RD. 1, 11, 12, 13, RD. 1, and 16; and Com. Whole Rep. Nos. 10 through 13 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 71 was adopted.

Delegate Weatherwax, for the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 72) recommending that the proposals enumerated in the report be filed, and submitting a committee proposal (Com. P. No. 16) for introduction and recommending its passage on First Reading.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 72 and Com. P. No. 16, relating to suffrage and elections, on the calendar for further consideration on Thursday, September 7, 1978.

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 73) recommending the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 73 and passage on Third Reading of Com. P. No. 9, S. 1.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 73 and Com. P. No. 9, S. 1, relating to the executive, on the calendar for Third Reading on Friday, September 8, 1978.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 67 (Com. P. No. 6, RD. 1, S. 1) (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 1, 1978):

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Teruo Ihara, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 67 be adopted and Com. P. No. 6, RD. 1, S. 1, relating to education, pass Third Reading.

The motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 67 and to pass on Third Reading Com.

P. No. 6, RD. 1, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 92 ayes, 2 noes and 8 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nishimoto, Odanaka, Okamura, O'Toole, Penebacker, Peterson, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates DiBianco and Hale voting no; and Delegates Chang, Chung, Kojima, Nakamura, Nozaki, Ontai, Takemoto and Villaverde being excused.

At 11:40 a. m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:43 a. m.

GENERAL ORDER

The Clerk announced that Com. Whole Rep. Nos. 10, 11, 12 and 13 were up for decking, and were placed on the calendar for Second Reading on Thursday, September 7, 1978.

Delegate De Soto then made the following speech:

"Mr. President:

"I rise to speak to a point of deep concern. I am gravely concerned about the activities that have occurred these last few days, with respect to the Hilo airport demonstration. More importantly, however, I am deeply concerned about how that activity is looked at by this Convention and the broader community.

"Mr. President, I believe the demonstration to have been an honest and genuine expression of the anxiety and frustrations that many of our native Hawaiian people face today. Our Hawaiian community by and large is the victim of injustices, past and present. We face many closed doors, and as a result many look ahead to an even more dismal future.

"Our children are pushed through the education system, without even achieving the ability to read and write. From here they go into the job market and are not able to compete because of these deficiencies. The ultimate then becomes either welfare or prison. I urge the delegates to please understand the Hawaiians' plight with an open heart and mind. The community of Hawaii must also understand and be ready to ratify the proposals that this Convention will submit to the electorate.

"Mr. President, Hawaii must respond to the needs of the native Hawaiians; the time has come. Never again will the opportunity be before us to help the native Hawaiians. Mahalo."

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:47 a. m. , on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi and carried, the Convention adjourned until 8:30 a. m. Wednesday, September 6, 1978.

FIFTIETH DAY

Wednesday, September 6, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 8:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by Rabbi Julius Nodel of Temple Emanu-El.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Eastvold who was absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Forty-Ninth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 74) informing the Convention that Res. No. 21 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 74 was adopted.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 21) amending Convention Rule 61 was offered by Delegate Campbell.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 21 to the Committee on Rules.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 69, Com. P. No. 15--RELATING TO THE BILL OF RIGHTS:

On motion by Delegate Weatherwax, seconded by Delegate Shinno and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 69 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed, and Com. P. No. 15, relating to the Bill of Rights, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Friday, September 8, 1978.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 14--RELATING TO TAXATION AND FINANCE:

Delegate Lewis moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 14, relating to taxation and finance, seconded by Delegate Takahashi.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 14 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Ishikawa to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 8:48 a.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Ishikawa assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 12:24 p.m., Delegate Ishikawa vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Ishikawa, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume deliberations later that day.

At 12:25 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 1:30 p.m.

On motion by Delegate Lewis, seconded by Delegate Alcon and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 14.

The President appointed Delegate Ishikawa to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:44 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Ishikawa assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 5:17 p.m., Delegate Ishikawa vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Ishikawa, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume deliberations later that day.

At 5:18 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 7:20 p.m.

On motion by Delegate Lewis, seconded by Delegate Takahashi and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 14.

The President appointed Delegate Ishikawa to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 7:24 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Ishikawa assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 10:40 p.m., Delegate Ishikawa vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Ishikawa, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume deliberations the following day.

ADJOURNMENT

At 10:42 p.m., on motion by Delegate Silva, seconded by Delegate Taira and carried, the Convention adjourned until 10:00 a.m. Thursday, September 7, 1978.

FIFTY-FIRST DAY

Thursday, September 7, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 10:00 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Larry S. Uyehara, delegate from the Seventeenth District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Donald Ching who was excused.

The President announced that the Journal of the Fiftieth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 75) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 76 and 77 and Com. P. Nos. 7, RD. 2, and 17 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Ledward, seconded by Delegate Alcon and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 75 was adopted.

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 76) recommending the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 76 and passage on Third Reading of Com. P. No. 7, RD. 2.

The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 76 and Com. P. No. 7, RD. 2, relating to local government, on the calendar for Third Reading on Saturday, September 9, 1978.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 58 (Res. No. 17) (Committee on Hawaiian Affairs--Deferred from September 2, 1978):

Delegate De Soto, for the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs, moved for the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 58 and Res. No. 17, requesting the return of Kahoolawe to the State for use as a cultural sanctuary, seconded by Delegate Alcon. On being recognized by the Chair, Delegate De Soto stated:

"Mr. President, like the Hawaiian people, very little was known about Kahoolawe. No real research, except for an inconclusive try by J. Gilbert McAllister in 1931, was done on Kahoolawe. Kahoolawe was historically regarded as one of Hawaii's major islands. It was said to be the home of the shark god and was later sought by Kamehameha the Great as booty in a negotiated peace settlement. Kealaikahiki Point, the legendary navigational point for long journeys into the South Pacific, is located on Kahoolawe. It was this point that the Hawaiians used along with others to form a navigational triangle for trips to Tahiti, New Zealand and other southerly areas.

"Recent archaeological findings indicate that Kahoolawe is studded with ko'a--fishing shrines, heiau--places of worship, house foundations and artifacts. There are also indications of a unique adz factory and numerous tools fashioned out of basaltic glass. In addition, glass factories appeared to thrive on Kahoolawe, and new evidence of dry-land crops like sweet potatoes was found. Of the 100 sites so far recorded, 96 are expected to qualify for the National Register. Leading authorities on Hawaiian history, such as Kenneth Emory in 1977, referred to Kahoolawe as 'worthless.'

"Mr. President, honorable members of this Convention, I submit that like the Hawaiian people, a rich, valuable historical past has been uncovered. Our own state archaeological team called Kahoolawe 'an archaeologist's dream come true.'

"I'd like to spend the rest of my life on Kahoolawe,' said Dr. Robert Hommon in 1977. Many people have called our sister island Kahoolawe barren, useless. But we have found water, we have been on the Island of Kahoolawe--and when I was there, I wished that all the people I love so dearly could experience her as I did.

"Mr. President, much of the culture in Hawaii for native Hawaiians is steeped in Kahoolawe. In coming full circle for native Hawaiians, we need Kahoolawe. We are not anti-military--many of our family have died in wars to protect the nation. I dare say that when our young people are trained for warfare in California, at Fort Ord and other areas, they come out loving their nation. But they love Kahoolawe, too. Kahoolawe is important to the Hawaiian people today. Many of us have differences of opinion, that's true. However, I feel that when Kahoolawe is ready to be returned to the State, the State should protect and refurbish Kahoolawe and restore those heiau, restore those fishing ko'a, so that our kupuna may be laid to rest in peace with themselves and with Kahoolawe. For this, Mr. President, I urge this delegation to adopt this resolution. Mahalo."

The President called for further discussion and recognized Delegate Campbell, who rose to speak in favor of the resolution. First explaining that her comments were motivated not only by her feelings but also by a rational evaluation of the facts and circumstances, she then addressed the problem of Kahoolawe.

Delegate Campbell stated that no issue was being taken with the fact that the island was under the complete authority of the U.S. navy at present, nor that the U.S. navy was using it as a needed bombing range. However, she continued, under the agreement allowing the island to be used by the U.S. navy, there were provisions for its eventual return to civilian use. She then stated that the question before the delegates was whether they believed this was the time to restore and return it to the State for use as a cultural, living sanctuary. The question, she continued, was whether they wished to balance the equity in favor of a regeneration of the roots of the Hawaiian culture and whether they wanted to do it now.

In making her decision, she stated, she had looked to the many Hawaiian people who had been willing to put themselves in jeopardy because they wanted to regain their culture by opening access to Kahoolawe, and she had also looked to the Hawaiian forebears who slept in the depths of the earth at Kahoolawe and wondered why it was necessary to drop bombs in order to insure peace. She further stated that she too would like to see the rubble turned to verdant green, that she too felt a commitment, felt the force of a unity and aloha that was at stake there, and that she believed the time had now come.

In concluding, Delegate Campbell quoted a contemporary American writer who grew up in the deep South where she saw many injustices against black people, Lillian Smith, who said before she died: "When the annals of the history of our generation are written, the villain will be not the purveyors of evil but those of us who knew what was right and did nothing about it." Pointing out that if the delegates knew what was right they should do something about it, she then urged the body to vote in favor of the resolution.

Delegate Sterling then rose to speak for the motion, urging delegates who had experienced the wonders of nature to vote for the resolution.

There being no further discussion, the question to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 58 and Res. No. 17 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

GENERAL ORDER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 72, Com. P. No. 16--RELATING TO SUFFRAGE AND ELECTIONS:

On motion by Delegate Haunani Ching, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 72 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed, and Com. P. No. 16, relating to suffrage and elections, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Monday, September 11, 1978.

At 10:25 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 10:30 a.m.

There being no objection, the President at this time deferred action on Com. Whole Rep. No. 10 and Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, relating to the judiciary, until Friday, September 8, 1978.

SECOND READING

Com. Whole Rep. No. 11, Com. P. No. 11--RELATING TO HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS:

Delegate Blake, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate De Soto, for the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 11) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 11 be adopted and Com. P. No. 11 pass Second Reading.

The President called for discussion and recognized Delegate Hale, who rose and made the following statement:

"I would just like to state that I'm going to have to, in good conscience, vote against this and I want to explain why. I really think that we are throwing the Hawaiian people to the wolves. I don't believe that the act which says in the Constitution that it shall be changed by the legislature is a matter that should be put before the people in a constitutional referendum. I don't think it's going to be possible, in terms of all the other things people will have to consider and vote upon, for them to rationally consider what we are doing here. I feel that this should be done in the form of a resolution--it should be done by the legislature and not be subject to the vote of the people.

"Although my heart goes out--my sympathies go out, and I am certainly in complete accord with all the things that are said here, I just don't think this is the proper vehicle. That is the reason I'm going to have to vote against it."

Delegate De Soto then rose to state:

"Mr. President, again we have history before us as native Hawaiian people. Does the previous speaker think that I would throw my own people to the wolves? We have history repeating itself when a non-native gives us sympathy, gives us the accolades that go along with sympathy, and doesn't want to do anything else.

"Mr. President, I'm sorry, but what your Committee on Hawaiian Affairs has prepared for consideration by the public--and I have strong faith in the public--requests that the State assume their fiduciary responsibilities, those responsibilities that they accepted as a condition of statehood. Many of the problems with our Hawaiian people have already been stated on this floor. Without money, without revamping of the system, the Hawaiian homes department and that program will fail miserably. So unless somebody here or in the world shows me how you eat sympathy, with or without salt, I strongly recommend that this Convention adopt Committee Proposal No. 11. Mahalo."

Delegate Silva, speaking in favor of the motion, urged the delegates to pass the proposal. It was, he stated, because of the system, the feeling of being part-Hawaiian, that this should be put out to the people, that "all the people, whatever color or creed, are Hawaiian, and they should be given the opportunity to vote for something that is a part of their culture, too."

Delegate Sterling then spoke in favor of the motion. He assured the delegates that everything in the proposal had been checked out legally, explaining that what had been done to the Hawaiians had been done legally, through laws that were passed by those in control, and that they wanted to play by the same rules and according to law.

Delegate Kaapu also spoke in favor of the motion. He observed that there could be no question as to the desirability of passing and submitting the proposal to the voters, pointing out that if it failed they would be no worse off than they were, but if it passed they would have made tremendous progress toward meeting the needs. Not to try to make that progress, he concluded, would be their only real fault.

Delegate Sutton, as a keiki o ka 'aina, also voiced his support of the proposal.

Delegate Burgess rose to speak against the motion, stating:

"No matter how just the cause or how strong the feeling and how meritorious or how beautiful the poetry, I believe that we are here as constitution-makers and not as legislators. This proposal is specific legislation and specifically requires the appropriation of moneys. We have not apparently investigated the cost--I have heard figures of $200 and $300 million to carry out the programs that are appropriated in this proposal--I refer specifically to page 2. I believe that we are venturing into an area beyond what we are supposed to do as delegates to this Convention. I therefore speak against it."

Delegate Crozier, speaking in favor of the proposal, remarked that the State had been given the power to help finance nuclear power plants for utility companies and big businesses coming here, and that if they could do this for them, they could do something for the Hawaiians.

Delegate DiBianco then rose to speak in favor of the proposal and to explain why he would be voting kanalua. He stated:

"I have somewhat the same problems that Delegates Burgess and Hale have with this proposal. I am confused by some of the language on page 2. I don't know how much money is involved here, and it troubles me. I don't know whether this Convention realizes the extent to which it is mandating the State to guarantee funds. I'm troubled by some of the language on page 7, whereby land owned by the United States cannot be transferred without the approval of the Hawaiian Homes Commission, granted in conjunction with the United States agency. It seems to me that that may very well be an unconstitutional provision, since no state can advise or control the transfer of lands owned by the United States government. For those reasons, though I do support the basic concept of the proposal, I cannot vote in the affirmative and will be voting kanalua."

Delegate Chung spoke in favor of the proposal. Acknowledging that the subject could be a very emotional one, he pointed out that he spoke on facts that were before him and then read the following from The Hawaii Ceded Land Trusts: Their Use and Misuse, (1st edition) by Mitsuo Uyehara:

"The real objective of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act of 1920 was achieved. Sugar interests obtained the lands they wanted, including the repeal of the 1,000-acre limitation clause. The native Hawaiians received the concept of rehabilitation, and we are still grappling with the real and true meaning of 'rehabilitation.' The rehabilitation concept could not work because the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act of 1920 was never intended to work; to be successful."

Noting that they had survived for over 59 years on it, Delegate Chung suggested that it was time to try something new and urged support of the proposal.

Delegate Blake then rose and urged all the delegates to support the proposal.

Delegate Hoe, speaking in support of the proposal, appealed to the delegates to submit it to the public rather than just debate whether it had a chance. Referring to the extensive studies and consultations carried out by the committee, she then expressed her agreement with Delegate Kaapu that the only wrong would be not to try.

Delegate Taira then spoke in favor of the proposal. As a member of the submission and information committee, he pointed out that the real challenge would be in making sure the true facts behind the Hawaiian affairs proposals were clearly available to the public in November so that all the proposals would be accepted and ratified.

As a former employee of the Department of Hawaiian Home Lands, Delegate Stegmaier also spoke in favor of the proposal and of how important the provisions in it would be for that department's progress.

There being no further discussion, Delegate Blake moved, seconded by Delegate De Soto, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 11 be adopted and Com. P. No. 11 pass Second Reading. The question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Com. Whole Rep. No. 12, Com. P. No. 12--RELATING TO HAWAIIAN EDUCATION:

At this time Delegate Blake, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate De Soto, for the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 12) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 12 be adopted and Com. P. No. 12 pass Second Reading.

The President then reviewed the order of the amendments to this proposal.

At 10:48 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 10:52 a.m.

At this time Delegate Ledward moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate De Soto, which amended section 1 of Com. P. No. 12, to read:

The State shall promote the study of Hawaiian culture, history, and language.

The State shall provide for a [comprehensive] Hawaiian education program, consisting of language, culture and history, [as part of the regular curriculum of] in the public schools. The use of community expertise shall be encouraged as a suitable and essential means in furtherance of the Hawaiian [language, culture and history] education program.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Ledward explained that the Hawaiian culture studies program was at that time part of the DOE's social studies curriculum and that like any other program it was only as good as the staff and the kind of pupils in the class. She pointed out that mandating implementation of a program did not guarantee its success, citing the 3-on-2 program as an example.

She then stated that she wholeheartedly agreed with the concept of the proposal but felt that the language was too restrictive, directing that only the public schools teach Hawaiian culture, language and history. All the people of Hawaii, not just the children, she stated, should have the opportunity of knowing about the Hawaiian culture. She then suggested that the State could accomplish this by utilizing all its resources, public and private--such as the state foundation of the arts, Bishop Museum, botanical, civic and Hawaiian organizations, the Chamber of Commerce, HVB, etc.--and most important, the people themselves.

The statement contained in the education committee proposal, Com. P. No. 6--that the State "promote the study of Hawaiian culture, history and language"--was, she noted, her own preference, having broader implication for a statewide education program. She then explained that the education and Hawaiian affairs committees had decided to combine efforts and incorporate the two proposal statements into one, which was Amendment No. 1.

Delegate Waihee then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, noting that it kept the original language and intent of the Hawaiian affairs proposal and added the language passed earlier in Com. P. No. 6. He explained that the State was now mandated, in addition to providing for a Hawaiian education program in the public schools and utilizing community resources for it, to promote the study of the Hawaiian language, history and culture in all phases of state activities.

Delegate Haunani Ching also spoke in favor of the amendment and observed that, as a part of the visitor industry and having worked for uniform Hawaiian studies within the school system, she was pleased to see it now would be implemented through all state activities.

Delegate Takehara, speaking in favor of the motion, observed that the amendment would focus on the continued need for Hawaiian studies and would enrich children's education as well as preserve the culture. Paraphrasing a thought by Larry Kimura, Hawaiian language instructor at the University of Hawaii, she reflected that the Hawaiian language, culture and history were like "fragile native plants struggling in the shadow of overbearing introduced trees." And, she noted, if inroads were to be made in this resurgence, they must encompass 200 years of deliberate and inadvertent obliteration of the soul and values of a nation.

Also speaking in favor, Delegate Villaverde congratulated the education committee and Delegate Ledward and observed that, having been silent in this area for a long time, it was now as much a privilege to be vocal as to be able to vote for the amendment.

Delegate Anae, speaking in favor, explained that, as a social studies teacher, he had seen colleagues assigned to teach Hawaiian studies and history with very meager backgrounds in these areas, and he urged support of the amendment and proposal that now mandated the State to train teachers and to use community expertise.

Delegate Uyehara, speaking for the amendment, voiced his approval of the "union" of the two committee proposals and hoped that it would "produce lots of aloha."

Delegate de Costa, also speaking for the motion, observed that although he had lived in Hawaii all his life, he had a limited facility in the Hawaiian language, noting: "I want my kids to grow up and be able to speak Hawaiian, and not the pilau words that I know."

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend Com. P. No. 12 by Amendment No. 1 was put by the Chair and carried.

Delegate Burgess then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Hale, which amended Com. P. No. 12 by deleting in its entirety section 4, which dealt with traditional and customary rights. Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Burgess reminded the delegates of his questioning in the Committee of the Whole as to the rights being granted by this provision, and that he had been assured this granted no new rights but merely reaffirmed rights already in the statutes. His inquiry as to the specific rights that were covered, he noted, had not yet been answered.

Since then, he stated, he had done a little research, which he discussed as follows:

"One of the sources that I used was Louis Cannelora's book, The Origin of Hawaii Land Titles and of the Rights of Native Tenants. In the summary of the law, which he has on page 45, he says this: 'The rights of tenants under both ancient custom and the laws of 1847 were abrogated and superseded by the adoption of the Hawaii Revised Statutes, Section 7-1.' That statute enumerates all the rights to which tenants are entitled, except for fishing rights. Indeed, definitions of the terms 'tenants,' 'native tenants' and hoa'aina are synonymous, and the term 'people' as used in Hawaii Revised Statutes, Section 7-1, is synonymous with the term 'tenants,' the effect of the parenthetical definition by the majority in McBryde v. Robinson of the words 'the people' as meaning owners of land.

"So my conclusion, and I believe the conclusion of Mr. Cannelora, is that the rights of tenants, as presently defined in Section 7-1 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes, is limited to owners of land--that means the kuleana owners within the ahupua'a. I believe that this provision in the proposed amendment to our Constitution changes that. I believe from reading the committee report that this provision goes beyond the law as it presently exists, and it would reaffirm and mandate the State to protect all rights which were traditionally exercised 'for subsistence, cultural and religious purposes, subject to the right of the State to regulate the same.' I believe, at least from the discussion I have heard on this proposal, it goes far beyond what most of us understand it to do."

Amending a constitution, he concluded, should be done carefully and without changing the law as it had come into existence over the last 150 or 200 years.

Delegate Sterling, speaking against the amendment, remarked that it was impossible for a foreigner to understand a cultural Hawaiian reference, that unless the Hawaiian culture was understood there could be no reference to it. Citing some examples of these rights, he then commented that they were seeking a legal solution to protect the unwritten cultural rights of a people.

Delegate Waihee then rose to speak against the amendment, stating that he did not understand what the movant meant or saw by the amendment. He then indicated what he saw in the committee proposal--that it would guarantee the rights in the statutes. As to guaranteeing more than that, he pointed out, there were certain checks and balances--such as that the burden of proof would be on the person wishing to assert a new right, and that the State would regulate the reasonable exercise of these rights.

Delegate Haunani Ching, speaking against the amendment, recalled the pleasant times she had had hiking at Sacred Falls as a child. She then expressed her chagrin, on taking her own children there, to discover that there was now a $1.50 charge to go up to the falls, and she voiced her regret that they must now pay to go to the mountains or the sea. Access to the mountains, she observed, should be free to all.

Delegate De Soto then spoke against the amendment, pointing out that Section 7-1 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes was the predecessor of the kuleana act, which intended that the rights be reserved to the maka'ainana. Referring to the Privy Council of 1848, she stressed that the intention was to protect the rights of the hoa'aina and the maka'ainana and preserve their lifestyle.

Delegate Kaapu, speaking against the amendment, referred to the early attempts of the first European arrivals in Hawaii to classify what they saw. He explained that the European forms, terminology and relationships which they overlaid upon the Hawaiians were not always very precise. He then continued:

"There was another attitude which was prevalent among those who came, and many of those who came from the United States later, to assist the Hawaiian people in uplifting their culture and to change their pagan ways. They also had the attitude that those things they found among the Hawaiians were somehow not as advanced or as acceptable as the forms they themselves had brought over from the United States or had inherited from Europe. They viewed the Hawaiians according to the patterns they had been taught and attempted to convey to the Hawaiians and instill in them these understandings and terminology.

"Now this was brought into the laws of Hawaii very early. A tale was related to me by a Bishop Estate trustee who is now the owner of a small piece of land in Nuuanu that was once part of a large holding. King Kamehameha III was confronted with a problem. The owner of the land, who had been given a grant by him, was a foreigner of the Hudson Bay Company, and he had upon his land many tenants. He had in his plans to displace these tenants and create some form of plantation. The tenants went to the king and petitioned him for help. The king turned to his chief justice and asked, 'Is this right? Can this be done? Can the tenants be displaced?' The concept of displacing tenants was alien to the king. And the chief justice said to him, 'Yes, your Majesty. In your grant of ownership of this land goes the right to displace the tenants.' This was not his understanding of what ownership meant; the king's understanding of ownership meant that he was responsible for seeing that the rights of his tenants were preserved. And this same misunderstanding seems to have pervaded the legal proceedings of the Islands and the actions taken later. Needless to say, in the instance of the story, the king was helpless to act within legal form, but he soon found some reason to declare the Hudson Bay representative persona non grata, and he left and never returned. I don't know what became of the tenants; I guess in later days they probably were displaced.

"However, this same problem, this same misunderstanding exists today in the interpretation of the legal terms which are sought to be given Hawaiian equivalents; that is, the Hawaiian terms that are translated into English equivalents cannot precisely convey the rights that were obtained by the Hawaiians. For this reason, I think that the proposal as it was set forth by the committee would seek to reestablish for those Hawaiians any rights which they once had which were never properly given up, so that in some future court of law or in some action of the legislature these can be better defined and made available today. The protections that Delegate Waihee set forth are more than reasonable, and I want to remind the delegates that when the lands were transferred to the United States by the provisional government, there was a clause in the Organic Act that said that all those rights and laws, pertaining to land laws, that existed in Hawaii prior to annexation would remain in effect until Congress otherwise legislated--and Congress has never legislated otherwise. Although there may be those who claim today that abrogation has been made by statutory action or that certain English terms are equivalent to Hawaiian terms, and that we must then be governed by them, I'm not persuaded by that argument, as I once might have been, because of the realization now that Hawaiian rights, whatever they were--although they may be dimly recalled--could still be reaffirmed. The original proposal does that."

Delegate Hoe then spoke against the amendment, emphasizing that no new rights were being created and referring to the statutes that recognized and supported Hawaiian rights. The basis of all of those, she continued, would be Section 1-1, in which English common law was declared to be the common law of the State "except as otherwise expressly provided...by Hawaiian judicial precedent, or established by Hawaiian usage." She then observed that the provision did not threaten, override or challenge other rights but merely sought to protect and reaffirm those rights that were threatened, challenged or eroded.

Delegate Barr, also speaking against the amendment, referred to the widespread belief in natural law, laws of relationships, to humans and to the land, that had been held by the people when the country was first founded, and noted with regret that faith had since decreased. He then pointed out that the provision was a minimum recognition of that natural order of things recognized by the Hawaiian culture, and he urged the delegates to give at least that much in respect for their belief in natural law.

Delegate Shon then rose to speak against the amendment, admitting that earlier his attitudes had been considerably different but that the committee, through its work, dedication and expertise, had given them all an education, and he urged the delegates to defeat the amendment.

Delegate Dennis Ihara, also speaking against the amendment, mentioned that in committee he had voiced the same concerns the movant did, but that research into the Hawaii Revised Statutes had convinced him that the intent of the statute was contained in the committee proposal.

Delegate Crozier then spoke against the amendment. He acknowledged that he too had had problems with rights, until he was referred to Section 2 of Article I of the Constitution. Quoting from this section on the rights of man, he then pointed out that with the rights there were going to be duties, adding, "They're going to have to work for what they get."

Also speaking against the amendment, Delegate Barnes urged the delegates to listen carefully to what they were hearing. He pointed out that the provision was a redefinition of the rights exercised for subsistence, cultural and religious purposes and that putting it into the Constitution would bring it closer to the meaning of the law, and he urged the delegates to listen and take the role of student rather than teacher.

Delegate Chung, speaking against the amendment, discussed some of the qualities and characteristics of Kamehameha I from which the basic rights of the Hawaiian people had evolved.

Also speaking against the amendment, Delegate Villaverde recounted various instances in which he had discovered recreation areas on the Big Island that had always been accessible in the past that were now fenced off and restricted, and he concluded that this could happen throughout the State if the amendment passed.

Delegate Hale then rose and inquired as to the rights being referred to, and if the provision would give Hawaiians the right to go to Sacred Falls.

Delegate Campbell, in response, suggested referring to the statute that had been discussed earlier, and added that she felt it revealed attorneys could differ in interpretation.

Delegate Hale in response indicated her awareness of the statute and explained that she didn't feel reading it would provide the answer. She then questioned how, if this was already law, areas could still be restricted, referring to the experiences of Delegates Villaverde and Haunani Ching. If that was what was being put in the Constitution, she added, why could they not do these things that were already guaranteed by the statutes.

Delegate Sutton rose to answer, noting that they referred specifically to customary and traditional rights exercised for subsistence, cultural and religious purposes, and that these must be proven rights, over a longer period of time than one generation.

Delegate Campbell then rose to state that she had reviewed Section 7-1 and that unless the term "people" meant "tenant" there seemed no purpose for the section at all. Quoting from the list of rights in the statute, she concluded that "unless the purpose of this statute is to show the rights of the tenants in contra distinction to the landlords', then there is no purpose for the statute."

Delegate Hale then rose to speak for the amendment, remarking that she had been waiting to learn and hear the facts but that as yet she had heard only emotion. She then stated:

"No one has really specified what rights we are talking about, except by reference to law. And if this law which has been in the books has not been effective, then I don't see any point in trying to fool the Hawaiian people by saying we are going to give them rights which are the same rights, and make it 'subject to the right of the State to regulate the same.' In other words, we are going right back to the legislature for these rights that are in the law that cannot be enforced right now, even though the law is on the books. If there are other rights that we are talking about, then I think they should be delineated."

There were certain rights, she further stated, that she was for, which were good for the Hawaiian people and for everybody, and if she knew what rights were referred to here she would be for the provision. But, she concluded, not knowing, she could not in good conscience vote for it.

Delegate Waihee rose to speak against the amendment, reiterating that the provision provided the vehicle for an individual to prove the existence of traditional rights and that if it met the burden of proof, the right would then become subject to the regulations of the State. He noted that, rather than being harmful to any group, it would be beneficial to the entire public, and that in a society of laws no law could be passed that would contradict other laws of the society or that would violate the fundamental rights of individuals.

Delegate Silva then rose and moved for the question. There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 12 by Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair and the motion failed.

At this time Delegate Takemoto rose to withdraw Amendment No. 4 on quieting title.

Delegate Fukunaga then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 3, seconded by Delegate Silva, which amended section 5 of Com. P. No. 12 on quieting title, to read:

No person shall be deprived of title to an estate or interest in real property by another person claiming actual, continuous, hostile, exclusive, open and notorious possession of such lands, except to real property of five acres or less. Such claim may be asserted in good faith by any person not more than once in twenty years.

Delegate Fukunaga, speaking for her amendment, made the following statement:

"Last Saturday, in our Committee of the Whole debates, we heard many delegates speak of how adverse possession had been used to deprive individuals of their land. The problem sought to be remedied by the Hawaiian affairs proposal is the problem of small kuleana or family-owned plots being adversely possessed by large corporations. Yet we all recognize that there are instances where abolishing adverse possession could work to the detriment of kuleana owners, where generations ago members of the family left the land, their descendants were unknown and there is no way to clear title to the land except by the use of the adverse possession doctrine. Thus, this amendment seeks to protect those small individual landowners who have residential lots and who need to have the mechanism of adverse possession to clear their title.

"The number of acres suggested in the amendment--5 acres--was chosen because, in the division of lands during the Mahele, kuleana lands--house lots and small agricultural lots--were almost always less than this acreage. This 5 acres was suggested by Jon Chinen, a respected authority on Hawaiian land law, as one that would adequately protect the interests of small landowners. The requirement that an adverse possession claim by one individual be asserted only once in 20 years is an added safety measure to insure that adverse possession is truly done in good faith. The length of time--20 years--is taken from the present adverse possession statute.

"Mr. President, I think that this amendment will protect kuleana lands and the small landowner and yet speaks to the same problem which the original proposal of the Hawaiian affairs committee sought to remedy. I urge my fellow delegates to support it. Thank you."

Delegate De Soto rose to speak in support of the amendment, observing that there had been many concerns about adverse possession--requests for its repeal, questions about its effect on title warrantors, etc. It could, she said, hurt a few people, who might in fact be Hawaiian, but it was impossible to take care of every individual complaint. She then pointed out that the amendment was strong enough, fair enough, addressed itself to good faith and would be equal for everyone.

Delegate Silva then spoke in favor of the amendment, explaining that he had wanted its complete removal but saw this as being satisfactory to both sides.

On a point of inquiry, Delegate Takemoto asked if the term "any person" in the amendment could legally mean a corporation as well as an individual. Delegate Waihee responded that under the Fourteenth Amendment of the U.S. Constitution corporations were granted the status of persons.

At 11:54 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 12:02 p.m.

Delegate DiBianco rose to speak in favor of the amendment, observing that in the past adverse possession laws had been used to take lands from the Hawaiian people. He had feared, he noted, that its abolishment might have an adverse effect from what they were trying to accomplish--namely, that it could result in taking lands away from Hawaiian people who had been adversely possessing their land for more than 20 years. The amendment, he said, cleared up part of that problem; for the small farmer and the person who had acquired his residential lot through adverse possession and wasn't trying to make a land grab but simply to establish his home on the land that had been his acreage for 20 years or more, this law would allow that land to become his legally. He then reminded the delegates that they were only submitting the question to the public, to let them decide whether adverse possession had outlived its usefulness in the State.

Delegate Burgess then spoke against the amendment, pointing out two bad effects it would have. First, he said, the language prohibited any person from ever acquiring an easement by prescription against any parcel of property which was over 5 acres. Mentioning their earlier discussion on customary and traditional rights of way, he pointed out that the language referred to an "interest in real property" and an easement by a path across one's property was an interest in real property. No one, he indicated, could be deprived of that right by another claiming "actual, continuous, hostile, exclusive, open and notorious possession," which were the elements of easement by prescription, and if adopted, this would therefore wipe out the right to acquire easement by prescription over somebody else's property, especially large parcels of property. He didn't think that that was what the delegates intended, he remarked, and he did not think it should be done.

Second, Delegate Burgess continued, it prohibited but did not cover property of 6 acres or more. There were many people, he noted, who had title and were the rightful owners of parcels larger than 5 acres, and they should be able to establish clear title to those properties by adverse possession. He then gave the following example:

"In 1976, the case of Apo v. Dillingham Investment Corporation was decided by the Hawaii supreme court. That involved land in, I believe, Milolii on the Big Island. The action was brought by Mr. and Mrs. Apo to quiet title to 4 parcels of land, alleging ownership by both deed and adverse possession. Dillingham Investment Corporation filed a counterclaim, also alleging ownership by deed and adverse possession. There was a long trial and the jury verdict was in favor of the Apos as to one substantial parcel. The Apos were adjudged the fee simple owners by legal title and adverse possession of all of grant 3079, except the portion owned by the Kawaauhaus. If this provision had been enacted before that case was decided, the Apos would have been completely unable ever to clear title to their property.

"I think that we should realize we cannot, in the short time we have had to study this problem--we have been here for almost 4 months and the time spent on this particular problem has been very little. Even with the able assistance of Jon Chinen, whom I know and respect very highly, it is not possible to come up with a satisfactory change in a doctrine of law which has been in existence for 300 or 400 years or more. This matter was submitted to the legislature in 1973. The legislature passed a bill which would address the very problems which have been brought out before this Convention. The bill had language requiring good faith before adverse possession could be exercised. That bill, after study by the governor, was vetoed. I don't think it's fair to say that the legislature has not responded to efforts to solve this problem, and I don't think it's fair to say that future efforts will not be productive. I do submit to you, though, that in the few hours that we've spent on the problem here in this Convention, I don't think that we should try and tamper with this law. The law of adverse possession is a good law. It's a fair law. It enables everyone, large and small, Hawaiian and non-Hawaiian, small companies and big companies, small corporations and big corporations, everyone who owns land--it enables them a fair way to clear the title to that property.

"Just one last comment. Someone said that people in this Convention have their 'aina because of adverse possession. That's quite true. Any property owner in the State of Hawaii, if you go back far enough, has his 'aina based on adverse possession. The great adverse possessor was Kamehameha I, because he acquired by conquest all the lands of Hawaii. The doctrine of adverse possession is a practical method of clearing title when your paper title is not clear. It simply says that if one person has lived on land for at least 20 years, claiming to be the owner of the land, exercising the rights of ownership and not acknowledging that anyone else owns it, then as a practical matter he is the owner. It's a good law. Please, ladies and gentlemen--I can appreciate your feelings, but please let us not make drastic changes and tamper with a law which is basically a good one. Thank you."

Delegate Waihee then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, mentioning that the argument that adverse possession was a fair way to clear title reminded him of the maxim: "The law forbids rich and poor alike to steal bread or to sleep under bridges. The law may look fair but only the poor need to steal bread." That, he stated, was what adverse possession was all about. Reviewing the hours of testimony on its abuses, he noted that they had also heard how a few small homeowners might now be learning the ropes and beginning to adverse possess back. The amendment, he noted, was an attempt to be sure those honest people were not cut off "in our zeal to get at the abusers in the system." In a sense, he added, they were saying that the poor should have a right to their bread, and the amendment dealt with stopping the abuses while allowing the small honest people a chance to clear title. He then pointed out:

"This amendment does not prohibit prescription, as we have heard it said. As far as Hawaiian access rights are concerned, that is based on an entirely different legal theory. The law still recognizes the legal basis for Hawaiian usage in custom. The fact is that this particular amendment will not stop prescription in general. What it will do is demand that the legislature develop a new, more humane way of gaining public access to the beach. It will also not stop any quiet title actions in general either, because all we're mandating is that the legislature find a new and more humane way to quiet title in Hawaii.

"Finally, I'd like to speak about what this provision would in effect accomplish. It will stop, in the State of Hawaii--both in the land court system and in the state system--any use of the adverse possession theory. The legislature must develop a new way for quieting title. It will not, however, cut off any judgment, unfortunately, that has already taken place, or cases now pending in the court; unfortunately, that kind of remedy is not in our power. But it will insure for the future of Hawaii that those who have more knowledge of the legal system will not use these tools to dispossess people from their land. So, Mr. President, I speak in favor of this amendment."

Delegate Chang, on a point of information, asked if an easement was an "interest in real property" as in the proposal. Delegate Burgess, in response, acknowledged that this was his understanding. He explained that where the public for many years had used a path across someone's private property, an easement by prescription permitted them to thereby acquire an interest in that property, and that interest was an easement over it.

Delegate Goodenow, on a point of information, asked if the amendment they had just passed would be in jeopardy if they passed this one. Delegate Waihee responded that the earlier amendment dealt with a different legal theory which established the rights of way that Hawaiians would be using on the basis of custom, usage, etc., which was recognized in Hawaii law. It would not, he declared, be destroyed by abolishing adverse possession. He then pointed out that an easement by prescription did not deprive a property owner of title but subjected the title to certain rights which the public would have. Abolishing adverse possession, he concluded, would not abolish easements by prescription because this would deprive someone of taking entire title, whereas an easement would not be taking title.

Delegate Kaapu then spoke in favor of the amendment. Referring to a statement about King Kamehameha I using the principle of adverse possession, he remarked on the many inaccuracies about Kamehameha, and stated that he wanted to correct this one. He then explained:

"The king did not take title to the land by conquest. He took dominion to the land. He was a sovereign, but under Hawaiian traditional law he no more owned the land than did anyone else. In fact, one of his successors, Kamehameha III, when he promulgated the first constitution, had a choice under the powers that might have existed in Europe, of putting in anything that he wished, as a sovereign. Instead he put in the phrase which states that King Kamehameha established the kingdom, and to him belonged the land from one end of the Island to the other. But he did not own the land. The land belonged to the people--and the people in common. That is the attitude that was expressed. He wasn't taking title. And I think it is wrong to use that type of argument in support of or against an amendment."

Delegate Goodenow then pointed out that the king had lived in a very different time from theirs, one in which there were no attorneys for interpretation, and she questioned the validity then and now as far as easements were concerned.

Delegate McCall rose to speak against the amendment, mentioning the many uses of the doctrine besides the actual court actions. He then reminded the delegates: "When you throw out a net to catch a big fish, if you're not careful you catch a lot of little ones."

Delegate DiBianco pointed out that in the Apo case this amendment would not have made it more difficult for the Apos to obtain title as their property was only 4 acres. It was the Mr. and Mrs. Apos, he noted, who were being protected by the amendment. He further observed that, according to the language in the amendment, prescriptive easements would still be allowed because a prescriptive easement did not take away somebody's title to land. A prescriptive easement, he explained, was simply a right of way and couldn't be handed down or sold.

There were, he continued, other legal concepts that could be used to protect access and still abolish the adverse possession law--for example, dedication and condemnation. He then pointed out that the language itself protected the rights of access because the word "person" used in the amendment did not mean the general public, and if adverse possession were abolished the public could still use the rights of way. It was, he repeated, up to the delegates to let the public decide whether to abolish adverse possession, and he urged passage of the amendment so they could have the chance.

Speaking against the amendment and for the original proposal, Delegate Sterling voiced his opposition to the doctrine of adverse possession, observing that it was introduced immediately after the Great Mahele "not to clear title but to steal it." The only solution, he declared, was to abolish adverse possession completely, forcing those who desired land to seek out the true owners and pay them if they wanted title. Tracing the legislative background of adverse possession, he recalled that the early legislature when these laws were passed was very controlled, and no Hawaiians or Orientals were allowed to vote.

At this time, Delegate Hale rose and expressed her confusion about the amendment. She asked if the laws of the State had been based on common law and judicial precedent. Delegate Campbell responded that the laws of Hawaii were based not only on common law-- which was judicial precedent, since common law constituted case law which had been handed down and involved judicial decision and precedent--but also on codification of the laws by way of statutes.

Delegate Hale then asked if adverse possession were in fact a statute, one that had been adopted by the legislature and not ruled unconstitutional.

Delegate Burgess, in response, explained:

"The law of adverse possession is partially in statute and partially in case law. The statute portion is a statute of limitations. It limits the time within which a person can bring an action to claim an interest in land to 20 years. The elements of adverse possession are not defined in the statutes; those are by case law which was worked out over the years since Hawaii land first went into private ownership, which was at the time of the Mahele."

Delegate Hale then asked if any other state had abolished adverse possession in its constitution. Delegate Burgess answered that he believed the law of adverse possession applied in all states, as well as in England and probably other nations, and he knew of no state that had ever abolished it in a constitution. Some statutes, he added, specifically required it of the state, and a limited number had provisions such as that attempted in 1973, which the legislature passed but the governor vetoed.

Delegate Sterling then rose and quoted from the California Law Review: "Doctrines developed in other jurisdictions that the state is trying to limit the application of adverse possession have not been adopted in Hawaii." He noted that two referrals in the article gave the case numbers the information had been taken from. Other jurisdictions, he concluded, had made similar attempts to stop this.

Delegate Takemoto rose to speak against the amendment, for two reasons. First, she explained, it would apparently still allow large corporations to take through adverse possession if the property were under 5 acres and would not protect small landowners. Her second reason, she said, concerned the person who owned less than 5 acres, who often would have few resources to pay court expenses, attorneys' fees, etc. and might end up selling his home in order to pay, thus ultimately losing the land in any case.

Delegate Harris then spoke in favor of the amendment. Expanding on the fish analogy used earlier, he suggested that the careful fisherman carefully chose the mesh size of his net, thus catching only the big fish and avoiding the small ones. And that, he concluded, was just what the amendment did.

Delegate Hale, speaking against the amendment, commented that it had been hastily considered. She explained:

"It has not had the proper committee concern of public hearings. It was done, I think, primarily in reaction to an amendment that I offered in the Committee of the Whole to abolish the whole concept of adverse possession. Though I do appreciate the efforts of the committee to take care of some of the concerns I brought up, I really don't think that this is the way to do it.

"I think this is a statutory matter, and some of the delegates-- in fact most of the delegates speaking for this--on other proposals have reaffirmed their faith in our legislature time and time again. I would like to see this faith believed in, and put this back in the hands of the legislature that made the adverse possession law in the first place. They are the ones to do something about it. It is a very complex problem, and I don't think we can sweep it under the rug and forget about it. It will haunt us. I think it will probably be one of the reasons that all the amendments will be voted down, specifically the whole section on Hawaiian rights. I would hate to have that happen for something that is really not going to help anyone. Therefore, I shall vote against this amendment."

Delegate De Soto then rose to speak for the amendment. She stated that the provision on traditional and customary rights would not be affected by this amendment because utilization of ancient trails as access would not be acquired necessarily by prescription or adverse possession. Such trails, she explained, had been and would be established by ancient custom and by usage. Noting that the amendment addressed the concerns of many delegates, she remarked that her only problem with it was that it didn't address the practice of some attorneys of taking land as payment in order to quiet title.

Delegate Haunani Ching rose to speak for the amendment and to disclose a possible conflict that she had. She then related her family's experiences in an attempted theft of their kuleana property, describing the various proceedings they had had to go through. She observed that passage of this amendment would benefit her and her family.

Delegate Chang then announced, with regard to his earlier stated concern about easements by prescription, that he had consulted various attorneys and was satisfied that the amendment would not affect easements by prescription.

At this time Delegate Burgess rose to respond to some of the points made by delegates. He stated:

"King Kamehameha I, as king and conqueror, was recognized by Hawaiian law as the sole owner of all the soil of the Islands. Another point that was raised, in Apo v. Dillingham Investment Corporation--that the case only involved 4 acres. The number of acres doesn't show in the title and if the delegate who stated it has more information, that may be more accurate, but the decision does adjudge the Apos as the fee owners by legal title and adverse possession of all of grant 3079, except for a portion owned by another family, and the fee simple owners by legal title of an undivided 1/2 acre in grant 1568 and all of L.C. Award 8245: B. From those descriptions I would assume that it was substantially more than 5 acres. The point, however, is that if it is over 5 acres and if the Apos have a valid claim, the law of adverse possession is a good law and they should be entitled thereby to establish valid title to their property.

"One delegate commented that if we abolish adverse possession it will force people to seek out and pay the true owners. Well, the procedure to establish clear title by adverse possession now does that very thing. It requires that you find the people who hold the recorded title and give notice to them. You have to exercise diligent effort. If you can find them you have to serve them with the papers. You have to give them notice by registered mail if they are adjoining landowners. If you can't find them after diligent effort, you have to publish a notice in the newspapers. Now, all of those things--if there is in fact fraud or an effort not to comply, the entire action to quiet title decree can be set aside. So if anyone here thinks that the law of adverse possession gives people the right to steal property, they are very much mistaken. On the question of the practice of attorneys who take possession of land in order to provide service for those who need it--I don't know of that practice. It may have been done in some cases, perhaps because the people hiring the attorney worked out an arrangement with him. But that is not true of all attorneys, I can assure you.

"Finally, let me just say this. Apparently this amendment was put together sometime last night. We stayed in session until after 10, and I would assume that the people who worked on this amendment must have stayed and worked after that. I don't think it has been submitted to the counsel experienced in real estate work. The hour now is almost 1:00. The subject is extremely important to all the people of Hawaii. Mr. President, I would recommend that we at least take a lunch hour to have these questions looked into by counsel. I haven't said anything about the second sentence of that amendment, which I think also has problems. It says: 'Such claim may be asserted in good faith by any person not more than once in twenty years.' The way that reads, it prohibits a person who owns two pieces of land from bringing action to quiet title; he can only do it one time, even though he has different parcels. I think that this is a serious matter. I think that all of us owe it to ourselves and to the people we represent to do this carefully. We have another 2 weeks in this Convention. It doesn't take but one day or perhaps a few hours to discuss this with counsel who are experienced in real estate, to see if there are changes that should be made."

Delegate Waihee then rose on a point of personal privilege to take exception to the implication that supporters of the amendment had not checked it out. The amendment, he explained, had been checked out with Judge Chinen, an authority on land law in Hawaii and highly respected by many attorneys, as well as with their legal counsel. He then called for the question.

Delegate Kaapu, on a point of inquiry, questioned whether the previous speaker, in reference to statements made on Kamehameha, had in fact understood what he said--that Kamehameha, when he conquered the Islands, may have viewed what he did as was reflected in the constitutional statement by Kamehameha III, that the land "belonged to the chiefs and the people in common...."

Delegate Burgess then rose to assure the delegation that he had not implied anything other than what had been intended by that speaker and that he had intended no derogatory reflection on any delegate. His arguments that morning, he stated, should in no way be interpreted "as any lack of aloha for the people who are speaking on the other side."

Delegate Yoshimura then rose to give his reasons for not supporting the amendment. The basic question, he stated, was whether they wanted adverse possession in the law books. Reminding the delegates that all lands had been under the old land laws of ancient Hawaii before adverse possession was in effect, he then noted that there were ancient land laws that could be followed. Clear title, he stated, should be gained through the courts.

Delegate Wurdeman also rose to voice her opposition to the amendment, noting that she too would like to go back to the original wording.

There being no further discussion, the question on the adoption of Amendment No. 3 to Com. P. No. 12 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate Burgess then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 5, to delete in its entirety section 5 of Com. P. No. 12 on quieting title, seconded By Delegate Hale.

At this time, Delegate Burgess made the following statement:

"Mr. President, the points that I would speak out in favor of have already been fully made. I would be willing to waive debate on this. I would, however, like a vote on it so that the record may show years from now that I did my best."

Delegate De Soto then rose to speak against the amendment to delete section 5 "and all the arguments that were made previously, so that history may show that I tried my best."

The question on the deletion of section 5 of Com. P. No. 12 was then put by the Chair and the motion failed.

There being no further discussion on Com. P. No. 12, Delegate Blake moved, seconded by Delegate De Soto, that Com. P. No. 12 as amended pass Second Reading and Com. Whole Rep. No. 12 be received and placed on file. The question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Com. Whole Rep. No. 13, Com. P. No. 13, RD. 1--RELATING TO HAWAIIAN AFFAIRS:

Delegate Blake, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate De Soto, for the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 13) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 13 be adopted and Com. P. No. 13, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

The President announced that there was one amendment for consideration and recognized Delegate De Soto, who moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate Waihee, which amended section 7 of Com. P. No. 13, RD. 1, to read:

[That pro rata portion of the] The public lands [set aside for the general public in Section 4 of Article XI, hereof,] shall be used for the development of farm and home ownership on as widespread a basis as possible, in accordance with procedures and limitations prescribed by law.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate De Soto explained that this was a housekeeping amendment to remove the new language on the "pro rata portion" of public lands and retain the original language of Section 5, Article X. The environment committee, she explained, was proposing to delete Section 5 entirely and that would be a duplication of the Hawaiian affairs package provision.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 13, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 1 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate De Soto then rose to speak in favor of Com. P. No. 13, RD. 1, with the following statement:

"This proposal attempts to establish a body corporate wherein it would have fiscal responsibilities for the moneys earmarked for native Hawaiians and native Americans, which we are a part of. I think that this proposal attempts, in good faith and honesty, to afford the Hawaiian community a chance for--or at least the opportunity for--self-determination. This proposal addresses the future--I will probably be dead when the full realization of this proposal is known, but I feel it is vital for the Hawaiian community. Consequently, I ask that this Convention adopt Com. P. No. 13 as amended. Mahalo."

Delegate Pulham, speaking in favor of Com. P. No. 13, observed that the public liked to insist the Hawaiian people do things according to law or according to regulations. This proposal as well as the others, he noted, was an example of the good faith and fairness of the committee, who were playing the ballgame according to the rules and therefore had every right to expect to win.

There being no further discussion, Delegate Blake moved, seconded by Delegate De Soto, that Com. P. No. 13, RD. 1 as amended, pass Second Reading and Com. Whole Rep. No. 13 be received and placed on file. The question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At this time the President recognized Delegate De Soto, who rose and made the following statement:

"Mr. President, it is with humble heart that I rise to thank the people in this Convention for supporting these issues that will have a long and lasting impact for the native Hawaiian. I know that we should have a speech prepared that would go down in history, but I am part of the maka'ainana. I love my staff and the members of my committee, and I ask that all of you here help me and help us to carry the message to the public so that they, in a very short time, can understand what it is we're proposing, so that come November they will vote to support the Hawaiian package.

"We have waited years. Our people have struggled. Our people have broken hearts and broken spirits. Many of our opio strike out and strike back at administrative bureaucracies. I want to be able to stand in front of them and tell them that indeed the system works and that they should participate in it. Our battles are not all won, and we don't expect them to be won. But come November, all of the opio who have come today to witness what goes on will stand up to testify. Only history will show whether what we have done is right or whether, as Brother Burgess says, we may be doing wrong. But I think it's important for them to understand that the process can work. The system can work. The system can work if you are willing to spill your na'au. The system is foreign and is such that it costs Hawaiians the spilling of their na'au and blood. I would, rather than go through the political system, fight six guys hand to hand. But I tell the opio now, just like the kupuna told me, it is there for us. We must now spread the word to our people that violence, hatred is a thing of the past. We just lokahi. I tell everyone here that I am, on behalf of my people--not my people in the sense that I am queen and they are only people, but in the sense that I am their servant, and it has been an experience that I shall never forget till the day I die, that the great spirits have allowed me to be a servant to my people. I would like to say, to all of you, aloha, mahalo nui."

The President then stated that he was sure he spoke for the entire Convention in offering congratulations to Delegate De Soto for providing such able and effective leadership at this momentous time in the history of Hawaii and Hawaiians.

Delegate Sterling, as vice-chairman of the Hawaiian affairs committee, extended the committee's kokua to Delegate De Soto.

Delegate Chung then added his thanks in being a part of the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs. He went on to quote the last words of Kamehameha--"Endless is the good that I have given to you to enjoy"--and then stated that he hoped Hawaiians would enjoy a future of endless joy.

At 1:12 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2:50 p.m.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 14--RELATING TO TAXATION AND FINANCE:

On motion by Delegate Lewis, seconded by Delegate Sterling and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 14, relating to taxation and finance.

The President appointed Delegate Ishikawa to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 3:01 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Ishikawa assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 6:32 p.m., Delegate Ishikawa vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Ishikawa, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 14 as amended, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Lewis, seconded by Delegate Ishikawa and carried, the oral report was adopted.

The President congratulated Delegate Ishikawa for an excellent job, and also complimented the chairman and members of the Committee on Taxation and Finance for the fine package that had been presented.

At this time, the Clerk announced that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 77 and Com. P. No. 17 were still in the printshop but that they were on the calendar for decking purposes. There being no objection, the President deferred action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 77 and Com. P. No. 17 until Saturday, September 9, 1978. The Clerk then announced that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 78 and Com. P. No. 18, from the Committee on Style, were not on the calendar but were up for decking purposes. The President thereupon placed Stand. Com. Rep. No. 78 and Com. P. No. 18 on the calendar for consideration on Friday, September 8, 1978.

ADJOURNMENT

At 6:40 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, the Convention adjourned until 10:00 a.m. Friday, September 8, 1978.

FIFTY-SECOND DAY

Friday, September 8, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 10:00 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by Dr. Edmond Walker of the Hawaii Baptist Convention.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Donald Ching who was excused and Delegate Haunani Ching who was absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Fifty-First Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 79) informing the Convention that Res. No. 22 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Ledward, seconded by Delegate Kaapu and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 79 was adopted.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 22) requesting the Committee on Style to consider all portions of the Constitution as to phraseology was offered by Delegate Hamilton.

There being no objection, the President deferred action on Res. No. 22 until Saturday, September 9, 1978.

ORDER OF THE DAY THIRD READING

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 73, Com. P. No. 9, S. 1--RELATING TO THE EXECUTIVE:

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Stone, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 73 be adopted and Com. P. No. 9, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, explained that the only changes recommended to Com. P. No. 9 were those pertaining to the use of nondiscriminatory terms and for consistency and clarity, and he recommended its passage.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 73 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 9, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 69 ayes, 2 noes and 31 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Calvin Ching, Laura Ching, Chu, Chun, Crozier, de Costa, Dyer, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Hashimoto, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Liu, McCall, Nakamura, Odanaka, Okamura, O'Toole, Penebacker, Peterson, Pulham, Sakima, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Taira, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita and President Paty voting aye; Delegates DiBianco and Kono voting no; and Delegates Andrews, Blean, Chang, Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chung, De Soto, Eastvold, Ellis, Goodenow, Hagino, Harris, Hayashida, Hino, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Kimball, Lacy, Lewis, Marumoto, Miller, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Ontai, Sasaki, Sutton, Takahashi, Tamayori, Wurdeman and Yoshimura being excused.

GENERAL ORDER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 78, Com. P. No. 18--RELATING TO THE USE OF NONDISCRIMINATORY TERMS IN THE CONSTITUTION:

On motion by Delegate Hamilton, seconded by Delegate Stone and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 78 was adopted and Com. P. No. 18, relating to the use of nondiscriminatory terms in the Constitution, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Tuesday, September 12, 1978.

At 10:25 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 10:32 a.m.

DEFERRED MATTER

Com. Whole Rep. No. 10 (Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1) (Committee on Judiciary--Deferred from September 7, 1978):

Delegate Campbell, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Ikeda, for the Committee on Judiciary, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 10) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 10 be adopted and Com. P. No. 10, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

At 10:33 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 10:37 a.m.

The President reviewed the order of the amendments and called for discussion. Delegate McCall then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate Burgess, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 10, RD.1, to read in part:

If the governor should fail to make [the] any appointment within thirty days of [presentation] presentment, or within ten days of the senate's rejection of any previous appointment, the appointment shall be made by the judicial selection commission from the list with the consent of the senate. If the senate should fail to [consent to any appointment, whether by the governor or commission,] reject any appointment within thirty days thereof it shall be deemed to have given its consent to such appointment. If the senate shall reject any appointment, the governor shall make another appointment from the list within ten days thereof. The same procedure shall be followed until a valid appointment has been made, or failing the making of a valid appointment, the commission shall make the appointment from the list, without senate consent.

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate McCall explained:

"The effect of this amendment would be to tighten and clarify time limits which the governor and the senate have in the appointment consideration and rejection or selection of candidates. Instead of allowing the governor 30 days for consideration of each candidate until one is accepted, the governor would have only 10 days to make another choice following prior senate rejection. In this way the process of selecting candidates can be streamlined.

"The amendment is intended to cut down the time the governor has to make an appointment following the rejection of his initial appointment. Under the present language, the governor would have a 30-day period after each senate rejection until the list of names is exhausted. If the list contained six names, the governor alone could spend as much as 180 days, or 6 months, in the appointment process; and that does not include the time the senate would spend considering the governor's appointee. This amendment would prevent such a situation from happening. If this time limit were adopted, it probably would not in any way harm the governor's ability to adequately make an informed choice. Presumably he would have scrutinized all the candidates at least once in making his initial selection; thus any subsequent appointment should not entail new involved investigations into candidate backgrounds or qualifications but rather a simple review of their records. It also limits the senate to 30 days for consideration of an appointee.

"The need for streamlining the process cannot be overemphasized. Our courts should not be needlessly burdened by delays occasioned by unnecessary administrative time limits. With these points in mind, I urge you all to vote in favor of this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Ikeda, on a point of inquiry, questioned the change from "presentation" to "presentment" and suggested amending it back to "presentation" for internal consistency since this was the language used throughout the proposal. Delegate McCall being amenable and there being no objection, the President announced the retention of "presentation."

Delegate Ikeda then spoke in favor of the amendment, noting that the time limits were reasonable and the language did provide a safeguard.

Also speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Sterling observed that this was positive legislation addressed to the problem of heavy, crowded dockets.

Delegate Takitani, speaking against the amendment, commented that the best merit selection system would be one without senate confirmation.

Speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Burgess observed that, although he agreed on the desirability of removing senate confirmation, since it must be included the amendment at least provided assurance that an appointment would eventually be made.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Amendment No. 1 was put by the Chair and carried.

Delegate Hagino then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Villaverde, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, under the subsection "Qualifications for Appointment," to read in part:

Justices and judges shall be residents and citizens of the State and of the United States [, and licensed to practice law by the supreme court. A justice of the supreme court, a judge of the intermediate appellate court and a judge of the circuit court shall have been so licensed for a period of not less than ten years preceding his nomination. A judge of the district court shall have been so licensed for a period of not less than five years preceding his nomination].

Before speaking for his amendment, Delegate Hagino made a motion to amend the amendment, seconded by Delegate Shon, to add the following: "No person shall be eligible for nomination as judge or justice unless he or she has been a resident of the State for five years immediately preceding his or her nomination."

Speaking for his amendment to the amendment, Delegate Hagino explained that the sentence was taken directly from the requirements for governor and that, because many cases that came before the courts were based on Hawaiian customs and traditions, it should be essential that a judge or justice was acquainted with some of them.

Delegate Hale rose to speak in favor, acknowledging that ordinarily she would be opposed to a residency requirement but that in this case a familiarity with local mores and customs was very important.

Delegate DiBianco then rose to point out a problem he saw with the language of the amendment, stating:

"I think the language should be changed to accomplish the purpose. The reason these statutes and constitutional provisions usually say no person shall be eligible unless he has been licensed to practice before the State for at least 5 years is because sometimes attorneys who are local residents will go to the mainland to get a master's degree in law, to join the army, spend 2 or 3 years as attorneys in the military, and when they come back they're not going to be residents of the State and therefore won't be able to become judges or justices until they have actually physically lived here for another 5 years, even though they have been licensed to practice for maybe 10 or 12 years. So I do see a problem with this language."

Delegate Ikeda, on a point of inquiry, asked if the reason for restoring the residency requirement was because of the total removal of licensing requirements. Upon the movant's affirmation, Delegate Ikeda spoke against the amendment, referring to the residency problem that had been pointed out.

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend the amendment was put by the Chair and failed. Delegate Hagino, speaking for Amendment No. 2, made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I speak in support of deleting the requirement that judges must be lawyers. Chief Justice Warren E. Burger stated, 'We may well be on our way to a society overrun by hordes of lawyers, hungry as locusts, and brigades of judges in numbers never before contemplated.' Lawrence Silberman, a former U.S. deputy attorney, said, 'The legal process, because of its unbridled growth, has become a cancer which threatens the vitality of our forms of capitalism and democracy.' Some wonder whether the rule of law will prevail in the United States, or the rule of lawyers.

"This amendment seeks to delete the requirement that a candidate for judgeship be an attorney. During the Committee of the Whole deliberations, we created a judicial selection commission which will carefully screen candidates and choose the best-qualified individuals. This amendment would allow that commission greater flexibility in the selection process as well as expand the pool upon which the commission can draw.

"A judge should not be coldly objective and impersonal. When interpreting the law, a judge necessarily interjects our social philosophy. I feel that it would be appropriate to have non-lawyer judges in the family court, which has jurisdiction over family-related cases and must consider the welfare of the family as a unit of society. It is significant to note that in contested divorce cases, the evaluations and recommendations of the social worker and, when deemed necessary, the psychiatrist, weigh heavily in the final determination.

"Non-attorneys might also be placed on the supreme court. The legal field has expanded into areas unheard of 10 years ago and since one of the most important functions of the supreme court is to formulate and develop the common law, perhaps there is a need for the non-attorney who can give an overview of a case before the court. According to the 1978 Book of the States, 46 states presently allow non-attorneys to sit as judges in some court in the state. Also, according to a recent survey by the National Center for State Courts, there are 8,000 to 10,000 judge positions for non-lawyers; approximately 7,000 of them are being filled by non-attorneys.

"An important fact to note is that there has been a trend toward educational programs leading to certification for non-attorney judges. Even in Hawaii, newly appointed judges sometimes go to judge schools. In regard to this trend, I would just like to point out that Florida, Idaho and Kansas have such programs. Mahalo."

Delegate Shon rose to speak in support of the amendment. Observing that constitutional delegates and legislators were not required to be attorneys, and since the judiciary also played a major role in defining and setting laws, he suggested that it too should not be limited to attorneys. Attorneys, he pointed out, played the role of technicians and technicians were more properly advisors, but it was the philosophers who should set precedents, define social values and interpret the "gray areas" of the law.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Campbell remarked that it might not be wise for a lawyer to speak against the amendment but that perhaps only a lawyer could understand how serious its adoption would be. Addressing a concern of the movant--that a judge who must make decisions should have a deeper dimension in his background than simply the black and white letter of the law--she explained:

"That only means we need to select better judges. In the family court that concern is taken care of because we have an integration of the behavioral system into the judicial. There are attached to the family court psychiatrists, psychologists and social workers who give that added dimension of the human element, so that problems not soluble purely by the black and white letter of the law are solved by and with the assistance of behavioral scientists.

"I think it takes a lawyer to know that if you had someone sitting on the bench who did not know the law of evidence, for example--I cannot see that a lay person could understand some of the intricacies of the laws of evidence without being schooled in them. The fact that newly appointed individuals would go to school to learn how to be judges is not at all unusual. My feeling is that it should be an ongoing process. Judges should be trained in how to be judges; just because you're a lawyer doesn't necessarily mean you know all you need to know about being a judge. To approve this kind of an amendment would be extremely dangerous."

Delegate Hamilton then rose to speak against the amendment, stating:

"I recognize that lawyers are an irritating lot, and in addition expensive. I have frequently quoted Dickens with approval: 'The law is an ass.' But the fact remains that we do need on our bench individuals trained in the law. There are many who are humane and understanding, but I think it is important to have on the bench someone trained in the law, as it is important in surgery to have someone trained in the arts of a physician."

Delegate DiBianco also spoke against the amendment. There was, he said, a serious misunderstanding about attorneys and what they did, which stereotyped them as evil and without humanity, but a review of the attorneys in an area would show that they run the gamut of political and social philosophy. There was also, he continued, a misunderstanding as to exactly what went on in the courtroom, explaining:

"In most courtrooms, judges do not sit around trying to decide the great social questions of the day. What they usually decide are such questions as whether or not the parole evidence rule will be applied to a contract where one party is claiming fraud and inducement and the other is claiming estoppel and pay. Now, whether a non-lawyer can handle that kind of problem without sufficient training is something that remains to be seen. But I do know it took me one entire year of law school just to learn how to use the research tools available to attorneys to find out what other courts have done in these circumstances. Our body of law is built upon established precedent, and we don't make decisions as they come to us. Judges and justices make decisions based upon the decisions of previous courts. This doctrine, known as stare decisis, is the foundation of our legal framework. I don't think that a non-attorney could grasp the essentials of this particular type of system without so much training that he would in fact become an attorney himself, whether issued a license or not.

"There is a lot of opportunity for community input into the judicial system. Anybody who wants a decision by his peers need only request a jury. That reduces the function of the judge to only the arbiter of the law. In family court we have psychiatrists and social workers; in the criminal courts we have probation officers and presentence reports written by probation officers. In extreme cases, where a court feels that it does not have the expertise necessary to decide a complicated question, it can always retain on its own an expert from the general community. So there is plenty of opportunity for social input. But probably the most important way society makes its input felt in the law is through the judges and justices themselves, who, I would remind you, are also members of our society, who do read the newspapers and I do not think represent one type of view as opposed to any other in society.

"The remarks that Chief Justice Burger and Lawrence Silberman have been making about not being overrun by hordes of lawyers and judges are not complaints against licensed attorneys but against unnecessary litigation, which is something that has troubled the chief justice ever since he assumed the position. There is unnecessary litigation to some extent; attorneys may be at fault for that. But we only represent our clients after all, and our clients are the general public. I agree that it is true law has gotten into many fields that were unheard of 10 years ago. That's because these fields have become so increasingly complex--areas of probate and trust and ecology law. There was no such thing as ecology law 10 years ago; now the federal regulations governing it go on for volumes. It's impossible to delve into these regulations without appropriate training. I think attorneys are the only people you can turn to for this. Attorneys are not special people, they are simply people with special training. I would urge you to reject this amendment because I think you're opening up a dangerous area here, the results of which could be staggering when you consider what could happen if we did have, in fact, a supreme court with non-lawyers on it."

Delegate Kaapu then spoke in favor of the amendment, pointing out that it was less an attempt to get rid of lawyer judges than to admit that occasionally there may be persons of substantial although non-attorney background with the capability of serving well as judges. He emphasized that they should be judged on capability and noted that the judicial selection process would eliminate almost anyone but a person of great merit. But, he added, a process that would eliminate such a person should be more open.

Delegate Sterling also spoke in favor, explaining that he supported the amendment because of instances in which immunity was granted for reasons not understood, or plea bargaining took place with known criminals released. The amendment, he noted, just offered an alternative; it did not prohibit, but simply broadened the areas of choice and could make possible the best representation available.

Delegate Ikeda, speaking against the amendment, pointed out that it was not the type of provision they would want in the Constitution and explained:

"I don't doubt there are certain types of cases--a limited number--where a non-attorney could possibly be well qualified and could function as an attorney. But, as pointed out previously, judges handle a wide range of situations involving not only social policy but also very precise matters of evidence, fact and law that are intermixed. We want to have judges who can handle a whole gamut of problems, not just one or two specialized cases. That is where the problem in having a non-attorney comes. At least with an attorney judge he has the basic qualifications to handle that kind of problem range. This is not any kind of elitist requirement; it is a necessary occupational requirement. If anything, I think it's a lot easier to find an attorney with the kind of outlook you would presumably expect from a non-attorney, than to find a non-attorney with the particular technical qualifications of an attorney. For that reason I would urge all the delegates to vote against this amendment."

Delegate Chu then spoke against the amendment, explaining that although she favored government participation by people from all walks of life, it might be more appropriate in the legislative or executive branches. She noted that the intent of the amendment was good, although there was an unfortunate anti-lawyer feeling, and then explained:

"Rules of procedure and laws have become very complicated because our democratic system has attempted to make laws that would be fairest to the greatest number of people. The rules of procedure allow an adversary system to operate, for both sides to plead their case and to argue and defend it in every way possible. It is still important when a matter of personal property rights or personal liberty is at stake that the greatest amount of fairness be accorded to each individual in the litigation.

"There is no question that lawyers are technicians, but I feel that if they were merely advisors the system would be much too complex. Who is at the head and who is wagging the tail? That could be a real problem."

Delegate Crozier, speaking against the amendment, observed that when a person took on new responsibilities he normally went through a period of uncertainty. In a job that dealt with people's lives, he pointed out, the period of uncertainty should be minimized and having lawyers as judges was one of the best ways to do it.

Delegate Tamayori spoke in favor of the amendment. Referring to the argument of using outside expertise to add another dimension, he observed that law clerks could add this other dimension and serve as the technical factor and non-lawyers would provide the human factor. Lawyers, he added, were not special and should not be the only ones specified as judges in the Constitution. Should special training be needed, he noted, the merit selection process would make those decisions. Rather than precluding lawyers from judgeships, he concluded, the amendment opened it up for other qualified people.

Speaking in favor, Delegate Alcon referred to the screening process to determine qualifications and pointed out that the selection commission was to be composed of lay people as well as lawyers. He reminded the delegates that in earlier times lay people had been allowed to practice law and added: "I think there are places for lay people in our court system--in traffic courts, family court--where a lay person is capable of sitting in judgment. After all, the burden of the proof of evidence will be on the lawyers, and all the lay person would do as a judge is sit in judgment."

Delegate Rachel Lee rose to speak against the amendment, voicing her apprehension at having lay persons as judges. If a person needed help in a particular area, she pointed out, he went to a specialist--a person who had been well trained for that particular job. And there should, she emphasized, be no exception for judgeships.

Delegate De Soto then spoke in support of the amendment, mentioning her own experience in helping people in her area. The amendment, she observed, did not seem to be a threat to attorneys. There were some unscrupulous attorneys, she pointed out, just as there were unscrupulous housewives, but you did not condemn the whole profession.

The courts, she continued, like many segments of society, had become so specialized that sometimes the human element was lost. She then pointed to the lack of communication between the judge and defendant, and the fact that the defendant had no opportunity to give his reasons for committing the crime. There was room for lay people, she concluded, and she would rather be judged by her peers than by a professional.

Delegate Odanaka rose to speak in support of the amendment. You did not need a law degree, she pointed out, to make decisions concerning people and their lives, and added that the amendment would eliminate the current stereotyping of lawyers.

Speaking in opposition, Delegate O'Toole pointed out that the amendment, rather than keeping politics out of the judiciary, would make it easier to bring politics in. Considering the fact that seven of the nine commission members were picked by politicians, he stated, it would be easier to pick non-lawyers because of the large list to select from. He also noted the importance of sensitivity, that the person should understand and be able to respond. And to do that, he concluded, you have to have the expertise.

Delegate Dennis Ihara then spoke against the amendment, pointing out that as a social worker and a lawyer he could perhaps see both sides of the coin. It was not, he observed, the decision-making that was important, but rather the procedural aspect and what had been termed a "lawyer-like manner." A layman could make worthy judgmental decisions, he noted, but the interpretation itself and the application were the important aspects.

Delegate Barnes, speaking against the amendment but in favor of the concept, explained:

"The problem with this particular amendment is that we could have lay persons considered for the supreme court and our newly created appeals court. An appellate court's primary job is to find reversible error or an abuse of discretion by a judge below. This appears to require a vast knowledge of law and evidence. This provision, as I read it, would allow that possibility of a problem.

"On the other hand, I strongly support the concept of perhaps a neighborhood court system or small claims court, or at the university level--in landlord-tenant disputes, these could be handled by citizen panels or lay judges. I would strongly support such an inclusion of lay people, but probably by the legislature. For those reasons, I speak against this amendment."

Delegate Chun then rose to speak against the amendment, pointing out that eventually an attorney would have to advise the lay judge. He then raised the question of the advisors, pointing out that the merit system was only to select the judge and that there was no assurance that the advisors would be competent too. The attorney, he remarked, would then be a translator of legal words, and translators did not always translate with complete accuracy. The way to address the inhumanity that was built into the legal system, he suggested was to revamp the system.

Delegate Souki, speaking for the amendment, pointed out that one of the best trial attorneys was Perry Mason, and he was a non-attorney.

Also speaking for the amendment, Delegate Pulham remarked that they had reached that phase of the discussion when it seemed that "by division we shall conquer and by confusing the issue to the point where no one knows what's going on, we then have to call in the attorney to tell us which way to head." He then stated:

"We've heard attorneys say that lay judges would be all right if used at the lower level. The attorney who is the chief justice of our supreme court testified that he would be perfectly willing to see these people used in the entire tribunals where you have panels, and there is a need for interjection of the common sense that might be supplied by a lay individual.

"I realize that this is seen as kind of a roadblock by certain segments of our society interested in the self-perpetuation of that particular segment of society to the detriment of all other segments of that society regardless. So I think, as somebody mentioned earlier, if we're going to make any progress in the legal field we are going to have to make at least this one small stand here. We have built into the report by the judiciary committee--which is essentially a very good one--the selection system. I certainly don't see them running out and selecting wholesale lay persons to take over the courts. That's not going to happen. But certainly where there is presently more than one judge, sitting in panels, I think there is room to believe that somewhere in this great state of ours there happens to be a lay person with not only enough common sense but enough technical expertise to be of value therein. What the opposition is saying is very clearly that in no case, in no way, are you or anyone else qualified to get involved, even this little bit, in our kuleana. And I'll tell you, that's a bunch of crap. Thank you."

Delegate Les Ihara, speaking for the amendment, pointed out that the key lay with the judicial selection commission, which would be responsible for weeding out those who qualified from those who did not. Therefore, he concluded, it wasn't necessary to specify that judges be attorneys because they probably would.

Delegate Penebacker, on a point of inquiry, questioned whether the attorney delegates had a conflict of interest. The President responded that those who had a conflict would know and would or would not vote as each saw fit.

Delegate Takitani then rose to state that he would be voting in favor of the amendment but was speaking against it. If one of the concerns was that too many lawyers turned politician and eventually became judges, he pointed out, with the weak partisan merit selection system they had created, he could see many non-lawyer politicians becoming judges.

Speaking in favor, Delegate Sterling questioned the reasons behind the amendment, suggesting the serious social problems of the times, the inequities of the system, the bureaucracy in the courts. The amendment, he noted, was addressed to those problems and offered an alternative, not a prohibition.

Delegate Tamayori, on a point of information, inquired as to the number of states with lay judges. Delegate Hagino, referring to the 1978 Book of the States, replied that 46 states currently allowed non-lawyers as judges in some court. He added that Hawaii was one of only four states with no non-lawyer judges.

Delegate Crozier then rose to ask how judges had been selected in the territorial days. Delegate Ikeda, in response, explained that the judges at that time had been appointed by the federal government with senate consent, and he believed there had been a requirement that they be attorneys.

Delegate Crozier then spoke against the amendment. He reminded the delegates that during the territorial days judges were brought in from the outside through political pressure, and he cautioned that with the amendment a similar situation could develop. With the amendment, he indicated, anyone in the United States could become a judge after living in Hawaii for only 30 days.

Delegate Burgess also spoke against the amendment. He pointed out that the lay judges in the 46 states referred to were limited to courts of the smallest jurisdiction, where the cases involved only $100 or $200. Hawaii, he added, used to have a similar law but it was changed because it was not satisfactory. The reason for requiring that judges be licensed attorneys who have practiced for at least 10 years, he further explained, was that the best training for a judge was the practice of law, adding:

"A lawyer, through his practice, gains experience not only in the technical aspects of the law but in seeing that there are two sides to every question. He learns to understand the human element. He does not lose that just because he practices law. If he is going to be a successful practicing attorney, he has to have not only the technical skill but he must also have skills in dealing with people; without that it's not possible. If he doesn't have that training, it takes more than just going to a school for judges for a few months. If he doesn't have that training, he'll go into court and--let's suppose it's a simple case involving an automobile accident. One of the attorneys might say it was contributory negligence. That is a simple thing on the surface and yet it has many ramifications. Then the other attorney could say that the doctrine of last clear chance applied and therefore contributory negligence was not a complete defense. And every time the lawyer made a statement like that, the judge would have to say, 'Excuse me, what was that you said?' The courts are congested enough now, but if you have to spend hours and days in simply educating the person on the bench as to what you mean by something--and these are basic things that a practicing lawyer knows and understands--it would really cause congestion. Therefore, there is very sound reasoning for the requirement that judges be lawyers, especially at the circuit and appellate court levels. I hope this amendment will be voted down."

Delegate Anae, speaking in favor of the amendment, stated that it preserved the rights of the minority; an astute, highly motivated person with some legal background who chose not to go through the system and be certified should not, he maintained, be discriminated against simply because he did not conform to the system.

Delegate Laura Ching then rose to speak against the amendment, pointing out that the field of law, like many others in an age of specialized professionalism, had become highly specialized. If her life depended on her case, she stated, she would not want a lay person deciding it. There already was, she added, sufficient lay participation in the court system.

Delegate Kaapu then related questions that people had asked about city-county licensing requirements, noting that some found it difficult to understand why they were not allowed to make certain home repairs when their work would pass the inspector's tests. He then explained:

"The U.S. Constitution was written by lay people, some of whom were also lawyers. The State Constitution is being written by us to a certain extent and was written by people like us, some of whom were lawyers. The federal statutes were passed and written by non-lawyers and lawyers together, and so were our state laws. Why should it not be possible for at least one person somewhere in this State, or this country, to have sufficient excellence in his field and adequate knowledge of the law to lend a degree of excellence to our judicial system. If there is one such person, if there are several such persons, I think that our Constitution should provide for that possibility."

Delegate DiBianco, again speaking against the amendment, stressed one point--neither he nor any of the other attorneys who opposed the amendment spoke against it in order to protect the kuleana of attorneys. They did so, he explained, because the kuleana of their clients was being invaded. He then stated:

"I have a duty to my client--and if that's a conflict of interest I declare it now--in that I don't want to have to take a client to court, try a case before a non-lawyer, have him make a mistake, take it up on appeal, have it reversed, bring it back down again, have another mistake made, take it up on appeal, bring it back down again and go through this several times in order to reach a just decision, and all the while having to charge the client for my time and effort on his behalf. The judiciary of this State needs improving, and I think that downgrading it by this type of proposal is something that our judicial system can't afford. We do not have the system that 46 other states have, whereby non-lawyers sit as justices of the peace and hear civil matters up to $100 and traffic matters. Our judges rotate from court to court. You might be able to put a non-lawyer into a small claims court in Honolulu, which is the only county with a sophisticated enough judicial system to actually have a separate small claims court, but in 2 months when he rotates and starts hearing criminal cases, he's going to have some problems. When he rotates again and starts hearing civil cases with jurisdiction up to $5,000, he's going to have problems. But unfortunately it's my clients who are going to have the problems when I have to keep appealing those cases, with great expense to them.

"For these reasons I think the amendment should be defeated. Somewhere there may be somebody worthy of sitting on the bench who has no legal training whatsoever or has legal training but not a law degree. I don't contest that those people exist. My fear is that the selection commission, if told through our Constitution that it should be selecting non-lawyers, will choose non-lawyers whether they are good, bad or indifferent, just to satisfy the clamor of the public--as if somehow these non-lawyers will be the resident human beings on a panel of attorneys who are otherwise not human. I object to the amendment for those reasons."

Delegate Alcon then rose to speak in favor of the motion, pointing out that they had created an appeals court because of the many mistakes made in lesser courts. If the lawyer judges did not make mistakes, he noted, there would be no need for another level in the court system. He noted that there would be lay people on the selection commission, observing that if they were good enough to judge judges, they were good enough to become judges. CPAs, he added, were allowed to practice in court even though they did not have lawyers' licenses.

Delegate de Costa, speaking against the motion, pointed out that mechanics were required to be licensed in order to fix cars, and drivers needed licenses, concluding: "Would you have me as your judge?"

Also speaking against the amendment, Delegate Kojima reflected that with the abundance and variety of lawyers in the State, they should be able to find those who could serve the needs of the common people as judges, mentioning also that he had confidence in the merit selection process for finding good judges.

Speaking against the motion and as one who sat as per diem judge in district court, Delegate Lewis agreed that a lawyer was not necessary on traffic or small claims cases. However, he continued, since district court judges were rotated from traffic court to small claims court to criminal and civil courts where a judge got into complex legal areas, training was necessary.

Delegate Tamayori then pointed out that the work of a plumber or mechanic, referred to earlier, could not accurately be related to that of a judge since the plumber's work involved a standard procedure of operation with no objective thinking, whereas a judge dealt with human beings. He admitted the probability of procedural problems in the lower courts but indicated his belief that the commission would pick people with law degrees for the circuit and supreme courts, adding that the final choice should be up to the people.

On a point of inquiry, Delegate Alcon asked whether the legislature could create offices for lay judges when the Constitution required that judges be lawyers. In response, Delegate Lewis explained that the legislature would have to specify the exact areas--that, for example, judges in small claims could be non-lawyers, or judges in traffic court in cases involving violations rather than misdemeanors.

Delegate Peterson, speaking against the amendment, said another approach was to allow all the skilled people in the community to attend law school, receive training and then be eligible to sit as judges.

Delegate Hagino, speaking last for the amendment, pointed out that the amendment did not mandate that non-lawyers be judges; it merely left the option open. He reminded those delegates concerned about incompetency that European countries had separate lawyer and judge schools, observing that with Hawaii's fairly new law school the costs should be minimal to add a school for training new judges as well as retraining current judges. Restrictions as to type of judge candidate, he added, should not be placed in the Constitution.

He then noted that the judicial selection commission should be allowed to set their own requirements and in so doing leave the door open for non-lawyer judges, and expressed confidence that they would make wise choices. He concluded by quoting Robert McKay, former New York University law school dean: "If war is too important to be left to the generals, surely justice is too important to be left to the lawyers."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair. Delegate Alcon at this time requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining that there were ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion was put by the Chair and failed to carry by a vote of 29 ayes, 62 noes and 11 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Chong, De Soto, Fujimoto, Hagino, Hale, Hokama, Hornick, Les Ihara, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Oadanaka, Penebacker, Pulham, Sasaki, Shon, Silva, Souki, Sterling, Takitani, Tamayori, Villaverde and Yoshimura voting aye; Delegates Barnard, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Calvin Ching, Laura Ching, Chu, Chun, Crozier, de Costa, DiBianco, Dyer, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Dennis Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Lacy, Ledward, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Okamura, O'Toole, Peterson, Sakima, Shinno, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Chang, Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, Chung, Eastvold, Hino, Ishikawa, Kono, Marion Lee, Ontai and Uyehara being excused.

Delegate Hagino then rose on a point of personal privilege to express his thanks to all the delegates for his day in court.

At 12:12 p. m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2:05 p. m.

Delegate Blake moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 3, seconded by Delegate Shinno, which amended section 5 of Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, to read in part:

There shall be a judicial selection commission that shall consist of nine members. [The governor shall appoint three members to the commission, the initial appointments to be for terms of two, four and six years respectively. The president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives shall each respectively appoint one member to the commission, the initial appointments to be for a term of two years respectively. The chief justice of the supreme court shall appoint two members to the commission, the initial appointments to be for terms of four and six years respectively. Members in good standing of the bar of the state shall elect two of their number to the commission in an election conducted by the supreme court or its delegate, the initial election to be for terms of four and six years respectively.] The President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the state legislature shall each appoint one person to serve upon this commission for four and two years respectively. The councils of Honolulu and Kauai shall each elect one citizen from their respective counties to serve upon this commission for a term of four years. The councils of the counties of Maui and Hawaii shall each elect one citizen from their respective counties to serve upon this commission for a term of two years. Members in good standing of the bar of the state shall elect three of their number to the commission in an election conducted by the Supreme Court or its delegate, who will serve on this commission for terms of four, two and two years.

The commission shall be selected and shall operate in a wholly nonpartisan manner. After the initial formation of the commission, elections and appointments to the commission shall be for staggered terms of [six] four years each. No member of the commission shall serve for more than one full [six] four year term on the commission.

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Blake made the following statement:

"This proposal asks that four members of the commission of nine be selected by the counties, one by the president of the senate, one by the speaker of the house and three by the Hawaii bar. My reason for this is--there's been a tremendous amount of flak throughout the State on the court system. In this morning's paper some of the comments against the Con Con--let me just read one here: 'The same thing applies to the selection of judges. The Con Con seems to be doing nothing to rectify the present unfair procedure.' I believe we have a responsibility to the public. There has been a sincere plea from the State that we do the best we can in our court system and selection of judges.

"I'm not saying the present selection is not the best. But I can't say we have all the best quality people on the bench. This, without question, is what I am looking for and the people of Hawaii are looking for--the best quality we can get. We need quality people to carefully select these nominees that will be presented to the appointing body. I don't believe the governor, if he is going to make the final appointment, should be selecting any members on this commission. I speak from my own experience. After commissions are appointed, I've had commission members ask me who I want. I say, 'That's what I appointed you for. You people go out and pick the people and send the names to me. I don't want to get involved.' Without question, the governor would do the same thing. But we should prevent these embarrassing situations for the governor. The fact that the governor selects three and the chief justice two overweighs the selection on one side. To sell this to the public--I don't think it's an easy package to sell. Consequently the courts and our counties and the legislature will select. They listen to the people, they see the people. As I stated, the courts are within the various counties that we have.

"With regard to law expertise, we count on the Hawaii bar association to render that decision. I'm trusting that they too will select people of the highest integrity and the best quality. I'm sure that the senate and the house will also select men or women of the highest quality to represent the people of Hawaii in making the selections. I ask all of you to seriously consider the amendment that's before you. Thank you."

Delegate DiBianco, speaking for the amendment, pointed out that it gave the counties some statewide input into the merit selection system. There was always a danger, he noted, that when the appointing authorities were all in Honolulu the appointees would tend to be drawn from there, and the amendment guaranteed they would come from different parts of the State. County input had been desired by the judiciary committee, he explained, not just in the way of testimony but in the actual decision-making, and one way to assure it was by having a member from each of the counties on the commission. He also pointed out that the actual selection procedure was not being changed at all by the amendment.

Delegate Goodenow rose to speak for the amendment. She observed that the governor of Hawaii had more power than the governor of any other state and would probably be relieved not to have this added responsibility. She then urged the delegates to vote for the amendment and have all the counties working together on the matter.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Ikeda explained that although he was sympathetic to the idea of geographic representation, he felt it was not proper to have representation as structured as this, where at least four of the nine members would specifically be from the counties. Judges, he pointed out, were appointed statewide and often assigned from one jurisdiction to another. A commission with this kind of makeup, he submitted, could have members operating like extra wheels, not attending meetings or having the required interest except for the appointments directly affecting their jurisdictions. He was not, he emphasized, against having a geographic breakdown but it was very inappropriate to have it so structured.

Delegate Takitani then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, stating:

"Though I don't think this is as good as it could possibly be, it is definitely an improvement. Merit selection of judges would be a positive move for Hawaii or anyplace in a representative democracy. If you don't start off with a commission that is as nonpartisan as is humanly possible, there is no way to expect this commission to make nonpartisan recommendations. This is the whole idea of merit selection--nonpartisanship in the selection of judges.

"By eliminating the governor and chief justice appointments in favor of county appointments, we have allowed for a broader base to our judicial selection commission. Allowing more people to be involved in the selection process of this commission definitely attempts to remove some of the partisan politics involved. Therefore I hope all delegates will consider adoption of this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Sterling then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, reminding the delegates that they had made a commitment to the counties and pointing out that the amendment kept the counties not only as political subdivisions but also as elected representatives. As an example, he described the potentially explosive situation in Kona where hostilities and resentments had developed between local and mainland youths. Having representatives on the commission who were familiar with local problems, he explained, would be of benefit to the individual small localities.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Campbell pointed out that the purpose of a merit selection system was the de-politicization of the system and that the committee's proposal offered very little if any improvement over the existing appointive system. The amendment, she noted, reduced the political influence at least to a tolerable degree.

Delegate Pulham then moved, seconded by Delegate Hale, to amend the amendment by adding at the end of the first paragraph after the words "for terms of four, two and two years" the following sentence: "No more than four members of the commission may be licensed attorneys."

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Pulham observed that under either the committee proposal or the amendment the commission could very likely end up with from eight to nine attorney members, who would then be selecting from among themselves whomever they wanted to be a judge. If they were forced to have attorneys making all the decisions, he continued, lay people should at least be allowed input into the system, as they were very qualified to make decisions about who at least would be on the list.

Delegate Blake then rose to voice his support of the amendment to his amendment, pronouncing it a good idea.

Delegate DiBianco, also speaking in favor, observed that none of his earlier expressed objections to non-lawyers sitting as judges pertained to non-lawyers sitting as commission members. Evaluating credentials to determine adequacy of character and training, he pointed out, did not require a law degree.

Delegate Les Ihara then inquired whether this amendment precluded consideration of the next amendment, which added the same words. The President, in response, advised that both amendments were in order.

There being no further discussion on the amendment to the amendment, the motion was put by the Chair and carried.

Delegate Shon then rose to speak against the original amendment, explaining that the interests that should balance in a statewide merit selection system were not geographic but rather attorney v. lay person interests, executive v. legislator interests, political v. nonpartisan. What, he asked, was the purpose of the geographic balance, adding that he couldn't see its applicability.

Delegate Burgess, speaking in favor of the amendment, pointed out that the cornerstone of the merit selection system was a nominating commission that was independent of the appointing authority. The makeup of the commission, he explained, was crucial and the key to making it work was its independence. He observed that under the amendment no one was appointed by the governor, who was the appointing authority. That point, he noted, had been raised in many of the deliberations that had been going on since 1913 when the first merit selection commission had been proposed, and he read from the book on this:

"Although there is little argument over the desirability of including non-lawyers since their inclusion assures that public expectations concerning the judiciary are influential and the non-professional attributes of a good judge are recognized, the general practice of having the governor appoint these lay members has been criticized as an invitation for political assignations. Since merit selection is intended to deprive the executive of the opportunity to make judicial appointments solely on the basis of his political motivations and to remove the political pressures on him to do so, it is thought to be self-defeating to permit the executive to have a direct say in the appointment of the nominating commissioners."

The amendment, he concluded, although different from other merit plans, did take away from the appointing authority that direct control over the appointment of the commissioners and thus achieved independence.

Also speaking in favor, Delegate Hale explained that one reason to consider geographic representation was the fact that too often neighbor island talent went unrecognized or overlooked when selecting for statewide office. Another reason, she continued, was to assure that cases involving neighbor island people which eventually went to Honolulu would be considered by those with statewide interests and concerns, and she urged that neighbor island input in the selection process not be overlooked. As to attendance at commission meetings, she suggested that neighbor islanders would be more available, noting their better attendance records on statewide boards and attributing it to their per diem. There was merit, she further noted, in not allowing the governor and chief justice to dominate the system by appointing a total of five commissioners, as the committee had proposed.

Delegate Ikeda then spoke against the amendment, stating that it was not the intent of the commission to disregard neighbor island people in making appointments. In fact, he indicated, the committee report specified that every vacancy would be considered a statewide appointment and neighbor island nominees included. But, he continued, the committee realized there might not be enough qualified applicants from any particular county and people outside the county would have to be considered.

He then brought up the subject of office terms, noting that the amendment changed the term from 6 to 4 years. The commission, he reminded the delegates, was not necessarily going to meet monthly as judicial appointments came up on an irregular basis. If judicial expertise in the selecting process were to be developed, he explained, it was felt that 6 years rather than 4 would be necessary. Merit selection, he concluded, primarily related to the nominees for judicial position, but it could also relate to the selection of commission members.

Delegate Shon then pointed out that although the amendment had been referred to as de-politicizing the selection process, it could increase the political factor because county commission members could be under pressure to promote favorite son candidates.

Delegate Goodenow, speaking for the amendment, agreed first that removing the gubernatorial appointments did make it a fairer board, and second that geographic representation was important and the outer islands did have responsible citizens capable of selecting judges.

Delegate Takitani then rose to speak again in favor of the amendment, remarking that it solved two of the four problems he had perceived with the committee proposal. The amendment, he noted, offered a broader base of input in the selection process, rather than just geographic representation, and made the process as nonpartisan as possible, and he urged the delegates to vote in favor of it.

Also speaking in favor, Delegate DiBianco reminded the delegates that it was the governor who chose the chief justice and then the governor and chief justice between them chose five of the nine commissioners. In no way, he observed, could it be considered merit selection, adding that this was their last chance to correct the problem.

Delegate Hale, speaking for the amendment, pointed out that if the commissioners were not selected on merit, how could they be expected to select nominees on merit. She then moved to amend the amendment, seconded by Delegate DiBianco, by changing back the second sentence of the last paragraph, to read: "After the initial formation of the commission, elections and appointments to the commission shall be for staggered terms of six years each."

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Hale explained that the committee chairman had said the 6-year term was necessary for the members to develop the necessary expertise. If, she added, that was the only problem with the amendment, they should vote on the problem and not jeopardize the main amendment.

There being no further discussion, the question was put by the Chair and Delegate Hale's amendment to the amendment passed.

Delegate Hale then spoke again for the original amendment, reiterating that this would be their last opportunity to get a nonpartisan commission. Referring to what the amendment did, she noted that, if passed, the governor and chief justice would no longer appoint a majority of the commissioners; they would, she stated, still appoint the judges.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Blake commented that as far as qualified commissioner nominees, he felt that the neighbor island caliber was as good as any in the State. In reference to the "favorite son" comment, he observed that he, like many people, felt that neighbor island appointees should sit on Oahu and not on the neighbor islands. With regard to geographic balance, he continued, this had nothing to do with merit selection; each member on the commission, he specified, should represent the State and all the people. With regard to political pressures, he further stated, he had confidence that the people picked would be strong enough to withstand pressures and stand on their own two feet. He then urged the delegates to give the amendment their serious consideration.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 3 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Sterling requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 38 ayes, 53 noes and 11 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Crozier, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Goodenow, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hironaka, Hoe, Hornick, Kaapu, Kimball, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Odanaka, O'Toole, Peterson, Pulham, Sterling, Takitani and Wurdeman voting aye; Delegates Andrews, Barnard, Calvin Ching, Laura Ching, Chong, Chung, de Costa, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hokama, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Okamura, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Chang, Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, Chu, Chun, Fujimoto, Funakoshi, Kono, Nozaki, Ontai and Souki being excused.

Delegate McCall moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 4, seconded by Delegate Blean, which amended section 5 of Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, to read in part:

There shall be a judicial selection commission that shall consist of nine members. The governor shall appoint three members to the commission, the initial appointments to be for terms of two, four and six years respectively. No more than one of the three members shall be a licensed attorney. The president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives shall each respectively appoint one member to the commission, the initial appointments to be for a term of two years respectively. The chief justice of the supreme court shall appoint two members to the commission, the initial appointments to be for terms of four and six years respectively. No more than one of the two members shall be a licensed attorney. Members in good standing of the bar of the state shall elect two of their number to the commission in an election conducted by the supreme court or its delegate, the initial election to be for terms of four and six years respectively. No more than four members of the commission shall be licensed attorneys.

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate McCall explained:

"The effect of this proposed change would be to limit the total number of attorneys who would serve on the judicial selection commission to no more than four. It would also limit the governor and the chief justice to appointing not more than one attorney each.

"With all due respect to the attorneys in this State, I think it is important that a certain balance be maintained on this commission and that we ensure that no one group have too much power or similarity of interests. At the present time there are no limits on the number of attorneys that could be on the commission. There is a possibility that the governor, the chief justice, the house speaker and the senate president would all appoint attorneys to the commission in addition to the two selected by the bar. We could have a situation in which a majority of the members would be attorneys. In order to preserve the independence of the commission and also to maintain openness and diversity of thought among the commission members, some limits on the number of attorneys are necessary.

"This amendment not only provides for such limits but also allows for a situation in which only two attorneys would be on the commission. In other words, this provides that the commission have at least two but never a majority of attorneys on it. I believe that in this way we can preserve the obvious value of the legal profession's input while fostering the openness and varied viewpoints beneficial to it. For these reasons I urge all my fellow delegates to vote in favor of this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Ikeda then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, observing that while it was important to have input from attorneys on the commission, no single group, including attorneys, should be dominant.

Delegate Takehara, speaking in favor of the amendment, mentioned her feeling of the delegation's empathy in the need for layman input into the judicial system. Commission screening, she pointed out, when done by a diversified group of citizens, could help in locating nominees with the qualities they had mentioned in their discussion of lay judges.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak against the amendment. She stated that the key was not how many attorneys there were but that this amendment would retain the same commission as in the original committee proposal--one in which a majority of the members were appointed by the governor. The present system, she commented, might as well be retained since they would then at least know where to put the blame.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 4 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate McCall then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 5, seconded by Delegate Hagino, which amended section 5 of Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, by deleting the fifth paragraph of the section entitled "The Judicial Selection Commission."

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate McCall explained:

"The material to be deleted concerns the disqualification of members on the commission who appear before a nominee for justice or judge. In the course of discussion in the Committee of the Whole, two things became apparent. First, the provision concerning disqualification as it now stands is overly broad and ambiguous. Second, the commission can itself promulgate rules of ethical conduct concerning disqualification. Provisions written into the Constitution should not be detailed, and the commission will be in a far better position to describe with the necessary detail the circumstances under which ethical considerations would require a member of the commission to disqualify himself. The court system itself can also, in the assignment of cases to the various courts, often avoid potential conflicts of interest. For these reasons and to make it much easier for an attorney to be a member of this commission, I ask you to support this amendment."

Delegate Barr then rose and moved to amend the amendment, in the interest of clarity, by changing the first paragraph to conform with the amendment just passed, seconded by Delegate Cabral. The question on the amendment to the amendment was then put by the Chair, and the motion carried.

Delegate Burgess then rose to speak in favor of the original amendment, noting the practicality of deleting the mandatory disqualification provisions and permitting the commission to make its own rules. It also, he added, left open the most likely solution--for the court assignment judge to assign that case to another judge.

Also speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Ikeda acknowledged that the intent of the original language could be better carried out by rules set forth by the commission or by the courts in the assigning of judges.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 5 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At 3:14 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 3:15 p.m.

Delegate Yamashita moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 6, seconded by Delegate Shon, which amended section 5 of Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, to read in part:

Each member of the judicial selection commission shall be a resident of the State and a citizen of the United States. No member shall run for or hold any [other] appointed or elected office under the United States, the State, or its political subdivisions except merit appointments under civil service laws. No member shall take an active part in political management or in political campaigns. No member shall be eligible for appointment to judicial office of the State so long as he is a member of the judicial commission, and for a period of three years thereafter.

Speaking in favor of his amendment, Delegate Yamashita then made the following statement:

"Today we are not here merely to shape a document for temporary convenience; we are dealing with a document which, I believe, is of great importance in our political and social institutions. Here is where my priorities lie. Therefore, Mr. President, I rise to speak in favor of the amendment. The effect of the amendment before you is to prohibit commission members from holding any appointed office for the federal, state or county governments while serving on the judicial selection commission. This would be in addition to what is stated in the committee report against running for or holding elected office.

"The second part of this amendment would prohibit commission members from taking an active part in political campaigns, or the management of political campaigns. The intent of this amendment is simply to implement the stated desire of the judiciary committee report, of insuring that the selection of judges will be based on merit and not partisan politics. First of all, the composition of the commission approved by this body gives the governor three appointments, the supreme court two, the house and senate one each, and the attorneys of the bar two. It is fairly obvious that any combination of any of the groups would be sufficient to push through candidates not on the basis of merit as we have intended but instead for partisan political reasons.

"I believe it is crucial that we try to eliminate as much as possible all situations in which politics could be used to influence the actions of the commission members. First, unless we prohibit commission members from holding appointed positions in government, it would not be inconceivable to have members whose jobs and livelihood would be dependent upon the whims of the governor. If it is our intent to introduce merit selection into our judicial appointment system, we must screen out those areas of possible partisan abuse which might affect not only the process but also the newly created commission.

"The second part of this proposed amendment is intended to answer another area of possible partisan abuse; that is, those situations in which commissioners are heavily involved in political campaigning, especially in management of that campaigning. It is not aimed at curtailing any or all political involvement but that amount of political activity which might harmfully affect, or give the appearance of affecting, the nonpartisanship of commissioners. I believe the public's confidence and support for this commission are two important factors which we must carefully consider. The intended effect of this amendment would help to foster the public's confidence in our judicial system and our judges, as well as insure that the trust is not misplaced. I would like to remind all my fellow delegates that when we were elected many of us pledged our best efforts to fully and openly consider all issues which came before us, and also our commitment to try to put forth the best product possible for the good of all our people. To submit this proposal as is, without any limit on the political involvement of commission members or any limit on other possible avenues of political abuse would be, I believe, to leave our commitments unfulfilled and our promises empty. My mother often told me when I was young that if there's anything worth doing it's worth doing well. Therefore, I urge you to vote in favor of this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Shon rose to speak in favor. He related his experience while serving on the ethics committee, at which time the committee was faced with a blatant indiscretion by an ethics commissioner who was actively involved in political campaigning. He was, he declared, very proud of the strong stand which the committee and the Convention took in their proposal to eliminate this type of abuse. It was right to do so, he noted, as ethics and judicial commission members should be above reproach. A judicial selection commission, he continued, just like an ethics commission, must be as nonpartisan as possible--perhaps even more so because the judges selected would touch many more lives in a very personal way than the ethics commission did.

Delegate McCall stated that although he supported the purpose of the amendment he disagreed with a portion of it. He then moved to amend the amendment, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi, by deleting the words "appointed or" in the sentence, "No member shall run for or hold any appointed or elected office under the United States..." as well as the last phrase, "except merit appointments under civil service laws."

Speaking for his amendment to the amendment, Delegate McCall stated:

"The rationale for this suggested change is that the language is a little bit too inclusive. As I read it, it would bar from service on the commission such persons as legal aid attorneys, and certainly some staff members in government who are not necessarily tied in with the political system. It would probably also remove many of the contractual employees of the three governmental services--county, state or federal--and I am sure many others that I don't know of at this time. To use the fishnet example, I think that the mesh described in the next sentence is quite adequate to catch the fish that we are after--'No member shall take an active part in political management or in political campaigns.' This, I believe, is what we're after and it would not catch the small fish."

Delegate Hale, on a point of information, asked if the movant intended that any appointed or elected officer could be appointed to the commission. Delegate McCall in response conceded that the word "any" was not correct, that some appointed officers or members of government could be appointed but that if the appointed official had taken or was taking an active part in political management, he was not eligible.

Speaking against the amendment to the amendment, Delegate Takitani observed that as much as possible politics should be taken out of the selection process. There were a lot of people in the State to choose from, he pointed out, and they could find good people by leaving the amendment as it stood.

Delegate Hale, on a point of parliamentary inquiry, asked if the question could be divided and each section voted on separately. The President in response advised that the amendment to the amendment would be addressed first and then the division if so requested.

Delegate Burgess then inquired as to the type of appointed officers who would be available to sit on the commission. Delegate McCall replied that the original amendment would eliminate legal aid attorneys, for example, as well as many of the staff people working in those offices not covered by civil service laws, and probably many others in the state, federal and county systems.

Delegate Waihee, speaking in favor, agreed that if the language were left as proposed, it would exclude a substantial number of public employees.

Delegate Yamashita also spoke in favor of the amendment to his amendment, agreeing that the present language was restrictive. There were many employees, he stated, who were by formality appointed who should not be restricted from serving on the commission.

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend the amendment was put by the Chair and carried.

Delegate Crozier then rose to speak in favor of Amendment No. 6. Referring to previous discussions on the injustices to the Hawaiian people, he pointed out that one of the major tools used to rob them was the court system, adding that the amendment assured that no special interest group, whether political machine or big business, could do again what had been done during the territorial days.

Delegate Ikeda, speaking in support of the amendment, indicated that he was not speaking as chairman of the Committee on Judiciary, which had taken a contrary position. He explained that if the commission was to be truly nonpartisan, as set forth in the committee report, then they must make a complete statement as far as the activities of its members. A commission that selected judicial candidates who were expected to be nonpartisan, he remarked, should be composed of members who met the same criteria. Noting the similarity in language to the ethics commission requirements, he indicated that the differences between the ethics and judicial selection commissions were not sufficient to warrant differences in the requirement.

Delegate Waihee then rose to speak against the amendment, explaining that he did not understand the reach of the amendment and its effect on people exercising their First Amendment rights. Nor, he added, did he understand what "active part" meant. Everyone, he commented, would like to see the commission as nonpartisan as possible but a prohibition against activities widely participated in should not be included in the language. These prohibitions, he suggested, could be better handled by the commission itself, just as the disqualifications had been. He then recommended writing into the report that the commission or the judiciary formulate rules prohibiting specific levels of all activities considered not in the public interest.

Delegate Liu, speaking for the amendment, observed that it went far in eliminating conflicts of interest. Public confidence, he noted, was lacking in the "upper layer" of the legal system and without it the whole process of government was in jeopardy. Potential appointees, he continued, should be willing to work within the parameters specified. He then suggested that membership on the commission be considered another form of political participation.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Hale referred to its similarity to the ethics proposal and remarked that that provision had not taken away anybody's rights, as had been suggested there.

Delegate Campbell then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, explaining that if a person chose to become a member of the commission, he made the choice, and if his First Amendment rights were diminished, it was still his decision to make. What was more important, she pointed out, was that his conduct be above reproach and that he never appear to have any political involvement.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Silva observed that a person gave up a lot to become a member of the commission but that it should not be written into the Constitution. There was, he added, a code of ethics that all the members had to observe.

Delegate Burgess then spoke in favor of the amendment, stating that the idea of a person giving up his First Amendment rights to serve on the commission was inaccurate. He pointed out that many people gave up certain political activities when they chose their occupation, and even the Hatch Act prohibited federal employees from certain types of political activities. It was, he observed, an accepted part of everyday life.

A commission member who participated in political activity, he noted, made a terrible impression, and to delete this language from the proposal would mean the commission could be made up not only of appointed officers but even the governor's campaign manager, etc. He also pointed out that the public would lose confidence in the commission's ability to act in a nonpartisan manner. The cornerstone of any judicial selection system, he emphasized, was the independence of its commissioners, and virtually all states using the system specifically prohibited political activity. When all vestiges of merit were removed from the plan, he added, all that was left was the possibility that seven of the nine commissioners would be completely dependent on the appointive authority.

Speaking in favor, Delegate Harris noted that the amendment provided an opportunity to add a degree of merit to the merit selection process, remarking that "the merit selection process that this Convention has come up with has been viewed as a joke and a fraud by the public." He then urged the delegates to support the amendment.

Delegate Sterling then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, reminding the delegates that earlier they had voted down a proposal for the election of judges, thus taking politics out of the judicial selection, and that now they wanted to leave the politics in. If this amendment were voted down, he pointed out, they would lose public confidence.

Delegate Takitani, speaking in favor of the amendment, referred to the committee report, quoting: "[I]t was the near unanimous consensus of your Committee that a nonpartisan commission would be an improvement over the present selection process...." He then referred to the amendment's language: "No member shall take an active part in political management or in political campaigns." This, he pointed out, seemed to be the only consistent sentence that the proposal would have with the intent of the committee report, and it should be in the Constitution.

Also speaking in favor, Delegate Rachel Lee addressed the ethics committee, reminding them that they had voted in favor of eliminating members who participated in political campaigning and activity and that to vote against this amendment now meant they were double-talking.

Delegate Kaapu then made the following statement:

"I rise to speak in favor of the amendment, but not for the reasons that have been given by the previous speakers. In fact, I have to bite my tongue to keep from voting against this just because of the dire predictions as to the motives of those who vote against this. As one who voted initially for the proposal when it was placed before us after coming out of the Committee of the Whole, I thought we had made some progress, and I was willing for it to go forth as an improvement over the present system, just as I will continue to vote for matters that I think are more progressive than those which are offered or exist.

"Now, I'm willing to personally support this because I think it's an improvement. It would be a foolish governor or a foolish political system which would allow a campaign manager to serve in such a sensitive post. I think that the proposers of the original committee proposal, which was amended in Committee of the Whole, were trying to make an improvement, and they did a pretty good job of moving it forward. I think they could have done a little bit better, and I think this amendment does so--but only for that reason and not because to vote against it would be to betray the people or to go for political corruption or anything of that sort. I urge those who feel this is an improvement to vote on that basis alone and not for any other."

Delegate Goodenow, speaking in favor, urged the delegates to support the amendment.

Delegate Crozier then rose to speak for the amendment, pointing out that they should also consider the people selecting the commissioners, that those persons would tend not to select campaign workers as they would then lose the services of the person for up to 6 years. They would rather, he explained, select someone not too influential in the campaign, which would thus insure a nonpartisan commission.

Delegate Alcon, speaking for the amendment, noted that what the commission members might lose would probably be made up by the prestige of being on the commission. He added that he also supported the amendment because it specified that no member could be appointed to judicial office while a member and for 3 years after.

Delegate Barr then rose to speak against the amendment. He pointed out that the language of the amendment suggested that no member could take an active part in political management or campaigns while he was a member of the commission. It was easily possible, he noted, that the person could have been active politically before being appointed--the appointment could in fact be a reward for his services. He then questioned the value of denying continued partisanship, pointing out that at least they would know where that member was coming from, which was really the issue. It was, he explained, the nonpolitical people who should be denied membership on the commission, because "if they're really nonpolitical, they won't have enough interest, enough commitment, enough understanding of the process to pick good judges." What was needed, he continued, was not nonpartisanship but balance among the partisans. He then added:

"As a matter of fact, if this kind of thing drove a member underground, so to speak--so that he wasn't up front and honest about his partisanship--that evil would be far greater than the presumed evil of knowing where he's coming from and that it is partisan."

Delegate Souki, speaking against the amendment, mentioned that he agreed in general with the concept but that the method being proposed was not quite consistent with the ethics committee's deliberations. He then explained:

"The ethics commission language merely provides the tone for the State and local subdivisions as to the minimum standards they should have. Also, one of the considerations of the ethics commission was that anything that has to do with the judiciary, as far as disclosure of charges, etc., should then be referred to the judicial ethics commission, which the judiciary has. I think in this case this particular item here could easily be referred by resolution to the judicial ethics commission for their consideration.

"Let me go further. The State also has a code of ethics and it provides for regulation of the code of ethics for all the respective employees of the State, including appointees. Now, if we're going to make an exception only for the judiciary, then maybe we should include some language to provide for all of the appointees in the respective commissions. They all are very important commissions. They are just as important as the judiciary, and they also need, possibly, this kind of purist, theoretical thinking. I'm not opposed to that. But if you're going to do it for one, do it for all and in the proper jurisdiction. In this case, the jurisdiction would be either in the state code of ethics or in the judicial code of ethics, and not in the Constitution."

Delegate Shon then rose to speak for the amendment, explaining that the kind of abuse the amendment was intended to prohibit was that in which a commission member would utilize by implication the prestige of that commission in supporting a partisan candidate--which was, he added, the kind of abuse that in fact they had with a particular ethics commission.

Also speaking in favor, Delegate Hale acknowledged that the amendment probably didn't say what they said it did, but it did say what they had put in the ethics commission proposal, and that was the point. She then reminded the delegates that the committee proposal for an ethics commission did not cover the judiciary, and that nothing in the Constitution covered the ethical conduct of the judiciary. They were assuming, she explained, that the judiciary had its own canons of ethics, an assumption that may or may not be true. Whether or not the language was the best, she continued, the intent of the language was there, and it was the intent that was referred to in the arguments for an ethics commission. She then concluded:

"I cannot see how anybody can think that an ethics commission is more important to this State and the people than a judicial commission. Judicial commissions can have an influence on whether we go to jail, delegates. Land use commissions do not."

Delegate Hamilton, speaking in favor, explained that he supported the amendment simply because it attempted, however imperfectly, to improve what they had done:

"Apparently there is some widespread if not universal feeling that the commission as now structured fails to meet the standards we had hoped. This amendment, in spite of the language, which troubles me a little bit in its lack of precision, tends to try to do it. I think it is important that we put the best possible light on what we have tried to do here. I too shall quote my mother--since this is the second time, I want to make certain no one assumes that I think my mother was any better than anyone else's mother, but I do think she had funnier lines. She used to say to me, 'If you have a pimple and you can't cure it, frame it.'"

Delegate Kojima then spoke in favor of the amendment, first stating that he took exception to the remark that what had been done thus far on merit selection was a fraud or a joke. He then observed that if they wanted judges who were nonpolitical, the people nominating them must be nonpolitical and free from political ties.

At this time, Delegate McCall rose and appealed to the delegates not to vote down the amendment just because it was an imperfect solution to a problem they wanted to solve. He noted that most of them realized this but didn't have a better substitute, and that at least this, if adopted, would make the purpose of the body rather clear.

Delegate Takehara, speaking against the amendment, explained her two reasons for opposing it: (1) that many spoke about encouraging citizen participation in education and government but contradicted themselves by prohibiting commission members from participating in political management and political campaigns; and (2) that the terms "active part," "political management" and "political campaigns" were relative and could be broadly interpreted.

Delegate Taira then spoke against the amendment, noting his agreement with a previous speaker that the amendment did not solve the problem. He pointed out that there was nothing in the law that would force the resignation or retirement of a violator, and putting the requirement in the Constitution could cause more problems in enforcement. He further noted that the political activity requirement, according to the language in the amendment, could not be enforced or even determined in the case of the two lawyer members elected by the Hawaii bar.

Speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Peterson pointed out that these individuals were not just ordinary citizens; they were nine commissioners chosen to select the judges of the State. They were people, he emphasized, in a very important position, who should of their own will choose to do the things required in the amendment.

Delegate Burgess, also speaking in favor, acknowledged the limitations of the amendment as far as past or future political activity of the members, but also pointed out that the amendment assured that members would not participate in political activity while on the commission. And that, he noted, was elementary in making a commission work. There were, he added, many people in the State who were not active politically, who were just the type of concerned, informed, intelligent people they would want.

Delegate Kaapu then spoke in favor of the amendment. He observed that while there were many ways to get around the intent of the amendment, it did, although imperfectly, reflect the intent of the Convention and it was an improvement.

Delegate Waihee, speaking against the amendment, indicated his concern that the language did not accomplish what they intended and suggested that the commission establish its own rules to handle activity by members. He pointed out that it was inconsistent to precisely regulate the members' political activities, which were closer to fundamental rights, while at the same time providing no regulation at all in conflict of interest situations, which although not tied to rights could affect ethical situations.

Delegate Sterling then spoke in favor of the amendment. He referred to the method of choosing juries, pointing out that these were harsh, clear-cut rules, established at one of the lowest levels of the judicial system, and he questioned whether the same type of rules should not be insisted upon at one of the highest levels.

Delegate Campbell, speaking in favor, remarked that contrary to previous statements she could see nothing vague about the language in the amendment. And it should not, she stated, be left to the commission members to formulate their own rules. As convention delegates, she pointed out, they owed it to the people to explicitly set forth the requirement that the commission be as nonpolitical as possible. She then observed that previous political activity did not detract from an individual's capacity to serve apolitically once on the commission, as occurred with judges who previously had been actively involved in politics but once on the bench ceased all political participation, in adherence to the code of judicial responsibility and ethics.

Delegate Yamashita then spoke for his amendment, pointing out that the committee had started out with the premise of a nonpartisan judicial commission, and they should try to be consistent with that. Referring to comments made about the vagueness of the language, he argued that the amendment was very clearly worded, explaining:

"In the sentence, 'No member shall take an active part in political management or in political campaigns,' the word 'active' would simply mean things like canvassing--you would not be able to canvass, go door to door, you couldn't hold signs, or solicit or sell tickets. This would be taking an active part in a campaign.

"I think it's very clear what is intended. The amendment is very basic and is consistent with the intent of the committee report, which was for a nonpartisan judicial commission. I think the amendment should be passed. I'll leave you with this thought--if it is voted down, with the present language what could happen is that the chairman of the Democratic party could sit on this commission. I would question if this is the intent--not to say this is bad--but is it the intent of the committee? I don't think so. Thank you."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 6 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Calvin Ching requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion carried by a vote of 56 ayes, 39 noes and 7 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Barnes, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chong, Chu, Chun, Crozier, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Fernandes Salling, Funakoshi, Goodenow, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hironaka, Hoe, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Kaapu, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nozaki, Odanaka, Ontai, O'Toole, Peterson, Pulham, Shon, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Takitani, Tam, Uyehara, Wurdeman, Yamashita and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Andrews, Barnard, Barr, Chang, Calvin Ching, Laura Ching, Chung, de Costa, De Soto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hokama, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Ledward, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Okamura, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Souki, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Tamayori, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax and Yoshimura voting no; and Delegates Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, Ellis, Fujimoto, Lewis, Penebacker and Takemoto being excused.

Delegate Taira then rose on a point of personal privilege and stated:

"I just wanted to say that this Convention--it's been called 'watch the majority floor leader'--and all that jazz is for the birds. This is an open convention, and the votes will go as the individual delegates see fit."

Delegate Takitani then rose and stated:

"Mr. President, on behalf of the minority members--and since we're on the subject of birds--we accept the crumb."

At 4:25 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 4:42 p.m.

Delegate Hirata at this time asked to withdraw his amendment and, there being no objection, the President so noted.

Delegate Ikeda then rose and asked if it was in order at that time to make a house-keeping amendment. He then stated:

"The amendment would transfer all the transitional provisions relating to the setting up of the judicial selection commission from page 7 of Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1, to page 9, section 6 of the proposal, under 'Transition; Effective Date.' It's purely housecleaning, but I understand this would make the work of the style committee much easier in handling the final form of the committee proposal, and I so move."

The motion was seconded by Delegate Hagino. Delegate Ikeda then spoke for his amendment, stating:

"We had included, in one of the sections of the proposal under the judicial selection commission, provisions relating to the setting up of the first judicial selection commission. These would be the provisions that set up the initial appointments of 2, 4 and 6 years for the appointments by the governor and 2 years for the members appointed by the president of the senate, the speaker of the house, and so forth. These, I understand, should properly be a part of the transitional provision as they are transitory in nature. So they should be transferred to section 6 of the committee proposal, under the transition section. It's a blanket changeover and concerns the ultimate preparation of the proposal."

Delegate Sutton, on a point of order, then moved to suspend the rules so that the amendment would be in order with the convention rules as a whole, seconded by Delegate Waihee. The motion to suspend the rules to consider the housekeeping amendment was then put by the Chair and carried. The amendment to transfer the transitional material then being in order, the question was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

There being no further discussion, Delegate Ikeda moved, seconded by Delegate Campbell, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 10 be received and placed on file and Com. P. No. 10, RD. 1 as amended, pass Second Reading. The question was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 15--RELATING TO THE BILL OF RIGHTS:

Delegate Weatherwax moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 15, relating to the Bill of Rights, seconded by Delegate Kaapu.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 15 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Kaapu to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 4:48 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Kaapu assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 6:16 p.m., Delegate Kaapu vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Kaapu, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume its deliberations the next day.

ADJOURNMENT

At 6:30 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, the Convention adjourned until 9:30 a.m. Saturday, September 9, 1978.

FIFTY-THIRD DAY

Saturday, September 9, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 9:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Jerry Appleby of First Church of the Nazarene.

There being no objection, the President deferred action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 77 and Com. P. No. 17 until Tuesday, September 12, 1978.

Res. No. 22 (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 8, 1978):

There being no objection, the President deferred action on Res. No. 22 until Monday, September 11, 1978.

At this time, the President informed the Convention that Com. Whole Rep. No. 14 was still in the printshop and action on it would be deferred to the end of the calendar.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 15--RELATING TO THE BILL OF RIGHTS:

On motion by Delegate Weatherwax, seconded by Delegate Calvin Ching and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 15, relating to the Bill of Rights.

The President appointed Delegate Kaapu to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 9:48 a.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Kaapu assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 12:08 p.m., Delegate Kaapu vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Kaapu, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume its deliberations later that day.

At 12:10 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 1:30 p.m.

On motion by Delegate Weatherwax, seconded by Delegate Dennis Ihara and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 15, relating to the Bill of Rights.

The President appointed Delegate Kaapu to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:45 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Kaapu assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 6:18 p.m., Delegate Kaapu vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Kaapu, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 15 as amended, and that a written report would be filed later. On motion by Delegate Kaapu, seconded by Delegate Weatherwax and carried, the oral report was adopted.

At this time the Clerk informed the President that for decking purposes Com. Whole Rep. No. 14 and Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, relating to taxation and finance, had been printed and distributed.

The President thereupon placed Com. Whole Rep. No. 14 and Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, on the calendar for Second Reading on Tuesday, September 12, 1978.

ADJOURNMENT

At 6:33 p.m., on motion by Delegate Silva, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the Convention adjourned until 9:00 a.m. Monday, September 11, 1978.

FIFTY-FOURTH DAY

Monday, September 11, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 9:00 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Akira Sakima, delegate from the Sixteenth District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present.

The President announced that the Journal of the Fifty-Third Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 82) informing the Convention that Res. No. 24 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 82 was adopted.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 24) requesting the establishment of a study commission to investigate the wrongs committed against, and the extent of the injuries to, the Hawaiian people and to recommend means of redress, was offered by Delegate De Soto.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 24 to the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTER

Res. No. 22 (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 9, 1978):

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, moved, seconded by Delegate Alcon, for the adoption of Res. No. 22, requesting the Committee on Style to consider all portions of the Constitution as to phraseology.

Speaking for the motion, Delegate Hamilton explained:

"Under the Rules of the Convention, the style committee is prohibited from reviewing any material other than that which specifically comes before it as a result of convention action. You did pass another resolution which called on us for action on discriminatory nouns, and that is on the way.

"However, the general totality of the Constitution, as far as phraseology and style is concerned, has not been reviewed since 1950. The 1968 convention did nothing about this and what this resolution does is ask the style committee to review the entire Constitution for consistency, style and phraseology, and I would recommend its adoption."

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Res. No. 22 was put by the Chair and carried.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 16--RELATING TO SUFFRAGE AND ELECTIONS:

Delegate Weatherwax moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 16, relating to suffrage and elections, seconded by Delegate Taira.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 16 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Kaapu to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 9: 25 a.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Kaapu assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 12: 36 p.m., Delegate Kaapu vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Kaapu, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume its deliberations later that day.

At 12: 37 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 1: 10 p.m.

On motion by Delegate Weatherwax, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 16, relating to suffrage and elections.

The President appointed Delegate Kaapu to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1: 12 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Kaapu assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 6: 52 p.m., Delegate Kaapu vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Kaapu, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume its deliberations later that day.

At 6: 53 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 8: 24 p.m.

On motion by Delegate Weatherwax, seconded by Delegate Les Ihara and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 16, relating to suffrage and elections.

The President appointed Delegate Kaapu to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 8: 25 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Kaapu assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 11:56 p.m., Delegate Kaapu vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Kaapu, for the Committee of the Whole reported orally that the committee had risen, reported progress and begged leave to sit again.

The President accepted the oral report and announced that the Committee of the Whole would resume its deliberations the following day.

ADJOURNMENT

At 11:57 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Goodenow and carried, the Convention adjourned until 12:05 a.m. Tuesday, September 12, 1978.

FIFTY-FIFTH DAY

Tuesday, September 12, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 12:05 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Larry S. Uyehara, delegate from the Seventeenth District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present.

The President announced that the Journal of the Fifty-Fourth Day would be deferred.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Com. P. No. 16--RELATING TO SUFFRAGE AND ELECTIONS:

On motion by Delegate Weatherwax, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole to further consider Com. P. No. 16, relating to suffrage and elections.

The President appointed Delegate Kaapu to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 12:10 a.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Kaapu assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 3:22 a.m., Delegate Kaapu vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Kaapu, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 16 as amended, and that a written report would be filed later. On motion by Delegate Kaapu, seconded by Delegate Weatherwax and carried, the oral report was adopted.

At 3:27 a.m., the Convention stood in recess until 1:30 p.m. that afternoon.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The Convention reconvened at 1:30 p.m.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 83) informing the Convention that Res. No. 25, Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 84 through 87, Com. P. Nos. 10, RD. 2, S.1; 11, S. 1; 12, RD. 1, S. 1; 13, RD. 2, S. 1; and 15, RD. 1; and Com. Whole Rep. No. 15 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Fujimoto and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 83 was adopted.

The Clerk announced that printing had just been completed and copies distributed on Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 84 through 87 which were on the calendar for that day. There being no objection, the President announced that action on these would be deferred until Monday, September 18, 1978.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 25) requesting abolishment of the "insanity" defense was offered by Delegate Tam.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 25 to the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTERS

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 77 (Com. P. No. 17) (Committee on Environment, Agriculture, Conservation and Land--Deferred from September 9, 1978):

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Hagino and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 77 was adopted and the proposals enumerated within were filed; and Com. P. No. 17, relating to conservation and development of resources, passed First Reading by title and was placed on the calendar for further consideration on Thursday, September 14, 1978.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 81 (Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, S. 1) (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 9, 1978):

There being no objection, the President deferred action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 81 and Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, S. 1, until Monday, September 18, 1978.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 18--RELATING TO THE USE OF NONDISCRIMINATORY TERMS IN THE CONSTITUTION:

Delegate Hamilton moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 18, relating to the use of nondiscriminatory terms in the Constitution, seconded by Delegate Crozier.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 18 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Fukunaga to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:45 p.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Fukunaga assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 1:53 p.m., Delegate Fukunaga vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Fukunaga, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 18 as amended, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Fukunaga, seconded by Delegate Hamilton and carried, the oral report was adopted.

SECOND READING

Com. Whole Rep. No. 14, Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1--RELATING TO TAXATION AND FINANCE:

Delegate Ishikawa, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Lewis, for the Committee on Taxation and Finance, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 14) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 14 be adopted and Com. P. No. 14, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

The President, after reviewing the order of the amendments, called for discussion. Delegate Hokama rose and requested that Amendment No. 1 be withdrawn. There being no objection, Amendment No. 1 was withdrawn.

Delegate Ishikawa then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Lewis. At this time Delegate Waihee asked if Amendment No. 2 could be deferred to the end of the calendar. The President replied that if there were no objections it would be deferred. There being no objection, Delegate Ishikawa withdrew his motion for adoption of Amendment No. 2 and action on it was deferred to the end of the calendar.

At this time Delegate Izu, speaking on behalf of the movant, requested that Amendment No. 3 be withdrawn. There being no objection, Amendment No. 3 was withdrawn.

Delegate Izu, on behalf of Delegate Hirata, then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 4, seconded by Delegate Silva, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, second paragraph, to read in part:

...The legislature by general law shall authorize political subdivisions to issue general obligation bonds and revenue bonds [and may authorize any board or agency of such political subdivision to issue revenue bonds] and[, in either case,] shall prescribe the manner and procedure for such issuance. All [general obligation] such bonds issued by or on behalf of a political subdivision shall be authorized by the governing body of such political subdivision [and all revenue bonds issued by or on behalf of a political subdivision shall be authorized by the governing body of such political subdivision or the governing body of any board or agency of such political subdivision authorized by law to issue revenue bonds]....

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Izu explained:

"What we're seeking to do here is to delete all this language that refers to boards and agencies. I think most of us would agree that this is highly technical language, and we never realized the impact of this. We found out that this is really a substantive change and does make policy changes. It isn't what some of us believed to be just a matter of clarification for the benefit of bond counsel. The language in Com. P. No. 14 would authorize boards such as the board of water supply to issue general obligation or revenue bonds without the approval of the county councils. This was an issue that we hadn't really talked about very much, and we didn't want to make that policy decision at this time. Since the board of water supply has been operating well under the current language, we decided to just go back to the current language."

Delegate Lewis then rose to speak in favor of the motion, stating:

"As indicated, this was clarifying language, but when you talk about agencies as well as boards it does tend to expand the existing authority granted to these various boards, particularly the board of water supply. I've been in contact with the board of water supply, with bond counsel and people from the City and County of Honolulu, and they indicate that the board of water supply can continue to operate and sell bonds by having them issued and approved by the city council. And this would apply for the neighboring counties as well. So approval of this amendment would not impair the board of water supply's ability to finance its projects. On that basis I would speak in favor of it."

Delegate Ishikawa, also speaking in favor, explained that initially discussion on the amendment had been contemplated during the committee meetings but it was found that more research was necessary. They had concluded, he added, that this was the proper way of dealing with the matter. He then explained:

"In brief, one of the main reasons for this kind of amendment is that Hawaii is known for its simple debt structure, and that's coupled with the fact that general obligation and revenue bonds are issued just by the State and the four political subdivisions. This kind of amendment would potentially open the gate for all kinds of agencies and boards to issue bonds. Because of this, because of the uniqueness of the State's bond structure, we at this point do not feel that we should open the gate for such additional boards and agencies. I apologize for this amendment coming up so late, but we do strongly recommend that the body adopt it."

At 2:08 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2:12 p.m.

Delegate Peterson then spoke in favor of the amendment, noting that it addressed concerns that had been raised in the committee and also tightened up the section.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 4 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At this time, Delegate Marion Lee moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 5, seconded by Delegate Takahashi, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, second paragraph, to read in part:

...All general obligation bonds issued by or on behalf of a political subdivision shall be authorized by the governing body of such political subdivision and all revenue bonds issued by or on behalf of a political subdivision shall be authorized by the governing body of such political subdivision or the governing body of any board or agency of such political subdivision authorized by law to issue revenue bonds.

Special purpose revenue bonds shall only be authorized or issued to finance facilities of or for, or to loan the proceeds of such bonds to assist, manufacturing, processing or industrial enterprises, utilities serving the general public, health care facilities provided to the general public by not-for-profit corporations or low and moderate income government housing programs, each of which is hereinafter referred to in this paragraph as a special purpose entity. The legislature, by a two-thirds vote of the members to which each house is entitled [and by a separate bill for each authorization and for each different type of project, by general law may authorize] may enact enabling legislation for the issuance of special purpose revenue bonds separately for each special purpose entity, and by a two-thirds vote of the members to which each house is entitled and by separate legislative bill may authorize the State [or political subdivisions, or both,] to issue special purpose revenue bonds [and, in such case, shall prescribe the manner and procedure for such issuance;] for each single project or multi-project program of each special purpose entity; provided that the issuance of such special purpose revenue bonds is found to be in the public interest by the legislature. The legislature may enact enabling legislation to authorize political subdivisions to issue special purpose revenue bonds. If so authorized, a political subdivision by a two-thirds vote of the members to which its governing body is entitled and by separate ordinance may authorize the issuance of special purpose revenue bonds for each single project or multi-project program of each special purpose entity; provided that the issuance of such special purpose revenue bonds is found to be in the public interest by the governing body of the political subdivision. [No special purpose revenue bonds shall be authorized or issued except to finance facilities of or for, or to loan the proceeds of such bonds to assist, manufacturing, processing or industrial enterprises, utilities serving the general public, health care facilities provided to the general public by not-for-profit corporations or low and moderate income government housing programs.] No special purpose revenue [bond] bonds shall be secured directly or indirectly by the general credit of the issuer or by any revenues or taxes of the issuer other than receipts derived from payments by a person under contract or from any security for such contract or special purpose revenue bonds and no moneys other than such receipts shall be applied to the payment thereof....

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Marion Lee made the following statement:

"This particular amendment serves to be more of a housekeeping type of amendment. It is primarily to clarify the language and style of the amendment that was passed last week. The language was written by the attorneys so as to avoid any type of ambiguity or doubt as to the intent of the original amendment. The concept of the two-thirds vote is retained. There is no conceptual change; it is merely a change in the language and style of the amendment, and also relocating certain sentences to a different order. Therefore, because it is primarily a language and style change, I urge you to vote favorably. Thank you."

Delegate Shon then rose, on a point of information, to ask if the amended material on the two-thirds vote and separate bills could be construed as an option to authorize rather than a mandate that any authorization must be by two-thirds vote and by separate bill.

In response, Delegate Marion Lee explained:

"This process is in two steps. There are four different categories--utilities, housing, manufacturing and hospitals. Each of these four categories would have an act which has to be prepared and passed by two-thirds vote. Thereafter, if that particular category which is to authorize bonds--it must go back to the legislature and by a two-thirds vote authorize the issuance of bonds for the projects. So, the answer to your question would be no."

Delegate Izu then spoke in favor of the motion, advising Delegate Shon that she had had the same questions and on checking with the attorneys had been assured of that answer.

Delegate Hornick then rose to speak against the amendment, noting that she too had had the same questions and that if the amendment were a housekeeping one the original language preserved the intent much more clearly.

Delegate Hale then requested a short administrative recess.

At 2:19 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2:23 p.m.

At this time Delegate Hale rose to speak against the amendment, remarking that because of the words "to assist, manufacturing, processing or industrial enterprises" she would be voting against the amendment.

Delegate Kono then spoke in favor of the amendment, stating that he was a member of the taxation and finance committee and had no objection to the language. The intent, he advised, seemed to be merely one of clarification. He then asked if the committee chairman could go over the specifics and reasons for the changes made in the language.

Delegate Lewis pointed out that it was not his amendment, whereupon Delegate Kono explained that it was his understanding the amendment had been prepared by bond counsel and he had therefore assumed the committee chairman might have some input as far as the rationale for the changes.

Delegate Lewis yielded to the movants for clarification, whereupon Delegate Marion Lee rose and explained that the amendment had been prepared by LRB and the attorney's office and also bond counsel.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Crozier explained that the words "may enact enabling legislation" made him nervous since it could also mean the legislature may enact for a group or an entire industry at one time, and not just one company.

Delegate Hirata then rose and offered the following clarification:

"At first I was somewhat hesitant because of the use of the permissive 'may.' But what this says is that the legislature may so choose to authorize a special purpose entity--they shall then enact the legislation, if the legislature chooses to. But they would have to enact enabling legislation for the special purpose entity. Above it's defined, what the special purpose entities are--public utilities, not-for-profit hospitals, government housing programs and also for manufacturing, processing and industrial enterprises. So, it's only for those industries that the legislature then may enact enabling legislation. After the legislature enacts enabling legislation which enables each specific entity to issue revenue bonds, then that entity will have to come back to the legislature and then have a bill passed which would appropriate the money. So in other words, each entity will have to come back twice--first to enact the enabling legislation, and that would have to pass by two-thirds vote, and then they would have to come back again for appropriations. That would also have to be by a two-thirds vote."

On a point of information, Delegate Crozier questioned the phrase "appropriate the money," explaining that he had understood the State wouldn't be involved with moneys. Delegate Hirata responded that the State would authorize the issuance of the bonds and would not be involved in appropriating.

Delegate Blake then questioned the term "may enact," asking if it had been the intent to use a permissive term, or if the word "shall" should have been used. In response, Delegate Hirata explained that "shall" would mean the legislature had to enact legislation for each special purpose entity, while "may" allowed the legislature to look at the needs of each requesting entity and judge each on its own merits.

Delegate Blake then asked if there might be a collective number of projects coming up that legislation might be enacted on, if the legislature could support one and not the rest. Delegate Waihee answered that by using the word "may" the legislature was allowed to refuse to enact any legislation; if "shall" were used, he added, they would have to authorize anybody who came in.

Delegate Blake then questioned whether this was information given by bond counsel or his own impression. Delegate Waihee responded that the information was his understanding of what counsel had said, to which Delegate Blake requested confirmation by the committee chairman.

Delegate Lewis confirmed the interpretation, adding, "Bond counsel as well as the Legislative Reference Bureau and house attorneys confirm that law, Chapter 205, Hawaii Revised Statutes."

Delegate Crozier, on a point of information, asked whether the term "shall" was not more definitive and explicit and had the power to enforce, rather than being just vague language. The permissive word "may," Delegate Hirata explained, referred only to the enabling legislation, and if the legislature chose to enact legislation it would have to do so by two-thirds vote.

If this were true, Delegate Hale then asked, why not insert "shall" in the last part of the sentence, that they "may enact enabling legislation for the issuance...and by a two-thirds vote...and by separate legislative bill" shall "authorize the State...."

In response, Delegate Peterson explained:

"I think the question which has been raised is a good question, and it's one that I was concerned with myself. However, the word 'shall' would require the State to authorize bonds for each issue that has had enabling legislation passed. By having the word 'may,' it says that the legislature may authorize bonds to be issued or it may decide not to authorize bonds--which I think is a protection. Otherwise, they would have to issue bonds. The question that was raised on the first word 'may'--'may enact enabling legislation'--if it were changed to 'shall,' then that would require the State to enact enabling legislation for industrial enterprises, for manufacturing, for processing, for utilities, for all of those different special kinds of projects. By this wording here, only those projects that the legislature decides it wants to pass enabling legislation for are passed. So I think this is a protection rather than a problem."

Delegate Hornick then rose to withdraw her objections to the amendment, thanking the committee members for answering her questions satisfactorily.

Delegate Hirata further clarified:

"There's been some concern that the use of the word 'may' would mean that the legislature would not have to enact enabling legislation. That is not true. Because this is a special purpose bond, the legislature will have to enact legislation which would deal with the reimbursements from the private corporations to the State so that the State can pay the debt service on these bonds. For this reason, this is not a self-executing clause in the Constitution. There is definitely a need to enact enabling legislation before authorizing the issuance of any special purpose revenue bonds."

Delegate Crozier questioned whether the reference that the State would have to pay the debt service meant that the State was going to have to pay out money again on this.

Delegate Hirata, apologizing for the confusion, affirmed that the State would not pay and explained that the debt service would be paid by the corporations, the public utilities or whatever entities the bond was issued for.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 5 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate Ishikawa then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 6, seconded by Delegate Blake, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, third paragraph, to read in part:

General obligation bonds may be issued by the State, provided that such bonds at the time of issuance would not cause the total amount of principal and interest payable in the current or any future fiscal year, whichever is higher, on such bonds and on all outstanding general obligation bonds to exceed: a sum equal to twenty percent of the average of the general fund revenues of the State in the three fiscal years immediately preceding such issuance until June 30, 1982; and thereafter, a sum equal to eighteen and one-half percent of the average of the general fund revenues of the State in the three fiscal years immediately preceding such issuance. Effective July 1, 1980, the legislature shall include a declaration of findings in every general law authorizing the issuance of general obligation bonds that the total amount of principal and interest, estimated for such bonds and for all bonds authorized and unissued and calculated for all bonds issued and outstanding, will not cause the debt limit to be exceeded at the time of issuance. Any bond issue by or on behalf of the State may exceed the debt limit if an emergency condition is declared to exist by the governor and concurred to by a two-thirds vote of the members to which each house of the legislature is entitled....

Delegate Ishikawa then spoke for his amendment, stating:

"The purpose of the amendment is to complete the commendable package set forth by your taxation and finance committee, by elevating the proposed debt limit provision to a level that will be unsurpassed by any existing state constitution. This amendment requires both the legislative and the executive branches to begin to be responsible fiscal managers of our public fund, by requiring the legislature to authorize only those CIP projects that are necessary, thereby requiring the executive to implement the legislature's intent.

"Under the present CIP planning and programming process, we are all aware of the conflict between the governor and the legislature caused by the governor selecting some CIP projects for implementation and withholding funds on others. There are those who contend that the governor has no power to impound CIP funds authorized by the legislature but that the legislature has abdicated its powers to the chief executive. As chairman of the Committee of the Whole on taxation and finance, I was unable to speak to the concept contained in this proposed amendment. I listened very carefully to all the discussion on the matter and was pleased with the arguments made in favor of improved controls over bond authorizations. Anyone reading the debates would agree that the vote did not correspond to the weight of the arguments in favor of the then proposed amendment. I therefore hope to correct this by offering a proposed amendment which is concise and simple to understand.

"From July 1976 to May 1977, I was a member of a project team consisting of consultants from a large international certified public accounting firm, a large New York based investment banking firm, and a public financial consultant from Philadelphia. This project team extensively studied Hawaii's debt management program, and among over 20 recommendations, strongly recommended: (1) that the debt limit formula be tied to the ability to pay--that is, the debt ratio formula; and (2) that the bond authorizations be controlled in order that the capital budget can become a realistic spending plan which sets forth those projects that both the executive and legislative branches expect to implement, thus minimizing if not eliminating the past practice of authorizing capital projects having little hope for implementation.

"Standing committee members have often referred to this study as a basis for debating questions relating to debt limit and lapsing of bond authorizations. With this background, I actively supported in those standing committee deliberations the concept of controlling bond authorizations in order to encourage the executive and legislative branches to prepare a CIP project that represents a realistic spending plan. Without control over bond authorizations, the existing CIP budget as we've had it in the past 10 years is meaningless.

"To meet this problem the standing committee offered a 2-year lapsing provision aimed at laundering authorized but unissued bonds. The Committee of the Whole extended the 2-year lapsing provision to 3 years. Proponents of the lapsing provision indicate that either amendment should significantly, if not completely, eliminate the situation that in the past has caused the State to amass in excess of $1 billion in authorized but unissued debt. Today we have before us another proposed amendment that might extend the lapsing period to 4 years, which is the status quo, bringing us back to the $1 billion backlog of authorized but unissued debt. My understanding of the proposed lapsing provision which would indicate the authorized but unissued debt problem may reduce the $1 billion backlog up to $300 to $500 million.

"There are two reasons to support this conclusion. Because there is, at this point, no limit on the amount of bonds that the executive branch can propose and the legislative branch can authorize, it is very probable that the bond authorizations will exceed the amount that the debt limit provides for by at least $50 million a year. The Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. study referred to above shows that the practice has been that the legislature adds their bond authorizations on top of the executive budget request. Therefore, since the executive budget plans to sell $150 million in 2 of the next 3 years and $225 million in the third year, we can expect the legislature to add its amounts onto the executive budget rather than substitute their projects for executive branch projects.

"Before the lapsing provision takes effect, we would have accumulated at least $150 million of authorized but unissued debt. It is then that $50 million might lapse, but then be replaced by another $150 million. Therefore the $150 million backlog shall be on our books ad infinitum. In addition, from $100 to $200 million of authorized but unissued debt to meet federal financial aid and reimbursement requirements is also possible. It is therefore conceivable that through the lapsing provision we have no protection against irresponsible bond authorizations. Where does this leave us? This leaves us with the situation that we have today, except that we have protected the public from a reckless administration which might be inclined to sell more bonds than the market wishes to bear. But today we still have a problem that many of us have been trying to address throughout this Convention, and that is to balance executive power by returning to the legislature power abdicated to the executive.

"The concept of limiting bond authorizations is not new. In fact, its existence in our present constitutional debt limit indicates that the framers of the 1968 constitutional amendments intended that bond authorizations be tied to the debt limit. As a result, appropriation bills contain two parts: the first is the appropriation which lists the capital improvement projects and their related amounts; the second part is a bond authorization which sets a dollar limit on the amount of debt authorized, and this amount equals the sum of the projects appropriated. Why might we have objections to a bond authorization constraint now? No objections were given in the past because the existing debt limit which is on both authorizations and issuance was so generous and therefore meaningless. This is clearly demonstrated as the bond market has allowed the State to sell a little over a billion dollars of debt, while our existing debt limit allows another billion dollars to be sold. The generous debt limit, coupled with the practice of front-loading by the executive branch and unnecessary legislative pork barrel projects, has rendered the capital improvement planning and programming process a meaningless exercise, since the end product--the capital budget--is not a realistic spending plan of CIP expenditures.

"Now that we have approved a reasonably restrictive limit on the sale of bonds, we must follow the precedent set in the 1968 convention and control bond authorizations. For these reasons, I submit to this Convention that they consider very seriously this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Lewis then rose and made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I rise to speak against the amendment. Your Committee on Taxation and Finance deliberated on this question at some length--that is, the question of whether there should be a limitation on authorized bonds as well as a debt limit on the actual bonds issued. The Committee of the Whole also discussed this concept at some length in connection with Delegate Kono's amendment to have a 140-percent limitation on authorizations. In both cases, the committee on taxation and the Committee of the Whole rejected the concept of a limitation on authorization.

"It should be pointed out that under the new proposed debt limit we are shifting away from authorized to issued. In other words, under the current debt limit, the limitation is on the bonds that are authorized, and as a result we have $2.3 billion bonds that can be authorized even though we only have $1 billion actually issued. Under the new fairly restrictive debt limit formula, we shift our emphasis over to the actual debt service ratio which relates to the actual debt which is outstanding. This is a more meaningful measure of standards by which we can measure our debt, and it will operate as a more meaningful restriction on the debt which the State can limit. I would add that in terms of what the Committee of the Whole has done by a series of amendments, these amendments do in fact tend to restrict the amount of authorized debt. In other words, the first one relates to the 3-year lapsing provision which has already been adopted. The second provision relates to the majority vote as opposed to a two-thirds vote; this will tend to limit the amount of bonds authorized. The third area relates to the fact that in 1980 the legislature has to deal with the outstanding $1 billion of authorized but unissued bonds. In other words, either these have to be reauthorized, they have to be encumbered or they lapse.

"And finally there is the restraining effect of the strict debt limit, which I just referred to. This strict debt limit will tend to restrain the legislature from authorizing bonds in excess or, I might add, considerably in excess of the actual debt which can be sold. For these reasons, Mr. President, I urge the delegates to vote against this amendment."

Delegate De Soto, on a point of inquiry, asked whether the amendment affected the amount of bonds that the Hawaiian homes department could issue. In response, Delegate Ishikawa explained that it should not, as all projects had to be submitted and considered on the basis of their merit and priority within the debt limit.

Delegate De Soto then rose to speak against the amendment, stating:

"Historically, the Hawaiian homes department has been a victim of whim--pork barrel and just pure whim. We just proposed some amendments for the public in consideration of funding. I think that this, despite the honorable delegate's mana'o, will indeed hurt the Hawaiian homes department. You see, Hawaiians may not be considered a priority someplace along the line. So therefore I speak against this amendment."

Delegate Sterling questioned whether the fact that 30 percent of the State's general fund budget was federal funds would affect the amendment.

Delegate Lewis responded that the federal fund exclusion related to the operating budget rather than the debt limit.

Delegate Sterling thereupon questioned if it was the committee's intention not to include it, asking if the debt limit included federal funds. Delegate Peterson rose to answer, explaining that as far as he knew the debt limit didn't include federal funds. He then addressed the question with the following statement:

"The amount of federal funds received by the general fund, which is the limiting factor, is less than 1 percent. The amount referred to in the article [in Pacific Business News] is probably the amount which was received through special funds, which is $327 million, or about one third of all the amounts which are received. Unfortunately, our spending limit is only addressed to the general fund and does not look to any of these other funds. So it wouldn't provide any additional control to include federal funds as part of the general fund. Unfortunately, we have overlooked the whole area of special funds, which probably should be controlled. But by including the area of federal funds in the general fund we would not get any tighter control."

Delegate Kono then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, stating:

"In my opinion, this is the most important proposal in the entire Convention to come before this body. I think the debt ceiling is a very critical factor here that most people are not familiar with. Because of the point in history we're in right now and the limited state resources that we have, I think this amendment is absolutely necessary.

"To echo certain comments made by others, the package coming out of taxation and finance does address the debt limitation problem--but only to an extent. It is a quite porous package, and it can be circumvented; we already know of several routes the package can be circumvented by. I must emphasize that this package only would restrain general obligation debt. It does not restrain, in any way, a revenue bond debt or special revenue bonds. I might add conjecturally that the Hawaiian homes commission, which another delegate was concerned about, would not really be looking at general obligation debt, which this amendment specifically refers to. The Hawaiian homes department has gone to contingency-guaranteed debt, which is another aspect of the debt package. It is extremely doubtful to me that the State would, in any event, engage in general obligation debt for housing projects, which is the reason that revenue bonds were set up in the first place.

"Now, turning back to the package and the reason that I think it is extremely important, the capital improvements project process at the present time is an extremely complex one and very unnecessarily so. You've heard many times that the authorized but unissued debt amounts to a billion dollars right now, which is twice the amount of debt that is outstanding. The confusion, as I explained the other day, from the grassroots point of view, is--why are there so many programs that are authorized but that never actually get funded? This confusion is absolutely unnecessary. I think that in a rational system you would expect that the amount you are authorizing to be issued would actually be issued, or have a very high probability of being issued. You wouldn't think you'd just throw all these moneys up for grabs and deceive the public into thinking that these projects would be eventually funded when in reality they were not to be. This is one of the major problems in the present process, and it becomes extremely confusing for someone who, say, feels the need for a new hospital to be built--as we did in Hilo--to confront this system with its complexities. And I think that this reduces tremendously the confidence people have in politicians and politics in general and the whole political system.

"We can very easily simplify this system, and this proposal would do that. I'd like to get into the history a bit, the reason that debt limitations are important at this point in our financial history. At the 1968 constitutional convention, the debt ceiling limitation formula was changed. It used to be the same formula that now applies to the counties, based on the total amount of property tax valuation. In 1968 the convention felt that a more rational debt limitation formula should be imposed and should be related to the State's ability to pay back the debt, not just the total amount of moneys and value outstanding in the State. At that time, however, finances were not such a critical function. It was a period of great growth all over the country, and we were in the midst of a period of phenomenal growth in Hawaii, which has carried through for the past 10 years. We've had a 10-percent growth rate per year in revenues in Hawaii, since 1968 to the present time. Going back to the Journal of the 1968 convention, it is obvious that although there were certain people--like the tax foundation--that were pushing for a conservative limit even at that time, that the convention delegates were not that concerned about imposing a strict limitation on general obligation debt. And that's why we have such a liberal formula. I might add that there were certain individuals in the convention at that time, including the chairman of the taxation and finance committee, who did want a more restrictive debt limit. However, his opinions and leanings were overriden by the committee.

"But what has happened in the ensuing 10 years, of course, is the situation we have at the present time--that there's a billion dollars of authorized but unissued debt. And 1978, I would maintain, is a totally different period in time. First of all, we've seen several municipalities and states getting into tremendous financial difficulties; Delaware, New York and Ohio, among other states, are experiencing tremendous difficulties; Cleveland and New York are virtually in a situation of municipal default. This is a nationwide problem. I would maintain that in Hawaii we are certainly not above this type of financial difficulty. It is true that in the past 10 years we've experienced phenomenal growth. However, I think that if you were to have a sense of security about the future of the Hawaiian economy for maintaining its present rate of growth, which could sustain the present debt service program, that you would be quite mistaken. This is my own personal opinion, by the way. I might add that we had several economists who did speak to us on budget and finance, who said that they didn't have much fear for the economy of Hawaii. I would, however, offer to you that even at this Convention we are talking about environmental restraints, we're talking about the redressing of many social problems and ills that were created and built up over history and now have to be redressed. All these things bite into the economic growth that would be necessary to give us a risk-free environment, in which we could issue the kinds of debt that have been piled up in the past.

"It's time that we do go into a controlled growth situation in Hawaii, but we have to understand that by entering into this situation of maintaining this type of priority of slowing growth, that we'll have to somehow be able to fund the past obligations that were entered into. Now, Hawaii has an AA bond rating. I understand it's a rather shaky bond rating--in fact, I think last year Hawaii went out into the bond market and received interest rates that would be granted an A bond rating state. There are only five states in the nation that have A bond ratings. I think this would be sufficient warning to us that we ought to look after our financial affairs and shore them up.

"I'd like to say something about the reason that bond rating companies would assess Hawaii at A bond rating and why this is becoming more of a problem and more of a reality today. I've already mentioned the fact that there is great social unrest. You've probably read in the papers where investment companies, private industry, consider Hawaii to be one of the least receptive states--I think it was the least receptive state--to financial investment. Certainly this indicates the social priority that we have. At the same time, however, what happens if our tourist industry, which is the mainstay of our industry, starts to go under? If you look at the Caribbean experience and Miami, you'll see that this is not such a farfetched idea. We should all question, for ourselves, how many of us would like all of our children and grandchildren to continue to work in the tourist industry, which basically is a very subservient type of occupation. I can foresee, in the next 10 years, that there's going to be much greater resistance and more problems with people wanting to work in this type of occupation, which does not pay very highly and that requires people--"

At this time Delegate Haunani Ching rose on a point of order, to object to the speaker's reference to the tourist industry as being subservient and having low pay.

"The point I'm trying to make is that--and perhaps other people can confirm this, or 'disconfirm' it--that the Caribbean experience indicates that tourist industries tend to run into great difficulties after a period of time. It's a rather new industry in that sense, but I think that--in my opinion, it's not the kind of stable industry that you would like to stake your future on. I think that economists have realized this as well, in trying to diversify the economy of our State. The other problem, of course, is the sugar giant, that has been running into great financial difficulties and is being hit by the double knock-out punch of foreign competition with cheaper labor, and the fact that they haven't had enough capital to build up modern technology to compete with foreign industry. So, I don't see our economic basis being that firm for the next 10 years. What does this mean if we ever enter into a recession or a depression? What it means is that, at the present time, we have a 16-percent debt-service-to-revenues ratio. This ratio will rise if the general fund revenues decrease in a period of recession or depression. It's going to become a greater burden than it is at the present time. I might add that our 16-percent debt-service-to-revenues ratio is the highest in the nation. Most states, in fact the national average, is about 4 to 5 percent. Our State is at tremendous risk regarding the debt situation we have.

"I just want to express my extreme concern about the fact that I don't think people quite understand the financial condition we are in and the necessity, at this point in history, to start looking at a firmer debt limit than we have. It is not the same situation as 1968."

Delegate Souki then rose on a point of information, requesting clarification as to the authorized but unissued debt. Delegate Lewis answered that under the current constitutional provisions, it was approximately $1.1 billion.

Delegate Souki then asked whether the unissued debt was a real debt or a proposed debt. Delegate Lewis explained:

"Under the current debt limit provisions, we have a debt limit which is based on authorized bonds. This present debt limit is $2.3 billion. Presently, there is only authorized and issued--approximately $1 billion. There is authorized but unissued--another $1 billion--leaving approximately $300 million which is neither authorized nor unissued that can count against the debt limit."

Delegate Barr then rose to speak for the amendment, saying:

"Your delegate from the home of the Portuguese cowboy, Makawao--whose district, incidentally, includes the home of the Hawaiian cowboy, Ulupalakua--would like to speak in favor of this amendment. The principle contained in this passage is, in my opinion, a stroke of genius. I would like to applaud the movant for a creative improvement to our debt limit. The logic of what is intended here is very compelling. Its result will reduce legislative politics and increase responsible planning. Rather than programs being the victim of whim, as earlier expressed as a concern, when the legislature, following this principle, authorizes bonds, they're going to have to really mean it. They're going to have to be up front with the people about what it is they intend to have happen. It will also reduce executive manipulation of bond authorization and force the executive practice to become the faithful execution of legislative good-faith commitments. And that would be a terrific improvement. I speak in favor of this amendment."

Delegate Donald Ching, on a point of information, asked if the amendment would help the State's bond rating at all. Delegate Lewis responded that he doubted any impact one way or the other, as the bond rating agencies would be looking into the debt that was issued.

Delegate Kono then rose to elaborate, noting:

"I think I might have misled the body, perhaps, into thinking that the argument I was making was that the State's credit would be put at risk. The point I was making is that people should understand we're in a very difficult financial situation at this point--in my opinion, a financial turning point. I feel that all branches of government should realize this and take it into consideration constantly and continually in coming up with their capital improvement programs. In direct answer, certainly the governor does control the debt situation. No matter how much is authorized, the governor has the final ability to issue the amount of debt, and he has followed prudent practices, which is perhaps why Hawaii still has the AA rating."

Delegate Donald Ching then asked if the $1 billion plus amount appropriated but unallocated had anything to do with the credit rating of the State.

Delegate Lewis, in response, explained that, because of the large amount, there would be an asterisked notation on the current bond ratings when Hawaii was rated, indicating that there was over $1 billion authorized but unissued that the executive branch could issue without any further legislative authorization.

Delegate Marumoto rose to confirm that the committee had received testimony that the large paper debt did tend to work adversely on their credit rating.

Delegate Donald Ching then continued on his point of information, asking if the appropriated and unallocated amount was the same as or twice the amount appropriated and allocated.

Delegate Kono responded that the total amount of authorized debt was $1.973 billion, and the total amount of issued and outstanding debt $990 million. Therefore, he concluded, the total amount of authorized debt was twice the amount of issued and outstanding debt, adding that it was a billion dollars more than the total amount of issued and outstanding debt.

Delegate Donald Ching then rose to make the following statement:

"I agree with everything the committee has done up to now. Setting the limitation at 15 and later on at 18.5 percent--I would have been very happy if the committee had set it at 15 percent and the Convention would so go on record. That doesn't bother me at all. The 2-year limitation which was first proposed by the committee I rose to speak against because, as a practical matter, I argued that it would give both the executive and the legislative branches a very difficult time in which to operate to come up with a meaningful capital improvement project. I think what a lot of the delegates do not realize is that the capital improvements budget is not like an operating budget, where it is worked on and put into effect in the next month or two after the legislature adjourns. It is a budget that is put together after the executive branch has come in with its recommendations and 76 legislators coming in and going over the executive budget and adding their own thoughts to it. This has been a matter of course. The figures show that the governor comes in with a set figure, the legislators then add to it to take care of local needs--more commonly referred to as the 'pork barrel' appropriation. Now as a result there is not enough--and I admit to this--there is not enough planning and not enough deep thought that goes into a capital improvement budget. But during the course of its implementation a lot of the chaff is separated from the wheat, and what is finally allocated in the executive branch of government are the things that are really needed by the people of this State. I don't think there's much argument with that.

"Now the $1 billion, I realize, is a blight on the State's debt limitation--if you want to call it that--but it was a legislative limitation that was put on by the 1968 convention, rightly or wrongly. I was not in on the workings of the decision; I voted for the final implementation of it and that was about it. But I think that there has been too much to do about the $1 billion. It has really not affected us in any way, shape or form. It has given the governor some operating room--maybe too much, though. Now, as to the battle between the legislative and the executive branches--there is no battle at all, really. The legislators individually try to go in and get the governor to implement. The governor in his wisdom, or lack thereof, will fund or not fund. I think that the system has been working, especially with a responsible executive. I've just been reminded--and I meant to mention during the course of my discussion--that on July 1, 1980, by the terms of the committee's proposal, that $1 billion in and of itself will drop dead.

"So now we're faced with annual appropriations which by themselves will lapse after 3 years. Now this added proposal being suggested in Amendment No. 6 will really tie the legislators' hands so that they will have a very difficult time trying to operate within both the limitation at the back end and now the limitation on the front end, so that they're going to come up with projects that will take 2 to 3 years to implement. They might find themselves short of money and/or the necessary number of projects to give the administration enough room to maneuver with. I don't think that this is good for the people of this State, especially in the neighbor island areas where the needs are much greater than urban Honolulu. I plead with the delegates--I have no trouble with the rest of the proposal but if this were to be put in, I think that we're going to find a lot of problems in the implementation of this proposal. Thank you."

Delegate Sterling then rose on a point of information to ask Delegate Donald Ching's response to Delegate Kono's statement that the State was in a rather precarious or dangerous financial condition.

Delegate Donald Ching, acknowledging that he lacked the expertise of Delegate Kono in this area and that he too had some trepidation about the fiscal integrity and financial condition of the State, admitted that the system had been a little loose and he was glad the Convention was tightening it up.

Delegate Hoe then rose and stated:

"I tend to look at this issue in a much more close-to-home manner, and I feel the point here is not one of the credit rating of the State but the accountability of our government. I feel that for the people to be promised a project and to later have it thrown out is not, indeed, accountability. I rise to speak in favor of this amendment. If, indeed, the executive and the legislative branches together are responsible for the financial well-being of this State, it seems very strange that one branch of government would abdicate its control over our capital improvements budget process. It makes sound business sense that both the legislative and the executive branches of government should exercise meaningful influence over this budget.

"I am somewhat familiar with business practices. From my experience, I can say without hesitation that I would not enter into a business partnership in which I would allow my partner the total discretion to get our firm into a position of significant indebtedness. I would wish, rather, to maintain the kind of relationship wherein, even if my partner had much greater financial insight than I, that I would be constantly consulted whenever we would engage in debt and issuances. Since decisions on entering into debt are among the most risky and dangerous decisions in a business, it seems that our legislature over the past years has entered into a secondary relationship with the executive branch of government. With the present setup, the legislature may authorize many millions of dollars more than the executive branch, exercising sound financial management, can possibly issue. It seems by giving the executive branch of government what someone referred to as a grab bag of authorized projects from which the governor can issue funds for only 15 percent, that the legislature is allowing the executive its virtual autonomy in the final determination of which projects are to be financed.

"To return to my analogy of a business partnership, this would be the equivalent of me allowing my partner, by himself, the final choice of 15 projects from my proposed list of 100 projects, and at the same time allowing him to set the priorities on these projects. In other words, I would have lost the ability to be an equal partner and I would have accepted a watered-down rule of being able to suggest, in only the vaguest sense, those expenditures which I considered desirable. By tying our legislators' bond authorization limit to the amount of bonds the governor can actually issue, I feel that we will be creating a healthy and desirable relationship of checks and balances that should apply to all financial matters, whether they be private business or government."

Delegate Waihee then rose to speak against the amendment, explaining:

"First, as far as it is coming out in the debate, I don't know what effect this would really have in dealing with our debt limitation. Under our present system, debt is established--the debt limit is based on the bonds that are issued, which is the real course to the taxpayer. In other words, until a bond is issued, the general fund is not paying for it. But when that time occurs, there's a limitation on the amount of money that can go out. So we do have a very strict limitation on issued debt, which is the time that any bond starts to cost the taxpayer.

"Now, in addition, as has been pointed out several times, we do have a lapsing provision of 3 years for any authorized but unissued debt--which is some of the problem now, where in our present situation without that kind of provision, we have been able to accumulate a billion dollars of authorized but unissued debt. There is that lapsing provision to take care of that situation, as well as a provision that would in 1980 completely lapse the present debt.

"So, with these mechanisms in mind, one has to scrutinize what is being attempted by this amendment. It seems to me what we are trying to do through this amendment is to readjust the legislative and the executive powers through the taxation article. That's a very risky thing to do. But having attempted it, let's see whether it can really be accomplished. I say that it cannot--for one, because mainly the planning and the execution functions are still left to the governor. So the governor, in essence, would be picking the CIP projects because he would have the resources to plan as well as implement them--that would be the first problem. The second thing would be that the governor's ability to allocate funds or to veto any issuances still remains. So we haven't dealt with the fundamental problem, as to whether the executive branch has any discretion with the issuance of debt. It still does. So what we are creating here is another debt limit to attempt to reallocate powers between the legislative and the executive branch. In my opinion, it fails to accomplish that. Not only does it fail to accomplish that, it complicates our tax structure. For these reasons, I speak against this amendment."

Delegate Andrews, speaking in favor, made the following statement:

"I am one who believes debt is a very good thing as a method of investing in the future. But our debt structure must be visible and it must be responsible in order to be a sound investment in our future--visible in the sense that what is authorized should have the capability of being implemented. We all hear stories of going to the legislature, getting projects authorized and never seeing anything happen after that. With this amendment, the legislature will have to remain within the framework of what it is possible to fund and possible to borrow on and possible to implement. It brings about responsibility, because it brings about accountability to those who are authorizing the debt. The legislature will now be accountable because what it authorizes would be within the bounds of what can be issued. No longer will we have the legislature authorizing tremendously above the capability of our State to borrow and therefore allowing the governor to just pick and choose and have full reign over issuance. Again, this brings about more visibility and more responsibility. Therefore I urge you to vote in favor."

Delegate Blean then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, acknowledging his lack of formal training or knowledge in the subject. He then thanked Delegates Ishikawa and Kono for their clear concise language and proceeded to explain:

"For me to totally grasp this, I have to put it in a framework which I understand, which is land use planning. I know that if you take land and you have a hodge-podge development by which you zone some here and zone some there, you have conflicting authorities, conflicting jurisdictions. Some guy can develop, the other guy can't develop, and you don't know what is going on. You end up with a patchwork quilt of uncontrolled development, and that is not planning. That is just confused growth, or confused existence. I'd like to relate this to the whole concept of financial planning, again in which I don't have that much of a background. I do know from the arguments I have heard today that if you have what I consider a patchwork system of financial planning in the State, where you authorize some, you issue some--some counts in the debt, some doesn't count in the debt--you don't have financial planning, you just have sort of financial existence. I think this amendment will get away from what I see now as a grab-bag system of political financing in the State, where the politicians try and get their little pork barrels for their district, and they take it out of the realm of sound financial administration. Therefore, I speak strongly in favor of this amendment, and I think that it will close what I view has to be a loophole in our state financial system--that is, using bonds to bypass stringent and much needed control on state spending."

Delegate Kaapu then stated:

"I rise to speak in favor of the amendment, though not with the desperate sense of urgency that has been expressed by some, because I don't feel that by instituting these policies my grandchildren will be spared menial labor or that the economy's base will somehow be shifted. However, I do recognize, as previously stated, that the governor's freedom and the governor's prerogatives and power are probably not to be affected greatly by this. But I do want to speak from the standpoint of one who serves on a legislative body in which we appropriate no more than can actually be issued. However, our flexibility is much greater because the availability of the members to meet and to make adjustments is facilitated by our schedule. However, I do realize that the State needs the flexibility, and yet with the removal of the two-thirds requirement there is less need for pork, or district appropriations. But we have the same phenomenon on the local level. However, in my legislative body there are only nine of us who can therefore share a larger portion for each, and yet the total amount may be less. Yet in the legislature, with a great number of people to satisfy, the removal of the two-thirds requirement of course will lessen that. I understand, that the limitation that is being proposed by this amendment is not so stringent as to create any pinch at the present time. But if there is a feeling that perhaps we should increase the lapsing period from 3 to 4 years, I would certainly feel that we should put some check on both ends of the debt picture. For that reason, though without expressing any extremely optimistic hope that this will make the State much better, I do feel it would be some improvement and therefore speak for it."

Delegate Lacy, speaking in favor of the amendment, mentioned the difficulty that legislators had in working with numbers that had to come out closely in a short period of time and still being able to track and plan a program. He pointed out the importance of their attitudes, in worrying about meeting money limits and not feeling that money wasn't all that important, advising that attitude was most important if the current trend was to be reversed.

Delegate Burgess then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, observing that the arguments by the three delegates who spoke against the amendment could be considered effective arguments in favor of it. The first speaker, he related, pointed out that the amount of bonds authorized would be limited, which would have a restraining effect on legislators, which was the purpose of a debt limit. He continued:

"The second delegate who spoke against the amendment, who has a great deal of practical experience in the operation and working of the legislature, pointed out that it is not an operating appropriation that this limitation applies to. This is a capital improvements budget, and that is put together by the executive and then 76 legislators add their own thoughts to it. He pointed out very candidly that that is known as the pork barrel method of making capital improvement appropriations and admitted that not enough thought is given by the legislature to the appropriations for capital improvement. He said that there is no battle at all between the executive and the legislature and the only battle, or the only disagreement, is when individual legislators go to see the executive to try and get their own particular projects allocated.

"So when you think about it, the way that system works--the executive comes in with the proposed capital improvement budget--about $100 or $150 million per year--and then the individual legislators each have their allotment of pork barrel--I think the way it works, and someone can correct me if I'm mistaken, but I believe that each senator has $750,000, each representative has $500,000, and each one adds his project to the total. Now, that $750,000 for each senator and $500,000 for each representative comes to a total of about $44 million. That amount is simply added on to the total which is authorized by the legislature every 2 years. So if you think about it, you find that the legislature doesn't really make any effort to question or analyze what the executive's budget contains; and each of the individual legislators has his own projects, and doesn't look into or question the advisability of any other legislator's projects. So no one in the legislature is making any effort to see whether the total amount that our State borrows is reasonable or unreasonable. Somehow, I don't know exactly how that got started, but I think--if you think about it, it's not a good thing to continue. It should be corrected, and I believe that the legislators who testified before our tax and finance committee actually are agreed that it is not a good system. Quite a few of them asked that we give them a method where they can say no. They agreed that they should have back in their hands some of the responsibility and some of the actual fiscal planning for the State. So analyzing that, I think that was the best argument for putting a limitation at the time of authorization as well as at the time of issuance.

"The third delegate who spoke against the amendment said he didn't know what effect this amendment would have on our debt limit. Well, actually this particular addition wouldn't have any effect on the debt limit, because the limit is established at the time of issuance. What this amendment intends to do, and hopes to do, is to put the legislature back into a position of co-partner in fiscal planning for the State. The legislature, I respectfully submit, is supposed to control the purse strings of the State, but now it does not do that. This simply restores that balance--where the legislature thinks it through and then the executive, at the time of issuance, also thinks it through--so you have a dual responsibility.

"The other argument I've heard against it is that we lapse projects if they're not funded within 2 or 3 years. Well, that indeed was the argument at the time of hearing and discussion in the committee, and we considered the present debt limit as based on the time of authorization. Under our existing Constitution you cannot authorize debt in excess of 3-1/2 times the average general fund revenues for the last 3 years. So it does apply to the legislature. The trouble is that it's so high that it really is no limit at all. We discussed at length the imposition of a more realistic debt limit at the time of authorization, but we were convinced that it was not necessary if we had a lapsing provision that was fairly short. That's why the committee put in a 2-year lapse period. The theory on that was that if a legislator gets a pork barrel project--say a park for his district--and then in 2 years that lapses because the money has not been allotted for it, he would be embarrassed to go back and do that again and keep reauthorizing the same thing. So the 2-year lapse period did tie in with the reasoning for not putting it in at the time of authorization. But in the Committee of the Whole, we increased that lapsing period from 2 years to 3 years, and we have before us for later consideration a provision to increase the lapse back to where it is right now--to another 4-year period. So if we do that, even with it now at 3 years, we don't have anything which would change what everyone agrees is a bad practice. If you just analyze all of this, basically the only thing that this amendment does is require the legislature at the time it authorizes the issuance of general obligation bonds to make a finding as to what the total amount of debt service on those bonds will be and to make it binding that when those bonds are issued that the total amount of the indebtedness will not exceed the debt limit. It's not a very stringent requirement. It simply puts back in their hands the responsibility for our fiscal planning. I would respectfully submit that that's where it should be."

Speaking in opposition to the amendment, Delegate Hirata acknowledged that on its face the amendment was fiscally conservative and financially wise. However, he observed, the neighbor islands appeared to be at a disadvantage. He explained:

"One of the previous speakers spoke about pork barrel appropriations, whereby each senator is allotted $750,000 and each representative $500,000, to appropriate out. The way I interpret this would mean each representative and each senator would be given an amount but it would be smaller. What this amendment calls for is a balanced CIP budget, so that if the governor were to authorize all of the funds that were appropriated, the neighbor island counties would be at a disadvantage because they have fewer representatives and fewer senators.

"In total, there are only 6 neighbor island senators, compared to 19 from Oahu--that's 3 from Hawaii county, 2 from Maui and 1 from Kauai. In terms of representatives--5 representatives from Hawaii, 4 from Maui, 3 from Kauai, which is a total of 12 neighbor island representatives--and 39 from Oahu. Now, if you parcel it out evenly and the governor is required to release these funds, I think there would be a lot of capital improvement projects funded on Oahu. The neighbor islands, which really need some of these capital projects, will not be getting the money because now we're talking about having a balanced budget. You can't say that because you come from the neighbor island, this senator would be given a little more money. I think that each senator would be treated equally, each senator given an equal amount whether if he comes from Maui, Kauai, the Big Island or from Oahu. Where there is need for roads, like on the Big Island, or construction of a new hospital, these things may not be funded because there may not be enough representatives coming from that area or enough senators.

"If you're talking about fiscal management, this amendment is somewhat wise, but at the same time the neighbor islands are really going to be hurting. Presently, we do maybe authorize more projects than we can actually float bonds for, but I think that the governor will select projects in terms of priorities, or which area would need them more. If the need is on the neighbor islands, he would thereby, I would think, issue funds for those projects. So by this Convention adopting this amendment, the neighbor island counties will really be hurting a lot."

Delegate Hokama rose to speak against the amendment, commenting:

"I for one feel this is very bad, especially for my county. One thing that we've mentioned a lot is fiscal policy. I'd like to bring up my rationale, basing it on typical politics. Government was never meant to be, or to be run by, private industry--business. Politics is part of government, it is part of the representative forum, and I feel this amendment adds more politics into the fiscal management game. I feel you will find more in-house politics between members and the chairman of each fiscal management committee. Who is to say my CIP project for my county has less priority than your CIP project? Who is going to say now, between houses, that my senatorial CIP has higher priority than your CIP priority? When it goes to the executive, who can say to the governor that this legislative CIP project has higher priority than that CIP project? No one here that I know of can make such fiscal projections about bond issuances for a full year and be in session for 3 months. Even the chief executive, I feel, will be the first to tell you that he cannot project very accurately for 3 months. No one here can. Then how can we limit our Constitution for a minimum of 10 years by such narrow and detailed fiscal policies, with no freedom to take in or count on additional revenue sources that may enter into the fiscal picture or less fiscal revenues that may enter the picture? I think we're adding more politics. We'll find it more difficult to get legislative approval, and you'll find a great backlash on each district's needs and projects."

Delegate Souki also spoke against the amendment, stating:

"First of all I wish to thank the adopted neighbor islanders from Honolulu who spoke wisely and so kindly for the neighbor islanders. Sometimes I wish we would look into ourselves and try to adopt some of the concepts. While it is basically true that the neighbor islanders are at an advantage in this type of project appropriation that we have, I think you must understand the political system of Hawaii, that it is not only the neighbor islanders that benefit from this system but the whole State. The political system, whether it's on a national level or state level or county, has a mechanism for its representatives to seek assistance for their constituents to the respective legislative body. It's true that it's the responsibility of the legislative body to provide the kind of assistance it still seeks. Certainly, whether it's on the national level or the local level, many times the amount that's being requested is more than we can possibly afford. However, it is within the priorities of planning within the executive that they can determine where the needs are. That is the way it should be. The legislators meet only for a relatively short time and do not have the capability to do the planning for the executive. That is why they come with budgets that go beyond. However, in concert with the executive and the legislature, they look for areas they can provide these needs.

"I wish to cite an example of things that are to come. The neighbor islanders are very dependent upon tourism, as has been cited. Tourism, and its allied products, is the major source of income that we have. Now, without any capital improvement programs you will not have the stimulus of dollars flowing into that community. The neighbor islanders and the outlying areas from Honolulu need these capital improvement projects to provide the cash flow. This cash flow is an important item for the respective communities of the State. I wish that all of you here who have any aloha and who can consider the need for the present system, please vote down this amendment."

Delegate Blake spoke in favor of the amendment, reminding the delegates what had caused the $1 billion in authorized but unissued bonds. He then pointed out:

"The executive agency has not programmed the CIP carefully. In fact, they have no incentive to do so, if they have such a lengthy period to obligate funds. The net result is that the executive CIP program is in shambles. The $1 billion pool represents hundreds of projects--who knows, perhaps even thousands--and nobody can tell either the public or the legislature which projects are still alive or which projects are dead. The legislature has been dipping into its bottomless pork barrel and has made all kinds of appropriations, many of which are meaningless and will never see light of day. The 1968 constitutional convention tried to deal with the issue of lapsing; the chairman of the 1968 taxation and finance committee strongly urged the convention to adopt a lapsing provision--and all this at a time when the State's authorized debt was less than $300 million. Well, lapsing was scuttled by the politicians in 1968 and the CIP pool is now over $1 billion.

"We all know--at least I know it well--it's not so difficult to borrow money. But when you have to meet the payments, that's another story. The amendment on the floor is one of responsibility and it places responsibility where it should be. Mr. President, I urge that this amendment, this excellent amendment, be accepted by the delegation. Thank you."

Delegate Pulham then made the following statement:

"Mr. President, unlike a delegate who spoke a short time ago, I'm not so sure I am happy that every time this body seems to get around to a tough question, we start worrying about the neighbor islands, and all of a sudden this is a priority. While I should be thankful for this sort of thing--if it were substantive I think I would be--but we cannot exist out there on baloney. There is before this body a substantive amendment which would do much to correct a deficiency. I would urge my fellow delegates to stick to that and what it concerns itself with, which is fiscal responsibility, and not be alluding to helping the neighbor islands when there is only x number of dollars. We are only going to get what is appropriated by the governor. So don't be telling me that we're going to get more or we're going to get less by practicing fiscal responsibility. There is only x number of dollars, my friends, and that is all we have to work with. So let's not be talking about the sort of thing that does not relate to the essential problem--that is, whether this amendment does or does not contribute to the fiscal responsibility of this State.

"Now, I think we're all pretty familiar with the process by which the CIP is given out. We know how it's done, we know that it's split up; but the bottom line is still how many dollars are there for the governor to work with. Now, beyond this, how do we responsibly get those programs from the legislature to the governor, in what amounts and whether they can stand. I think that's essential right here, because here's where the baloney comes in. So what if we've got x billion dollars in CIP programs on the books and you give them all to us poor folk out on the neighbor islands. It doesn't do us a cotton-picking bit of good. There's no money coming in there. That's a sham. We're talking about being responsible. If I were a legislator and I were to go back to the Big Island with a CIP project, I would like to have some sort of certainty that it was going to come next year or the year after--certainly that it's not going to lie in the pork barrel for 10 years and hope the governor gets around to spreading a little of that stuff on it. I'm much more interested in sound fiscal management than all this window dressing we're talking about. So let's not delude this body. And let's not delude the public. We're either going to do something about fiscal management or we're not. It would seem to me, and I would beg your kokua, that this amendment goes a long way in that direction. I ask you to support it. Thank you."

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Sakima rose to clarify a point--that the $1 billion would cease on July 1, 1980 and that all the CIP would lapse after 3 years, not the 10 years that had been specified.

Delegate Andrews, speaking again in favor of the amendment, pointed out:

"I'd like to make it clear that the amendment is not restricting any more of the amount of debt which can be issued. It's basically asking the legislature to work within the framework we've outlined in the debt ceiling. When we do what we're presently doing--authorizing much more than can be issued--we're leaving that amount to the lobby groups, to the person who can lobby best, the person who can grab what is available and take it home with him. I don't know if this is the best. I think we should stick to trying to see that the funds are given out to that which was the intent of the legislation. The only way we can do that is to keep the legislature within the bounds of the debt limit. Again, we're not being restrictive; we're only asking the legislature to work within this framework. They, like the governor and the State, must authorize bonds within the framework. This will make the purpose of the bonds much clearer to everyone. The last thing I have to say is, I hope that you all vote in favor of the amendment. Thank you."

Delegate Peterson, speaking in favor of the amendment, observed that Hawaii, in its fiscal policies, when compared with other states was one of the most generous and least fiscally responsible states in the nation. He then explained:

"We have discussed Hawaii's history today, and I would like to consider what some other states are doing with regard to debt, to try and put some perspective on this. At random I chose three states-- California, Washington and Wisconsin. I didn't choose these states to demonstrate any particular viewpoint, I just asked my researcher to go and get constitutions from a few states, and these are the ones I got. As another delegate suggested, almost any other state we might consider will have more restrictions surrounding the issuance of debt. Let me read from some of these constitutions. The first is from the state of Washington. It says that the aggregate debt contracted by the state shall not exceed the amount for which principals and interest--which is the same kind of debt service ratio we're talking about--shall not exceed 9 percent. You note that the amount we're talking about is 20 percent for a few years, to be reduced to 18-1/2 percent. Compared to the state of Washington, we certainly do not have a restrictive debt limit.

"I'd like to call your attention to Wisconsin's constitution, but before I do, I'd just like to refer to an amendment which I considered submitting. The amendment would have read: 'All capital improvement project appropriations enacted by the legislature shall be subject to referendum. Any capital improvement project shall not be implemented unless approved by a majority of all votes cast upon the referendum.' This means that before the state can issue any kind of bond, they wouldn't have to have it approved by the legislature, approved by the governor or whatever, they would have to submit it to the people. Now you may say that this is unreasonably restrictive, but I would like to refer to Wisconsin's constitution, which reads: 'At any time after January 1972, by a vote of a majority of the members elected to each of the houses of the legislature'--so first it has to be passed by both houses of the legislature--'the legislature may declare an emergency exists and submit to the people a proposal to authorize the state to contract a specific amount of public debt. Any such authorization shall be effective'--now note this--'if approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon.' So, even after two houses of the legislature have passed it, it has to be submitted to the people.

"I'd like to draw your attention to the state of California, that this is exactly what is done in many cases in California. I'll just read a few of the propositions submitted to the voters in California for their approval. The State Higher Education Construction Program Bond Act of 1966 was passed. A number of others--Veterans Bond Act, Junior College Construction Program Act, Home Owners Property Tax Exemption, Hospital Loans, Apportionment of Local Sale and Use Taxes, University of California Health Science Facilities Construction Program, Clean Water Bond Law, Recreation and Fish Wildlife Enhancement Act, Veterans Bond Act, Bonds to Provide Community College Facilities, Bonds to Provide Health Science Facilities. The kinds of restrictions we're talking about are not the kinds of restrictions which they have found unworkable. They believe in these states that a program which has merit will be approved by the voters. Since the voters have to pay for it, they should be able to decide whether that program is one they want to pay for. So by looking at other states, I just want to provide a little perspective. We are not a restrictive state. The limits we are talking about in the committee proposal compared to other states would not be considered restrictive by any stretch of the imagination. The E. F. Hutton report, 1976 Summary of Hawaii Credit Analysis, says that there is no state which has higher state tax-supported debt as a percentage of personal income. It has another set of figures that say total state and local debt per capita--there are only two states that have higher per capita debt and three states that have a higher per capita debt as a percent of personal income. There is only one state that has total taxes which are higher than state general revenues as a percent of personal income. These figures are just examples that Hawaii is on the leading edge, a frayed edge that is starting to become torn. One reason we aren't able to issue more of our debt that has been appropriated is that, frankly, the capital markets won't buy it. So even though we have a lot of appropriated debt, it would be impossible for us to issue this kind of debt.

"Just in summary, I'd like to answer some of the arguments posed by people who are not in favor of this amendment. Some delegates have said that because we are shifting from the point of authorization to the point of issue, we have solved the problem. But the problem was mentioned quite well by another delegate who spoke of the importance of giving the responsibility to the legislature and not allowing the governor to have such a number of programs to choose from. One delegate said that the current debt limit is relatively strict. Well, in my opinion that is not the case. We have heard comments about the 3-year lapsing period. I think that is very weak compared to the 2-year lapsing period, and in exchange for the 2-year lapsing period, we lost all the restrictions to appropriations whatsoever. So, even if we have a 3-year lapsing period, it would be possible for the legislature to pass billions of dollars of appropriations, even more than they are limited to now, without having any limit to appropriations which could make the problem even worse. Some have mentioned that we have a 1980 limit, at which time all of these authorized but unissued bonds would be wiped off the slate. That is not exactly the case. There is an exclusion for all projects which may have matching relationship with federal funds--those are excluded automatically. There is also an exclusion for all those projects for which some moneys have been encumbered. These are technical details but what they say is that this limit, which is supposed to wipe out all of the authorized but unissued, has a few loopholes that will not allow it to be completely wiped out.

"The question of the neighbor islands' local governments being disadvantaged by this amendment I think was covered very well by one of the delegates. A delegate mentioned a bridge which was authorized in 1948 but it hasn't carried any more traffic than if it had never been authorized in the first place. This amendment will not reduce capital improvement spending by one dollar. It merely lets the legislature decide which projects shall be funded. Although in some respects we are tightening general obligation debt, we are generously increasing debt excluded from the limit. In comparison with other states, our restrictions could be considered not strict but profligate. We are constitutionalizing one of the least restrictive debt limits compared with other states. The percent of general fund revenues spent for debt service is among the highest in the country. In order to justify calling this proposal a limit, we must approve this amendment."

Delegate Marion Lee then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, stating that the present system was not working and that there should be more accountability by the legislators in the CIP area. She pointed out that changing the general obligation bond issuance from two-thirds to a majority vote made issuance much easier and that they should therefore have an extra safeguard. The 3-year lapsing period, she noted, was not sufficient but stricter control could be instilled with the amendment. She then urged the delegates to take a conservative approach and put a stop to the present system.

Delegate Blake, speaking for the amendment, refuted the idea that by favoring the amendment they might lose their CIP for the counties, adding:

"You need a majority vote in the senate, and this requires a majority vote. And the neighbor islands come pretty close in assisting in this majority vote. You can rest assured that your senators will be working with the senators here--they need their support. Oahu won't stand by itself. Like this Convention, there are many conflicting ideas, and they too have conflicting ideas as far as CIP is concerned. I would like to dispell this cloud of doubt floating over your heads that if you go along with this, we might lose the CIP. That's not true at all. So I'd like to ask all of you to seriously consider adopting this amendment."

Delegate Kono then rose to speak again in favor of the amendment, stating:

"I'd like to emphasize that I do consider this to be the most important amendment before the Convention. I'll try to make this as brief as possible. I've been impressed, in general, with the grasp that the delegates have shown of the issue at hand. I'd like to emphasize the fact that this in no way is going to limit the flexibility of our debt financing program. That is a false argument. The governor still controls the issuance of general obligation debt; this in no way interferes with his ability to issue debt. The only thing that this amendment does is it makes the legislature more of a co-equal partner in the entire debt management program. I have heard that there are concerns again being raised about the Hawaiian home lands issue. There is no general obligation bond issue that supports Hawaiian home lands programs at the present time. So this is in no way going to interfere with the present practice of the administration. It has not been issued in the past. It may be issued in the future. That is entirely up to the governor to decide and the legislature to so authorize. There are other avenues, however, that Hawaiian homes have employed in funding their housing programs, and they will continue to use that route, which is the contingent guaranty route.

"I would like to quote from a letter that was written on August 10, 1976. It comes from Mr. Tom Hitch and is addressed to the Honorable Jack K. Suwa, and says: 'I think we have to start this discussion with a recognition of the fact that the legislature has abandoned its control over the state's capital improvement budget and program.' And it goes on to say the legislature has politicked itself out of power over the capital budget. Further on in the letter he says, 'First, I would like to see the legislature reestablish control over the capital budget. I am old-fashioned enough to think that while the executive should exert strong leadership in government, it should nonetheless be the legislative branch that declares what should be done and when it should be done.'

"So, in other words, what we're really doing is strengthening the legislators' control over the authorization of debt. It in no way, however, interferes with the actual issuance of debt, which the governor prescribes unilaterally. The governor may decide, if he doesn't like the programs that have been offered by the legislature, to override them with a veto. To override a gubernatorial veto in a CIP authorization, the legislature would need a two-thirds vote. The other thing the governor could do would be to wait until the 3-year lapsing period goes by without funding the authorization by the legislature. He still controls the capital improvements budget. However, what we are saying is that the legislature now, at the point of authorization, will be more of a co-equal partner with the governor. They do not have this ability right now. At the present time, for all intents and purposes, the legislature has given up their political power over the capital improvements budget. So, we're strengthening the system.

"The other thing that this amendment will do, hopefully, will be to make the system more visible. Also, I might say, since the pork barrel issue has been brought up, this will in no way mandate that the legislature will not continue with their pork barrel projects. They may so decide to continue to issue pork barrel. It's just that the amount they'll have to play with will be reduced. So I speak very strongly in favor of this amendment, and I really don't see any substantive or negative argument against it. The only argument that can be brought up is that if you want to maintain the typical political system that we have now, then defeating this amendment would do that. For that reason I strongly urge that you adopt this amendment so that we can get rid of the so-called typical politics and turn it into a more responsible system."

Delegate Donald Ching, on a point of information, asked if there was anything in the amendment or the proposal that would force the executive to allocate the funds that were appropriated. Delegate Kono replied that the amendment in no way interfered with the executive's ability to issue debt, that that was entirely his province.

Delegate Donald Ching then rose to speak for a second time, stating:

"I think that the only way we can make the legislative branch co-equal with the executive is, in this particular area of state government, for the Constitution to mandate issuance of whatever is appropriated, whether in the way of operating budget or capital improvements budget--to somehow find some way--and as far as I know, no constitution, national or state, has come up with it yet. In fact, several years ago Congress had to file suit against the President to force him to spend moneys in a highway trust fund which were not being expended by the chief executive. Now, this is true in the present state of the State here. As I've said earlier, I think that the thrust of the whole proposal is in the right direction, and I agree with it. But what you are doing is really tying the legislators' hands a little more tightly and not doing anything as far as forcing the executive to carry out any kind of legislative mandate by this amendment."

Delegate Crozier, speaking for the motion, pointed out that just making the legislators more responsible for their own duties would relieve some of the governor's burden.

The Chair then recognized Delegate Ishikawa to speak last for his amendment, whereupon Delegate Ishikawa rose and stated:

"Mr. President, with respect to a previous speaker, there are two comments before I make my concluding remarks. The first is that if we cannot mandate the executive then I really question to what extent the legislature's appropriation bill makes any sense. And secondly, the purpose of this amendment is to address that problem that President Nixon faced when the Department of Agriculture sued him when he tried to impound CIP funds in the national government. There was a movement here 2 years ago, that perhaps the legislature might sue the governor. And that's the whole background behind this amendment.

"Let me summarize some of the items that this proposed amendment does not do and then summarize what it is supposed to do. It does not unduly restrict the executive and legislative branches' capacity to authorize capital improvement projects, since the debt limit allows from $150 million to $200 million a year of bond sales in the next 5 years, and up to $300 million a year thereafter. It does not in any way affect the manner in which the proposed debt limit on bond sales operates. Nor does it establish an actual limit, which a delegate alluded to, since the amendment merely calls for the legislature to state that to the best of their knowledge, based upon available data and prudent assumptions, the bond authorizations would not cause the debt limit to be exceeded. Third, it does not require complex computations which are impractical, because its principal and interest estimates on all outstanding bonds and on all bonds outstanding, authorized and unissued are similar to the calculations that had to be made by and for the taxation and finance committee of this Convention in order to arrive at the debt ratio computation percentages in the proposal. Fourth, it does not hurt the neighbor islands; in fact, without this amendment neighbor island projects would more likely be lapsed because executive projects will be considered first.

"What the amendment does, first of all, is it provides a means for both the executive and legislative branches to demonstrate to the public greater accountability and fiscal responsibility in the area of budgeting capital improvement projects and related bonds. Secondly, it makes the capital budget a realistic spending plan and consequently permits the legislature to recover the power abdicated to the governor over the implementation of CIP projects. And it gives all of us some assurance that those projects which the legislature appropriates will be implemented.

"Given a society without credit, people would only be able to spend as much as they had available. However, through credit instruments such as loans and mortgages, people may overextend themselves and consequently be unable to repay their debt as well as meet their current operating expenses. In like manner, a government can usually only spend as much as it has in taxes and other revenues. But government, like people, has been afforded a credit market that allows them to acquire facilities and pay for them throughout the years the facilities are used. This is done by borrowing through the sale of bonds. Therefore, to protect individuals and government from going bankrupt, it is critical that the ability to overborrow be properly constrained. You yourselves know how individuals are constrained to overborrow.

"Let me read you what needs to be done in government. We have taken, in Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, a great step toward controlling the State's ability to borrow money. Through the amendment now being offered, we can provide the executive and legislative branches an opportunity to improve the State's capital planning and programming process and thereby enable them to clearly demonstrate to the public that they too can be responsible fiscal managers and accountable for their authorizations of capital improvement projects. Without this amendment the executive and legislative branches can authorize as many necessary, as well as meaningless, capital improvements projects as they please. This, I maintain, is irresponsible government that will inevitably succumb to public pressures for more and more projects beyond the State's ability to borrow more money.

"In conclusion, I submit that inclusion of this amendment in the Constitution will make Article VI the model of all other state constitutions. We would have established a debt limit provision unmatched by other states today. Article VI, as proposed and if ratified by the electorate, will give Hawaii two elements that promote good responsible government--a spending limit and a debt limit. If I may borrow an often-used phrase, I submit that spending limits is an idea whose time has come, and we have taken that opportunity to share in the leadership of that concept. I further submit that the debt limit, coupled with the provision for responsible bond authorizations by both the executive and legislative branches, is an idea that is long overdue. Therefore, I humbly ask all delegates to seriously consider the merits of this amendment and to submit to the electorate a progressive debt limit provision which includes control on bond authorizations, which shall lead the way for other states to follow. Thank you."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 6 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Blean requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion carried by a vote of 55 ayes, 38 noes and 9 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Laura Ching, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Goodenow, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Hoe, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Kaapu, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Nozaki, O'danaka, O'Toole, Peterson, Pulham, Shon, Stegmaier, Sterling, Sutton, Takitani, Tam, Uyehara, Waihee, Wurdeman, Yamashita and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Barnard, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, de Costa, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Izu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Lewis, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Okamura, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Souki, Stone, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Villaverde, Weatherwax and Yoshimura voting no; and Delegates De Soto, Funakoshi, Harris, Hino, Iwamoto, McCall, Ontai, Takemoto and Tamayori being excused.

At 4: 35 p. m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 4: 48 p. m.

Delegate Ishikawa moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 7, seconded by Delegate Lewis, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, seventh paragraph, to read in part:

All general obligation bonds for a term exceeding two years shall be in serial form maturing in substantially equal installments of principal, or maturing in substantially equal installments of both principal and interest. The first installment of principal of general obligation bonds and of reimbursable general obligation bonds shall mature not later than five years from the date of issue of such series, the last installment on general obligation bonds shall mature not later than twenty-five years from the date of such issue and the last installment on general obligation bonds paid to the federal government, on reimbursable general obligation bonds and on bonds constituting instruments of indebtedness under which the State or a political subdivision incurs a contingent liability as a guarantor shall mature not later than thirty-five years from the date of such issue. . . .

Delegate Ishikawa then yielded to Delegate Lewis, who spoke in favor of the amendment as follows:

"The essence of this amendment is contained in the bottom part. There are no changes until you come down to about five or six lines from the bottom. And basically what this amendment does is it allows the State to issue 35-year term bonds for two new areas. The Committee of the Whole adopted language which said 25-year bond limitations, except for reimbursable general obligation bonds. Well, we have added two new categories for 35-year term bonds, and the first one is where the State or political subdivision 'incurs a contingent liability as a guarantor.' And the other one is where the last installment on general obligation bonds is paid to the federal government. Both of these situations, in terms of the contingent liability as a guarantor--if you will look at paragraph (h), which is an exclusion to the debt limit--this is the area we have been discussing the last few days, involving loans for aquaculture, farm loans, loans to the Hawaiian homes commission--Hawaiian home lands loans as well as Hawaii housing authority loans. These loans--because the security behind these loans may be questionable, and also because you want to provide the lowest cost in terms of the loan, it is recommended that we stretch the terms of these bonds from 25 years to 35 years.

"Now, with respect to the sale of bonds to a federal agency, the City and County of Honolulu presently has a $5 million issue which has been sold to a federal agency for the life of 35 years at a very favorable interest rate of 4.371 percent. This amendment would cover those two specific areas and no others, and would allow the issuance of 35-year bonds as opposed to 25-year bonds for those specific areas and none others."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 7 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At this time the Chair recognized Delegate Taira, who moved, on behalf of Delegate De Soto, for the adoption of Amendment No. 8, seconded by Delegate Waihee, which amended paragraph (h) of section 3 of Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, to read:

(h) Bonds constituting instruments of indebtedness under which the State or any political subdivision incurs a contingent liability as a guarantor, but only to the extent the principal amount of such bonds does not exceed [six] seven percent of the principal amount of all outstanding general obligation bonds not otherwise excluded under this section; provided that the State or political subdivision shall establish and maintain a reserve in an amount in reasonable proportion to the outstanding loans guaranteed by the State or political subdivision as provided by law; provided further, that the State shall establish and maintain a reserve in an amount in reasonable proportion to the outstanding loans guaranteed to the Department of Hawaiian Home Lands.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Taira observed:

"Mr. President, first let me explain what is being done here so you can tie this in to your proposal. The first thing this amendment does is in paragraph (h), line 4, it proposes to change the 'six percent' to 'seven percent.' In addition, this amendment adds to the end of the paragraph: 'provided further, that the State shall establish and maintain a reserve in an amount in reasonable proportion to the outstanding loans guaranteed to the Department of Hawaiian Home Lands.' These are the two changes being made.

"Now, Mr. President, I move to amend this amendment by deleting the following clause: 'provided further, that the State shall establish and maintain a reserve in an amount in reasonable proportion to the outstanding loans guaranteed to the Department of Hawaiian Home Lands.'"

The motion to amend the amendment was seconded by Delegate Waihee. Delegate Taira then yielded to Delegate Waihee, who explained the reasoning for the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

"Mr. President, this amended amendment is proposed because the added clause is redundant. The first clause already takes care of it. There was some misunderstanding when this was originally proposed, that this type of clause should apply to every department. But if you read the preceding sentence, it says that the State or political subdivision--if this program goes into effect, the State is already mandated to provide reasonable reserves. So it's unnecessary to have this additional clause. The effect, which is the intent of the motion, would be by the deletion of this clause, simply raising the percentage amount for the limit from six to seven. So the reason for deleting this is that it's not necessary, and in fact may tend to complicate things."

There being no further discussion on the amendment to the amendment, the question was put by the Chair and the motion carried. Delegate Hale then rose to ask the purpose of the increase from 6 to 7 percent.

Delegate Waihee, speaking for the amendment, explained:

"What this amendment attempts to do is to increase the present limitation from 6 percent to 7. Now maybe I can explain what these bonds are, before we begin. This provision exempts from the debt limit bonds which are authorized to back up a guaranty that the department puts out for home loans. So they are not active issues. But nevertheless they do carry a moral obligation behind them. So, our initial thought in the Committee of the Whole was that we should perhaps establish some kind of limit to the total number of bonds that would be issued. In the conferences that took place between the agency and various members of both committees, the 6 percent was arrived at.

"Now, the problem of 6 percent is that it might not take care of all the projections as far as building homes are concerned for the Hawaiian homes program. As a matter of fact, as of this year the department estimates that $14 million would be asked for. The 6-percent limit is about $78 million; 7 percent would be about $90 million. Now, this amount of money not only goes for Hawaiian homes but it also goes for HHA, and special projects that the State wishes to undertake. Now, with respect to Hawaiian homes in general, for a long time the Hawaiian homes program did not embark on a home-building program, so that a smaller amount--which was about $30 million--was enough to take care of their needs. But since the program has picked up increased vitality, there are long-range projections under its master plan to develop a lot more homes in the future, and it was felt that 7 percent would be about right for what is needed and still keep the program within some kind of a balance.

"By the way, I might explain that this 7 percent would also include anything that HHA would want to do, as well as other special projects. So this $90 million is not only for Hawaiian homes--it's for Hawaiian homes and a number of other agencies."

Delegate Lewis then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, explaining that when they had come up with 6 percent they did not have all the facts in terms of projections for the Hawaiian home lands. It was not intended, he stated, to restrict the use by Hawaiian homes in any way, and therefore there was no objection to changing the figure to 7 percent.

Delegate Kono, speaking in favor, noted that when the issue was brought up in the Committee of the Whole, he had agreed to the 6-percent limitation, his one objection to the type of loan being that he wanted to be sure the State had a reasonable amount left in reserve. He then stated:

"I would like, if the amendment passes, to have the record reflect that it was the concern of this committee in passing this provision that the State does provide a significant and a prudent financial reserve to back up these contingent guaranty loans."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 8 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At 5:00 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 5:03 p.m.

Delegate Hokama rose to request that Amendment No. 9 be withdrawn and, there being no objection, it was so noted.

Delegate Ishikawa then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Blake, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, second paragraph, to read in part:

The legislature by a majority vote of the members to which each house is entitled shall authorize the issuance of all general obligation bonds, bonds issued under special improvement statutes and revenue bonds issued by or on behalf of the State and shall prescribe by general law the manner and procedure for such issuance. The legislature by general law shall authorize political subdivisions to issue general obligation bonds, bonds issued under special improvement statutes and revenue bonds and may authorize any board or agency of such political subdivision to issue revenue bonds and, in either case, shall prescribe the manner and procedure for such issuance....

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Ishikawa offered the following comments:

"I hate to preface this by saying this is a housekeeping matter, but I shall and may be subjected to all kinds of questions. In a lot of the redrafting of Article VI, the committee with the help of bond counsel did some redefinitions. In so doing, there was a question on whether or not revenue bonds would include special improvement district bonds--in particular, those improvement district bonds issued by the counties. Therefore, this amendment ensures that there is a clear understanding that improvement district bonds as presently issued by some of the counties are not hurt in any way by the amendments.

"Secondly, at the state level this amendment provides for improvement district bonds because there is a need for this kind of financing at the state level, again through revenue bonds; but for the sake of definition, we clearly defined special improvement statutes to make sure there is no question as to the purpose of these special improvement district bonds. Thank you."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At this time, Delegate Taira rose and made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I rise to speak in favor of Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1, with regard to revenue bonds and special purpose revenue bonds for the land reform and housing programs of the State. As we all know, Com. P. No. 14 will provide the State with a financing capability which, among other things, will assist in alleviating a major problem in financing housing and land reform activities of the Hawaii housing authority. In testimony presented before the taxation committee, the HHA described a financing program which would not only increase the amount of mortgage capital to be made available in the local market but also enable the State to provide an inflow of capital funds during tight credit periods. Under the proposed HHA program of indirect financing, the lower interest rate is passed on to the young 'gap' group unable to afford the high purchase price of a home, the elderly and families wishing to rent dwelling units, as well as qualified families wishing to convert their leasehold residences to fee simple ownership under the land reform act.

"With this 'in house' capability to provide long-term financing for land reform and housing, the State will have sufficient tools to plan effectively and serve the thousands of families in need of decent and affordable shelter. Therefore, Mr. President, I would like to insert this into the record in behalf of all of my colleagues who feel very strongly that housing for the gap group, as well as the elderly and others in need, needs a lot of help in our State. Thank you."

There being no further discussion, Delegate Ishikawa moved, seconded by Delegate Lewis, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 14 be received and placed on file and Com. P. No. 14, RD. 1 as amended, pass Second Reading. The question was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

The Clerk announced that Com. Whole Rep. No. 15 and Com. P. No. 15, RD. 1, had been printed and distributed for decking purposes. The President thereupon placed them on the calendar for further consideration on Friday, September 15, 1978.

ADJOURNMENT

At 5:12 p.m., on motion by Delegate Silva, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Wednesday, September 13, 1978.

FIFTY-SIXTH DAY

Wednesday, September 13, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Dennis Koshko of the Cathedral of Our Lady of Peace.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Cabral, Calvin Ching, Chun, Eastvold, Fernandes Salling, Ontai and Wurdeman who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Fifty-Fourth and Fifty-Fifth Days had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 88) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 89 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Sutton and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 88 was adopted.

Delegate De Soto, for the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 89) recommending the adoption of Res. No. 24, requesting the establishment of a study commission to investigate the wrongs committed against, and the extent of the injuries to, the Hawaiian people and to recommend means of redress.

On motion by Delegate De Soto, seconded by Delegate Kaapu and unanimously carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 89 and Res. No. 24 were adopted.

ORDER OF THE DAY

At this time the Clerk reported that Com. Whole Rep. No. 16 had not been received and requested that action on it be deferred.

There being no objection, the President announced that action on Com. Whole Rep. No. 16 and Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, relating to suffrage and elections, would be deferred until Thursday, September 14, 1978.

Delegate Chung then rose on a point of personal privilege, and stated:

"My point, Mr. President and fellow delegates, is that I wish to apologize to this body for my usage of an offensive word yesterday morning. I ask that this particular word be expunged. This all happened when we were talking about the old problem of initiative, and I just want to sincerely express my apologies to [Committee of the Whole] Chairman Kekoa Kaapu, who did a great job, and to all my fellow delegates and the spectators here yesterday morning. Thank you."

Delegate Crozier then rose on a point of personal privilege and stated his concern about what was being done that day, that other than Res. No. 24 there had been no business conducted. With only 7 days left, he stated, the day should be used more productively--such as taking up those issues scheduled for Third Reading, rather than leaving them until the end when there would be a mad rush and possibly Sunday work.

The President responded that, relative to the Committee of the Whole discussion on environment, since Com. P. No. 17 had only passed First Reading the day before, it was customary to wait 2 days. He also pointed out that a number of delegates had indicated they were trying to resolve conflicting positions on some of the key issues and that inasmuch as there would be a full day available tomorrow, the Chair thought it wise to carry it over.

He then observed that, concerning Third Readings, it was not possible to schedule these on short notice but that they would in due time afford those who wanted the time on Third Reading a full opportunity.

Delegate Hale, on a point of personal privilege, rose to register a complaint about keeping the delegates in session until early in the morning, when, she stated, nobody could vote intelligently on anything--in view of the fact that there was almost nothing scheduled for that day.

ADJOURNMENT

At 1:52 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi and carried, the Convention adjourned until 9:00 a.m. Thursday, September 14, 1978.

FIFTY-SEVENTH DAY

Thursday, September 14, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 9:00 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Gary Secor of St. Anthony's Church, Kailua.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present.

The President announced that the Journal of the Fifty-Sixth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 90) informing the Convention that Com. Whole Rep. Nos. 16 and 17, Com. P. Nos. 16, RD. 1, and 18, RD. 1, and Res. No. 26 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 90 was adopted.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTION

A resolution (Res. No. 26) relating to the care and maintenance of state moneys was offered jointly by Delegates Sakima and Barr.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 26 to the Committee on Taxation and Finance.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTERS

Com. Whole Rep. No. 16 (Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1) (Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections--Deferred from September 13, 1978):

There being no objection, the President deferred action on Com. Whole Rep. No. 16 and Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, to Saturday, September 16, 1978.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 76 (Com. P. No. 7, RD. 2) (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 9, 1978):

There being no objection, action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 76 and Com. P. No. 7, RD. 2, was deferred to Monday, September 18, 1978.

GENERAL ORDER

Com. P. No. 17--RELATING TO CONSERVATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF RESOURCES:

Delegate Chang moved that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 17, relating to conservation and development of resources, seconded by Delegate Hagino.

The motion that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole to consider Com. P. No. 17 was put by the Chair and carried.

The President appointed Delegate Okamura to be Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

At 9:18 a.m., the President vacated the Chair and Delegate Okamura assumed the Chair for the Committee of the Whole.

At 2:28 p.m., Delegate Okamura vacated the Chair and the President resumed the Chair.

Delegate Okamura, for the Committee of the Whole, reported orally that the committee had completed deliberations on the matter referred to it and recommended passage on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 17 as amended, and that a written report would be filed later.

On motion by Delegate Okamura, seconded by Delegate Chang and carried, the oral report was adopted.

At 2:45 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2:48 p.m.

At this time, Delegate De Soto rose on a point of personal privilege to express the appreciation of the Convention to the sergeant at arms and his staff for their excellent and dedicated service.

The President then commended Delegate Okamura for his fine job as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and Delegate Chang for his leadership as chairman as well as the members of the Committee on Environment, Agriculture, Conservation and Land.

ADJOURNMENT

At 2:54 p.m., on motion by Delegate Silva, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the Convention adjourned until 9:00 a.m. Friday, September 15, 1978.

FIFTY-EIGHTH DAY

Friday, September 15, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 9:00 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Marcelliano K. Villaverde, delegate from the Third District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates DiBianco, Fernandes Salling and Ishikawa who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Fifty-Seventh Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 91) informing the Convention that Com. Whole Rep. No. 18 and Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 91 was adopted.

ORDER OF THE DAY SECOND READING

Com. Whole Rep. No. 15, Com. P. No. 15, RD. 1--RELATING TO THE BILL OF RIGHTS:

Delegate Kaapu, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Weatherwax, for the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 15) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 15 be adopted and Com. P. No. 15, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

At 9:23 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 9:25 a.m.

Discussion then being in order, the President, noting that Amendment No. 1 had been deferred to the end of the discussion, recognized Delegate Ledward, who moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Kaapu, which amended section 5 of Com. P. No. 15, RD. 1, to read:

Whenever a grand jury is [empanelled] impaneled, there shall be an independent counsel appointed [in accordance with] as provided by law to advise the members of the grand jury regarding [the] matters brought before it. Independent counsel shall be selected from among those persons [admitted to practice before] licensed to practice law by the supreme court of the [state] State and shall not be a public employee. [Term] The term and compensation for independent counsel shall be [established] as provided by law.

Delegate Ledward explained that this was a housekeeping amendment, changing the phrase "admitted to practice before the supreme court" to "licensed to practice law by the supreme court," and making a few other grammatical changes.

Delegate Sterling rose to inquire if the amendment was actually from the style committee, which Delegate Ledward affirmed, adding that it also had the approval of the committee chairman and that legal counsel had recommended its passage on the floor instead of in committee.

Delegate Weatherwax then voiced his approval of the amendment, adding that the changes would qualify things.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 15, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate Hale then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 3, seconded by Delegate Kaapu, which amended section 6 of Com. P. No. 15, RD. 1, to read:

With due concern for the interests of free speech and press, the [The] right of the people to privacy is recognized and shall not be infringed without the showing of a compelling state interest. The legislature shall take affirmative steps to implement this right.

Delegate Hale, speaking for the amendment, explained that she was submitting it at the request of members of the press and that she had a statement of intent from their legal counsel, which she wished to have entered into the record. She then read the following statement:

"By equating the right to privacy with First Amendment rights and thus insuring its status as a fundamental right for purposes of constitutional analysis, it is not the intent of your Committee to interfere in any manner whatsoever or otherwise infringe upon the equally fundamental guarantees of freedom of speech and press. As the majority opinion of Justice William J. Brennan, Jr. makes perfectly clear in Time v. Hill, 385 U.S. 374 (1967):

'The guarantees of speech and press are not the preserve of political expression or comment upon public affairs, essential as those are to healthy government. One need only pick up any newspaper or magazine to comprehend the vast range of published matter which exposes persons to public view, both private citizens and public officials. Exposure of the self to others in varying degrees is a concomitant of life in a civilized community. The risk of this exposure is an essential incident of life in a society which places a primary value on freedom of speech and of press.'

"In this context, your Committee fully supports the sentiment of Chief Justice Warren E. Burger that:

'For better or worse, editing is what editors are for: and editing is the selection and choice of material. That editors--newspaper or broadcast--can and do abuse the power is beyond doubt, but... calculated risks of abuse are taken in order to preserve higher values.'

"It is the express intention of your Committee that the State Constitution should afford significant privacy protection against unwarranted and unreasonable governmental intrusion and abuse. As Justice Louis Brandeis concluded in Olmstead v. U.S., 277 U.S. 438 (1928), the most comprehensive right conferred by our founding fathers in the U.S. Constitution, and the right most valued by Americans, is the right to be left alone by the government. Thus, the U.S. Constitution has been interputed to afford privacy from governmental intrusions into a wide spectrum of deeply personal decisions. These privacy rights have included the right to marry regardless of the race of one's spouse; the right to obtain contraceptives; the right to an abortion; and other personal decisions relating to family relationships and child rearing.

"To the extent that the right to privacy embodied in the proposed amendment relates to the protection of each individual from the government, in the words of Justice Brandeis, '...every unjustifiable intrusion by the government upon the privacy of the individual, whatever the means employed, must be deemed a violation of the [Constitution].'"

Delegate Hale then added that some members of the press had feared that, since the Convention had not confirmed their right of access to government records, they could be denied access. This, she explained, was the reason for the amendment--to assure that, in the interpretation of the right to privacy, the rights of free speech and a free press were not cut off.

Delegate Hino, on a point of information, inquired if, in those states that had a constitutional provision on the right to privacy, there was any information that the media had been harassed or injured in its function of informing the public, because of the provision. Delegate Hale responded that she had no information. Delegate Hino then rose to speak against the amendment, stating:

"The privacy proposal was purposely worded in general terms to stand the test of time and to give the courts the necessary flexibility to apply the provision to situations we may not foresee today.

"I respect the concerns raised by the delegate from the volcanic Island of Hawaii that the privacy provision could be abused as a cause of action against the press. But any provision in the Constitution is subject to abuse. We have seen the freedom of speech and even the freedom of religion provisions used as excuses or defenses for some shameful actions by people. Yet I would not have it any other way. I remind the delegates that freedom of the press too has been misused in irresponsible fashion on the local scene. I believe it is up to the courts to balance the various competing interests to achieve a sound decision in any dispute between the press and segments of the public it purports to inform.

"Just a few days ago, we debated at great length the concern that law enforcement would be hampered by the privacy provision, notwithstanding the fact that Article I, Section 5, relating to search and seizure, was left intact. If we were to accommodate the press and approve this amendment, we should, in fairness to the prosecutor delegate from Maui, add a clause exempting police officers. We should add to the list doctors and nurses, schoolteachers, aspiring political candidates, salespersons, telephone companies and so on, and on.

"Fellow delegates, I remind you again that this is a constitution we are amending, not a comprehensive code or statute. Where possible, we should only state broad principles and goals, and let details develop through statute and case law. For this reason we added, 'The legislature shall take affirmative steps to implement this right.'

"In the judicial arena the press is abundantly protected by basic First Amendment rights relating to freedom of speech and freedom of the press. The newspapers are presumed to meet the test of compelling state interest when they inform the public of daily events. The press is given greater protection than police officers and businesses in the performance of its function to inform the public and keep government honest. By the decision in New York Times v. Sullivan, the press is immune from suits for misinformation printed about public officials or newsworthy people and topics unless the aggrieved person can show that malice--not mistake or mere sloppiness--was the reason for the damaging statement. The rationale was that out of all the utterances in the media, the public would finally perceive the truth. I would certainly not want the protection afforded the press to be expanded beyond this limit by approving the proposed amendment.

"If the press is truly concerned that the privacy proposal would require closer review of the news they print about ordinary people, I am elated, because the desired effect is taking place even before Third Reading. I hope the bureaucracy of the legislature, the executive and the judiciary would respond in like manner so that the rights of the poor, nonconformists and free-thinking people are given some consideration before restrictive rules are implemented. For these reasons, I would urge the delegation to turn down this amendment."

Delegate Weatherwax then spoke against the amendment, pointing out that as he saw it the amendment was unnecessary, being in an earlier section of the Constitution.

Delegate Sutton, speaking against the amendment, noted that the prefixed phrase referred to "concern for the interests of free speech and press" but the right to privacy was not limited to those two areas. The intent, he added, would seem to be only that of free speech and press, as the amendment was worded.

Delegate McCall rose to speak in favor of the amendment, observing that it would eliminate a possible conflict between two sections of the Constitution. The amendment, he noted, clarified that the right to privacy section was conditioned on the present Section 3 that guaranteed a certain amount of freedom of the press.

On a point of information, Delegate Burgess asked if the eight states with similar privacy provisions in their constitutions had two such provisions. Delegate Hino, in response, referred to Alaska's constitution which had a provision relating to invasions of privacy, pointing out that it had not been incorporated into the Fourth Amendment which they substantially adopted.

Delegate Burgess then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, explaining:

"Currently none of the other states--except perhaps Alaska, and I'm not sure what Alaska says--but no other state has two privacy provisions, and for that reason I believe this amendment is necessary to clarify the intent of that section.

"Our Section 5, which has been in effect since 1968, says: 'The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects against unreasonable searches, seizures, and invasions of privacy shall not be violated. . . .' That protects the people of Hawaii from invasions of privacy by the government and that's what Justice Brandeis was referring to, the very important right to be left alone by the government. And that's what we're trying to protect. Now the intent in adding this new section, which refers to the right of the people to privacy, is currently something above and beyond--and something more--than that time-honored and tested provision which protects all of us against invasions of privacy by the government. And because it's not clear what that means it could easily be construed to mean and to give the legislature specific authority to suppress information about government officials. It can be used, not as a means of protecting the people and protecting their rights, but as a means of suppression, and for that reason, if we have it at all, I think we should add this clarifying language that shows it is not intended to in any way abridge the rights of free speech and free press."

Delegate Hale then rose and stated:

"I had become a little disturbed during the debate that took place in the Committee of the Whole, as to the intent of the right to privacy section, and I put in a proposal, the right to privacy, that was taken directly from the Alaska right to privacy, and the reason I put it in was based upon the LRB report on this particular section; it pointed out that Alaska's right to privacy would seem to be stronger than ours, and their supreme court had ruled that it was permissible to smoke marijuana in the sanctity of the home, and I think to cultivate it. And that was my concern. Now in committee the concerns got broadened, and in the Committee of the Whole I think even more broadened, to computer data and unwanted mail and Playboy magazine and all kinds of things, which was not my intent and which I had no inkling would be covered under the right to privacy. So I did agree to put in this amendment to make sure that the clarification was there.

"I think if we agree with the delegate who said that we have been redundant because we have the right to privacy now twice in the same article--Article I--and I'm possibly of the opinion now that if we are not willing to put freedom of the press in to make sure that this is not what we are aiming at--that we are not for a dictatorial government in which we don't know what's going on--then perhaps we should not put the right to privacy amendment in at all, because we already have it as far as searches and seizures, and perhaps a more liberal supreme court would interpret that searches and seizures could protect the person smoking marijuana in his own home. And to be honest, people have told me that when I said this, it would kill the amendment and that's too bad, but I want the record to show this is the reason I put it in. And if the rest of you don't agree, then perhaps we should take it out. But I think this amendment shows that we are concerned. Since we have right to privacy twice and it might be confusing, perhaps we should indicate the free press twice so there will be something for which the courts can take our intent in making an interpretation, if and when it goes to litigation.

"So I would hope that you vote for this amendment, but if you don't perhaps we should reconsider putting the right to privacy in at all, and vote the whole section down. I urge your adoption of this amendment."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 15, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 3 was put by the Chair and the motion failed.

Delegate Hale then asked if a motion would be in order to reconsider the previous action on the right to privacy section. The President responded that it would have been in order within 48 hours if Delegate Hale had voted on the winning side. Affirming that her vote had been with the majority, Delegate Hale inquired as to reconsideration or if the proper motion would be to delete the section. The President explained that since the action had been taken in the Committee of the Whole, reconsideration would not then be in order and a written amendment for deletion was necessary. Delegate Hale further inquired as to reconsideration on a proposal after it had passed Second Reading. The President responded that he did not think it was in order and called for a short administrative recess to check.

At 9:51 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 9:57 a.m.

The President at this time announced that Delegate Hale's amendment would be accepted although counter to the written form requirement. Delegate Hale thereupon rose and moved to amend Com. P. No. 15, RD. 1, by deleting section 6 in its entirety, seconded by Delegate Wurdeman.

Delegate Sutton, on a point of order, questioned whether a motion to suspend the rules would be in order, to which the President responded that the amendment would be accepted as stated, in the interests of accommodating the delegate.

Delegate Sterling then rose, on a point of information, to state that the matter should be submitted to legal counsel because of the possible conflict in sections relating to freedom of the press and invasions of privacy.

Delegate Les Ihara then questioned whether the amendment was out of order. If the amendment had been officially submitted, the President responded, it would have been in order and since an exception had been made, discussion would proceed.

Delegate Kojima, on a point of information, questioned the movant's change of mind, to which Delegate Hale explained:

"Yesterday George Chaplin of The Honolulu Advertiser phoned and said he had consulted with his legal counsel and, as a member of the press and as a publisher, was concerned; and his legal counsel had requested it. I think he called members of the committee, called the President, and called me. I seem to be the only one willing to submit an amendment on that basis. And, to the delegate from Kauai, my reasoning--I thought I explained very clearly--and I think you voted against the right to privacy because I told you my original intent was to protect the smoking of marijuana in the home. You said that as a school principal you couldn't and still have the respect of your children, and I respected your right to vote against it. Well, I am still for the right to smoke marijuana in the privacy of the home, but I am not for the right-- I submitted proposals to that effect--making marijuana legal, or putting it on the ballot--and those proposals were all filed, so this was a nice way of getting around it and I was told that this might accomplish it."

Then speaking in support of her amendment, Delegate Hale observed:

"I'm not sure that my original intent is going to be accomplished by this without the guarantee that we are not labeling this as an anti-press and free speech amendment which was requested. This concern was brought out in the Committee of the Whole and I almost voted against this proposal there because of this concern, but at that time I had nobody to give me any real legal advice on any concerns. But because I had fought for this in committee and because I still believed that it would protect these rights I was concerned about, I went along with the proposal as it was presented. But when it was pointed out that now, because we have two sections on privacy and only one section on freedom of speech, maybe this is going to do something to freedom of speech.

"My concern with freedom of speech and the press is far more than the concern to smoke marijuana. I don't smoke marijuana, you know--I had trouble with a teenage son who smoked it but I don't--but I don't think people should be put in jail for smoking it. But this is not really the question; the question before us is freedom of the press and speech, and I certainly would not like to do anything that would leave any doubt that I was somehow curtailing freedom of speech and press, and therefore, without that amendment to protect that right, I'm going to have to vote against the whole right to privacy."

Delegate Campbell then rose and asked if counsel for the bill of rights committee could state whether the right to privacy provision as written would jeopardize free speech as such. The President responded that that would not be in order, adding that presumably this had already been discussed.

On a point of information, Delegate Shon asked if this ruling was based on a difference in rules between this Convention and the 1968 one, in which they had recessed to consult counsel, whose opinion was then read to the delegates, or if this was an area they would just not be getting into.

The President responded that he had no objection to the procedure if it was felt necessary, repeating that the committee had presumably examined this area.

Delegate Weatherwax then rose to speak against the amendment to delete, explaining:

"We went through this in committee and in the Committee of the Whole, and at that time--at least in committee--legal counsel was available and the intent was made quite clear by legal counsel as to the relationship of the right to privacy, and to the press. The good delegate from Hilo perhaps should go back and recall the reference to that. The right to privacy was made clear and I would ask your support now at this time; here it is, the very last hour before consideration of Com. P. No. 15 on this particular issue--and this is one of its major planks--and now there's a change of mind by what I believe to be an unfounded fear, and that in fact the language should be left to the courts and I believe at that time there should be no problem. If there is a conflict, I think the First Amendment rights already in the Constitution have weight against the right to privacy and would be valid, but it would be for the courts to determine."

Delegate Hale, on a point of information, questioned where the committee report stated that this did not infringe upon the rights of the press. Delegate Weatherwax responded that his reference had been to legal counsel who had been available in the committee and that the question had been answered, although perhaps not included in the committee report.

Delegate Sterling then rose and requested an administrative recess in order to consult with counsel, because of the sufficient substance of the subject.

At 10:10 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 10:22 a.m.

At this time Delegate Burgess rose and made the following statement:

"Mr. President, we have spent the recess in discussion with counsel. I don't think we have, however, resolved any of the questions. I would like to speak in favor of the amendment and point out some of the considerations that we did discuss. The concern is that by putting in this new and second section relating to the right to privacy, that that would not only insure the right to privacy, which is already insured, but would go beyond that and might in fact be used as an infringement on the rights of speech and the press. And already under the United States Constitution, as interpreted by the U.S. supreme court, we are all protected against invasions of our privacy. The U.S. Constitution does not have language relating to right to privacy--even in the Fourth Amendment it does not--and yet in spite of that the U.S. supreme court has held in many specific instances that there is a right to privacy which may not be invaded. For example--I'll just mention some of the cases that counsel pointed out to me--in Griswold v. Connecticut, the state of Connecticut had a statute prohibiting the dissemination of information about contraception. It was held that this was a violation of privacy and that the person's right to gather information as to contraception was protected under the U.S. Constitution. In Stanley v. Georgia, the right of a person to have obscene materials in the privacy of the home was protected. Roe v. Wade was the abortion case where a woman's right to make her own decision as to whether or not to have an abortion was protected by her right to personal privacy. In Loving v. Virginia, which prohibited interracial marriages, that was felt to be unconstitutional because it was an invasion of the right to privacy. All of these protections were by the U.S. supreme court under the U.S. Constitution, which has no language such as this at all. And all of those protections are presently in effect and do protect each of us in the State of Hawaii against invasion of our privacy.

"And in addition, in 1968--as if we didn't have enough protection--in 1968 the words protecting us specifically against invasions of privacy were added to Hawaii's Constitution. So we do now enjoy substantial protection against invasions of our personal privacy. And the thing which disturbs many of us--and counsel for the newspapers indicated during the recess that he had spoken last night to Mr. Arthur Miller who is a constitutional expert in Washington, D.C.--that the language of this section can be construed as a means and a method of harassment of not only newspaper reporters but anybody in the exercise of their free speech. So the risk, therefore, is that by trying to do a good thing, which is to insure that we are protected in our right to privacy, we are going too far the other way and that is, seriously infringing on those other fundamental rights which are so important in a democracy. So I would urge that this amendment be supported and this section be deleted. Failing that, I would respectfully ask that the report of the Committee of the Whole, or a committee report, should be worded so as to make it clear that adoption of this section--if this amendment is not voted upon favorably--does not intend in any way to infringe on the other fundamental rights of speech and press."

Delegate Sterling rose to voice his agreement and urged that the section be deleted.

Delegate Hanaïke then spoke against the amendment, observing that it had been their intention only to make a simple statement recognizing the fact that they had always had the right to privacy. The problem, she pointed out, had been with case law in different states, which law had been applied inequally by the courts. As far as the Bill of Rights, she continued, all rights were equal, and mentioning a word twice didn't make it any more so. She then explained that privacy had not been included in the Bill of Rights originally because it had not been a problem 200 years ago, but in recognition of its consideration today it should be added.

Delegate Anae, speaking in opposition to the amendment, referred to a case at Brigham Young University, in which the federal government had mandated that the dorms be integrated. Brigham Young, he pointed out, had based its case on the right to privacy, but it was not upheld. He then concluded:

"I am a concerned citizen, and I feel that in the State of Hawaii the same practice may occur with some of our private institutions because the right to privacy statute in our Constitution is not up to the level of the First Amendment rights. And this is the reason I am in favor of the original proposal and against the amendment to delete."

Delegate Crozier rose to speak for the amendment, explaining that he had thought the right to privacy provision would replace the other statement in the Constitution, and that if there were now to be two sections dealing with the same subject, he would support the amendment to delete.

Delegate Campbell then spoke in favor of the motion, stating:

"I do not recall of my own knowledge--and perhaps my memory fails me--that we ever discussed the rights of freedom of speech and freedom of the press juxtaposed with the right to privacy. I am very much in favor of the right to privacy and I do feel that the interpretations of the Ninth and Tenth Amendments to the federal Constitution have construed the right to privacy to protect the many areas which the maker of this original proposal had in mind. But if in any way the rights of freedom of speech and freedom of the press would be jeopardized, then to me that jeopardizes all of us."

"I have said before on this floor, and I am still very much concerned, that there are a number of areas which need to be explored by the press and which the public needs to know about in the area of crime. And if the press, for example, were to seek out and try to get information about organized or syndicate crime, and if this could be used as a weapon against a free press, then I believe that all of us would be in jeopardy. And for this reason I would urge my fellow delegates to vote in favor of this amendment. Mahalo."

Delegate Barnes, speaking in favor of the amendment, voiced agreement that in the privacy law area decisions had been on a case-by-case basis, and issues coming up would still be based on U.S. supreme court cases. This language, he pointed out, did not add anything that would be of help to a court in the future.

Delegate Chong then spoke against the amendment, stating:

"I can't really believe what I'm hearing this morning. It seems to me that this amendment came about because we did not allow any more privilege to the press, so now what you're doing is taking away my right to privacy by offering this amendment to cover the press. I resent that. I believe that I, as a private citizen, have a right to privacy. And I believe that if I make a statement I should be accountable for it, whether it's right or whether it's wrong. And I believe that the press should also be accountable for what they print, which many people pay to read. Nobody pays to read what I say, but they certainly pay to read what the press says, so they'd better be a little more careful of what they print.

"Now, I voted against giving legislators the same type of privileges that the press has, and I use the same argument--what makes the legislators on any higher a level than we are--what makes the press on a level any higher than we are as private citizens? Now I just ask for your fair consideration of this amendment--and really think of what you're doing; by now allowing the press the freedom, are you going to take it away from me?"

Delegate Weatherwax, speaking against the motion, observed:

"There was some mention that I previously discussed a case-by-case method, as filling out and giving meat to the language of the committee proposal. The several cases to some extent would give our supreme court some direction, no doubt about that, and I must also concur that in the federal Constitution there is no express language that details the right to privacy. Let us all realize we generally have a feel for the concept, with specific application in every case, and we've heard some examples here, with respect to dormitories, with respect to the smoking of marijuana, with respect to many things. However, I think it's necessary to have the language as broad as it is, and in the Constitution. And not, in contrast to the present three words in the Constitution--right now there are only three words that deal with invasion of privacy, and I believe that comes tied in with Article IV. There was some confusion in 1968, and subsequently because of the confusion the right to privacy was restricted more to wiretap situations or in the criminal area.

"So it was the committee's intent to broaden this, broaden it by not laying out specifics; we have to leave that to the courts, I believe, and also to the legislature because I think the proposal says that the legislature shall look at it and begin the filling-in process. And each of us individually may at some time require this. Although it's broad, we may find the particular circumstances where we would want the right to privacy, and it'll be there in the Constitution in a separate section, not tied in or colored by the criminal procedure side, but a separate section that deals with civil rights. And you'll go into court and hopefully give meat to this provision. Therefore I speak against the motion and ask that you support the committee proposal."

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Tam reiterated that the right to privacy was already in the Constitution, in Section 5 of Article I, which the 1968 committee report had delineated as a very broad right to individual privacy. The new provision, he added, more than just being redundant, could stifle the exposure of political corruption and organized crime.

Delegate Burgess, on a point of information, asked if the committee chairman could reassure the delegates by acknowledging in the Committee of the Whole report that the section was not intended to stifle freedom of speech or freedom of the press. In response, Delegate Weatherwax explained:

"I concur with the delegate's concerns but in fact, as to whether or not I can at this point amend the committee report--no, I could not do that, but I do recognize his concern. I too have that very same concern, but I believe it's unfounded because I think that under case law, as well as interpretations not only of our Constitution but also the federal Constitution, that freedom of the press will still be maintained. And I believe at this time there is a concern because of where the U.S. supreme court is going, that there have been some recent cases with respect to the rights of the press, and that's where I believe the concern is coming from. But the right to privacy here is not intended in any way to delete or to diminish the rights of the press."

Delegate O'Toole, on a point of information, then asked if it were true that the discussions on the floor, in Committee of the Whole or at Second Reading, were quite often a more significant factor in court cases in determining the Convention's intent than the committee reports.

Delegate Pulham, on being recognized, responded:

"I would say to the question that was just raised--how then if this discussion is what it is based on, whose side do they go on, the pro or the con--depending on which they lean? There are no facts other than those being brought out here, so I hope that that is not the total basis for deciding what we finally mean when we pass something.

"I'm going to speak in favor of the amendment to delete, for a number of reasons. First of all, it has been acknowledged by both sides that this is a duplication, and I cannot seem to find a reason, if we're going to take something out of the Bill of Rights and make a separate section and leave it in there, why we are singling out privacy to be included in a new section, plus leaving it in the other one. In that same area, if we simply intend to ask the legislature--and in addition the courts--to look at this and expand upon it, I have no reason to believe that they could not have already looked at those words in the Constitution and either legislatively or judicially expanded upon it, so there's no reason to believe that we are doing anything in this area. The fact that it's mentioned twice in that particular article I don't think gives it any more weight. I would certainly hope that poor verbiage does not make something more important than something else.

"There was also reference to this as a simple little statement; I think that the amount of discussion here indicates that it certainly is not a simple little statement. It is a simple little very complex statement with a lot of ramifications that apparently we can't all agree on, and therefore I don't really see why we need to leave it in there. I'm very much concerned because of admitted facts that, maybe not this amendment but similar or identical ones were submitted for a specific purpose, which is promoting the drug culture. And then that this--we're saying, in other words, publicly here that we are using this without saying so as a method or a route to get this more firmly entrenched in our society.

"Now if you believe as I do that we need to take a tougher stand on drugs, if you believe that we need to take a tougher stand on organized crime, if you believe the youth of our society need the facts on these, not some sort of tacit approval by saying nothing, I don't see how, with this in mind, and the fact that privacy is already protected--and in deference to some of my colleagues who see this as helping them in some specific instance, particularly as we are talking about what the federal government does--we should bear in mind that this body cannot tell the federal government, the supreme court of the United States, to do anything. So we are deluding ourselves if we think that our small kuleana is going to be increased by passing a second privacy section in our Constitution. What we are doing is furthering the ends and the aims of organized crime and the drug culture, who are going to be ecstatically happy to see us leave this provision in the Constitution.

"Now, if you can leave here today with that on your conscience, if you can go home and face your children and your friends and neighbors and their children--why that's fine, you do that. There is no way that I in good conscience can. I urge you to support this amendment."

Delegate O'Toole then rose to speak against the amendment, noting:

"I share some of the feelings of the previous speaker but I don't think this amendment will have that much to do with promoting organized crime or drugs. I voted in favor of the privacy amendment previously, and not for the reasons that Delegate Hale evidently introduced it. My feeling is that if we're going to help fight organized crime or the crime situation, the things that are going to help are merit selection of judges, mandatory minimum sentences, and trying to get statutory methods whereby judges will be harder on criminals. I really don't see the previous discussion applying in this situation as far as crime is concerned."

Delegate Sterling, speaking in favor of the amendment, reminded the delegates that the question was freedom of the press and that Section 5 on invasion of privacy was not being deleted. The vital issue, he pointed out, was whether the right to privacy provision would jeopardize or infringe upon the freedom of the press.

Delegate Alcon, on a point of inquiry, requested a definition of "compelling state interest" in the provision. Delegate Weatherwax, in response, explained that this referred to a constitutional test used by both U.S. and state supreme courts in determining to what degree a particular right must be, or the value that the government sought to protect or promote, in contrast with the particular individual rights held. There must, he added, be an overwhelming or compelling state interest in the balance before the right could be diminished or removed.

Delegate Hino further clarified:

"In layman's language, 'compelling state interest' means that the government must have a damn good reason before they can interfere in your privacy. And secondly--it's a two-step situation--once they determine that there is a good reason to infringe on your privacy, then they must take the least intrusive means--not the kind where they would use a very large net with fine mesh. In other words, the net has to be big enough so that those people who are not affected would not be infringed upon."

Delegate Barnard then spoke against the amendment. It was her understanding, she explained, that the right to privacy provision was never intended in any way to infringe on the U.S. Constitution's First Amendment rights to the State Constitution Section 3 rights, which, she added, were absolutely necessary if this was to remain a free country.

Delegate Taira, speaking against the amendment, emphasized that he saw nothing in the privacy provision that would stimulate or encourage the growth of organized crime or the use of drugs, as had been alluded. If that were so, he added, he would be very strongly against the provision.

Delegate Kimball made the following statement against the motion:

"Looking at Section 5 of Article I, the title of that section is 'Searches, Seizures and Invasion of Privacy.' The title is not 'Privacy Rights.' Also, the section says: 'The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects against unreasonable searches, seizures, and invasions'--and to me those have limited application to judicial or legal proceedings, particularly in terms of the words 'searches' and 'seizures.' Those are the two compelling words in that section, and therefore I think the present section has limited application. What we're doing in the committee proposal is making an affirmative statement in support of each and every individual privacy right. And there is a qualification for that, that if the State can show that something on the basis of society as a whole will affect the society, it has the right to override an individual's privacy rights. Therefore, since we are making a positive, affirmative assertion of our privacy rights, I speak against the motion to delete."

Delegate Tam then rose, in response to the previous speaker, to voice his disagreement with the interpretation that the right to privacy was limited. Speaking for the amendment, he pointed out that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 55 from the 1968 convention gave an expansive interpretation of the phrase "invasion of privacy," in terms of individual dignity and the right to privacy, and that it was not in any way limited.

Delegate Wurdeman, speaking in favor of the amendment, mentioned a previous allusion to the rights of citizens. Referring to Section 6 of Article I, she pointed out that in deleting the privacy provision they would be deleting redundancy. Clear language, she explained, but not clear constitutional analysis, was what they were striving for, and she concluded, "I believe that our societal values change. If we are concise in our constitutional analysis now, we'll need more flexibility for growth."

Delegate Campbell, speaking for the amendment to delete, stated:

"Mr. President, from listening to the various delegates speak, it appears that there still needs to be some clarification here. There is a need perhaps to disagree with certain delegates who feel their rights to privacy would somehow be invaded or lost if this amendment were to pass. There has been a distinction made by the court in the right to privacy as it is set forth in Section 5 of Article I, and that distinction is that it has been made to apply to such things as criminal searches and seizures, wiretaps and so forth; and for this reason it was assumed there was a need to set forth a specific civil right to privacy, which was to cover certain specific areas.

"However, I think it is very clear also that the U.S. supreme court has interpreted the Ninth and Tenth Amendments to the Constitution--and it surprised us as well--in such a way that the civil rights we are seeking to protect are being protected, and I believe the delegate to my left set forth a number of very important cases covering those areas. So it should be made clear to everyone that if this right to privacy section were deleted, it would not in any way derogate from the civil right to privacy, which each of us has, as the U.S. supreme court has interpreted, under the Ninth and Tenth Amendments."

Delegate Anae then rose to speak against the amendment, explaining that this was a basic right that everyone deserved, not just a small select group, and that it should not be deleted because it inconvenienced or placed some hardship on a few.

Delegate Stegmaier, speaking against the amendment, stated that the privacy provision reflected a genuine concern regarding technological advances in society at that time. He was in favor, he stated, of reaffirming and reemphasizing the basic, fundamental right to be free of potential technological abuse.

Delegate Hironaka, also speaking against the amendment, indicated his belief that the last sentence in the provision, mandating the legislature to "take affirmative steps to implement this right," cleared up some of the concerns expressed.

Delegate Kojima then spoke in favor of the motion, explaining that his concern was with the drug issue, that the provision seemed to provide license because of possible interpretations and its broad implications. He reminded the delegates of the interpretation by the courts in Alaska and pointed out that it could be similarly interpreted in Hawaii.

If the rationale for the deletion, Delegate Hirata then asked, was to prevent people from smoking marijuana in their homes, would the deletion also allow the police to break into anyone's home on the grounds that they suspected it? Delegate Kojima responded that this was already provided for in the Constitution, that there were provisions that protected the privacy of individuals.

Delegate Goodenow, on a point of inquiry, asked if, according to the current laws regarding marijuana, the provision was contradictory to or would be breaking the law. Delegate Weatherwax responded by explaining that the state supreme court had made a determination on this, that it did not at this time fall under the right to privacy provision. That, he added, did not mean that supreme courts never changed their minds.

Delegate Alcon, also on a point of inquiry, asked whether the term "compelling state interest" did not in fact include the right of the State or law enforcement officers to go into a home to stop an illegal action. In response to this and a previous question, Delegate Tam pointed out that Com. Whole Rep. No. 15 gave an interpretation on page 3 indicating that "this privacy concept encompasses the notion that in certain highly personal and intimate matters, the individual should be afforded freedom of choice absent a compelling state interest." It could be interpreted, he observed, that "if you go behind closed doors in the privacy of your own home, you can do whatever you want."

Delegate Ontai spoke in favor of the amendment, reiterating that there was already a constitutional provision on privacy and a second provision would be redundant. He then pointed out that there would be a great many proposals on the ballot in November and with the public already confused, this provision would only add unnecessarily to the confusion.

Delegate De Soto then rose to speak against the amendment, stating:

"I've heard a lot of talk about what this amendment could do, what it cannot do, its redundancy, etc. I am a lay person, never having graduated from college. I live with my people, of all ethnic groups, we live together. And this is easier to see, that the right of the people to privacy shall be recognized. It doesn't say that we encourage underworld activity, it doesn't say anything about smoking pakalolo in your bedroom, it just says that the 'right of the people to privacy is recognized. . . .' I spoke a little the other day about our rights in the Constitution, as was pointed out by many speakers, but these rights have been infringed on, by helicopters flying over my house--maybe they think I'm growing pakalolo--and scaring us, all hours, police officers charging through my yard for whatever reason, which frightens us--all under one cloud called 'probable cause.' You see, with probable cause they can do almost anything, because you have to disprove that there is any probable cause. You can be stopped on the highway at night, yanked out of your car, searched, your entire vehicle stripped because the police officer had probable cause--an ambiguous statement, I feel.

"With respect to pakalolo, we have in our society the free choice of drinking beer, smoking cigarettes that the surgeon general says may be hazardous to your health. I think we've become a little paranoid--and that's for myself, I'm not calling anybody names--when we talk about rights. I think that this right to privacy is something we can give back to the people. If they don't want it they can vote it down--and I'd like to use the argument that at least we should put it on the ballot and give the people a chance to vote for it."

Delegate Souki, speaking for the amendment, pointed out that their nation with its rights and protections in Article I was envied throughout the world in having these inherent freedoms. To add this provision, he continued, with language like "compelling state interest" which could be misinterpreted or interpreted differently, could cause problems that none of them had anticipated.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak last for her amendment, stating:

"I would like to answer some of the concerns stated. I think as far as the delegate to my left here, his concerns about Brigham Young University and the dorm integration, it's been answered that that was under the federal Constitution, and no matter what we do in the State of Hawaii it isn't going to affect that decision.

"As far as taking away anyone's rights, these rights are in the federal Constitution and we aren't taking away anything. Furthermore, we already have the rights in our own Constitution and what would protect my good friend, the delegate from Waianae, would be Article I, Section 5, where the 'right of the people to be secure in their persons...' against invasions of privacy is already outlined, and even with that we still have helicopters--and I agree they shouldn't be used, but not only for that reason but because they cost taxpayers too much money to run.

"But at any rate, the problem seems to be that the right we are adding here is so broad and it's such a big umbrella that everybody can find comfort in it, and I wonder if that's what we really want. I'd like to say that I don't smoke marijuana--I don't smoke cigarettes either--but I do feel that people should be protected in their homes in doing anything they want. But I'm not sure this is the right way to do that. It should have been a much more straightforward and honest approach, as some of my proposals were. And though I am for the right to smoke in your own home, I am not for the drug culture or promoting the sale of drugs. As it's been pointed out, this might be used to hinder prosecution of organized crime.

"On the other hand, I was concerned when the committee report came out, because four pages are devoted to this committee proposal and there's really nothing in there that says freedom of speech and freedom of the press are still guaranteed, as opposed to the right to privacy.

"As a lay person I was very much taken by this amendment, and I will admit that I was wrong and that there are areas in which I respect my lawyer friends and I probably should defer to their judgment, particularly when we're writing a constitution, which is going to give the law profession the basis for earning a living for many years to come. I think as lay persons we're reading into this amendment many things which may or may not be there, and we don't really know. And in answer to the question of putting it on the ballot, I'd say that if we don't really know or if we disagree--and almost everybody who has gotten up has given a different reason for being for or against--and if there are that many things that are sheltered by this umbrella, then how can we just say--right to privacy, yes or no. It is not that simple, and I think we already gave them the chance in 1968, when they voted for the right to privacy amendment, and to do it again in the confused state we are in, I think, is very unwise. And as my namesake always says, if you don't know, don't do anything. So I would suggest that we support the amendment to delete this, because maybe we really don't know and therefore we really shouldn't do anything."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 15, RD. 1, by the amendment deleting section 6 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Hale requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 30 ayes, 60 noes and 12 excused; with Delegates Andrews, Barnes, Barr, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Crozier, Eastvold, Goodenow, Hale, Hamilton, Harris, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Peterson, Pulham, Souki, Sterling, Takehara, Tam, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Anae, Barnard, Blake, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chun, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hanaike, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Kimball, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, O'Toole, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takemoto, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee and Weatherwax voting no; and Delegates Blean, Chang, Chu, Chung, DiBianco, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Ishikawa, Kaapu, Ontai and Takitani being excused.

At this time the Chair announced that they would not take up Amendment No. 1, which had been deferred, as the movant was absent. There being no further discussion, Delegate Weatherwax moved, seconded by Delegate Hino, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 15 be received and placed on file and Com. P. No. 15, RD. 1 as amended, pass Second Reading. The question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

The Chair then suggested that although it was not on the calendar for that day, they take up consideration at that time of Com. Whole Rep. No. 17 and Com. P. No. 18, RD. 1, in the interest of expediting such business as they could. He then called for a short recess while the amendment was distributed.

At 11:30 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:35 a.m.

The Clerk announced that Com. Whole Rep. No. 18 and Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, had been distributed for decking purposes, and that consideration on Second Reading of Com. P. No. 18 was in order at that time.

Com. Whole Rep. No. 17, Com. P. No. 18, RD. 1--RELATING TO THE USE OF NONDISCRIMINATORY TERMS IN THE CONSTITUTION:

Delegate Fukunaga, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 17) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 17 be adopted and Com. P. No. 18, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

Delegate Hamilton then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate Waihee, which amended Com. P. No. 18, RD. 1, by deleting sections 2, 4, 16 and 17 and renumbering the remaining sections as appropriate.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Hamilton explained that this was a technical amendment reflecting the work done by the Committee on Style since the Committee of the Whole meeting.

Delegate Crozier, on a point of inquiry, asked whether all the technical changes being made would have to be included on the ballot. Delegate Hamilton explained that there would be only one item on the ballot, for approval or disapproval of the use of nondiscriminatory terms.

Delegate Takemoto, on a point of inquiry, questioned whether the change in Section 2 of Article I, from "Rights of Man" to "Rights of Individuals," would change the meaning, in that "individual" would then apply to individual persons instead of corporations, etc. Delegate Hamilton, referring to the provision in Article XIV on titles and subtitles in construction of the Constitution, indicated that it had no legal significance.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 18, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 1 was put by the Chair and the motion carried. The Chair then called for discussion on the adoption of Com. P. No. 18. There being none, Delegate Fukunaga moved, seconded by Delegate De Soto, that Com. Whole Rep. No. 17 be received and placed on file and Com. P. No. 18, RD. 1 as amended, pass Second Reading. The question was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At this time the Chair mentioned that a suggestion had been made on their consideration of Com. P. No. 16 on Second Reading, that they take up the IR&R issue first and then the remaining sections.

Discussion being in order, Delegate Liu commented that it sounded like a reasonable way to handle it.

Delegate Pulham then remarked that he didn't care when IR&R was taken up, stating:

"I will again object very strongly to our not utilizing the time we have today to discuss the important matters that are before this Convention. We've been doing this all week--sliding along--and now we're coming to the weekend and again we have all these important matters to discuss. I see no reason why we should recess all afternoon and face the possibility of working all day Saturday and into the wee hours of Sunday morning. It seems a bit ridiculous to me and I just want the record to reflect that I object very much to this procedure."

The Chair reminded the delegates that in the previous discussion on that subject there had been no consensus, and as a result they would take up Com. P. No. 16 on Saturday. The question now, he noted, was which way to proceed relative to the proposal.

Delegate Hironaka then asked if they could take up the other sections of the proposal that afternoon, other than IR&R. He pointed out that in scheduling for weekends neighbor island delegates should be given some consideration when possible.

The Chair noted the concern but pointed out that other delegates might have made commitments in anticipation of the schedule announced yesterday, which might be difficult to change at that time.

Delegate Penebacker, referring to Delegate Hironaka's suggestion, requested that the decision be left to the body on whether to take up the other sections that afternoon. He then asked if they could take a straw vote on it.

Delegate Odanaka also rose to support the suggestion, pointing out that if she had been aware yesterday that they would be taking up IR&R first she would have voted differently.

Delegate Sutton, on a point of information, asked if there were amendments to the first half of Com. P. No. 16, and if they were ready for distribution. The Chair, noting that there were amendments, asked what the body wanted relative to the discussion.

At 11:48 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:53 a.m.

The Chair at this time made the following statement:

"The Chair finds itself in the same situation it was in yesterday, where in trying to accommodate one person or group of people you find yourself in total conflict with another. In view of that fact, the Chair would feel that the only thing we can do is to proceed as we decided yesterday, that we will take up Com. P. No. 16 tomorrow. The basis on which we'll take it up tomorrow will be decided tomorrow, in which case we have no further business and announcements are in order.

"The Chair regrets the inconvenience to the neighbor island delegates and wishes there was some way we could work this thing out, but under the circumstances it does not now seem possible."

Delegate Peterson then stated:

"I was under the impression that Delegate Penebacker had made a motion and it had been seconded. If that is not the case, I would like to move that we do consider portions of Com. P. No. 16 which have been received and that we do not exclude from consideration any matters which may be submitted tomorrow, and that we proceed this afternoon to consider those portions of the proposal which are not related to initiative, referendum and recall."

The motion was seconded by Delegate Funakoshi. The Chair then called for discussion on the motion. Delegate Les Ihara, on a point of order, questioned whether the motion was in order according to the order of business. The Chair noted the point but indicated that the motion was in order at that time.

Delegate O'Toole rose to speak against the motion, observing that if most of the amendments were offered orally they could be there all day and night. Delegate Hale asked if it could be taken up on Monday if the problem was the Sunday scheduling. The Chair replied that their schedule would not allow this.

Delegate Sterling then stated:

"I speak for the motion that we consider those portions of the proposal this afternoon, but I think the record should also reflect that the President was concerned about this yesterday, in trying to set up a schedule. However, I have a question regarding oral amendments. I don't think there's any ruling on that--I don't see where the rules have been suspended on it. On the question that we'll still proceed according to the rules that we have, that there will be written amendments, I'm assuming that these amendments--if we take it up this afternoon--will be as we've always proceeded. I think the speaker previous to me brought up the idea of oral amendments."

Delegate O'Toole questioned whether this was fair to delegates who might want to put amendments in. Delegate Barr, on a point of information, asked if the motion had been only for amendments that were prepared. The Chair observed that it wouldn't be equitable to proceed on the prepared amendments and then backtrack tomorrow.

Delegate Pulham then commented:

"I agree with the concerns. I wonder--since we're being slightly informal--if we could know if somebody has an amendment. We've been on this a long time and I should certainly hope that by now they know where they're at, but if they would make that fact known to the body now--and not this afternoon when we start working on it, and say, I didn't have the time to get this done, or I didn't write it up--because we could very well take a 2-hour break for lunch and give them more than adequate time. Even if we only have one good copy, at least we've afforded them that courtesy. So my suggestion would be that at this time anyone in that situation, please rise and advise the body."

Delegate Hale then questioned the necessity of scheduling on Sunday, to which the Chair again stated that the problem was not enough time. Delegate Silva then spoke against the motion but noted that he was for the intent. He pointed out that when they had voted yesterday, they were concerned that there were people who would be coming there and that the changes had been made with that in mind.

There being no further discussion, the motion to consider portions of Com. P. No. 16 that afternoon was put by the Chair and failed.

ADJOURNMENT

At 12:07 p.m., on motion by Delegate Silva, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the Convention adjourned until 9:30 a.m. Saturday, September 16, 1978.

FIFTY-NINTH DAY

Saturday, September 16, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 9:30 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Masu K. Dyer, delegate from the Twenty-Fifth District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate De Soto who was absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Fifty-Eighth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 92) informing the Convention that Res. Nos. 27 and 28, Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 93 and 94, and Com. P. Nos. 14, RD. 2, S. 1, and 18, RD. 2, S. 1, had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 92 was adopted.

The Clerk announced that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 93 and 94 had not yet been printed and requested that action be deferred to the end of the calendar. The President so noted.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTIONS

A resolution (Res. No. 27) requesting the legislature to study the need for a national constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing amendments to the U.S. Constitution, and to petition Congress if such a need is found to exist, was offered by Delegate Laura Ching.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 27 to the Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions.

A resolution (Res. No. 28) requesting the legislature to address the problem of rising health care costs and to establish legislation to reduce medical care costs in the State was offered by Delegate Laura Ching.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 28 to the Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTER

Com. Whole Rep. No. 16 (Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1) (Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections--Deferred from September 14, 1978):

Delegate Kaapu, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Weatherwax, for the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 16) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 16 be adopted and Com. P. No. 16, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

At this time the Chair, in reviewing the order of the amendments, stated that the initiative amendment by Delegate Chong would be Amendment No. 1.

Delegate Pulham rose to ask the rationale for reversing the order from that previously used under the proposal. The Chair explained that it had been the consensus, as he had determined it, to address the major issue--initiative--early when everyone was present. Delegate Pulham thereupon conceded to the wishes of the Chair.

Delegate DiBianco then rose to suggest that the order be reversed, so the subsidiary matters could be taken care of first and then they could spend their time, as long as necessary, on the major issue of IR&R.

Delegate Penabacker pointed out that this had been the rationale for setting that day aside especially for this, and asked if they were now going to deviate from that plan. The order of amendments, the Chair noted, was not going to be changed without a determination of the wish of the body. He then put the question to consider the initiative amendments first and the motion carried.

Delegate Crozier, on a point of information, asked if the amendments dealing with the open primary could be taken up before the "none of the above" amendments, explaining that if adjustments were to be made for those delegates leaving early, the open primary issue had greater priority. The Chair observed that the order stated had been preferable, with the open primary as the concluding issue, but that it was a matter of what the delegation wished.

Delegate Odanaka rose to support Delegate Crozier's idea, indicating that she too believed the open primary issue was of more importance.

At 10:00 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 10:07 a.m.

At this time the Chair advised that the order of amendments would be that originally planned. If, he continued, the ruling of the Chair was appealed, it would then be decided what the body wanted.

Delegate Harris then rose and appealed the ruling of the Chair, explaining that the movant of the "none of the above" amendment had yielded and there was a feeling among the body that the open primary issue was more important. The Chair, referring to the substantial concern expressed against that revised order, explained that this was why they were reverting to the original order.

Delegate Crozier commented that if the traditional order had been followed--according to the order in the committee report--the registration and voting issue would be scheduled first, and noted that the Chair had earlier shifted from that by scheduling the IR&R issue first. If, he added, the Chair could shift the order, then if the movant of the "none of the above" amendment requested a further change, her wish should be respected.

Delegate Haunani Ching reminded the body that when the revised order was first explained--to take up the IR&R amendments first--everyone was agreeable. Now, she remarked, when they were ready to start the discussion, there were all these objections.

Delegate Hale then suggested that if a movant wanted an amendment at a certain time, that wish should be recognized. The Chair, she continued, may suggest an order but should honor any change proposed by a movant. Delegate O'Toole pointed out that the discussion was not whether initiative should be discussed first but whether the open primary issue should be taken up before "none of the above." Since the movant, he repeated, had stated her preference to take up the open primary issue first, this should be done as this had been the precedent.

Delegate Hirata then rose to speak in support of the ruling of the Chair, reminding the delegates that at the informal vote taken the day before, a majority of the delegates had supported the Chair's revised order, putting IR&R first.

Delegate de Costa then moved that they take up the initiative amendment at that time and decide on open primary or "none of the above" when it came up. Delegate Izu then spoke in favor of the Chair's ruling, pointing out that the offerer of the amendment on "none of the above" was not "the delegate from west Oahu."

Delegate Kaapu, speaking in favor of the Chair's ruling, pointed out that the order of amendments proposed by the Chair was to the advantage of the maker of "none of the above" as all the delegates would more likely be present to vote on it.

Delegate Shon then rose to speak against the ruling of the Chair, remarking that, as the author of one of the "none of the above" amendments, he felt that the open primary issue should be taken up first.

Delegate Cabral, also speaking against the ruling of the Chair, indicated his conclusion that the way procedural matters had been taken up was "consistently inconsistent." The Chair, he pointed out, seemed to give favor to special requests by the majority faction, and he added:

"It seems inconceivable to me that we should change the sequence of addressing these proposed amendments. It appears to me more logical that we review them in a similar fashion to what we did in the Committee of the Whole. In that regard, we did take up registration and voting first, before initiative, referendum and recall. It seems to me just a special concession to the majority faction so they can kill the open primary proposal which successfully passed the Committee of the Whole."

The Chair at this time took strong exception to the opinion expressed. Delegate Penebacker rose to speak in favor of the Chair's ruling and to rebut the statements made, pointing out that if any concessions had been made to any faction throughout the Convention, they had been made to the so-called independents or minority faction.

Delegate Rachel Lee observed that since the rules had been broken so often the only decision should be on the order of open primary and "none of the above" amendments, and that the wish of the movant of "none of the above" should be respected and the open primary issue discussed first.

Delegate Sterling then spoke in favor of the Chair's ruling, stating:

"I'm really saddened at the language this morning. We elected the President to conduct these meetings. We may disagree with him--that is our privilege. But he's been given certain authority. I think that he's exercising his authority. We may not agree with it--that's our personal privilege--but to continue this kind of debate with so many important matters before us is uncalled for. Let's simmer down and keep our tempers. The President has the authority, I believe, to do this."

Delegate Goodenow then suggested that they get on with the business of the day and allow the Chair to make the decisions.

There being no further discussion, the question appealing the Chair's ruling was put and the Chair's ruling sustained. The Chair then stated:

"Before we begin, we want to remind the delegates that we would be proceeding on the same basis that we have in the past and as we handled things in the Committee of the Whole. We recognize that the issues before us are sensitive ones. They are of particular interest. We want to do everything possible to conduct our debate in an orderly, procedural fashion and provide every courtesy possible to those who have differing opinions. Much of the discussion on these issues has already been covered in the Committee of the Whole, and the Chair would suggest that, to the extent possible, we confine our arguments to somewhat less of a total summation than was necessary in the Committee of the Whole. But that's for each delegate to decide."

At this time Delegate Chong moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate Liu, which added three sections to Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, to read in part:

INDIRECT INITIATIVE

The people may propose, enact, or amend laws by the indirect initiative.

APPLICATION

(a) An indirect initiative is proposed by an application containing the bill to be initiated. The application shall be signed by no less than one hundred registered voters who voted in the preceding gubernatorial election, as sponsors, and shall be filed with the chief election officer. The sponsors of an initiative measure shall incorporate therein a ballot title, statement of purpose, full text of the proposal and summary of no more than one hundred fifty words; the aforementioned articles shall be descriptive or expository but not argumentative or prejudicial. If the chief election officer finds the application in proper form, the chief election officer shall so certify. The chief election officer shall not make any judgments as to the substance of the proposed measure. Denial of certification shall be subject to judicial review.

(b) An indirect initiative measure embracing more than one subject or naming any individual to hold any office, or naming or identifying any private corporation to perform any function or to have any power or duty, may not be submitted to the legislature.

PETITION

After certification of the application, a petition containing the text of the proposed measure and a summary of the subject matter shall be prepared by the chief election officer for circulation by the sponsors. All petitions for an indirect initiative measure shall be filed with the chief election officer no later than the first day of the second regular legislative session following a general election. All signatures required for an indirect initiative proposal to be submitted to the legislature and the electorate shall be obtained within the period between the general election preceding its certification and the first day of the regular session of the legislature in the next even-numbered year.

SUBMISSION; APPROVAL

An indirect initiative measure shall be submitted to the legislature by presenting to the chief election officer a petition signed by registered voters equal in number to no less than ten percent of the votes cast in the last general election for governor. In addition, the signatures on the petition shall be from all counties and the number of signatures from each county required on the petition shall be equal in number to no less than five percent of the number of votes cast in each respective county in the last general election for governor.

An indirect initiative, if not enacted in the original form by the legislature to which proposed, shall be submitted by the chief election officer to the voters at the first general election thereafter, together with the legislature's amended version, if any. If both the original and amended versions are approved, the one receiving the greater number of affirmative votes shall prevail.

Each measure proposed by the indirect initiative or the legislature shall be submitted to the voters by the chief election officer by its ballot title and the question will appear in such form that an affirmative vote is a vote for change. An indirect initiative measure proposing to prohibit a specific activity or to terminate an existing right or privilege shall be submitted to the people in such form that a vote in the affirmative is a vote in favor of the right to engage in the activity or continuance of the right or privilege. Initiative measures shall be effective only if approved at the general election by a majority of all the votes tallied upon the question. All approved measures shall be effective immediately except measures requiring authorization of funds or providing for tax reductions or increases. Such measures shall take effect the following fiscal year.

An initiated law is not subject to veto and may not be repealed by the legislature within two years of its effective date. No measure enacted by a vote of the electors shall be repealed or amended by the legislature, except upon approval by roll call vote of two-thirds of the members of each house.

VOTER EDUCATION

The legislature shall provide methods of publicity of all indirect initiative measures with arguments for and against the statutes or amendments so proposed, including the issuance of a voter education publication. The chief election officer shall distribute such publication in such manner so as to reasonably assure that each voter will have an opportunity to study the initiative measures.

RESTRICTIONS

The initiative shall not be used to make or repeal appropriations for current expenses of programs and state departments, agencies, or other bodies that shall have been in existence for at least two years, to create courts or define the jurisdiction of courts, or prescribe court rules, to alter public employee collective bargaining agreements or to provide for the direct initiative.

DISCLOSURE

Funds contributed and expended to influence the outcome of initiative measures shall be disclosed in accordance with the laws and regulations that shall be prescribed by the campaign spending commission or the legislature. Public disclosure of funds shall be made by both the proponents and opponents of an initiative.

LAWS RELATING TO THIS SECTION

Laws may be enacted to facilitate the operation of this section, but no laws shall be enacted to hamper, restrict or impair the exercise of the rights herein reserved to the people.

This section shall be self-executing upon adoption.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Chong made the following statement:

"Shall there be a convention to propose a revision of or amendments to the Constitution?" The question was put to the electorate during the 1976 general election. By a wide margin the electorate decided that there ought to be a convention.

"It seems to me that contrary to the spirit of a representative form of government and the necessity for grass-root input to the governmental process, many delegates are taking it upon themselves to decide whether the State ought to have initiative. The actions of those delegates who are deciding the fate of such an important issue as though they possessed the consummate wisdom to decide what the public ought and ought not to have will have far-reaching and very damaging implications throughout the State. As supposedly objective and impartial delegates to this Convention, we do not believe there can be any question as to the preponderance of evidence on the side of those who support initiative in the State Constitution as well as nationally.

"There has been lengthy dialogue on the subject of initiative, both in committee and during the Committee of the Whole. Numerous polls in Hawaii show support for initiative since the concept was rejected by the 1968 convention. The Star-Bulletin poll showed initiative had the most interest and concern of the people of Hawaii. First Hawaiian Bank and The Honolulu Advertiser in their polls also showed great concern for allowing an initiative process. This Convention received a petition with over 20,000 signatures in favor of initiative.

"There is overwhelming support for initiative from nearly all elements of the community. There are few opponents on this issue. The only significant opposition to date has come from the Chamber of Commerce, which primarily represents big business in Hawaii; however, a memo from the Hawaii Chamber of Commerce asks that the question of initiative be put before the people. Also in opposition to initiative is a coalition of the State's largest public employee union; however, the retirement organization of the State's largest union supports initiative. The fact that the overwhelming majority supports initiative is a primary reason we believe it should be put on the ballot.

"There is a vital need for additional checks and balances, a vital need for another avenue for the public to participate directly through initiative. The action to cause the demise of initiative, without letting the people decide for themselves, is contrary to the spirit of the Convention. There is a burgeoning mistrust of elected officials, to which the actions of some of the delegates would add by precluding the electorate from voting on the initiative measure. Such an action would show the public that even the delegates to the Convention divorce themselves from their campaign issues or constituents' concerns.

"I'm amazed to learn that a delegate would vote against a proposal as though he had the final say on whether it could become a part of the Constitution. The issue of initiative must be put to the people, regardless of personal feelings. The people of Hawaii should have an opportunity to decide for themselves whether they want initiative."

Delegate Cabral, speaking in favor of the amendment, echoed the thoughts of the movant that too many delegates there tended to forget that government was vested in the people. He urged the body to give the people the opportunity to decide for themselves whether they wanted that form of government.

Delegate Takehara then rose to speak against the amendment, stating:

"Though this issue has been heavily debated for many months, I believe my arguments will bring a fresh perspective to this proposal. In general, Hawaii's voting public is considered to be well informed on issues. Many voters take the time to educate themselves when they are faced with difficult political problems. This responsibility is not taken lightly. When voters are uncertain, they invoke the political process of directly approaching their legislators. However, in the initiative process, the voters are asked to assume the role of lawmakers themselves. In many instances, many ordinary citizens do not have the background, the time or the staff to conduct a thorough examination of each petition proposal. To expect a citizen to act in this manner before signing a petition"--

At this time Delegate Takehara was interrupted by an outburst from an individual in the gallery. The President warned that if the person was not silent he would be removed by the sergeant at arms. Apologizing for the interruption, he requested the speaker to proceed. Delegate Takehara then continued:

"To expect a citizen to act in this manner before signing a petition is an invasion upon him. A system like initiative allows special interest minority groups a greater opportunity to take part in the political process at the expense of the majority. Initiatives are expressions of a minority of citizens forcing their priorities upon others and their time, which then results in the majority of citizens"--

Again Delegate Takehara was interrupted, this time by a disturbance between Delegate Penebacker and an individual in the gallery, whereupon the President cautioned:

"Delegate Penebacker, please be seated. I remind the delegates that regardless of the circumstances, the sergeant at arms can take care of the gallery without adding to the Convention's proceedings in any way. I would certainly caution everybody to be as calm and as rational as possible. There's a long day ahead of us. Delegate Takehara, are you still prepared to proceed?"

"--the results being that the majority of citizens would be unnecessarily burdened by the multitude of proposals facing them. Hawaii is rated seventh in the nation by the National Citizens Conference on Legislatures for its exemplary governmental system. Also, it is generally recognized that we are one of the most progressive states in the country.

"Fellow delegates, we love Hawaii. We love Hawaii's uniqueness, and we love Hawaii's style of living. We do not wish to become continually uptight and worried about what and how each petition may affect our personal lives. Our representative system has worked and is working well for us. It's accomplished much in the best interest of our total State and people. For these reasons I speak against this amendment."

Delegate Goodenow then spoke for the amendment, stating:

"I would like to remind the group of some of the background of the initiative, which I support. The first well-organized group of people in the United States ever to favor adoption of the initiative was the American Federation of Labor, which publicly supported it in 1892. Various Populist parties and labor organizations also adopted it in 1898. South Dakota became the first state to adopt the initiative; now we have 26 states that use it. No state--and I think this is very important--that has ever had it on the ballot has ever dropped it from its constitution, and many states such as California, Oregon and Washington use it frequently.

"I would also like to speak about our own state, Hawaii. Kauai and Hawaii counties provide IR&R for charter amendments and ordinances. Our own county of Honolulu allows only direct initiative for charter amendments. Maui county provides advisory initiative for charter amendments and IR&R ordinances.

"It is important to speak about having had it for as many years as our country has. It has been used most infrequently, although it is there and gives people an opportunity to participate. There has been a variety of legislation that has been voted on. I'd like to give you three brief types of legislation. Oregon voted down the sales tax. Oklahoma voted that public officials should be impeached for public drunkenness and excessive use of liquor. Nebraska voted for conflict of interest legislation and for unicameralism. I would like to end my brief dissertation by saying that it makes the voice of the people more efficient and is used as a last resort when government seems to be unresponsive. It lets people who are interested have an opportunity to influence the laws which govern them and gives them a chance in government. I would urge my fellow delegates to give this their deep consideration. Thank you."

Delegate Rachel Lee, speaking in favor of the amendment, observed:

"I would be remiss if I did not express some of the reasons initiative is, for me, the most important issue in this Convention. I would like to rebut the delegate who was against this motion. I say if the public is well informed so they can approach their legislators--that I agree with--but are they getting their wishes fulfilled? If they are, then why are they in large numbers--according to the papers, the media and surveys have indicated overwhelming numbers--in favor of initiative?"

"Also, arguments used against initiative based on racial issues have been brought up. I'd like to call your attention to the survey made by tele-vote. Although Caucasians showed the highest percentage--93 percent--in favor of it, 75 percent of the Japanese ethnic group also favored it. Note this--81 percent of the Hawaiians also favored it. This survey clearly directs our decision. Let's stop giving excuses on why initiative is not good. Let's give the public the right to participate in government. Let the public decide. Who are we to judge what is right? I recall a prayer by one of our delegates that was very impressive: 'Let's not judge, lest we be judged.' Did that prayer mean anything to you? Thank you."

Delegate Kimball then rose to speak in favor of the amendment, stating:

"I came to this Convention on a philosophical basis considering initiative in general as a complement to representative democracy. During the course of this Convention, I have heard concerns addressed by numerous delegates, including those from the outer islands, with respect to taxation and finance, and I speak strongly for this amendment before us because it addresses and provides for all those concerns. I'd like to point those out.

"First off, the safeguards in this initiative proposal before us include that a hundred registered voters are required before they can circulate an initiative petition, and they become the sponsors. Second, there is geographical representation, which takes care of the neighbor island concerns as far as Oahu domination. Third, this is indirect initiative; that means it will be referred to the legislature, and our legislative body will have the opportunity to review the petition and propose an alternative before it is placed on the ballot for the people's consideration. Fourth, it provides for voter education, which is important in terms of the concern that some initiative issues in other jurisdictions have been of an emotional type, and I can see where some of the issues here in Hawaii could be emotional. So voter education is important. This proposal provides for it. Fifth, there are restrictions as to subject matter, including some of the major ones with respect to operating budget and other tax and finance questions. Finally, there are provisions for financial disclosure of money spent in support or opposition to any initiative measure. For those reasons, I speak strongly for this initiative proposal.

"In addition I'd like to point out, in my philosophy and in thinking of initiative as a complement to representative democracy, if we do not offer people the alternative to redress grievances or participate in our legislative process, as initiative does, we are going to force them to go into civil noncompliance with the law--and I've seen this in my work in tax administration. Presently, we don't have problems with tax protesters and tax rebellions. But not given the opportunity to redress grievances or participate in the legislative process, these things will become problems in tax and other areas. So, without a means for the citizens of Hawaii to address their concerns, we will force them into civil noncompliance aspects. For these two major reasons, I urge you to vote for this initiative proposal."

Delegate Les Ihara remarked that he had intended to speak against the amendment, but "after seeing what happened the last time... I'll choose not to speak."

Delegate Sterling, speaking in favor of the amendment, pointed out that, using the Convention as an example, the minority had been given an opportunity to speak, to register its thinking, to effect changes. If, he noted, it was feared that a minority would initiate great changes through initiative, this had not happened at the Convention. He then repeated that much had already been said about the issue and he urged passage of the amendment.

Delegate Campbell then made the following statement:

"Mr. President, perhaps one of the most significant observations made by Winston Crouch in his study entitled Initiative and Referendum in California, is that every type of group representing a population interest has actually made use of the initiative, including commercial, industrial, financial, reform and political. And history reflects that labor interests have also made use of it.

"I believe we ought to take this very seriously because it is reflective of the fact that initiative can have very widespread use in the community and is not narrowly applied. Dissatisfaction with the state legislature is not new in Hawaii, nor is it new in history. To go back to the late 19th century, there was a very widespread feeling throughout all the states that the legislatures were no longer representing the people. The citizens had become disheartened and demoralized because they felt that legislatures had become dominated by political bosses and special interests such as the railroads. And this was co-terminous with the growth of our labor unions and several Populist parties and was the genesis of initiative.

"I believe that initiative could have an extremely salutary spinoff--namely, that of involvement and education. If you will recall, the entire thrust of the Economic Opportunity Act of the model cities program was to get people involved at the grass-root level in government activities, so that ultimately they would move in the direction of self-determination. Involvement, fellow delegates, is the antidote to apathy. I believe it is the antidote to alienation and to frustration. I feel certain that all of us as delegates are desirous of having a participatory democracy in our State. And the indirect initiative proposal before you provides for this, because it designs a hand-in-glove relationship between the people and the legislature. It is designed for the maximum involvement of the people, for in going out and knocking on doors and securing signatures, they will unavoidably become educated themselves in the process of educating other people.

"This proposal before you is designed, then, not only to educate citizens but also to educate the legislature as to the needs of the people, which sometimes become lost in the shuffle and are not heard. With the safeguards that are built into this proposed amendment, including education and public hearings, I believe it is a correct measure to avoid abuse and to give the citizen the maximum opportunity to help himself. In helping himself, Mr. President, I believe we will all be helped."

Delegate Weatherwax rose on a point of information to question the meaning of the language in the amendment that indirect initiative "if not enacted in the original form by the legislature to which proposed, shall be submitted by the chief election officer to the voters at the first general election thereafter, together with the legislature's amended version, if any." He asked whether this was not in effect the same as direct initiative if the legislature did not act, and if so, if the same argument would apply.

Delegate Chong responded that she believed it was not and that had not been the intention. Delegate Eastvold then pointed out that an indirect initiative must go to the legislature for action, emphasizing that the legislature must be given the opportunity to come out with something equal or better.

Delegate Weatherwax thereupon rose with another question regarding the wording, "Each measure proposed by the indirect initiative or the legislature shall be submitted to the voters by the chief election officer by its ballot title and the question will appear in such form that an affirmative vote is a vote for change." He then asked the reason for the language, if it was to skew the initiative toward getting an affirmative vote.

Delegate Chong replied that it was for similarity to the Con Con proposals.

Delegate Liu, speaking in favor of the amendment, observed:

"Blackjack, roulette, keno--all games of chance. It seems to me that these are the kinds of images that those who have argued against initiative are trying to plant. Such portraits, I feel, are grandiose distortions of the initiative amendment and process before us.

"I wonder how much real risk of loss there is when at the present voter population over 30,000 people would be required to express their initial thoughts on a subject before this process is even triggered. How much risk is there in ripping apart the uniqueness of this island State when every Island's people, under this amendment, would have to show sufficient interest in the issue. Or else, regardless of how many people from one county, two counties or three counties want a particular issue to go to the legislature, unless all four counties in sufficient number sign the petition, that issue will not reach the legislature or eventually the ballot. No tyranny of the majority. Probably, even should an initiative fail because of lack of signatures from one Island, the legislature, as some have argued so eloquently, should if it is as responsive as many have argued, recognize the sentiments either for or against the piece of legislation. Thus, under this amendment we are not talking about a minority thwarting the will of the majority. Instead, we are talking about issues with broad-based support. The 10-percent signature requirement is unlike California's that requires only 5 and 8 percent, respectively, of the votes cast in the general election for governor, depending on whether it's a statutory or constitutional measure.

"In the last 16 years, only 26 of 148 initiatives filed have qualified for the California ballot, and the results have not yet proven catastrophic. California still stands. Of course the specter, to many, of Proposition 13 still lingers on. However, for Hawaii the probability of a Proposition 13 is like rolling 13 on the crap table; you just can't get dice to add up to that number. First, because the initiative process in California is different from the one we might have today. Secondly, this State does not have a multi-billion-dollar surplus as California has. Third, we will hopefully have shortly adopted a spending limit for this State, which California does not have. And fourth, we will also hopefully have a tax review commission to suggest changes to our tax structure every 5 years, which I think would diffuse any voter discontent with a burden of taxes.

"But for those who still feel that whatever has happened in California is too excessive and might happen here in Hawaii, I would refer them to Charles Price, perhaps one of the leading analysts of the initiative process throughout the United States. He feels that if one fears initiatives in California have been used excessively, it is because the state legislature became thoroughly professionalized. Special interests both liberal and conservative may have been thwarted by a tough professional legislature and been forced to take their proposals to the voters via the initiative. Well, I think Hawaii's legislature is not thoroughly professionalized. I think that we here in these halls have been very careful to maintain as far as possible some kind of citizen character in the legislature and therefore maintain its contact with the people. But regardless of this factor, I wonder if there is anything wrong with special interests being very aboveboard about their lobbying and taking their arguments to the public rather than perhaps merely in the darkened halls of the legislature.

"Lastly, some have spoken of priorities and the importance of this issue vis-a-vis others before us. You know, there is a very thin line between courage and arrogance. But on this issue, given the amendment's safeguards, given public sentiment both for and against the subject--to say no today would be nothing short of the height of arrogance."

Delegate Uyehara at this time moved to amend the amendment by substituting, in the first paragraph under "Submission; Approval," the word "ten" in place of "five" percent, seconded by Delegate Hale. Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Uyehara explained:

"This is to make it acceptable to the delegates on my far left. I want to bring it up to the original 10 percent, which I had supported previously. The 5 percent was so watered down it made me very leery as far as the support that I could have given. I am concerned not only for today but also for tomorrow, which we are here to plan for. Today there are many sign-holders who blanket the streets, the corners and the highways, and go house to house bringing brochures to the people. Today the people of Hawaii see the governor shaking hands at receptions, cocktail parties and even at rallies. I have seen him more than five times during this campaign already. But tomorrow the campaigners will be much more sophisticated, and more and more the media, the professional campaign organizations, will take over and less and less the candidate himself will be approachable. Tomorrow, when the population increases with the changing styles of our life, campaign tactics will change also, and our legislature will become less and less accessible. Elected officials will be less accessible to the public, to individual citizens and their concerns, and they will in the future be leaning their ears more and more to large interest groups, and the votes will go in that direction.

"I lean very heavily toward the 10-percent signatures from each county to make it a statewide interest, difficult enough to be broad and affect the majority of the citizenry and yet attainable to bring the concerns of each citizen of this State. Therefore I speak for the 10-percent signatures throughout the counties."

Delegate Hale spoke in support of the amendment, pointing out that 10 percent should not be difficult to attain if the people were interested. She then observed that the counties would appreciate having the same percentage as the State.

Delegate Chong also voiced agreement with the amendment.

Delegate Sterling, speaking in favor of the amendment, pointed out that it was fair and would better indicate the feeling for or against.

Delegate Peterson then spoke in favor of the amendment to the amendment, providing some of the rationale used in determining the 5-percent minimum:

"The issue is what I call the county veto where 85 percent of the population resides in the county of Honolulu and there is a possibility that a few voters in one of the other counties might make it impossible for a majority or a very high number of people in the State to make their wishes known. So the reason for providing a 5-percent limit would be to prevent one county from vetoing the will of all the other counties. However, as others have mentioned, if this makes the amendment more acceptable, I would speak in favor of it."

Delegate Blake expressed his support and urged the delegates to vote for it.

There being no further discussion, the question of the amendment to the amendment was put by the Chair, and the motion carried.

Delegate Miller then rose to speak in favor of the original amendment, pointing out that it was "overwhelmingly the single most important issue to the voters of the 11th representative district." She further observed:

"Since our near all-night session this week, there is disturbance, bitterness and even disrespect in Waikiki. The 11th district is the home of the second most vital source of the State's income--the visitor industry. The residents are doing all they can to build a higher moral and better scene for the industry in Waikiki, through such avenues as the Residents' Association, the neighborhood board, the Waikiki Improvement Association and other community groups. I have heard not one word of satisfaction toward the vote here. In this district the reaction to community issues and political issues is very fast. So therefore I ask that this most important issue to the 11th district be given a yes vote today."

Delegate Chu, speaking in favor of the amendment, observed that it was not contrary to the concept and practice of representative government because it was not a substitute. This merely gave the legislature the opportunity to be more responsive to the needs and views of citizens, she noted, especially those alienated from or outside the mainstream of the political process. She then related:

"I remember a Hawaiian man who testified before the bill of rights committee, who said that he felt very few average citizens really understand or know legislative procedures--the timetables involved and the techniques in preparing well-thought-out, well-articulated testimony. He felt that with it he would know better how to vote on a particular issue than from candidates waving signs at him. The legislative machinery is actually very complicated. The fact that this Constitutional Convention has had a great deal of difficulty passing certain measures, when we don't even have the final say, is an indication of how difficult it is, often, to get certain citizens' interests and views across and passed in the legislature.

"The initiative is the only way in which the people can directly affect legislation and have a say in the laws that govern them. In this post-Watergate era of disillusionment and distrust of government and politicians, and of increasing vocal criticism of slow-moving and often unresponsive government agencies snarled in bureaucratic red tape, initiative is a reasonable and necessary safety valve through which people may let off steam and discuss their views. Through the initiative, people can constructively channel their views and perhaps discontent, and have a say more directly in how they are to be governed. A recent poll has shown that citizens have become alienated from government and that they feel government does not truly care about them. Yet they are paying a big slice of their income to support this government.

"Government belongs to the people. Let's try to restore the faith of the taxpayers in this government. This particular indirect initiative amendment is no threat to our representative legislature. This method utilizes the legislature as a preliminary sounding board, or screening device, to weed out ill-conceived or hastily drafted legislation. This initiative acts as an effective device for public education and stimulates grass-roots interest and debate on important issues. It is thus a valuable device in reducing citizen apathy. Public interest and awareness are especially likely to be generated under an indirect initiative scheme. The legislature can make an amended or a counter-proposal, in which both the original and amended versions would be placed on the ballot. For the above reasons, I urge you to vote for this amendment for meaningful indirect initiative."

Delegate Barnes then rose and spoke for the amendment, stating:

"Mr. President, I did not speak in the Committee of the Whole on this issue, and I would like to address it fairly briefly today. I hope that each of us may try and set out who we think we're representing or speaking for today before we begin. I speak for 70 percent of the people in my district, 86 percent of the people statewide, 73 percent of the Japanese-Americans, 81 percent of the Hawaiians and part-Hawaiians, 93 percent of the Chinese-Americans, 96 percent of the cosmopolitan others that are the essence of Hawaii, and 92 percent of the Caucasians in Hawaii.

"In the Committee of the Whole, a delegate from Nuuanu asked, 'Can the proponents of initiative meet their burden of proof that we need initiative?' Today I will try to meet that burden of proof on behalf of the local people. First, we know that the most successful use of the initiative was the Coastal Zone Conservation Act, which was California's Proposition 20 in 1972. This initiative only came about after years of attempts by environmentalists and others to pass similar legislation in California's legislature. All these attempts failed. The corporate powers fought Proposition 20 with all the vast resources that had been more effectively used to block it in the legislature, and yet the people voted in this much-needed environmental act.

"Although I agree with some delegates who stated--in the unicameralism debates, for example--that we have a very responsive and progressive legislature, particularly in the area of social legislation, I submit to you that in the area of environmental legislation and in the area of tax reform, our legislature is desperately in need of the type of assistance that direct democracy can provide.

"Example No. 1--environmental legislation. State Senator Jean King, chairperson of the senate environment committee, testified in the bill of rights committee that she has repeatedly attempted to introduce a bottle bill in the legislature, yet the beverage industry has been able to bottle up this progressive legislation for three sessions running. Two bottle bills were introduced in '73-74; four bills were introduced in '75-76; 11 bottle bills were introduced in the '77-78 session--a total of 17 bottle bills. Senator King stated that with initiative she is confident that this progressive legislation, which can only benefit Hawaii by encouraging recycling and conservation of energy, could be enacted. We can see that the legislature has been unable to deal with this even though the public wants it.

"Example No. 2--the hotel room tax. The second glaring example of a need for direct legislation is in the area of tax reform. Hawaii is the only major tourist destination without a hotel room tax. This is the one single reform that has the potential to significantly change the State's cash flow problem to directly benefit local people. In 1974, 63 percent of Hawaii's people favored a room tax. In 1976, 75 percent of Hawaii's people favored a room tax. Today in 1978, 54 percent of Hawaii's people favor a room tax. It is clear that if Hawaii had initiative in '74 and '76, we would now be enjoying the benefits of increased income to the state general fund and a greater ability to purchase park lands. What did the legislature do with this issue? A bill for a room tax has been introduced every year since 1968--10 years running--and no bill has yet come out of committee. It is obvious the hotel industry has had no difficulty in keeping this issue locked in its room while the only avenue available to the people is the legislature.

"My fellow delegates, I have no doubt that people are in varying degrees aware of the problems mentioned. I submit to you that initiative and referendum provide a means for involving and educating the people in the legislative process. The people of Hawaii have now seen and heard about direct democracy through the media and the deliberations of this Convention. The people will not be denied. Thank you."

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Hale stated:

"I would like to say to the one person who did have the courage to speak against this that I appreciate her courage. She brought up some very important points that I would like to answer. One point was that people would sign petitions without knowing what they were. I would like to point out that legislators often sign bills they are not for because their constituents ask them to. Those bills either get buried or are not supported, but they are bills signed by request. So many unnecessary bills are introduced in our legislature by request but not acted upon. I'd like to point out that some of us as delegates did this also, so we can well understand why legislators would do this.

"I think people will sign petitions but only if they have some interest in the subject. People are very hesitant these days to sign their names to any document, and it isn't that easy to get them to sign a petition unless they find that they have a stake in the subject.

"I'd like to point out to those who oppose initiative that I am sure if the question of nuclear plants was put in the way of an initiative, the original proposal would have been voted in by the people. This could happen to other proposals, such as taking off the 4-percent food and drug tax that many delegates were for and that has not been passed by the legislature in spite of the public's concern and the many bills introduced on it. I admit that initiative can deal with very emotional subjects, but I think this amendment is the way to diffuse the emotional problem that arises with almost any kind of issue that directly affects people. Indirect initiative does this by involving the legislature and charging them to come up with a viable alternative with all their resources, studies, input from experts. If they can come up with a viable alternative on the ballot, I have faith that that alternative would pass. But whatever passes would be the will of the people.

"I feel that the basic question facing us today is--are we willing to give the people some stake in the process that governs their lives. Government on the state and federal level now governs our lives so we cannot even breathe or eat without some input from it. This will not be used often. It is not that easy to get 30,000 signatures, and another 3,000 or 3,500 from my Island, and maybe 3,000 from Maui and 2,800 or 2,900 from Kauai. It will only be used with issues of statewide importance that affect people's lives. The safeguard is that it does go to the legislature. But it is an escape valve for pent-up emotions on subjects that are near to the hearts of the people.

"It's been said some delegates have received threats. And that's too bad. Unfortunately nobody has threatened me--maybe they are afraid to, because I certainly wouldn't stand for any threats and I would tell anybody off. I would expect any delegate who feels he has been threatened to do the same because I feel we are here to vote our consciences. But I would like to say--and this is not a threat, it's a result of many years of practical experience in politics--that people will take repression so long and then they will revolt. I was part of the 1954 revolt when the Democrats took over the legislature. We elected only two Democrats that year to our county government, but I was also part of the same revolt that culminated in 1962 with the election of the first Democratic governor of this State and the first Democratic county chairman in 14 years. I do believe, firmly, in the people. And I do believe that this issue is so emotional and has generated so much heat, rather than light, that the people will look at our constitutional amendments in terms of what we have done for them as a whole on this issue. Most of us here have worked very hard in the last 3-1/2 months. There are a few things that all of us have done that I would like to see the voters uphold; but I fear very much that the unleashed emotionalism from voting down this initiative could very well reflect on all our work. I ask you to consider that, and consider whether it is not worth giving the people a chance to vote on this issue, so they can look at all the other issues before them in the light of reason and sanity and decide what is best in that vein rather than that we have denied them the one thing they expressly were for. I urge your consideration of this amendment."

Delegate Dyer then rose to speak in favor of the amendment. Addressing the argument that people lacked the sophistication, information and time to competently evaluate proposals, she commented that those same people had elected the delegates there and would be called upon to evaluate the Convention's work, by either ratifying it or rejecting it.

Delegate Hino then spoke against the amendment, congratulating the supporters of initiative for their arguments, which had raised sufficient doubts in his mind to necessitate his meeting with his constituents. After discussing the issue with them, he related, only one person had indicated support for the indirect initiative. He then added:

"I took time after the meeting to discuss the issue with this lone dissenter and found to my dismay that he had not even taken the time to vote in the Con Con. Needless to say, I was very disappointed. For these reasons and responding to the desires of my constituents, with a very clear conscience I will vote against the amendment."

Delegate Donald Ching spoke against the amendment, mentioning that he had not intended to speak as the issue had already been debated thoroughly and well. He then commented:

"I would like to discuss the effects of this issue on one who is involved in a political campaign--one who has been involved in several political campaigns. It is true there is quite a bit of interest generated by the media over this issue of initiative, referendum and recall. During the past few weeks I've attended coffee hours where naturally this issue has been brought up. And in talking to people, some of them very strong advocates, I've been able to sit down and discuss it with them on a very rational basis. No way can I do this over a telephone or even on a person-to-person basis when someone walks in and has a few minutes to talk with me about this, especially since they come in with very strong preconceived ideas. But I have found that in talking to a group of people who are quite open but still want to know my rationale for not supporting this issue, by and large after explaining my reasons for not supporting this and after answering their questions--some of them very hard questions--I think they go away somewhat satisfied.

"The argument has been raised that this is an added measure to representative democracy. I think rather than an addition it's a copout as far as representative democracy is concerned. I can just see those elected to the legislature saying, why should we put our best foot forward when all of this can be repudiated by a group of people who decide this is the way they want to do it and work hard enough at raising the necessary 10 percent. I think this will lead to the kind of legislature that we in Hawaii would not care to have. Thank you."

Speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Funakoshi stated:

"Initiative is a measure many of us are wary about because it is a change which is untested in this State. But remember that America was discovered because of a man who dared to sail the uncharted waters. The Wright brothers also dared, and helped mankind. Who are we then to say that people should not be given the opportunity to say whether they want to sail the uncharted waters. My fellow delegates, let us show that we have confidence in the people of Hawaii by putting this measure on the ballot. And let the 18,000 who are against this and the 20,000 who are for it and any others who want to voice their opinion decide whether they want it or not. Thank you."

Delegate Chang then rose on a point of information. Referring to the burden of proof, he asked if any delegate could explain the apparent contradiction in that the same forces that "would have opposed those landmark measures which were enacted into law were the parties that opposed whatever bills were suggested as being representative measures which were not enacted against the wishes of the people."

Delegate Barnes, in response to how the legislature could pass such good social legislation in some areas and yet not in others, explained:

"An example, in my view, is abortion, because there is no economic interest on one side or the other. They're able to take what I view as a leadership position in the area of abortion, and yet there are the two examples I gave of the large economic interests that were against those two types of legislation. That's the difference I can see."

Delegate Chang then referred more specifically to the Shoreline Protection Act and Hawaii's Environmental Protection Act, to shoreline access laws, the land reform act of 1967 and the land use law of 1963, which had direct economic impacts.

Delegate Hale, in response, answered:

"I think the issue is being confused. I don't think that anybody who is for indirect initiative is saying that the legislature is not doing a good job in certain areas. We do admit that the legislature has passed very progressive legislation. But I think--Delegate Barnes pointed out another area, the bottle bill, where they have not. So the only question is, are we going to give the people a chance to do something in those areas where the legislature has not?"

Delegate Chang, in restating his question, specified:

"It has to do with the burden of proof in the area of defining a problem--that is, accessibility to and responsiveness of the legislature. The question went to Delegate Barnes' remark that the bottle bill represented an example of an area where the legislature did not respond to the interests of the public. The question was, how does one explain the contradiction in that all of the landmark legislation which the legislature has passed over the years in the face of the very forces that would be ranged against something like a bottle bill be explained in terms of responsiveness and accessibility. There seems to be a contradiction in there which is not easily answered."

Delegate Sterling then responded:

"I think first of all it's a rhetorical question, but on the question of coastal zone management and those areas, there was much pressure to comply with the federal environmental acts. For example, on our Island we were told that unless we passed certain measures or complied with certain measures, there would be no federal moneys. There are many pressures, in answer to the delegate's question."

Also on a point of inquiry, Delegate Haunani Ching asked if the people in the states that had initiative were closer to their government and participated more in the governmental process because they had initiative. Delegate Chong, in response, stated that she believed they were "just as far away as we are."

Delegate Penebacker then rose to speak against the amendment, stating:

"Back in January when I decided to consider being a delegate to this Convention, I tried to look at the issues that were being presented. One of those was initiative, so I investigated to see what initiative was all about because I didn't know anything about it. And after listening to the pros and cons, I came to the conclusion that I was opposed to initiative. Since being in this Convention, since July 5, there's been created an atmosphere of fear, that if you don't do what I say you'll pay for it. I'm referring to the incident this morning when Delegate Takehara was presenting her view--someone was going to threaten her because she took that particular point of view. This past week I have been threatened bodily once, I've been threatened my car would be blown up, my house would be blown up, my office would be blown up. A lady, in particular, came to my office and said she was going to bury me behind my desk. This is the exact type of atmosphere of fear that we do not need in Hawaii. We were all elected on our platforms. When I ran in the 26th district I campaigned opposing initiative, and I was duly elected by the people in my district. Why should I now, after campaigning for months on that platform, change my mind?

"After listening to the pros and cons even today, it reinforces my position. I don't think this threat that Delegate Hale alluded to is something we need. This is one of the reasons I've come out very strongly against it. We're here to make rational decisions and we need a clear mind to make those decisions--not whereby someone will say, if you don't you're going to pay. We've had letters saying if you don't vote against this, we're going to reject every amendment that you propose. That's your prerogative. This is America, you are free to do as you please as long as it does not infringe on the rights of others. And my right to say what I damn well please is my right. For those who say, if you say it you're going to pay for it--that's fine too. But those who say that better be prepared for the results also."

Delegate Penebacker then offered his apologies to the Chair and the delegation for his actions that morning.

Delegate Eastvold rose to speak for the amendment, remarking that he also campaigned in the 26th district but in support of initiative. Acknowledging that it was an emotional subject, he noted that there were misconceptions and ill-informed ideas being conveyed to the delegation and explained:

"One of the first speakers against initiative pointed out that she did feel our constituents were very well informed; however, she went on to elaborate that she was afraid the minority would overcome the majority. I'd like to point out that even if the minority comes up with an indirect initiative proposal and by chance it gets through the legislature, it still takes a majority to enact it into law. Therefore, there's no way in the world the minority is going to overcome the majority because it's the majority that has to vote on that particular initiative. I'd also like to ask that delegate, when she made the comment that there would be a multitude of proposals on the ballot, where her facts are as to why she would believe that. All the facts--and I have studied this quite extensively--on even the most widely used initiative, which is the direct initiative, not the indirect, which is used in California--there has been a maximum of 7 and an average of 3 annually. When we compare this to what the legislature in the State of Hawaii discusses in a 2-month period, nearly 2,000 bills--that's 3 as compared to 2,000, I don't think there is any comparison as far as believing that our constituents cannot handle 3 when a mere 52 representatives discuss 2,000.

"Another colleague also to my left was misled into believing that we were discussing referendum. His comment was that initiative would be used as a copout and why would the legislature want to act on any particular bill when the people could turn around and repudiate that bill. We're not discussing referendum here, we're discussing initiative. Using copout as an excuse is not one I've ever heard for initiative; it's always been for referendum. I'd like to clarify a point and finally get the chance to answer my colleague and the committee chairman as to why an affirmative vote is a response for change. This is one of the safeguards widely used by those states that have both indirect and direct. They have found through their experience--and I believe we'd want to utilize that experience--that it has caused much less confusion to have this positive vote, or a yes vote, for change if they so desire and a no vote for the status quo. If you have a variety of initiatives, with some saying no for change and some saying yes, it causes confusion. This basically is a safeguard against such confusion.

"All I can say is that we're discussing initiative. We've discussed it before. This is merely a spare tire. We're not asking for anything great. I believe myself that it is the most important issue we're going to be discussing here, and the people have already expressed a desire for it. I have canvassed my district, I've taken a poll, and though my results conflict completely with my fellow delegate from the area, the people in my district do want initiative and I believe I am going to vote for it. Hopefully this Convention will do so also."

Delegate DiBianco then rose to voice his support for the amendment and to remind the delegates there were other issues to be taken up. Nobody, he pointed out, was changing anybody's mind. He then urged that the vote be taken.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Pulham mentioned that he had not campaigned on initiative and had therefore come with an open mind. He then observed:

"However, being in this body has been one of the key factors indicating to me that yes indeed, we truly need the initiative as part of our form of government in Hawaii. If you think about whether we're being responsive to the people, or that maybe the people might even need initiative to influence this body, then I think the conclusion would have to be that perhaps we do need to leave some things to the voters. And yes, I do happen to think that the voters in my district are intelligent enough to vote whether they want initiative. I'm going to take issue with something else that has been a recurrent theme throughout and that is the effectiveness and the golden halo we're placing around our state legislature. I don't happen to believe that. I think it depends on the particular issue and on which side of the street you happen to be on that particular issue, as to whether one happens to be a saint or a sinner. And if you don't agree, that's fine. But there are a great number of delegates in this Convention who are running to replace legislators, and if they are saints then we should leave them alone.

"So I say to you that there is room, and I would hate to think that this bunch of saints were going to cop out, as someone said earlier, simply because we had initiative. I find the two kind of hard to equate. I think they do need help; they need direction from the people, they need to know what the people are thinking. And if they should get it in this indirect form, it would on some very important issues give them that line of thought, at least for a portion of the populous. We're not twisting their arms. They would have the opportunity to put their particular version before the people, and if substantially different the other one would also be on the ballot and the people would have the final decision. Now, am I to believe that this body is opposed to this final decision? Are we opposed to what the Constitution says about the political power resting in the people? If we're not frightened of that, then we certainly have nothing to fear except, as someone said, fear itself. So I would ask you to vote for this measure. Thank you."

Delegate Lacy, speaking in favor of the amendment, commented that indirect initiative was acceptable to his constituents in the 11th district and that he felt it was an excellent amendment, being clear, reasonable and a compromise. He then urged the undecided delegates to consider that there were limitations but that it was an excellent compromise. He spoke for initiative, he observed, because he spoke for the minority and the amendment would allow them to be heard and to feel that they too belonged.

Delegate Kaapu then spoke in favor of the amendment as amended, noting that while it was not perfect it was acceptable to him. He voiced the feeling that the Convention should pass something in this area and this particular amendment did make some progress.

Delegate Weatherwax spoke against the amendment, pointing first to its length, which was over 3 pages. You could not digest its full impact on a ballot, he observed, and people did not want to have to study something like this, think about it, its ramifications, etc., preferring instead to read and be able to make quick decisions on a ballot. They should also, he noted, consider the source of information, explaining:

"Many times people are restricted. If we consider in our daily activity how we make decisions or come to information, I think we rely on magazines, the press, mass media. This is different from what existed at the turn of the century when initiative proposals had their heyday. I think we're in a little different social and economic time, especially with the highly advanced technology of today. But what it all boils down to is that it can be a false hope, that in fact it can be just what it is--a belief system. If you seek to believe in a representative form of government, you can make that representative form work. It may be inefficient and unresponsive at times but the person himself can make that mechanism work. So also with initiative. But there are some dangers and that's what we're concerned with, one danger being the interest of minorities.

"The argument has been raised that while you have a right to go to court and the court will in fact view that, once the majority has been moving in an inevitable process, sometimes we cannot dissuade them because the initiative process is in effect selling them a belief system. And I'm very concerned about the sell, that in fact people can be sold. If you look at what has occurred with each individual here, what you have been subjected to with reference to the issue of initiative--that may also occur to individuals. And the decision that some of us are required to make--and it was not an easy decision--so I believe that perhaps we do need the representative form of government. And again, we have said that government is inefficient, but sometimes we have to trade off inefficiency for perhaps a little knowledge and patience so that we can have good laws. I also caution as to our tendency to find an answer merely by passing a law--that sometimes is not the answer--when in fact the mental attitudes of the individuals in the body politics have come to a position and a wealth of knowledge of an opinion, perhaps I'm thinking of a utopia, but this is my philosophical basis.

"So it's not a question of whether we trust or distrust the people. I've heard an answer to one of my questions--well, this is a safeguard. A safeguard against what? Are we safeguarding the people against the people? You may have heard with reference to the comic character Pogo, whose statement was, 'We have met the enemy and they are us.' That may in fact be the case, but until we all come together and really put our act together, then we will have a society which we can consider utopian.

"Others have used the polls in support of their argument--public opinion polls. I think there might be a difference as to what information a public opinion poll is giving us at a particular time. One of the books I looked at in trying to come to a decision was David Riesman's Individualism Reconsidered, and it talks about how polls are taken and how the sell is made. I know for myself that Hawaii is unique because of its cultural differences and its educational standards, and that sometimes people may in fact say yes or no merely to get the answer or to use that particular conversation or topic just to interrelate, rather than really putting a charge on the issue and saying that I am right or I am wrong. Instead they do that for social interaction. Fine, social interaction is good, perhaps needed. There has also been reference to the fact that this will educate the people. I've heard the argument that those against initiative are elitist because we feel we are better educated. But I do not necessarily come from that position either. I think there is considerable value in emotion, and people can sometimes have a valid feeling and need not intellectualize it--and I'm not being anti-intellectual either, because I think there is value in both. But when you talk about the philosophical standoff, which it is, that people are good or bad--legislators happen to be good or bad. People depend on logic, and they also depend on emotion. Sometimes we cannot always be logical and sometimes we must be emotional. So, what I'm saying basically is that as far as the burden of proof for me and after looking at all these things, I still felt that there was more risk in moving to the initiative rather than in staying where we are now and making the present system work. I would therefore urge you not to support this amendment."

Delegate Marumoto, speaking for the amendment, indicated that her district was heavily in favor of initiative and related the results of a questionnaire she had sent out. They had, she reported, so far received 394 replies and were expecting more. She further noted:

"I realize that these results are not scientifically accurate, and this questionnaire must not be construed as a poll. But the immediateness and the intensity and commonality of the answers was astounding. People in Waiālae-Kahala are demanding reform. The results on the IR&R issues are as follows: 90.4 percent were in favor of initiative; 93.1 percent called for referendum; 91.1 percent wanted recall.

"The initiative measure before us today requires that a petition be signed 'by registered voters equal in number to no less than ten percent of the votes cast in the last general election for governor.' Yesterday the newspaper reported that the registered voter figure will probably rise to 383,000 persons--almost 400,000 persons. If all these people then voted this fall and this initiative measure is enacted as proposed, this would necessitate over 38,000 people. I frankly believe this figure is almost impossible to attain. It is much too high and is an almost insurmountable barrier to getting a petition on the ballot. I'd like to give you two examples of why I think this is a barrier. We recently witnessed a petition drive to chastize a judge for his action in a rape case. People were up in arms and a move for his recall resulted in about 25,000 signatures, to my recollection. The public indignation was very great, yet they did not attain the over 35,000 signatures necessary in this initiative measure. In July Common Cause and state Senator Mary George had a drive to secure 100,000 signatures requesting that we put initiative on the ballot. After a month and a concerted statewide effort, they had only 22,000 signatures. You can therefore see how difficult it would be to get over 35,000 signatures. I ask you then, why are delegates so afraid of initiative? If this 10-percent amendment passes, we will not be giving the citizens very much. Rather, I feel we will be holding back something which belongs to them by right. It is inconceivable to me that I have to say please, but I'll say it. Please reconsider and vote yes on this amendment."

Delegate Blake then spoke in favor of the amendment. Responding to a question on ballot information, he explained that the only words that would appear on the ballot would be "indirect initiative," and that the detailed information would be included in the digest to be prepared for voters as well as in the newspaper spread. Noting that he had received a favorable response from his constituents, with many asking that the issue be put on the ballot for the people to decide, he observed:

"I believe that the ones we should respect are the people of the State. I really don't think we should cut the people short. I consider the people of Hawaii very intelligent. They were intelligent enough to elect every one of us here. So I ask you to seriously consider this and let the public make the decision on election day."

Delegate Ontai, speaking for the motion, commented that the amendment was a watered-down version of the initiative concept and a compromise, adding that it had something for both sides. He remarked that some of the delegates were afraid if initiative were adopted it would "pull the wool over the people's eyes." However, he pointed out, before an issue got on the ballot, it would be widely discussed, analyzed in the newspapers, on TV and radio, clubs and organizations would come out for or against it, etc., because these were generally the big issues. If the issue were bad, he continued, people would talk against it, and it would take anywhere from 4 months to a year, he added, before enough signatures could be gathered.

Delegate Teruo Ihara rose to speak against the amendment. Referring to the comment that in 1950 he voted for initiative and that today he was against, he explained that in 1950 he had been "on the outside looking in."

Delegate Uyehara, speaking in support of the amendment, noted that it concerned indirect initiative rather than direct, and cautioned the delegates not to confuse the two. With indirect initiative, he explained, the people would bring their concerns to the representative form of government, which could then address them.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Silva pointed out that when threats were received it revealed that only a small concern rather than a majority of the people wanted something passed. Urging the delegates to "let Hawaii be Hawaii," he stated that each county had initiative and the people who wanted something done could use this means. It was said, he continued, that this was just an indirect initiative, but "have you ever seen water flow slowly, becoming a river and then becoming an ocean?" That, he noted, was what an indirect initiative could do, in the long run becoming a direct initiative.

Delegate Ishikawa, speaking in favor of the amendment, mentioned that he had earlier voted against because of strong reservations but that he was now willing "to rest my concern on the decision of my fellow delegates" and to support the concept of indirect initiative.

Delegate Chong, speaking last for her amendment, stated:

"Fellow delegates, this fear to speak against initiative, as one delegate mentioned, is completely confusing to me. The delegate fears to speak against but does not fear to vote against it. Come on now, who is he trying to impress? That the pressure is on? You bet the pressure is on. By the public--the majority of the people in this State. The pressure is also on to pass a responsible form of initiative, or the voting public will vote against all the proposals passed by this Convention. That is a visible fear, delegates. That's real, honest fear.

"Each delegate had certain issues of interest and concern. Each did his utmost to provide for necessary reforms and the introduction of new programs. The general public had as much input as desired. Now we are saying--you voters can vote for these proposals but not their initiative. As to the delegate who said he had a meeting with 50 constituents, I congratulate him. That's more than Ariyoshi and Fasi can get at one time. As to the good delegate's concern about a 3-page amendment being placed before the people, may I remind you that it will be put to the same people as the delegate's proposal would be. I'm certain that if this whole proposal comes before the people, he will solve the problem to make it more salable for that affirmative vote.

"As to the delegate who said he changed his mind, the voting record shows him voting no the first time. As to the good delegate who stated that this would precede direct initiative, if he took the time to read the amendment instead of following the majority like a bull with a ring through his nose, he'd find that this is one of the exceptions that this indirect initiative excludes.

"Ladies and gentlemen, I urge you for the good of all these proposals for the Constitutional Convention of 1978 to vote for this initiative. Thank you."

There being no further discussion and roll call being in order, the motion to amend Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 1 was put by the Chair and failed by a vote of 48 ayes, 53 noes and 1 excused; with Delegates Anae, Barnes, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chong, Chu, Chun, Crozier, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Funakoshi, Goodenow, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hoe, Hornick, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Kaapu, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Odanaka, Ontai, O'Toole, Peterson, Pulham, Shon, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Takitani, Uyehara and Wurdeman voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Andrews, Barnard, Barr, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chung, de Costa, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Lewis, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Okamura, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Souki, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegate De Soto being excused.

Delegate Chong then rose to thank the delegation for the time spent on her amendment.

At 12: 25 p. m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 12: 30 p. m.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Silva and carried, the Convention voted to recess until 2: 00 p. m.

At 12: 32 p. m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2: 00 p. m.

At this time, Delegate Stegmaier moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Kaapu, which added a new section to Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, to read in part:

INDIRECT INITIATIVE

The people and the legislature may enact legislation through the indirect initiative procedure. An initiated proposal shall be submitted to the legislature for its consideration upon the certification by the chief election officer that each county's registered voters, equal to or greater in number than 15 percent of the total votes cast in each county for governor in the preceding gubernatorial election, have signed a petition for the initiative proposal.

The legislature shall pass or reject the proposal by a vote of the majority of the members to which each house is entitled, or pass a proposal substantially similar to the one initiated. The legislature may propose a legislative proposal on the same subject matter in lieu of the initiative proposal, and the legislative proposal shall be submitted to the electorate at the next general election along with the initiative proposal. The legislature shall take one of the actions enumerated in this paragraph during the same session as the introduction of the proposal.

An initiative proposal shall not be submitted to the electorate until the legislature has passed or rejected the proposal, passed a proposal substantially similar to the initiative proposal, or passed a legislative proposal, but regardless of the action taken by the legislature, it shall be submitted to the electorate for its approval or disapproval at the general election following its introduction in the legislature.

The ballot shall contain the full text of an initiative proposal and any legislative proposal.

A special election shall not be held to pass or reject an initiative proposal or any legislative proposal.

APPROVAL OF INDIRECT INITIATIVE

A proposal, whether an initiative proposal or a legislative proposal, shall be considered approved upon the affirmative vote of a majority of all the votes tallied upon the question provided that this majority is equal to or greater than thirty percent of the total number of registered voters.

If two or more proposals are approved in the manner provided for in the preceding paragraph, and they conflict as to phraseology or substance, the proposal receiving the greater number of votes shall become law provided that it receives votes equal to or greater than thirty percent of the total number of registered votes.

If there is a tie between two proposals, the initiative proposal shall take precedence over the legislative proposal and shall become law. If there is a tie between two or more initiative proposals, the proposal whose petition was first certified by the chief election officer shall become law.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF THE PROPOSAL

The approved proposal shall be effective upon the certification of the election results by the chief election officer, provided that the proposal may provide for another effective date.

INDIRECT INITIATIVE PROCEDURE

An initiative proposal shall be registered with the chief election officer. The attorney general shall prepare a title and summary of the proposal. The sponsors of the initiative proposal shall then circulate a petition for signatures of registered voters required for submission of the proposal to the legislature. The chief election officer shall certify the validity of the petition within fifteen days of receipt of the petition.

Saturdays, Sundays and holidays shall be excluded in computing the fifteen day period.

The chief election officer shall return an invalid petition to the sponsor and shall specify the reasons for the invalidation.

No petition shall be submitted to the chief election officer for certification of validity after 4:30 p.m. of the first day of the regular session of the legislature.

Upon certification of the petition the chief election officer shall transmit the initiative proposal to the legislature to be introduced in both houses of the legislature by the speaker and president, respectively.

TIME LIMIT

All signatures required for an initiative proposal to be submitted to the legislature and the electorate shall be obtained within the period between the general election preceding its registration and 4:30 p.m. of the first day of the regular session of the legislature in the next even-numbered year. Any initiative proposal pending at the end of a general election shall be stricken from the roll of registered initiative proposals and any signature obtained on a petition for that initiative proposal shall be void.

POWERS OF THE INDIRECT INITIATIVE

The subject of initiated legislation shall not extend to the taxing power, budget or other appropriations measure, bond authorization acts, public employee collective bargaining agreements, expanding or decreasing the scope of original and appellate jurisdiction of courts, naming or designating any person to hold a public office, enacting or repealing laws or ordinances of political subdivisions of the State. Nor shall it extend to modifying this initiative process and to subjects inconsistent with this constitution or the Constitution of the United States.

No measure enacted by a vote of the electorate shall be repealed or amended by the legislature within two years of its effective date, except upon approval by roll call vote of two-thirds of the members of each house.

DEFEATED INITIATIVE

A defeated initiative measure shall not be resubmitted to the people by the initiative petition in either the same or essential substance, as determined by the chief election officer, either affirmatively or negatively for a period of three years.

PUBLIC DISCLOSURE

Funds contributed and expended to influence the outcome of initiative proposals must be disclosed in accordance with the laws and regulations that shall be prescribed by the legislature or the Campaign Spending Commission. Public disclosure of funds shall be made by both the proponents and opponents of an initiative proposal.

VOTER INFORMATION

The legislature shall enact legislation to inform the registered voters of the State about each initiative proposal which has qualified to be placed on the ballot.

The legislature may enact legislation to implement and facilitate the provisions of this section.

Speaking in support of his amendment, Delegate Stegmaier outlined:

"The initiative proposal will first be registered with the lieutenant governor. The attorney general will prepare a title and summary of the proposal. The sponsors will then circulate petitions supporting the proposal until what are thought to be sufficient numbers of voters from each of the counties of the State have signed the petition. Once it is submitted to the lieutenant governor, the petition shall be determined to be valid or invalid within 15 days of the lieutenant governor's receiving it.

"If found to be valid, the initiative proposal is then transmitted to the legislature not later than its opening day and introduced in both houses by the speaker and president, respectively. The legislature shall either pass or reject the proposal, pass a proposal substantially similar to the one initiated, and/or propose its own, which would then appear along with the initiative proposal on the ballot. The people, in the November election following the legislative session, would enact either proposal or vote them both down.

"This amendment addresses a number of concerns I have heard over the past 7 months, and I would like to explain what these concerns are and how they have been dealt with.

"(1) Concern has been expressed that the petition process is too unwieldy and subject to abuse. Therefore, this amendment requires that no official initiative petition be circulated without certification of and regulation by the lieutenant governor.

"(2) Concern has been expressed that the people will be fooled into supporting legislation which might be hidden in the fine print or covered over by a more popular provision. Therefore, this amendment allows for only one subject to be addressed in any one initiative proposal.

"(3) Concern has been expressed that with an unlimited period within which to collect signatures for an initiative proposal, the goal will always be reached, possibly even after a lot of signers have changed their minds on that particular issue. Thus, this amendment limits the period within which signatures for any one initiative proposal must be collected to approximately 1 year and 2 months.

"(4) Concern has been expressed that complex, technical issues which legislators have been elected to deal with in a careful, conscientious manner will be decided by the people in an emotional, overly simplistic fashion. Thus this amendment excludes certain subjects from consideration by the initiative mechanism; among these are the taxing power, budget or other appropriations measures, bond authorization acts, public employee collective bargaining agreements, modifying the initiative process itself, and expanding or decreasing the scope of original and appellate jurisdiction of the courts.

"(5) Neighbor islanders have expressed concern that successful petition drives will be carried out on Oahu which might result in laws disadvantageous to the neighboring islands. Therefore, this amendment requires signatures from each county equal in number to 15 percent of the votes cast in each county for governor in the preceding gubernatorial election. Thus a substantial number of neighbor islanders are required to support a measure so strongly that they are willing to petition in writing for it before it may even be brought before the legislature for consideration. This provision in my estimation will protect the neighbor islands against discriminatory legislation.

"(6) Concern has been expressed that decision-making by the people on initiative proposals will take place in an intellectual and informational vacuum. This is an indirect initiative proposal and indirect initiative requires a substantial involvement by the state legislature, guaranteeing a very thorough examination of all initiative measures which qualify for review and action by the legislature. Furthermore, this particular proposal allows for the legislature, after examination and rejection of the petitioned initiative measure, to draft its own counter-proposal, which would then be placed on the ballot along with the petitioned measure.

"The amendment calls for further intellectual and informational focus on each initiative measure through a provision that the 'legislature shall enact legislation to inform the registered voters of the State about each initiative proposal which has qualified to be placed on the ballot.' Thus, thanks to the legislature, the people will be making decisions in a very fertile intellectual and informational environment, rather than in a vacuum.

"(7) Concern has been expressed that in classic indirect initiative the relatively small percentage of voters signing a petition has a distinct advantage in influencing the action of the legislature, over the greater percentage of voters not signing the petition. In the classic model, if the legislature passed a measure which was identical to that petitioned, the measure would never be voted upon by the electorate. In this amendment, however, all initiative measures, whether passed by the legislature or not, are submitted to the people for final ratification or rejection.

"(8) Concern has been expressed that having special elections for initiatives will be too expensive and may allow small numbers of people to make decisions for the rest of the populace. Therefore, this amendment restricts the appearance of initiative measures to general election ballots only, thus insuring a large turnout of voters. The amendment also provides that no initiative measure may become law without the affirmative vote of at least 30 percent of the registered voters.

"(9) Concern has been expressed that laws adopted by direct democracy might be difficult to change even if they are unworkable.

Thus, this amendment allows for the legislature to repeal or amend such laws within 2 years of their effective dates, upon the approval by roll-call vote of two thirds of each house. After 2 years, the legislature would have the power to repeal or amend through its regular procedures.

"(10) Concern has been expressed that large amounts of money expended by powerful special interest groups will influence the outcome of initiative campaigns. As mentioned previously, the legislature's significant involvement in the initiative process should contribute to a balanced view of the subject under consideration. Furthermore, this amendment includes a public disclosure requirement for all funds contributed and expended to influence the outcome of an initiative measure.

"Finally, concern has been expressed that initiative will change the manner in which we make our laws, causing our society to become a direct instead of representative democracy. If this amendment were to become part of our Constitution, ours would be the only state in the nation having a 15-percent signature requirement for indirect initiative petitions. This provision, especially coupled with its county distribution requirement, will be the toughest in the country and will require a strenuous effort for any provision to be placed on the ballot. I want to emphasize that this amendment will not allow anything frivolous or irresponsible to become law, and it is hardly a threat to our representative form of democracy. Thank you."

At this time Delegate Liu moved to amend the amendment, seconded by Delegate Wurdeman, by substituting the number "10" in place of "15," to read "...greater in number than 10 percent of the total votes cast...."

Speaking for his amendment to Amendment No. 2, Delegate Liu stated:

"I think the amendment to the amendment is necessary to make the proposed indirect initiative before us an initiative. As the original movant mentioned, the requirement of this indirect initiative would be the toughest in the country. I'd say it would also be the greatest masquerade in the country. I would also like to amend the statement made by the movant that it would not allow anything frivolous to get on the ballot. I think you could just end the sentence at "anything." I think 10 percent as the subject matter requirement would make it perhaps reasonable, perhaps accessible, perhaps usable. For that reason, I hope we all vote for the amendment to the amendment."

Delegate Marumoto rose to speak in favor of the amendment to the amendment, pointing out that 15 percent would make a requirement of 57,000 signatures, which would be almost impossible to obtain.

There being no further discussion, the question of the amendment to the amendment was put by the Chair and the motion carried. At this time Delegate Chu called for a division of the house. The question was again put and on a rising vote the motion failed to carry by a vote of 40 ayes and 45 noes.

Delegate O'Toole then rose to speak against the amendment, observing:

"I campaigned on initiative, direct initiative. However, I have to speak against this one because if we pass this amendment, we are in essence giving the public a bone with absolutely no meat on it. It is my opinion that we cannot fool the public. If we are going to pass initiative, pass it. If not and we pass something that is initiative in name only as this is, I can almost say absolutely, it will probably never be used. So what we're doing is giving a Christmas package with absolutely nothing in it.

"The reason I say this initiative proposal will never be used is because we have a 15-percent registration requirement factor by county. Again this effectively says that, almost always, this initiative will never be used. Also the proposal calls for the legislature to pass or reject the proposal.

"There's one other basic difference. It says that the legislature 'shall pass or reject the proposal by a vote of the majority of the members to which each house is entitled, or pass a proposal substantially similar to the one initiated.' Again this is totally watered down. I would like to see both put on the ballot so that the voters will have a choice between the two. I think you can get into a discussion of what 'substantially similar' would mean. Also, this proposal is watered down by having so many more requirement factors to be met regarding what can be placed on initiative and what can't be. So for those three basic reasons I'm going to have to vote no but I did want to explain why."

Delegate DiBianco, speaking against the amendment, mentioned that he too had campaigned on the platform that if elected he would try to get an initiative proposal on the ballot. He then stated:

"I speak against this amendment because it is not initiative. Any proposal that has a 15-percent signature requirement can scarcely be called an initiative proposal, since that amounts to approximately 50,000 signatures. And I would remind you that during this entire summer, and during the period of time that we've been debating initiative, and the controversy has raged throughout the public, we've managed to have presented to us two petitions, one with 20,000 signatures for, and one with 18,500 signatures against. Under Delegate Stegmaier's amendment, that would not qualify for a November ballot, since that is not 15 percent of the vote. If we could not get 15 percent of the people to sign petitions for and against initiative, how can we ever expect the people to show enough interest to sign a petition to put an initiative proposal on the ballot.

"The subject limitations I find rather distressing. There are limitations to the effect that initiative cannot handle anything having to do with the taxing power or budget, bonds or public employee collective bargaining--which is the same as saying that through initiative we can touch no governmental money matters. We cannot have any type of reform to the Constitution, which means that many of the issues that interest the public--such as elected attorney general, open primary, blanket primary and closed primary, all of the local government issues that we discussed--most of the issues that we've discussed as delegates would be untouchable by the public through this indirect initiative proposal. We could not effect or modify or repeal any county ordinances, we could not in any way, later on, protect our own initiative proposals by lowering the signature percentage requirement, we couldn't in any way change or effect the operation of the court.

"As I see it, all that's left through this initiative proposal--if they could get 50,000 signatures together, they could handle such subjects as abortion, state holidays and the laws pertaining to fish and wildlife. I don't think there's anything else left that this particular proposal has managed not to exclude, and for these reasons I have to speak against it. We had our opportunity to vote for initiative this morning, and we voted against it. I think a review of the initiative proposals that are coming up, including this one, shows they are not true initiative; this proposal could never be utilized by the people of the State and it will detract from our ability to take our fight for initiative over to the legislature. And the legislature, as we've been told time and again, is a responsive legislature, sitting there just dying for the public to come over and express its needs and its desires. So I say let's take the fight to the legislature, let's find out whether or not they are responsive, and we'll determine whether or not we can get a true initiative package, either direct or indirect, presented to the public through the legislature."

Delegate Kaapu then spoke in favor of the amendment, mentioning that he had voted for the amendment to this amendment that would have lowered the signature requirement, but that this amendment would still be a step in the right direction. He then reflected:

"Coupled with other proposals to follow, it might be possible for the voters to have two stages of initiative--one a very difficult one that would be used rarely when a tremendous number of people are in agreement on a particular subject, and the other to be initiated rather easily to bring matters forcefully before the legislature and if that fails then to accelerate or to escalate to a more difficult source such as we have here. But not agreeing entirely with the provisions and finding it not meeting all of my personal preferences is not enough for me to vote against this. And I certainly would urge that we vote for whatever we can get and follow the custom of the Chinese, that perhaps some things take many generations to achieve but at least in this generation, at least at this opportunity I would personally hope that we would make some progress."

Delegate Blean, speaking against the amendment, mentioned that he too had campaigned on initiative. He then stated that the amendment was not an initiative proposal but simply a kind of delusion to the public, adding, "It's essentially time we stop blowing smoke in their face and realize that initiative, in any realistic form, is not going to come out of this Convention and we're going to have to take our fight to the legislature. With the restrictions on it, essentially what this proposal does--it does nothing and it makes it impossible to do it."

Delegate Harris, speaking as a strong supporter of initiative, also voiced his opposition to the amendment.

Delegate Stegmaier then rose to speak last, stating:

"I speak once again in favor of the amendment, and in so doing I'd like to share with you some of my realizations about the matter of initiative.

"First and foremost, and clearly most damaging to a rational, objective look at the issue, is my realization that everyone, including myself, has exaggerated its significance and its potential impact on our society. In this atmosphere of exaggeration, it has been stated that initiative is an alien idea imported to Hawaii to be used as a means of shifting the locus of power in our State. And what I would like to ask is, in that case, what was Stanley Miyamoto, chairman of the Joint Tax Study Committee, doing back at the constitutional convention of 1950, 'vigorously supporting' the placing of initiative, referendum and recall in the Constitution? The Joint Tax Study Committee was an organization which represented and was supported by the Hawaii Education Association, Hawaii Government Employees' Association, the United Sugar Workers Union, ILWU and the Central Labor Council, AF of L.

"It is said that initiative, and by association my amendment, would cause long, complicated ballots which would frustrate the voter instead of increasing participation and interest. The long ballots in California are caused by factors not found, nor being proposed, in Hawaii. A major difference is that in California the petition requirement is 5 percent, while this amendment of course proposes 15 percent. Also, while many money issues automatically go to California's voters via referendum, no such practice is advocated here.

"Fears have been expressed that the process of initiative will produce irresponsible laws that will hurt helpless minorities and working people. These grave thoughts, which have the effect of scaring us away from initiative, are divorced from reality as well. Perhaps in its purest theoretical form, it would be possible to imagine the spectre of hundreds of direct initiative measures being considered and voted on only by a privileged few who could afford to buy computer terminals, but all of this is pretty farfetched.

"What we have before us is an indirect initiative which excludes public employee collective bargaining agreements and other money matters. It is a very moderate proposal which ought not to be confused with any theoretical initiative, or for that matter any initiative that exists on the mainland. Hawaii is unique, and so should be its initiative.

"Why are we so certain that discriminatory legislation will emanate any more from the initiative process than from our legislature, especially since we are talking about an indirect initiative actually submitted to the legislature for examination and response.

"In closing I'd like to leave a few thoughts. If we think the polls showing overwhelming support for initiative may be inaccurate, let's find out for sure by placing this initiative proposal on the ballot. And if we think that the majority of the people who say they support initiative say so because they are uninformed about it, let's take responsibility for informing the public between now and November and then have them decide whether they want it.

"I'd like to refer to a statement our governor made during his address to this Convention on our opening day. He quoted from a letter by President Thomas Jefferson written in 1816, as follows: 'I know of no safe depository of the ultimate powers of the society but the people themselves; and if we think them not enlightened enough to exercise their control with a wholesome discretion, the remedy is not to take it from them, but to inform their discretion by education.' Thank you."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair and the motion failed.

Delegate Hamilton then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 3, seconded by Delegate Kaapu, which amended Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by adding a new section, to read in part:

INDIRECT INITIATIVE

The people may propose statutory amendments to the legislature on any subject, except for public employee salaries, through the indirect initiative procedure. An indirect initiative proposal shall be submitted to the legislature for its consideration upon the certification by the chief election officer that registered voters, equal to or greater in number than fifteen percent of the total votes cast for governor in the preceding gubernatorial election, have signed a petition for the indirect initiative proposal.

An indirect initiative proposal shall embrace but one subject. An indirect initiative petition containing a ballot title, statement of purpose and the full text of the proposed statutory amendment shall be filed with the chief election officer for certification prior to circulation for signatures. Within fifteen days after receipt of the petition, the chief election officer shall certify the indirect initiative proposal's ballot title, statement of purpose and summary, either in the original form or clarified so as to more accurately represent and more nearly conform to the text of the proposal. Denial of certification shall be subject to judicial review.

After the required number of signatures is obtained, the indirect initiative petition shall be resubmitted to the chief election officer for certification of signatures no later than thirty days prior to the legislative session preceding a general election.

Upon certification of the petition signatures, the chief election officer shall transmit the initiative proposal to the legislature for introduction in both houses of the legislature by the speaker and president, respectively.

During the same session at which an indirect initiative proposal is submitted, the legislature shall pass or reject the proposal by a majority of the members to which each house is entitled, or the legislature may pass an alternate proposal on the same subject matter in lieu of the initiative proposal. If the legislature rejects the indirect initiative proposal, that proposal shall be submitted to the electorate at the next general election following the legislative session. If the legislature passes an alternate proposal, both the legislative proposal and the indirect initiative proposal shall be submitted to the electorate at the next general election following the legislative session.

Each indirect initiative proposal or alternate legislative proposal to be submitted to the electorate shall be identified by its ballot title and the question shall appear in such form that an affirmative vote is a vote for change. A proposal, whether an indirect initiative proposal or a legislative proposal, shall be considered approved upon the affirmative vote of a majority of all the votes tallied upon the question; provided that this majority is equal to or greater than thirty percent of the total number of registered voters.

If two or more proposals are approved in the manner provided for in the preceding paragraph, and are in conflict as to phraseology or substance, the proposal receiving the greater number of votes shall become law provided that it receives votes equal to or greater than thirty percent of the total number of registered voters.

If there is a tie between an indirect initiative proposal and a legislative proposal, the initiative proposal shall take precedence over the legislative proposal and shall become law. If there is a tie between two or more indirect initiative proposals, the proposal whose petition was first certified by the chief election officer shall become law.

The approved proposal shall be effective upon the certification of the election results by the chief election officer, unless otherwise provided by the proposal.

The legislature may enact legislation to implement and facilitate the provisions of this section.

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Hamilton observed:

"I advance this actually with some reluctance. That famous mother of mine--as I used to go off to kindergarten, the last thing she'd say as I went out the door was, "Tom, be sure you count the votes." And I have the votes counted and I know where they lie, so I don't want to make too much of it. I did move it, however, to keep face with the number of people who asked me to reintroduce this, which I withdrew last week when we discussed it, because I wanted to take some kind of action on it. Whatever the night was, or the morning, we discussed this, this Convention accorded me the privilege of making a speech about indirect initiative and I made the best speech I could. I then listened to quite a few--boy, did I listen to quite a few--and I think no further speech on my part at this point is called for. This is up to the delegates. Thank you."

Delegate Hale at this time moved to amend the amendment by substituting the word "twelve" for "fifteen" in the first paragraph, seconded by Delegate Liu.

Speaking briefly for her amendment, Delegate Hale indicated that while 12 percent was quite high, it was a compromise and something she could vote for and take back to her constituents.

Delegate DiBianco then spoke in favor of the amendment to 12 percent, pointing out that this amendment did not have as many of the unacceptable limitations of the last amendment, and that the 12 percent was a reasonable compromise.

There being no further discussion on the amendment to Amendment No. 3, the question was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Kaapu then rose to speak for the original amendment, noting that while this was not the best initiative proposal it was one that could work and therefore preferable to none at all.

Speaking last for his amendment, Delegate Hamilton reflected:

"I suppose now comes the time when we must all vote our conscience, and such moments always have a sort of existentialistic quality about them--and in the interest of plain language, I'll quickly explain that. Earlier this century, there was a fine poet by the name Delmore Schwartz--although I must say I enjoyed his essays more because that's when he developed his magnificent definition, and he defined existentialism in the following words: 'Existentialism means that no one else can take a bath for you.' Fellow delegates, let us take a bath."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 3 was put by the Chair and the motion failed.

At this time Delegate Kaapu requested that Amendment No. 4 be withdrawn, and there being no objection it was so noted.

Delegate Kaapu then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 5, seconded by Delegate Ledward, which amended Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by adding a new section, to read in part:

INDIRECT INITIATIVE

The people may propose statutory amendments to the legislature on any subject through the indirect initiative procedure. An indirect initiative proposal shall be submitted to the legislature for its consideration upon the certification by the chief election officer that registered voters, equal to or greater in number than five percent of the total votes cast for governor in the preceding gubernatorial election, have signed a petition for the indirect initiative proposal.

An indirect initiative proposal shall embrace but one subject. An indirect initiative petition containing a ballot title, statement of purpose and the full text of the proposed statutory amendment shall be filed with the chief election officer for certification prior to circulation for signatures. Within fifteen days after receipt of the petition, the chief election officer shall certify the indirect initiative proposal's ballot title, statement of purpose and summary, either in the original form or clarified so as to more accurately represent and more nearly conform to the text of the proposal. Denial of certification shall be subject to judicial review.

After the required number of signatures is obtained, the indirect initiative petition shall be resubmitted to the chief election officer for certification of signatures no later than thirty days prior to the legislative session preceding a general election.

Upon certification of the petition signatures, the chief election officer shall transmit the initiative proposal to the legislature for introduction in both houses of the legislature by the speaker and president, respectively.

During the same session at which an indirect initiative proposal is submitted, the legislature shall pass or reject the proposal in its entirety by a majority of the members to which each house is entitled, or the legislature may pass an alternate proposal on the same subject matter in lieu of the initiative proposal. If an alternate proposal is passed, both the legislative proposal and the indirect initiative proposal shall be submitted to the electorate at the next general election following the legislative session. If the legislature rejects the indirect initiative proposal and passes no alternate proposal, then the indirect initiative shall be void, but the amendments contained therein may be proposed again by following the procedures in this section.

Each indirect initiative proposal or alternate legislative proposal to be submitted to the electorate shall be identified by its ballot title and the question shall appear in such form that an affirmative vote is a vote for change. A proposal, whether an indirect initiative proposal or a legislative proposal, shall be considered approved upon the affirmative vote of a majority of all the votes tallied upon the question; provided that this majority is equal to or greater than thirty percent of the total number of registered voters.

If two or more proposals are approved in the manner provided for in the preceding paragraph, and are in conflict as to phraseology or substance, the proposal receiving the greater number of votes shall become law provided that it receives votes equal to or greater than thirty percent of the total number of registered voters.

If there is a tie between an indirect initiative proposal and a legislative proposal, the initiative proposal shall take precedence over the legislative proposal and shall become law.

The approved proposal shall be effective upon the certification of the election results by the chief election officer, unless otherwise provided by the proposal.

The legislature may enact legislation to implement and facilitate the provisions of this section.

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Kaapu explained:

"I asked that the previous amendment be withdrawn because it has certain subject matter exclusions. Amendment No. 5 has no exclusion; it provides that any subject matter may be the subject of an indirect initiative petition. It requires only 5 percent of the total registered voters in the previous gubernatorial election. It provides that the legislature may act favorably and pass the legislation as proposed, or reject it. If they amend, they must put both the amended and original versions on the ballot; however, if they choose to reject the proposed legislation, the initiative measure is voided. It may, however, be brought up again without limitation by the same procedure.

"I realize that this particular amendment does not suit the needs of many who wish to have either direct or indirect initiative of the more classic variety. Some of the objectives of those who favor initiative include: first, that the public should have a greater role in helping to frame and to pass legislation; and secondly, that because they are often in the position of finding the representative government process unresponsive to their concerns, they would like to have some means of making laws directly by bypassing that process. I hope I have not too badly represented some of the objectives that were stated.

"It was my feeling that we could not get a direct initiative allowing the legislative process to be bypassed but perhaps something could be done through the initiative process to meet the first two objectives, and that was first of all to allow the voter a greater role in framing and proposing and making legislation, making law. Secondly, if the legislature from time to time seems unresponsive, perhaps there ought to be a way for matters to be brought before them with such force that they would have to consider and act, whether yea or nay, but nevertheless bring it to a vote, be counted, do the work as they ought to. I thought that would be helpful and healthy. It would not bypass, it would not weaken the process of representative government, but it would allow it to function more properly. So for that reason this amendment was drafted. It was done in such a way as to make it easy to use. However, the options are certainly limited in terms of what can happen if the legislature chooses to reject this proposal, and that I recognized. But as I look at this, it would constitute progress over what we have now and provide for some mechanism whereby the community could effectuate their wishes and bring their matters of concern to the legislature in a manner which they could not ignore.

"The last time I used an analogy referring to an animal, I later regretted it. But sometimes there are things distasteful in one form that can be made more tasteful, or useful, in another form. So I think there is perhaps something out of all this that can be captured. We all know that a balloon fish, if you were to eat it, probably would kill you. But if you take the bladder out and do a few other things and cook it carefully, it will put hair on your chest. So in any matter which may be threatening to certain segments of the public, if we were to look at some of the good points, to distill these down, to offer them certainly as an improvement, then I certainly would like to be a sponsor of such a thing. And it was for that reason that I put together this amendment, and I offer it for your consideration on its merits."

Delegate Hale then moved to amend the amendment by changing the title from "Indirect Initiative" to "Legislative Petition," seconded by Delegate Wurdeman.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Hale pointed out that what was offered in the amendment was not indirect initiative and that this could be confusing on the ballot. It was not necessary, she remarked, to outline a procedure for legislative petition since it could be done with less than 5 percent, but at least, she added, it should be called by its right name.

Delegate Kaapu then voiced his approval of the amendment to the amendment, adding that it was not his intent to confuse or mislead.

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend the amendment by changing the title was put by the Chair and carried.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak against the amendment, explaining that it simply outlined the procedure for petitioning the legislature and should not be put in the Constitution. The subject, she added, was already in the Constitution with no percentages, etc. She further noted that it was inaccurate to say the legislature would be forced to act one way or another by passing or rejecting, because if they didn't pass they would reject, whether by burying it in committee or however.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Chong stated that the amendment was not an initiative proposal. Initiative, she pointed out, had been proposed earlier, debated for 2 hours and voted down. She then remarked:

"Evidently fear of the public's rejection of all Con Con proposals has finally reached this delegation. Pressure by the voting public is becoming a realization at last. So what we have before us is the proposal of an initiative that's not worth the paper it's written on. This is an unnecessary course of action, it's a waste of time and effort and could best be done by the public by picking up the telephone or writing a letter to their elected officials. Fellow delegates, what you are doing now is a shameful action, or reaction, to an excellent measure that we had this morning. Thank you."

Delegate Kaapu, speaking for the amendment as amended, explained:

"There was a statement by the mover of the amendment to the amendment as to the content of this amendment that I think was gravely in error, and that was that the legislature could, under this proposal, shunt anything aside, ignore it and reject it by not passing anything.

That is not true. On the second page in the second paragraph, it states: 'During the same session at which an indirect initiative proposal is submitted, the legislature shall pass or reject the proposal in its entirety by a majority of the members to which each house is entitled, or the legislature may pass an alternate proposal on the same subject...' etc. What I consider the usefulness of this is that, should there be a person or group that feels their ideas have been ignored, by securing signatures of 5 percent of the voters in the State, they can bring forcefully before the legislature a measure, or a package of measures, which cannot be ignored and must be considered and acted upon either in the affirmative or the negative. And that's far more than any speaker of the house or president of the senate or governor can expect. Their measures can be put aside, ignored, bottled up in committee, put in the icebox, but any measure which is brought in under this amendment would have to be considered, would have to be taken up to the final vote of both houses, with a roll call and everybody recorded for or against. And I think that is real progress--maybe not all the progress we could have, but it is certainly significant. And for that reason, I think that the erroneous statement earlier should be corrected and the merit recognized."

Delegate Hale, on a point of personal privilege, stated:

"The implication was that I didn't understand and said something that I did not say, and I would just like the record to be clear. What I said was that we don't need legislation or constitutional amendments to allow the legislative petition process. I said that right now we can send a petition to the legislature, with no requirement as to 5 percent or any other, and the legislature right now will either pass it or bottle it up in committee, which is the same as rejecting. Those were my words."

Delegate Liu then spoke against the amendment, pointing out that the language was unclear as to the meaning of "reject." Referring to the last sentence of the fifth paragraph, he indicated that the phrase "if the legislature rejects" was not clear and could in fact be interpreted in more than one way. On a point of information, he then inquired whether this form of legislative petition was used in any other state.

Delegate Stegmaier, speaking in favor of the amendment, explained that the amendment would institutionalize the concept of the petition process in government, and added that anything that forwarded the participation of people would be beneficial.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Campbell observed:

"If this amendment were adopted, it would be an exercise in futility. And if the community were frustrated initially, such that they wanted to make use of this measure, if they went through the painful process of securing the necessary 5-percent signature, and then the proposed measure were placed before the legislature and rejected, it seems to me that they would no longer be frustrated, they might well be hysterical. And instead of ameliorating the problem, we would have compounded it. For this reason I shall vote against it. Mahalo."

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 5 was put by the Chair and failed to carry.

Delegate Barnes moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 6, seconded by Delegate Burgess, which amended Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by adding a new section, to read in part:

REFERENDUM

The referendum power is reserved to the people. Under this power registered voters of not less in number than ten percent of all votes cast for all candidates for governor at the preceding general election preceding the filing of the referendum petition shall order the submission to the people for the approval, amendment or repeal of any law, section or part thereof; except for measures deemed necessary for the immediate preservation of the public place, health or safety, and for tax levies, bonds and other forms of revenue measures for the usual and current expenses of the State.

A referendum petition shall be filed with the chief election officer not later than ninety days prior to the general election at which it is to be submitted to the people. When a referendum is filed against a law or portion thereof, the law shall remain in effect until the referendum is enacted.

The referendum shall be approved by a majority of votes cast thereon.

If after a referendum petition has been filed with the chief election officer and the law subject to the referendum petition is either repealed or amended by the legislative process in any manner so that, in the opinion of the attorney general, it differs from the referendum measure, both the repealed or amended law and the referendum measure shall be submitted to the people so that they may choose between them, except as provided by the next to last sentence of this paragraph. The measure receiving the highest number of votes shall prevail. If a law is either repealed or amended so that it is the same as or similar to and accomplishes the same purpose as the referendum measure as determined by the attorney general, the chief election officer shall declare the referendum measure void and order it stricken from the ballot by public announcement. A petitioner whose petition is voided by a determination of the attorney general may appeal such determination to the supreme court.

A defeated referendum measure shall not be resubmitted to the people in either the same form or essential substance, as determined by the attorney general, either affirmatively or negatively for a period of two years.

Prior to the circulation of any referendum petition for signatures, a copy shall be submitted to the attorney general who shall prepare a title and summary of the chief purpose and aim of the proposed measure. The title and summary shall not exceed two hundred words.

All referendum petitions shall be submitted to the chief election officer for certification. Each sheet containing petitioners' signatures shall be attached to the title, summary and text of the referendum petition. No law shall be enacted limiting the number of copies of a petition which may be circulated. Any registered voter of this State shall be competent to solicit signatures. The petition shall be signed by registered voters. All signers shall add their address as shown on their voter registration form and the date upon which they sign the petition. Every sheet of the petition containing signatures shall be verified by affidavit of the petition circulator that each name on the sheet was signed in the presence of the affiant and that in the belief of the affiant each signer is a registered voter of the State. The chief election officer shall certify that the signers are registered voters of this State.

The chief election officer shall not release any petition for inspection by the public or any governmental agency, except where the supreme court orders inspection of the petition when a question has been raised regarding the sufficiency of a petition. If any petition under this section has been determined to be insufficient, the petition shall be returned to the circulators within thirty days of its filing with the notations of specific insufficiencies.

Any measure under this section shall be presented to the people in such a form that a yes vote, on a yes or no ballot, shall indicate an affirmative vote for the measure as the measure is written.

The referendum measure shall be effective, if approved, one day after the election results are announced unless otherwise provided for in the measure.

The veto power of the governor shall not extend to referendum measures approved by the people. No measure enacted by the people shall be repealed or amended by the legislature unless otherwise provided in the measure, or that which shall be submitted to a referendum.

The petitioners shall bear all cost of the preparation and circulation of the petition, except for the services performed by the attorney general under this section. After the petition has been filed with the chief election officer, all further costs shall be part of the usual expenditures of the State.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Barnes outlined:

"Although we had only 10 minutes or so discussion in Committee of the Whole, I think many of the issues have been presented. This has a 10-percent signature requirement. It exempts immediate preservation measures and taxation measures, which you can see by the last four lines of the first paragraph. That was one of the questions the other evening.

"Again I refer to the Big Island experience that was set out in the minority/plurality report, and of course the referendum provisions that will be applied to our own Con Con provisions. I would hope that this would gain a little more support than even an indirect initiative, and that's the main reason I introduced it today, to see what kind of vote we do have among the delegates, since of course I presume everyone knows that a petition referendum can only be initiated on a legislative act that is completed. So this is not as threatening or as troublesome or disruptive to the existing legislative process as any form of initiative. It's merely a way of having the public approve or disapprove a statute that's already been passed. I urge the adoption of this amendment."

Delegate Hale, speaking for the amendment, pointed out:

"It's often said that if you don't like what the legislature does you can vote them out at the next election, but without referendum you will not be able to vote out the laws they passed that you don't like. And this will give you that chance."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 6 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate O'Toole requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 34 ayes, 57 noes and 11 excused; with Delegates Barnes, Blake, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chu, Chun, DiBianco, Dyer, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Goodenow, Hale, Hanaike, Harris, Hoe, Hornick, Kaapu, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Odanaka, Ontai, O'Toole, Peterson, Pulham, Shon, Stegmaier, Sutton and Wurdeman voting aye; Delegates Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barr, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Marion Lee, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Okamura, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Souki, Stone, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Alcon, Blean, De Soto, Eastvold, Funakoshi, Dennis Ihara, Lewis, Nozaki, Sterling, Takitani and Villaverde being excused.

Delegate Barnes moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 7, seconded by Delegate Wurdeman, which amended Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by adding a new section to read:

REFERENDUM FOR LAND USE, ZONING AND LOCAL ISSUES

The power of referendum shall be reserved by the people of a political subdivision for the approval or disapproval of all decisions on land use, except for decisions on Hawaiian home lands, including zoning, and other local issues.

The chief election officer shall provide for such referenda upon petition as provided by law for the affected political subdivision; provided that if neighborhood boards are established in the political subdivision such petition shall include ten percent of the registered voters in each directly affected neighborhood board district.

The referendum results shall be binding upon a majority of votes cast in the affected political subdivision; provided that if neighborhood boards are established in the political subdivision a majority of the votes cast in the affected neighborhood board districts shall also be required.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Barnes noted:

"I would like to bring it to the attention of the delegates that this is a constitutionally approved concept for handling our land use problems. Basically it's a referendum zoning concept, and unfortunately it fell in the puka between two committees, between BORSE--BORSE thought that the environment committee would handle it and it was a part of the Aina Malama concept which lost out along the way in the environment committee, and so it never got considered by either committee to any extent at all.

"I'd just like to point out a couple of the features. If one of our agricultural land proposals is also diluted or changed in any way, we will be left really with no constitutional tools to strengthen it--movement of land, upzoning or downzoning of land, which is a critical problem here in Hawaii.

"This proposal also recognizes neighborhood board districts as an important planning area. Right now the development plans do utilize neighborhood board districts as functional areas for community input, and I point out that this does not mean that the neighborhood board itself is involved in this process, only that that subdivision is utilized, so that if a given land use exchange--for example, let's say Thomas Square in our own district, the Thomas Square highrise project. Practically all the neighborhood board groupings and community organizations were opposed to that, and yet there was a point at which the city council could approve it. So this would be a counterbalance in actions like that, where the affected neighborhood board district would have to be involved in the petition process and also have to approve, along with such county, any land use changing, upzoning or downzoning.

"As to the concerns for the neighbor islands that do not have neighborhood boards, this is written in such a way that the Big Island, for example--the smallest unit that you would have would be the county. You would not, of course, have a smaller subdivision in the county involved in the referendum process. But if in the future they would develop boards, then of course those districts would become involved. So I urge you to vote for this amendment."

On a point of inquiry, Delegate Hale questioned what other groups, in addition to the Land Use Commission, the amendment would apply to, except county zoning planning boards. Delegate Barnes in response mentioned the Land Use Commission and county councils, as well as the body that had power to approve variances.

Delegate Hale then moved to amend the amendment to delete in the first paragraph all the language after the words "land use" and to insert instead "of the Land Use Commission," seconded by Delegate DiBianco.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Hale explained that the counties were allowed to go through their county planning commissions in making land use decisions and she did not feel the Constitution should tell each county how to make these decisions. If the counties wished to do this, she continued, it should be done by charter amendment. She would approve each county being able to have a referendum on decisions of the Land Use Commission, she added, but not the concept of overriding the county's powers.

Delegate O'Toole then questioned whether the last two paragraphs should also be deleted, to which Delegate Hale responded that that was not necessary, pointing out that decisions of the Land Use Commission were state decisions whereas locally if there were neighborhood boards they could have input.

There being no further discussion, the question of the amendment to the amendment was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak against the original amendment, explaining that this was again dealing in home rule decisions and that enough had already been done to delete county powers. She further pointed out difficulties that the Big Island would have due to the great distance from one side of the island to the other.

Delegate Weatherwax, speaking against the amendment, remarked that it used a simplistic approach for solving land use problems, which, he noted, were doubtful of being solved purely by a referendum. A referendum, he added, would not foster such land use areas as balance of interest, tradeoffs, etc.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 7 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Hanaike moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 8, seconded by Delegate Dyer, which amended Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by adding a new section to read:

RECALL OF ELECTED PUBLIC OFFICERS

Every elected public officer in Hawaii is subject to recall by the qualified voters of the State or of the electoral district from which the public officer is elected. There may be required twenty-five percent, but not more, of the number of electors who voted in the district at the preceding general election for governor to file a petition demanding the recall by the people. The petition shall set forth the reasons for the recall. If the officer shall offer a resignation, it shall be accepted and take effect on the day it is offered, and the vacancy shall be filled as provided by law.

If the officer shall not resign within five days after the petition is filed, a special election shall be ordered to be held within twenty days in the officer's electoral district to determine whether the people will recall the officer. On the sample ballot at the election shall be printed in not more than two hundred words the reasons for demanding the recall of the officer as set forth in the recall petition, and, in not more than two hundred words, the officer's justification of the officer's course in office. The officer shall continue to perform the duties of office until the result of the special election is officially declared.

If an officer is recalled from any public office the vacancy shall be filled immediately in the manner provided by law for filling a vacancy in that office arising from any other cause.

The recall petition shall be filed with the officer with whom a petition for nomination to such office should be filed, and that officer shall order the special election when it is required. No petition shall be circulated against any officer until the officer has actually held office six months, save and except that it may be filed against a senator or representative in the legislature at any time after five days from the beginning of the first session after election. After one such petition and special election, no further recall petition shall be filed against the same officer during the term for which the officer was elected unless such further petitioners shall first pay into the general fund which has paid such special election expenses, the whole amount of its expenses for the preceding special election.

Such additional legislation as may aid the operation of this section shall be provided by the legislature, including provision for payment by the general fund of the reasonable special election campaign expenses, of such officer.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Hanaike explained:

"Recall is a legitimate process by which the electorate may remove an elected public official. If our government is to function efficiently and effectively, the people must be provided with appropriate means to hold its elected officers responsible for proper performance of their duties. Why subject the electorate to an ineffective, insensitive or incompetent public official? We must look at this from the eyes of the electorate since they are the ones who suffer from a poor representative. No one is above this. Recall is a constant reminder to any of us who chooses to run for public office--don't lose sight of your constituency.

"I have always felt that we are all accountable for what we do. And a public official is especially accountable because he represents a segment of our population, not just himself or herself. If you don't have the support of your people, how can you represent them? This is the rationale behind recall. I urge your consideration on the matter."

Delegate Wurdeman then spoke for the amendment, stating:

"The first recall provisions in the United States were incorporated in 1903 in the Los Angeles city charter. In 1908 Oregon became the first state to apply recall to elected state officials, while California made recall available to its citizens in 1912. Governor Hiram Johnson of California pleaded for its introduction with these words: 'If people are intelligent enough to elect their decision-makers, they are intelligent enough to recall from office an official who has proved himself incompetent or unworthy.'

"That was 67 years ago. Yet here in Hawaii we still don't have recall on a state level. The counties of Honolulu and Maui provide for recall in their charters. The experience of both these counties shows recall has not been used, in effect proving that people have not abused the power granted them. Please consider this amendment. Thank you."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 8 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Hanaike requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining that there were ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 35 ayes, 57 noes and 10 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Barnes, Blake, Blean, Cabral, Campbell, Chu, Chun, Chung, DiBianco, Dyer, Ellis, Goodenow, Hale, Hanaike, Harris, Hoe, Hornick, Kaapu, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Odanaka, Ontai, O'Toole, Peterson, Shon, Souki, Stegmaier and Wurdeman voting aye; Delegates Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barr, Burgess, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Crozier, de Costa, Fernandes Salling, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Ledward, Marion Lee, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Okamura, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates De Soto, Eastvold, Fujimoto, Funakoshi, Lewis, Nozaki, Pulham, Sterling, Takitani and Villaverde being excused.

At this time Delegate Takehara moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 9, seconded by Delegate Sasaki, which amended section 5 of Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, as follows:

The legislature shall provide for the registration of voters and for absentee voting; and shall prescribe the method of voting at all elections. [The ballots for all elections shall offer, in addition to the names of the candidates for any office, the option to vote for "NONE OF THE ABOVE." Only votes cast for the named candidates shall be counted in determining nomination or election, but for each office the number of ballots on which "NONE OF THE ABOVE" was chosen shall be listed following the names of the candidates and the number of their votes in every official posting, abstract and proclamation of the results of the election.]

Secrecy of voting shall be preserved.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Takehara stated:

"I would like to speak against this provision and to summarize the reasons. We've had various discussions about this, but I do feel this amendment is a very negative one that would seem to promote apathy in our voting public. What we should be doing instead is fostering an educated electorate, providing an incentive for voters to make these decisions.

"The 'None of the Above' issue is a means for voicing dissatisfaction over situations which could be promoted positively. Rather than a statement negating any choice, an educated electorate and an elite slate of candidates should be the ultimate goals toward which we are striving. I ask my fellow delegates to please support my amendment."

Delegate Weatherwax, speaking for the amendment, questioned the appropriateness of this provision in the Constitution. Referring to it as an "attitude check," he pointed out that voters' attitudes may be very subjective and they should not foster this by putting it on the ballot. He commented that on a cost analysis basis he didn't believe the information they would receive would be worth the cost.

Delegate Sutton, on a point of information, wondered if the previous speaker had signed Com. Whole Rep. No. 16 knowing what he spoke of and if he was now speaking against what he had signed.

Delegate Campbell, speaking against the amendment, reflected:

"Mr. President, I personally feel disheartened because I see that measures which have gone through the crucible first of the depth of deliberation of a committee, and then through the deliberations of this entire body and the body has had an opportunity to digest it and make a decision and then vote upon it, comes back to defeat that same measure. I feel very unhappy about something like this, not only for the original author of the idea but for the rest of us who for a transitory moment felt happy that something good had happened, and here before us are four measures to defeat it.

"I think the merits of this issue have already been argued. I spoke in favor of it beforehand because I thought it had merit, I'm standing up again to say that it has merit, and I would like to ask the delegates who sought to bring it back to defeat it to think a little deeply about what they have done and why before they vote it down. Mahalo."

Delegate Odanaka then spoke against the amendment, stating:

"The delegates have all heard my arguments, but I would like to first reaffirm that this is a serious suggestion, an important addition to the election ballot in our State. I really think that it will produce some small but meaningful changes and in the long run may add to the clarity and attractiveness of the voting process. But again I must counter specific arguments. The argument that this will hurt political newcomers--I still can't swallow the logic behind this argument. As far as I can see, if a newcomer does a good job of campaigning and manages to sell himself as a good candidate, he will pick up votes. Any candidate who expects to win on the basis of votes cast accidentally for him in opposition to an incumbent won't win and probably shouldn't be running in the first place.

"Another argument I have heard is that voters should be forced to choose regardless of how they feel about a candidate. If you honestly feel this way, you might as well vote for the amendment to delete, because my intent is to allow voters to express their true preference and apparently this is not what you want.

"The term 'easy way out' has been used against 'None of the Above.' I really think this phrase is best used to support it. 'Easy way out' seems to imply that voters are trapped in the system and should be let out. Besides there are thousands of eligible voters who take the easy way out right now because they don't vote.

"Also, I really don't see this as a negative idea. If it was, it would not be my intention to place it as an idea to this Convention's package. We can't deny that there are people with negative feelings, but they deserve a vote too--perhaps not a majority vote but nevertheless a vote. It's harmless and it may bring back people by a valid and significant expression, and I feel that this would be a step in the right direction. Also, it may bring about positive change in the campaign process where a candidate could no longer benefit simply by attacking his opponent. If he does, voters would most likely vote for 'None of the Above' and not for the candidate. I urge all of you to vote down this amendment to delete."

Delegate Shon, speaking in favor of the amendment, observed:

"I'm a little demoralized in the afternoon, but this provision deeply offends my sense of the purpose of an election. I think that the intention is very admirable, but the practical effect is to distort the role of the voter and the results of his or her vote. I believe that it will assist incumbents by further dividing and thus weakening the opposition vote, and I believe it is a public sanction for the abdication of responsibility to make a choice.

"I'd like you to think just for a moment of election day and the role that it plays in the democratic experience. After all the hooplas, the sign-waving, the frantic efforts to attract attention, it all ends the day before and election day is strangely quiet, and for me it always takes on a sense of solemnity, a sort of mutual respect to send on all the political candidates. There is a recognition of the exercise of a very precious freedom. Each voter is awesomely equal on that day and each voter, in the privacy of his conscience, makes a free and equal choice. And that choice, in a representative system, is a choice of people. It is a very subjective, private and human act. It involves every human strength, prejudice, insight and judgment, and the judgment we are asking people to make is of the character, the leadership, the effectiveness, the opinions and the faults of a fellow citizen to represent us. I find this strangely exciting and something that I think dignifies all of us. But the dignity and the nobility of the democratic process is laid squarely on the shoulders of every single person. We say to each and every person--here is your power, your right, your responsibility, now exercise it. I submit to you that the only effective exercise of that power, that right and that responsibility is by voting for a person to represent you, by making the hard choices. This person versus that person, one candidate over another, this is the choice that you make in an election, and this is the choice that you should have to make in an election. We are saying to every citizen--you are free and intelligent, and there shall be no escape, no denial of your duties, no easy way out. It is not a therapeutic exercise. There are no excuses in a democracy. Equality and power are granted only with this duty.

"I want to preserve the dignity of the election process. I want to hold each and every citizen to that duty, and I want a responsible democratic community. If you want this also, please vote for this amendment."

Delegate Dyer, also speaking in favor of the amendment, stated:

"It is my belief that the sponsors of 'None of the Above' have asked the wrong questions and hence have come to the wrong answers. I would start with the very basic question, 'What is an election?' The dictionary is the starting point: 'election' is defined as 'the act or power of choosing by vote among candidates to fill an office or position.' 'None of the Above' is not a candidate and hence deserves no place on the ballot.

"The sponsors indicate that this gives the voter the opportunity to register discontent. The voter already has that option by voting only for the candidates considered worthy of the vote. Anyone who can add and subtract can determine how many voters reported to the polls but did not vote for all the possible choices. It is obvious if they didn't vote in a particular race that they thought both or all of the candidates unsuitable.

"The sponsors imply that some new data would be gained by this process, as though they confused an election with survey research. Survey research is designed to provide a comprehensive investigation. The 'None of the Above' option does not answer the question of 'why' no candidate was suitable, and hence is useless as a tool of inquiry.

"May I remind you that voting is a privilege. The history of the franchise is a long one in which people have died for the right to choose the best person to represent them. Women spent many years to gain the franchise--blacks spent generations--and with that effort went the knowledge that they could elect people of their choice--not 'None of the Above.' It is basic to the American system that you elect candidates and if those candidates after election are unresponsive, you vote them out and choose someone else. The only hope of the system lies with people, not 'None.'

"As a naturalized citizen, I worked hard to gain that citizenship and one of the rewards was the privilege of voting. I did not work for my right to go to the ballot to vote for 'None of the Above.' Citizenship involves responsibilities, one of which is to study the candidates and come to the best decision one can make with the information available. Citizens who want change are taught to get involved at the precinct level with people, not with 'None.'

"To the sponsors, I would ask--if you vote for 'None of the Above,' and you win, what do you have? And I would answer--you have none and you have nothing. Thank you."

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Hale commented:

"I said it before and I'll say it again--I think it's a creative new approach, I think it's far-reaching and far-seeing, and I think it has far more implications than we're giving it credit for.

"There's nothing that says you have to vote for 'None of the Above.' You can vote for your candidate if you have a candidate you're for, somebody you feel that you can support, that's a positive thing, that's a good thing. It's democracy at its best. If you go to the polls and vote for somebody because you don't like the other people, that is a negative thing. It is not good, it is not democracy at its best. If that is your choice--and that is the choice that many voters feel they have when they go to the polls--their choice now is to stay away. There's nothing dignified, there's nothing sacred, there's nothing holy about a person who stays away from the polls. I maintain that you cannot tell whether a person is staying away from the polls because he does not like any of the candidates, because he is disgusted with the process, because he's tired of being distracted as he drives down the street everyday with clowns waving behind signs--and I'd just like to say parenthetically that we don't do very much on our Island, and it's just amazing to me as I drive here everyday. I say if that's the way you choose your representatives on Oahu, it's certainly not based upon any dignified, intelligent or carefully reasoned or thought out way.

"I say that everybody is not in a position to run if they don't like the candidates. Very often they don't think it's possible to beat a candidate because maybe somebody has been in so long or because the person has a lot of money, or they seem to have many endorsements and organizations behind them. Many people are discouraged from taking an active part, either as candidates or voters, because of these factors. I don't think that 'None of the Above' is saying that this is an easy way out. The easy way out is just to stay home and that's what's been happening. I think this is giving people a choice, and if the people think this is frivolous they will vote it down.

"We voted for it the other day, we had confidence in this idea, and I can't see any real reason to turn around and vote it down today. I urge you to vote down this amendment. Let's keep this good, positive and practical way of letting the frustrated voter have some input into the electoral process."

Delegate Chun also spoke against the amendment, stating:

"As Delegate Hale said, the easy way out is not to go--why should I have to get properly dressed, etc., go down and vote if I don't feel that anybody there meets my qualifications. The easy way out is really to stay home and do nothing.

"Now I think for those who feel there is no one there qualified, this is the easy way in to the system. It is the easy way for them to have something to say. Instead of people saying--well, I guess 20 percent of the electorate was busy, or 20 percent couldn't make it to the polls on time. That 20 percent is just a matter of speculation at this time, nobody knows exactly what is bothering them. But if those 20 percent all come out and vote for 'None of the Above' in an election, I think that's a gigantic step forward toward having the entire electorate participate in the elective process. Thank you."

Delegate Dennis Ihara, speaking against the amendment, pointed out that "None of the Above" would make the candidates and political parties more responsive to the people as it would indicate how the public perceived their platform. The public, he added, would still exert its voting power and even the candidates who lost would then have an idea of how well they were accepted.

Delegate Chung, also speaking against the amendment, observed that if the concept concerned improvement of the candidates, it also concerned improvement of the political system and election, which could always stand improvement.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Burgess observed:

"The 'None of the Above' provision is the one breath of fresh air in this Convention. It's something that we're giving to the voters, a means to let them express some of their frustration. I think it's badly needed. It not only will act as a relief but it will also be a source of valuable information to the elected official. If an elected official receives

50 percent of the vote and his opponent receives a smaller amount, that's one thing, but if 'None of the Above' receives just as many votes as he does, that's another, and it indicates to him that there is something--it's not a mandate, but there is something that needs doing.

"So I think for those two reasons, first as a--call it therapeutic if you will, but it serves a valuable purpose, and secondly, it's a source of good information. We're not giving the voters very much out of this Convention, we're not giving them any real change in the structure of Hawaii's government. We're not giving them unicameral legislation, we're not giving them an elected attorney general, we're not giving them initiative, referendum and recall, all of those things the voters have indicated, to one degree or another, that they really want. We're not giving them any of those, let's give them at least one fresh new idea in the November election."

Delegate Campbell, speaking against the amendment, stated:

"I'd like to say that the argument of my worthy delegate from Waikiki and my worthy delegate from the windward side is premised upon the assumption that the names of the individuals on the ballot do indeed give the public a choice. Unfortunately, in some cases, this assumption is not resident in fact.

"A citizen who is diligent and regards his right of franchise as something very important may indeed study the issues, and he or she may indeed study the candidates and find out that these individuals do not meet his standards. One should not vote for individuals simply because they're on the ballot. Giving the citizen the option to vote 'None of the Above' simply gives him an option to exercise his mind and to say how he feels about one particular candidate. This would not in any way derogate from his voting in favor of other candidates in respect to other races that do reflect the kind of standard he would like the candidates to meet with respect to the office being opened.

"I therefore feel that again this is a positive approach and I urge my fellow delegates to vote down this amendment."

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Uyehara declared:

"It was said that in doing this there'll be apathy within our voting booths. I would say, rather than apathy it would be motivation to voice an opinion. Should there be none to that voter to make a choice from, he has a choice to say 'None of the Above.'

"I'd like to tell you a war story since everybody's telling war stories and we're all tired. When I came back from Vietnam about 10 years ago, the greatest war that I fought was really back home, and it's called the C & GS course--Command and General Staff course--which is really an incentive to get a promotion in the reserves. Every time I took a test, the choices were No. 1--so and so--No. 2, No. 3, and No. 4 or No. 5 was always 'None of the Above.' And when I graduated--it was so bad that when I graduated from Leavenworth, Kansas, just about a year ago, I was one of the very bottom of the 10 percent on the list, I was on the bottom 10, so 'None of the Above' has always hounded me and given me lots of problems in my life. But since the good delegate from Kona has left to work with his people, to help his church--and I notice that he voted to support 'None of the Above' and since he cannot make this vote, I will fill the vacancy by saying, I will vote for 'None of the Above' and vote down the deletion, so that people will have a choice and they can make that choice. Thank you."

Delegate Odanaka, speaking against the amendment, observed:

"The argument that people who don't vote are saying the same thing--I've heard this argument probably hundreds of times, and it essentially says that people can accurately express themselves by not voting. I find this kind of hard to believe. As I said, not voting and voting 'None of the Above' say two different things. One expresses ignorance and apathy and the other dissatisfaction with the candidates.

"As shown in my chart, people who don't know don't vote. I don't feel we are taking the franchise away from anyone, we are giving it to some. I would also like to let this body know that I worked very hard on this proposal from the day it was introduced. I have researched it dry, written speeches and lobbied intensively. I never would have worked so hard if I had ever doubted that it could pass on its merits. I guess I may have been silly and naive because now I see that it could die here today, not because of its merits but because someone decided it should die. I could accept defeat more graciously if the proposal fell on its merits, but I received a note during the debate on this in the Committee of the Whole that made me realize something. The note reads: 'Donna, is your "None of the Above" more important than initiative? Myself and others might be able to make reform to the election of candidates "None of the Above" if we are assured that initiative will not pass.' The reason I bring this up is because I hope nobody is forced to vote against my proposal because of pressures of this sort. I respect almost all of you but I hope you vote only because of what you think is right. I won't say who wrote this because I don't feel it's important, but I hope you defeat this effort to kill 'None of the Above.'"

Delegate Goodenow then spoke against the amendment. Noting that over 300,000 voters had already registered to vote in the primary in October, she pointed out that many had not been given any choices in the selection of some of the names on the ballot and that it was indeed necessary that they have the freedom to choose "None of the Above."

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Hironaka indicated that he would be in favor of "None of the Above" if it were a situation in which the candidates had been forced on the electorate. But, he observed, people chose to run and if they took the time and trouble campaigning and working to raise money to seek elective office, checking "None of the Above" would be an insult to them.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 9 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Hale requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining that there were ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion carried by a vote of 52 ayes, 44 noes and 6 excused; with Delegates Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, de Costa, Dyer, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Okamura, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Stegmaier, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tamayori, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, DiBianco, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Funakoshi, Goodenow, Hale, Hanaike, Hoe, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Kaapu, Kono, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Nozaki, Odanaka, Ontai, O'Toole, Peterson, Pulham, Souki, Stone, Sutton, Tam and Uyehara voting no; and Delegates Crozier, De Soto, Eastvold, Sterling, Takitani and Villaverde who were excused.

At 4: 20 p. m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 4: 40 p. m.

The President then called for discussion on Com. P. No. 16 and there being none, Delegate Kaapu moved, seconded by Delegate Weatherwax, that Com. P. No. 16, RD. 1 as amended, pass Second Reading and Com. Whole Rep. No. 16 be received and placed on file. The question was then put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At this time the Clerk announced that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 93 and 94 and Com. P. Nos. 14, RD. 2, S. 1, and 18, RD. 2, S. 1, had been printed and distributed. The President so noted them for decking purposes.

Delegate Dyer then rose and made the following statement:

"The word 'secrecy' seems to be one of the most unwanted nouns at this Convention. Therefore, I would like to inform the body that, along with a 'majority group,' the 'independents' and the 'Panasonic Club,' there is another exclusive group called 'Outer Limits.' The foremost requirement to become a part of this group is that we vote on issues according to our own conscience.

"At the risk of being called politically naive, being 'left out in the cold' or being considered plain ignorant, we operate with no caucus meetings, no instruction or advance information. We simply know we exist because we look at ourselves in the mirror everyday and we feel good inside. All those who are part-time 'good soldiers' and/or part-time 'in spite of' voters may apply for associate membership in the 'Outer Limits' club."

ADJOURNMENT

At 4:50 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Taira and carried, the Convention adjourned until 11:00 a.m. Sunday, September 17, 1978.

SIXTIETH DAY

Sunday, September 17, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 11:00 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Naomi Campbell, delegate from the Seventeenth District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Takitani who was excused and Delegates Andrews, Barr, Blean, Haunani Ching, Chu, Eastvold, Fernandes Salling, Ishikawa, Liu, Pulham, Silva, Souki, Sterling and Uyehara who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Fifty-Ninth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 95) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 96 and Com. P. No. 15, RD. 2, S. 1, had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 95 was adopted.

The Clerk announced that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 96 and Com. P. No. 15, RD. 2, S. 1, had been distributed for decking purposes.

At 11:22 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:27 a.m.

ORDER OF THE DAY SECOND READING

Com. Whole Rep. No. 18, Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1--RELATING TO CONSERVATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF RESOURCES:

Delegate Okamura, for the Committee of the Whole, and Delegate Chang, for the Committee on Environment, Agriculture, Conservation and Land, presented a report (Com. Whole Rep. No. 18) recommending that Com. Whole Rep. No. 18 be adopted and Com. P. No. 17, as amended in RD. 1, pass Second Reading.

The President, after reviewing the order of the amendments, called for discussion and recognized Delegate DiBianco. Delegate DiBianco then requested that Amendment No. 1 be withdrawn, adding that he did so with some regrets as he still had doubts about the language of the committee proposal.

Delegate Laura Ching, on a point of personal privilege, requested that consideration be given to Amendment Nos. 3 and 4 before Amendment No. 2 and, there being no objection, it was so ordered.

Delegate Laura Ching then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 3, seconded by Delegate Goodenow, which amended section 10 of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, to read:

No nuclear fission power plant shall be constructed or radioactive material disposed of in the State of Hawaii without the prior approval by a two-thirds vote in each house of the legislature[.] and subsequent ratification by a majority vote of a statewide referendum at the next general election.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Laura Ching stated:

"There is a great deal of controversy surrounding the construction of nuclear fission power plants. Advocates cite the need for a cheap energy source and the many safeguards to prevent major accidents. Yet I believe the dangers of these nuclear facilities far outweigh the dubious economic advantages offered by nuclear fission energy and in fact these economic benefits are mainly illusory. Because it is the people of Hawaii who will ultimately risk their pocketbooks, their lives and the lives of their children on the outcome of this issue, I believe they should have the right to vote on whether construction of nuclear plants is needed or wanted in this State. I would like to comment on the physical and economic dangers posed by these plants.

"Proponents of nuclear energy say it is cheap. Yet I believe nuclear energy will be found to be one of the most costly of our energy sources. The basic cost of the power plant itself is astronomical; as Carl Williams, president of Hawaiian Electric, testified, the cost of a minimum-size power plant in the U.S. is currently $1 billion. This does not take into account the future rise in construction costs as well as the inevitable rise in fuel costs. Uranium supplies in the U.S. are rapidly dwindling; government sources have estimated that there is currently a 20- to 30-year supply, with the price of uranium doubling every few years. Note that this estimate takes into account only the supplies needed for nuclear facilities now in existence, and not the needs of future power plants.

"Furthermore, these initial costs are only part of the picture, for there are major costs involved in the dismantlement of these plants as well. According to recent studies, a nuclear power plant has an estimated life of 40 years. This limitation is due to the eventual accumulation of radiation in and around the reactor, which makes the plant unusable for safety reasons. After this period of useful life, decommission becomes a major cost factor; according to a 1977 report by the U.S. comptroller general entitled 'Cleaning up the Remains of Nuclear Facilities; A Multi-Billion Dollar Problem,' these costs run into tens of millions of dollars. In addition, because of the radiation hazards involved, such dismantlements take up to a hundred years to complete.

"I do not need to tell you who would eventually pay these incredible costs. Companies are in business to make money, and any company building a nuclear power plant would expect a fair return for its outlay. I ask you--does it seem reasonable to pay a tremendous amount of money for a facility that will last only 40 years, and then pay more so it can be dismantled? Thus, I submit there are no economic advantages to nuclear fission power plants. However, even if nuclear energy was the cheapest fuel source known, I believe the dangers would far outweigh the economic benefits.

"There are five major areas of risk that I find unacceptable in regard to nuclear power plants. The most basic of these dangers is the production of the nuclear fission material itself. The process of nuclear fission produces materials that will leave a permanent cancer legacy for future generations. The toxic aspects of plutonium are unbelievable: one ounce is enough to kill every human being on earth if dispersed; inhaling a speck can cause cancer and long-term genetic defects. Do we want our children to live with the spectre of radioactive contamination of Hawaii's air and water? Furthermore, the fact that these materials last up to a quarter of a million years gives us our second problem--radioactive waste storage.

"There are no acceptable solutions now to storage of radioactive waste material. Most of the fission products created in the reactor are trapped in the form of solids, liquids and gasses, then shipped in drums away from the site. There are two things wrong with this process. First of all, these drums must be stored for hundreds of thousands of years and yet, of course, no container lasts that long. The Atomic Energy Commission has recorded 16 leaks in the storage of the first 350,000-gallon batch of nuclear waste material. For example, in June 1973, 115,000 gallons of high-level radioactive waste leaked from a tank at the AEC's waste storage facility in Hanford, Washington. Investigation revealed that the tank had been leaking for several weeks and that no automatic alarm system had alerted anyone of the leak. Secondly, the storage process requires that the drums be moved away from the site. Besides the obvious transportation dangers, the main question in my mind is--where would these drums be stored? On the mainland there are deserts and wastelands that can accommodate such dangerous material, but in Hawaii every square foot of our land is precious. To think of a radioactive storage facility anywhere in the State is a concept unacceptable to me.

"Another danger area is the high risk of sabotage and nuclear reactor accidents. We have all read of terrorist activities in different countries that affect or destroy buildings, airplanes, trains, and of course people. Luckily in the United States the incidence of such activity is low. Yet governmental sources indicate a high possibility that terrorist activity will eventually reach the United States as extremist groups attempt to change our basic foreign policy. A perfect target for such terrorist action is the nuclear power plant. The takeover of one plant could hold this entire state hostage. I submit that this is no idle speculation, for if one believes that terrorist activity in the United States is inevitable, one is drawn to the unavoidable conclusion that the nuclear power plant is an ideal target. In fact, between 1969 and 1975, 99 threats of violence were directed against commercial nuclear facilities.

"Furthermore, we live in a very uncertain world; accidents happen all the time and if Murphy's law holds true, then what can go wrong will go wrong. In a Wall Street Journal article, existing plants were labeled 'atomic lemons,' and the writer pointed out that 'their unreliability is becoming one of their most dependable features.' I believe the risks of sabotage and unavoidable accidents make the nuclear power plant an unacceptable energy alternative.

"Lastly, the greatest hazard of nuclear energy is that it is now the driving force behind the proliferation of atomic bombs around the world. It spreads the equipment, knowledge, and especially the materials needed to make nuclear weapons. It only takes 10 pounds of plutonium--the size of a softball--to make an atomic bomb. As a student at a mainland university demonstrated, construction of the bomb itself is not difficult, and in a term paper written 2 years ago he gave detailed instructions on how to build one. Thus, the theft of nuclear material and the possibility of its subsequent use in an atomic weapon is another unacceptable risk.

"For all these reasons--the economic dangers, the radiation hazards, the problems of storage and the risks of sabotage and unavoidable accidents--I believe the people of Hawaii should have the right to vote on this issue. I urge my fellow delegates to support this amendment."

Delegate Campbell, speaking in support of the amendment, reminded the delegates that they had defeated the referendum measure and urged them, in view of the significance and importance of the issue, to let the people decide whether to allow any power plant in Hawaii by supporting this built-in guarantee.

Delegate Crozier then spoke in favor of the amendment. Referring to the attitude that they should leave things open and not cut off the future, he argued that they weren't talking about the future and that developments had already begun toward the time a nuclear power plant would be built on Oahu. Noting that there were already plans to construct an experimental plant at Campbell Industrial Park, he predicted that construction of a totally developed nuclear plant on Oahu would begin in 6 years.

Delegate DiBianco also spoke in favor of the amendment. Conceding that they were not going to have a total ban, according to the consensus of the group, he emphasized that the amendment only asked that the people be allowed the opportunity to decide whether to permit nuclear plants within the State. He then reflected:

"Much that we've done in this Convention has been done in the spirit of taking from the people the ultimate decision on those matters that will affect their lives. Many of the things that could have given the people more of a voice have been denied in the interest of allowing the legislature to have the final say, and we've been assured time and again that the legislature is in fact responsive to the needs and desires of the general public. That may be true to the extent that we are allowing the legislature to deal with political decisions, I suppose--and we'll have to wait to see whether that analysis turns out to be correct. But this particular question is one dealing with the life and well-being of our citizens and certainly on this issue, which is not a political one, the ultimate decision should be left to the people themselves. I would urge you to give them at least a direct voice in the decision as to whether or not something as important, as dangerous, as a power plant should be built in Hawaii."

Delegate Lacy then rose to speak against the amendment, referring to the fact that the delegates had been given very poor information and no chance to have an information period. He pointed out that the statements on plutonium and the bomb, with implications that terrorists could capture the plant and blow it up, were incorrect, explaining:

"They can't do that. The power plants cannot melt down and concentrate enough plutonium like total power plants to give you a bomb. Now if they take the power source of the nuclear power plant, you'll have to go without lights. You'll be at a disadvantage because you'll be used to electrical power because it's the only power source in the Islands, but let's not consider this a terrorist action to subject the people of Hawaii to and blow you up if you don't do what they want."

"I'm fully in favor of the movant's point that Hawaii should not be the storage place or used for the disposal of radioactive waste from any kind of a power plant or nuclear bomb manufacturing facility. Where there is, the situation could occur in which it would contaminate over a long period of years. But we're talking about a normal commercial project, of which the present head of the federal Department of Energy, who was questioned as to whether he would like to live next to a coal-burning facility as a power source or a nuclear power one--his point on air pollution was, 'I would be resting very comfortably and sleeping very comfortably and know I was healthier if I could bed down next to the nuclear power plant.'

"I think you ought not to let emotional statements turn you against the nuclear power source. I merely bring this up knowing that those of you who already feel that you don't want any nuclear power plant--fine, I'm not going to convince you today, but someday in the future if the economic picture is different I think you'll become better educated to the facts and you will then consider it on its merits."

"I believe the other day we passed a reasonable amendment as a body, and I hope that today we will turn down this amendment."

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Harris took issue with the statements that the delegation was uneducated on the issue and believed that terrorists could "take over an atomic energy plant and produce an atomic bomb." He pointed out that the threat was in the release of radioactive material, which could endanger many lives, and that bomb construction was not at the base of the argument. Urging the delegates to support the amendment, he added that it would give the people a say in "a decision that could affect their health and welfare, not only for this generation but for generations to come in Hawaii."

Delegate Chong spoke in support of the amendment, noting that it was a good compromise to a complex problem. She pointed out that if there was more information available when the next convention met, adjustments could be made in the Constitution, but that at the present time the amendment offered the best alternative.

Delegate Barnes, speaking in favor of the amendment, noted that a referendum might not solve all the problems but the amendment was a good one and not in conflict with his amendment, which would be considered next.

Delegate Goodenow, also speaking in favor of the amendment, pointed out that the Hawaiian Islands was the most isolated land area in the world, the closest neighbor being almost 2,200 miles away. She then suggested that there were many states in the North American continent with isolated areas that could be used as locations for nuclear plants. The people of this State, she added, deserved the right to voice their opinion.

Delegate Blake spoke against the amendment, mentioning that in the amendment adopted earlier he had opposed the two-thirds vote requirement because adequate checks would be made by the counties. Pointing out that nuclear plants were not as dangerous as many thought and that nuclear power was already being used, he voiced certainty that before any construction could begin the subject would have been thoroughly researched and rejected by the counties if there were any danger. He was surprised, he added, at the reference to a referendum in view of the many other issues that the delegation could have passed and given the people a chance to vote on.

Delegate Laura Ching, speaking last for her amendment, pointed out that it was fairly easy to get the two-thirds vote required in the existing provision. Appealing to the delegates to search their consciences, she stressed the importance of letting the people decide as they ultimately would be the ones adversely affected.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 3 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Barnes moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 4, seconded by Delegate Campbell, which amended section 10 of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, to read:

No nuclear fission power plant shall be constructed or radioactive material disposed of in the State of Hawaii without the prior approval by a two-thirds vote in each house of the legislature. Disposal, storage and transportation of toxic radioactive materials shall be subject to state regulation to provide the highest possible safety and health standard for this generation and future generations of Hawaii's people.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Barnes explained that it dealt with the problems of disposal, storage and transportation of toxic materials, not necessarily related to a nuclear power plant. Pointing out that problems already existed in the State with the transportation and storage of nuclear materials, he then explained that the state health department had the power and duty to protect the health of the people of Hawaii, yet transportation and storage of these materials often took place over state and county roads in the Ewa part of the Island with no knowledge of local state officials. The amendment, he said, was a fairly strong statement that these would be subject to state regulation, although this was not a completely clear legal issue. He then explained:

"The primary authority is vested with the Atomic Energy Commission. However, Section 274 of the Atomic Energy Act also allows that commission to transfer licensing and regulatory authority over source materials, by-product materials and small quantities of special nuclear materials to the state. The way this is done is by agreement between the state and the commission. As of 1973, there were 24 states that had such agreements. And this agreement allows the state to promulgate regulations at least as strict, or as close to being as strict, as the AEC regulations. So I think just the intent of this amendment--that the state health department in particular look at this issue and this problem and, to the extent of its authority under this agreement proposition with the Atomic Energy Commission, pass regulations specifically for disposal, storage and transportation of any toxic materials, particularly on our state highways."

Delegate Blake, on a point of information, requested that the delegates be given some background information on the subject in order for a clearer understanding of the amendment. The President referred the question to Delegate Lacy, who advised:

"I think what the movant has asked is a very normal consideration. We're talking about, as he implied, the material that you take from a nuclear power plant--for instance, it might be the fuel rods. They would, at a specified time when they are ready to leave the vicinity of the power station, be in proper storage containers. They move thousands of these safely throughout the world. They would then be moved along a highway or to a harbor and taken out.

"He's also mentioning nuclear weapons, as he implied from the Ewa area. There you are dealing with material of great toxicity and it too is carefully handled. Many states have regulations--I'm surprised if Hawaii does not have a set of standard regulations, but the movant did not know and I will not say that I know there are. That part we're talking about--being sure that the public isn't in danger, in case there is an automobile accident or somebody drops one off. It's like in the newspaper the other day where somebody dropped some cobalt off and a case opened up--it was probably from a hospital area--and they said that the radiation had been brought under control, etc. That's the type of thing I believe that Delegate Blake is asking about and I think I've answered to the extent that I could."

Delegate Sasaki, on a point of information, asked if the movant would explain what specifically was included in "toxic radioactive materials." Delegate Barnes explained that "toxic," according to the dictionary, was something poisonous or harmful, "anything that can have a dangerous, harmful effect to a human being."

Delegate Sasaki then asked if this would exclude all radioactive types of material being used at that time for scientific research and applications by the department of health. Delegate Barnes responded that those materials with very small amounts of radiation that would not harm or injure a person could be excluded, and referred to the term "ionizing radiation."

Delegate Les Ihara, on a point of information, asked if the State was regulating toxic radioactive materials at that time. Delegate Barnes, referring to his own experience, said he believed there were no state regulations dealing with radioactive materials.

Delegate Les Ihara then spoke against the amendment, referring to the lack of information and the fact that it was a highly technical area, and advising:

"The legislature, as I understand it, has authorized the governor to enter into an agreement with the Nuclear Regulatory Control, which was formerly the Atomic Energy Commission, and that agreement would set up many of the standards that Delegate Barnes has said we do not have now. And as I understand it, the reason the governor has not gone to the NRC to make that agreement is basically because of cost effectiveness, and may be doing that in the near future, though right now he has the authority."

Delegate Hale, speaking against the amendment, suggested it might be better put in the form of a resolution directing the legislature to report to the people on the subject.

Delegate Laura Ching, speaking for the amendment, referred to the hazards connected with transporting, storing and disposing of nuclear waste and expressed her full agreement with the amendment.

Delegate Takehara, speaking for the amendment, cited a Maryland case in which a citizens' group brought suit against the Atomic Energy Commission to prevent the construction of a nuclear power plant and test the adequacy of the AEC's guidelines for implementing the policy environment act. The court, she stated, had found the AEC's regulations deficient in four major respects--notably in their leading assessment of the potential environmental impact of nuclear plants to the state and other federal agencies. The court, she further stated, had ruled that the AEC must consider environmental factors beyond just radiological health and safety. Nothing, she added, had as yet shown that this was safe for people, with the risks of contamination involved.

Delegate Chang, on a point of information, expressed his confusion over the examples used involving the disposal of radioactive waste and construction of nuclear plants as well as the storage and transportation of radioactive materials. Delegate Barnes, in response, referred to his example of the transportation of warheads over state highways in the Ewa area for the transportation issue, and also to a Makiki Park incident in which radioactive material had been buried underneath land the city was contemplating purchasing, in which case the State could not have acted as there were no regulations covering it.

Delegate Chung spoke against the amendment, citing the lack of information and research in the subject matter. The area, he pointed out, was too complex from a technological, ecological and sociological point of view for them to make a firm decision, adding that until they heard from experts they should keep the provision as adopted, leaving it to the legislature with the two-thirds vote requirement, as the legislative process would seek out available technical expertise.

Delegate Blake, speaking in favor of the amendment, mentioned that he saw nothing wrong with adding this provision, as it was in conformity with what they had passed earlier. It did not appear, he added, that there was a state regulation and this provision would not hurt and was preferable to waiting for the governor to act.

Delegate DiBianco then spoke in favor of the amendment, remarking that he couldn't understand the confusion or lack of understanding of the sentence, which simply provided that transportation of highly poisonous substances in the State would be subject to state regulation.

Delegate Les Ihara inquired as to the regulation that governed the transportation of toxic radioactive materials on the highways, to which Delegate Barnes replied that this was primarily aimed at the environmental health regulations of the state health department. If they adopted the amendment, he added, they could indicate any other agencies they wished, such as local police agencies.

Delegate Lacy, speaking against the amendment, explained that he was not against the safety aspects but felt it was unnecessary in the Constitution, which should not detail every safety item the government should be covering. The public health article, he added, already gave the State power to regulate these activities.

Delegate Chang also spoke against the amendment, agreeing that the State already had constitutional power to regulate these activities and that he understood it presently was regulating them.

Delegate De Soto rose on a point of inquiry to ask if there was any delegate knowledgeable about the kind of regulations being implemented with respect to the storage and disposal of nuclear waste materials. Delegate Les Ihara, in response, advised that no radioactive waste could be disposed of in the State without the approval of the state health department. He then yielded to Delegate Sasaki, who offered the following clarification:

"First, no radioactive material of the source type we're talking about can be disposed in the State at the present time. Disposal of radioactive material of the fission power plant source has to be disposed of in a Class 1 dump, which is not available anywhere in Hawaii, and at the present time we will not have any in the State. Therefore I'm sure that we are working right now with California for its proper disposal. There would be a great cost involved to those people using radioactive material. The latest studies show that it will cost almost $3,000 to ship about a gallon of radioactive material back to California. Present regulations being developed state that no radioactive material--that's why I was questioning the word 'toxic' here. We have defined it as a certain level of radiation above which it will have to be shipped back to California."

Delegate Kojima then spoke for the amendment. Reminding the delegates that he had advocated construction of a nuclear plant only as a last alternative and only if the safety of the people were taken into account, he pointed out that the amendment was only an extension of that idea. As to whether it should be in the Constitution, he added, because the provision on nuclear power plants was there, safeguards for the people should also be there.

Delegate DiBianco, also commenting on the statement that there was no need to include this in the Constitution, pointed out that the amendment did two things the health department regulations didn't--by requiring that the highest possible safety standards be incorporated into any nuclear material usage, and by setting aside nuclear energy for special treatment in the Constitution, thereby cautioning the State on its poisonous and dangerous aspects.

Delegate Hale at this time rose to speak for the amendment, explaining that after listening to the debate she had changed her mind and would vote in favor. It was said that nothing had been done because of cost problems, she observed, and since this might continue for the next 4 years they would probably need it in the Constitution.

Delegate Barnes then rose to speak last for his amendment, stating:

"The problem again that we're directing is that we are an island nation, 2,500 miles away from the nearest large land mass and very, very far away from the Atomic Energy Commission. I will not tell you there is no legal problem here because there is; the legal problem is that the federal government has pre-empted the area and has said that atomic energy and radiation problems are primarily the problem of the federal agencies they gave this trust to. However, in the case of Huron Portland Cement Company v. the City of Detroit, there was a problem of an anti-smog ordinance in Detroit which was stricter than the federal regulation, where ships were coming into the Detroit harbor. And the U.S. supreme court held that Detroit could have a stricter ordinance than those provided by the federal agency involved, where it said the court's discussion was devoted to the claim that federal laws had pre-empted the field. The court found no bar either in the extensive and comprehensive boiler inspection provision or in the federal licensing of vessels. The main purpose of the federal inspection was to insure safety, while the Detroit ordinance was directed solely at air pollution.

"So what I say to you is that it would be possible--not probable, but possible--that the State, because of our special concern here in having many federal installations, we could conceivably promote slightly stricter regulations than the federal regulations. And if we could show we had a compelling state interest, perhaps we could support those regulations. It's my feeling that these words, as they are stated here, could hold up for 10 years. I'm encouraged to hear that the governor is considering that we become an agreement state; however, it has been 5 years since the other half of the states joined into the agreement and this language certainly would encourage and spur on that process, as well as asking the health department to look into this much further, to define words like 'toxic' and 'level of radiation.' Again, I urge you to support this amendment. Thank you."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 4 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry. At this time Delegate Takehara called for a division of the house and the motion, on a rising vote, again failed by a vote of 33 ayes and 45 noes.

Delegate Laura Ching then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Crozier, which amended section 10 of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, to read:

No nuclear fission power plant shall be constructed or radioactive material stored or disposed of in the State of Hawaii without the prior approval by a two-thirds vote in each house of the legislature.

Speaking in support of her amendment, Delegate Laura Ching explained:

"I believe this to be a simple housekeeping measure. I believe with the failure of the last two amendments, there now exists a loophole in the current amendment dealing with prior legislative approval for radioactive waste disposal. There should be some provision for long-term storage of radioactive waste in this provision, for as it stands now radioactive material from a nuclear power plant could be disposed of by storing it in an underground facility for a number of years.

"Furthermore, storage itself is as dangerous as disposal of nuclear waste material. I believe that storage of such material within the State is such a serious matter that it should be included in this provision. My amendment would thus close the loophole by providing that before any storage or disposal of radioactive material takes place within the State, a two-thirds vote in each house of the legislature would be required. I therefore urge my fellow delegates to support this amendment. Thank you."

Delegate De Soto rose to speak in favor of the amendment. The basis of the amendment, she said, had been adopted the previous day and this was in effect a housekeeping measure.

Delegate Crozier, also speaking for the amendment, observed that storage of radioactive material would not include hospitals and the like, and agreed that this was a housekeeping measure.

On a point of information, Delegate Sasaki asked if the term "radioactive material" could be clearly defined, perhaps in the committee report, and pointed out that there could be problems using just the general terminology. Toxic material, he explained, would apparently include all isotopes presently used in medical facilities, which was why the health department monitored it. It was, he added, also used in applications material in research work and analysis for pesticides, etc.

Delegate Chang, in response, pointed out that Com. Whole Rep. No. 18 included a definition of the term "radioactive material" on page 3 and added that the intention not to involve materials used in medical research or treatment was stated there. However, he pointed out, it was the committee's understanding that materials used in medical research and treatment were not disposed of but were stored and therefore the inclusion of storage might cause some complications.

Delegate Lacy at this time rose to propose an amendment to the amendment, to insert after "radioactive" the words "nuclear fission power plant waste," to read: "No nuclear fission power plant shall be constructed or radioactive nuclear fission power plant waste material stored or disposed of...."

Delegate Harris, on a point of order, questioned whether this was in order, explaining that this would be amending the original amendment rather than amending the amendment.

At 11:42 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:52 a.m.

At this time the President advised that Delegate Lacy's amendment to the amendment was not in order as it did not address the amendment itself, which was the words "stored or." He then called for further discussion on Amendment No. 2.

Delegate De Soto rose to speak again in favor of the amendment. She pointed out that they could take care of those concerns about materials used in medical research by clarification in the committee report, and she urged the delegates to vote for the amendment.

Delegate Hale, on a point of information, asked if it were possible at that time to amend the committee report. On being answered in the negative, she asked if any written report would follow Second Reading in which a point could be clarified. The Chair indicated no knowledge of any report but added that the Journal would reflect a sense of the group's concern.

How then, Delegate Hale inquired, could the concern expressed by Delegate De Soto be handled and the clarification conveyed. The Chair in response repeated that it could only be conveyed through the discussion as reflected in the Journal.

Delegate Burgess, speaking against the amendment, stressed the importance of the language in the provision and advised that its significance could not be corrected or qualified in a committee report. The language used in this provision, he stated, was not ambiguous, which was the only time the court would consider a committee report. If this language was adopted, he then pointed out, those two words would mean that the State Constitution prohibited nuclear submarines from Pearl Harbor or storage of atomic warheads on Oahu, and for those reasons it should not be put in the Constitution.

Delegate Barnes spoke in favor of the amendment, referring to the definition of radioactive material in Com. Whole Rep. No. 18 and the statement qualifying the materials used in medical research.

Delegate Ontai spoke for the amendment, as a resident of the area "most likely to see the results of this nuclear activity and material, namely the Ewa-Makakilo-Waianae area." The two words inserted were just for clarification, he said, and it made more sense to keep them in than leave them out. And, he added, this was not a prohibition, only a requirement of the two-thirds vote. Regarding submarines and nuclear warheads, he continued, the federal laws would probably supersede any state law but the two-thirds vote was still necessary. The amendment, he added, did not prohibit storage, it only provided more controls at that stage.

Delegate McCall, speaking against the amendment, mentioned that radioactive materials were also used in shipyards to check for leakages or blockages in sewer lines, pipelines, etc. The amendment, he pointed out, by requiring legislative approval for such storage rather than approval by the health department, would make it very difficult.

Delegate DiBianco, also speaking against the amendment, expressed doubt that they could ban the storage of all radioactive material in the State as that would include medical materials. The committee report, he stated, made no difference in the laws of statutory interpretation by the court, which looked only to the constitutional phrase itself. If the court found nothing in the language of the provision indicating that medical materials were excluded, he added, it could rule that they be included.

Delegate Chang then spoke against the amendment, mentioning first the committee's feeling on the matter, that no constitutional provision be included, and then the feeling by the Committee of the Whole that the matters of nuclear plant construction and radioactive waste disposal were of such importance to the people, and the questions not so complex as that of storage, that constitutional language was drafted. He then pointed out that the legislature still had full power to draft appropriate regulatory measures regarding the storage of radioactive materials in the State.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

At this time Delegate Takehara, on a point of inquiry, asked if the next amendment could be divided so that the first paragraph could be considered separately from the second. Delegate Harris thereupon moved to divide Amendment No. 5 to consider paragraph 1 first and then paragraph 2, seconded by Delegate Takehara. The motion to divide Amendment No. 5 was put by the Chair and carried.

Delegate Harris then moved for the adoption of paragraph 1 of Amendment No. 5, seconded by Delegate Takehara, which amended section 10 of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by adding the following:

[NUCLEAR] ENERGY RESOURCES

The State shall conserve nonrenewable energy resources and shall promote the use of renewable resources for the production of energy.

Speaking for the first part of the amendment, Delegate Harris explained that this provision was addressed to what had been an undercurrent in the discussion on nuclear energy--that the State promote the use of renewable energy resources. The State, he pointed out, should be promoting development of such renewable energy resources as ocean thermal, geothermal, solar, wind and biomass energy for self-sufficiency in energy production.

Delegate Chang rose to speak against the amendment, explaining that he believed the proposed new Section 1 of Article X, as provided in section 2 of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, fully covered these concerns.

Delegate Takehara, speaking for the amendment, argued that Section 1 listed a series of the State's natural resources and then provided separate sections for some, such as land and water. There should, she suggested, also be a separate section for energy resources.

Delegate Sasaki, on a point of information, requested clarification of nonrenewable and renewable resources. Nonrenewable resources, Delegate Harris explained, would be those that were not regenerating, whereas renewable resources were the replaceable ones, such as timber, biomass, bagasse, solar and wind, which were not depletable.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by paragraph 1 of Amendment No. 5 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Harris moved for adoption of paragraph 2 of Amendment No. 5, seconded by Delegate Takehara, which amended section 10 of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, to read:

[No] The construction of nuclear fission power [plant] plants [shall be constructed or radioactive material disposed of in the State of Hawaii without the prior approval by a two-thirds vote in each house of the legislature] and the disposal of nuclear waste shall not be permitted within the boundaries of the State of Hawaii.

Delegate Harris then spoke in favor of the second part of the amendment. It was evident, he noted, that scientists throughout the nation and the rest of the world--even those who had originally developed the technology for nuclear power plants--were now speaking out strongly against them. Appealing to the delegates to consider the future of Hawaii, he acknowledged that a constitutional ban on nuclear power could limit the State's energy options for 10 years, but pointed out, "Radioactive material leaked into our environment will limit all of our options for a hundred thousand years."

Delegate DiBianco, speaking in favor of the amendment, explained that although generally he was not persuaded by the argument that Hawaii was a unique state, in this case he had to agree that Hawaii was in fact unique. It was, he pointed out, just too small to have nuclear waste disposed of within its boundaries. Comparing Hawaii with western states that had vast expanses of unused federally owned land on which almost no humans would be expected to stray, he urged the delegates not to allow the construction of nuclear plants and the disposal of radioactive waste in Hawaii.

Delegate Chun, also speaking in favor of the amendment, reminded the delegates that in Hawaii "the water we drink is stored underground." What would happen, he warned, if nuclear waste happened to get into that water supply.

Delegate Takehara then spoke for the amendment, urging the delegates to vote for it on the premise that they were still not sure of the safety or risks involved.

Delegate Crozier, speaking for the amendment, expressed his concern about residents of the communities of leeward and central Oahu, the Ewa plains and the Wahiawa saddle. These were the people, he pointed out, who would be affected first by this nuclear power plant and as one living in that area he supported the amendment.

Delegate Chang rose to speak against the amendment. From all the discussion and debate, he observed, it was apparent that there were many complex questions to be answered concerning the provision of energy in the State. And these debates, he continued, emphasized a central role that the legislature played in social policy formulation, particularly in the consideration of complex federal-state intergovernmental questions, which the existing language of the committee proposal addressed.

Delegate Goodenow then spoke in favor of the amendment, suggesting the possibility of the federal government using Kahoolawe for this purpose as it was uninhabited.

Delegate Hale, speaking for the amendment, stressed the importance of letting the people decide whether there should be a total ban on nuclear power plants. The provision that they adopted, she pointed out, was both ineffective because of the bond indebtedness limitation they had amended and unwise because the two-thirds vote left it entirely up to the legislature to make the determination. Observing that the amendment would probably not affect her constituents because of the many renewable energy sources already being developed on the Big Island, she then emphasized the issue's importance on Oahu, commenting that "it's the kind of problem I think people could decide upon very easily. I don't think it's a matter of conflicting economic forces; I think it's basically just a matter of life and death."

Delegate Laura Ching, speaking in favor of the amendment, stressed the importance of letting the people vote on it, and urged the delegates to support the amendment.

Delegate Hironaka spoke for the amendment, emphasizing that it did not completely ban nuclear plants forever but it would put all the anxieties to rest while there was a question of safety--especially, he added, for those people living in the areas that would first be affected.

Also speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Hornick pointed out that regardless of the dangers and costs of nuclear plants, both of which were enormous, the amendment would give a clear indication of the direction the people wanted, which was no nuclear plants. She further stated that if they allowed nuclear plants to desalinate the water it would be very difficult to limit population growth.

Delegate Harris then spoke in favor. Reminding the delegates that the existing language required only a two-thirds vote by the legislature with no input by the people, and that a nuclear plant was estimated to cost "upwards of one and a half billion dollars," he then asked how difficult they thought it would be for the financial backers to get that two-thirds approval. He further pointed out:

"By only requiring a two-thirds vote of the legislature, we at no time give the people the option to decide on the fate of Hawaii for the generations to come. These few people would have the power to determine that a certain portion of our society is always going to be required to take care of radioactive waste material. That means your kids, and their kids and their kids--for perhaps 10,000 generations, someone is going to have to be there to take care of that disposed material, to safeguard it, to watch it. That's an incredible amount of authority we're vesting in two thirds of the legislature without any opportunity for the people of Hawaii to have a say. And I urge you this one last time to please put this critical issue before the entire society that's going to be affected."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by paragraph 2 of Amendment No. 5 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Crozier requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 31 ayes, 54 noes and 17 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Barnes, Cabral, Campbell, Laura Ching, Chong, Chun, Crozier, De Soto, DiBianco, Ellis, Fujimoto, Funakoshi, Goodenow, Hale, Hanaike, Harris, Hironaka, Hoe, Hornick, Kimball, Kono, Rachel Lee, Marumoto, Ontai, Shon, Stegmaier, Stone, Takehara, Wurdeman and Yoshimura voting aye; Delegates Anae, Barnard, Blake, Burgess, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Chung, de Costa, Dyer, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hirata, Hokama, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kojima, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, O'Toole, Penebacker, Peterson, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Andrews, Barr, Blean, Haunani Ching, Chu, Eastvold, Fernandes Salling, Hino, Ishikawa, Liu, Pulham, Silva, Souki, Sterling, Takitani, Uyehara and Villaverde being excused.

Delegate Chang moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 6, seconded by Delegate Waihee, which amended section 3 of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, paragraph 2, to read:

All fisheries in the sea waters of the State not included in any fish pond, artificial enclosure, or state-licensed [marine] mari-culture operation shall be free to the public, subject to vested rights and the right of the State to regulate the same[.], provided that mari-culture operations shall be established under guidelines enacted by the legislature, which shall protect the public's use and enjoyment of the reefs.
The State may condemn such vested rights for public use.

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Chang explained that testimony to the committee posed the possibility that sea-farming could become a primary source of food for Hawaii and that the language impeding legislative consideration had therefore been amended. But there was concern, he further explained, that the language in the committee proposal was too broad and did not provide sufficient safeguards, so the amendment had been drafted changing "marine" to "mari-culture" operations and providing that the legislature establish guidelines for it to protect the public's use and enjoyment of the reefs.

Delegate Hamilton, on a point of information, questioned the acceptability and legal definition of the term "mari-culture." In response, Delegate Harris assured that the term was well defined and acceptable, echoed by Delegate Shon.

Delegate Blake inquired if konohiki fishing rights would be banned by the amendment. On being assured that they were not, he asked if the amendment would include those konohiki rights already established. Delegate Chang in response explained that the amendment would not affect the konohiki rights, which restricted public usage, but rather that the amendment affected the public's use of the fisheries.

Delegate Blake, requesting further clarification, asked if the amendment would affect the rights of not taking certain species of fish from a given area, under konohiki arrangements. Delegate Chang responded that in the language stating that all fisheries were free to the public "subject to vested rights," the term "vested rights" referred to konohiki rights. The konohiki, or caretaker of an ahupua'a, he further explained, might restrict the taking of a particular species of fish or the taking of several species of fish for several months of the year and these vested rights, called konohiki rights, would not be affected by the amendment.

Delegate McCall then requested a definition of "reefs," if these were the reefs within 15 feet of the surface or if the reference were to coral head or any coral body. Delegate Harris, in response, indicated that as written this would refer to the coral area inside the breaker line, that it would be the reef flat, the down slope, that would be considered the reef area, adding that he didn't believe under this language that the coral formation on the outside of the breaker would be considered the reef as such.

Delegate McCall then asked if in most cases this would extend a couple of hundred yards at the most, and if therefore all of Kaneohe Bay, for example, should be exempt.

Delegate Harris, in response, agreed, depending on the area, adding that some areas had a very short reef in feet and others as much as half a mile, but that it would be within the breaker line.

Delegate De Soto, on a point of information, referred to the language in Section 3 of Article X and in the proposed amendment and asked whether it would allow the State to condemn enclosed areas such as fishponds, etc.

Delegate Chang responded that the language referred to vested rights, which referred to the konohiki rights, which the State presently had the power to condemn, as indicated in Section 13 of Article XVI. The language, he continued, had originally been put in the transitional article but since the State had not condemned all the konohiki rights, the committee proposed transferring it to Article X.

Delegate Hale then inquired if the committee was suggesting deleting Section 13 of Article XVI, to which Delegate Chang responded affirmatively.

Delegate Blake, on a point of information, asked if the movant knew of any konohiki fishery condemned by the State which had been leased to anyone else in the State, as he had been given this impression. Delegate Chang responded that he did not.

At this time Delegate Crozier moved to amend the amendment by deleting the word "mari-culture" and replacing it with "marine," seconded by Delegate Laura Ching.

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Crozier explained that "mari-culture" limited the areas the State could be involved in and control, and that areas such as those dealing with natural energy should not be eliminated.

Delegate Chang pointed out that the State already had the power to regulate marine operations by the language in the first sentence of section 3 of Com. P. No. 17 on marine resources. The sentence being amended, he explained, concerned the extent to which operations would be permitted to encroach on the public's use of fisheries. Many, he continued, felt that the broad term "marine operations" would open the door to too many activities taking place in public waters and that any encroachment should be restricted to "mari-culture operations," or sea-farming, as this could provide jobs and another industry base for the State, and be a primary source of food in the future. To broaden the definition, he added, would expose the public fisheries to too many hazards.

Delegate McCall spoke in favor of the amendment to the amendment, observing that he saw no reason to limit the areas or change the language from what it was originally.

Delegate Hale, on a point of information, asked if "mari-culture" meant sea-farming, and suggested changing the language to "sea-farming." She then inquired if the amendment reflected the committee's action, as the original proposal had used "marine operations," and further questioned the reason the committee report was being changed.

Delegate Chang responded that the report was not being changed, that he was only proposing an amendment to Com. P. No. 17 in response to concerns by several delegates about the language of the provision.

Delegate Hale then questioned whether a few delegates could change language that a majority of the committee had agreed upon, arguing that the committee proposal had used the agreed upon language "marine operations" which the committee chairman was now proposing to change.

Delegate Chang responded that the committee had included these words in the proposal and that the concerns he spoke of had emerged between this time and the time of the Committee of the Whole. As there was insufficient time to draft the language before the Committee of the Whole, he explained, the amendment had been deferred until Second Reading, but the concerns, he emphasized, were genuine.

Delegate Harris, speaking against the amendment, first explained that rather than sea-farming the term "mari-culture" had been used because it was the inclusive term to cover the raising of plant and animal material in salt water. He then stated:

"I wish to speak strongly against the amendment to replace 'mari-culture' with the term 'marine operations' because it strikes at the very heart of the intention of the original proposal--the original proposal that went to the committee regarded mariculture operations. And the reason it went there was because there was some concern regarding the State's ability to promote mariculture operations under the existing language of the Constitution. That was the reason this section was looked at at all. Attempts to broaden it to marine operations, I think, are very damaging, and the possibility of the promotion and development of any number of things under the broad and all-inclusive term of 'marine operations' could have devastating effects on our reef areas. I don't think we want marinas and such to be leased out, so I would speak against the amendment and urge the delegation to vote against it."

Delegate Shon also spoke against the amendment, in reference to the ocean thermal energy conversion plan. Under the existing constitutional language, he explained, the State already had the authority to construct these off the shoreline, and the addition was a further restriction on the public's access to fisheries and did not impact on the OTEC prospects.

Delegate Burgess rose on a point of information. Noting that the language "state-licensed mari-culture operation" had been added to prevent the public from fishing in a sea-farm area, he inquired if it was also the intent that the public could fish in an area that had an ocean thermal energy conversion plant, or a wave action generating plant. Delegate Chang responded that this had not been considered as they weren't dealing with that situation. He repeated that the first sentence covered the State's power to regulate marine resources and the amendments concerned access to public fisheries.

Delegate Burgess then stated that by using the word "mari-culture" and not "marine" operations they seemed to be making a distinction between ocean thermal energy conversion, for example, and mariculture, and he wondered if that was intended. Delegate Waihee responded that under the first provision the State had the power to exclude anyone from any area it wished, while the second provision dealt with exempting certain types of activities, such as the proposed mariculture operations, from the public, in essence allowing them to be used privately.

Delegate Chong, on a point of inquiry, asked if aquaculture was defined in the Constitution. On being answered that it was not, she rose to speak in favor of the amendment to the amendment, stating that mariculture like aquaculture could be one of the areas covered by the amended term "marine operations."

Delegate Crozier, speaking for the amendment to the amendment, pointed out that the term "state-licensed" that preceded "marine operations" would provide the necessary check or restriction on encroaching activities, that the State would be checking out all marine operations. As it was now, he said, the State could only check out mariculture operations. There were, he suggested, other things in the ocean besides reefs, and although he agreed with the language to protect the reefs there were other things that the State would be involved in and need to protect, and the term "state-licensed" provided that protection. He therefore urged the delegates to put the term "marine operations" back in.

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend the amendment was put by the Chair and failed to carry.

At this time Delegate Barnes rose to state that although there had been no amendment to the first sentence in section 3 of Com. P. No. 17, he had a statement providing background information that he wished to have entered in the Journal.

[The following is written testimony as submitted by Delegate Barnes.]

"ARCHIPELAGIC WATERS:

"The first issue to be considered in the boundary definition is what waters were included in the state boundaries at the time Hawaii joined the union. The Sea Grant booklet, 'The Hawaiian Archipelago,' Working Paper No. 15, 1975, Sea Grant College Program, University of Hawaii, states on this point:

'The joint resolution of the United States Congress which accepted the cessation of territory made no mention of the particulars of the Republic's holdings, but merely placed them under the sovereignty of the United States.

'The court said that the issue of boundaries again arose during the 1953-1954 hearings before the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States Senate on the Statehood Bills. The committee questioned the claims of the Constitutional Convention of the State of Hawaii in 1951 which stated that the channels were included in the Territory of Hawaii. But the delegates of the Hawaiian Statehood Committee denied these claims: "all three jointly and severally stated positively and unequivocally that Hawaii made no claim for control of ocean waters beyond the traditional three mile limit." The committee then reported to Congress that the territorial waters of Hawaii were in agreement with United States policy.

'The court found these claims to be in conflict and looked to the decision of the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries case to see if Hawaii's claim could be met by a definition of "historic waters." The court determined that a theory of such historic waters rested on the principle of "acquisitive prescription." The proscriptive claim then had three factors:

- (1) The exercise of authority over the area by the state claiming the historic right;
- (2) A continuity of this exercise of authority;
- (3) The attitude of foreign states.

The court further stated that such a claim represented an exception to the traditional rules of international law delimiting territorial claims and therefore the state of Hawaii would have the burden of proof to substantiate these claims. Since the claims of Hawaii did not meet this formulation of the court, it was held that the boundaries of the state were to be the traditional 3 miles around each island.*

"The Sea Grant report states at page 67 '...the decision in the Island Airways case now appears to be standing on a less than firm foundation.'

"DEFINITION OF ARCHIPELAGO:

"The archipelago concept is presented in the context of international law (see Sea Grant No. 15, supra, pp. 30-38) where various Pacific Island groups define their 'state's' boundaries. The most widespread concept of archipelago is probably that asserted by Indonesia where straight lines (baselines) are drawn connecting outermost islands of the group. This concept could be applicable to the Hawaii situation.

*Text from Sea Grant Working Paper No. 15, supra, citing Island Airways v. CAB, 235 F. Supp. 990 [d. Hawaii 1964]. 352 F.2d 735 (1965).

"It may be noted that the 200-mile economic zones applied to Hawaii islands creates an archipelagic effect, a zone encompassing all islands, and if 'archipelagic waters' were alternatively thus created by scribing 200-mile radius circles around each island, the effect would appear acceptable, given Hawaii's marine objectives.

"SEABED RESOURCES:

"SUBMERGED LANDS ACT:

"Congress ended the conflict in the courts by passing the Submerged Lands Act in 1953. The act granted to the states 'title to and ownership of the lands beneath the navigable waters' within their respective boundaries. The term 'boundaries' was to include the boundaries existing when a state entered the union or as subsequently approved by Congress, but no farther than 3 miles from the coast in the Atlantic and Pacific, or beyond 3 leagues in the Gulf of Mexico. The ownership of the submerged land and the resources of the land and waters were transferred to the states. A companion statute, the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act, preserved federal jurisdiction and control over the areas outside the state boundaries, to the limit of the continental shelf.

"The flexible definition of boundaries in the Submerged Lands Act led to litigation in the U.S. Supreme Court by states claiming in excess of 3 miles. Five gulf states made such claims: Louisiana (9 miles) through its Admission Act of 1812, Texas (9 miles) based on the boundaries of the republic, Mississippi and Alabama (18 miles) based on their admission acts, and Florida (9 miles) through a post-Civil War constitution which specified gulf claims of 3 leagues. The court upheld the claims of Texas and Florida and decided in favor of the United States in the other claims.

"As to Hawaii, it is not clear and has never been decided by a court that the federal government does have jurisdiction over the seabed outside the 3-mile boundary in Hawaii. The obvious reason a court would have difficulty in reaching this conclusion is that the Hawaiian archipelago, by definition, has no continental shelf. Therefore, because of extreme submarine variation between Hawaiian and mainland seabeds, and the volcanic origin of the Hawaiian Islands forming the common geographic link between islands the state should assert its management and control authority for the seabed resources outside its boundaries to the maximum extent allowed by international and federal law, out to the limits of the 200-mile economic management zone currently evolving in international law. Manganese nodule resources, spiny lobsters and various valuable coral species are several examples of important reasons the state should have the power to manage and license these seabed resources. In the future, the state might choose to concurrently manage some resources with federal agencies in the same way Pacific fisheries are now managed. The state has stated a preference for single marine management authorities, and the seabed may well be an area where the state should assert this management authority, unless and until specifically limited by federal law.

"FISHERIES AND OTHER MARINE RESOURCES:

"The Federal Fisheries Acts and the F.C.M.A. (1976) provide for concurrent federal/state jurisdiction over fishery resources, since state fish and game agencies have federal counterparts. As international law evolves toward defining 200-mile economic resource zones for marine resources within 200 miles of the existing state boundaries, eventually the 200-mile regime will be more specific as to which resources will be covered and the role of the federal agencies within this zone. Still later (possibly decades), the actual implications of setting out the boundaries of the zone around Hawaii and the possible federal-state relationships will be determined. The state of Hawaii should move in the interim period to manage and control as well as protect the marine resources within the 200-mile ecosystem because Hawaii is a unique island state."

Delegate Blake rose to speak against the amendment. Referring to the committee report concerning the optional condemnation of konohiki rights and the State's obligation to fully compensate, he told the delegates of information he had received that some konohiki rights had been taken away from those who had the rights and leased out to private individuals.

Delegate Alcon, on a point of inquiry, requested a definition of mariculture, to which Delegate Harris responded that it referred to the "culturing, the growing of plant or animal material in sea water."

Delegate Burgess, also on a point of information, questioned why the reference was to the use and enjoyment only of the reefs and not to all the water, fish and seabed resources. Delegate Chang, in response, explained that the concern had related to sport and subsistence fishermen and the use and enjoyment of the fisheries, and to the idea that most of this activity took place on the reefs.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 6 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate Peterson moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 7, seconded by Delegate Burgess, which amended section 7 of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, on public land banking, by deleting it in its entirety. Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Peterson made the following statement:

"I should begin by restating that I am employed by Alexander & Baldwin, a major private landowner. However, I am speaking only on my own behalf and expressing my personal opinions.

"I speak in support of this amendment whose purpose is to delete from Com. P. No. 17 the section entitled 'Public Land Banking.' This addition to the Constitution specifies that the State shall have power to purchase land to control future growth, development and land use within the State. If the State were not to use this power, there would be no reason to include this in the Constitution. If it were used, however, I object to the State operating as a landowner in competition with private landholders. Land purchases by the State may be used to manipulate the local real estate market by design or by practice.

"Rather than withdrawing land from private ownership to the control of the state government, I much prefer the transfer of lands from public to private ownership. I consider one of Hawaii's major problems to be the limited lands available for private home ownership. The limited land supply is the primary cause of our high residential land prices.

"As you may know, rural and urban lands constitute only 1.4 percent of the State's 4 million acres. Much land could easily be opened up for residential use without jeopardizing or noticeably reducing our state or agricultural lands.

"With reference to the phrase 'control future growth,' I believe this subject is covered with more specificity in the proposal by the committee on public health and welfare, in which a new section reads: 'The State and its political subdivisions, as provided by general law, shall plan and manage the growth of the population to protect and preserve the public health and welfare...' and so forth.

"To summarize: (1) I oppose state ownership of property which would be better used if made available for private or residential use. In my opinion the State already owns and controls too much land. (2) For those who disagree with reason No. 1, I submit that the powers discussed in the section on public land banking duplicate without adding any significant powers to the public health proposal.

"Because I find public land banking objectionable and believe the proposed section to be redundant, I urge you to vote for this amendment."

Delegate Hale, speaking against the amendment, commended the committee for coming out with the concept of public land banking. Recalling that over 20 years before in the Keauhou-Kahaluu beach park area Bishop Estate had given 30 acres of land to Hawaii county for a public park and the county board of supervisors, having no money for development, had given over 25 acres back to the estate, she suggested that if there had been public land banking then, perhaps there could have been a public park there instead of the Keauhou Beach Hotel.

The problem with public lands, she pointed out, was that although there were approximately 1,584,000 acres of it in the State, 80 percent of the population was on Oahu which had only 64,810 acres of public land, and although the Big Island had over 1,100,000 acres, it didn't have the population and the public lands were not necessarily in desirable or even accessible places. She further suggested that the State's public lands could be used to encourage home ownership and prevent speculation by putting them on the market in areas and at times when the market was tight.

Delegate Goodenow also spoke against the amendment, stating:

"I would just like to give some factual information. I agree with Delegate Hale that if we don't do something soon, we will have none left. I am speaking of the foreign investments in Hawaii; this is why I think it's so necessary that the State acquire interests in real property to control future growth. Now land investments by the following countries--Australia, Canada, France, Hong Kong, Japan, Republic of Korea, Norway, Republic of China, United Kingdom--it all adds up to an investment. I won't give the individual ones, but an investment of approximately $631,600,000.

"I would like to add that a report was done by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, that in the early 1970s--this information is pertinent but it is outdated--this was done in about 1973, specifically as the foreign investments had had time in Hawaii, which at this time are multiplied into the millions.

"The other day I read that the Kona Village was purchased by the country of Canada, and along with it went 18,000 acres in that area. The recommendation made by the U.S. Chamber of Commerce in regard to what's going on over here is as follows: the impression from limited but repeated evidence is that prices paid for real estate by foreign investors were often high compared to what was judged to be market value prior to purchase. Young people in Hawaii can't afford apartments or other land because foreign people coming in have big money and are usually in huis of one type or other, and that is forcing our economy up, which is very dangerous--something we should consider. Prices paid are linked to the important questions of motive and expectation. Three possibilities are suggested--going back now, I remind you it was in 1973.

1. Foreign investors pay high prices because of optimistic expectations of future property values in their own country.
2. Foreign investors are apt to pay higher prices because they are willing to accept lower rate returns than American investors.
3. Foreign investors pay high prices because they are planning uses for land improvement not considered by American investors.

"I could read much more, but I don't feel that it is pertinent. I hope to introduce a resolution that I have prepared. Representative

Heftel's office is preparing one for Congress limiting the purchase of agricultural land, and the resolution asks for a committee to be set up to monitor who is buying what. And I'm trying to do this here in our State, with the legislature and the governor, just to have someone keep the public aware and also monitor what is being purchased--is it agricultural land, homes or what.

"In closing, I would like to say that foreign real estate investments in Hawaii, while not large by world standards, are significant in terms of the economy of this State and the preservation of values and way of life in Hawaii. I do ask the delegates please to vote against this amendment."

Delegate Waihee, speaking against the amendment, pointed out that one purpose of the provision that hadn't been mentioned was that it gave the State the power to purchase development rights which would then be banked and would probably be the vehicle used more often than purchasing land.

Delegate Crozier, speaking for the amendment, voiced the belief that the State already had the power to buy land under the new Section 1 of Article X. He further stated:

"I also speak for this amendment because of the section dealing with agricultural lands. I'm really concerned about this land banking concept. Had we done something like New Zealand does, they make the people obligated to use their land, and if they don't use the lands they're taxed very heavily, and then when they're ready the State will come in and buy the land from the owner and turn around and sell it to someone who's willing to use that land. That's what we're concerned about, the use of the land. Here what we're going to do is just put the State possibly into deeper debt just to hold on to land. I don't think that would solve the problem, it would just give us another financial burden. I'm hoping that the agricultural land provision--Section 5 of Article X--will go through and that would solve all the problems that this land banking concept tries to address."

Delegate Chang, speaking against the amendment, reminded the delegates that the provision did not create a land banking measure but merely permitted the legislature to address the policy question.

Delegate Ontai then questioned if the State already had the power to land bank and if it could not be used to help land developers.

Delegate Peterson, speaking last for his amendment, stated:

"I wish to answer some of the arguments made. The first argument considered the need for beach parks; property for beach parks is now being purchased with state funds without this recommended section. This section does not speak specifically about beach areas but includes all the property of the State.

"The second issue was that speculation should be reduced. Public ownership of land now in private hands will reduce, rather than increase, the supply of available lands, thereby further driving up prices, which will encourage speculation rather than eliminate that problem.

"The question of foreign investments--which suggested that many countries are buying $631 million total in land--is a very interesting question. In the first place, we as a state don't have $631 million to use to purchase our own land. The second issue is, you may know of the recent drop in value of the U.S. dollar, compared to yen, of about 30 percent. This would have been even more without the beneficial effects of foreign investments in the United States. Because of the reason I stated initially, that only 1.4 percent of the State's 4 million acres of land is now in rural and urban land classification, and because I believe that much land could be opened up for residential and other uses without jeopardizing the amount presently owned by the State, and because I think this issue is already addressed in another section of the proposed Constitution, I urge that you vote in favor of this amendment."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 7 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Takehara moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 8, seconded by Delegate Harris, which added a new section to Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, to read:

SHORELINE ACCESS AND PARKS

Section All shorelines, as provided by law, shall be free to the public. Insofar as practicable, the State shall provide public rights of way to the shorelines and beaches within the State and provide public parks in shoreline areas.

Speaking in favor of her amendment, Delegate Takehara explained:

"The shorelines in the State are an asset to us all. The state supreme court has recognized this by stating that public policy favors extending to public use and ownership as much of Hawaii's shoreline as is reasonably possible. The legislature has also recognized the fundamental right to shoreline use by enacting HRS 115 in the Hawaii Revised Statutes, relating to public access to beaches. Under HRS 115-1, the findings and purposes of the statute are enumerated. Some of the miles of shoreline are inaccessible due to the absence of public rights-of-way. Population of the Islands is increasing while the presently accessible beach remains fixed. Absence of public access to Hawaii's shoreline constitutes an infringement upon the fundamental right of free movement in public space.

"This proposal incorporates these policies into our Constitution. Further, it requires the State to provide public parks in these shorelines areas wherever practicable. This proposal reaffirms our concern and commitment toward making the beaches available to the public for recreational use. This proposal does not bind the legislature in any way. In using the word 'practicable' this proposal does not force the legislature into a situation where shorelines and parks become the No. 1 priority; rather, it urges the reassessment of their priorities concerning shorelines.

"I don't think that the cost factor is a substantial issue. We are not mandating that immediate access to the beaches and parks be created to every piece of shoreline. The word 'practicable' insures that only as moneys become available will the legislature be duty bound to provide shoreline access and parks. The legislature in 4 years, since the passage of statute 115, has only appropriated a little over $1 million to acquire land to provide rights-of-way. Yet this money has only been spent to acquire access to one forest area, which is up in Wailupe Valley.

"In closing, I would like to reiterate--we are the only state surrounded by water. As such, we have a multitude of beautiful shores. I ask you, fellow delegates, wouldn't it be a shame if our children and families could not freely experience one of the joys of our island paradise--the shoreline."

Delegate Chong, on a point of inquiry, asked if the definition of shoreline access covered inland waters also. Delegate Takehara replied that she wasn't sure but that the term "as provided by law" would make it specific.

Delegate Chong then spoke against the amendment. At that time, she explained, the federal, state and county governments were undertaking a project right in her backyard which on completion would be about 30 acres of lagoon. Because she was not sure whether the definition of shoreline access covered this project, she added, she would have to vote against the amendment.

Delegate Ontai then voiced his support of the amendment.

At this time Delegate Hale moved to amend the amendment by deleting the first sentence and also the words "and provide public parks in shoreline areas," seconded by Delegate Peterson.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Hale explained that it was her understanding the state supreme court had already ruled that the shoreline, or the water up to the highest line of vegetation, was public domain and open to the public, and therefore the first sentence of the amendment could be deleted. The problem, she pointed out, was not the shorelines but public rights-of-way, that private property prevented the public from getting to the free shorelines. The State, she further noted, already had the power to provide public parks in shoreline areas, and now had more power under their land banking provision, to provide for future areas. Therefore, she concluded, all that was necessary was a policy statement that the people had a right to get to the shorelines and beaches through the provision for public rights-of-way.

Delegate Sutton, on a point of information, inquired if there was any possible conflict with the privacy laws, to which Delegate Hale responded that that would have to be adjudicated in the courts.

Delegate Shon, speaking against the amendment to the amendment, voiced his feeling that a policy statement concerning public parks and shoreline accessibility would be appropriate. A lack of adequate beach parks and facilities in the State had been reported in recent years, he noted, and the intensity in competition for shoreline use was growing. Because parks were not a big revenue-generating enterprise, he added, they tended to have a low priority in the allocation of state funds and anything they could do to emphasize the need and desirability of increasing recreational areas would be noteworthy.

Delegate Hoe spoke in favor of the amendment to the amendment. Quoting from the environmental impact statement prepared for the State that substantiated the concerns, she stated:

"Although state and county management of upland areas guarantees access to the publicly owned beaches, 74 percent of the sandy beach coastline is privately owned and managed land. In fact, providing access to the shoreline has become a major problem in the State because landowners exercise control over perpendicular access. Specific private users include residences, hotel and tourist facilities, industrial developments and agricultural activities. Several agencies also have restrictive use of shoreline areas; accessibility is a major factor in determining their magnitude in public areas. This determination involves examination of access, particularly transportation, to areas valued by the public because of their environmental, recreational, cultural or historic qualities.

"State law, Act 69, provides for the conceptual planning, coordination, development and land acquisition, construction and implementation of a statewide access system to meet recreational needs. It provides a showcase for cultural and environmental education, to insure that economic development is compatible with natural and cultural resources and to provide transportation in natural areas.'

"There is such a plan statewide, and there have been funds made available for this plan, and therefore I feel it is appropriate at this time to recognize the concerns and the desire to maintain these accesses in our Constitution."

Delegate Takemoto, on a point of inquiry, asked if "shoreline" referred to the vegetation line or the 8/10 line. Delegate Takehara, in response, commented that regardless of which line, the statement was broad enough to allow the legislators "in accordance with the law to decide what's best for the people in Hawaii."

Delegate Hale then voiced the feeling that the supreme court had been more liberal than the legislature in this area and indicated that she would therefore prefer to leave the definition of shorelines to the courts. That, she added, was the reason she had deleted the first sentence in the amendment.

Delegate Takemoto, speaking against the amendment to the amendment, explained that part of the problem was determining what the shoreline was, and this was being decided in the courts. Until the matter was settled, she added, they should not be considering this sort of amendment for the Constitution.

There being no further discussion, the question of the amendment to Amendment No. 8 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

Delegate Goodenow, speaking for the original amendment, stressed the importance of including a constitutional provision on the right of public accessibility to the beaches and urged the delegates to support the amendment.

Delegate Chang rose to speak against the amendment, explaining:

"First, all shorelines are already free to the public. With regard to access, I believe that the legislature has provided for access rights of the public to the shorelines. In Section 171-35(5) on public lands, it says that each 'lease issued by the board of land and natural resources shall contain,' where applicable, '...reservation of rights-of-way and access to other public lands...or public beaches....'

"In Section 46-6.5, it provides that each county 'shall adopt ordinances which shall require a subdivider or developer, as a condition precedent to final approval of a subdivision... to dedicate land for public access by right-of-way or easement for pedestrian travel from... public streets to the land below the high-water mark on any coastal shoreline, and to dedicate land for public access....'

"And finally, in Chapter 115 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes, it guarantees 'the right of public access to the sea and shorelines and transit along the shorelines....' Along this line, the legislature in 1975 appropriated $1 million to the department of land and natural resources for the acquisition of land for public rights-of-way and public transit corridors. And the only reason for the delay in acquisition, as I understand it, has been that the department has been awaiting completion of a trail system study which would pinpoint land to be effected by this acquisition program. Therefore, I believe the public's right to shoreline access is already being met by the legislature and I believe that constitutional language to this effect is unnecessary."

Delegate Harris, speaking in favor of the amendment, pointed out that the shorelines and ocean areas were a prize resource in Hawaii and that access to them should be provided to all citizens. Arguing that there was no blanket policy statement that the State provide access to shoreline areas, he voiced disagreement with previous statements interpreting the statutes in this area. The amendment, he added, would do much to solve the problem of shorelines that were totally inaccessible because they had been fenced off.

Delegate Lacy rose to speak in support of the amendment provided the previous speaker was accurate that the State did not then have the power to condemn land such as trails. It was his understanding, he explained, that the State already had this power and any accessibility problems would not mean the Constitution was insufficient but rather that administration of the laws and provision of funds were the problem. He then inquired if the State did in fact already have this power.

Delegate Harris, in response, acknowledged that the State did have the power to condemn lands, provide rights-of-way, etc., but pointed out that the amendment did not give the State power--it mandated the State to do it.

Delegate Takehara, speaking last for her amendment, stated:

"I'd like to give you some of the reasons that I thought this amendment was very important to all of us. I think many of you recall when we were children growing up in Hawaii, how we drove around the Island and often wondered how to get to some of the lovely beaches that we saw but couldn't get to. Fortunately, in those days we could go to Ala Moana, we could go to Waikiki, Waimanalo, Hanauma Bay and so forth, and it was very easy to go to those beaches without much problem with parking and so forth. But today with our increased population I'm sure you're aware of the crowded situation at our public beaches. Also, this shoreline belongs to us. This is one manner in which our families can have free togetherness and recreational entertainment.

"We talk about social ills today--families being broken up and not together--and here we have a most valuable commodity that could help. I feel that on our Island particularly, we've noticed great urban encroachment and urban sprawl. Relative to my own community of Aiea, Halawa, if you look at our shoreline it's sprinkled with what we call light industrial--the most beautiful asset of our State being hidden by light industrial development. We need open space, we need preservation of our shoreline--and I do feel that we are very unique.

"The reduction of direct access to recreational areas, particularly waterfront property, has paralleled the rapid urbanization of Hawaii. Approximately 25 percent of Oahu's shoreline is currently unavailable to the public, and another 7 percent is already scheduled for development, which would further reduce beach access to the people.' I think this is as important as fish are to the ocean, we to the public--to have that in our Constitution. We only have so much beach frontage and shoreline frontage for our people. For those who feel that this is a legislative matter--and I think it was cited that this is now in some of our ordinances--here's another comment: 'The inability of county government, or even the State of Hawaii, to purchase every choice recreational property for public use has led to ordinances requiring private developers to deed a portion of their land as is stated, or equivalent funds, for park purposes.' The comment made here is that the results of this policy have not been impressive.

"We have just so much of a perimeter in our State and that's been gradually diminishing from our youth. I think this is important enough and urgent enough that it needs to be shown by the impact of a constitutional mandate. I urge all of you to please consider voting for this."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 8 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry. Delegate Takehara thereupon called for a division of the house, and on a rising vote the motion again failed by a vote of 33 ayes and 34 noes. At this time Delegate Takehara requested a roll-call vote, to which the Chair responded that roll call was not then possible. Delegate Sutton thereupon moved to reconsider, seconded by Delegate Hale. The question to reconsider the vote on Amendment No. 8 was put by the Chair and, by a vote of 34 ayes and 34 noes and with the Chair voting no, the motion again failed to carry.

Delegate Hale then requested a division of the house on that vote, to which the Chair ruled that the vote had been properly taken and the motion to reconsider was lost. Delegate Hale thereupon appealed the ruling of the Chair. The parliamentarian at that time advised, the Chair stated, that there was no basis for appeal, an actual count having been taken, and the request for a division of the house was not in order.

At this time Delegate De Soto rose on a point of personal privilege and, as a native Hawaiian, stated that 2 weeks ago they had been given rights to access and that she felt sorry that "everybody else cannot have these same rights."

Delegate de Costa rose and moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 9, seconded by Delegate Shinno, which amended section 6 of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, to read:

The State shall conserve and protect agricultural lands, promote diversified agriculture, increase agricultural self-sufficiency, and assure the availability of agriculturally suitable lands. The legislature shall enact laws that will set forth standards and criteria applicable to accomplish the foregoing.

[Reclassification of lands identified by the State as "prime", "unique", or "other important" agricultural lands in agricultural districts shall be subject to approval by two thirds of each house of the legislature. These lands shall be protected and maintained for bona fide agricultural use. Necessary support facilities are permissible.]

Lands identified by the State as important agricultural lands needed to fulfill the purposes above shall not be reclassified by the State or rezoned by its political subdivisions without meeting the standards and criteria established by the legislature and approved by a two-thirds vote of the body responsible for the reclassification or rezoning action.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Harris stated:

"The trio from the Garden Island offers this amendment for your consideration. Governor George Ariyoshi, in his 1978 State of the State address, began: 'We will continue our efforts to see greater self-sufficiency for Hawaii by increasing our agricultural diversity and preserving our agricultural land, which is vital if Hawaii is to remain economically viable and environmentally attractive.' This policy put forward by the governor is reflected in almost every state study and plan in recent years, and I'd like the bulk of my testimony this afternoon to just be a reiteration of some of the information provided for your consideration.

"The Hawaii State Plan, a document we've talked about frequently in this Convention, goes on to say: 'Urbanization of prime agricultural land would represent loss of an important natural resource and would prevent its use for future generations. Development of such land would not only involve the loss of natural resources but would also have implications for the economic stability of the Islands and the availability of scenic and open space.' The central Oahu planning study, done by the Department of Planning and Economic Development, continues: 'There is an increasing demand for . . . agricultural products which can be produced here in Hawaii. To meet this demand, Hawaii's agricultural industries will require increases in the supply of agricultural lands. However, this demand for agricultural land cannot stand against the pressure to urbanize agricultural land without some fundamental changes in the system for regulating land uses to assure the availability of agricultural lands at a reasonable cost.'

"Fellow delegates, I believe that this constitutional amendment is that fundamental change that is being called for in the state government. Our present land use laws, I believe, are not adequately addressing this critical problem. In the LRB land use law revised publication, they state that the preservation of agricultural land is the prime objective of the land use law. That would indicate that this purpose is not being achieved since a substantial part of lands reclassified to a higher use comes from agricultural districts. In point of fact, in the last 15 years with this existing land use law this State has seen the urbanization of over 37,000 acres of its agricultural land. I believe this wholesale urbanization of this prime resource has to stop. I believe that this amendment before you, and this committee proposal on agriculture, go a long way toward solving that problem. As one whose strong platform is the preservation of agricultural land, I can honestly tell you that I would perhaps prefer something much stronger, but I believe this is a reasonable compromise. This I think addresses the problem, while at the same time not being overly restrictive. I urge this delegation to unanimously support this very important proposal."

Delegate de Costa, speaking for the amendment explained how plantation companies helped the workers buy their own land and houses by subdividing cane land and selling it below the market price. The committee proposal, he said, would only make the houses cost more, and he urged the delegates to support the amendment.

Delegate Waihee rose to speak in favor of the motion. The amendment, he explained, was both an attempt to preserve agriculture as an economic base for the Islands and keep agricultural lands to the extent possible as open space and also an attempt to recognize the fact that where there was agricultural worker housing the provision would be flexible enough to allow for that kind of housing.

Delegate Lacy then questioned the movant as to "the body responsible for the reclassification or rezoning action," asking if it might be two different bodies. Delegate Waihee, in response, acknowledged that it would be two different bodies; the body responsible for reclassification, he explained, would be the Land Use Commission and the body responsible for rezoning, the various county councils. And the provision, he added, would require two-thirds votes in both cases.

Delegate Hale rose to question the procedure on the two-thirds vote requirements by the legislature and Land Use Commission. Delegate Waihee responded that the amendment required two-thirds votes of the Land Use Commission and of the city or county councils. What it did, he explained, was reinforce the existing system rather than create a new layer of government control. He further explained:

"In addition, it mandates that the legislature set out specific criteria and standards for enforcing the policy set forth in the first sentence. So what would happen in terms of the actual mechanism would be that--first, a two-thirds vote of the Land Use Commission would be required for any change to urbanization. The second protection would be a two-thirds vote of the county council before any zoning changes from agriculture or any change to urban."

Delegate Lacy then voiced his support of the amendment and his agreement with the movants.

Delegate McCall, speaking in favor of the amendment, observed that it was workable and should help to conserve the best agricultural lands. He then commended its sponsors as well as those who had agreed to it for bringing together their different viewpoints in a reasonable compromise.

Delegate Hornick, expressing her support of the amendment, requested that to save time her speech just be entered in the Journal.

[The following is written testimony as submitted by Delegate Hornick.]

"In 1961 Hawaii enacted the state land use law for the purpose, as stated in its preamble, of protecting the State's dwindling supply of prime agricultural land and preventing scattered urban subdivisions. The reasons for protecting our best agricultural lands are and have been:

- protection of an important source of (export) income and employment
- preservation of open space
- protection of an essential, increasingly rare and virtually irreplaceable resource, namely fertile topsoil
- replenishment of the groundwater supply
- decreasing the State's vulnerability to disruption due to external forces, or in other words to contribute to and increase state self-sufficiency
- maintenance of agricultural options
- preservation of the rural character of much of the State, and

--preservation of attitudes and values that develop out of close contact with the land and have been inherent in Hawaiian culture.

"My subsequent remarks may sound like an indictment of the Land Use Commission; however, they are not intended as such but merely seek to illustrate why our present system is not working well, and why the committee's proposal as amended would constitute an improvement. My information is in large part from a 1976 paper by Professor Kem Lowrey of the University's PUSPP and Michael McElroy of the LRB.

"In general, these two researchers have found that the 'statistical analysis of Land Use Commission decision-making indicated ... that agricultural productivity has not been a significant factor in Commission decision-making; land units involving prime agricultural land were almost as likely to be approved as non-prime land units.'

"Speculation has continued on high quality agricultural lands regardless of their proximity to existing urban developments, with farmers being offered prices nearly 2-1/2 times the fair market value on the premise of Land Use Commission willingness to redistrict land. This has occurred both in areas farmed by small landowners and in the conversion of large land units that were part of plantation operations. For example:

'In 1966, the agricultural district near Wailua [Kauai] included about 427 acres divided into thirty-four individual parcels.... By 1971, 293 acres of this...land had been sold at prices averaging about $8,000 per acre.... These prices reflected a perception of Commission willingness to redistrict the land. The Commission did redistrict a portion of the land to allow for urban uses. The land redistricted included the most agriculturally productive land. Mounting tax assessments resulting from the Commission action further increased the urban pressures on the remaining agricultural land, [and in addition] raised the possibility that remnant agricultural uses might be regarded as "nuisances" in newly developed areas.'

"The conversion of plantation lands has followed a different path with similar results. Plantation owners file a petition with the LUC on the claim that the former agricultural use is 'no longer economically feasible' and the proposed urban uses will provide both housing and employment. 'Repeatedly, landowners, developers, and their lawyers have justified their requests on the basis that favorable Commission action will result in "moderate-cost," "moderate-income," "gap group," or "low-income" housing. The approval of particular petitions was based on developers' promises to provide needed low- and moderate-income housing.' Despite developer promises, very little housing has been built at prices affordable by more than 25 percent of Hawaii's people.

"A 1963 petition by Oceanic Properties for central Oahu is a case in point. Despite the fact that the proposed project violated LUC criteria and was on prime agricultural land, the LUC approved the petition because the developers claimed they would provide housing at between $15,000 and $20,000 and conceded that there was no necessity for urban lands for housing in excess of $25,000. However, in actuality less than 6 percent of the more than 1,200 units sold could have been defined as low-cost.

"In central Oahu, where 40 percent of the State's prime agricultural land is located, the LUC has turned down only 2 of more than 30 requests to reclassify from agriculture to urban. All others have been approved either wholly or in part.

"In short, the Land Use Commission's role in preserving agricultural lands has been dubious, despite its intended purpose. Furthermore, the LUC has been criticized for being unresponsive to the community and lacking accountability, being an appointed body.

"Com. P. No. 17 attempted to deal with these problems by identifying the best agricultural lands and imposing a heavy requirement for their reclassification--two-thirds vote of the legislature. However, several concerns have since been raised--to the effect that this requirement is too burdensome and a compromise is needed, that will re-emphasize the need for preserving our agricultural lands and increase LUC accountability while still allowing for the weighing of other social needs.

"This amendment fits those criteria. It combines the original strong policy statement with a mechanism by which the community can require more LUC compliance with the intent of the land use law, by requiring two-thirds votes of the LUC for reclassification and the city or county council for rezoning.

"I personally prefer stronger protection for the best agricultural lands, but I do feel that this amendment is a workable compromise and a positive step in the right direction. I urge its adoption."

Delegate Odanaka, speaking in favor of the amendment, submitted her speech for entry in the Journal.

[The following is written testimony as submitted by Delegate Odanaka.]

"Totally unrestrained growth has destroyed the character of many neighborhoods in my district. The open space in Pearl City tends to be filled quickly by free enterprise building allowed by a state plan and county zoning that has thrust Oahu's overdevelopment our way.

"In Pearl City, the concepts of 'controlled growth' and 'urban planning' have played a cruel joke on the people. Huge condominiums shadow tiny farms and frame houses. With or without tax breaks, these last remnants of our island lifestyle are doomed.

"I am afraid Pearl City may be a lost cause. The problems of urbanization--crime, crowding and a 'mainland' atmosphere of apathy and hostility--have already destroyed my community. I favor any constitutional way that other communities may avert this kind of planned destruction under the guise of a 'state plan.'"

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 9 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate McCall at this time requested that Amendment Nos. 10 and 11 be withdrawn and, there being no objection, the Chair so noted.

At 3:17 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 3:23 p.m.

Delegate Peterson rose and requested that the remarks he had prepared to address Amendment No. 12 be entered in the Journal with the discussion of Amendment No. 9 and that Amendment No. 12 be withdrawn. There being no objection, it was so noted.

[The following is written testimony as submitted by Delegate Peterson.]

"The proposed section 6 which this amendment seeks to delete may be considered in two parts for each paragraph. I believe a distinction should be made between commercial agricultural lands and those used for the production of food for people who live in the State.

I am not opposed to the encouragement of production for home use. Our geographic isolation makes that not only prudent but imperative.

"But to pass this proposal is to use an elephant gun to shoot a mouse. The overall economic development program prepared by the state department of planning makes this revealing analysis: less than 3,500 additional acres will be necessary to replace all imported vegetables and fruits that can be grown in Hawaii. There are presently about 220,000 acres under sugarcane cultivation. A change of 1.6 percent of sugar lands would provide agricultural lands necessary for self-sufficiency.

"To provide for control of 1.6 percent of necessary agricultural lands by regulating the remaining 98.4 percent of sugar lands is not appropriate. When pineapple and other lands under cultivation for other export crops are added to the available agricultural lands, the wisdom of the original proposal becomes even more questionable.

"By failing to vote for this amendment, this body will drag another obstacle in front of private landowners to restrict their options. This is not the time to go into detail about the subject of property rights. What does ownership mean? One aspect of ownership is use. Whenever use is limited, the benefits or rights of ownership are limited.

"If I own it, I may take a piece of paper and cut or tear it, fold it, wad it up, write on it, color it, glue something on it, sell it or loan it, or give it away. If it were against the law for me to not put anything on my paper except with pencil, my ownership rights would be considerably reduced. If like a computer card I was not allowed to fold, spindle or mutilate, my rights would be further reduced. If I then were limited from selling, loaning or giving my paper away, what good is it to me?

"Ownership is control and use of property. If you were to offer me control and use of a new Mercedes, it would not matter to me who was legally the owner. In the same way, regulation by regulation, our society is taking from owners the free use of their property without compensation. Even in Hawaii this is not right.

"I believe the section to be deleted is unnecessary. There appears to be no recognition of the difference between agricultural lands for 'self-sufficiency,' or production of food for local use, and agricultural lands for production of crops for export. A section which controls 99 percent of all lands to regulate only 1 percent seems to be loosely drawn.

"Com. P. No. 17, section 1, reads in part: 'For the benefit of present and future generations, the State...shall conserve and protect Hawaii's natural...resources, including land...and shall promote the development and utilization of these resources in a manner consistent with their conservation and in furtherance of the self-sufficiency of the State.'

"The phrase 'increase agricultural self-sufficiency' is used in the section just quoted almost word for word. The phrase 'assure the availability of agriculturally suitable lands' is vague; is land presently used for sugarcane or pineapple considered available? Is it to be available for growing other crops? Is it available for open space, for building single-family residences? Shall we keep suitable lands as a sort of outdoor museum for people to look at?

"To summarize: paragraph 1 seems to me vague and redundant; paragraph 2 seems to be an unwarranted governmental intrusion which will reduce private property rights. The loss of these rights may be excused by some who believe this applies only to the superlarge agricultural landholders. However, these companies in turn are owned by stockholders like you and me. If we fail to vote for this amendment we will be placing another limitation upon all private property rights, including yours and mine."

Delegate Harris at this time requested that Amendment No. 13 be withdrawn and, there being no objection, the Chair so noted.

Delegate Hale then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 14, seconded by Delegate Crozier, which amended Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by deleting section 5 on farm and home ownership in its entirety from the committee proposal and renumbering sections 6 through 10 as sections 5 through 9.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Hale explained:

"The words being deleted by the committee proposal are in the present Constitution and were put in in 1950. I don't see that they in any way detract from anything the committee has done or the policies they have set forth. All they're saying is that public land shall be used 'for the development of farm and home ownership on as widespread a basis as possible.'

"I'd like to point out how many millions of acres there are. This really doesn't affect Oahu too much, because there is not much public land on Oahu--roughly less than 65,000 acres--but on the Big Island there's over 1,100,000 acres of public land, and much of our low and moderate and gap income housing has been built on public land within Hilo. And if this is taken out of the Constitution, I think we're sort of phasing out a mandate that the public lands be used for home ownership. This is what they are being used for to a large extent now--we have a lot of land in the city of Hilo that's not good agricultural land. But it is located in an area that's suitable for urban development and it is suitable for housing and is properly zoned, and it's just a question of pushing the State to meet some of the housing needs in the area by using public lands. This enables us to give people land and houses cheaper than if the State had to purchase development rights for public land banking or private lands to develop gap income housing on. I realize the State has the power to develop housing, but this is a policy direction that public land shall be used for home ownership and farms 'on as widespread a basis as possible.'

"This does not have anything to do with Hawaiian home lands. The definition of public lands specifically excludes Hawaiian home lands, and I do ask your consideration of this amendment because it just seems it was put in to enable widespread home ownership. This came out in the committee report in 1950, and I feel it is still a desirable goal and I would hope that you would go along with it."

Delegate Crozier, on a point of inquiry, asked if the movant was putting the provision back in or deleting it, to which Delegate Hale responded that her amendment would put the words back in the Constitution, the committee proposal having deleted them.

Delegate Crozier then spoke in favor of that part of the amendment dealing with home ownership. He had been concerned in committee, he explained, about this provision giving some credence to the Hawaii Housing Authority, but he had been advised that it was not applicable to that agency. But, he added, the Constitution should still include somewhere that the State had an obligation to fund, and should use its land for, home ownership.

Delegate Chang, speaking against the amendment, explained:

"The reason that the committee proposal was drafted to delete this portion of the Constitution was because the evolving concept on the use of public lands has brought the State to the point where a public land policy now reflects the uses to which public lands were supposed to be put in conformance with the Organic Act, and that is the multiple use concept.

"The present language speaks to the idea of using public lands for farm and home ownership, but it is felt that public lands should be used for many other purposes in addition to farm and home ownership. This would not preclude the State from developing house or farm lots on public lands, but merely broaden the purposes to which public lands should be put. And as I stated, this would be in conformance with the conditions set forth in the Organic Act with regard to the public lands. The purposes to which public lands ought to be put under the terms of the Organic Act are five in number, and farm and home ownership is only one. So your Committee felt, in order to conform with this document and to reflect a modern theory with regard to the use of public lands, this provision ought to be deleted. I speak against the amendment."

Delegate Les Ihara, speaking against the amendment, pointed out that Section 4 of Article VIII (as amended in 1976) gave the State power to "provide for, or assist in, housing, slum clearance," etc., and this, he added, should satisfy the concerns about housing.

Delegate Hale then explained that this provision only gave the State power to provide for housing, while the Article X provision authorized the State to use public lands for home ownership. Housing on state-acquired private land, she pointed out, would cost more than housing on unused land that the State already had. Describing a subdivision in Hilo that had been built on state land as an example, she cautioned against taking the provision out of the Constitution as there would then be no direction given to the State in terms of public lands for housing.

The consensus of the 1950 convention, she continued, had been that the more families placed as independent landowners on the public domain, the more stable the State's economy would be. And the Organic Act mentioned earlier, she argued, had no effect after statehood. There had been no good reason yet, she concluded, for taking this provision out as a policy statement.

Delegate Chang then spoke against the amendment, first correcting a point he had made previously. It was not, he clarified, the Organic Act but rather the Admission Act that set forth the conditions with regard to public lands, of which farm and home ownership was only one among five. And this, he explained, was one of the reasons the committee had deleted the provision, because there were other purposes to be served in holding public lands. The other reason for deleting, he added, was due to the multiple use approach in public land management, which argued against the use of public lands for so narrow a purpose as farm and home ownership.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 14 was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

The President then called for discussion on the passage of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1 as amended. There being no discussion, Delegate Okamura moved, seconded by Delegate Chang, that Com. P. No. 17, RD. 1 as amended, pass Second Reading and Com. Whole Rep. No. 18 be received and placed on file. The question was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At this time Delegate Hamilton rose to note for the record that exactly 191 years ago, September 17, 1787 had been the final day of the federal Constitutional Convention. Benjamin Franklin had made a brilliant statement on that day, he mentioned, and referred interested delegates to pages 753 and 754 in Carl Van Doren's biography of Franklin.

At 3:43 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 3:48 p.m.

Delegate Hirata at this time moved to reconsider the vote on Com. P. No. 16, RD. 2, seconded by Delegate Izu. The Chair, upon ascertaining that Delegate Hirata had voted on the prevailing side, called for discussion on the motion.

Delegate Chong, on a point of order, questioned whether the motion was in order, to which the Chair responded that the motion had been determined in order at that time.

Delegate De Soto rose to speak against the motion to reconsider, noting that it would set a dangerous precedent. Delegate Waihee also spoke against the motion, acknowledging that reconsideration was allowable under their rules but that he would speak against it at that time.

Delegate Kaapu, on a point of information, requested verification that under their rules reconsideration was always in order as long as the subject being proposed was of a substantive nature. The Chair, in response, explained that reconsideration or failure of reconsideration at that point would preclude further motions for reconsideration at a subsequent time.

Delegate Kaapu then spoke against the motion to reconsider, expressing his feeling that the motion was a poor and ill-considered one which went contrary to the spirit of fair play of the reconsideration provision in the rules. It was, he further stated, a "very bad policy for those who supported the action taken in the committee to be a party to a reconsideration for the purpose of trying to stop proper reconsideration by those who sincerely wanted matters reconsidered." He then suggested that the motion to reconsider "probably could not be sustained," or even further pursued "if members of this body who didn't feel that it were right were to get up now and leave, to the extent that we would no longer have a quorum."

Delegate Les Ihara, on a point of personal privilege, took exception to the statements made by Delegate Kaapu, adding that he would be introducing an amendment on the open primary.

On a point of information, Delegate Donald Ching inquired if there was anything pending on the Clerk's desk at that time, to which the Chair responded that there was not.

Delegate Hirata then rose on a point of personal privilege to inform the delegates that "it was a serious move on my part in offering this motion to reconsider because I did want to reconsider the open primary." He further stated, "I did submit an amendment and it's been submitted to the Clerk and the President, as stated in Robert's Rules of Order Newly Revised."

Delegate Takehara, on a point of personal privilege, pointed out that they had had this opportunity "just yesterday," and that the vote had not been that close. This was, she remarked, "nothing but dirty politics," and she encouraged those who "believe in the principles of what we're here for to walk out of this convention hall."

Delegate Hornick at this time moved to adjourn until 1:30 p.m. the next day, seconded by Delegate Harris. The motion to adjourn, the Chair ruled, was not the main motion at that time and therefore not in order.

On a point of information, Delegate Kaapu asked if a motion to recess would be in order, to which the chair responded that the parliamentarian advised it would not be in order. Delegate Kaapu then asked if the motion would be in order if he relinquished the floor. The motion to recess, the Chair responded, would then be in order but there would have to be a vote on it.

Delegate Waihee at this time moved for the previous question, whereupon the Chair ruled the motion not in order as Delegate Kaapu had the floor.

Delegate Kaapu then proceeded to speak against the motion for the 10 minutes he was entitled to speak and he requested that he also speak later for his second time.

Delegate De Soto rose to speak against the motion, expressing her dismay and incredulity at the actions of some of the delegates in response to the motion. What particularly distressed her, she remarked, were the delegates who had self-righteously claimed to represent the people and had demanded one thing after another, who were now not willing to take another delegate at face value, or give him the benefit of the doubt. It was, she further commented, a sad state of affairs that they would question a delegate's motives on the basis of his motion to reconsider, when it was his prerogative to make the motion, and would then ask all the delegates to leave rather than discuss the motion on its merits.

The motion to reconsider, she continued, was also setting a bad precedent and it was a shame that all delegates couldn't just accept it if they lost on an issue. The committees, she pointed out, worked hard, often because of delegates trying to get their way, which was all right because the rules allowed it. But, she added, "just to stand up and leave the floor because you suspect something--why don't you ask?" She then appealed to all the delegates who had "the guts to tackle the problem head on" to return to their seats and vote.

Delegate Donald Ching then rose to speak against the motion to reconsider, pointing out that the Convention had acted and that every move following the reconsideration would be a parliamentary move on the part of the proponents of a certain idea. Although he felt the movant of the motion was sincere in his attempt, he added, at this time he didn't happen to agree and would vote against reconsideration.

Delegate Marumoto rose and moved to adjourn until 1:30 tomorrow, seconded by Delegate Hale. The motion, the Chair ruled, was not in order as the main motion had precedence.

Delegate Waihee then moved for the previous question, seconded by Delegate Taira. The motion of the previous question was put by the Chair and carried.

At this time Delegate Lacy rose on a point of parliamentary inquiry to ask if they were to reconsider the committee proposal in its totality. The Chair in reply confirmed that if the motion passed the whole package would be up for discussion. Then how, Delegate Lacy questioned, could a part of the package be drawn into discussion if it hadn't come up as a true amendment within the last 48 hours. According to the parliamentarian, the Chair explained, the proposal would go before the Convention in the same form as when it was passed on Second Reading.

Delegate Marumoto rose on a point of personal privilege to register her no vote on the last vote taken, pointing out that the Chair had not called for the no votes.

Also on a point of personal privilege, Delegate Harris voiced a strong protest against "some of the shoddiest tactics" he had ever seen by the delegation.

Delegate Kaapu, on a point of parliamentary inquiry, asked whether, if there were a roll-call vote on the motion and it was found that there was not a quorum, that vote would in fact be valid. The Chair, in response, confirmed that the vote would not then be valid.

The question to reconsider the vote on Com. P. No. 16, RD. 2, was then put by the Chair. Delegate Kaapu thereupon requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining that there were ten seconds, so ordered.

Delegate Penebacker at this time rose on a point of order and questioned the propriety of those delegates who had called for a roll-call vote, who were then leaving the floor. The Chair responded that he did not have the authority to require that the delegates remain.

Roll call then being in order, the motion to reconsider Com. P. No. 16, RD. 2, failed to carry by a vote of 15 ayes, 57 noes and 30 excused; with Delegates Hirata, Hironaka, Hokama, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Iwamoto, Izu, Kimball, Odanaka, Okamura, Penebacker, Takahashi, Tamayori, Weatherwax and Yamashita voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Anae, Barnard, Blake, Campbell, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Chong, Chung, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hale, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hoe, Hornick, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Ontai, O'Toole, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Stegmaier, Sutton, Taira, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Waihee, Wurdeman, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Andrews, Barnes, Barr, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Haunani Ching, Chu, Chun, Crozier, DiBianco, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Goodenow, Hamilton, Ishikawa, Kaapu, Kaito, Marion Lee, Liu, Peterson, Pulham, Silva, Souki, Sterling, Stone, Takitani, Uyehara and Villaverde being excused.

ADJOURNMENT

At 4:33 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Taira and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Monday, September 18, 1978.

SIXTY-FIRST DAY

Monday, September 18, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend James Kuhn of St. John the Baptist Church.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present.

The President announced that the Journal of the Sixtieth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

At this time Delegate Shon rose on a point of personal privilege and stated:

"I feel personally aggrieved by the actions of a television station last evening, specifically KITV, regarding our Convention. During the airing of 'Roots,' the news team offered some headlines and encouraged viewers to seek the details during the later newscast. One of those items dealt with the Convention.

"Mr. President, yesterday this Convention passed on Second Reading an important environmental package. It was the culmination of months of intense committee work and countless debates and discussions. Its effects could have a very powerful influence on day-to-day life in Hawaii. And yet the news team chose not to even mention the environmental package passed; after 6 hours of debate, what do you think was the teaser--'Con Con Kills Initiative.'

"While I was not pleased by yesterday's ending, I believe that to characterize that one incident as the most significant action taken yesterday is a gross distortion. I believe this effort to sell its sponsors' products was at the expense of the reputation and work of this Convention. I believe that permission to use the public airwaves is contingent upon public responsibility to educate and inform. I feel personally aggrieved because that one-line come-on chose not the most important action but the most sensational. And one-liners like that are what remain fixed in the public's mind. I believe it smacks of yellow journalism. While I do not deny the right of a TV station to distort the news to their sponsors' benefit, I do reserve the right to resent it. I bring this matter to your attention because I feel a personal grievance and because it is not an isolated case. Thank you."

Delegate Donald Ching then rose and stated:

"Mr. President, I too rise on a point of personal privilege, which I have never done before. I share the sentiments of the speaker, and I must add a postscript. It all boils down to what we, the 102 delegates, do on the floor of the Convention."

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 97) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 98 through 100; Com. P. Nos. 16, RD. 2, S. 1, and 17, RD. 2, S. 1; and Res. Nos. 29 through 32 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Hayashida and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 97 was adopted.

The Clerk announced that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 98 and Com. P. No. 16, RD. 2, S. 1, from the Committee on Style were up for decking. The President so noted and placed them on the calendar for Third Reading on Wednesday, September 20, 1978.

The Clerk then announced that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 99 and 100 were still in the printshop and action would be deferred to the end of the calendar.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTIONS

A resolution (Res. No. 29) requesting the revisor of statutes to effect necessary rearrangement, renumbering and technical changes within the Constitution as necessary after the November elections was offered by Delegate Hamilton.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 29 to the Committee on Style.

The Clerk announced that Res. Nos. 30 and 32 were still in the printshop and action would be deferred to the end of the calendar.

A resolution (Res. No. 31) amending Convention Rule 37 was offered by Delegate Kaapu.

At this time Delegate Kaapu moved, seconded by Delegate Odanaka, for the adoption of Res. No. 31, stating:

"Mr. President, I move that Convention Rule 37 be amended by adding the following: 'provided that a motion to reconsider any committee proposal may be made at any time in order to add new material to a previously considered committee proposal.'"

The Chair declared the motion was not in order, advising that resolutions had consistently been referred to the appropriate committee and would be referred in this case.

Delegate Kaapu, on a point of information, stated that he was moving to amend by verbal motion, explaining:

"I realize that the next item you were to take up was Res. No. 31 which would probably be referred, as you say. However, prior to taking that up I did wish to make a verbal motion, which I did make and was seconded. The reason, Mr. President, was so that I may, in the debate, explain why I am introducing this resolution, or this motion. And I propose, after making that explanation, to make a motion myself to table the motion."

Delegate Waihee, on a point of order, advised that the oral motion was out of order. The Convention had ruled, he explained, that amendments to rules should be done pursuant to resolution, which would then be submitted to the rules committee. The Chair voiced concurrence, adding that a debate on the rules was not in order.

Delegate Kaapu then rose on a point of information to ask whether there was actually a rule specifying that amendments to the rules must be by resolution. Delegate Waihee in response explained that it had been done as an expression of the body and upheld the ruling of the Chair. He reminded the delegates of a similar incident that they had voted on and noted that until it was overturned the Convention had expressed its desire to handle this through resolution.

Acknowledging the incident referred to, Delegate Kaapu again requested confirmation that there was no rule to prevent or automatically rule out of order a verbal motion.

Delegate Takemoto, on a point of order, referred to Rule 34, stating that the motion was out of order because it conflicted with this rule. Delegate Kaapu, the Chair responded, was quite aware of the rule requirements and had another purpose in mind.

Delegate Kaapu, again on a point of information, offered clarification concerning the purpose of his motion and resolution. The Chair responded that he would be allowed a brief summation of his reason and then it would be referred to committee. Delegate Kaapu thereupon gave the following explanation:

"Mr. President, the reason for proposing this amendment to our rules was to make possible the expression of whatever true majority there was of this body on a particular amendment. There are from time to time members who are absent or who have to, for good reason, leave the body. So while we may have a quorum at the time, we do not have all members present. And the rules permit matters to be taken up and acted upon by a simple majority of those present. Now that fact can be used to advantage by those present who find themselves in the majority.

"But the matter of reconsideration, I think, is in the parliamentary rules for a very salutary and noble reason, and that is to afford those who are sincerely desirous of giving matters previously acted upon a chance to be discussed and acted upon by the total body and by all those who may be in the majority who favor a particular measure that may have died due to their absence. I refer briefly to the action that might have been taken on either the matter of initiative or of 'none of the above.' This pertains more specifically to the matter of 'none of the above' since it is my belief that a true majority of this body did favor it, but that majority was not present at the time of reconsideration yesterday.

"For that reason I have put together an amendment to the rules which would allow matters to be reconsidered despite their having been unsuccessfully reconsidered previously, should that change only be to add new material. The reason for that was so as not to jeopardize any matter already acted upon which was in the committee proposal--such as the open primary--so that those who fear re-opening Com. P. No. 16 need not fear under this change reconsideration of that section since it was already in the committee proposal. But it would allow for the addition of initiative or 'none of the above' which this body in full assembly might do and thereby reflect a true sentiment of this Convention. And it's only for this reason that I offer this. Allowing the matter to lie on the table over 24 hours just gives us more time. I have never been one to give up on a subject where I thought there was merit for reconsideration. I very much appreciate your gesture in allowing me to explain this. So I intend to abide by that and allow this to rest on the table, to be referred to committee. If tomorrow there is a sentiment to bring this back, I will at that time move that we ask that the matter be taken out of committee and brought back for action. If there is no sentiment at that time, I certainly will allow that to be a full expression of the body. But I did want to remove the fear that if we were to take up Com. P. No. 16 we might jeopardize something of value which had already passed--namely, the open primary. Thank you."

Delegate Liu, on a point of personal privilege, expressed his agreement with some of the comments made by the previous speaker, then remarked that the speaker "could have helped in finding out what the true majority was by in fact voting for initiative" in Committee of the Whole.

At this time the President referred Res. No. 31 to the Committee on Rules.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 76 (Com. P. No. 7, RD. 2) (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 14, 1978):

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Sakima, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 76 be adopted and Com. P. No. 7, RD. 2, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, stated that there had been no style changes made in the proposal and he recommended its passage on Third Reading.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 76 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 7, RD. 2, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 85 ayes, 15 noes and 2 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Burgess, Campbell, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, de Costa, De Soto, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, O'Toole, Penebacker, Peterson, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Blean, Cabral, Haunani Ching, Crozier, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Goodenow, Hale, Hirata, Izu, Miller, Sterling and Yoshimura voting no; and Delegates Ledward and Ontai being excused.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 81 (Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, S. 1) (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 12, 1978):

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Stone, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 81 be adopted and Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Speaking for the motion, Delegate Hamilton referred to page 5 of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 81 for a summary of the changes, noting that they were solely for the purposes of style and clarity.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 81 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 8, RD. 1, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 84 ayes, 17 noes and 1 excused; with Delegates Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Blake, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kojima, Kono, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, O'Toole, Penebacker, Peterson, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Barr, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, DiBianco, Eastvold, Ellis, Goodenow, Hale, Kimball, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Miller, Sterling and Takitani voting no; and Delegate Ontai excused.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 84 (Com. P. No. 10, RD. 2, S. 1) (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 12, 1978):

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Stone, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 84 be adopted and Com. P. No. 10, RD. 2, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, indicated that the changes made concerned capitalization, consistency, proper use of terms and clarity, and he recommended passage of the committee proposal.

Delegate DiBianco, speaking for the committee proposal, stated that he would vote for the proposal because of his belief that the State was long overdue for an intermediate appellate court but that he wanted to go on record that he was very disappointed with the lack of a true judicial selection system proposed by the committee.

Delegate Takitani then made the following statement:

"It is with great sorrow and regret that I rise to speak against this committee proposal. I say sorrow and regret because of the respect that I have come to have for the committee chairman and because of the respect that I have for all the people of Hawaii. As I said during Second Reading, merit selection would be a positive move for Hawaii or any place in a representative democracy. Apparently though, this body doesn't have the foresight to implement a system of merit selection that is befitting of this State and its people.

"I don't think it is necessary at this time to go through all my reasons for this statement. But because we have come up with such a watered-down version of merit selection (if indeed we can still call it merit selection), I believe it would be wisest to wait until the people of Hawaii learn how to elect more responsible representatives to their government and hope that when that day comes, and it will come, then we can work out a merit selection system that will prove worthy of consideration by all the people of this State."

At this time Delegate Hirata offered the following statement:

"I rise to speak reluctantly against the committee report and proposal. I feel that a small step has been taken toward restoring the public's confidence in the judicial system by creating a judicial selection system for the appointment of judges. I believe that it is a concerted effort, made in good faith, to address a complex and difficult concern articulated by the public. However, I have some grave concerns.

"Historically, the judicial system has been recognized as a protector of vested interests, often striking down attempts at reform. In Hawaii, our territorial experience bears the same pattern. In fact, it has only been since the 1960s that the Hawaii courts have become protective of the rights of individuals and the people. Many in our community now feel that this is also changing and the courts are moving away from this orientation. The cry now is for judges without any biases or political background. Should not the courts be sensitive to the contemporary needs of the people of Hawaii, with their varied cultures and lifestyles, and especially with the people's close and unique relationship to their environment?

"For example, In re Ashford, 50 Haw. 314 (1968), the Hawaii supreme court ruled that the location of the high-water boundary is along the upper reaches of the wash of waves, or ma ke kai, which is usually evidenced by the edge of vegetation or by the line of debris left by the wash of waves. In 1973, and again in 1977, the court re-affirmed, in County of Hawaii v. Sotomura, 55 Haw. 176 (1973) and In re Sanborn, 58 Haw. 586 (1977), that public policy favors the extension for public use of as much of Hawaii's shoreline as reasonably possible and that land below the high-water mark is a natural resource owned by the State and held in trust for the people.

"In much the same manner, the Hawaii supreme court has ruled in Palama v. Sheehan, 50 Haw. 298 (1968), that where there is evidence that kuleana owners and their predecessors used a certain route as a means of ingress and egress through adjoining or surrounding lands and that an alternate route was rendered impassable, the kuleana owners are entitled to a right-of-way over the land, based on an ancient Hawaiian right of reasonable necessity.

"By mandating the seating of attorneys on this commission, we may be decreasing the potential for these kinds of decisions. We may, at the same time, be increasing the potential for a 'blue ribbon' panel, who might not be as sensitive to the social and cultural traditions and values which have been taken into consideration, nurtured and protected. By adopting this proposal, we are also allowing a profession that I do not feel is representative of our society or our community to have an undue influence on the selection of our judges. We will be granting them constitutional standing. They are not a governmental body; they are not elected by the public, and they cannot be held accountable to the public. Yet we will be vesting this special interest group with a guaranteed avenue to lobby for their own special interests. I believe this is a dangerous precedent to set.

"We should bear in mind that the selection of judges is of deep interest to a very substantial number of attorneys. Most legal counsel depend upon their clients for their livelihood and are understandably inclined to protect these interests, particularly in the larger firms. Would this not create a patent conflict of interest situation if these same attorneys, who as members of the commission that selected a judge, had to appear before him? Because the issues addressed by the courts have direct impact on the welfare of the people, the selection of judges plays a pivotal role in our society. No small group of individuals should be given special access to our judicial system because the rights of the people, or the community at large, must be given more importance. However, the community is a large number of unorganized individuals. While the motivation of a single profession to fight an appointment is likely to be very high, the general public's support is unlikely to generate enough public interest for the community as a whole to take a stand.

"I feel we may have been too hasty in our assessment of the issues and focused our deliberations too quickly on the question of selection rather than on the more crucial one of 'judicial merit.' If our concern was the quality of judges, we should have examined more closely the concept of judicial merit. For this reason, Mr. President, I feel that I must vote against this committee proposal."

Delegate Hale, also speaking against the proposal, pointed out that it contained two very different subjects and suggested that the committee should have come out with two different proposals so that each concept could have been voted on separately. The judicial merit system, she commented, was not a merit system at all, with the governor appointing three of the members and the chief justice, whom he appointed, appointing two. There was, she stated, a very dishonest effort to fool the people by using a term that did not mean what it said, and the system, she further stated, should not have been put in the Constitution, where it would be very difficult to change.

Delegate Stone, speaking for Com. P. No. 10, urged the delegates not to be hasty in deciding the outcome of the commission and to give them a chance. Their quality of work, he added, would determine the quality of judges.

Delegate Ikeda, speaking in favor of the proposal, pointed out that it contained several integrated propositions: (1) creation of an intermediate appellate court to meet the problem of appeals; (2) establishment of a merit selection commission to correct the situation where one person decided on judicial appointments; (3) additional authority to the supreme court in the area of judicial discipline. He then urged the delegates to support the proposal.

Delegate Sterling, on a point of parliamentary inquiry, suggested that because of the debate taking place perhaps the entire proposal should be read although the Chair had permission to waive the readings. The Chair responded that those with concerns about passage were able to express them and they would proceed on that basis if there were no objections.

Delegate Yamashita then spoke in favor of the proposal, stating:

"I too am not totally happy with the package. I think it could be weaker in some areas and stronger in others. But I think it was truly a product of compromise and that is what we are here to do. It bothers me that misleading statements have been aired recently in the media, particularly regarding this judiciary package. I want the record to reflect that our disagreements have been healthy and that certain compromises which have been met were made in a spirit of aloha. Our style of politics is unique in Hawaii, and even after a good fight both sides have enough class to be gracious and not openly hold grudges.

"Our judiciary package was difficult, in that everyone wanted the 'ideal' of removing politics completely from the merit selection process. What we have here is not, in my opinion, a 'package of crumbs,' but a foundation upon which future leaders may build. We have removed certain obstacles, and I feel that we still have a substantial proposal we can all be proud of. Major constitutional changes do not come overnight, but we have established a foothold. Perhaps in a later convention, some of our other fears will diminish about executive and legislative participation in merit selection; or on the other hand, maybe some of these fears may be confirmed. But since government and governing officers are only as good as the people who elect them, we should put our faith back in the people to elect accountable leaders, to make what we have started here continue and hopefully finish. Therefore, I ask you to consider, in keeping with our style of island politics, that we show we have compassion and understanding, that we 'idealists' accept gracious defeat and take up our battles at another time, and support, beginning with the judiciary package, by unanimous acclamation this proposal on Third Reading.

"I offer this suggestion, not to be interpreted as simply shibai but as a sincere demonstration to the public that our votes on Third Reading, after our major battles and compromises, are used objectively and not as obstacles. As a proponent of several Committee of the Whole amendments which failed, I can sincerely say that I hold no grudges, because the battles were fair. At times, our compromises were not 'capitulations' but agreements of consensus. Even during my moments of bitter defeat, I was reminded of the words of a great contemporary philosopher, Rap Replinger, who said, 'Whatevah....' So let us strive on Third Reading to show support and not cynicism. We should reflect pride in what we have accomplished as a convention and not warring caucuses. I think it's very crucial that we hang up our gloves and try to work together. Let us show support for all leaders, even those with differing opinions, that we appreciate their work, and let us vote unanimously on each Third Reading package before us. Thank you."

Delegate Crozier, speaking for the proposal, expressed agreement with the previous speaker and urged the delegates to support the committee proposal.

Delegate Wurdeman rose to speak against the proposal, "in the spirit of aloha." She was not, she stated, in favor of an expensive appellate court and she did not believe the judicial selection system was the best possible that they could offer the people.

Delegate Burgess then spoke for the proposal "after much soul-searching." The judicial selection system they had adopted, he pointed out, was not a true merit system, which was one with a nominating commission independent of the appointing authority. That, he continued, was usually accomplished by a majority of its members being practicing attorneys, because attorneys were uniformly interested in obtaining the best judges so that their clients, the general public, would get the best possible decisions. But, he added, this was a step forward and might be an improvement over the present system, and he urged the delegates to support the proposal.

Delegate McCall also spoke for the proposal, remarking that although he had some hesitation years of experience had taught him he was not always right.

Delegate Hale, on a point of personal privilege, alluded to implications that if they didn't go along and vote for the proposal they were somehow lacking in aloha spirit. She then stated:

"I don't feel I am lacking in aloha spirit, and I shall not go along. But I would like to say for the record, speaking for myself only, I have no pride in what we've accomplished in this Convention. And this is no reflection on any of my fellow delegates. I realize that all of you have worked as hard as I have and you have a perfect right to your opinions and to the way you wanted to operate in this Convention, as I had a perfect right to do so. I have agreed to no unit rule. I have not agreed that the majority of this Convention will decide how I think. I shall take my ideas to the electorate to tell them how I voted, and they can make their own conclusions as to how they will vote on the ballot.

"I would just like to say that we are discussing ideas here and proposals; we are not discussing people. I may love you all as individuals, but I do not necessarily like your ideas. My good friend over there often refers to his mother. I'd like to refer to my son. I used to tell him, when I didn't approve of what he did, 'I love you but I do not like what you do, and I do not like what you think.' And this is the way I shall vote my conscience in this election. And there is to be no reflection upon me as not having the aloha spirit. Thank you."

Delegate Sutton, speaking for the proposal, reflected that his viewpoint had changed from idealistic to realistic, and as a realist he saw good changes and input from all as well as hard work, and he urged the delegates' support.

Delegate Kimball then spoke against the committee proposal, explaining that he did not believe constitutional recognition of the district courts and establishment of an appellate court would solve some of the major judicial problems in Hawaii. Referring to Stand. Com. Rep. No. 52, he indicated some of the factors contributing to the rapidly expanding case-load, including increases in population and numbers of attorneys, easier access to the courts, expanded criminal rights, increased tendency of litigants to exercise their right of appeal, etc.

Delegate Shon, speaking in favor of the proposal, commented:

"In 1968 a good number of my friends refused to vote for Hubert Humphrey because he was not Robert Kennedy or Eugene McCarthy. But what they had forgotten was that he was not Richard Nixon."

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 84 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 10, RD. 2, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 86 ayes, 15 noes and 1 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Blake, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Marion Lee, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, Ontai, O'Toole, Penebacker, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Barr, Blean, Haunani Ching, Eastvold, Ellis, Goodenow, Hale, Hirata, Iwamoto, Kimball, Rachel Lee, Peterson, Takitani, Weatherwax and Wurdeman voting no; and Delegate Ledward being excused.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 85 (Com. P. No. 11, S. 1) (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 12, 1978):

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate De Soto, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 85 be adopted and Com. P. No. 11, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, explained that the style changes made concerned the use of semicolons, capitalizations and changes for clarity, and he recommended passage of the committee proposal.

Delegate DiBianco then rose to speak against the proposal, explaining that after many discussions he had been unable to find out how much the package was going to cost. And, he added, he could not therefore tell his constituents how much it would cost them and so, although he supported the philosophy set forth, he could not support the proposal.

At this time Delegate Burgess stated that he had a technical amendment to Com. P. No. 11 but did not know if copies had been distributed. The Chair then called for a short administrative recess.

At 2: 48 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2: 58 p.m.

The Chair at this time suggested that since Delegate Burgess' amendment had not been distributed, that he read it and the Chair could then rule on it.

The amendment, Delegate Burgess stated, was a technical one, amending Article XI by adding a new section to read: "Section 9. The Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, as amended, is hereby further amended by amending Sections 204, 212, 213 and 221 as follows"

The Chair then stated:

"Delegate Burgess, the Chair would have to rule that inasmuch as, under Rule 46(g), amendments on Third Reading must be limited to phraseology, your motion would not be in order. In any case, it would take a unanimous vote subsequently if it was to pass. I would have to rule on that basis that your motion would not be in order."

Delegate Burgess in response stated for the record that he felt the amendment was necessary "to give legal effect" to the changes to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act. He further explained that it had been suggested in style committee that he make the amendment in this way, adding that he would of course accept the ruling of the Chair.

Delegate Sutton, on a point of order, suggested that they vote unanimously to suspend the rules to include this, to which the Chair responded that it wouldn't be in order at that point as it was felt a unanimous vote would not be possible.

Delegate Barr, on a point of parliamentary inquiry, asked if there was a method by which they could respond to that point. The Chair then inquired if he wanted to comment, to which Delegate Barr responded:

"Yes, I'd like to read from Section 3 of Article XI of our Constitution which says, 'As a compact with the United States relating to the management and disposition of the Hawaiian home lands, the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, as amended, shall be adopted as a provision of the Constitution of said State' The fact we do not print it with this document does not mean it is not a part of the Constitution. So I think his point has no merit."

Delegate Hale at this time rose and stated for the record that she did not feel it was in the best interest of the Hawaiian people to put these changes in the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act as a constitutional amendment to be voted upon. They could have been more properly made, she added, by sending them to the legislature.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 85 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 11, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 88 ayes, 7 noes and 7 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Cabral, Campbell, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Liu, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, Ontai, Penebacker, Pulham, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takemoto, Takitani, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Burgess, DiBianco, Hale, Marumoto, O'Toole, Peterson and Tam voting no; and Delegates Blean, Chang, Fujimoto, Ishikawa, Kojima, Sakima and Takehara being excused.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 86 (Com. P. No. 12, RD. 1, S. 1) (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 12, 1978):

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate De Soto, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 86 be adopted and Com. P. No. 12, RD. 1, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, mentioned that there were few changes recommended on this proposal and that those few were in the interest of clarity and consistency.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 86 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 12, RD. 1, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 90 ayes, 6 noes and 6 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Cabral, Campbell, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Odanaka, Okamura, Ontai, O'Toole, Penebacker, Pulham, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takitani, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Burgess, Hale, McCall, Peterson, Takemoto and Tam voting no; and Delegates Eastvold, Fujimoto, Ishikawa, Kojima, Nozaki and Sakima being excused.

At this time Delegate Blean rose on a point of personal privilege to state for the record that he strongly supported Com. P. No. 11, S. 1, and regretted missing the vote.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 87 (Com. P. No. 13, RD. 2, S. 1) (Committee on Style--Deferred from September 12, 1978):

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate De Soto, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 87 be adopted and Com. P. No. 13, RD. 2, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, referred to page 3 of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 87 for a discussion of the style changes, which concerned consistency, capitalization and nondiscriminatory terms, and he recommended passage of the proposal.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 87 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 13, RD. 2, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 96 ayes and 6 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, Ontai, O'Toole, Penebacker, Peterson, Pulham, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; and Delegates Fujimoto, Ishikawa, Kojima, Liu, Sakima and Weatherwax being excused.

At 3:20 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 3:45 p.m.

THIRD READING

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 93, Com. P. No. 14, RD. 2, S. 1--RELATING TO TAXATION AND FINANCE:

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Lewis, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 93 be adopted and Com. P. No. 14, RD. 2, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, commented, "If you want to know how the Committee on Style handled this proposal, the answer is--very gingerly." Any changes in the portion dealing with bonds, he explained, were not only cleared with the committee chairman but he in turn cleared them with bond counsel. Other style changes, he added, were simply for clarity, consistency, etc., and he recommended passage on Third Reading.

Delegate DiBianco rose to speak against the committee proposal. He could not support the proposal, he explained, because it failed to provide a firm general fund expenditure ceiling with meaning and some teeth to it; it would be destructive to the two-party system by lowering the requirement for general obligation bond issuances from a two-thirds vote to a simple majority in the legislature; and it allowed manufacturing concerns to participate in the special purpose revenue bond program. These provisions, he concluded, were dangerous, expensive and unnecessary.

Delegate Wurdeman, on a point of inquiry, asked if special purpose revenue bonds would be separated from the rest of the financial package on the ballot. In response, Delegate Iwamoto confirmed that special purpose bonds would be a separate item and referred to Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99 documenting this.

Delegate Harris, speaking in favor of the proposal, urged the delegates to support it. The proposal, he acknowledged, could be improved although he did believe it was a good one. He then cautioned:

"I believe to vote no on this proposal and to defeat this package will ultimately mean the defeat of the open primary proposal. Since this Convention has been categorized by pragmatic politics, I think we ought to be clear that that is in fact a very real possibility. To defeat it today in no way means that it will be defeated for all time. But it will mean that it will possibly be a package used for ransom, that could be used to defeat the open primary which is coming up very shortly. So I think it would behoove us all to support this proposal, allow it to pass and keep the open primary safe. I hope all delegates can support it. Thank you."

Delegate Blake, speaking for the proposal, mentioned that he had signed the original report with reservations. But after discussing it, he stated, he fully supported it, pointing out that it was better than what they had at that time.

Delegate DiBianco, speaking against the proposal and in response to some of the concerns, expressed his feeling that this package was more harmful to the two-party system than the open primary was helpful to it. That was the reason, he added, that he was willing to take his chances on the open primary.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 93 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 14, RD. 2, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 86 ayes, 14 noes and 2 excused; with Delegates Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Burgess, Campbell, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, Dyer, Eastvold, Fernandes

Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaïke, Harris, Hashimoto, Hino, Hironaka, Hoe, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, Ontai, O'Toole, Peterson, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Blean, Haunani Ching, Chong, DiBianco, Ellis, Hale, Hayashida, Hirata, Hokama, Izu, Penebacker, Weatherwax and Wurdeman voting no; and Delegates Cabral and Funakoshi being excused.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 94, Com. P. No. 18, RD. 2, S. 1--RELATING TO THE USE OF NON-DISCRIMINATORY TERMS IN THE CONSTITUTION:

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Stone, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 94 be adopted and Com. P. No. 18, RD. 2, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, noted that the proposal simply took out the discriminatory terms in the Constitution and made a few other changes for clarity, and he recommended its passage.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 94 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 18, RD. 2, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 94 ayes, 5 noes and 3 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Campbell, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaïke, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kojima, Kono, Lacy, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, Ontai, O'Toole, Peterson, Sakima, Shinno, Shon, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Penebacker, Pulham, Sasaki, Silva and Souki voting no; and Delegates Cabral, Funakoshi and Ledward being excused.

At this time Delegate Odanaka rose on a point of information to inquire as to the status of Res. No. 12, relating to the scheduling of convention meetings on Sundays. Delegate Takemoto in response explained that they had been unable to get the signatures required to get it out of committee and on the floor. Nine members, she added, had voted in favor but there were 13 against.

At this time the Clerk announced that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99 and Res. No. 30 from the Committee on Submission and Information had been distributed for decking purposes. The Clerk further announced that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 100 and Com. P. No. 17, RD. 2, S. 1, had also been distributed for decking purposes.

Delegate Taira then rose and requested, in order to expedite convention proceedings concerning Third Reading of pending proposals, that Rule 34 be suspended, seconded by Delegate Waihee. Clarifying the motion, Delegate Waihee explained that the purpose was to allow consideration of Com. P. Nos. 15, 16 and 17 then in order to dispose of all Third Reading actions at that time.

Delegate Hale, on a point of order, questioned whether the motion was in order, to which the Chair responded that it was in terms of moving the convention business. If it was not the wish of the delegation to accept it, the Chair explained, they could vote it down, but if they supported the suspension it would be in order.

The motion to suspend Rule 34, not being debatable, was put by the Chair and, by a vote of 48 ayes and 34 noes, failed for lack of a two-thirds vote. Delegate Waihee then requested a division of the house. Delegate Peterson questioned the motion, explaining that, as he understood, after a vote had been counted it would have the effect of being a division of the house.

Delegate Taira then pointed out that the vote had been by a show of hands and that he believed a division of the house would mean a standing vote. The Chair in response reminded the delegates that the question had come up before and at that time the Chair had ruled that a vote count in effect was a division of the house.

Delegate Sutton then moved to reconsider the vote, seconded by Delegate Waihee.

At this time Delegate Chong moved for a short recess, seconded by Delegate Waihee. The motion to recess was put by the Chair and carried.

At 4: 15 p. m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 4: 23 p. m.

Delegate Odanaka, on a point of order, questioned whether the maker of the motion to reconsider had voted on the prevailing side, to which the Chair responded in the affirmative.

The question to reconsider the vote was then put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Kaapu requested a roll-call vote but the Chair, on determining less than ten seconds, ruled roll call not in order. The motion to reconsider carried by the necessary two-thirds vote.

Delegate Waihee, restating his motion, moved to suspend Rule 45, which required a 48-hour layover on Third Reading, as well as Rule 34, in order to consider Com. P. Nos. 15, 16 and 17 at that time, seconded by Delegate Silva.

Delegate Hale then rose on a point of personal privilege to state that she felt hurt and aggrieved that the Convention would even consider suspending the 48-hour rule to pass proposals on Third Reading, two of which, she added, had just been put on the table that day.

The motion to suspend the rules was then put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 69 ayes and 25 noes, meeting the two-thirds requirement.

At 4: 28 p. m. , the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 4: 38 p. m.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 96, Com. P. No. 15, RD. 2, S. 1--RELATING TO THE BILL OF RIGHTS:

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate De Soto, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 96 be adopted and Com. P. No. 15, RD. 2, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, stated that only three minor style changes had been made, for clarity and consistency and for nondiscriminatory terms, and he recommended passage.

Delegate Hale, on a point of personal privilege, stated that she would vote against the proposal because of the right to privacy provision. She had found the tenor of the Convention very much anti-free speech and free press, she explained, and she also felt the provision could be used to hamper efforts against organized crime.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 96 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 15, RD. 2, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 34 ayes, 9 noes and 9 excused; with Delegates Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Blake, Campbell, Chang, Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, O'Toole, Penebacker, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Alcon, Barr, Burgess, Hale, Peterson, Silva, Tam, Wurdeman and Yoshimura voting no; and Delegates Blean, Cabral, Calvin Ching, Laura Ching, Funakoshi, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Kojima and Ontai being excused.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 98, Com. P. No. 16, RD. 2, S. 1--RELATING TO SUFFRAGE AND ELECTIONS:

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate De Soto, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 98 be adopted and Com. P. No. 16, RD. 2, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, stated that the few style changes made were grammatical or for consistency, and he recommended its passage.

Delegate Kaapu, speaking in favor of the proposal, mentioned that it contained many fine provisions and that it reflected the will of the majority and should therefore be approved. If it were to pass and the body through a majority were to feel some aspect of it should be reconsidered, he pointed out, it was always within the powers of the Convention to make changes. He then urged the support of the delegation.

Delegate Liu then rose to state that he would vote in the affirmative by twice voting kanalua, to show his disappointment that an initiative measure was not passed and his approval of some of the worthwhile provisions in the package.

Delegate Odanaka then moved that action be deferred to the end of the calendar on Tuesday, September 19, 1978, seconded by Delegate Kaapu.

Speaking for the motion, Delegate Odanaka explained that that day they had tabled a resolution that could result in the reconsideration of provisions such as "none of the above." By passing the proposal on Third Reading at this time, she added, they would be deciding these issues without a final hearing.

Delegate Takemoto, on a point of order, questioned if the motion to defer was in order after the body had voted to reconsider and taken up the issue. The Chair responded that the motion was in order.

Delegate Hale, speaking in favor of the motion to defer, pointed out that the issue should be given a fair chance by the body.

There being no further discussion, the motion to defer action on Com. P. No. 16, RD. 2, S. 1, was put by the Chair and failed to carry.

There being no further discussion on the proposal, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 98 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 16, RD. 2, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 80 ayes, 19 noes and 3 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Campbell, Chang, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Eastvold, Ellis, Fujimoto, Fushikoshi, Hale, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hino, Hironaka, Hoe, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Lewis, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Ontai, O'Toole, Penebacker, Pulham, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takehara, Takemoto, Takitani, Tam, Uyehara, Villaverde, Weatherwax, Wurdeman, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Barnes, Calvin Ching, Haunani Ching, Fernandes Salling, Fukunaga, Goodenow, Hagino, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hirata, Hokama, Les Ihara, Izu, Okamura, Peterson, Sterling, Takahashi, Tamayori and Waihee voting no; and Delegates Cabral, Funakoshi and Kojima being excused.

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 100, Com. P. No. 17, RD. 2, S. 1--RELATING TO CONSERVATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF RESOURCES:

Delegate Hamilton moved, seconded by Delegate Chang, that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 100 be adopted and Com. P. No. 17, RD. 2, S. 1, pass Third Reading. At this time the President asked if there was any discussion on the subject matter.

Delegate Hamilton, speaking for the motion, stated that the changes recommended concerned clarity and consistency, and he recommended its passage.

Delegate Souki, speaking for the proposal, indicated that he would twice vote kanalua for this proposal, first because he believed that the water resources agency created was a legislative matter, and second because there were potential problems with respect to county water boards that could possibly result in long-term litigation. Also, with regard to the provision on agricultural land use, he added, it was the function of the legislature to enact laws rather than provide standards, as the proposal directed, and for the executive to provide standards.

Delegate Wurdeman, speaking against the proposal, requested that her written testimony be entered in the Journal.

[The following is written testimony as submitted by Delegate Wurdeman.]

"I rise to speak against the inclusion of Com. P. No. 17, RD. 2, S. 1. I feel it is incorrect to put this section in the Constitution. The words, 'No nuclear fission power plant shall be constructed or radioactive material disposed of in the State without the prior approval of a two-thirds vote in each house of the legislature,' if analyzed, imply we are sanctioning the establishment of a nuclear fission power plant provided we impose a certain constraint--that is, approval by the legislature.

"The constraint imposed is not difficult to overcome; powerful lobbyists could well mobilize the necessary two-thirds votes in both houses. After that a nuclear fission power plant becomes a fait accompli. It appears foolhardy to take such a position when we have failed to consider that 10 years from now technological changes may rule out nuclear fission power plants in favor of nuclear fusion. It is already acknowledged at this stage that nuclear fusion is superior to nuclear fission: (1) there is an inexhaustible fuel supply for a fusion reactor; (2) it will produce only minute quantities of radioactive waste and minimal environmental degradation. The likelihood of an uncontrolled explosion is also remote.

"There are speculations nuclear fusion power plants or prototype systems will be in operation by 1985. Nuclear fusion has not been mentioned on this floor. That to me is a significant omission. It causes me to wonder if the scope of our discussions and understanding of the subject matter is extremely narrow.

"For those who would label this section a necessary safeguard against private corporations who might move in and want to establish a nuclear fission power plant, I would like to point out that there are federal restrictions that corporations will have to deal with. An environmental impact statement required by both federal and state authorities and zoning restrictions are sufficient checks. It is for these reasons that I feel I have to vote against part of the proposal."

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 100 and to pass on Third Reading Com. P. No. 17, RD. 2, S. 1, was put by the Chair and carried by a vote of 89 ayes, 8 noes and 5 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Anae, Andrews, Barnard, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Campbell, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chu, Chun, Chung, Crozier, de Costa, De Soto, DiBianco, Dyer, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hamilton, Hanaike, Harris, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaapu, Kaito, Kimball, Kono, Lacy, Ledward, Marion Lee, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, McCall, Miller, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Odanaka, Okamura, Ontai, O'Toole, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takitani, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Weatherwax, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting aye; Delegates Burgess, Laura Ching, Hale, Peterson, Pulham, Takehara, Takemoto and Wurdeman voting no; and Delegates Cabral, Eastvold, Funakoshi, Kojima and Lewis being excused.

The Clerk then announced that Res. No. 32, relating to submission and information, had been printed and distributed. The President thereupon referred Res. No. 32 to the Committee on Submission and Information.

At this time Delegate Marumoto requested to briefly address the resolution, stating:

"The submission and information committee will be doing a lot of work from now until election day, disseminating proposed amendments to the public, explaining them through various forms, and they will be utilizing newsletters mailed into homes, a radio and television campaign, newspaper advertising, a newspaper supplement, an information center and hotline, meetings on the neighbor islands. They'll utilize any type of publicity opportunities, they'll ask the department of education to get into the act, and they will be having a speakers bureau. This is all well and good and I'm all for spreading the word and getting the public to understand what we have passed in this Convention.

"But on the other hand, I think we should be aware that there are 31 candidates running for elective office this fall, and I feel that the submission and information committee must not feature any of the candidates in transmitting their message. I am included in that. If they inadvertently feature the picture or voice of a committee chairman who is a candidate, it would be to the advantage of that candidate and I'm sure his opponents would be deeply disturbed. I talked to the chairman of the submission and information committee, and apparently it was her intent all along not to feature candidates because of this problem. But we see on our desks this morning two pieces of paper on the subject of the speakers bureau, encouraging delegates to become speakers to help spread the word.

"I don't think that the candidates should participate in this program and I'd like to see the Convention mandate it. I think that one candidate would be chagrined to find that he had been sent to a kindergarten class of nonvoters and his opponent to a Lions Club meeting of 50 voters. So on that note I will refer this to the submission committee, knowing that they will in their best judgment require that candidates not participate in this program. Thank you."

ADJOURNMENT

At 5:28 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Tuesday, September 19, 1978.

SIXTY-SECOND DAY

Tuesday, September 19, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable Laura M. Ching, delegate from the Sixteenth District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegate Taira who was excused and Delegates Alcon, DiBianco, Hanaike, Harris, Marion Lee, Ontai and Yoshimura who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Sixty-First Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 101) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 102 through 106; Res. Nos. 26, RD. 1, 28, RD. 1, and 33 through 35; and Exhibits A and B had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Crozier, seconded by Delegate Sutton and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 101 was adopted.

Delegate Andrews, for the Committee on Taxation and Finance, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 102) recommending the adoption of Res. No. 26, RD. 1, relating to the care and maintenance of state moneys.

On motion by Delegate Andrews, seconded by Delegate Sakima and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 102 and Res. No. 26, RD. 1, were adopted.

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 103) recommending the adoption of Res. No. 29, requesting the revisor of statutes to effect necessary rearrangement, renumbering and technical changes of sections and articles within the Constitution as may be necessary after the November elections.

On motion by Delegate Hamilton, seconded by Delegate Stone and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 103 and Res. No. 29 were adopted.

Delegate Hamilton, for the Committee on Style, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 104) recommending its adoption and that of Exhibits A and B, the Constitution of the State of Hawaii with the amendments proposed by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, with substantive, style and technical changes.

At this time the President called for discussion on the subject matter and recognized Delegate Hamilton, who spoke as follows:

"I should like to extend to the members of the committee my heartfelt thanks for all their time and energy spent throughout this session. It was a rather thankless task in some ways, I know, but I do thank you and apologize for being such a slavedriver. But it must be said that at least I operated an equal opportunity plantation and made you all equally miserable. I should like also to thank the staff, Ed Joesting, Clair Wood and Rick Kahle from LRB. They were accurate, they were fast, they were diligent, they were imaginative, they were my kind of people.

"Finally, we really were engaged--the Committee on Style--with two functions. The first was the fairly traditional one which had been true in previous conventions, and this involved style, phraseology, consistency, capitalization, punctuation and so on. We also, of course, were responsible for and had arranged the various articles in what seemed proper and logical order. The Committee on Style this time had two new functions given to it by the Convention. One was to rid the Constitution of discriminatory pronouns, adjectives and any other terms, and that has been done.

"The second was to restyle the entire Constitution, which had not been done since 1950. That too has been done. Thus the entire document is consistent in terms of punctuation, capitalization and so forth, and I would therefore recommend its adoption."

On motion by Delegate Hamilton, seconded by Delegate Stone and carried, the Convention adopted Stand. Com. Rep. No. 104 and passed on Final Reading the proposed amendments to the Constitution as set forth in Exhibits A and B.

At this time Delegate Laura Ching asked that action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 105 and Res. No. 28, RD. 1, from the Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry be deferred.

There being no objection, action on Stand. Com. Rep. No. 105 and Res. No. 28, RD. 1, requesting the state legislature to address the problem of rising health care costs and to establish legislation to reduce medical care costs in the State, was deferred until Wednesday, September 20, 1978.

Delegate Weatherwax, for the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 106) recommending the adoption of Res. No. 16, relating to death with dignity.

At this time the President called for discussion. Delegate Goodenow, speaking in support of the motion, related that the previous year the State had passed House Bill No. 258 relating to the definition of death, and that it had seemed an appropriate time for this resolution, from which she quoted, "...all persons of sound mind shall have the right to refuse medical treatment for terminal illness."

Delegate De Soto then rose and requested that the Journal reflect her no vote on the resolution, explaining that it was not within what she felt was right.

Delegate Rachel Lee, speaking in favor, recalled her own experience when her father had died, relating:

"Perhaps he was the first man I knew who was so proud and so strong of convictions. I'd like to relate this story as an indication of my father's character. My father died at the age of 92. He suffered for several years from loss of memory, precipitated by a fall, and he was disoriented at times and 95 percent deaf. He was ready for death. Prior to his death, he suffered a fractured hip in a fall from his bed, which caused further disorientation. Surgery was performed to mend his broken bone, and other life-sustaining measures were taken. In his distress and anger, in order to hasten death, he refused to eat, and as a result tubes were stuck in him and his hands tied to his bed. He even tried to remove the tubes. My father was a very angry and humiliated man, no longer proud and independent, and he was subjected to treatment which was well meant but which he didn't want. I cried because I remembered him as a proud man, his head up and chest out, and here at the end he went bitterly, denied his right.

"I thank Delegate Goodenow for this humanitarian resolution and pray that when my time comes, I may have the choice to leave this earth with dignity and pride. Thank you all."

Delegate Sterling also spoke in favor of the motion, observing that as an ordained minister he could see no conflict with the job he performed.

There being no further discussion, Delegate Weatherwax moved for the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 106 and Res. No. 16, seconded by Delegate Goodenow. The question was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTIONS

A resolution (Res. No. 33) requesting the U.S. Congress to exempt Hawaii from the multilingual requirements of Title III of the Voting Rights Act, as amended in 1975, was offered jointly by Delegates Dyer and Iwamoto.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 33 to the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections.

A resolution (Res. No. 34) expressing deepest appreciation to the Con Con pages, office of the lieutenant governor, Aloha Council of Boy Scouts of America, Girl Scout Council of the Pacific and Camp Fire - Hawaii Council for their splended service to the Constitutional Convention was offered jointly by Delegates Campbell, Dyer and Ellis.

On motion by Delegate Dyer, seconded by Delegate Barr and carried, Res. No. 34 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 35) directing the legislature to provide for the regulation and control of radioactive waste materials, including their disposal, storage and transportation, was offered by Delegate Laura Ching.

The President thereupon referred Res. No. 35 to the Committee on Environment, Agriculture, Conservation and Land.

At this time Delegate Hale moved to discharge Res. No. 11 from the Committee on Rules, seconded by Delegate Pulham. The President called for discussion, whereupon Delegate Takemoto stated that she had no objections.

Delegate Hale then moved that the matter be deferred until Wednesday, September 20, 1978 to give everyone a chance to read it. She stated that she did not want to ask anyone to vote on it if it was not in front of them.

The President noted that a motion was already on the floor to discharge Res. No. 11 from the committee and the proper procedure would be to affirm the motion to discharge the committee from further responsibility in the consideration of Res. No. 11, which in effect would bring it out of committee, for consideration by the body.

Delegate Waihee then rose and stated that he was not aware of this procedure and thought a 31-member recall procedure should be used. Delegate Hale responded that the committee had not adopted Res. No. 11, for which case that might have been appropriate.

There being no further discussion, the motion to discharge was put by the Chair and carried. The President then placed Res. No. 11 on the calendar for further consideration on Wednesday, September 20, 1978.

At this time Delegate Chung rose and commended Delegate De Soto for her chairing of the Committee on Hawaiian Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT

At 2:09 p.m., on motion by Delegate Silva, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the Convention adjourned until 1:30 p.m. Wednesday, September 20, 1978.

SIXTY-THIRD DAY

Wednesday, September 20, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 1:30 p.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend Robert Mackey of St. Louis-Chaminade Education Center.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Kaapu and Weatherwax who were excused and Delegates Chun, Eastvold, Ellis and Harris who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Sixty-Second Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

At this time Delegate Hale, on a point of inquiry, mentioned that she did not see Res. No. 11 on the agenda, noting that the Convention had voted to discharge the committee from consideration of it.

The President stated that the committee had been discharged from further consideration and he assumed it should be taken up at that time.

Res. No. 11, Delegate Hale explained, had been referred to the rules committee, which reported that they had been unable to get a quorum. The rule amendments, she further stated, had been written by the Legislative Reference Bureau at her request and after discussion with the bureau chief, who felt that better rules should be left for the 1988 convention than they had operated under.

On suggestion by the President, Delegate Hale then moved for the adoption of Res. No. 11, requesting amendment of the convention rules, seconded by Delegate Campbell.

Speaking for the motion, Delegate Hale clarified:

"One rule that we found difficult was this two-thirds rule for cutting off debate in the Committee of the Whole, and that one was changed. But we have done nothing with Rule 43, which I was informed by the parliamentarian the other day is impossible to carry out. That's the rule that 31 delegates can discharge a motion from committee 'provided that the committee has reported on the subject matter of such proposal for passage on Second Reading.' If a committee has reported on a subject matter for passage on Second Reading, it comes out in the form of a committee proposal. So the rule, as it's written, means nothing; it's not possible to do it. It is a rule that should not be there.

"The other portion of these suggested amendments--and they are technically not really a part of Res. No. 11, they are only suggested changes--has to do with how we should put out our committee reports and how we should handle resolutions.

"I would suggest that perhaps we could defer this to the end of the calendar, and the delegates could get their copies and then we could discuss it more intelligently. Or if our majority leader will give the proper signal, maybe we can vote on it right now. I'd also like to speak last."

Delegate Taira rose to speak against the motion, explaining that the rules committee had never been able to get a quorum to discuss the resolution. He further explained that at that late stage a resolution on the rules would have no effect or impact on the convention proceedings. Leaving rules for a convention 10 years later, he added, might seem like a good idea but from his own experience those rules would be unacceptable to the people meeting in 1988. He then moved that the motion be tabled, seconded by Delegate Takemoto.

The motion to table Res. No. 11 was then put by the Chair and carried.

ORDER OF THE DAY

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99, Res. No. 30--PROVIDING FOR THE SUBMISSION TO THE PEOPLE OF HAWAII OF THE AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF HAWAII OF 1978:

Delegate Iwamoto, for the Committee on Submission and Information, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99) recommending the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99 and Res. No. 30 and thereupon moved for their adoption, seconded by Delegate Waihee.

The President called for discussion and recognized Delegate Iwamoto, who stated:

"Under the Rules of the Convention, your Committee on Submission and Information is required to submit a report on the following phases of its activities: (1) the method and manner of submitting amendments to the people; (2) the method of informing the people about the proposed changes in the Constitution; (3) a report to the people outlining the results of the Convention's work.

"The Committee on Submission and Information wishes to report its action regarding these categories. For the first phase of the work, the committee recommends that the proposed ballot attached to Res. No. 30 in form and content be submitted to a vote by the electorate at the general election on November 7, 1978. The committee decided to follow the philosophy of the designers of the 1968 ballot, except that it decided to combine Parts A and B of the '68 ballot into one question which would allow the voters to register a yes or no vote on all amendments. Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99 includes a copy of the resolution proposing the submission of amendments to the people, a sample of the official ballot and an informational booklet in plain language to help the voter understand the nature of the changes proposed.

"Your Committee deliberated at length on the form of the ballot and on the specific items listed in Part B. All committee members, including ex officio members, have participated fully in the discussion, and the resultant ballot form and individual titles have undergone many changes. The titles you see on the ballot form were first drafted by the convention attorneys, screened by the respective committee chairmen, then scrutinized by committee members. I would like to extend a special mahalo to Delegate Peterson who worked diligently Sunday evening to reword the information booklet so that it would be more understandable to the average citizen. We believe that this is a most desirable visual format that will aid voters in understanding the individual ballot items. The voting instructions on the information booklet have been greatly simplified. However, should a voter mark both parts of the ballot, your Committee has requested the lieutenant governor's office to recognize the precedence of Part B over Part A, using the rule of construction that the specific takes precedence over the general.

"On the method of informing the people about the proposed constitutional changes, your Committee feels that its obligations are to utilize the most effective means of encouraging the public to learn about the amendments, to provide information fully and clearly and to inspire a widespread commitment to vote on the issues. The theme of the public information program will be 'Do Something Really Important.' The program will emphasize the effect of the amendments on the future of the individual citizen and the importance of making thoughtful and reasoned choices. Your Committee received proposals from a number of advertising and public relations firms and, on the basis of presentations and cost figures, selected the team of Steven Hirano, James Growney and Jack Kellner to prepare and implement the public information program.

"The voter information program will feature a newsletter containing general information on the Convention and its accomplishments and the need for full public participation in accepting or rejecting the amendments; a radio and television campaign augmented by newspaper advertising; a speakers bureau; an information center and hotline, and an 8-page newspaper supplement. For the final phase, that of reporting to the people the results of the Convention's work, your Committee feels that the program for public education will offer the electorate a comprehensive and coordinated program of information.

"Mr. President, it is with pleasure--and I'm sure some relief--that we of the Committee on Submission and Information submit to the Convention Res. No. 30, relating to the submission of amendments to the Constitution. My personal thanks go to the hardworking members of the committee, vice-chairpersons Barnard and Chung, and to the convention attorneys and my staff who have put in many long hours. We of the submission and information committee will continue to work on behalf of the Convention until the general election. We solicit the cooperation of all members of the Convention in this important work. We also anticipate and ask for the continued fine coverage and cooperation given by the media. Thank you."

The President noted that there were amendments to the ballot and to the informational booklet, and proposed that consideration first be given to those amendments relating to the ballot.

Delegate Iwamoto rose and moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 1, seconded by Delegate Silva, which amended the official ballot attached to Res. No. 30 by renumbering amendments numbered 30, 31 and 32, to read:

30. Code of Ethics
31. Preamble; State Boundaries and Motto
32. Limits on Adverse Possession

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Iwamoto explained that the renumbering had been recommended by the attorneys in order to place the item "Limits on Adverse Possession" closer to the article referred to in the Constitution.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Res. No. 30 by Amendment No. 1 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate Hale moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Iwamoto, which amended questions 1, 6 and 7 on the official ballot to read:

1. Twelve Member Jury; Civil Case Amount
6. Elections; Partial Public Financing[;]
7. Campaigns; Spending & Contribution Limits
- [7]8. Legislative Terms; Functions & Procedures; Salary Commission

Questions 8 through 34 on the official ballot are renumbered 9 through 35.

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Hale explained that question No. 1 referred to more than just the 12-member jury as it also included the provision changing the amount in civil cases from $100 to $1,000. This, she pointed out, was a true constitutional amendment because it changed a provision already in the Constitution. She then explained:

"On question No. 6--on the sample ballot we were given with the committee report, it looked very simple just to put a line between the first and second lines and put another 'no' there so it would give people an opportunity to vote yes or no on public financing as separate from spending and contribution limits. It seemed to me we didn't want to combine the opposition because in the committee people who were for public financing were not necessarily for spending and contribution limits. It could be by combining the two we could lose this very important part of our suggested amendments. There again on the ballot it may not be as easy, although there certainly is plenty of room for another 'no.' We might have to redo our wording.

"On No. 8--No. 7 actually, on the original ballot--we have 'Legislative Terms; Functions & Procedures.' But really the most important change that we made is in the salary commission. I don't think we are telling the people what they're voting on if we don't include the salary commission in that item. It does seem important that those three items be made clear and we let the people know what they're really voting on."

Delegate Iwamoto then rose and indicated that she was in full accord with the changes suggested and had conferred with Delegate Hale. But, she pointed out, since then she had seen the proposed ballot format and could see no way to fit in the additions and separations indicated.

Delegate Chu, on a point of inquiry, asked whether they would be voting individually on the three questions or all at one time. The questions, the Chair responded, would probably be addressed individually as some might be preferred more strongly than others. But the question of space, he added, might be overriding on the issue.

Delegate Chu then moved to divide the amendment into three separate parts and to consider each separately, seconded by Delegate Dyer.

Delegate Sakima inquired whether the decisions would be subject to availability of space, to which the Chair responded affirmatively, adding that if space was not available nothing could be done about it.

There being no further discussion, the motion to divide the question of Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair and carried. Delegate Hale then moved to adopt the first part, question No. 1, seconded by Delegate Chu. The Chair called for discussion on question No. 1.

Delegate Waihee then moved to amend the amendment as divided, that the amendment instead be recommended to the committee chairman to be implemented on a space-available basis, seconded by Delegate Silva.

Delegate Chu rose to speak against the motion. Delegate Waihee thereupon stated that he was amending question No. 1, explaining, "I would refer it rather than take solid action today--the amendment would amend the original motion to make it a suggestion the committee chairman will implement if there is space available."

Delegate Hale, speaking on the amendment to question No. 1, indicated that she had no objection to recommending it to the committee provided space was available. Space could probably be made available, she added, if they were not tied down to the way it was written and could, for example, substitute the figure "12" for the word.

Delegate Sutton, on a point of information, asked what was wrong with having another part or another ballot if that was the only way to put what they wanted on it.

Delegate Waihee then rose on a point of order to state that the sense of his amendment was to allow for the kind of flexibility the original movant had in mind.

Delegate Chong, on a point of inquiry, asked if there were limitations on whether they could use one side of the ballot, two sides, or even limitations on the number of ballots. The Chair responded that presumably more than one ballot could be used but that this could create problems relative to how it would be printed. The space they were speaking of, he added, related to what they had available on the one ballot, since two ballots would create substantially more problems to the voting public.

Delegate Chu then rose to speak against the motion to consider the space problem, pointing out that more space could be obtained by reducing the print. She further stated:

"Most of all, I would object to having this kind of consideration enter into our deliberations in making this ballot as fair as possible, allowing the people to have their voice on each individual question. I would not want the space limitation to be an argument for why we should not change what has been proposed so far by the committee."

Delegate Alcon, on a point of inquiry, indicated that there was a great deal of space at the top of the ballot and that if they could move some of the instructional material up, it would allow an additional nine spaces.

The committee was cognizant of making maximum use of the space, Delegate Iwamoto stated, pointing out that they had considered eliminating the two spaces used for the word "or" in the voting instructions. But, she added, it had been decided by the committee that it was a very important word and would be subject to the Convention's change if they so desired.

On a point of information, Delegate Hale asked if there was anybody from the lieutenant governor's office who could be referred to if they had questions. In response, Delegate Iwamoto informed the delegates that there were two representatives from the lieutenant governor's office.

Delegate Hale, on a point of information, indicated that the words "Please read instructions and information..." could be moved up under the stub to give two more lines.

Delegate Iwamoto at this time requested a recess.

Delegate Chu then requested that they defer the space question until they dealt with the substance of the ballot.

The Chair pointed out that there was already a motion on the floor. The motion to adopt question No. 1 of Amendment No. 2, subject to space availability, was then put by the Chair and carried.

At 2:22 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 2:34 p.m.

Delegate Chu rose to make a further suggestion on question No. 1, to amend the language to "Right to Twelve Member Jury." The provision, she explained, essentially defined the right to a jury trial--the right to a 12-member jury and the right to a jury when the amount in controversy was over $1,000.00.

At this time Delegate Miller moved for the adoption of the second part, question Nos. 6 and 7 of Amendment No. 2, seconded by Delegate Hale.

Delegate Dyer, speaking against the motion, stated that "Spending Limits" should be part of No. 6 rather than No. 7 as a spending limit was only possible with partial public financing.

Delegate Marumoto then moved to amend the amendment to have No. 6 read:

"Elections; Partial Public Financing and Spending Limits," seconded by Delegate Dyer.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Marumoto explained that in Buckley v. Valeo the U.S. supreme court had ruled that spending limits were constitutional only with public financing and so the two items should be placed together. She then requested that she withdraw her motion and restate it, explaining that the second part of Amendment No. 2 concerned both questions 6 and 7. There being no objection, Delegate Marumoto then moved, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching, to amend the amendment to read:

6. Elections; Partial Public Financing and Spending Limits
7. Campaigns; Contribution Limits

Speaking for this amendment, Delegate Marumoto repeated her previous argument citing the supreme court case and added that with the word "limits" in both No. 6 and 7, the public would be more apt to vote for the two provisions.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Waihee stated that they were getting into fine distinctions and it would be better just to vote against the original proposal and go back to the language proposed by the committee. The spending and contribution limits and the financing of campaigns, he added, came out of the BORSE committee as one package and putting them all on one line of the ballot better reflected the intent of the committee.

Delegate Chu, also speaking against the amendment, agreed that Nos. 6 and 7 were all one package and totally dependent on one another. There was, she added, a single dominant plan and a unity of object and plan, and they should all be on the same line of the ballot.

Delegate Chong then rose to speak for the amendment, stating that as a member of the BORSE committee she felt that the amended way reflected the committee's intent. You could not have spending limits without partial public financing, she pointed out, and contribution limits was a completely separate item. If they voted down spending limits, she added, they must vote down partial public financing.

Delegate McCall, speaking in favor of the amendment, explained that Delegate Marumoto's amendment would improve the original language of Amendment No. 2 on Nos. 6 and 7, although he would prefer the original language.

As a member of the BORSE committee, Delegate Takehara pointed out that what they had done in No. 6 was to combine two totally different concepts. If you were for contribution limits and against partial public financing, she explained, you would be torn as to how to vote on this.

Delegate Silva, on a point of information, questioned the statement that one issue worked with the other, that if you didn't have one the other couldn't work. Wouldn't it then be practical, he asked, to put it together as a total package?

Delegate Chong, in response, explained that in order to have spending limits you must have partial public financing, citing Buckley v. Valeo. They had had spending limits in Hawaii, she pointed out, but it was found unconstitutional by the supreme court.

Delegate Taira, speaking against the amendment, said he felt they should use the original language of the submission and information committee. Public financing, he pointed out, was very crucial to the issue of whether the spending for campaigns could be limited. The public, he further stated, was anxious to see that all the spending and big contributions came to a reasonable limit, which was what this package would do, with the authorization of public financing tied in with limits on campaign expenditures, also tied in with limits on campaign contributions.

On a point of inquiry, Delegate Villaverde questioned the format of the original amendment, pointing out that if the public voted against No. 6, partial public financing, and for No. 7, spending and contribution limits, they would lose both. In response, Delegate Iwamoto conceded that the partial public financing and spending limits should be classified together as there could be no spending limits without partial public financing.

Delegate Villaverde then spoke for the amendment to the amendment, stating that it did solve that problem and carried out the intent of the BORSE committee.

Delegate Campbell, speaking in favor of the amendment to the amendment, emphasized the importance of presenting the work of the committee with integrity to the electorate. It was not correct, she explained, to put spending and contribution limits together on the ballot because they had been discussed separately and intended to be separate. This was also explicitly shown, she added, in the information booklet.

Delegate Miller also voiced her support of the amendment to the amendment.

Delegate Hale then rose to speak in support of the amendment to the amendment, acknowledging that the spending limits should go with partial public financing, that being the justification for public financing. Her concern, she stated, was that the people had the chance to say what they were for, that if they were for partial public financing and spending limits but against contribution limits, that they be allowed to say this.

There being no further discussion, the question on the amendment to the amendment was put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry by a vote of 36 ayes and 36 noes with the Chair casting the deciding no vote.

At 2:55 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 3:05 p.m.

At this time Delegate Hale requested that the second part of Amendment No. 2, question Nos. 6 and 7, be withdrawn, with the concurrence of Delegate Iwamoto. There being no objection, Nos. 6 and 7 of Amendment No. 2 were withdrawn.

Delegate Hale then moved, seconded by Delegate Iwamoto, for the adoption of the third part of Amendment No. 2, which added the words "Salary Commission" to question No. 8.

Delegate Nishimoto rose to speak in favor of the motion, stating that the salary commission was an important part of the proposal package. But he did take exception, he added, to the movant's statement that the salary commission was the most important change made by the committee.

Delegate Burgess, speaking for the amendment, suggested that if approved it be subject to space limitations.

There being no further discussion, the question on the third part of Amendment No. 2 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate Waihee at this time asked if the subject of space limitation would be left to the discretion of the committee chairman, to which the Chair replied that this was his understanding.

Delegate Chu moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 3, seconded by Delegate Wurdeman, which amended question No. 10 on the ballot to read:

10. [Courts;] Intermediate Appellate Court;
District Courts

11. Judicial Selection; Discipline

Questions 11 through 34 on the official ballot are renumbered 12 through 35, and the informational booklet appropriately amended.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Chu explained that the questions on a ballot should allow the voters an opportunity to fairly express their will. Two or more distinct propositions, she advised, should not be submitted as a single question unless there was a unity of object and plan. There must, she added, be a natural relationship between the objects to be voted upon, and it must all be part of a single general scheme.

Delegate Chu then explained that question No. 10 on the ballot should be divided into two separate questions as the matter of the courts, appellate and district, was separate and distinct from the matter of judicial selection and discipline. The word "courts" by itself, she further pointed out, might not be sufficiently clear to voters and could very well be ambiguous. Judicial selection and discipline, she added, dealt with the judges of the courts and the manner of their selection, which was quite different from the structure of the court. She continued:

"The rule is not merely if an amendment is capable of separation, because I would admit that many of these items would be. But, do they refer to a single dominant plan or scheme? Do they have a natural relationship to one another? Can they stand on their own? Do they rise or fall together or can they be separate? I think the courts have said that it is a common sense test and you must apply reason to fact, again looking at whether people would be given an opportunity to fairly express their will.

"There is one case that comes to mind, in which the state of Arizona submitted one question to the voters that would have (1) made a tax commission a constitutional body, (2) changed the method of taxing public utilities and (3) changed the procedure by which copper mines would be taxed. All of those amendments fell under the heading 'Taxation.' The court in that case (Kirby v. Luhrs) had no hesitancy in striking down that particular item on the ballot, and they called it logrolling of the worst type and violative of the spirit and letter of the Constitution.

"There are three items on the ballot that relate to Article I, and five that relate to tax and finance. I feel that the judiciary article is a very important one, and this is one of the main branches of our government. There is no question that the structure of the courts should be separated from judicial merit selection."

Delegate O'Toole rose to speak in favor of the amendment, agreeing that merit selection and the appellate court were totally different concepts and should be separate issues on the ballot. By putting the two concepts together, he pointed out, the impression could be given--since merit selection was a popular issue which the public wanted, while the bar association could launch a campaign against the appellate court--that the appellate court would have a better chance if it was coupled with a more popular issue such as merit selection. He further pointed out that combining the two would cause voting problems for those who supported merit selection but were against an appellate court.

Delegate Ikeda, speaking against the amendment, pointed out:

"The judiciary proposal was always thought of as being unified and integrated, although at first blush it may seem that there are separate concepts. But the intermediate appellate court is mentioned specifically in the section dealing with judicial selection, in that the procedure for the screening of candidates for judicial positions includes judges for this newly proposed intermediate appellate court. In addition, we have constitutionalized the district courts as well as an intermediate appellate court. This was previously merely stated in statute. We had also never stated any procedure in the Constitution for the selection of district court judges. But we have now done so, in the section dealing with judicial selection.

"Secondly, when we talk about unity of object and plan, I think the foremost consideration is the actual intent of the Convention. And if you use that test, if there was ever the possibility of challenge I think it would have to go back to the committee proposal and committee report. And I think, prevalent throughout, there is a theme that the approach was that of judicial reform, and it rested on a three-cornered foundation, one of which was the structure of the judiciary, which includes the intermediate appellate and district courts; and secondly, the heart of the system, the selection process, in which we came up with a judicial selection commission; and thirdly, providing in essence a nervous system, or keeping the system pure by providing for judicial discipline. In that respect, I think the approach has been unified and I would suggest that we keep it together."

Delegate Liu, speaking in favor of the amendment, disputed the previous speaker on the integration of the courts as part of a unified judiciary package. It would, he stated, only require minor technical changes by the revisor of statutes should the voters, given a fair chance to vote on each concept separately, approve one or both or neither. Although the approach in committee may have been unified, he pointed out, the final results were two separate and distinct concepts, and the public should be given a choice to decide on them separately. Combining them, he added, would leave many people who favored one but were opposed to the other in a quandary as to how to vote.

Delegate Burgess also spoke in favor of the amendment, reiterating that the appellate court and the merit selection system were two separate concepts in the judiciary package and the voters were entitled to decide separately on each. The entire judiciary article, he pointed out, had only one line on the ballot, as compared with taxation and finance, which got six lines--even though the judiciary was one of the three major branches of government. Advocates of the appellate court, he further stated, would want an appellate court whether or not the selection commission was approved. Since these were separate and distinct and each stood on its own merit, he concluded, they should be submitted separately to the voters, as were other proposals such as the Hawaiian affairs package.

Delegate Iwamoto, speaking against the amendment, reported that the question had been considered twice in committee, the first time losing by a small vote and the second time failing by an overwhelming vote of the committee.

Speaking against the amendment, Delegate Waihee reiterated that the package was an integrated one, with each part relating to the other. For example, he stated, merit selection had a direct relationship with the judicial discipline section.

Delegate Campbell rose to speak in favor of the amendment, pointing out that there were six distinct changes being proposed for the court system, yet the courts had only one item on the ballot. The appellate court, she further pointed out, should be set out separately because it was going to involve an expenditure of money and the electorate should have a say, separate from anything else, as to whether they wanted to spend the funds required to set up the new court. To deny them this, she added, was lack of integrity insofar as the presentation on the ballot.

Delegate Marumoto then spoke in favor of the amendment, explaining that she believed the appellate court would "ride home on the coattails" of the merit selection commission.

Delegate Chu, speaking last for the amendment, acknowledged that there was a relationship between the two items, which was why they were in the same article. There could be relationships, she pointed out, between any of the various items on the ballot. But, she emphasized, one concept dealt strictly with structure and the other with selection of judges, and they were totally separate.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend the ballot by Amendment No. 3 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Chu requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining that there were ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 28 ayes, 57 noes and 17 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Barnes, Barr, Blake, Blean, Burgess, Campbell, Chu, Crozier, Dyer, Fernandes Salling, Hale, Hoe, Hornick, Kimball, Kono, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Odanaka, Ontai, O'Toole, Peterson, Sterling, Takitani, Wurdeman and Yamashita voting aye; Delegates Barnard, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chong, Chung, de Costa, Fujimoto, Fukunaga, Fushikoshi, Goodenow, Hagino, Hamilton, Hashimoto, Hayashida, Hino, Hirata, Hokama, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Kojima, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCall, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Nozaki, Okamura, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Shon, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takehara, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Villaverde, Waihee, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Anae, Andrews, Cabral, Chun, De Soto, DiBianco, Eastvold, Ellis, Funakoshi, Hanaike, Harris, Hironaka, Kaapu, Lacy, Pulham, Uyehara and Weatherwax being excused.

Delegate Teruo Ihara, on a point of inquiry, questioned whether in No. 29 on the ballot the word "Hawaiian" could be added. He had raised the question at the committee meeting, he explained, and had been advised that there was no room, but it seemed to be possible now on the proposed ballot format. Delegate Iwamoto responded that she had no objection if the chairman of the Hawaiian affairs committee concurred. If there were no objections, the Chair then advised, they would check with the committee chairman and address the matter subsequently.

Delegate Iwamoto then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 4, seconded by Delegate Barnard, which amended the informational booklet to read in part:

Item No. 6:

- requires primary elections to precede general election by 45 or more days.

Item No. 16:

- includes a transitional section which provides
 - (1) for effective date on July 1, [1980] 1981,
 - (2) for uniform policies and methods of assessing real property by agreement of a majority of the counties or, in the absence of such agreement, by general law....

Item No. 19:

- beginning with the 1980 general elections, [provides] members of the board of education [to] will be elected in a nonpartisan manner from two at-large school board districts, one district for Oahu and the second district for the neighbor islands. Each school board district will consist of several departmental school districts. [Beginning with the 1980 general election each departmental school district will be served by at least one board member.]

Item No. 20:

- provides for the promotion of Hawaiian history, culture, and language[.] and a Hawaiian education program.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Iwamoto explained that in addition to the definitions indicated, there were technical changes such as reordering the items to conform to the numbering, for punctuation and grammatical purposes, etc. She further clarified:

"Specifically, item No. 6 would add a definition requiring primary elections to precede the general by 45 or more days. Item No. 16 would substitute the year 1981 for 1980, and this was checked with the chairman of the taxation and finance committee. In item No. 19, this change is being proposed with the concurrence of the education committee chairman. And also with the chairman of the education committee, item No. 20 is being proposed. Thank you."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend the informational booklet by Amendment No. 4 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate Iwamoto then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 5, seconded by Delegate Barnard, which amended the informational booklet as follows:

Items 8, 11, 12, 17, 27 and 28 are amended by deleting:

- [provides for related changes.]

Item 8 is further amended to read:

- increases the time between the [reapportionments] changing of boundaries for voting areas from 8 to 10 years beginning in 1981.

Item 26 is amended to read:

- ...house[.] of the legislature.

Item 33 is amended to read:

- would [not let] keep persons convicted (not just accused) of subversive activities [to hold] from holding public office.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Iwamoto explained:

"These again are technical changes. In the first one, deleting the words 'provides for related changes' in several items--it was pointed out that we have a phrase in item No. 34 that covers this description for all these related items. All the changes indicated are recommended because we feel that the language conforms more to the plain language requirement."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend the informational booklet by Amendment No. 5 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

Delegate Hoe moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 6, seconded by Delegate Iwamoto, which amended the fourth point under item No. 23 in the informational booklet to read:

- gives each person the right to a clean and healthful environment [which will be] as defined by law.

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Hoe explained that it would clarify language in one of the environment provisions to more correctly reflect the proposed amendment.

Delegate Chang then moved to amend the amendment, seconded by Delegate Waihee, by changing the second point under item No. 23 to read:

- requires the State to promote the development and use of these resources [if it is] in a manner consistent with conserving these resources and promoting the self-sufficiency of the State.

Speaking for the amendment to the amendment, Delegate Chang explained that it would conform the language with the intent of the original committee proposal. To that end, he added, he had used the language in the committee proposal.

There being no further discussion, the motion to amend the amendment was put by the Chair and carried.

There being no further discussion on Amendment No. 6, the motion was put by the Chair and carried.

At this time Delegate Peterson moved, seconded by Delegate Waihee, that consideration of the remaining amendments be deferred until the next day. It was his understanding, he explained, that it had been important to adopt the subject matter pertaining to the ballot that day but that that pertaining to the informational booklet need not be in final form until the following day.

Delegate Wurdeman, on a point of inquiry, asked whether it was the intent to defer all the remaining amendments, explaining that she had one among them. Delegate Peterson, in response, amended his motion to defer only those amendments he had submitted.

There being no further discussion, the motion to defer Amendment Nos. 7 and 8 until the next day was put by the Chair and carried.

At this time Delegate Wurdeman requested confirmation from the committee chairman that the voter education program would not present the pros and cons on the issues. Delegate Iwamoto responded in the affirmative, explaining that what they would be doing was informing the voters of what had been done.

Delegate Wurdeman then asked if the voter education package was based on the 1968 presentation to the voters. Basically it was, Delegate Iwamoto answered, explaining that they had discussed the matter with the educational consultant from the 1968 convention, who recommended that they tell the voters what the amendments were and what they meant. It was their intention, she added, to carry out the same format.

Delegate Wurdeman then directed a question to Delegate Alcon, who had been a 1968 delegate, inquiring as to the procedure at that time. Delegate Alcon, in response, explained that the 1968 speakers had been sent to different organizations to explain the amendments and proposals that had been passed. And of course, he added, there would be questions and the organization's members would probe for the pros and cons of the convention's actions, so the speakers did have to explain the rationale behind the actions that had been taken.

Delegate Wurdeman then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 9, seconded by Delegate Hale, which amended by substitution Res. No. 30, the substituted resolution to read in part:

...WHEREAS, Section 2 of Article XV of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii requires the Convention to provide for the time and manner in which the proposed amendments to the Constitution shall be submitted to a vote of the electorate; and

WHEREAS, this Convention recommends that the submission of the proposed amendments shall be by ballot and shall be conducted and the results thereof determined in conformity with Section 2, Article XV of the Constitution, and that persons possessing the qualifications to vote for representatives to the State Legislature shall be entitled to vote on the ratification or rejection of said amendments; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Hawaii of 1978 that the proposed amendments to the Constitution be submitted to the people of the State of Hawaii in the form of the ballot attached hereto for ratification or rejection at the general election to be held on the 7th day of November, 1978; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that in preparation for the general election, this Convention shall prepare a comprehensive voter education program which shall include the presentation of the pros and cons of all the proposed amendments; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the ballot for such submission shall be printed and distributed by the lieutenant governor of the State of Hawaii substantially in the form hereto attached....

Speaking for her amendment, Delegate Wurdeman explained that in general her resolution changed little; only in the second "be it resolved" paragraph, it provided that the pros and cons of all issues would be presented in the voter education program. And, she noted, that would be attached to the ballot once it was presented to the voters, but prior to that the voter education program would give the pros and cons. This would, she added, at least give an appearance of fairness from this Convention.

Delegate Iwamoto rose to speak against the amendment. The federal communications system, she stated, was treating the Convention as a nonpolitical entity because there were no candidates involved and because they were only recommending changes to the Constitution. Under this premise, she continued, the Con Con could only inform the public on what the changes were. They could not take sides and therefore could not present the pros and cons, she explained, as they would then qualify as political and the stations would be obligated to allow equal time for all time they bought. And, she added, they would have to cut the education program in the broadcast media in half.

Delegate Campbell, speaking in favor of the amendment, stated:

"I cannot conceive that presenting both sides of any issue fairly and objectively and allowing the voter to make his or her decision based upon the two objectively stated positions could be regarded as political. As a matter of fact, it seems to me that the only fair and reasonable way a voter can make an objective determination on many of these complex questions--many of which he has never before fully studied or perhaps even encountered--is for him to look carefully at both sides of the question and then make a decision. Therefore, I believe the amendment does have merit and I urge my fellow delegates to support it. Mahalo."

Speaking for the amendment, Delegate Goodenow cautioned the delegates to make sure the voters were fully informed and educated on all the amendments. Voters would be faced with 116 proposals, she pointed out, and unless they had been fully informed and were familiar with all the issues, they might vote a blanket no or avoid any decisions and vote for only the popular and familiar issues. It was not political to present the pros and cons, she further stated, it was an informative and educational service that the public would need to be well informed.

Delegate Miller, speaking in favor of the amendment, stated that her primary objection was that the informational booklet inadequately explained the no vote. The voter, she pointed out, must know not only what he was voting on but what happened when he voted against it. The informational booklet, she explained, should indicate whether the Constitution already provided for each item, showing that it was either entirely new or replaced an existing provision. If it was a revision, she added, the language of the existing provision as well as the amended language should be included, and a statement explaining that with a no vote the existing section would remain in effect. Considering all the work they had done, she concluded, they must insure that voters received the greatest opportunity to know what they were voting on and the consequences of their vote. Let it be on the side of giving the public too much information, she added, rather than too little.

At this time Delegate Hale rose to inquire about the status of Res. No. 32 concerning delegates who were candidates for office participating in submission and information activities. The Chair responded that the resolution had been referred to the committee.

Delegate Hale then requested that her inquiry be directed to the committee chairman, explaining that since the chairman had indicated opposition to the amended resolution because it was political, she wanted to know if this would also apply to Res. No. 32. Delegate Iwamoto reported that the submission committee had voted to file Res. No. 32, which requested that candidates for office not be allowed to speak on behalf of the Convention at public hearings the Convention scheduled.

Delegate Sterling, speaking against the amendment, referred to the possibility of violating the federal equal time regulation. But, he added, they should all be committed to the package, which they could be proud of. Although there were things in it not to his liking, he observed, it was still the best package possible, the result of good honest debate. They must now, he noted, start contacting people and explaining the proposals so that all would be approved. They should not, he added, be knocking their product but be proud of it.

Delegate Hale then spoke for the amendment. Referring to her previous inquiry, she explained that if by presenting the pros and cons they would be considered political, then any delegate who was a candidate for office and spoke for the Con Con package could be said to be in violation of the federal regulation and the Convention might have to assure other candidates equal time.

It was the people, Delegate Hale continued, who had the final say and they as delegates were obligated to give the people a choice. They would be doing the people a disservice, she pointed out, by not letting them know the arguments, pro and con, on issues that it had taken them 2-1/2 months of great debate and study to decide. As was often said, she added, if you didn't understand an issue, don't vote it in--and that could very well be the reaction of a poorly informed or uninformed public.

It also seemed unfair, she continued, that the people would not even be getting a voter pamphlet that would give them some concept of what had been involved in making these decisions. The people, she added, should be given some education as to some of the valid arguments against the proposals.

Delegate McCall, speaking against the amendment, pointed out that there was no way they could give the public all the testimony and all the arguments that they had heard over 2-1/2 months. They could only, he added, give some of that information, some of the pros and cons, and a speaker could not help a certain amount of personal bias. It could be a very dangerous thing, he concluded, for them to try and steer the public.

Delegate Souki, speaking against the amendment, related an experience he had had in a similar situation while serving on the Maui county charter commission. They had been informed, he explained, that under the state code of ethics the pros and cons could not be included in their educational literature. They should, he added, bear this in mind while deliberating this question.

Delegate Chong then spoke in favor of the amendment, expressing concern about the negative attitude toward the Convention and suggesting that they educate the public on the pros and cons to eliminate the possibility of a blanket no vote. But methods of public education, she pointed out, could be left to the lieutenant governor's office, which perhaps could put out a series in the newspapers, rather than the expensive television media, using language right out of the committee reports on these issues. Because there were issues that the public was concerned about that were not included in the Convention's package, she then stated, there should be a better education process for the public, so that instead of voting a blanket no they would be able to decide for themselves reasonably and intelligently which amendments to vote for.

Delegate Haunani Ching rose to speak against the amendment. They had been elected, she pointed out, to do what they felt was best for the people, and if they voted for a proposal that was the proposal that would be presented to the public. All the arguments, pro and con, had been thoroughly covered in the media, she further stated, and the public had been hearing both sides of the issues for 2-1/2 months. And a voter education pamphlet, she added, would have to be the 1978 Journal of the Constitutional Convention because there was no way the pros and cons of an issue could be presented without including all of them. And that, she concluded, was ridiculous and the amendment should be voted down.

Delegate Shon, on a point of information, indicated that the amendment implied there would be a document of pros and cons, as opposed to those forms the committee report specified. He then requested that the movant confirm or explain this implication. Delegate Wurdeman responded that there was no statement of a document and that the amendment was just based on the general idea in Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99. She was interested, she explained, in just one aspect of the voter education program, the pros and cons of the issues.

Delegate Shon then spoke for the amendment, assuming that it did not ask to change the presentation but simply, to the extent possible, that pros and cons be integrated. He saw no harm in the amendment, he added, since it seemed difficult not to have pros and cons integrated in the normal sense of the discussion, as to the impacts of the different issues.

Delegate Marumoto, speaking in favor of the amendment, pointed out that if it didn't pass there would be an 8-page newspaper supplement that would perhaps have sufficient room to present both sides of the issues. It could be done concisely, she added, and thus take little space.

Speaking in favor of the amendment, Delegate Campbell referred to an information leaflet put out for the voters by the secretary of state of California, which addressed itself mainly to the propositions placed before the voters. It effectively and succinctly educated the public, she explained, by presenting the pros and cons of each issue, in the form of education, so that the public could make educated decisions on voting.

Delegate Peterson then rose to offer further clarification on this voter education booklet. Each proponent, he explained, was given a paragraph to state his reasons for supporting an issue and then those not in favor of it were given a paragraph for their reasons, as were those against. The proponents, he continued, were then given the chance to answer these arguments, and in addition the lieutenant governor's office prepared an objective summary of what the amendment would do. They seemed to be preparing the objective summary, he concluded, but they were leaving out the arguments for and against the proposals, and these the public would find beneficial.

Delegate De Soto, on a point of inquiry, asked who would determine the conflicting views on, for example, the Hawaiian homes issue, or on any of the more complex issues. Delegate Wurdeman, in response, referred to the materials they had been given at the beginning of the Convention by the Legislative Reference Bureau, explaining that these presented the pros and cons of particular issues.

Delegate Chung, speaking against the amendment, mentioned that it was a good package which the committee had worked hard to put together. They had discussed this matter with the public relations people, he explained, and they were very much against presenting the pros and cons because it would be a negative approach. To accomplish anything, he observed, you had to be positive; a negative approach only stirred up dissension and discontent. The game, he added, was about over and they should abide by whatever scores they had made and be proud of the package. He then appealed to the delegates to work together and inform the voters what was good and positive.

Also speaking against the amendment, Delegate Sterling related that it had been agreed that the speakers would be as objective and positive as possible. But those who disagreed, he pointed out, valued their right to dissent as much as did those who agreed. In presenting the pros and cons, he further argued, there would be "48, 49 people hanging on their right to dissent. Are we going to put in 48, 49 arguments against something?" There had been many different areas of dissent, he concluded, and they couldn't all be put in the booklet.

Delegate Haunani Ching then spoke against the amendment. Referring to the movant's suggestion of using the LRB material in drafting the pros and cons, she commented:

"Our Legislative Reference Bureau materials--I would not like to say they were the best that were presented to us. Some of those booklets were written by students attending the University, and for us as delegates who were elected by the people to give up this right to those students to decide how to present the arguments for what goes on the ballot, would be one of the silliest things we would have done--to leave our work to students. Thank you."

Delegate Wurdeman, speaking last for her amendment, explained that her intention in suggesting it was not to be disruptive but to offer an objective approach to the voter education program and to use the material only as one part. She further explained:

"For the same reasons that we are giving statements of fact in the booklet, I feel that information as presented is really knowledge communicated or received concerning a particular fact. I think by presenting both sides of the issues we would be doing this. Thank you."

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Res. No. 30 by substituting Amendment No. 9 was put by the Chair. At this time Delegate Wurdeman requested a roll-call vote and the Chair, on determining ten seconds, so ordered.

Roll call being in order, the motion failed to carry by a vote of 23 ayes, 60 noes and 19 excused; with Delegates Alcon, Barnes, Burgess, Cabral, Campbell, Chong, Chu, Crozier, Dyer, Goodenow, Hale, Kono, Lacy, Rachel Lee, Liu, Marumoto, Miller, Odanaka, Ontai, O'Toole, Peterson, Pulham and Wurdeman voting aye; Delegates Anae, Barnard, Blake, Chang, Calvin Ching, Donald Ching, Laura Ching, Haunani Ching, Chung, de Costa, De Soto, Fukunaga, Funakoshi, Fushikoshi, Hagino, Hamilton, Hashimoto, Hino, Hirata, Hironaka, Hoe, Hokama, Hornick, Dennis Ihara, Les Ihara, Teruo Ihara, Ikeda, Ishikawa, Iwamoto, Izu, Kaito, Kimball, Ledward, Marion Lee, Lewis, McCull, Nakamura, Nishimoto, Okamura, Penebacker, Sakima, Sasaki, Shinno, Silva, Souki, Stegmaier, Sterling, Stone, Sutton, Taira, Takahashi, Takemoto, Tam, Tamayori, Uyehara, Villaverde, Waihee, Yamashita, Yoshimura and President Paty voting no; and Delegates Andrews, Barr, Blean, Chun, DiBianco, Eastvold, Ellis, Fernandes Salling, Fujimoto, Hanaike, Harris, Hayashida, Kaapu, Kojima, Nozaki, Shon, Takehara, Takitani and Weatherwax being excused.

At this time Delegate Hale rose on a point of personal privilege to inform the body that former supreme court Justice Abe had advised her of his intention to file a suit challenging the form of the ballot. She then suggested that, if they were going to defer the final action, it should be looked into.

Delegate Waihee then moved for the adoption of the ballot as amended at that time, seconded by Delegate Sterling. The ballot material, Delegate Waihee explained, was to be submitted to the lieutenant governor's office that afternoon.

Delegate Burgess then rose and reminded the Chair that the point raised earlier by Delegate Teruo Ihara concerning item No. 29 on the ballot had been set aside but was still pending. At this time Delegate Waihee advised the Chair that he had been informed by the chairman of the Hawaiian affairs committee that she would like to keep item No. 29 on the ballot as it was.

The resolution, the Chair then explained, was in two parts--the information booklet and the ballot--and the question at that time was on the adoption of the ballot portion. He then called for further discussion and recognized Delegate Liu, who inquired as to the handling of the deferred amendments, Nos. 7 and 8. The Chair explained that since both amendments dealt with the information booklet, they would be taken up the following day and would not affect any action taken on the ballot.

Delegate Marumoto, on a point of information, brought up the matter of the concerns about the ballot form by former Justice Abe that had been referred to earlier. Delegate Hale, in response and speaking against adoption of the ballot, argued that they should look into this matter before adopting the ballot. When a former chief justice who was also a constitutional authority questioned their work, she pointed out, they should at least find out his reasons before taking action.

There being no further discussion, the question to adopt the ballot portion of Res. No. 30 as amended was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

DEFERRED MATTER

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 105, Res. No. 28, RD. 1 (Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry--Deferred from September 19, 1978):

Delegate Fushikoshi, for the Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 105) recommending the adoption of Res. No. 28, as amended in RD. 1, requesting the legislature to address the problem of rising health care costs and to establish legislation to reduce medical care costs in Hawaii. Delegate Fushikoshi then moved for its adoption, seconded by Delegate Villaverde.

The President called for discussion and recognized Delegate Fushikoshi, who rose to speak for the motion. The public health committee, he stated, had gone on record to unanimously approve Res. No. 28 as amended. He then yielded the floor to Delegate Laura Ching who had introduced the resolution.

Delegate Laura Ching, speaking for the motion, stated:

"I'm sure my fellow delegates have read the recent news articles dealing with the extraordinary rise in health care costs throughout the State. As Res. No. 28 points out, the cost of health care services has risen approximately 53 percent in the last 2 years and 149 percent in the last 7 years. I talked to state Representative Byron Baker of the house public health committee and he informed me that no legislation has been passed nor are any new bills contemplated relating to the rise in health care costs. I think such legislation is overdue. Without some type of state regulation, a day in a hospital bed in Hawaii could easily reach $2,000 a day within the next 10 years."

She then pointed out that the resolution simply requested the legislature to address this problem and determine if any measures could be taken to reduce the cost for the average citizen.

Delegate Sterling, speaking in favor of Res. No. 28, RD. 1, pointed out that question No. 13 on the ballot, special purpose revenue bonds, if ratified, could help alleviate these costs since it would allow hospitals to take advantage of a reduced rate of 6-1/2 percent.

There being no further discussion, the motion to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 105 and Res. No. 28, as amended in RD. 1, was put by the Chair and carried.

At this time Delegate Tam moved that the Bill of Rights committee be discharged from consideration of Res. No. 25, relating to the "insanity" defense, seconded by Delegate Wurdeman.

Delegate Tam, speaking for his motion, explained:

"The matter, I believe, during the deliberations of the BORSE committee, regarded a particular proposal on the abolishment of the 'insanity' defense, which was submitted by this delegate. It is my information that the majority of the committee decided that although a proposal was not called for at this time, that a resolution was proper, and a majority of the committee did decide in favor of such a resolution upon proper presentation. One was prepared and submitted on September 12, 1978.

"Unfortunately, in the press of events and the pressure of time, no committee report was prepared on this matter to conform to the action of the committee. It is my understanding that the committee at this time has adjourned sine die, and will not hereafter meet. In light of the fact that we have only one more day in this Convention--and I believe tomorrow would be reserved for other matters--I would ask that this body consider this matter today. Therefore, I'm asking that we discharge the committee from consideration so that we can take action on it on the floor. Thank you."

Delegate Chang, on a point of inquiry, questioned the motion, explaining that it proposed to overturn a previous convention decision requiring a two-thirds vote if moved without notice. The Chair responded that in this case it was just a question of discharging the committee and would therefore only require a majority.

Delegate Funakoshi, speaking for the motion, confirmed that the committee had not acted on the matter. She explained that in committee they had voted 13 to 11 for the concept, and later by a majority vote of 16 to get the resolution out of committee. That, she noted, was not even mentioned, nor was a committee report put out on Res. No. 25. And when Delegate Tam again put in the resolution, she added, no action was taken.

Delegate Chang, on a point of information, inquired if the committee report had contained a reference to individual proposals that were filed, this one in particular. Delegate Hale responded that all committee reports had been filed and that they reported out committee proposals, not delegate proposals.

On a point of parliamentary inquiry, Delegate Chang stated:

"Robert's Rules of Order states that the motion to discharge from committee is proper only before the committee has made a final report on a matter that has been put into the committee's hands. Could you determine whether a report which states that the individual proposal has been filed in committee is in effect a final report on the matter, therefore rendering a motion to discharge from committee inappropriate?"

At this time the Chair called for a short parliamentary recess.

At 4:52 p.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 4:58 p.m.

At this time Delegate Waihee moved to defer action on Res. No. 25 until the following day, recommending that the delegates bring their copies of the resolution to the floor, seconded by Delegate De Soto. There being no objection, action on Res. No. 25 was deferred until Thursday, September 21, 1978.

Delegate Takemoto then moved that the Committee on Rules be discharged from consideration of Res. Nos. 11, 20 and 21, seconded by Delegate Villaverde. Speaking to her motion, Delegate Takemoto explained that the committee had been unable to reach a decision as to the disposition of these resolutions, and in addition on the referred matter relating to roll-call voting, Convention Rule 32. The committee, she added, had been unable to dispose of these matters because three meetings had to be cancelled for lack of a quorum.

There being no further discussion, the motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from consideration of Res. Nos. 11, 20 and 21 was put by the Chair and carried.

ADJOURNMENT

At 5:00 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, the Convention adjourned until 9:00 a.m. Thursday, September 21, 1978.

SIXTY-FOURTH DAY

Thursday, September 21, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 9:00 a.m.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Honorable David D. Stegmaier, delegate from the Seventh District to the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Eastvold, Hanaïke and Harris who were absent.

The President announced that the Journal of the Sixty-Third Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORTS

Delegate Ledward, for the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 107) informing the Convention that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 108 and 109 and Res. Nos. 36 through 52 had been printed and distributed.

On motion by Delegate Ledward, seconded by Delegate Crozier and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 107 was adopted.

Delegate Weatherwax, for the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 108) recommending the adoption of Res. No. 33, requesting Congress to exempt Hawaii from the multilingual requirements of Title III of the Voting Rights Act, as amended in 1975.

The President called for discussion and recognized Delegate Dyer, who spoke for the motion as follows:

"Mr. President, I rise to speak in favor of Res. No. 33. This resolution requests Congress to exempt Hawaii from the multilingual requirements of Title III of the Voting Rights Act.

"The requirements of translation in the Voting Rights Act amendments were designed to assist the Puerto Ricans, who are American citizens but for whom English is not a first language, and would also help Americans of Mexican ancestry, who may have spent generations in the southwest but who continue to use Spanish as a first language.

"In Hawaii these requirements are both unnecessary and extremely costly. We are all minorities who use English as our language of communication. The immigrant newcomer must provide English competence in order to become a citizen and secure voting rights. While the Voting Rights Act amendments claim to be talking about 'language minorities,' the act is administered by those who think in terms of 'ethnic minorities.' The federal bureaucracy would consider that many of us at this Convention required ballots in Chinese, Japanese or Ilocano. The cost of foreign language election materials and ballots for the 1976 election was slightly more than a half million dollars--and only 191 ballots in the three languages were used. This averages $2,600 per ballot of state funds. The cost for the 1978 election will be considerably more with the constitutional amendments included. We cannot imagine that the number using the foreign language ballots will be measurably increased. We believe Hawaii qualifies for an exemption and urge your support of this resolution."

Delegate Alcon, speaking against the motion, pointed out that this State often complained that it had more immigrants coming here than any other state in the Union. The United States had passed a law, he stated, and it was therefore inherent upon the states to translate the ballot, and no state should be exempted. It was even more important, he added, because their constitutional amendments would be coming up for ratification and if a person did not understand what he was voting on it was most likely that he would vote no on all the amendments.

Delegate Tam then spoke against the resolution, echoing the concerns of the previous speaker. For many of his constituents, he noted, English was not their first language and the only way they could understand a ballot would be in their native language. And there were enough, he added, to justify some sort of aid in voting.

Delegate Chu, also speaking against the resolution, pointed out that the intent of the act was good, particularly in Hawaii where there were many cultures and many different languages spoken. It was important, she stated, that the right to vote be made meaningful for all people who were entitled to vote.

Delegate Iwamoto rose to speak in favor of the resolution. Her first reaction to the cost figures cited by the movant, she related, was one of disbelief but on checking it had been confirmed to her that the multilingual requirements of this act had cost the State $2,600 for each person benefited. She did not feel that a minority should have $2,600 per person spent on them, she commented, while the rest of the citizens have a much smaller amount spent to exercise their voting rights.

Delegate Wurdeman, speaking against the motion, pointed out that they were promoting bilingual and bicultural programs in their education system to meet a need. The parents would speak that language, she added, and "we owe them that right to vote."

Delegate Dyer mentioned that in the Philippines, with so many dialects spoken, the ballots were printed in English.

Delegate Alcon rose to speak against the resolution. Addressing the argument of excessive cost, he pointed out that it was a premise of democracy that money had to be spent in order to receive equal treatment. And referring to the statement that the minorities were costing the State more, he argued that equality was not equated to cost.

Delegate Funakoshi then explained that English-speaking Japanese--and possibly also Filipinos--had been considered in this total population proration. That, she added, was why the cost was so high per person.

Delegate Peterson, speaking for the resolution, commented that it would not keep people who spoke other languages from being considered in the election process, but merely requested that Hawaii be exempted from the requirements of the law. It was not so much an issue of reaching the problem, he explained, as a question of following a federal law which might not apply to Hawaii.

There being no further discussion, Delegate Weatherwax moved for the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 108 and Res. No. 33, seconded by Delegate de Costa. The question was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

INTRODUCTION OF RESOLUTIONS

The following resolutions were read by the Clerk and disposed of as follows:

A resolution (Res. No. 36) expressing deepest appreciation and gratitude to the Central Services Division and the Public Works Division of the Department of Accounting and General Services was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 36 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 37) expressing deepest appreciation to the members of the press, the wire services, radio stations and television stations for having provided excellent coverage of the activities of the 1978 Constitutional Convention was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 37 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 38) expressing deep appreciation and gratitude to the president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives of the state legislature was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 38 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 39) expressing deepest appreciation to the Department of the Attorney General for its splendid cooperation and service rendered to the 1978 Constitutional Convention was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 39 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 40) expressing deepest appreciation to the state Department of Transportation; Dr. Ryokichi Higashionna, Director of the Department of Transportation; Douglas Sakamoto, Deputy Director for Operations of the Department of Transportation; and William Kraft, Manager of the Honolulu International Airport, Air Transportation Facilities Division of the Department of Transportation, was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 40 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 41) expressing deepest appreciation to the entire staff of the Convention for outstanding services rendered to the 1978 Constitutional Convention was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 41 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 42) commending the League of Women Voters of Hawaii Education Fund and its sponsor organizations for the Ka Po'e Project was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 42 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 43) expressing appreciation to Hawaiian Telephone for the telephone directory of the 1978 Constitutional Convention was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 43 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 44) expressing deepest appreciation and gratitude to Kapiolani Community College and Joe Chun, Director of the Educational Media Center, was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 44 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 45) expressing deepest appreciation to the Legislative Reference Bureau was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 45 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 46) expressing deepest appreciation to the pages of the 1978 Constitutional Convention was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 46 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 47) expressing deepest appreciation to the Office of the Lieutenant Governor was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 47 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 48) expressing deepest appreciation and gratitude to the Hawaii Council of Churches, the Roman Catholic Diocese of Honolulu, the Hawaii Buddhist Council, the Hawaiian Mission of Seventh-day Adventists, the Hawaii Baptist Convention, the Oahu Association of Evangelicals, and the Honolulu Hawaii Stake, Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 48 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 49) expressing sincere appreciation to D. Hebden Porteus and Tadao Beppu for outstanding services and advice rendered to the 1978 Constitutional Convention during its pre-Convention activities was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 49 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 50) expressing deepest appreciation to the State Foundation on Culture and the Arts, Alfred Preis, Executive Director, and Ronald Yamakawa, Art Specialist, was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 50 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 51) relating to freedom of the press was offered jointly by Delegates Waihee, Weatherwax and Hino.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Funakoshi and carried, Res. No. 51 was adopted.

A resolution (Res. No. 52) expressing deep appreciation to the University of Hawaii for its cooperation and services rendered to the 1978 Constitutional Convention was offered by the President.

On motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Haunani Ching and carried, Res. No. 52 was adopted.

Delegate Teruo Ihara, on a point of personal privilege, mentioned that they had not included the General Services Administration and requested that the Journal reflect the Convention's appreciation for their cooperation. The President concurred and suggested that the Convention accord a resolution recognizing the services of the local office of the General Services Administration.

On motion by Delegate Teruo Ihara, seconded by Delegate Waihee and carried, the resolution (Res. No. 53) was adopted.

Delegate Marumoto then rose to inquire concerning the disposition of Res. No. 32, requesting that the submission and information committee not feature delegates who were candidates for office in the voter education program. To do so, she pointed out, seemed grossly unfair to nondelegate candidates for office.

Delegate Iwamoto responded that the committee had met on Tuesday and voted to file the resolution. She then referred the delegates to Stand. Com. Rep. No. 109 which included a discussion on the committee's action and some of the rationale for filing.

The President then recognized Delegate Hale, who moved to take from the table Res. No. 11 amending the convention rules, seconded by Delegate DiBianco.

Delegate Waihee rose to speak against the motion but was advised the motion was not debatable. The question to take from the table Res. No. 11, which had been tabled on Wednesday, September 20, was then put by the Chair and the motion failed to carry.

ORDER OF THE DAY DEFERRED MATTERS

Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99, Res. No. 30, RD. 1 (Committee on Submission and Information--Deferred from September 20, 1978):

The President reminded the delegates that the main motion was still on the adoption of Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99 and Res. No. 30 as amended in RD. 1, and that discussion was now in order on the informational booklet attached to the ballot. For consideration at that time, he added, were Amendment Nos. 7 and 8.

Delegate Peterson then moved for the adoption of Amendment No. 7, seconded by Delegate Lewis, which amended item Nos. 11 and 12 in the informational booklet, to read in part:

11. STATE SPENDING LIMIT; TAX REFUND.

If adopted, this amendment:

- [limits the rate of growth of the State general fund expenditures to the estimated rate of growth of the State's economy and applies the limit to the governor's budget and legislative appropriations.]
- limits State general fund spending to the estimated rate of growth of the State's economy and applies the limit to the governor's budget and legislative appropriations.
- [provides for a tax refund or tax credit to the State's taxpayers when the State's general fund balance in each of two successive fiscal years exceeds five percent of general fund revenues for each of the two years; prohibits the State from engaging in deficit spending unless the governor declares that the public health, safety or welfare is threatened.]
- gives taxpayers a refund or credit whenever the general fund balance is more than five percent of general fund revenues for two years in a row.
- prohibits deficit spending unless the governor says that the public health, safety or welfare is threatened.
- [provides that if the legislature mandates any county to undertake new programs or to increase the level of services under existing programs, the State will share in costs.]
- requires the State to share in the cost of any new programs or increased services which the legislature requires that counties provide....

12. DEBT LIMITS; EXCLUSIONS.

If adopted, this amendment:

- limits the principal and interest on State debt to a percentage of general fund revenues.
- [requires the legislature to find that the debt limit will not be exceeded in authorizing bonds.]
- keeps the legislature from approving more bonds than are allowed under the debt limit.
- [limits maturities on general obligation bonds to twenty-five years.]
- requires that each general obligation bond be repaid within twenty-five years.
- excludes certain bonds from the State and county debt limits.
- [provides for the automatic cancellation of State appropriations financed by general obligation bond funds or general funds if not encumbered or expended within three years.]
- automatically cancels appropriations financed by general obligation bonds or general funds if not under contract or spent within three years.

At this time Delegate Peterson explained that both amendments had been rewritten and the redrafts were still in the printshop and not yet available to the delegates. Delegate Lewis then rose and requested that consideration be deferred to the end of the calendar. There being no objection, action on Amendment Nos. 7 and 8 was deferred to the end of the calendar.

Res. No. 25 (Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections--Deferred from September 20, 1978):

At this time Delegate Tam moved that the Committee on Bill of Rights, Suffrage and Elections be discharged from consideration of Res. No. 25, requesting abolishment of the "insanity" defense, seconded by Delegate Silva.

There being no discussion, the motion to discharge the committee and bring Res. No. 25 to the floor was put by the Chair and failed to carry.

Delegate Tam then rose to inform the Chair that it was his understanding the BORSE committee had already approved the matter by a majority of 16 votes and that a committee report was to have been prepared and submitted with the resolution to the body. He then requested that the Convention take up the matter, adding that this was in effect the recommendation of the committee that had been duly passed.

Delegate Weatherwax rose on a point of order to correct the statement with reference to it being the committee's intent to request abolishing the insanity defense. In fact, he stated, it had been voted down. He then explained that what the committee had passed was to have been a request to the legislature for a study to review the insanity defense, adding that they had not decided on the exact language to be used. He then moved to adopt this amended Res. No. 25, requesting a review of the insanity defense by the legislature, seconded by Delegate Villaverde.

Delegate Tam, speaking for the motion, explained that he had consulted with the committee chairman and that it had been the intent to amend the resolution on the floor. But, he added, the matter was to get the resolution on the floor to begin with. There was some amended language in the resolution, he further explained, on which he would accede to the chairman, adding that they had discussed possible revisions.

Delegate Weatherwax then explained that the amendment he had in mind in his motion was a revision in the first "be it resolved" paragraph, which directed the legislature to amend Chapter 704 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes.

At this time Delegate Hale rose on a point of order to voice her objection to this procedure, explaining that it would have been proper to vote to reconsider the resolution and then when it was before them, to amend it. As it was, she added, they were making a verbal resolution, which had not been done there before.

The Chair acknowledged that the point was well taken. If it was the wish of the body, he stated, to consider the resolution, it should be taken from the committee and amended, and if the body did not wish to discharge the committee, he did not concur with the motion to adopt a resolution on the floor verbally.

Delegate Weatherwax thereupon withdrew his motion.

Delegate Wurdeman, on a point of personal privilege, suggested that the first movant decide whether he wanted it handled that way. The decision, the Chair responded, was not to be made by the movant but by the wish of the body.

At this time Delegate Tam requested a short administrative recess.

At 10:02 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 10:08 a.m.

Delegate Weatherwax moved to reconsider the vote to discharge the committee from consideration of Res. No. 25, seconded by Delegate Villaverde. The Chair, on determining that the movant had voted on the prevailing side, called for discussion on the motion.

Delegate De Soto rose to speak against the motion to reconsider, pointing out that the topic had already been thoroughly considered and discussed, and adding that they were now being asked to reconsider a vote taken just 10 minutes before. It was sad, she commented, to end the Convention on this note just to satisfy one particular point of view, and reconsideration, she felt, would be a mistake.

There being no further discussion, the motion was put by the Chair and carried.

Delegate Tam then moved to discharge the BORSE committee from consideration of Res. No. 25, seconded by Delegate Wurdeman. There being no discussion, the motion to discharge the committee was put by the Chair and carried. The BORSE committee, the Chair declared, was discharged from further consideration of Res. No. 25.

Delegate Tam then moved for the adoption of Res. No. 25 with amendments, seconded by Delegate Donald Ching. The Chair called for discussion and recognized Delegate Tam, who moved to amend Res. No. 25, seconded by Delegate Wurdeman, to read:

REQUESTING [ABOLISHMENT] REVIEW OF THE "INSANITY" DEFENSE.

WHEREAS, the "insanity" defense evolved as a means of avoiding capital punishment at a period in history when cruel and unusual capital punishment was widely accepted and used; and

WHEREAS, the "insanity" defense is presently used as a means of possible confinement in a hospital environment; and

WHEREAS, an accused who is found "not guilty by reason of insanity" can be released on condition or discharged from custody at any time into the community at large; and

WHEREAS, the penal obligations and responsibilities for one's acts are being ignored because of the "insanity" defense is complete and absolute; and

WHEREAS, the result has been a grave loss of public confidence in our judicial system; and

WHEREAS, a further result has been a significant loss of respect for the law by both the law-abiding members of the public and the perpetrators of criminal acts; and

WHEREAS, many members of the public believe that our existing law enforcement statutes are ineffectual in coping with the growing crime rate; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the Legislature of the State of Hawaii be directed to [amend] review the "insanity" defense of Chapter 704 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes [to abolish the "insanity" defense]; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the office of the Governor, the office of the Chief Justice, and the members of the Legislature of the State of Hawaii at their next regular session.

Delegate Hale rose to question the language of the fourth paragraph--"the penal obligations and responsibilities for one's acts are being ignored because of the 'insanity' defense is complete and absolute...." Delegate Tam explained that the word "penal" had been added because the committee wanted it specific that the obligations and responsibilities referred to were the ones contained with reference to the criminal justice system. Delegate Hale then suggested that the word "of" after "because" be deleted for better sense, and Delegate Tam agreed to this amendment to his amendment.

Speaking for his amendment, Delegate Tam explained that the amendments made had all been discussed with the BORSE committee chairman and they had agreed that language calling for abolishment would be too strong at that time. It was also felt, he continued, that the legislature should be left some alternatives as to investigating and dealing with the problem.

Delegate Chong then spoke in support of Res. No. 25 as amended. As a mother of two law enforcement officers, she explained, she was concerned about the hazards involved in apprehending criminals. The judicial system, she pointed out, continuously allowed criminals back on the streets, often because of this insanity plea, and she supported a legislative review to hopefully find a solution.

Delegate Weatherwax, speaking in favor of the amendment, observed that changing "abolishment" to "review" was more in line with what the committee intended. They could, he felt, reach a consensus in the body and the legislature, which had the necessary time, could then review the matter in detail as to whether some remedy could be found, perhaps statutorily rather than constitutionally.

There being no further discussion, the Chair put the question to amend Res. No. 25 by the amendments proposed by Delegate Tam and the motion carried.

Consideration of Res. No. 25 as amended then being in order, the Chair recognized Delegate DiBianco, who rose to speak against the resolution. Commenting that he was having trouble with some of the statements in the resolution, he questioned whether they should be putting their stamp of approval on statements of alleged facts, clarifying as follows:

"For example, the first statement--that 'the "insanity" defense evolved as a means of avoiding capital punishment at a period in history when cruel and unusual capital punishment was widely accepted and used.' That may have been the genesis of the insanity defense--I'm not an expert on this matter, and I don't know. But I will point out that every jurisdiction--not just in this country but the world--has some form of insanity defense and many of those jurisdictions do not have capital punishment. So to say that one is tied with the other--and since now capital punishment may be an anachronism, therefore the insanity defense is an anachronism, as seems to be the implication in this first paragraph--is incorrect. There are people who have mental disorders such that they are not criminally responsible, and I think we have to face up to that.

"On the statement, 'Whereas, the result has been a grave loss of public confidence in our judicial system; and... a significant loss of respect for the law by both the law-abiding members of the public and the perpetrators of criminal acts,' it is true that there is some dissatisfaction in the public with our criminal justice system, but I don't think that you can tie that in with the insanity defense. I think that respect for the criminal justice system would deteriorate more than it has at the present time were we to abolish the insanity defense and start throwing people in prison who have serious mental disorders. It just doesn't seem to make any sense.

"The amendment to the resolution, asking the legislature simply to review Chapter 704, sounds on the face of it harmless enough. What can be harmful about a review? But the problem with this resolution and the problem with seeking a review of this particular statute, as opposed to all the other statutes in the Hawaii Revised Statutes, is that it singles this one out as if it's somehow deficient. I will submit to you that nobody in this Constitutional Convention has heard one word uttered by any expert in the field of mental health or in the criminal justice system--that has indicated there is anything wrong with the insanity defense as it is codified in Chapter 704 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes. All we have heard is the insistence of one delegate, the movant of this resolution, that he personally would like to see that defense abolished.

"For us to single it out and request its review is going along with the attitude that somehow it is deficient when we have no facts before us, no testimony and no proof that that is in fact the case. I would urge your negative vote on this resolution. Thank you."

Delegate Tam then rose to speak for the resolution, first addressing the arguments by the previous speaker. The first "whereas" clause, that the insanity defense evolved at a period in history when cruel and unusual capital punishment was widely used, he explained, referred to the origins of the defense in England when people were hung or beheaded in public. The source of the statement that it evolved as a method of avoiding capital punishment, he further stated, was a study that came out in August 1978 for the governor of New York by a panel with very high credentials in law, medicine, psychiatry, psychology and social work.

As to the matter of "a grave loss of public confidence" in the judicial system and "a significant loss of respect for the law" by law-abiding citizens and the perpetrators of crime, he continued, the source was a series of articles in The Honolulu Advertiser by Mike Keller--in particular the Sunday edition of September 17, 1978, which had an excellent study on the public's perception of the system. Addressing the assertion that there was no basis from any authority for what had been put forth to the body, he pointed to the work of the committee, to testimony at the public hearings and to active complaints in that area from persons in the medical field. Psychiatrists such as Dr. Byron Eliashof, he stated, had publicly taken stands against the law as it was in terms of the insanity defense, as well as persons working in medically related fields who had actually observed these abuses. He then explained:

"We're not trying to say that we should take out our frustrations against people who have mental problems. That's not the thing. We have kokua for those who have mental problems. The problem is that this kokua is being abused by others who take advantage of this sympathy and hide under this consideration, and who in no way qualify for any type of consideration, after most heinous crimes. It is to this that we are addressing ourselves.

"There must be something we can do. The concept when it began might have been a humane one. This is not to say that consideration shouldn't be given where it is deserved. It's just that it has gotten to the point where the definition, the application of this section has gotten so broad that it just about hides everybody who comes into it."

Delegate Chung, speaking in favor of the resolution as amended, mentioned that he thought the legislature had appropriated funds last session for a review and study in this area. Noting that the issue was a very complex one, he explained:

"In law, there are four definitions of insanity for the purposes of criminal law: (1) the M'Naghten Rule; (2) the irresistible impulse test; (3) the Durham product test and (4) the substantial capacity test. All of these have developed over the years.

"In the M'Naghten right and wrong test--this happened in 1843 when M'Naghten claimed he was not responsible for his acts because he was insane and suffering from delusions. It was a case where he shot someone and pleaded insanity and was acquitted. There have been a lot of conflicts pro and con about this matter. In the M'Naghten Rule, at the time of the commission of the crime, (1) the person suffered a disease of the mind affecting the ability to reason, and (2) the accused understands the nature and quality of the act or understands that the act was wrong. Subsequent to this decision, another decision known as the irresistible impulse test came about in the state of Massachusetts. Broadly speaking, this irresistible impulse test permits a verdict of not guilty by reason of insanity if it is found that the defendant had a mental disease which caused a loss of self-control, even if the defendant knew what he or she was doing and knew that it was wrong. So again this is a refinement of the M'Naghten Rule. This also had a lot of pros and cons. Then we have the Durham product test, which happened in 1869 in New Hampshire, and again this Durham product test was to further refine the M'Naghten Rule. This also brought about much conflict. Then in 1965 the American Law Institute came up with what is called the substantial capacity test. And again, this is another concern of the insanity factor. Under this, there must be proof of a mental disease and proof that a defendant was substantially unable at the time to appreciate the wrongness of the act. It narrows down the Durham Rule.

"And finally, in our very complex society with the use of drugs and alcohol, you have what they call a concern about drug addiction and criminal responsibility, which in 1962 the U.S. supreme court made such a ruling on. And finally you have, recently, the partial insanity or diminished capacity factor as a defense. So here you have a whole series of very complex precedents. Therefore, in Hawaii, with the rising population, with increases in crime, it is important that we review this very vital and critical factor of the insanity plea, and hopefully the State may come up with a refinement on the law that will more or less guarantee the public safety, particularly in crimes against persons in Hawaii.

"Therefore, I feel it is an important subject that we have to address ourselves to for continuous and further study. I would like to congratulate the maker of this resolution. Thank you."

Delegate Campbell, speaking in favor of the resolution, stated:

"Mr. President, I think the record needs to be set straight. First of all, it is not correct that there is only one voice in this Convention speaking out in favor of this resolution. In the bill of rights committee, there was a very deep, abiding and widespread concern about this matter, and I think the concern lies strongly in the area of the administration of the justice system in our courts with respect to the insanity plea. There were concerns expressed about the fact that people who have used the insanity plea and have been released under the care of psychiatrists have not followed up with the required psychotherapy visits, they have not gone to the doctor, and they have gone out into the streets and been set loose upon the public.

"I think all of us are very much concerned about the safety of our children and our citizens, and it seems to me that those of us in the committee who had expressed this very deep concern moved back from the position of actually having a proposal submitted by the committee because of some of the complicated problems that arose in effectuating this. But we did so because we had decided that a resolution would be submitted to the legislature so that they could look into the matter and hopefully make some positive resolution. For this reason, I rise and speak firmly in favor of this resolution, and I urge my fellow delegates to do so too. Mahalo."

Delegate Kaapu spoke in favor of the resolution, remarking that the convention floor might not be the place to debate its merits or demerits or the suggestions discussed earlier. The matter, he indicated, would be taken up by the legislature with or without their resolution because it was an important issue. He then suggested that if they felt there was any use in letting the legislature know how strongly they felt, that they vote on the matter and send it off.

Delegate Chu, speaking for the resolution as amended, expressed some concern in that its supporters, she felt, had sensationalized the issue out of proportion. There was no question, she acknowledged, that it was a problem, but not so much with the defense itself as with the administration of it. She then explained:

"The fact is that crime is often committed by individuals with very serious mental problems. There's no question of that. However, it's not necessarily a legal problem with the defense itself. Regarding this, I think the public is misinformed because they see it as an acquittal. It is called an acquittal, but that's only on legal grounds; it does not mean that the person is released. Prosecutors often argue to the jury--which is not really legal--that the person will be let out and released. That's not true. They may be acquitted--they may not be legally responsible--but they are not released.

"There's often a great deal of difficulty in working with the medical profession in the court system. The medical profession--doctors and psychiatrists--generally do not like to go to court. They do not like to be questioned, cross-examined and refuted. So there will always be members of the medical profession who will criticize the legal system. That's not to say that the legal system should not be improved, or there should not be some way of attempting to work with them. I think right now there is a committee of doctors, mental health professionals and average citizens who have a great deal of contact in this area, discussing viable solutions to this problem. So things are being done. However, I see no harm in submitting this resolution to the legislature, but I would like to state for the record my reservations about this."

Delegate DiBianco then rose to point out that the entire insanity defense had been completely reviewed by the State only 36 months before, in 1975. When the Hawaii Penal Code was codified and enacted into law, he explained, the legislature had to do a complete review of the insanity defense enacted into law, which was substantially the American Law Institute test mentioned earlier. It seemed odd, he then remarked, and would seem odd to the legislature, that with all the statutes that needed to be reviewed the Convention would pick one they'd just finished reviewing.

Delegate Silva, speaking in favor of the resolution, pointed out that it was basically only a resolution and attempted only to get the legislators to look into a matter of great concern to many citizens. There's a free government, he added, but there were people using this freedom to hurt others.

Delegate Funakoshi, voicing her support for the resolution, mentioned that the committee had felt that a resolution rather than a constitutional provision was the way to go. She then inquired as to the study done in 1975, if there was any report on it and its findings. Delegate DiBianco in response explained:

"When the entire Hawaii Penal Code was revised in 1975 and enacted into law--I think effective January 1, 1976--it was essentially the model penal code which had been created by the commissioners of uniform laws, which was a group of law professors who draft up uniform laws for submission to legislatures for their consideration. And they accepted the model penal code's version, which on the question of the insanity defense had incorporated the American Law Institute's draft, as was described by Delegate Chung.

"The entire Hawaii Penal Code has, on a section-by-section basis, a discussion of each one of the sections, along with footnotes, and it describes why they did what they did. It's all available, it's a matter of public record and it's in our Hawaii Revised Statutes. Anybody can read it and find out why they accepted one particular insanity defense over any other. I would point out at this time that all the insanity defenses, except the one by the American Law Institute, are insanity defenses which were created by courts. The Durham test, the M'Naghten test, the diminished capacity test were all created by the courts. So to mandate the legislature to review the insanity defense is really not even half of the loaf, because the courts are going to go ahead and, in my opinion, do whatever they feel is necessary regarding the insanity defense anyway. It's a court-made law, not a legislative law, to a great extent."

Delegate Tam, speaking last for Res. No. 25 as amended, pointed out that the references to the American Law Institute and the model penal code by the previous speaker were not quite correct in that only part of the American Law Institute's model penal code was enacted by the legislature in 1975. Of the omitted parts, he added, some were in reference to this particular chapter and to this particular defense.

There being no further discussion, the question to adopt Res. No. 25, as amended in RD. 1, was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At this time the President announced that discussion was in order on the informational booklet portion of Res. No. 30 as amended, and for consideration at that time was the motion to adopt Amendment No. 7, which had been deferred from earlier in the calendar, copies now having been printed and distributed.

Delegate Peterson, speaking for his amendment which amended item Nos. 11 and 12 in the information booklet, pointed out that the amended language made it easier to understand. Credit for the material in the booklet, he further advised, should go to the convention attorneys, LRB staff and committee chairperson as well as himself, as all had participated in the preparation. He then urged the delegates to vote in favor of Amendment No. 7, which combined his two earlier amendments No. 7 and 8.

There being no further discussion, the question to amend Res. No. 30, RD. 1, by Amendment No. 7 was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At this time Delegate Iwamoto announced that two communications (Dept. Com. No. 3) had been received pertaining to Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99 and Res. No. 30, and she requested that they be entered in the Journal. One, she explained, was from the lieutenant governor's office clarifying the committee report on the number of ballot cards that could be used, and the other an opinion from the attorney general on the committee's recommendation as to how the votes would be tallied. The following communications were then read:

Office of the Lieutenant Governor
Honolulu, Hawaii

September 20, 1978

Honorable Karen H. Iwamoto, Chairperson
Committee on Submission and Information
1978 Constitutional Convention of Hawaii

Dear Delegate Iwamoto:

For your information, I have enclosed a copy of an Attorney General's Opinion which I had received regarding the legality of ignoring a vote in Part A of the ballot containing the proposed amendments to the State Constitution should a voter vote in both Parts A and B. In light of this opinion, your committee and the convention may wish to reconsider the matter of the vote tabulation.

With warmest Aloha, I remain,

Sincerely yours,

Morris T. Takushi
Director of Elections

State of Hawaii
Department of the Attorney General

September 20, 1978

Mr. Morris T. Takushi
Director of Elections
Office of the Lieutenant Governor
Hawaii State Capitol

Dear Mr. Takushi:

This is in response to your letter dated September 18, 1978 requesting our opinion on the following questions:

"(1) Should we consider the ballot to be invalidated if a voter votes 'Yes' in Part A and 'No' for some or all of the items in Part B?"

We answer in the affirmative.

"(2) Should we consider the ballot to be invalidated if a voter votes 'No' in Part A and 'No' for some or all of the items in Part B?"

We answer in the affirmative with one exception to be discussed below.

"(3) Should we recognize only the votes in Part B, if the voter voted in both Parts A and B?"

We answer in the negative.

The foregoing questions arose as a result of a submission to the Lieutenant Governor's Office of a proposed ballot by the Submission and Information Committee of the 1978 Constitutional Convention, a copy of which is attached to your request.

Upon examination of the proposed ballot, it is clear that the choice of voting in Part A and Part B is mutually exclusive.

Relevant authorities indicate that where there is an inconsistency in the marking of the ballot, the voter's intent is not clearly manifested and the ballot must be discarded or the vote invalidated. (State v. Barber, 198 So. 49 (1940); Murray v. Waite, 94 A. 943 (1915).)

The difficulty in this case lies in the equivocal interpretation of an inconsistent vote in Parts A and B. It is our position that in the event a voter votes in Part A and Part B, his intention cannot be determined and his ballot must be invalidated.

In only one instance, where the voter marks "No" to Part A, then proceeds to mark "No" to all items in Part B will his intention be clear and unambiguous. In all other cases where both parts are marked, the ballots should be considered to be "spoiled" and invalid.

Please note that this opinion is limited to the questions posed by you in your letter of September 18, 1978. We express no opinion on the form of the ballot, the grouping and wording of proposals, or any other matter.

Very truly yours,

Subject: 1978 Con-Con Ballot Format

In prior discussions on ballot format, the use of more than one ballot card to accommodate a two or three part ballot was discounted because tabulation of votes would not be technically possible. The computer program currently in use is not capable of relating one ballot card to another card. Thus, once the voter drops his ballot into the ballot box there would be no way of determining whether or not he voted in more than one part. However, it is possible to utilize two or more ballot cards in the case where each ballot card submitted to the voter contains a blanket "YES" and a blanket "NO" vote covering the proposed amendments itemized on that ballot card. Utilization of this method of submission raises the question of whether a two or three card ballot would confuse voters.

Delegate Iwamoto then rose to inform the delegates that the first amendment passed contained a typographical error, that item No. 24 should have read "Land Management; Agricultural Land."

There being no further discussion, the question to adopt Stand. Com. Rep. No. 99 and Res. No. 30, RD. 1 as amended, was put by the Chair and the motion carried.

At 10:50 a.m., the Convention stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The Convention reconvened at 11:02 a.m.

Delegate Iwamoto, for the Committee on Submission and Information, presented a report (Stand. Com. Rep. No. 109) informing the Convention of the disposition of Res. No. 32 and the rationale for it.

On motion by Delegate Iwamoto, seconded by Delegate Blean and carried, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 109 was adopted.

At this time the President addressed the Convention as follows:

"If the delegates would allow the Chair the opportunity to make a few remarks, then we could open the floor to those who care to make comments. So at this time I'd just like to go back for a few minutes and recount a few things, because at this point in time it seems a long time since we first got together in the Kaimuki library. I can remember that day not all that well, but it seemed almost like a harbinger of things to come. We had a hard time even deciding when next we were going to meet. In spite of the fact that the good delegate from the First District had a firm hand, I can remember some guy in particular with a mustache--and I finally caught his name, Waihee--was always jumping up and down, and I marked him then as a guy to watch. I figured he was going to be a real pain in the neck. I wasn't all that wrong.

"Nothing was very easy in our organization, and of course no one wishes more than I that there was less controversy and more concurrence at the time. But thinking back on it, in spite of the fact that we had any number of heated floor debates and procedural wrangles, and in spite of our strong personal differences on the issues, we rarely carried this off the floor. I can remember being quite amazed at the social gatherings in those early times, when it just looked like a private party of good friends. I think this has been carried on. Then when the pace did pick up and we got through our informational meetings and the committee meetings began to get long and late and everybody was shuffling back and forth--why, you all hung in there. It was tough going, there's no question about it. I certainly want to commend you for that kind of effort, and I particularly want to commend the committee chairmen who presided over committees that were larger than the entire state senate and somehow ran their informational sessions, reviewed the proposals, heard the testimony and came up with a package which we all took a whack at when it got to the floor. Trying to do this in the time available was more than anybody should be asked; 64 days was an unreasonably short time to address the job we had. The fact that we have corrected this for the next convention, whenever it may be, certainly is worth noting. But nonetheless, it was indeed a tough, tight time. I think that no convention ever went under a more pressure-packed, deadline-oriented schedule than this one did here.

"I know a number of you are more disappointed in what we did not do than pleased with what we did do. I do want to say that when the vote was counted and your amendment lost, you took it well and came back and argued the next issue that you were concerned with. I realize that some of these things die hard for a good number of you; you've got my aloha and respect for the way you handled yourselves. You know, in the last convention they talked about the debates but they simply did not have anything like the debating talent that we have here in this Convention. I'll put this group up against anybody. They talked about debates on Second Reading--those were just form letters that they went through. So when we say we let it all hang out, I think all of us concur that we did. I know that those who chaired the Committee of the Whole will remember those discussions very well, and they certainly more than earned their parliamentary spurs. A particularly big mahalo from me for doing such a good job.

"It's kind of behind us now. We somehow have taken 850-odd proposals and condensed them into a package that we're going to put to the voters on November 7. We recognize this is a compromise package. Nobody is completely happy with it. Some may even be disappointed. But nonetheless, I would hope that within that package there is sufficient material, sufficient concern for you to go out and support it, because it really represents a tremendous effort on the part of all of us. No question, if we could turn the clock back to July 5 we would do a number of things differently. But I have no reservations myself in taking this product of our efforts and commending it to the voters of this State. I'm going to start speaking on the circuit soon, and I know that most of you will be invited to speak to any number of groups, and some of you are going to express reservations about some parts of this package. That certainly is your privilege and right. But I would hope that you would find the opportunity to take a positive note, because I do not feel the people of the State have fully understood or totally comprehended the genuine effort and concern that went into developing what we developed out of this Convention.

"So much of what was done here has been overshadowed by the media focusing on procedural wrangles and, coupled with the issue of initiative--really much of the solid accomplishment has become a little lost in the fog of controversy. We want to break out of that and try to call attention to the things that were done which we will be able to recommend to the voters this fall.

"I know it's a time to say thank you to a number of people here--and this body passed resolutions this morning--but I certainly want to commend our able support staff. I had a hard time talking George Amimoto into this job--and at that time he knew he was going to be in for a long, hard summer but he didn't know how long or how hard it was going to be. His whole gang here--Colin and sergeant at arms Gaylord, Walter and all that gang--kept everything in order. Our legal staff--Jim Funaki, Sherry, Neal, Carol and Fran--all were available at our beck and call, trying in every way they could to keep us on the right legal track. We challenged them time and again to be sure we were where we thought we were going to be with the legal angle. And then Rick Kahle and his great staff--how many of us would have been able to turn in the resolutions and proposals that we did without Rick and his gang there giving us the information and putting it together so we could introduce it. I wouldn't want to close without recognizing our two parliamentarians, who had absolutely nothing to do during this whole session that I can remember--Benedict and 'Opu,' a big mahalo to you. Certainly all of our personal staff and committee people, who kept our papers going and our schedules on track and coffee coming and without whose help there is absolutely no way--with the time pressures and constraints we had--that we could have gotten this job done.

"I want to thank the officers of this Convention for giving me a big hand in keeping us on schedule and for passing the word and keeping me posted on problems as they developed--they made a real big difference. There's no question that tomorrow is going to be a different day for all of us. It's going to be real different for me--nobody is going to run around calling me 'Mr. President' anymore. As a matter of fact, there'll probably be someone out on the North Shore who'll say, 'Hey, dude, you stay come back? I hear them buggas give you hard time, eh?' But I'll get over it. Lee Gomes and Sandy and June Watanabe and the TV crews will be searching down other quarries, and no one would really be concerned again if I showed up at the Fort Delicatessen.

"What I'll miss the most is all of you. Some of you have made my moments up here more than a little uncomfortable, but that was the way the game was played and I never took it at any time on a personal basis. I do feel that this Convention is unique in the fact that we do have certainly more of an 'aina. I definitely feel that we have an 'ohana feeling in this body that I don't think I have ever seen transcend any other group like it has this group in this Convention. There's no way, I think, that we could have gone through the time pressures and the effort, the deadlines, the public opinion, and come through without a real strong bond between us, one that carries admiration and respect and aloha.

"In closing, let me say that I will be watching with interest our younger delegates as they pursue their careers, political and otherwise. I know when the '79 legislature convenes there's going to be a Con Con alumni over there. I don't know how large it's going to be, but I suspect it will get larger as the years go by. I certainly want to wish all the candidates luck and success in their forthcoming elections.

"So I'll be back behind the plow at Waialua, and I would appreciate any opportunity that you have to come by that way if you want to get out from the pressure-packed opportunities that face you around here--we offer you the North Shore and volleyball and whatever that you come out that way. I just want you to know that I have a very deep feeling of aloha and admiration for you. Each of you in your own way put an indelible stamp on this Convention. I just wish I had the time to go around and talk with each of you about the feeling and some of the funny things, some of the tough things, that each of you have done. Standing up here over the months--you just come to feel that all of you are more than just delegates. Sincerely, you're just people whose friendship I would treasure and would hope that we can continue. That about ends it, except to say that regardless of the outcome no one can say that this Convention did not give every effort to address itself to the issue of the State Constitution. I'm sure and I sincerely hope that when the voters come out on November 7, they will endorse the product of our efforts. With that I say mahalo."

Delegate De Soto then rose and made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I rise on a point of personal privilege. On behalf of your Committee on Hawaiian Affairs I would like to offer mohai aloha to an individual whom we have grown to love and respect. This person was born and raised here in Hawaii, a child of the 'aina. An individual who never boasted of his contributions to Hawaii. Never spoke about the historical role his kupuna played in Hawaii's past. Never talked about the fact that it was his kupuna along with others who supported her majesty, Queen Liliuokalani, during the dark days of her illegal overthrow. This man has served Hawaii and the nation during World War II far beyond the call of duty, this man who is a recipient of the Bronze Star and the Purple Heart and was wounded in battle as a major in the 101st Airborne Division. His community service, his government service, his business and professional service have contributed to the business of making and keeping Hawaii well.

"I met Bill Paty at this Convention's first caucus. All my preconceived anxieties about his luna image were laid to rest as I began to really know and appreciate this gentle person. His leadership in this Convention has been challenged from time to time by some who may be suspicious of any and all who do not share the same mana'o. But this only reflected the true test of patience and fortitude. I need to communicate to all that this man, Bill Paty, never asked for anything for himself during this entire Convention--not ever. His genuine efforts to bring this Convention together for the common good, his sensitivity and love for all people shall remind me always of what real dedication and strength is all about. His willingness to put aside his own desires for others will always give me, as well as others, insight to real na'au.

"On behalf of the committee, I wish to extend to you, sir, our deep and humble gratitude and to say further mahalo nui loa kakou, Mr. President. Please accept this small token of gratitude."

Delegate De Soto thereupon presented President Paty with a lei.

Delegate Pulham then commented as follows:

"Mr. President, I'm not going to try to follow that, as I have declined several other times during this Convention. I'm going to be very brief. I made the opening remarks when we began this Convention, and I'm not sure that everyone was listening. But I think that enough people were that I'm going to inwardly be thankful I had that opportunity. I'm certainly thankful that I had the opportunity to know and work with you all. It's been stated that we did not all get all that we wanted. We knew that when we came here.

"From the very beginning I remember those meetings that Bill was talking about, because I come from further back country than he does and was not prepared at all for what was going on here. I thought then that my position was one of working with this Convention to try to bring it all together and get the best product possible. I have at times supported Mr. Paty. I have not been disappointed. Rather than give you a speech today, I have--at my expense, incidentally--run it off and distributed it to you. I would simply ask the Clerk at this time to enter that copy into the Journal, and make this a very short but very fond aloha to all of you."

[The following is written testimony as submitted by Delegate Pulham.]

"My fellow delegates, now that we have essentially completed our Convention, I would beg leave to have a few short words with you. In my opening remarks, I attempted to show the need for each of us to rise above our self-interests in a quest for better government for all our people. One specific quote was from Charles Evans Hughes: 'While democracy must have its organization and controls, its vital breath is individual liberty.'

"In our personal reflections, we need to ask ourselves to what extent we have been successful in fulfilling the public trust which was given us. To me, the end product of our deliberations does contain some worthwhile, possibly even significant recommendations. But in all honesty, I wonder if it was the very best we could do. The sad part for me is that although I implored you all to do so, this group was unable to establish that public credibility so necessary to public confidence and peaceful acceptance of the work of this Convention.

"It is my belief the stifling of individual liberty has contributed significantly to this Convention's lack of progress. What really saddens me is the conviction by many young delegates that this is a prerequisite for progress in a democracy. This is the very attitude which has led to the demise of public confidence at all levels of our political system. The most persistent theme has been, we must stick together and vote as a unit if we want to get something done. I am going to submit that this is really the direct opposite of democracy in action. Democracy is really the coming together of people or their representatives, the exchange and communication of facts and ideas, a decision or vote by that group based on individual liberty and conscience with the preconceived understanding that everyone will then abide by the will of the majority.

"When any group or party becomes more important to politicians than the good of the people, when it becomes necessary to trade a vote for future consideration, regardless of motive, right then democracy ends and public confidence in the system begins the slide that ends in revolution. We must face the facts; we were elected as a nonpartisan group to do a specific task for our people. We had the opportunity to strike a significant blow for democracy. We have failed because we used the same tired party-prone tactics employed by incumbent politicians.

"I have a message for our young delegates and all delegates young enough to listen. Don't you know that in every group, given a fair and equal chance to study, listen and vote on any issue, a natural majority will emerge? This is the majority based upon individual liberty and conscience which has the support and confidence of the people. Personal integrity is what it's all about. God help us, our State and our nation if we fail to listen."

At this time Delegate DiBianco rose and announced:

"Mr. President, I have a presentation to make to the majority members of this Convention on behalf of the minority. I'll be assisted by Delegate Chu. This is in the form of a scroll. I would ask you to accept this and see that it is given to the appropriate person.

RELATING TO CRUMBS.

WHEREAS, it is said that half a loaf is better than none;
and

WHEREAS, the majority in this Convention ate half the loaf and decided it was so good they ate the other half; and

WHEREAS, the minority is endowed with a true Hawaiian sense of generosity and wishes to share all it has; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED that the independent faction of this Convention do hereby bestow upon the majority of this Convention through President William Paty one of the crumbs which we so fortunately received this summer, with our fondest hope that the future of the majority will be nothing but crumbs."

The President was then presented with gifts on behalf of the minority by Delegates DiBianco and Chu. The President thanked the delegates and remarked, "The Chair rather suspects what's in it. One luscious yellow crumb."

Delegate Villaverde then rose and stated:

"Mr. President, I rise to a last point of personal privilege. I also would like to have a piece of that majority crumb. I have in the last few days attempted to think and present possibly an extemporaneous type of speech, but I couldn't do that. There were too many words that had to be cut down. I finally came out with two prepared presentations here, and I chose the last. If I may, I'd like to read my prepared speech for the record as my last order of business.

"I have heard it said in the halls and outside by people considered troublesome and those considered true that this State, my State, has sunk so low that no one, neither God nor man, can cure the illness. I've heard that nothing can set the balance straight, bend the twisted super-structure back into place, or prop up that once firm but now failing foundation.

"I have read and reread polls that show in readable third-grade statistics that my neighbor doesn't trust the men and women that he or she elected or stood by and let his neighbor elect.

"I have yelled as loud as some have yelled, and sometimes louder, but I have never once believed my State, my country, was in fact the bureaucrat, the delegates, mayor, the governor, the presidents good or bad--a name on any ballot.

"If one man, one hundred men and women, or even one thousand stood charged or convicted of crimes against my State and country, it would still not be enough to convince me that this State couldn't recover-- if indeed it was ill--or that new men and women of strength as we have here wouldn't replace the few who have fallen. That my children wouldn't or couldn't have a better state with my help and that of my fellow statespersons concerned about their own children. To be a patriot, for whatever land or cause, means to believe, not blindly but honestly, in what you care about. Even now, in what some have termed 'the blackest day,' I find a hundred reasons, and if I thought long enough perhaps a hundred more, to go on believing.

"We do not need total reform. (But we changed some. Our newly revised upon ratification Constitution is enough. And we have asked for God's help to offer these changes to our people and our State.) What we need, all we need, are men and women willing to take on the task of implementing our Constitution, practicing and believing, really believing that these are just changes. Laws do need changing--yes, because people change. But once modified and on the books, a law should be lived up to. We're still growing. We will continue to have growing pains. The presidents, the senators, the delegates, the 12-person jury and the judge: none is God. No elected body is the state or country. We are the state and country. You and me--us. It can only stay that way as long as we care to keep it so.

"If crimes have been committed, directed toward this State, let them be found. If punishment is needed, let's get on with it. But please stop telling me my State is in trouble and not well. I use the proposed Preamble to remind us, we are unique as an island State. We must dedicate our efforts to fulfill the philosophy decreed by the Hawaii state motto, 'Ua mau ke ea o ka aina i ka pono.'

"In my own composition of 10 years ago, I left home to serve my country and State with an accrued military service of over 29 years, retiring as a commissioned officer. The lyrics are, I believe, most appropriate then and now:

Hawaii, my paradise Hawaii.
 Where lovers' dreams come true.
 Island across the sea
 Calling me to return,
 Remembering my love,
 My lovely Kuuipo.
 The sandy shores and the blue lagoons.
 Its bright moonlit skies
 For my Kuuipo.
 Come with me to Hawaii Nei,
 My dreams will come true for you and me
 Aloha, aloha, Hawaii my paradise.

"I do want to thank all of you who have made my tenure here an enjoyable one, a learning experience and a historical one. In my book you are all truly honorable delegates. Aloha and mahalo."

Delegate Ledward, on being recognized, made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I rise on a point of personal privilege. Ours was the first committee to finish and therefore I feel it's quite applicable that I speak first among the chairmen.

"I will not be able to sleep soundly until I thank the hardworking members of the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, especially my vice-chairmen, Delegates Crozier and Hayashida, who took care of the daily motions to approve the printing of our papers, and our legal counsel, Jim Funaki. I think the budget, accounts and printing committee holds the record for the shortest official meetings--10 minutes, with a full quorum. Our committee work is done and there will be no further meetings. There are still some outstanding bills, but we have sufficient funds in every account to pay all the bills, including your salaries and per diem. In fact, we have enough left over that, if you can live on your per diem alone, we can continue for another couple of months.

"Of the original sum that we approved, $2,216,275, we spent $1,350,875 and we have a balance of $865,400 as of September 15. Plus we have the $200,000 for submission and information and $40,000 for LRB. We do have some outstanding bills but they will be paid later on. As I said, we have enough money to pay all the bills.

"There are many here who helped me in the work I had to do; I would like to thank them individually, but I'll do that later and not impose on your time. There is one person I would like to single out to thank. He was going around like he wasn't getting enough sleep, and he wasn't. At one point he was so exasperated with me he even threatened to run over me with his car--and we both live in Manoa. This is because I kept on taking out or putting in commas and semicolons, and for each change he had to write a lengthy explanation. The result was that he had to work until the wee hours of the mornings to meet the deadlines imposed by the hardworking chairman of the style committee. As if this wasn't enough, the night before we approved Exhibit B, the thick volume you got, I gave him another change. He had to stay up and write that one too. If I ever have to undertake the redrafting of any legal document, I would certainly choose him for my partner. The feeling, however, may not be mutual for the reasons I just mentioned. I was very impressed with his capabilities and am grateful for all he did to speed up the work of the style committee. Thanks to him and our very able chairman, Delegate Hamilton, the style committee was able to complete work well ahead of schedule. These two people and our consultant, Ed Joesting, and our hardworking committee clerk, Claire Woods, helped our style committee to have the most efficient, speedy meetings, second only to the budget, accounts and printing meetings. I feel you should all know about this special person because without him we would never have been able to end the session on time. This special person, for whom I have a lot of aloha, is none other than Rick Kahle of LRB, the patient, hardworking counsel of the style committee. My thanks and deepest appreciation to him for a job well done. Unfortunately--I hung onto him for as long as I could but he had to take his staff to lunch, and he's not here. But I'll send him a copy of this speech so he'll know we appreciate his efforts."

Delegate Marumoto then rose and spoke as follows:

"Mr. President, I look upon this day with some happiness and satisfaction and also with a little sadness and a little frustration, which I was never able to get rid of.

"My happiness stems from the many friends I've met here over the past few months, and I think I can say individually that I love you all, but collectively--well, that would be another matter. I feel satisfaction that I have worked very hard and my staff has worked very well with me. I enjoyed working in the committees and hammering out language and the work in the Committee of the Whole, and also for the many good things that did come out of this Convention--spending ceiling, open primary, etc. I'm happy that several of my concepts did find their way into the new proposed Constitution also.

"But the leave-taking of my newly found friends is very sad, and I will miss all of you. I'm also very sad we saw the death of many proposals that we discussed at length--initiative, referendum, recall, unicameralism, elected attorney general. But then, I was in the minority on all those issues. My frustration and almost despair stems primarily from the prevailing sentiment in this body--I would call it a philosophy--that we should not share our power with the people. I feel that this type of philosophy is dangerous, possibly racist, demagogic and regressive. I must give you a warning as I leave. I feel that many of the delegates consider themselves heirs apparent to the power structure today. They do not look constructively into the future but would like to freeze the present. My Res. No. 32 died today, the last action on the floor. I feel that is indicative of something. I feel we must look toward the future and roll with the punches, so to speak. Look for the changes that will come, share the power with the people and think of them always. I felt that the public was disregarded in this Convention. I'm sorry to end on this note, but thank you for the opportunity of letting me say this."

Delegate Cabral then made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I rise on a point of personal privilege, and I would like to take this opportunity to take one last parting shot--I mean, offer some words of thanks, praise and condolence.

"I offer words of praise to the media, and in particular to Sandra Oshiro. I think she hit the height of her career doing the coverage of this Convention with the article in yesterday's Advertiser. She was very candid and very appropriate, and I think it hails what is in store for the future. In terms of thanks, I'd like to say that I will be leaving this Convention as a winner. I won't be walking out of here with my tail between my legs because--lo and behold, whether it be known to the majority leadership or not, I am a winner, because one of my key and primary issues that I had espoused and set my sights on prior to coming to the Convention was the issue of the open primary. Maybe through some fakes and decoys, in attacking unicameralism, initiative and so forth, in raising those I was able to fake a decoy for my prime issue, through the good graciousness of Delegate Rachel Lee who introduced the open primary in the Committee of the Whole. But in truth I think it's really a good gesture of "kohoku" and the young Turks by not proceeding with their proposal to defeat the open primary proposal.

"I offer my condolences because, as has been prophesied by the media as well as Delegate Marumoto, I think that the young aspiring delegates to this Convention have learned a very biased kind of lesson. I hope they still have in their minds and their hearts if they do pursue a political career that they will learn to open themselves up in a more objective and more constructive way, that they can benefit all the people in the State, as opposed, as I've so often said, to just a few. Thank you."

Delegate Sterling, also on a point of personal privilege, stated:

"I thank the people here for the beautiful experience I've had. I wish that Delegate Johnny Penebacker was here; last night he said that his hardest job was to act as interpreter between Delegates Masu Dyer and Famika Anae. Only in Hawaii could this happen. Only in Hawaii, where we can come and be appreciated as individuals--each of us made in the image of God, each of us with our special talents. And only Hawaii--Masu, John Penebacker and Famika Anae. It's a beautiful relationship. A little glance across the room. A touch. A touch of warmth. In a way I wish we could continue with this because I've made so many good friends here amongst the opio and makua. I have full confidence that the young ones particularly will go out and do a good job for Hawaii.

"I guess I'm one of the independents. But then I really feel very fortunate that out of the 12 proposals I introduced 8 are incorporated into the final ballot. So I can say that it wasn't that bad. It was a give-and-take proposition, all the way down. I enjoyed it very much, but I enjoyed mostly to be able to say I love you afterwards. This is what Hawaii is all about. I do wish Johnny was here and he could interpret this for Masu and Famika. Thank you very, very much."

Delegate Haunani Ching then stated:

"Mr. President, I did not plan on speaking today, but I think I'll take this opportunity as an officer and secretary of this Convention to convey my thanks to all of my fellow delegates who have been very cordial and nice, and to also apologize for my sometimes rudeness and very abrupt manners. But if you know me, if you've gotten to know me, actually I've been very mild at this Convention. I stand with a heavy heart to think that I have been around in the legislature for almost 13 years now, and I don't think I've ever met people like all of you. We may have differed but I think there is such a strong bond between all of us, and I hope that when you go forth in whatever endeavors you pursue--I wish you luck, much happiness, and thank you very much for making you a part of my life."

Delegate Waihee then rose on a point of parliamentary inquiry, to ask if the time limit had passed for reconsidering the open primary. He stated, "This is a sincere question because I would really hate to participate in a meaningless power play."

The Chair then inquired if he had voted on the prevailing side, to which Delegate Waihee answered, "I'm afraid I did not, Mr. President, but I assure you I will be able to find a delegate who has."

Delegate Kojima, on a point of personal privilege, observed:

"For three months this delegate from the deserts of west Kauai and Niihau has listened and has felt the strong wind of hot air blowing across the convention hall, from that direction to this--the air coming from the slopes of Maunakea, Haleakala, the Koolau mountains. It's been blowing every day, every hour, every minute, but finally that strong wind is going to cease, thank heaven. But, like Chase & Sanborn coffee from the old days, that hot air has been good to the last drop."

"So, on this last day, I'm going to miss you, Delegate Helene Hale, and I say mahalo to those guys across the hall. We on this side have been recipients of that blast of air, but we've been patient and maybe we will leave the hall a little better for our patience. Thank you."

Delegate Dyer, on a point of inquiry, asked what the delegate meant by "guys" across the hall.

Delegate Goodenow then rose and stated:

"I would like to remind, if I may, the good delegate from the Garden Island that the word is 'indigenous,' that he was searching for. We'll hear more about that later today."

"I would like to very frankly state how honored I have been to work with you all--each and every one of you, majority or minority--and how very honored I have been to be a vice-president of this Convention. I think we have done a lot here. Basically I was amazed and very happy about all of those 835 proposals--how very creative we were. Our job was to examine the Constitution of our State and see if there was anything we could do. I feel that we have adequately and to the best of all of our abilities done the very best. I would like to say that I'm very happy today. I'm saving that sadness that I know I'll feel as I go back, eventually, to the schoolroom. Thank you very much."

Delegate Liu rose and made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I wish that I could leave this hall today with memories as sweet as the flowers that hang from my neck. I wish that this day were far different from the day upon which we started. I wish that we had reached those deeper and calmer waters that I had hoped this ship of hope, this Convention, would find. Waters where we could have found the peace and time to explore all that needed to be explored, where we could have had fresh air in which to see ourselves and think about our roles--to think about if we were to be the final makers of law, to think about whether we were supposed to be creative and deny to our constituents choices to ideas that were reasonable, rational and realistic. For by denying the reasonable and rational and things that were in the realm of the fundamentals of government--things like initiative, election of attorney general, abolishment or restructuring of the lieutenant governor's office--by denying these things, to me instead of courage there has been a subtle but firm disregard for the necessary.

"However, I would never argue, as some have, that because some issues have not passed, the people of this State will vote in the negative on all that we have done. Never would I argue this because I have faith in the ability of the voter to read, think, analyze and judge. The same qualities that instill in me the view that the voters would have acted intelligently on whatever we could and should have presented to them. But, was it all a waste--the money, the time, the hours? In terms of product, perhaps some might say so. But in terms of people learning that by staying away from the polls the majority can be denied, in terms of the public being educated by seeing what group wields inordinate power in this State--I say that this Convention has not been a waste.

"It is said that in disappointment, despair and loss, the seeds for change are spawned. To you all I express my feelings that the seeds have been planted here and that they will soon sprout."

Delegate Blake then rose on a point of personal privilege and stated:

"As one of the senior candidates in this Convention, it's been my privilege to observe most of the time how people operate. And it's been a pleasure observing one particular individual, who I thought in the beginning didn't know too much of what was going on, who got himself stabbed a few times but came bouncing back many, many times, who probably has a tremendous amount of intestinal fortitude for what he stands for. We have a group--a double-double minority group known as the 'Panaceas,' who today present to the first candidate for the 1980 Convention, Michael 'Panasonic' Crozier, properly endorsed by the entire State. We understand he's going to be one candidate who can run at large. And we present this to you, Mike."

Delegate Crozier was at this time presented with a giant petition. Delegate Takitani thereupon rose to state:

"Mr. President, it is with great pleasure and pride and the utmost respect and admiration that I rise to speak against this nomination. There are two reasons, Mr. President: No. 1, what has he done in this Convention? No. 2, I feel sorry for the next president if he has to sit in the front. But keeping consistent with my ways in the Convention--speaking against something and voting for it--I signed the paper."

Delegate Rachel Lee then stated:

"Mr. President, I rise on a point of personal privilege. I have given the image to many of our young delegates of a mother figure. As my last words on this last day, I would like to add a mother's advice. As all of you know, mother's advice never are appreciated, and I know what I am saying now will probably not be received too well. However, you know, as all mothers do, advice is always given for your own good. So this morning I'd like to leave a word of advice.

"On the first day when we met, my first impression was--I was delighted that there were so many young delegates, some younger than my own son. And it thrilled me when I saw how intelligent they were, how articulate, and I said to myself, these will be future leaders of Hawaii. I went home and I was so happy, and I expressed this happiness to my friends and family. But as the Convention went by, I began to be dismayed because I thought the young delegates seemed to align themselves with the side that gave the impression that they would get the most benefit. The game of politics started, and at their young age they began to be politicians.

"My last message to you is--learn, please learn to be good politicians. But in your compromises, please don't compromise and vote for some valuable and worthwhile values just because you will end up receiving special favors and material gain. Please, pardon me for leaving this last message but I sincerely mean it, and I love you all. Thank you."

Delegate DiBianco then made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I rise to speak for what will no doubt be the last time in this Convention, a fact I'm sure will gladden many of your hearts. There are a lot of things that I should have spoken about this summer and didn't and probably a couple of things that I said that I shouldn't have--but I feel it important to make some final remarks for the record and therefore I've risen to speak. I have prepared this speech--the only time I've done so this summer--so that it can be incorporated into the record verbatim because I want to make sure that there are no mistakes in transcription. Some of my remarks may not please you but I hope you will accord me the courtesy of listening, because I intend to speak the truth as I see it.

"The 1978 Constitutional Convention was a disappointment. Although I learned to like many of you, regardless of where you stood on the issues or whether you were a majority or minority member, I was truly distressed by what I saw this summer. I can only hope that what occurred here this summer was a valuable lesson to many of you as it was to me. It is my own feeling that were this Convention to continue for another month, we would have had one more month of the same backroom politics we had all summer long.

"My disappointment is primarily twofold: first, I am disappointed because we did not present to the public the issues that they wanted to have. Some issues, such as initiative and referendum, were on the general public's mind when they sent all of us here to Con Con. And we did not have the decency to repay their confidence in us by putting this measure, and others, on the November ballot for their consideration. Secondly, I am disappointed at the ease with which many delegates committed their votes, not on single issues but for the whole summer, to persons both inside and outside this Convention in dereliction of their duty to their constituents. The timidity of some of the delegates--the political ambition of others--and the arrogance of some--was all distressing to me and, I think, to the general public.

"Also, there seemed to be a prevailing view among one group of delegates that they knew what was best for Hawaii. However, these delegates based their philosophy on ethnic and racial theories and biases and I believe they were completely misguided. There was much talk in this Convention about the uniqueness of Hawaii and its people. I have never accepted the notion that Hawaii's people are unique, because I believe that all people are the same. The more I observe people, the more I am convinced that there is no difference among any of us. We may eat different foods, speak different languages and have different arts and crafts--but we all have the same emotions, same thought processes, same desires, same faults and same virtues. I think much of the argument that Hawaii is unique and therefore should not learn from its sister states on the mainland or from the past experience of others is simply a cover-up for political action based on ignorance or prejudice.

"As I have gone throughout my district campaigning for the legislature, I have been met over and over again with the question-- 'What went wrong at the Con Con?' The answer I give is simple; a coalition of anti-reform delegates including some delegates too timid to vote their consciences is what went wrong with the Con Con. That answer may not satisfy or appeal to you. But it is the answer I give.

"Perhaps my greatest disappointment is the fact that I saw so much talent wasted. I saw delegates with very good minds turn their decision-making over to others. We were not elected to do that. The waste of talent, the waste of time, the waste of money and the waste of confidence which had been placed in us by our constituents--these are irreparable losses.

"The State of Hawaii expected much from us. It did not get a fair return for its money or its hopes. This was to have been a truly grass-roots convention but instead it was just the same old political game-playing. There was no excuse for that.

"Many of us are campaigning for future political office. Those delegates who chose not to run for office this year will, I am sure, run for office in the not-too-distant future. The prospect of some running for office makes me happy. The prospect of others running makes me fearful. I do not believe that the State of Hawaii can take too much more of the kind of philosophy that dominated this Convention and, indeed, has dominated Hawaii politics for as long as I have been associated with the State.

"Many of you in this room are native-born. You owe Hawaii much. But I see many of Hawaii's sons and daughters taking from the State, not giving to it. Hawaii cannot continue to yield its bounty in the manner it has over the past two decades. The one rule in our politics appears to be selfishness. And I fear for the future of this State if that philosophy continues to prevail. The factionalism and ruthless political fighting that mark Hawaii politics are destroying this State, both financially and morally. In both ways, the State is nearing bankruptcy.

"Hawaii is here for all people, brown, black, yellow and white. But its future rests upon its ability to produce leaders who are not prejudiced, who have the courage of their convictions and who can see beyond the needs of their particular political or ethnic group. So far that leadership has not emerged and I do not see it on the horizon.

"Hawaii deserves better than it received from us this summer. And I think the majority of the people in this State would agree with me. Time will tell. Thank you very much."

Delegate Laura Ching then rose to offer the following remarks:

"Mr. President, I rise on a point of personal privilege. I'd like to share some of my parting thoughts with this body. Fellow delegates, I entered this Convention with trepidation, uncertain of my abilities and apprehensive of the people I would meet. I leave here a stronger, more knowledgeable person, with respect and aloha for all the wonderful people I have met. We have been through a lot together--hours of deliberations, countless numbers of public hearings, endless testimony and debate. I have learned much from this experience, from both the people of Hawaii and my fellow delegates. There have been good times and bad times at this Convention, but I will cherish this entire experience for years to come, and you people I will hold dear for the rest of my life.

"I have found the tasks bestowed upon us by the people of this great State to be important, challenging and at times demanding. But I never for one minute lost the faith that we as delegates would make the best decisions necessary for the growth and welfare of the people we love in Hawaii. The value of the friendships I have made here is immeasurable, and I will look back with fond memories of this Convention and the people who made it great. Thanks to all of you for making this one of the most memorable experiences of my life."

Delegate Chu then spoke as follows:

"Mr. President, I haven't prepared a written speech because I found it difficult up till this moment to find the words to express the many feelings that I have. However, I am inspired at this time to speak on the feeling that I have about the growth experience this Convention has provided.

"I was born in the mid-40s, I was a post-war baby, I grew up in the booming '50s and the '60s, lived through the protests and the changes of the '60s, and now I'm living through the sobering influence of the '70s. I was very interested in the Constitutional Convention. In my brochure I said that these were very exciting times in the history of Hawaii, and I still feel that way. I feel that Hawaii has grown into a very cosmopolitan state with a very cosmopolitan, far-advanced government--that more than any other state in this Union. But yet it's maintained its aloha, it's maintained its openness, it's maintained its accessibility of government to the people.

"However, I'm not entirely disappointed by this Convention, in that I feel it's a growth experience for Hawaii. I am concerned very much about what the Advertiser's Sandra Oshiro has stated as the 'militant localism.' I'm concerned because what that should mean is pride in who you are, not intolerance of what other people are. I feel that that would be a regressive step for our government. I feel that we should maintain accessibility, openness and our aloha spirit to all people of the world. We should work together to advance the ideals of democracy, to make the phrase in the Preamble of our Constitution a reality, that this government shall be 'of the people, by the people and for the people,' and with an understanding heart toward all people of the earth."

Delegate De Soto rose and stated:

"Mr. President, I didn't come prepared to speak about anything that I have done or what I've felt or anything, because I would truly be non-Hawaiian. I come to bring praise to other people so that I may support them and their efforts. But some remarks have been made this noon that disgust me. I'm ever so grateful for the people in Waianae electing me, entrusting me to make decisions on their behalf. All of the decisions that I have made, even with respect to initiative and referendum, are because the people in Waianae, my constituents, felt they did not want it. I want to say to everybody here that these things are temporary. That all of us have differences of opinion and different ways of life. To totally assimilate is to ask someone to give up their soul.

"I think that this Convention--and only history will prove--has done amazingly well; with efforts toward the Hawaiian people as an example. And yet I have heard in these halls--what makes the Hawaiians think they're so special. I leave that to your own consciences. I am a mother and a grandmother of nine children. I hanau six of my own and hanai four. I have ten children. Of all different races, my hanai. But I stand here today quite proud of our opio. They're in a learning process, too. From the time of each of our hanau we didn't know how to walk. We had to learn how to walk and talk and eat. And so now this happens, the process of life, with the opio in this Convention. There is one factor that this Convention has and that is love, and the understanding of human beings one to the other.

"The opio have not always been right, nor have they always been wrong. And for some of you young people who I hope get elected and go on to the higher and larger and bigger games of politics, what transpired in this Convention is exactly what will transpire then. Politics to this old lady is grass roots--no college education, nothing, only a feeling of love for people of all races. It is my experience that all of us together collectively have done what we thought was right. Some of us lose hard. I know that some of us are not satisfied. But when it is time to face my maker, I will stand before the Great Spirit with complete satisfaction that I have truly attempted to represent my people.

"I love all of you from the bottom of my heart. History for the Hawaiian people has not been an easy road. And because all of you here have made it possible for them now to become to some degree self-determining, I think that the 1978 Convention for the Hawaiian people at least--and for some of you who don't think that that's a big deal, believe me, brother, believe me, sister, it's a big deal--it is an enormous thing that we have done here. We have made major in-roads to environment.

"In the time of Hewa-hewa, the kahuna to Kamehameha I, and in his prophesy, through the chants we learn when he was leaving Kona Kamehameha had some doubts about whether what he had done to conquer all the Islands was good or bad. He turned back toward the beach as he was walking down toward his canoe with a gun on it. At his side stood John Young and his kahuna, Hewa-hewa. He turned back to the beach as the people were lined up on the beach. First were all the chiefs and the warriors, and then the hoa'aina and maka'ainana--all the people had come down to bid him adieu. And he turned and tears ran down from his eyes and he said, 'Imua na po 'ihi. Inu 'ai ka 'awa'awa.' Hewa-hewa goes on to say in his chant that a time will come when a walewale will come and devour the Hawaiian race, and then another time will come, in the time of Lono i ka makahiki, where a new nation will be born again and this new nation shall rise to give forth to the world the true meaning of love. And in that chant, my kupuna tells me, the prophesy is there. This is the year 1978, where we're so involved in environmental issues. The new nation to be born is all of our children of all races, all races. You, young opio, will have a message for the world.

"I ask this Convention to please receive my deepest gratitude, my sincere love and my sincere wishes that when you leave this place you find some place in your heart for love for all of us. Although we may not agree, we certainly can agree about love. Love is a thing that will keep us. We will all die and go but that love will remain. I say to you opio, imua. I say to you who do not understand us, imua. I say to all of you, mahalo. To my staff, the members of the Hawaiian affairs committee and this body, history will prove that this certainly has not been a useless Convention. Mahalo nui loa and aloha."

Delegate Hale then rose to say:

"Mr. President, it's said that you can't teach an old dog new tricks. But I'd like to say that I've learned one thing in this Convention, and I learned it just the other day. Sometimes you have to be silent to be heard."

Delegate Chung, on a point of personal privilege, stated:

"My first point, Mr. President, is, after looking back on the days and months of the Convention, I don't think we could have found a better man than you to become our President. I think of the opening day, when I had the privilege of making a very brief remark in your behalf, and I might say that everything I said is a reality. Whatever we have accomplished has been a team effort, yet you at no time said, I did it. I'm sure that whatever we have done, we can proudly say that we did it together. I think this is the kind of leadership that Hawaii is looking for. Therefore, without your type, certainly this entire body would have been in chaos.

"The other point I wanted to bring up is that all of us are only visitors on this earth. Some day we shall all leave. My personal philosophy is similar to what the late Pope John said, that the Almighty may not give me time to do all that I want to do, but during the time that he gives me I shall do the best I know how to finish the job and do the best job I know of. I'm sure this is a reflection of all of us here as I see you every day and hear you talk every day. We have tried our best to do the best job within a limited time.

"Finally, let me just go back at the earliest days of our Convention, right after we had met with a representative from the lieutenant governor's office regarding our timetable. And at that time I'd like to call your attention to the fact that many of us who had not yet made official our intention of running for public office were castigated by one of our members because we were accused of trying to speed up our time to work through things in a perfunctory manner so that we could all get out there and wave on the highway and go into politics. I'm sure all of us felt the sting at that time, and I didn't think about anything because it was too soon. And now we see one of the members who made those castigating remarks himself-- I just want to remind those, Mr. President, because of some of the remarks that were made. I share the feelings and sentiments of Delegate De Soto. I think it only fair that I personally be given--"

At this time Delegate Rachel Lee rose on a point of order, protesting, "Mr. President, this is a happy occasion--"

Delegate Chung, in response, said:

"I know it is a happy occasion, I'm very happy. Well, I express my happiness in many ways. So I'd like to say to all of you delegates-- 31 I was told are running for office--I want to wish you my sincerest aloha and best wishes for every success and, including any other person who's running in my same district, I just want to say, let's come out fighting, fight it fair, and let the best man win. Thank you."

Delegate Campbell then made the following statement:

"Mr. President, I rise to a point of personal privilege for the last time in this Convention. I would like to say first of all, mahalo to all those here who ever listened to what I had to say, and mahalo to those from whom I learned, for indeed I did learn much. This has been my first political experience in life, and it has been a learning experience. I want to thank Mr. President for the role he played, and I'd like to say that the Indians do indeed know what they say, that you have to walk in another man's moccasins to know how he feels. It was only when I stood in your place that I truly understood what it was that you were going through in the days that you led us in the Convention.

"I think that history will record this Convention with pluses and minuses. Some of the ones that I feel particularly gratified about are the fact that the people will be able to say something about the open primary, that there will be advancement in openness in government insofar as the legislature is concerned, that something has been attempted insofar as the escalating costs in campaign expenditures are concerned, something with respect to tightening our debt limit, and something with respect to righting some of the wrongs that have happened in history to our Hawaiian people.

"I was reared on the theory that 'there is so much bad in the best of us and so much good in the worst of us that it doesn't behoove any of us to talk about the rest of us.' And maybe in learning that lesson I translated it into a cardinal principle in my own life. And that is, always look into the dignity of the man or the woman whom I confront. I never forget it. I seek to do the constructive instead of the destructive. I think that if all of us here, where so much talent is latent in all of us, use that talent to uplift the dignity of the rest of us, Hawaii will be the kind of place all of us want it to be. Mahalo nui loa."

Delegate Hirata then stated:

"Mr. President, I had prepared a speech today but I would prefer that it just be entered into the Journal. However, I would like to share a few thoughts with my fellow delegates here. I believe that, as one of the younger delegates, these past 3 months I have experienced so much and I've grown so old and matured so quickly. I want to thank our kupuna here at the Convention for giving us guidance and for sharing with us their years of wisdom. Lastly, I would like to thank my Auntie 'Frenchie' De Soto who brought with her, and taught us all, the true meaning of aloha."

[The following is written testimony as submitted by Delegate Hirata.]

"Right after the Con Con elections when we were called a 'do nothing' convention, I was almost convinced that we would be out of this building by Admission Day. But, like any good bureaucracy, we proceeded to find something to do. And we worked very hard at it, often filling our days and evenings. I believe that all of us worked earnestly. My only hope now is that the public will recognize our efforts as such.

"I would like, at this point, to express my frustration that this forum has been used by everybody and his brother to get what they couldn't get passed across the street. I resent the continued accusations that we were being led by a demagogue of some sort, simply because a group of delegates, who often constituted a majority, shared some common beliefs. I particularly resent the recent accusations by political candidates and the media that some of us, and I, are being manipulated. I resent that insinuation: My decisions and actions have been based on my own personal convictions and the dreams that I have for my children and the future of Hawaii. My decisions were not based on any 'orders' from anyone, either at or outside this Convention. The contrary in fact was true, particularly in the case of the legislature and the administration. Both were very reluctant to lend their technical assistance for fear it would be looked upon as 'meddling' or 'influence-peddling.' I think we all could have used a lot more technical expertise and knowledge in our deliberations and decision-making. I was elected, just as everyone else here, by the voters of my district; consequently, I have made my own decisions based on my own best judgment, just as many of you here have.

"Although I have often voiced my reservations about our proposed changes and I personally believe that our Constitution should be a short, concise document uncluttered with needlessly complicated formulas which make it difficult to act quickly in times of crisis. We worked hard to produce that kind of document. However, at times there was a necessity to be specific so that the Constitution would provide definite direction and fully define our intent.

"Notwithstanding all of our differences, I think we should all be proud of what has taken place here. I believe there has been open and free discussion. I think that there has been an exchange of ideas. I think that all of us have earnestly listened and considered our votes carefully. And I hope that we leave with a better understanding of each other and with the true spirit of aloha."

Delegate Hagino at this time made the following statement:

"Mr. President and fellow delegates, May 20, 1978 was the beginning of a very historic era in Hawaii's history. That was the day about 800 hopeful candidates were reduced to 102 Constitutional Convention delegates. The ages of the delegates ranged from 20 to 63; they came from the ranks of students, teachers, lawyers, blue-collar workers, lay ministers, retirees and managers. Two thirds of the delegates were lifetime residents and most have lived here for a long time. There were 82 delegates at the 1968 convention; in 1978, there are 102. And wouldn't you know it, the 20 new seats went to women. You've indeed come a long way.

"During this Convention there have been numerous birthdays, several wedding anniversaries, two marriages and the birth of two babies, not necessarily from the previously mentioned marriages. I sent out a survey last week, but unfortunately less than half the delegates finished it. One delegate even decided to use our right to privacy section. It is interesting to note that of these 45 who answered, 23 went to public high schools--this does not include the one who said he went to Furtado Memorial High--and 31 attended the University of Hawaii. I think this is a tribute to our public school system.

"I would like to share with you a very interesting story that was contributed by Delegate Shon. The Tamayori Row has the author of the first proposal (Shon), the author of the last proposal (Miller), and author of the most proposals (Takemoto). It also contains the Con Con veteran (Terry Ihara), two board of education candidates (Terry and Okamura), three house candidates (Shon, Miller and Takemoto), four committee chairmen (Ihara, Takemoto, Okamura and Iwamoto), one vice-president (Les Ihara), the youngest male (Yamashita), one vice-chairman (Tamayori) and an IRS agent (Kimball) to investigate them all.

"As the 1978 Constitutional Convention draws to a close, it is important for us to try to understand the significance of this Convention. Twenty-four years ago in 1954, a group of young leaders attained leadership in the territorial legislature. They burst upon the Hawaii scene like a supernova in the Pacific skies. They represented a generation of leaders coming of age. Their entrance into politics was viewed with distrust by many of the institutions in the territorial society, including newspapers. For some it was like another Pearl Harbor but today the names of those leaders have become household words: Burns, Cravalho, Inouye, Yoshinaga, Matsunaga and Ariyoshi. For the first few years little positive accomplishment was achieved. Hawaii was just beginning to emerge from a feudal and plantation era. It was not until the early statehood years that these leaders began to take firm steps in areas like education, health care, the arts, social and labor legislation. No aspect of society was left untouched by these leaders. With hindsight, the year 1954 is now referred to as the year of the Democratic revolution.

"I firmly believe, my fellow delegates, that 1978 will go down in history as a similar landmark for Hawaii. Although we may argue about what was done or not done at this Convention, although our proposals must still go to the people for ratification and although the coming years will be the true test of our work, the most important step has already been taken. That achievement came about, as I stated earlier, on May 20, 1978 when all of us were elected.

"The year 1978 is also the bicentennial of Captain Cook's western discovery of Hawaii. It can be said that 1978 is also a year of discovery for all of us. We are beginning to discover ourselves and what it is that makes us unique. The year began with the Hawaii Observer selecting the late George Helm as its man of the year. George Helm forced us to look at ourselves and at our Hawaiian-ness. This year also marks the continuation of the Hawaiian Renaissance. This Convention, I believe, will play a vital role in this Hawaiian Renaissance. The Hawaiian affairs package marks a significant and sincere effort to right the wrongs perpetrated on the Hawaiian people. It was at this Convention that we began to look for unique Hawaiian and Pacific solutions.

"And so, who are we? And where are we going? I am not certain, and I don't believe anyone here is certain, of where Hawaii is going. I do believe that there are some rough years ahead and yet, like the earlier generation of leaders who were part of the '54 revolution and had to bide their time during the rest of the decade of the '50s, I feel confident that a new Hawaii is coming. Only this time the names of the leaders will be Waihee, Fukunaga, Shon, Chang, Hashimoto and Barnes.

"This closing day also marks the close of 16 years of illustrious and distinguished public service by Delegate Taira. While it is indeed a sad day, I look to the bright side--over 30 delegates are seeking to equal or better this distinguished mark and this Convention is the start of it. For some, like me, this may well be our last fling at politics. I have had many frustrations and yet few regrets. But in the next 2 to 4 years I look forward to seeing even more names, like Tamayori, Yamashita, Okamura, Izu, Crozier, Stegmaier and Hirata on the ballots.

"As all of you know, during this Convention I became a father for the second time. My fellow delegate, Dave Stegmaier, became a father for the first time. Mr. President, what greater testament of faith in the future can a young person have than to bear children into this world. I believe in our ability, my generation's ability, to make Hawaii a decent place for our keiki. I believe in our ability to make a better Hawaii. I believe that the Hawaii that is to come will be a good and decent society for Jeremy Kalama and Danielle Amiko Nawahinepuaokalelehuna.

"And so once again, who are we? We are, as George Helm said, 'one 'ohana.' We are one family. We may argue with each other but we must live together. To my fellow friends, take care, mahalo for the memories. But I will not say farewell. As I stated in a previous speech, my greatest fear on my wedding day was that I would be losing my friends. I pray that it will be different this time. And so instead I say aloha, see you in '88."

Delegate Donald Ching then stated:

"Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the body. For the first time in this Convention, I'm rising on a point of personal privilege. About 4 months ago some of us got together to decide who would lead us in this Convention. It was not a very difficult decision. Bill, I just want to tell you, you didn't let us down. Thank you."

ADJOURNMENT

At 12:23 p.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Barr and carried, the Convention adjourned subject to the call of the Chair.

SIXTY-FIFTH DAY

Saturday, December 2, 1978

The Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 was called to order at 10:00 a.m. in the Senate Chamber of the State Capitol.

The President presided.

The Divine Blessing was invoked by the Reverend David Kaupu of the Kamehameha Schools.

The President declared a quorum and directed the Clerk to check the attendance, which showed that all delegates were present with the exception of Delegates Anae, Andrews, Cabral, Eastvold, Ellis, Marion Lee, Lewis, Nozaki, Villaverde and Yamashita who were excused.

The President announced that the Journal of the Sixty-Fourth Day had been signed by the Secretary and approved by the President.

At this time the President addressed the Convention as follows:

"Distinguished guests, friends, fellow delegates:

"The signing of this document that we are about to undertake in a ritual way marks the end of our task as delegates to the Constitutional Convention. That we are here signing the document containing all 34 amendments is something that few of us had any reason to expect would happen. Most of us were not pleased with the total product of the Convention. We had reservations about parts of some amendments and about entire amendments in other cases. But in the end we recognized that whether we as individual delegates agreed or disagreed with the majority judgments of the Convention, it was up to the voters of the State to make the final decision. They did as we did--they voted against many of them but in the final analysis the majority supported and approved each amendment.

"As part of our effort we have seen to it that the next convention will not be placed in the same tight time-frame that made for such constant pressure. We were told by the lieutenant governor's office that at all costs we must have our ballot and all our amendments translated into three languages by September 21 if we were to hold the referendum with the general election November 7. When the ballot form, patterned almost exactly like that of the '68 convention, was finally approved, the Chair was not aware of any concern expressed as to ballot structure by any government official, and objections in public areas were mild and muted. If for no other reason, most close observers thought that, whatever form the ballot took, the combination of the negative vote and/or total apathy would forestall acceptance of many of the amendments. This was not so. The people of the State did their homework. They used the information provided, they listened and they read. Considering the time the Committee on Submission and Information had to educate the public on all 34 amendments, that there was some confusion, some misunderstanding, and some questions, was recognized, was understandable and admittedly unfortunate. But overall, I thought the submission and information committee, individual delegates, the press, civic groups and others did one heck of a fine job in getting the story across. However, the ballot form notwithstanding, the majority of the voters of this State by their vote on November 7 in effect endorsed the work of the Convention and gave you a well-deserved vote of confidence, and I feel you are to be congratulated for this.

"As we step forward now to sign as individuals, I will look on this not as a ceremonial gesture but as an opportunity to reaffirm my confidence in my fellow delegates who labored, argued, debated both on and off the floor to write, frame and bring forth these amendments.

"I am sure that in time as you may come to look again at this document you will see not only the print and the language but the memory's eye will conjure up those faces, those incidents, those personalities that made this Convention one that we will not soon forget. I know that out of this Convention there have been formed some very endearing and enduring friendships and some political careers launched. And so indeed I think this will be a living document and a testimony to the sincere and dedicated efforts of all of us.

"But overall, and I think more importantly, I know most of you feel as I do that we still have ahead of us the opportunity to aid in the implementation and the understanding of some of these amendments. I would hope also that you would feel as I do that these amendments that we proposed, given time, given understanding and given opportunity, will prove themselves in the only way they really can--by making for a better Hawaii for us, our children and the generations to follow.

"Mahalo."

The signing ceremonies began with the President affixing his signature to the Constitution, followed by the officers and delegates of the Convention.

At 10:45 a.m., at which time the last signature--that of Delegate Yoshimura--was affixed, the President announced that all delegates present had executed the Constitution of the State of Hawaii on the original sheet. The President further stated that those delegates who were unable to be present at that time to sign would be given an opportunity to do so at a later date.

On motion by Delegate Haunani Ching, seconded by Delegate Nakamura and carried, the President was authorized to approve the Journal of the Sixty-Fifth Day.

At this time Delegate Peterson moved that the Convention of 1978 recommend to future conventions that the ballot be designed in such a way that the public could vote yes or no on each proposed amendment.

The President stated that the motion was not in order but, this being an informal session, it would be duly noted, as well as the fact that the Convention was equally divided on the question. The Chair further stated that he recognized the problem and had given the matter serious consideration, but that in any case the Convention's recommendation would not be binding on the next convention.

At this time Chief Clerk George Amimoto, Assistant Clerk Colin Miyabara and Joyce Omine were recognized by the Convention and presented with leis in appreciation of their outstanding work.

Delegate De Soto then led the Convention in the singing of "Hawai'i Aloha."

ADJOURNMENT

At 10:55 a.m., on motion by Delegate Waihee, seconded by Delegate Ledward and carried, the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 adjourned, subject to the call of the Chair.

CONVENTION DOCUMENTS

Resolutions

RESOLUTION NO. 1

ADOPTING THE RULES OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF 1978.

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the Rules of the Convention be adopted in the manner and form hereto attached.

RESOLUTION NO. 2

CONGRATULATIONS AND THANKS TO DELEGATE TERUO IHARA.

WHEREAS, the facilities for this Constitutional Convention were unprepared a month ago; and

WHEREAS, Delegate Teruo Ihara, Chairman of the Facilities Committee, has worked tirelessly from early mornings to late evenings to direct preparation of the facilities; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED that the delegates of this Convention individually and severally thank and congratulate Delegate Teruo Ihara for his efforts.

RESOLUTION NO. 3

RELATING TO WORDING OF OUR STATE CONSTITUTION.

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that since our Constitution should be written by the people and understood by the people, each proposal, rewrite or revision should be plainly worded, avoiding the use of technical terms.

RESOLUTION NO. 4

REAFFIRMING SUPPORT OF THE EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT.

WHEREAS, the State of Hawaii was the first state to ratify the Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, action which was followed by overwhelming voter ratification of an Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution of the State of Hawaii; and

WHEREAS, basic human rights and human dignity demand that there be no discrimination on the basis of sex, to guarantee that individuals are afforded equal opportunity and equal rights under the law, so that no person is subject to irrational and invidious discrimination on the basis of sex; and

WHEREAS, the people of the State of Hawaii have long been and continue to be committed to constitutionally based equality of rights without regard to sex, evidenced by the prohibition against denial of due process and equal protection on the basis of sex dating back to the earliest Hawaiian Constitution; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that it reaffirms support of the Equal Rights Amendment; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the members of the Hawaii congressional delegation.

RESOLUTION NO. 5

RELATING TO PROPOSALS.

WHEREAS, Rule 55 of the Rules of the Convention provides that the Convention may set a date after which no proposal shall be introduced, except by committee; and

WHEREAS, it is deemed necessary to establish such a date for the standing committees to proceed on their deliberation of the proposals and conclude their work in an orderly and timely manner; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that no proposal shall be introduced after 4 o'clock p.m. of July 31, 1978, subject to being extended on input from the Lieutenant Governor's office, except by committee; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that said time and date of 4 o'clock p.m. of July 31, 1978 may be amended only by the affirmative vote of at least 52 delegates; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a certified copy of this Resolution be transmitted to each of the chairpersons of the standing committees of the Constitutional Convention of 1978.

RESOLUTION NO. 6

URGING RETENTION OF ARTICLE I, SECTION 8, OF THE STATE CONSTITUTION RELATING TO THE GRAND JURY.

WHEREAS, the seriousness of increasing criminal activity in the State of Hawaii has placed this concern at the top of the list of voter interest; and

WHEREAS, the people of the State of Hawaii have willingly assumed their share of the responsibility by participating in the Grand Jury System, in accordance with the provisions of Section 8, Article I, of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii; and

WHEREAS, this system specifically allows and encourages citizens to directly participate in the exercising of their rights and authority in the governmental processes; and

WHEREAS, the present Grand Jury System is the result of 800 years of legal evolution; and

WHEREAS, the Grand Jury System in its implementation is not a contributing factor to the primary concern of increasing crime; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that Section 8 of Article I of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii be retained in its entirety; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to each delegate and to the presiding officers of the state legislature.

RESOLUTION NO. 7

RELATING TO A BICAMERAL LEGISLATURE.

WHEREAS, it will serve as a useful guideline to the standing committees of the Constitutional Convention of 1978 to have a determination whether or not a bicameral form of legislature shall be retained for Hawaii by this Constitutional Convention; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that a bicameral form of legislature be retained; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a certified copy of this Resolution be transmitted to each of the chairpersons of the standing committees of the Constitutional Convention of 1978.

RESOLUTION NO. 8

RELATING TO THE BUDGET.

WHEREAS, by Act 17 of Special Session Laws of Hawaii 1977 and Act 243 of Session Laws of Hawaii 1978, the aggregate sum of $2,500,000 was appropriated by the state legislature out of the general revenues of the State of Hawaii, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to the office of the Governor, or to the officers elected by the delegates if so designated by the Governor, for defraying the pre-session, session, and post-session expenses of the 1978 Constitutional Convention; provided that, of the sum so appropriated, $240,547 may be contracted to the Legislative Reference Bureau for the following purposes: $200,000 for a citizen education program and $40,547 for staff services for the Constitutional Convention delegates; and

WHEREAS, on July 18, 1978, the Constitutional Convention adopted its budget, which covered $2,259,453 of the aggregate sum so appropriated but did not include the said sum of $240,547 because the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, which had recommended the adoption of the budget, had assumed that the said sum of $240,547 would be expended by the Governor for the special purposes intended therefor under Act 243 of Session Laws of Hawaii 1978; and

WHEREAS, it is now deemed necessary and appropriate that the said sum of $240,547 be included in the budget of the 1978 Constitutional Convention for the purposes intended inasmuch as the Governor has duly delegated to the President of the Constitutional Convention the authority to expend the aggregate sum of $2,500,000, which includes the said sum of $240,547; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the budget of the Constitutional Convention adopted on July 18, 1978 be and it is hereby amended by adding thereto an item for the said sum of $240,547 as special expenditures and to read as follows:

"Special Expenditures:
Citizen Education Program	$200,000
Legislative Reference Bureau
Staff Services	40,547	$240,547"

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that certified copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the Constitutional Convention and to the chairperson of the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing.

RESOLUTION NO. 9

RELATING TO CONFLICTS OF INTEREST CONCERNING PUBLIC EMPLOYEES.

WHEREAS, this Convention has adopted a code of ethics to prescribe the standards of conduct for the delegates; and

WHEREAS, this code was adopted under the guiding precept that the Convention should avoid even an aura or appearance of conflict of interest so that public confidence in the efforts and work product of the Convention will be assured; and

WHEREAS, delegates who are public employees and members of any of the thirteen public employee bargaining groups are in direct and indirect conflicts of interest when voting upon proposals having to do with Collective Bargaining for Public Employees; and

WHEREAS, such delegates are in direct conflict when voting on collective bargaining as they are personally part of the collective bargaining process in that they must individually ratify or discard every proposed agreement; and

WHEREAS, such delegates are in indirect conflict as members of the various unions which gain financially from each wage increase by virtue of their percentage assessments of dues and fees and in turn pass on to the delegate members these financial gains in the form of increased benefits; and

WHEREAS, such conflicts of interest must be ruled upon by the President and the various committee chairmen, thus imposing a most grievous burden on these individuals; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by this Convention, that this basic matter of conflict of interest on the part of delegates who are state and county government employees, when voting on proposals having to do with Collective Bargaining for Public Employees, be referred to the Ethics Committee for comment and recommendation and report as soon as possible so as to aid the President and the committee chairmen in their decisions.

RESOLUTION NO. 10

URGING FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE STATEMENTS BY CERTAIN NEWSPAPER EDITORS AND PUBLISHERS.

WHEREAS, this Convention recognizes the importance of a free press to a free society; and

WHEREAS, great newspapers contribute to the shaping and molding of public opinion and public policy; and

WHEREAS, the State of Hawaii has adopted the Newspaper Preservation Act, to assure economic survival for certain newspapers and thereby to assure diversity of editorial opinion in Hawaii; and

WHEREAS, newspaper editors and publishers influence the dissemination of information about public events and policy decisions; and

WHEREAS, editors have the sole power to edit the news and the power to edit the news is the power to control the news; and

WHEREAS, the public has a right to know the financial interests of those who receive state support and influence public policy and opinion; and

WHEREAS, that the newspaper business is one greatly affected with a public trust, and the public interest; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED that this Convention transmit to the legislature its concern for and support of financial disclosure statements for editors and publishers of The Honolulu Advertiser and the Honolulu Star-Bulletin; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to each delegate and to the presiding officers of the state legislature.

RESOLUTION NO. 11

REQUESTING AMENDMENT OF THE RULES OF THE CONVENTION TO CLARIFY THE PROCEDURES THEREIN.

WHEREAS, the rules of the 1978 Constitutional Convention were adopted before the Convention met, based upon the rules of the 1968 Constitutional Convention, which were also adopted before that Convention met; and

WHEREAS, it appears after functioning under these rules that they do not set forth the procedures that the Convention should follow with sufficient clarity; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the Rules of the Convention be amended to clarify the procedures set forth therein in the manner suggested in the attached exhibit or in a manner based upon the exhibit as suggested by the Rules Committee of the Convention; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to all delegates.

EXHIBIT

1. Rule 18(a) is amended to read:

"RULE 18. Functions of standing committees:

"(a) It shall be the duty of the standing committees to consider all matters which may be referred to them.

"Each standing committee shall submit to the Convention a report or reports, in writing, setting forth the results of its deliberations and its recommendations on all matters referred to it, in the same number and form as prescribed in these rules for proposals. Each standing committee shall file all delegate proposals when reporting its recommendations."

2. Rule 27 is amended to read:

"RULE 27. At meetings of the Convention the order of business shall be as follows (except at times set apart for the consideration of special orders):

1. Calling Convention to order.
2. Invocation.
3. Determination of quorum.
4. Reading of journal.
5. Presentation of petitions, memorials and communications.
6. Reports of standing committees.

10. Motions and resolutions.
11. Unfinished business.
12. Special orders of the day.
13. General orders of the day.
14. New business."

3. Rule 43, reading as follows, is deleted:

["RULE 43. A proposal may be recalled from a committee by the affirmative vote of thirty-one delegates, provided that the committee has reported on the subject matter of such proposal for passage on Second Reading."]

4. Rule 45 is amended to read:

"RULE 45. Each delegate proposal shall receive one reading and be reported upon as provided in Rule 18. Each committee proposal shall receive three separate readings in the Convention previous to being agreed upon, but no committee proposal shall be read twice on the same day or be considered on Third Reading until after at least forty-eight hours notice of the day upon which it is to be so considered has been given by announcement made in open session.

"All delegate and committee proposals may be read by their titles but on Third Reading all committee proposals shall be read throughout. No amendment shall be received to any committee proposal on its third reading unless by unanimous consent of the delegates present.

"All delegate and committee proposals shall, after the first reading, be printed for the use of the members. Printed copies of committee proposals shall be used on their second and third readings."

5. Rule 46 is amended to read:

"RULE 46. The regular order to be taken by delegate and committee proposals shall be as follows:

"(a) Introduction, First Reading, and printing of sufficient copies of each delegate and committee proposal[.] in the most appropriate order as determined by the secretary.

"(b) Reference of delegate proposals to a general standing committee by the President.

"(c) Report by committee and printing of sufficient copies thereof. Introduction, First Reading, and printing of sufficient copies of each committee proposal.

"Four Convention days after the printing of said report and committee proposal it shall be placed on the general orders.

"(d) Second Reading: Consideration by the Committee of the Whole and by the Convention of the standing committee report, minority report, if any, committee proposal and action on amendments offered by delegates. Second Reading of committee proposal by the Convention.

"(e) Reference to the Committee on Style for report within five Convention days.

"(f) Report of the Committee on Style and printing of sufficient copies[,] of report and committee proposal, if necessary.

"(g) Action on report of Committee on Style: Consideration and action on amendments as to phraseology of committee proposal only; action on the report as amended and printing of sufficient copies[,] of committee proposal, if necessary.

"(h) Third Reading of committee proposal and agreement.

"(i) Reference of committee proposal to the Committee on Style for arrangement of sections and article or articles and for form.

"(j) Report of Committee on Style as to arrangement of sections and article or articles and printing of sufficient copies, if necessary."

6. Addition of a new rule to be inserted after Rule 46 to read:

"RULE . The regular order to be taken by resolutions shall be as follows:

"(a) Introduction and printing of sufficient copies of each resolution.

"(b) Reference to a general or administrative standing committee by the President.

"(c) Report by the committee and printing of sufficient copies thereof.

"(d) Adoption of the resolution, if recommended by the committee."

7. Rule 47 is amended to read:

"RULE 47. Any subject matter to be incorporated in the Constitution shall be by committee proposal. A proposal or resolution shall be introduced by one or more delegates or by a committee[.] in the case of a committee proposal."

8. Rule 48 is amended to read:

"RULE 48. Each proposal or resolution shall be typewritten on white paper which is 8-1/2" wide and 11" long with one original copy and seven copies thereof, and shall be dated and signed by the introducer or, if a committee proposal, by the chair of the committee introducing it."

9. Adding a new rule to be inserted after Rule 49 to read:

"RULE . (a) The caption of each resolution shall be:

Constitutional Convention of Hawaii

of 1978

Resolution

"(b) All resolutions shall be submitted in the form and in the number of copies designated by the Secretary."

10. Rule 52 is amended to read:

"RULE 52. Each proposal and resolution shall be delivered to the Secretary for introduction. The Secretary shall number and list all proposals and resolutions as presented. At each session of the Convention the Secretary shall read the number and title of each proposal and resolution so delivered to him/her for introduction, which shall be taken as the first reading of the proposal or resolution and as the ordering thereof to a second reading, if a committee proposal, and the President shall thereupon refer [it] the delegate proposal or resolution to a general or administrative standing committee."

11. Rule 53 is amended to read:

"RULE 53. The President shall refer each proposal and resolution introduced to the appropriate committee. Where a proposal or resolution embraces subject matter which falls within the proper consideration of several committees, the President, where practicable, shall divide the proposal or resolution and refer the parts to the appropriate committees; but if it is not subject to such division, the President shall refer it to an appropriate committee with instructions to consult with other committees on related matters.

"Any proposal which does not comply with the provisions of these rules as to form shall be referred to the appropriate committee as a petition."

12. Rule 54 is amended to read:

"RULE 54. A copy of each proposal and resolution introduced shall be delivered by the Secretary to the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing. The original shall be retained by the Secretary and one copy shall be delivered to the chair of the committee to which the proposal or resolution has been referred.

"Each successive reprint of a committee proposal or exhibit to a resolution differing from the previous print or reprint of the same proposal[,] or exhibit, which is presented to the Convention for consideration, shall bear a consecutive redraft number on the top of the first or title page thereof, as follows:

'Redraft No. 1,' or 'RD. 1'
'Redraft No. 2,' or 'RD. 2,' etc."

13. Rule 56 is amended to read:

"RULE 56. Each general standing committee may originate and report without specific reference, any committee proposal, the subject matter of which properly falls within the consideration of such committee under these rules. The minority in each committee may originate a minority report and in order to assist the minority in preparation of such report the committee shall make available to the minority all testimony, committee meeting minutes and other relevant materials."

14. Rule 58 is amended to read:

"RULE 58. Each amendment offered to a committee proposal or exhibit to a resolution shall be in writing and delivered to the Secretary and shall be entered on the journal. A copy of such amendment shall be delivered by the Secretary to the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing. The original shall be retained by the Secretary. One copy shall be delivered to the chair of the committee to which the committee proposal or exhibit to a resolution concerned has been referred."

15. Rule 59 is amended to read:

"RULE 59. Any committee proposal which has passed its second reading shall be referred to the Committee on Style for consideration as provided by these rules and when reported by said committee shall be subject to consideration and amendment as to arrangement and phraseology only, and, if any such amendment be adopted, shall be again referred to the Committee on Style for similar consideration and report thereof, and if said committee's report shall be adopted, it shall be ordered to be printed and to Third Reading."

16. Rule 60 is amended to read:

"RULE 60. [Proposals] Committee proposals which have passed two readings shall be prepared by the Secretary in proper form for printing for Third Reading and when the Secretary receives from the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing any committee proposal ordered to a third reading and the same shall be found correct, s/he shall affix his/her signature to each page of the copy to be used as the official copy."

17. Rule 61 is amended to read:

"RULE 61. On the question of the agreement upon any committee proposal on Third Reading, the vote shall be taken by ayes and noes and entered on the journal, and no committee proposal shall be declared adopted unless at least fifty-two delegates to the Convention shall have voted in favor of the adoption of the same."

RESOLUTION NO. 12

RELATING TO THE SCHEDULING OF CONVENTION MEETINGS ON SUNDAYS.

WHEREAS, Ua mau ke ea o ka aina i ka pono; and

WHEREAS, the prophet Moses was commanded, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work. But the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy manservant nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates"; and

WHEREAS, after six days of labor, even Convention delegates are entitled to a Day of Rest; and

WHEREAS, if we are in violation of God's laws we cannot expect His blessings to attend our deliberations, blessings of which we are in continuous need; and

WHEREAS, the calling for Sunday of any official meeting of the Constitutional Convention or committee thereof would invite attendance thereat in violation of God's commands; and

WHEREAS, any delegate failing to attend Convention or committee meetings scheduled on Sunday would thereby be temporarily disenfranchised, in violation of the Bill of Rights, by that delegate's practice of religion; and

WHEREAS, members of the public wishing to attend such meetings may be constrained therefrom by their religious convictions or active participation in worship services; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED that no official meetings of this Convention or its committees be scheduled or held on any Sunday; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a certified copy of this Resolution shall be transmitted to each delegate of this Convention, and officers and committee chairpersons thereof.

RESOLUTION NO. 13

PROVIDING FOR THE USE OF NON-DISCRIMINATORY NOUNS, PRONOUNS AND ADJECTIVES IN THE STATE CONSTITUTION.

WHEREAS, the State of Hawaii is firmly committed to a public policy of non-discrimination and equal opportunity for all of its citizens; and

WHEREAS, the written language in our laws can be used either to fight discrimination or to perpetuate it; and

WHEREAS, the use of masculine nouns, pronouns and adjectives throughout the Constitution, though grammatically correct, might give an impression that the responsibilities, rights, and elected as well as appointed government positions are open only to men; and

WHEREAS, the State of Hawaii should actively encourage and afford the opportunity for both men and women to participate in all levels of government; and

WHEREAS, a change in the language of the State Constitution would affirmatively indicate to all people of Hawaii that they are an important part of society and expected to participate in government, regardless of their gender; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that this body hereby adopt a policy of using non-discriminatory nouns, pronouns and adjectives in the State Constitution and request the Committee on Style to effectuate this policy during its review of all committee proposals; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that, other rules of this Convention notwithstanding, the Committee on Style is instructed to implement this policy not only in the proposals which come before it but in all of the present Constitution; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that in carrying out the policy expressed in this Resolution the Constitutional Convention finds it necessary and directs the Committee on Style to submit a committee proposal conforming the Constitution to this policy where necessary and deleting as no longer necessary the second paragraph of Article XIV, Section 13, which reads: "Whenever any personal pronoun appears in this constitution, it shall be construed to mean either sex"; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the Committee on Style.

RESOLUTION NO. 14

REQUESTING THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF HAWAII TO REVIEW AND REDRESS THE PROBLEMS OF THE PUBLIC LIBRARIES AS PART OF THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION.

WHEREAS, the public libraries of the State of Hawaii are currently administered by the Department of Education, separate and apart from school libraries; and

WHEREAS, the competing needs of the educational system have resulted in internal disproportionate cutbacks in public library resources, and a seeming de-emphasis upon the importance of the public library system which serves the general public; and

WHEREAS, a variety of management studies, including those by the Legislative Auditor (1977), the Commission on Organization of Government (1977), and the Governor's Conference on Libraries and Information Services (1978), have concluded that the public libraries are being inadequately supported; and

WHEREAS, separate administration of the public library system would provide more equitable and independent recognition and evaluation of the library needs of the public, and of the importance of the public library system to the people; and

WHEREAS, long-standing problems encountered in ensuring adequate and appropriate public library resources for the State may be alleviated or solved by the establishment of a separate administrative entity for the public library system; and

WHEREAS, establishment of an independent library system to administer the public libraries of the State, separate and apart from school libraries which should remain a part of the educational system of which they are integral components, would enhance the responsiveness of the State to the needs of all the people; and

WHEREAS, the Committee on Education of this Constitutional Convention has in its Standing Committee Report No. 39, in recognition of the problems faced by the libraries, urged the Legislature to review and redress these problems; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED that this Constitutional Convention of the State of Hawaii of 1978 request and recommend with equal urgency that the Legislature of the State of Hawaii immediately review and redress the problems of the public libraries as part of the Department of Education and recommend as a possible solution the creation of an independent statewide system of public libraries; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the Governor, the Board of Education, and to the Legislature.

RESOLUTION NO. 15

AMENDING CONVENTION RULE 15.

WHEREAS, the issue of whether the motion of the Previous Question is to be governed by Convention Rule 15 or Rule 36 was referred to the Committee on Rules for clarification; and

WHEREAS, the motion of the Previous Question is different from the motion to close debate at a specified time; and

WHEREAS, in an effort to avoid future confusion regarding similar parliamentary matters; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that Rule 15 of the Rules of the Convention be and is hereby amended to read as follows:

"RULE 15. A quorum being present, [a] an affirmative majority vote of delegates present [shall be sufficient for the adoption of any motion or resolution or the taking of any action except where the affirmative vote of a greater number shall be required by these rules.] adopts any motion unless it is one of the particular motions that require a larger vote under parliamentary law or the Rules of the Convention."

RESOLUTION NO. 16

RELATING TO DEATH WITH DIGNITY.

WHEREAS, your Committee on Legislature is aware that modern science is capable of keeping a person alive through the use of life-support systems even though the person would not be alive but for the systems and has no hope of recovering; and

WHEREAS, the artificial prolongation of human life where none exists only serves to increase costs, both human and economic; and

WHEREAS, physicians cannot accommodate the wishes of relatives, family friends, and of the patient without incurring the risk of legal liability; and

WHEREAS, though a law defining death was enacted in 1978, Hawaii law does not provide for a procedure to die with dignity; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that all persons of sound mind shall have the right to refuse medical treatment for terminal illness and to die with dignity and that the legislature implement the sense and purpose of this Resolution; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

RESOLUTION NO. 17

REQUESTING THE RETURN OF KAHO'OLAWA TO THE STATE FOR USE AS A CULTURAL SANCTUARY.

WHEREAS, the Island of Kaho'olawe has been unofficially under the jurisdiction of the United States Navy since Kaho'olawe Ranch subleased it to the Navy in 1941, and officially with the issuance of Executive Order 10436 on February 25, 1953, when President Eisenhower directed the Navy to assume complete authority over Kaho'olawe during the time of the Korean conflict; and

WHEREAS, the deep spirit of Hawaii and the movement among Hawaiians to regain their culture and to help regenerate the roots of that culture by opening up access to the land has again surfaced in the Kaho'olawe movement; and

WHEREAS, the people are quite concerned, for so much in Hawaiian culture centers on the 'aina and the spirit of the land; and

WHEREAS, the bombing and destruction of Kaho'olawe are contrary to the very essence of aloha 'aina, the love and reverence the Hawaiians have toward their land; and

WHEREAS, the Island of Kaho'olawe is rich in archaeological findings significant to the culture of Hawaii; and

WHEREAS, because of the historical, cultural and archaeological significance of the Island, it is essential that Kaho'olawe once again be returned to Hawaii for use as a living cultural sanctuary; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the United States Navy is requested to cease its bombing, begin clearing the Island of all materiel and unexploded ordnance, and return the Island of Kaho'olawe to the State for use as a living cultural sanctuary; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the Secretary of the Navy, the members of Hawaii's delegation to Congress, the Governor of the State of Hawaii, the members of the State Legislature, and the Mayor and Council of Maui County.

RESOLUTION NO. 18

REQUESTING THE LEGISLATURE TO AMEND THE RETIREMENT SYSTEM LAW.

WHEREAS, public employees are entitled under present statutes to retirement benefits upon completion of at least 5 years of service and reaching the age of 55, 25 years of service, or 10 years of service as a judge, elective officer, or chief clerk or sergeant-at-arms of both legislative houses; and

WHEREAS, the 10-year retirement provision was enacted in 1969 for elective officers and judges and in 1975 for the chief clerks and sergeants-at-arms, and in addition these retirees receive a 3.5 percent retirement allowance while other public employees receive only 2 percent; and

WHEREAS, as a result of these differences in statutory benefits, an elective officer, judge, chief clerk, or sergeant-at-arms would receive more benefits than a general public employee even though both served the same number of years and paid the same amounts into the retirement system; and

WHEREAS, based upon a salary of $1,000 a month and 10 years of service, an elective officer, etc. would receive $350 a month in benefits as compared with $200 a month for a general employee; and

WHEREAS, present law allows elective officers, etc. to retire after only 10 years of service instead of waiting for age 55 or 25 years of service like other employees, and thus it is possible that elective officers, etc. would receive more overall benefits since they could start receiving benefits at an earlier age; and

WHEREAS, the present law allows a great inequity favoring elective officers, judges, chief clerks, and sergeants-at-arms over all other public employees and represents favored treatment for a small group of people; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the Legislature of the State of Hawaii is requested to amend the state retirement system law, removing the inequities discussed herein as soon as possible; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the presiding officers and the majority and minority leaders of the next State Legislature.

RESOLUTION NO. 19

REQUESTING THE LEGISLATURE TO REFRAIN FROM ENACTING LEGISLATION APPLICABLE ONLY TO CERTAIN COUNTIES.

WHEREAS, the people and governments of the various counties are entitled to equal treatment in state legislation and to the assurance that the laws of this State will apply equally to all of its people regardless of where they live; and

WHEREAS, to this end, Article VII, Sections 1 and 2, provide that each political subdivision shall have and exercise such powers as shall be conferred under general laws and power to frame and adopt a charter for self-government as prescribed by general law; and

WHEREAS, although the general intent of requiring general laws is to prevent discrimination among the various counties by the State Legislature, and special laws applying only to specific counties or to a single county have been declared void; and

WHEREAS, the Legislature has in the past enacted laws which are in essence special laws applicable only to certain counties, but these laws have been upheld because they are based on a classification by population of the various counties; and

WHEREAS, although the Legislature could not enact a special law applicable only, for example, to the City and County of Honolulu, it could enact a law applicable to counties with a population of 200,000 or more (which is the City and County of Honolulu) since this is a classification of counties and qualifies as a general law; and

WHEREAS, the classification system could also make laws applicable only to the neighbor island counties, and in either case the classification system makes a mockery out of the intent and purpose of the general law requirement; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the Legislature of the State of Hawaii refrain from enacting laws which are applicable to less than all of the counties, whether by means of classification or otherwise; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the presiding officers and majority and minority leaders of the Legislature.

RESOLUTION NO. 20

AMENDING STANDING RULES OF THE CONVENTION: RULES 24 AND 32.

BE IT RESOLVED that Rules of the Convention are amended as follows:

"RULE 24. The rules of the Convention shall be observed in the Committee of the Whole so far as they may be applicable except that the Committee of the Whole cannot adjourn the Convention; no question may be laid on the table; the previous question shall not be ordered; [and] the motion to postpone indefinitely shall not be in order [.] and a roll call cannot be ordered in the Committee of the Whole."

"RULE 32. The vote upon any question shall be taken by the ayes and noes and entered on the journal, on motion made and seconded before the question is put and upon the request of at least [ten delegates.] one-fourth (1/4) of the delegates present."

"[A delegate may pass the first time his/her name is called by the clerk on any vote, but if s/he remains silent on the next call of his/her name, his/her vote shall be recorded as voting with the affirmative.]"

RESOLUTION NO. 21

AMENDING STANDING RULES OF THE CONVENTION: RULE 61.

BE IT RESOLVED that Rule 61 of the Convention be and is hereby amended to read as follows:

"RULE 61. On the question of the agreement upon any proposal on Third Reading, the vote shall be taken by ayes and noes and entered on the journal, and no proposal shall be declared adopted unless at least [fifty-two] sixty-eight delegates to the Convention shall have voted in favor of the adoption of the same."

RESOLUTION NO. 22

REQUESTING THE COMMITTEE ON STYLE TO CONSIDER ALL PORTIONS OF THE CONSTITUTION AS TO PHRASEOLOGY.

WHEREAS, Constitutional Convention Rules 18(b) and 59 limit the Committee on Style to consideration of committee proposals referred to the Committee; and

WHEREAS, Constitutional Convention Rule 62 does not appear to contemplate changes to the phraseology of portions of the Constitution not referred to the Committee on Style when it performs the functions required under that rule; and

WHEREAS, in its deliberations it appears that the Committee on Style has discovered various portions of the Constitution which appear to be in need of proper phraseology which do not appear to be within the Committee's jurisdiction; and

WHEREAS, the 1968 Constitutional Convention's Committee on Style functioned under the same constraints, and thus it appears that many portions of the Constitution have not been considered for the purpose of phraseology since it was originally written; and

WHEREAS, the Committee on Style should be authorized to review all portions of the Constitution, whether or not referred to it by committee proposal, for phraseology in order that the Constitution use the same phrasing throughout; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that this body hereby requests the Committee on Style to consider the phraseology used in all portions of the Constitution whether or not referred to the Committee by committee proposal; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Committee on Style set forth all recommended changes necessitated by this Resolution when it makes the report required by Constitutional Convention Rule 62; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the Committee on Style.

RESOLUTION NO. 23

RELATING TO CODIFICATION OF THE GOVERNMENTAL SUNSHINE AND ACCESS PRINCIPLES.

WHEREAS, all political power of this State is inherent in the people; and the responsibility for the exercise thereof rests with the people; and

WHEREAS, all government is founded on this authority; and

WHEREAS, the opening up of governmental processes to public scrutiny and participation is the only viable and reasonable method of protecting the people's interest; and

WHEREAS, access to all discussions, deliberations, decisions, actions, regulations and services of government and its agencies, except where compelling interest of the State or its political subdivisions is to the contrary, as provided by law, is necessary for public scrutiny and participation; and

WHEREAS, a lack of a mechanism for decentralized governmental sunshine and access would be discriminating to working people, poor and inarticulate, handicapped, and rural and neighbor island people; and

WHEREAS, today's principal means for decentralized communication and information exchanges are electronic; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by this Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that a codification of the governmental sunshine and access principles be extended to all bodies of government; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that these principles of sunshine and access be decentralized through electronic means, thereby avoiding discrimination; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

RESOLUTION NO. 24

REQUESTING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A STUDY COMMISSION TO INVESTIGATE THE WRONGS COMMITTED AGAINST, AND THE EXTENT OF THE INJURIES TO, THE HAWAIIAN PEOPLE AND TO RECOMMEND MEANS OF REDRESS.

WHEREAS, the people of the State of Hawaii recognize the wrongs committed against the Hawaiian people when, in 1893, the kingdom of Hawaii, the lawful and indigenous government of Hawaii, was unlawfully overthrown by a group of non-Hawaiian residents, all of whom conspired with the United States minister and the Armed Forces of the United States; and

WHEREAS, on December 18, 1893, in a message to the Congress President Cleveland did recognize this wrong in a statement he issued which acknowledged that "by an act of war, committed with the participation of a diplomatic representative of the United States and without the authority of the Congress, the government of a feeble but friendly and confiding people has been overthrown"; that "a substantial wrong has thus been done which a due regard for our national character as well as the rights of the injured people requires that we endeavor to repair"; and that "the United States cannot fail to vindicate its honor and its sense of justice by an earnest effort to make all possible reparation"; and

WHEREAS, a claim for repair of these wrongs to the Hawaiian people was presented to the Government of the United States of America by Queen Liliuokalani, the lawful monarch of Hawaii, and on July 15, 1893 a petition for redress was also presented by the Hawaiian Patriotic League, representing the Hawaiians; and

WHEREAS, in 1898 Hawaii was annexed to the United States, and by such annexation, among other things, the United States acquired ownership of vast landholdings that had been common property of the Hawaiians prior to the overthrow of their government; and

WHEREAS, the Constitutional Convention of 1978 recognizes that the Hawaiian people can never be made whole again for the wrong that was committed; and

WHEREAS, the people of the State of Hawaii have looked to and relied on the federal government to take the steps to investigate the wrongs committed and to provide redress if necessary; and

WHEREAS, Senate Joint Resolution No. 4 was introduced in the Senate of the United States on January 10, 1977 by Mr. Inouye and Mr. Matsunaga; and

WHEREAS, upon approval, Senate Joint Resolution No. 4 will establish a Hawaiian Native Claims Settlement Study Commission to conduct a study of the culture, needs and concerns of Hawaiians; the nature of the wrong committed against, and the extent of the injuries to, the Hawaiians by reason of the actions listed below regarding the overthrow of the indigenous and lawful government of the Hawaiian people; and the various means to remedy such wrongs; and to submit a report of its findings of the means and recommendations to remedy such wrongs to the Congress; and

WHEREAS, Senate Joint Resolution No. 4 passed the Senate of the United States during the 1977 session; and

WHEREAS, on May 23, 1978, a majority of the House of Representatives of the United States voted to support Senate Joint Resolution No. 4, which fell short of the necessary two-thirds vote; and

WHEREAS, on September 8, 1978, Senate Joint Resolution No. 4 was recommitted to the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs for further committee work; and

WHEREAS, it is essential to the Hawaiians and all the people of the State of Hawaii that the federal government conduct an investigation of the wrongs committed upon the Hawaiian people, which could be accomplished through the Hawaiian Native Claims Settlement Study Commission; and

WHEREAS, because of the wrongs committed to the Hawaiian people, it is essential to Hawaiians and all people of the State of Hawaii that there be a remedy for these wrongs committed, the recommendation for which could be developed by the Hawaiian Native Claims Settlement Study Commission; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs is requested to return Senate Joint Resolution No. 4 to the House of Representatives of the United States for a vote; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the House of Representatives of the United States act favorably on Senate Joint Resolution No. 4; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the United States, the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, the members of the House of Representatives of the United States, the members of Hawaii's delegation to Congress, the President of the Senate of the United States and the Governor of the State of Hawaii.

RESOLUTION NO. 25

REQUESTING REVIEW OF THE "INSANITY" DEFENSE.

WHEREAS, the "insanity" defense evolved as a means of avoiding capital punishment at a period in history when cruel and unusual capital punishment was widely accepted and used; and

WHEREAS, the "insanity" defense is presently used as a means of possible confinement in a hospital environment; and

WHEREAS, an accused who is found "not guilty by reason of insanity" can be released on condition or discharged from custody at any time into the community at large; and

WHEREAS, the penal obligations and responsibilities for one's acts are being ignored because the "insanity" defense is complete and absolute; and

WHEREAS, the result has been a grave loss of public confidence in our judicial system; and

WHEREAS, a further result has been a significant loss of respect for the law by both the law-abiding members of the public and the perpetrators of criminal acts; and

WHEREAS, many members of the public believe that our existing law enforcement statutes are ineffectual in coping with the growing crime rate; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the Legislature of the State of Hawaii be directed to review the "insanity" defense of Chapter 704 of the Hawaii Revised Statutes; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the office of the Governor, the office of the Chief Justice, and the members of the Legislature of the State of Hawaii at their next regular session.

RESOLUTION NO. 26

RELATING TO THE CARE AND MAINTENANCE OF STATE MONEYS.

WHEREAS, the care and maintenance of State moneys are of great concern, and substantial sums of public funds are held in depositories until needed to pay for the State's obligations; and

WHEREAS, the assets of commercial banks in the State totalled $3.4 billion as of June 30, 1977; and the total assets of savings and loan institutions in the State equalled $2.4 billion on that same date; and

WHEREAS, as of June 30, 1977, only $900,000 of the State's funds, representing 0.3 percent of the total of public funds held in depositories, was deposited with savings and loan associations, and the remainder, 99.7 percent of public funds, was deposited in commercial banks, which were able and willing to provide acceptable collateral; and

WHEREAS, the State Director of Finance is responsible, with the approval of the Governor, for the deposit of public funds; and the Director of Finance is required to comply with laws relating to such funds and to develop policies related thereto; and

WHEREAS, depositories holding public funds are required to furnish collateral for such deposits; and federally insured residential mortgage loans are one type of such collateral; and

WHEREAS, the savings and loan industry is a significant segment of the State's financial framework; and

WHEREAS, the primary objective of the savings and loan industry is to provide financing for the purchase and construction of homes in the State; and

WHEREAS, federally insured home loan mortgages constitute the principal asset of savings and loan associations, and such mortgages are secure and stable investments; and

WHEREAS, the Constitution of the State of Hawaii addresses many diverse aspects of the State's financial structure, including taxes, the budget, and audit and expenditure controls; and

WHEREAS, the subject of the care and maintenance of public funds is not addressed in the Constitution of the State of Hawaii; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED that public funds should be distributed on a more equitable basis among the State's financial institutions, provided that such deposits are secured with approved collateral; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the Director of Finance should examine the State's collateralization requirements for the deposit of public funds to allow more public funds to be deposited with savings and loan institutions, which are able and willing to provide acceptable collateral for such deposits; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the State, and in particular the Director of Finance, should actively pursue means to equitably distribute public funds among the financial institutions of the State, including savings and loan associations, within a reasonable period of time; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the Governor of the State of Hawaii, the members of the State Legislature, and the State Director of Finance.

RESOLUTION NO. 27

REQUESTING THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF HAWAII TO STUDY THE NEED FOR A NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION FOR THE PURPOSE OF PROPOSING AMENDMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION, AND TO PETITION CONGRESS IF SUCH A NEED IS FOUND TO EXIST.

WHEREAS, Article V of the United States Constitution provides for the calling of an unlimited national constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing amendments to the United States Constitution; and

WHEREAS, the last national constitutional convention was held in 1787, and since then more than 300 applications from state legislatures have been presented seeking such a convention; and

WHEREAS, there have been more than 200 state constitutional conventions in the various states, including three in the State of Hawaii; and

WHEREAS, forty-six of the fifty states have petitioned Congress for a national constitutional convention in the past 14 years; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that this body hereby requests the Legislature to study the need for a national constitutional convention for the purpose of proposing amendments to the United States Constitution and to petition Congress for a convention if such a need is found to exist; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the Governor and members of the Legislature.

RESOLUTION NO. 28

REQUESTING THE LEGISLATURE OF THE STATE OF HAWAII TO ADDRESS THE PROBLEM OF RISING HEALTH CARE COSTS AND TO ESTABLISH LEGISLATION TO REDUCE MEDICAL CARE COSTS IN THE STATE OF HAWAII.

WHEREAS, the future of Hawaii's people to obtain needed medical care at a reasonable cost is being readily eroded; and

WHEREAS, Article VIII, Section 1, of the Hawaii State Constitution states: "The State shall provide for the protection and promotion of the public health"; and

WHEREAS, 7.3 percent of the total personal income of all the people in Hawaii was spent on health care costs in 1977; and

WHEREAS, the per capita expenditure for health care services has risen approximately 53 percent in the last 2 years and 149 percent in the last 7 years; and

WHEREAS, the cost for a day in a Hawaii hospital bed is approximately $200 and rising; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that this body hereby requests the Legislature to address and resolve the problem of rising health care costs throughout the State; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the Governor, the Department of Health, and to the Legislature.

RESOLUTION NO. 29

REQUESTING THE REVISOR OF STATUTES TO EFFECT NECESSARY REARRANGEMENT, RENUMBERING AND TECHNICAL CHANGES OF SECTIONS AND ARTICLES WITHIN THE CONSTITUTION AS MAY BE NECESSARY AFTER THE NOVEMBER ELECTIONS.

WHEREAS, various amendments to the State Constitution have been framed by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 for submission to the electorate for ratification or rejection; and

WHEREAS, in the exercise of the electorate's freedom to ratify or reject the several proposals, one or some of the proposals may be rejected by the people of this State; and

WHEREAS, such ratification of some and rejection of others may require rearrangement, renumbering and technical changes of the amendments ratified and parts of the State

Constitution affected by such ratification or rejection when the Constitutional Convention is not in session; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the Revisor of Statutes of Hawaii is respectfully requested by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 to effect such necessary rearrangement, renumbering and technical changes of the sections within the articles of the State Constitution, as may be affected, for proper form and arrangement and proper order in the State Constitution in the event that any or some of the amendments to the State Constitution proposed by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 are not ratified by the electorate; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a duly authenticated copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the Revisor of Statutes.

RESOLUTION NO. 30

RELATING TO PROVIDING FOR THE SUBMISSION TO THE PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF HAWAII OF THE AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF THE STATE OF HAWAII OF 1978.

WHEREAS, pursuant to Section 2 of Article XV of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii, the duly elected delegates of this Constitutional Convention of the State of Hawaii of 1978 have assembled at Honolulu from the 5th day of July, 1978 for the purpose of proposing amendments to the Constitution; and

WHEREAS, various amendments to the Constitution have been framed by this Constitutional Convention; and

WHEREAS, Section 2 of Article XV of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii requires that the proposed amendments to the Constitution be submitted to the people of the State in the form of the ballot attached hereto for ratification or rejection; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Hawaii of 1978, that the proposed amendments to the Constitution be submitted to the people of the State of Hawaii in the form of the ballot attached hereto for ratification or rejection at the general election to be held on the 7th day of November, 1978. Persons possessing the qualifications to vote for representatives to the legislature of the State of Hawaii shall be entitled to vote on the ratification or rejection of said amendments. Such submission shall be by ballot and shall be conducted and the results thereof determined in conformity with Section 2, Article XV of the Constitution. The ballot for such submission shall be printed and distributed by the lieutenant governor of the State of Hawaii and shall be substantially in the form hereto attached; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the lieutenant governor is hereby requested, in the case of any conflicting votes on the same ballot, to recognize the specific vote over the general; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the returns of said submission shall be made by the election officers directly to the lieutenant governor, who shall certify the results of the submission to the governor; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that the lieutenant governor is hereby requested to do whatever is necessary to have the proposed amendments properly submitted to the electorate.

AMENDMENTS 1-34 PROPOSED BY CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

1. 12 MEMBER JURY; CIVIL CASE AMOUNT. (Article I, Sections 13 and 14)

If adopted, this amendment provides that:

o

a person can have a jury trial in a civil case where the amount in question is $1,000 or more rather than $100 or more as it now reads.

- o a person shall have a 12 member jury in a criminal jury trial.

2. INDEPENDENT GRAND JURY COUNSEL. (Article I, Section 11)

If adopted, this amendment provides:

- o an independent lawyer to advise the grand jury.
- o a way to choose those lawyers, and requires that the legislature set their pay and how long they shall work.

3. RIGHT TO PRIVACY. (Article I, Section 6)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o adds a new section on the right to privacy for people to do certain personal things, and controls the use of some personal information about themselves.
- o directs the legislature to carry out this section.

4. OPEN PRIMARY ELECTION. (Article II, Section 4)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o allows a person to vote in any election without letting anyone know what party he or she prefers.
- o keeps each person's party preference a secret.

5. RESIGNATION OF CANDIDATES FROM PUBLIC OFFICE.
(Article II, Section 7)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o makes any elected public officer who wants to run for another office quit before running for any other office if the term of office sought begins before the end of his elected term.

6. ELECTIONS; PARTIAL PUBLIC FINANCING; SPENDING AND CONTRIBUTION LIMITS. (Article II, Sections 5, 6 and 8)

If adopted, this amendment provides that the legislature shall:

- o create a campaign fund to pay part of the cost of state and local political campaigns for public office.
- o set a spending limit for all candidates.
- o limit the amount a person may give to any candidate or legal campaign group.
- o require primary election to precede general election by 45 or more days.

7. LEGISLATIVE TERMS, FUNCTIONS AND PROCEDURES; SALARY COMMISSION.
(Article III, Sections 9, 12 and 15; Article XVIII, Section 2; Article IV, Sections 6 and 7)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o requires the appointment of a legislative salary commission by November 30, 1978 and every 8 years from then on to set legislative salaries, which will go into effect for the following legislature unless the governor or the legislature disapproves.
- o makes the legislature set a deadline for all bills to be introduced and also requires a recess after the deadline of not less than 5 days between the 20th and 40th session day.
- o opens to the public all decision-making meetings of legislative committees.
- o increases the waiting period required between the time when the printed bill is distributed and its third or final reading from 24 hours to 48 hours.
- o staggers the terms of office for senators starting from the 1978 general election so that about half of the senators will be elected at each general election.
- o provides for placement of holdover senators and method of keeping the staggered terms for the senate upon reapportionment.

8. REAPPORTIONMENT PROCEDURES. (Article IV, Sections 1, 2 and 8)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o increases the time between the changing of boundaries for voting areas from 8 to 10 years beginning in 1981.
- o allows the commission 30 more days (from 120 to 150 days) in which to file its reapportionment plan.
- o requires the reapportionment commission to also reapportion the United States congressional districts.

9. EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS; TERM LIMITS. (Article V, Sections 1, 2 and 6; Article XVIII, Section 4)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o limits the governor and lieutenant governor to two terms in a row beginning this year.
- o puts units with similar purposes and functions in the same executive department.

10. COURTS; JUDICIAL SELECTION; DISCIPLINE. (Article VI, Sections 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5; Article XVIII, Section 5)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o creates an intermediate court of appeals, and makes district courts a constitutional rather than legislative creation.
- o makes courts limit the time they have to finish their cases.
- o removes minimum salaries for judges from the constitution and creates a salary commission.
- o requires judges to be State of Hawaii residents and citizens of the State and the United States who are licensed attorneys.
- o adds a judicial selection commission to recommend (1) judges for the supreme court, court of appeals or circuit court, who are then picked by the governor and approved by the senate; and (2) judges for district courts, who are then picked by the chief justice of the supreme court.
- o gives the supreme court more power to discipline judges and starts a judicial discipline commission.

11. STATE SPENDING LIMIT; TAX REFUND. (Article VII, Sections 4, 5, 6, 8 and 9; Article VIII, Section 5)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o limits State general fund spending to the estimated rate of growth of the State's economy and applies the limit to the governor's budget and legislative appropriations.
- o gives taxpayers a refund or credit whenever the general fund balance is more than five percent of general fund revenues for two years in a row.
- o prohibits deficit spending unless the governor says that the public health, safety or welfare is threatened.
- o requires the State to share in the cost of any new programs or increased services which the legislature requires that counties provide.

12. DEBT LIMITATION; EXCLUSIONS. (Article VII, Sections 11 and 13)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o limits the principal and interest on State debt to a percentage of general fund revenues.
- o keeps the legislature from approving more bonds than are allowed under the debt limit.
- o requires that each general obligation bond be repaid within twenty-five years.
- o excludes certain bonds from the State and county debt limits.

- o automatically cancels appropriations financed by general obligation bonds or general funds if not under contract or spent within three years.

13. SPECIAL PURPOSE REVENUE BONDS. (Article VII, Sections 12 and 13)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o allows the legislature, by a two-thirds vote of each house, to pass enabling legislation to authorize issuance of special purpose revenue bonds if the issuance of such bonds is found to be in the public interest by the legislature.
- o allows the issuance of special purpose revenue bonds for manufacturing, processing or industrial enterprises, utilities serving the general public, health care facilities provided to the public by non-profit corporations, and low and moderate income government housing programs.
- o requires a second two-thirds vote of each house of the legislature before bonds can be issued for any project or program.
- o requires that State credit cannot be used directly or indirectly and State shall not be liable for repayment of bonds.
- o allows the legislature to authorize the counties to issue such bonds but requires a two-thirds vote of the county council before such bonds may be issued.
- o excludes such bonds from the State or county debt limits.

14. REVENUES; BUDGET; POST-AUDIT. (Article VII, Sections 7, 8 and 10)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o establishes a council on revenues to prepare State revenue estimates and requires the governor and legislature to consider such estimates in developing the State budget and making appropriations.
- o provides for direct submission by the judiciary of its budget to the legislature.
- o clarifies State auditor's duty to include post-audits of programs and performance of State agencies.

15. TAX REVIEW AND TAX CONFORMANCE. (Article VII, Sections 2 and 3)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o allows the legislature to conform all or any portion of the State income tax laws to the federal income tax law.

- o establishes a tax review commission to evaluate the State's tax structure and recommend revenue and tax policy.

16. COUNTY POWER TO TAX REAL PROPERTY. (Article VIII, Sections 3 and 5; Article XVIII, Section 6)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o grants the counties the exclusive power to exercise all functions, powers and duties relating to the taxation of real property.
- o includes a transitional section which provides (1) for effective date on July 1, 1981, (2) for uniform policies and methods of assessing real property by agreement of a majority of the counties or, in the absence of such agreement, by general law, and (3) for dedications of land for specific use, for assessment at its value in such use, and for real property tax exemptions, both of which shall not be altered for a period of eleven years, except that increases for either may be granted by agreement of a majority of the counties.

17. PUBLIC HEALTH AND WELFARE. (Article IX, Sections 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 9 and 10)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o allows flexibility in programs for care of handicapped.
- o gives the legislature power to establish eligibility standards for public assistance.
- o deletes the power to conserve and develop natural beauty, which is shifted to the article on Conservation and Development of Resources.
- o authorizes the State to provide for (1) public safety, (2) the security of the elderly, (3) preservation of cultural resources, and (4) promotion of a healthful environment.

18. POPULATION GROWTH MANAGEMENT. (Article IX, Section 6)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o requires the State and its counties to plan and manage the growth of the population except that each county may plan and manage its growth in a more restrictive manner than the State.

19. BOARD OF EDUCATION. (Article X, Sections 2 and 3; Article XVIII, Section 7)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o beginning with the 1980 general elections, members of the board of education will be elected in a nonpartisan manner from two at-large school board districts, one district for Oahu and the second district for the neighbor islands. Each school board district will consist of several departmental school districts.

- o provides that at least one member of the board of education live in each departmental school district.
- o provides that the board of education has jurisdiction, subject to general laws, over the internal organization and management of the public school system.

- o clarifies the board of regents' exclusive jurisdiction, subject to statewide laws, over the internal organization and management of the University of Hawaii.

22. WATER RESOURCES: PROTECTION AND CONTROL. (Article XI, Section 7)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o obligates the State to protect, control, and regulate the uses of Hawaii's water resources for the benefit of the people of Hawaii.
- o requires the legislature to insure that there is a water resources agency to help protect, control, and regulate the water.

23. ENVIRONMENT AND RESOURCE PROTECTION. (Article XI, Sections 1 and 9)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o requires the State and counties to conserve and protect the natural beauty and natural resources of Hawaii.
- o requires the State to promote the development and use of these resources in a manner consistent with conserving these resources and promoting the self-sufficiency of the State.

- o requires the State to hold all public natural resources in trust for the benefit of the people of Hawaii.
- o gives each person the right to a clean and healthful environment as defined by law .
- o gives each person the right to sue to enforce this right but the legislature may limit and regulate this right in a reasonable manner.

24. LAND MANAGEMENT; AGRICULTURAL LAND. (Article XI, Sections 3 and 4)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o requires the State to conserve and protect agricultural lands, promote diversified agriculture, increase agricultural self-sufficiency, and assure that agriculturally suitable lands will be available.
- o requires the State to identify which agricultural lands are needed to promote the future of agriculture.
- o requires that lands identified as important for agriculture shall not be used for any other purpose unless (1) certain standards and criteria set by the legislature are met, and (2) the change is approved by a two-thirds vote of the governmental body which is to approve changes in the use of the land.
- o permits the State to acquire interests in real property in order to control development and land use; deems exercise of such power to be for a public use and purpose.

25. CONTROL OF MARINE RESOURCES. (Article XI, Section 6)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o gives the State the power to manage and control the ocean waters and lands which are located within the boundaries of the State.
- o reserves to the State the right to manage and control ocean waters and lands which are located outside the boundaries of the State as long as federal or international law does not prevent the State from doing so.
- o adds to the list of areas not open to the public those areas where a state-licensed mariculture operation is operating but requires the legislature to establish guidelines for mariculture operations to protect the public's use and enjoyment of the reefs.

26. RESTRICTIONS ON NUCLEAR ENERGY. (Article XI, Section 8)

If adopted, this amendment:

- o requires anyone wishing to construct a nuclear fission power plant or dispose of radioactive material to receive the approval of two-thirds of the members of each house of the legislature.

27. DEPARTMENT OF HAWAIIAN HOME LANDS. (Article XII, Section 1; Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, as amended; Sections 204, 212, 213 and 221)

- o says that governmental writing meant for the public must be in plain language.
- o changes from 10 to 9 years the time when voters must be asked if they want to have another constitutional convention.
- o lets the next constitutional convention start a month earlier, giving them at least 5 months (instead of 4) before the general election.

34. TECHNICAL AND STYLE CHANGES.

If adopted, this amendment:

- o changes the Constitution where the subject may now be unconstitutional or unnecessary under the Constitution of the United States.
- o changes style and language.
- o replaces words which sound like they apply to only men or women by words which apply to everyone.
- o makes small changes which are related to the main purposes of the other amendments.

RESOLUTION NO. 31

AMENDING CONVENTION RULE 37.

WHEREAS, there are still certain issues which should be reconsidered before the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 adjourns; and

WHEREAS, in order to so consider such issues as additions to existing committee proposals without considering the deletion of those ideas which the Convention has already accepted, Rule 37 of the Convention concerning reconsideration should be amended; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that Rule 37 of the Rules of the Convention be amended to read as follows:

"RULE 37. A motion to reconsider any vote must be made before the end of the second Convention day after the day on which the vote proposed to be reconsidered was taken, and by a delegate who voted in the majority and the same majority shall be required to adopt a motion to reconsider as was required to take the action to be reconsidered[.]; provided that a motion to reconsider any committee proposal may be made at any time in order to add new material to a previously considered committee proposal."

RESOLUTION NO. 32

RELATING TO SUBMISSION AND INFORMATION.

WHEREAS, the Committee on Submission and Information is empowered by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 to promote and disseminate to the public, information regarding the proposed amendments which will be placed upon the general election ballot; and

WHEREAS, the Committee on Submission and Information will be extensively utilizing the print and electronic media to transmit their message to the people of Hawaii; and

WHEREAS, there are 31 delegates of the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 who are candidates for public office this fall; and

WHEREAS, should the Committee on Submission and Information inadvertently feature any of these candidates in the mass media, it would unduly advantage that candidate; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED that the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 mandate that the Committee on Submission and Information conscientiously avoid the featuring of any candidate for office this year by using his/her name, photograph, voice or film; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that no officers of the Convention shall authorize candidates to speak on behalf of the Convention concerning the work of the Convention.

RESOLUTION NO. 33

REQUESTING THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS TO EXEMPT HAWAII FROM THE MULTILINGUAL REQUIREMENTS OF TITLE III OF THE VOTING RIGHTS ACT, AS AMENDED IN 1975.

WHEREAS, in 1975 the United States Congress amended the Voting Rights Act, and such amendments were designed to encourage full participation in the electoral process by the citizens of the country; and

WHEREAS, one of the amendments to Title III of the act requires the states to provide voting assistance to certain foreign language minority groups with high illiteracy rates; and

WHEREAS, the guidelines of the United States Justice Department recognized four subgroups of Asian-Americans, the Japanese, Chinese, Filipinos and Koreans, but failed to consider the various dialects spoken by the subgroups; and

WHEREAS, to comply with the intent of the congressional mandate, Hawaii accommodated such dialects in providing voter materials in the 1976 elections; and such assistance included printing registration and voting forms and informational materials in Ilocano,

Japanese and Chinese, and providing persons to orally assist members of the Japanese, Chinese and Filipino subgroups at the polls; and

WHEREAS, Hawaii's state and county governments expended more than $500,000 to provide the required multi-lingual assistance in the 1976 elections; and

WHEREAS, statistics compiled by the office of the Lieutenant Governor reveal that only 191 persons requested foreign language ballots in the 1976 elections; and

WHEREAS, the Voting Rights Act defines an illiterate person as one who has not completed the fifth elementary grade in any school, but there are many individuals in Hawaii who have learned to read and write the English language without formal education; and such individuals would therefore not require a foreign language ballot; and

WHEREAS, another reason for the low demand for foreign language ballots may be the substantial decline in the illiteracy rate in English of the foreign language subgroups since 1970; and

WHEREAS, the experience of the 1976 elections indicates that the printing of voter information forms and ballots in foreign languages is a financial burden on the State, especially when the cost-effectiveness ratio of such assistance is very low; and

WHEREAS, to this date the Constitution of the State has not been translated into any foreign language; and to comply with the Voting Rights Act, the office of the Lieutenant Governor must provide multi-lingual voter information and material with respect to the amendments to the State's Constitution proposed by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978; and

WHEREAS, since 1968 the office of the Lieutenant Governor has developed and conducted various voter registration and education programs, and such programs have been successful, as indicated by the 6% increase in voter turnout between the 1974 general election and the 1976 general election; and

WHEREAS, in Hawaii the voter information programs of the office of the Lieutenant Governor have been more effective than the multi-lingual requirements of Title III of the Voting Rights Act in promoting voter participation; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the United States Congress be requested to exempt Hawaii from the multi-lingual requirements of Title III of the Voting Rights Act, as amended in 1975; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the Congress of the United States, the members of Hawaii's congressional delegation and the Lieutenant Governor of Hawaii.

RESOLUTION NO. 34

EXPRESSING DEEPEST APPRECIATION TO THE CON-CON PAGES, THE OFFICE OF THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, THE ALOHA COUNCIL OF BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA, THE GIRL SCOUT COUNCIL OF THE PACIFIC, AND THE CAMP FIRE - HAWAII COUNCIL FOR THEIR SPLENDID SERVICE TO THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF HAWAII OF 1978.

WHEREAS, the office of the Lieutenant Governor initiated the Con-Con Page Program, which provided young people, representing the Aloha Council of Boy Scouts of America, the Girl Scout Council of the Pacific, and the Camp Fire - Hawaii Council, to assist the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978; and

WHEREAS, the Con-Con pages facilitated the proceedings of the Convention by their dependable and diligent service, including providing assistance at the Convention's information desk and delivering messages, mail and published materials for the Convention; and

WHEREAS, the efforts and diligence of Samuel Adams, Ronse Akiu, Stephen Chang, Meiling Ching, Mari Dyer, Joechelle Flores, Rachel Fretwell, Tina Maria Garza, Charles Hemenway, Garrett Kashimoto, Charles Kealoha, Ardie Kepoo, Margaret Limm, Roy Machado, Michael Tamashiro, Lori Piikea Tomczyk and Warren Tyau, as participants of the Con-Con Page Program, are deserving of recognition; and

WHEREAS, the Con-Con pages volunteered their time and exemplify the finest qualities of Hawaii's youth; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that it express its deepest appreciation and aloha to the Con-Con pages, the office of the Lieutenant Governor, the Aloha Council of Boy Scouts of America, the Girl Scout Council of the Pacific, and the Camp Fire - Hawaii Council; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that certified copies of this Resolution be forwarded to each Con-Con page, the office of the Lieutenant Governor, the Aloha Council of Boy Scouts of America, the Girl Scout Council of the Pacific, and the Camp Fire - Hawaii Council.

RESOLUTION NO. 35

DIRECTING THE LEGISLATURE TO PROVIDE FOR THE REGULATION AND CONTROL OF RADIOACTIVE WASTE MATERIALS, INCLUDING THE DISPOSAL, STORAGE, AND TRANSPORTATION OF SUCH MATERIALS.

WHEREAS, the radioactive waste material produced by nuclear fission power plants is dangerous in the extreme; and

WHEREAS, one ounce of plutonium is enough to kill every human being on this planet if dispersed; and

WHEREAS, there is a high probability of sabotage and unavoidable accident occurring during the transportation, storage, and disposal of radioactive waste; and

WHEREAS, the State of Hawaii has a compelling state interest to protect its citizens and their environment from the dangers of radioactive contamination; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that this body hereby directs the Legislature to provide for the regulation and control of radioactive waste material, including the disposal, storage, and transportation of such material, so as to ensure the highest possible safety and health standards for this and future generations of Hawaii's people; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the Governor, the Director of the Department of Health, and to the Legislature.

RESOLUTION NO. 36

EXPRESSING DEEPEST APPRECIATION AND GRATITUDE TO THE CENTRAL SERVICES DIVISION AND THE PUBLIC WORKS DIVISION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF ACCOUNTING AND GENERAL SERVICES.

WHEREAS, the Department of Accounting and General Services has unstintingly and graciously performed many services and acts of kindness for the benefit of the Constitutional Convention of 1978; and

WHEREAS, Steven Fernandes provided invaluable assistance in preparing the contract for the Old Federal Building and William Lee provided invaluable assistance as head architect in drawing up the plans for the use of the facilities; and

WHEREAS, Hideo Murakami and Mike Tokunaga provided outstanding service as comptroller and deputy comptroller to the Convention; and

WHEREAS, Richard Ajimine, Ralph Ornellas, Kiyoshi Tagawa, Stephen Saiki and

Richard Fujikawa from the Cabinet Shop and Joel Fujita from the Paint Shop of the Physical Plant Operation and Maintenance Branch provided invaluable assistance in the making of nameplates, gavels, cabinets and other physical alterations and the painting of signs; and

WHEREAS, Danny Low, Building Maintenance Supervisor, Richard Lee and other members of the branch provided invaluable assistance in maintaining the facilities for the Convention; and

WHEREAS, Richard Nakamura, Division Chief, Akira Kubota, Building and Grounds Superintendent and George Higa, Procurement and Supply Specialist, provided valuable assistance in assuring that the administration of the various types of services provided functioned smoothly; and

WHEREAS, Roy Yokomura and Paul Moniz provided invaluable assistance in the speedy procurement of furniture and other supplies; and

WHEREAS, this unselfish and wholehearted cooperation shall not go unnoticed by this body; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the members of the Central Services Division and Public Works Division of the Department of Accounting and General Services be thanked for giving unselfishly of their time and for contributing to a smooth and successful convention session; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a duly certified copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the Central Services Division and the Public Works Division of the Department of Accounting and General Services.

WHEREAS, the State Foundation on Culture and the Arts, Alfred Preis, Executive Director of the State Foundation on Culture and the Arts, and Ronald Yamakawa, Art Specialist, coordinate and arrange for the placement of works of art in state buildings as part of the Art in State Buildings Program; and

WHEREAS, the State Foundation on Culture and the Arts, Alfred Preis and Ronald

Yamakawa furnished many beautiful paintings to the Convention, thus enhancing the physical surroundings of the Convention; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that it express its deepest appreciation and aloha to the State Foundation on Culture and the Arts, Alfred Preis, and Ronald Yamakawa; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a duly certified copy of this Resolution be forwarded to Alfred Preis, Executive Director of the State Foundation on Culture and the Arts.

RESOLUTION NO. 51

RELATING TO FREEDOM OF THE PRESS.

WHEREAS, the State of Hawaii Constitutional Convention of 1978 has expressed its concern with assuring individual freedom from unjustifiable intrusion by the government, as well as by private parties, by proposing an amendment to Article I to include a separate and distinct section devoted entirely to the right to privacy; and

WHEREAS, it is the express intention of this Convention that the right to privacy be recognized as a fundamental right for purposes of constitutional analysis; and

WHEREAS, concerns have been raised with respect to potential conflicts between said proposed amendment on the right to privacy and the freedom of the press, as guaranteed in both the United States Constitution and the Constitution of the State of Hawaii; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED that the Constitutional Convention's recognition of the right to privacy, as provided in said amendment, is not intended to violate the freedom of the press.

RESOLUTION NO. 52

EXPRESSING DEEP APPRECIATION TO THE UNIVERSITY OF HAWAII FOR ITS COOPERATION AND SERVICES RENDERED TO THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF HAWAII OF 1978.

WHEREAS, the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 has almost completed its deliberations and is about to take its place in history; and

WHEREAS, the Law School of the University of Hawaii has provided invaluable input on the legal aspects of the issues under consideration by the Convention, through the members of its faculty and through the papers on proposed constitutional amendments prepared by students in seminars on the Constitutional Convention offered at the law school; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that it take this means to express its appreciation to the Law School of the University of Hawaii; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly certified copies of this Resolution be transmitted to Ambrose Rosehill, Chairman of the Board of Regents, to President Fujio Matsuda, to Chancellor Douglas S. Yamamura, and to Acting Dean of the Law School, A. Jerome Dupont, at the University of Hawaii.

RESOLUTION NO. 53

EXPRESSING DEEP APPRECIATION AND GRATITUDE TO THE GENERAL SERVICES ADMINISTRATION.

WHEREAS, the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 has almost completed its deliberations and is about to take its place in history; and

WHEREAS, the work of the Convention could never have been completed without the cooperation rendered by the General Services Administration; and

WHEREAS, Richard Nee, Buildings Manager, and Harry Lee, Assistant Buildings Manager, provided invaluable assistance in maintaining the facilities for the Convention; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that this body express its deep appreciation and gratitude to Richard Nee and Harry Lee; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a duly certified copy of this Resolution be transmitted to the Public Buildings Service of the General Services Administration.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 9

Your standing Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing to which was referred the matter of the budget for the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978 begs leave to report as follows:

The purpose of this budget is to allocate the funds appropriated to the Constitutional Convention under Section 7, Act 17, Session Laws of Hawaii 1977, and Act 243, Session Laws of Hawaii 1978.

Your Committee received a proposed budget which was prepared by the temporary Chairman of the Convention through his Ad Hoc Budget Committee and which provided your Committee with much guidance in developing the budget. Your Committee would like to express its appreciation for the work of the temporary Chairman and his Ad Hoc Budget Committee in developing the proposed budget. Your Committee reviewed the proposed budget in detail and made the necessary adjustments.

However, your Committee anticipates that the budget may need some minor adjustments in the future. It was not possible for your Committee to anticipate all matters. The cost of certain items may have been underestimated and new expenses may arise in the future. Therefore, your Committee intends that upon adoption of the budget the President, in consultation with the chairperson of the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, be given the discretion to make any necessary adjustments in the budget in order to insure that the budget be kept within the appropriated sums. Your Committee feels that the President in consultation with the chairperson would be the appropriate authority to exercise this discretion, for it would be in conformity with his duties to insure that the Convention proceed and conclude in an orderly and timely fashion within the appropriated sums.

Your Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing is in accord with the budget in the form attached hereto and recommends its adoption; and recommends further that upon adoption of the budget, the President, in consultation with the chairperson of your Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, be given the discretion to make any necessary adjustments in the budget in order to insure that the budget be kept within the appropriated sums.

Signed by all members of the Committee. Delegate Lacy did not concur.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 10

Your Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing begs leave to report that Proposal Nos. 223 through 244, Stand. Com. Rep. No. 11 and Res. No. 5, RD. 1, have been printed and distributed.

Signed by Delegates Ledward, Chairperson; Crozier, Vice-Chairperson; Hayashida, Vice-Chairperson; Hale and Lacy, members.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 11

Your Committee on Rules, to which was referred Resolution No. 5, entitled: "RELATING TO PROPOSALS," begs leave to report as follows:

The purpose of this resolution is to set a date after which no proposal shall be introduced, except by committee.

In the Rules of the Convention, Rule 55 provides that the Convention may set a date after which no proposal shall be introduced, except by committee. Resolution No. 5 addresses this rule by establishing a deadline for the introduction of all individual proposals at 4 p.m. of July 31, 1978, except by committee.

Your committee finds that the request of the Lt. Governor's office that all amendments to the State Constitution be submitted to his office by September 20, 1978 (in order for the amendments to be put on the ballot for the General Election on November 7, 1978) may be restrictive for the Convention's timetable.

Resolution No. 5 recommends a July 31st deadline for the introduction of all individual proposals. Your committee finds that should the Lt. Governor's office be firm in its September 20th deadline, it will be necessary to amend Resolution No. 5 by amending the third paragraph to read: "BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that no proposal shall be introduced after 4 o'clock p.m. of July 24, 1978, subject to being extended on input from the Lt. Governor's office, except by committee...."

Your committee also recommends that further discussion be held with the Lt. Governor's office regarding the submission deadline of September 20th. If it is ascertained that the September 20th deadline may be extended, your committee recommends an extension of the July 24th deadline regarding the introduction of all individual proposals.

Your Committee on Rules is in accord with Resolution No. 5, as amended herein and recommends the adoption of the resolution in the form attached hereto as Resolution No. 5, RD. 1.

Signed by all members of the Committee. Delegate DiBianco did not concur.

RESOLUTION NO. 5, RD. 1

RELATING TO PROPOSALS.

WHEREAS, Rule 55 of the Rules of the Convention provides that the Convention may set a date after which no proposal shall be introduced, except by committee; and

WHEREAS, it is deemed necessary to establish such a date for the standing committees to proceed on their deliberation of the proposals and conclude their work in an orderly and timely manner; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that no proposal shall be introduced after 4 o'clock p.m. of July 24, 1978, subject to being extended on input from the Lieutenant Governor's office, except by committee; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that said time and date of 4 o'clock p.m. of July 24, 1978 may be waived or amended only by the affirmative vote of at least 68 delegates; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a certified copy of this Resolution be transmitted to each of the chairpersons of the standing committees of the Constitutional Convention of 1978.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 24

Your standing Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, to which was referred Resolution No. 8, entitled: "RELATING TO THE BUDGET" begs leave to report as follows:

The purpose of this resolution is to authorize the inclusion of the sum of $240,547 to the existing budget adopted by and for the 1978 Constitutional Convention.

By Act 17 of Special Session Laws of Hawaii 1977 and Act 243 of Session Laws of Hawaii 1978, the aggregate sum of $2,500,000 was appropriated by the State Legislature out of the general revenues of the State of Hawaii, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to the office of the Governor, or to the officers elected by the delegates if so designated by the Governor, for defraying the pre-session, session and post-session expenses of the 1978 Constitutional Convention; provided that, of the sum so appropriated, $240,547 may be contracted to the Legislative Reference Bureau for the following purposes: $200,000 for a citizen education program and $40,547 for staff services for the Constitutional Convention delegates.

The Constitutional Convention adopted its budget, which covered $2,259,453 of the aggregate sum so appropriated but did not include the said sum of $240,547 because the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, which had recommended the adoption of the budget, had assumed that the said sum of $240,547 would be expended by the Governor for the special purposes intended therefor under Act 243 of Session Laws of Hawaii 1978.

The said sum of $240,547 should be included in the budget of the 1978 Constitutional Convention for the purposes intended inasmuch as the Governor has duly delegated to the President of the Constitutional Convention the authority to expend the aggregate sum of $2,500,000, which includes the said sum of $240,547. To this end, the resolution amends the budget by adding thereto an item for the said sum of $240,547 as special expenditures to read as follows:

"Special Expenditures:

Citizen Education Program	$ 200,000
Legislative Reference Bureau
Staff Services	40,547	$240,547"

Your Committee has amended the resolution by deleting the reference to Act 2 of Session Laws of Hawaii 1978 in the first whereas clause. Reference to said Act 2 was made by inadvertence and mistake inasmuch as said Act does not relate to appropriations for the 1978 Constitutional Convention.

Your Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing concurs with the resolution as amended and recommends that it be adopted in the form attached hereto as Resolution No. 8, RD. 1.

Signed by all members of the Committee.

RESOLUTION NO. 8, RD. 1

RELATING TO THE BUDGET.

WHEREAS, by Act 17 of Special Session Laws of Hawaii 1977 and Act 243 of Session Laws of Hawaii 1978, the aggregate sum of $2,500,000 was appropriated by the state legislature out of the general revenues of the State of Hawaii, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to the office of the Governor, or to the officers elected by the delegates if so designated by the Governor, for defraying the pre-session, session, and post-session expenses of the 1978 Constitutional Convention; provided that, of the sum so appropriated, $240,547 may be contracted to the Legislative Reference Bureau for the following purposes: $200,000 for a citizen education program and $40,547 for staff services for the Constitutional Convention delegates; and

WHEREAS, on July 18, 1978, the Constitutional Convention adopted its budget, which covered $2,259,453 of the aggregate sum so appropriated but did not include the said sum of $240,547 because the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing, which had recommended the adoption of the budget, had assumed that the said sum of $240,547 would be expended by the Governor for the special purposes intended therefor under Act 243 of Session Laws of Hawaii 1978; and

WHEREAS, it is now deemed necessary and appropriate that the said sum of $240,547 be included in the budget of the 1978 Constitutional Convention for the purposes intended inasmuch as the Governor has duly delegated to the President of the Constitutional Convention the authority to expend the aggregate sum of $2,500,000, which includes the said sum of $240,547; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that the budget of the Constitutional Convention adopted on July 18, 1978 be and it is hereby amended by adding thereto an item for the said sum of $240,547 as special expenditures and to read as follows:

"Special Expenditures:
Citizen Education Program	$200,000
Legislative Reference Bureau
Staff Services	40,547	$240,547"

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that certified copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the President of the Constitutional Convention and to the chairperson of the Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 25

Your Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing begs leave to report that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 26, Com. P. No. 1 and Res. No. 9 have been printed and distributed.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 26

Your Committee on Ethics to which were referred proposals numbered 31, 94, 106, 109 and 404, all relating to codes of ethics in constitutional conventions; and proposals numbered 116, 183, 318, 418, 492, 500, 523, 539, 551, 641, 734 and 823, all relating to codes of ethics in government in general, begs leave to report as follows:

The proposals covered several subject matters related to Section 5 of Article XIV of the Hawaii State Constitution, which, in its present form, mandates that there be codes of ethics that apply to officers and employees of the State and its political subdivisions. The proposals, without exception, sought to extend this constitutional language in one or more of the following areas: (1) wider applications for such codes; (2) further specifications for the administration of such codes; and (3) further specifications as to the definition of such codes and the components they must entail.

All committee meetings were open to the public and many citizens, groups and organizations representing a cross section of our community were invited to present their views on the subjects covered by the proposals at the public hearings.

The following citizens presented their views:

Mr. Gary Slovin, Executive Director, State Ethics Commission; Delegate James Shon; Delegate Naomi Campbell; Delegate Dennis Chun; Lt. Governor Nelson K. Doi; Daniel H. Case, President, Hawaii State Bar Association; Delegate Bruce Yamashita; Buck Buchwach, Executive Editor, Honolulu Advertiser; George Mason, Hawaii Pacific Business News; John E. Simonds, Managing Editor, Honolulu Star-Bulletin; Delegate John Waihee; Reverend William Smith, Chairman, City & County Ethics Commission; and Jim Hall, for Delegate Georgia Miller.

The committee, having conducted public hearings and deliberated upon the subjects covered by the proposals, presents for your consideration Section 5 of Article XIV to the Hawaii State Constitution, amended as follows.

Article XIV, Section 5, is amended to read:

"CODES OF ETHICS

"Section 5. The people of Hawaii believe that public officers and employees must exhibit the highest standards of ethical conduct, and that such standards derive from the personal integrity of each individual in government. In keeping faith with this belief, the legislature, [and] each political subdivision, and the constitutional convention shall adopt a code of ethics, which shall apply to appointed and elected officers and employees of the State or the political subdivision, respectively, including members of boards, commissions and other bodies.

"Each code of ethics shall be administered by a separate ethics commission, except that the code of ethics adopted by the constitutional convention shall be administered by the State Ethics Commission. No member of an ethics commission shall, during his term of office, run for or hold any office in any political organization, or directly or indirectly make any political contribution, or take part in any political campaign. The members of commissions shall be selected in a manner which assures their independence and impartiality.

"Each code of ethics shall include, but not be limited to, provisions on gifts, confidential information, the use of position, contracts with government agencies, post-employment, financial disclosure, and lobbyist registration and restriction. The financial disclosure provision shall require all elected officers, all candidates for elective office, and such appointed officers and employees as shall be provided by law to make public financial disclosure. Other public officials with significant discretionary or fiscal powers as provided by law shall make confidential financial disclosure. All financial disclosure statements shall include at least the following areas: sources and amounts of income, ownership and officership interests in businesses, ownership of real property, debts, creditor interests in insolvent businesses and the names of persons represented before government agencies."

Your Committee has substantially amended Section 5 of Article XIV. It is your Committee's belief that the subject of ethics in government is one of great importance which warrants such revision. Because the Constitution organizes the powers and procedures of government, "governing those who govern," your Committee believes that it is logical and essential that the Constitution contain some basic guidelines as to the form of ethics regulation that shall apply to those who govern.

Hawaii established what is generally considered to be the first comprehensive state ethics code in the nation in 1967. The 1968 Constitutional Convention of Hawaii sanctioned this new development in Article XIV, Section 5. Since then public concern about ethical conduct in government has markedly increased, and, in response, there have been many developments in the area of codes of conduct and disclosure requirements for government officials in Hawaii and across the nation. Your Committee on Ethics notes this public concern, draws upon the past decade of experience with ethics reform, and puts forth a proposal which it believes will strengthen, broaden and protect the system of ethics regulation in government in Hawaii.

After consideration of Proposal Nos. 183, 418, 523, 734 and 823, your Committee has added a new first sentence to paragraph one of the proposal as a policy statement to set a tone for the section, put forth an intent for the section, and to aid in the liberal interpretation of the codes which are promulgated pursuant to this section. By including this statement, your Committee intends to convey that high standards of ethical conduct are to be expected from public officers and employees, and that ethics codes are mandated to promote such standards.

After consideration of Proposal Nos. 31, 94, 106, 109, 116 and 404, your Committee has amended the second sentence of paragraph one of the proposed section to mandate that constitutional conventions enact their own ethics codes just as the State and its political subdivisions do. Your Committee believes that the integrity of future constitutional conventions will be more assured through this provision, and that by making a code of ethics an automatic requirement for such conventions, they will be spared the delay that the 1978 Constitutional Convention experienced after it decided to enact a code on an ad hoc basis.

Besides extension to constitutional conventions, the applicability of codes of ethics is also extended beyond current practice by paragraph three of the proposed section:

1. Candidates for elective offices will come under the disclosure requirements of this section. Your Committee believes that by making such information a matter of public record, the openness and honesty in which elections are conducted will be enhanced, and the public's electoral decision-making will be aided.
2. Lobbyist registration and restriction become a part of ethics codes. The effect of this revision on the state level is to move the administration of lobbyist regulation laws from the legislative auditor's office to the State Ethics Commission. Your Committee feels that it is more appropriate to have an independent commission, rather than a legislative agency, enforcing such laws. Both the State Ethics Commission and the legislative auditor have concurred with this revision. This revision will also cause county government to establish lobbyist registration and restriction statutes. Overall, your Committee believes that this revision will strengthen lobbyist regulation in state and county governments and curb unethical kinds of special interest influence.

The preceding two proposed revisions were made pursuant to consideration of Proposal Nos. 523, 539 and 734.

With respect to Proposal Nos. 492, 500, 523 and 734, your Committee has deliberated at length on the question of extending codes of ethics' applicability to judges and justices. During committee hearings, Mr. Daniel Case of the Hawaii State Bar Association and Mr. Gary Slovin of the State Ethics Commission testified against the specific inclusion of judges under this section, on the grounds that judges and justices have their own code of ethics, and therefore this would be an unnecessary restriction on the independence of the judiciary.

Your Committee concurs with their opinion. However, your Committee also rejects the amendment which would specifically exclude judges and justices under this section. Instead, your Committee concurs with the view expressed in Standing Committee Report No. 44 of the 1968 Constitutional Convention which states in part:

"It was the decision of your Committee that the judiciary should not be given specific exemption in the Constitution. However, this does not preclude the legislature from recognizing the sufficiency of the judicial canons of ethics."

The committee believes that the legislature's residual powers in the area of ethics provisions for judges should be maintained as a precautionary measure while at the same time concurring with the current statutory exemption of judges and justices.

Members of your Committee expressed concern that the present judicial canons of ethics do not include disclosure requirements. However, your Committee concurs with the chief justice in the belief that, in deference to separation of powers, specific disclosure requirements for judges should not be included as a part of this section. Instead, this concern will be transmitted to the Judiciary Committee of this Convention.

Your Committee believes that statutory ethics codes have little meaning if they are not administered through independent bodies. After consideration of Proposal Nos. 418, 523, 539 and 823, your Committee has added a new paragraph two to the proposed section to:

1. mandate that ethics codes be administered through ethics commissions;
2. mandate that the members of these commissions do not violate their impartiality through political activities; and
3. insure that the independence of these commissions is maintained in the selection process for ethics commissioners.

Your Committee notes that sentence one of paragraph two of the proposed section not only mandates that ethics commissions administer ethics codes, but that it also maintains the present separation of jurisdiction between state and county ethics commissions. Your Committee rejects the proposition contained in Proposal No. 641 that the State Ethics Commission should be given power over the counties. Both Mr. Gary Slovin of the State Ethics Commission and Reverend William Smith of the Honolulu City and County Ethics Commission opposed such a provision in testimony before your Committee. Your Committee also notes that the second clause of sentence one of paragraph two of the proposed section excepts the constitutional convention code of ethics from being administered by a separate ethics commission, and instead provides that the State Ethics Commission, in addition to its other responsibilities, will also administer the convention code.

It is the intent of your Committee that the present selection process for state ethics commissioners is in conformance with the kind of selection process mandated by sentence three of paragraph two of this proposed section.

In order to strengthen, protect and make more consistent the codes of ethics enacted pursuant to this section, your Committee has sought ways to define what ethics codes mean and to specify the minimum components that ethics codes must include. Your Committee has deliberated at length on this issue, and considered the relevant sections of Proposal Nos. 116, 318, 404, 418, 500, 523, 551, 734 and 823. In acting upon this issue, your Committee has sought to strike a balance between the need for further constitutional guidelines in this area and the need to maintain nonspecificity, flexibility and brevity in constitutional language. Your Committee proposes that a new paragraph three be added to Section 5 which:

1. specifies that codes of ethics must include provisions on gifts, confidential information, the use of position, contracts with government agencies, post-employment, financial disclosure, and lobbyist regulation; and
2. specifies that elected officials, candidates for elective office, and high-ranking appointed officials make public financial disclosure, and that other officers and employees with significant discretionary powers make confidential financial disclosure. Further, guidelines are set forth to insure that such disclosure has meaning.

This paragraph specifies important guidelines or boundaries that must be maintained in Hawaii's statutory ethics codes. At the same time, it is general enough so that it does not mandate exactly how the respective legislative bodies should meet the responsibility that the section will place upon them. The language of this section is taken from suggestions for constitutional revision put forth by the State Ethics Commission. Your Committee recommends that these constitutional guidelines for ethics codes become a part of Section 5 of Article XIV of the Hawaii Constitution.

Your Committee also considered, and rejected, other suggested constitutional ethics code requirements or guidelines under the new paragraph three.

With reference to Proposal Nos. 116 and 404, it was suggested to your Committee that ethics codes specifically include prohibitions on nepotism in hiring, especially with regard to future constitutional conventions. It was argued that the hiring of family members involves an unethical use of public funds and a damaging appearance of impropriety. It is the consensus of your Committee, however, that the Constitution should not include a specific prohibition on family hiring. Various reasons have been cited:

1. Within the context of the cultural milieu of Hawaii, family hiring per se is not unethical, and a strict prohibition on such hiring runs counter to the spirit of 'ohana.
2. The "use of position" provision of your Committee's proposal covers blatant cases where family hiring results in incompetence and misuse of public funds.
3. The financial disclosure provision of your Committee's proposal will make cases of in-family hiring a matter of public record, so that the public can judge one way or another on such hiring.

It was also argued before your Committee that the Constitution should specifically ban outside compensation for delegates of constitutional conventions and, possibly, for legislators as well. The rationale for this proposed revision was that such outside income unduly influences such delegate's or legislator's official actions. It is the consensus of your Committee, however, that such a constitutional provision is unwarranted, in that such restrictions on income are unrealistic for these part-time bodies and would only skew the representation therein towards the wealthy, the retired and the unemployed.

After consideration of Proposal No. 183, your Committee has rejected the concept of a "fiduciary duty" as a general "umbrella" over codes of ethics. It was argued before your Committee that by holding public officials to a fiduciary obligation, the public would have a strong deterrent against unethical action in government, because such action would be subject to suit by citizens. It is the consensus of your Committee, however, that the concept of a public fiduciary duty is not well understood or clearly defined, and that the implications of such constitutional language are too uncertain to warrant inclusion here.

With reference to Proposal No. 500, your Committee considered the matter of tightening state legislators' conflict-of-interest restrictions through the Constitution. Your Committee rejected this suggestion on the grounds that such restrictions should be a statutory matter. Conflict-of-interest restrictions on state legislators are complex and difficult issues, because of the legislators' position as part-time employees with other outside interests, and because of the need to protect the legislators' representational function. Overly broad language in the Constitution would cause many legislators to be disqualified from voting and acting in their legislative capacity.

Your Committee recommends (1) that the above-numbered proposals referred to your Committee be filed; and (2) that Section 5 of Article XIV as amended in the form shown as Committee Proposal No. 1* pass first reading.

Signed by all members of the Committee. Delegate Chun did not concur and Delegate Cabral did not concur in part.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 28

Your Committee on Legislature to which was referred Resolution No. 7, entitled: "RELATING TO A BICAMERAL LEGISLATURE," begs leave to report as follows:

The purpose of the resolution is to provide a useful guideline to the standing committees of the Constitutional Convention of 1978 in their deliberations of their respective subject matters, by determining whether or not the bicameral form of legislature shall be retained for Hawaii by the Constitutional Convention.

Section 1 of Article III of the State Constitution provides for a bicameral legislature. Several proposals seeking to amend Section 1 to provide for a unicameral legislature have been referred to your Committee, and hearings thereon were duly held. Although your Committee intends to duly file a committee report on the subject, together with other subjects within Article III, your Committee finds that a decision on unicameralism or bicameralism is a necessary threshold consideration requiring early determination as it affects the answers and approach to many problems to be wrestled with by several standing committees of the Convention.

The unicameral-bicameral concept affects seven articles in the Constitution: Article III, the legislature; Article IV, the executive; Article V, the judiciary; Article VI, taxation and finance; Article IX, education; Article XV, revision and amendment; and Article XVI, schedule. The unicameral-bicameral concept also affects 5 of the Convention's 16 standing committees besides your Committee.

If unicameralism is to be considered, the committees affected must consider the following:

1. The Committee on Legislature must consider:
 - A. How many members should be in the one-chamber legislature.
 - B. How the members of the reapportionment committee are to be appointed and by whom.
 - C. How a one-house legislature will affect the reapportionment criteria in the Constitution and whether the Convention should reapportion the legislature itself or direct the reapportionment commission to perform such reapportionment. A further question is whether the reapportionment commission should perform such reapportionment before its regular meeting date of 1981, which of course depends on the date of changeover from two houses to one house.
 - D. The terms of the members of a unicameral legislature may need to be changed.
 - E. Questions may also arise concerning the qualifications of legislators to run for office, the disqualifications of office, the salary and allowances of a legislator, the length and convening of legislative sessions and the procedures of a one-house legislature.

2. The Committee on Executive must concern itself with the advice and consent of gubernatorial appointments and the continuing performance thereof by a one-house legislature.

3. The Committee on Judiciary must also consider the advice and consent of judicial appointments by the governor.

4. The Committee on Taxation and Finance must consider whether a two-thirds approval vote for bond issuance will be necessary under a one-house legislature or whether a higher or lower vote is adequate. The same consideration must be given to the two-thirds vote required for the appointment of the legislative auditor.

5. The Committee on Education must also consider the advice and consent of gubernatorial appointments to the board of regents and the continuing performance thereof by a one-house legislature.

6. The Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions must consider the requirement of continuing the two-thirds vote in one session necessary for proposing amendments to the Constitution. In addition, either this committee or both it and the Committee on Legislature must consider whether or not to stagger the terms of the members of a one-house legislature and how to mandate this stagger.

The above set forth the minimum considerations required in changing to a one-house legislature. In addition, many of the above problems will be under consideration in continuing the present two-house system, although from a different viewpoint since two houses are involved. Consideration must also be given to the problems that may exist in the present two-house system, such as the conference committee and its actions.

None of the above matters may be considered in their proper perspective unless the Convention first determines whether the legislature is to be unicameral or bicameral. As stated earlier, this is a threshold consideration since it affects the answers and the approach to all of the above problems. Further, the initial determination will either raise further unicameral problems which must be resolved and obviate some of the bicameral problems which have been presented to the Convention; or it will set at rest the unicameral question so that the bicameral questions with which the Convention has been presented can be determined and heard at length. It must be noted that there is no other question before the Convention which affects the work of so many of the committees of the Convention as this question of unicameral versus bicameral legislature.

Without an early indication on unicameralism or bicameralism, the standing committees affected would be proceeding with uncertainty. Action by the Convention on the resolution would provide a useful indicator and guideline for the committees to act and decide on their respective matters affected by the unicameralism-bicameralism concept with a degree of certainty and resolution.

It should be noted that your Committee intends that any action taken by the Convention on the resolution in no way precludes your Committee from raising, discussing and deciding upon the unicameralism-bicameralism issue in the course of its deliberations of the subjects within Article III of the State Constitution. Moreover, the Committee of the Whole and the Convention, in their eventual review of your Committee's proposal on the subjects of said Article III, shall be additional forums before which the unicameralism-bicameralism issue may properly be aired and debated pursuant to the rules of the Convention. Thus, action on the resolution is not a foreclosure of the unicameralism-bicameralism issue but a reflection of a consensus on the matter. It is hoped that the consensus will aid the committees affected by giving them an indication of the probable direction of the Convention, upon which the committees may rely for decision-making on the subjects related to the unicameralism-bicameralism concept.

Your Committee has amended the resolution by substituting the article "a" in lieu of the article "the" appearing immediately before the word "bicameral" in the whereas clause and in the first resolve clause. This amendment was effected to avoid the possible narrow construction that the resolution intends to retain the bicameral form of legislature as it exists under the State Constitution without deviation. As your Committee intends, by this resolution, to seek a consensus on the concept of bicameralism and not necessarily on the bicameral form of legislature as it exists today, your Committee believes the amendment will more accurately reflect your Committee's intention.

Your Committee on Legislature is in accord with the intent and purpose of this resolution, as amended, and recommends its adoption in the form attached hereto as Resolution No. 7, RD. 1.

Signed by all members of the Committee except Delegates Hanaike and Takitani. Delegates Blean, Cabral, Kimball, Liu, O'Toole and Shon did not concur.

RESOLUTION NO. 7, RD. 1

RELATING TO A BICAMERAL LEGISLATURE.

WHEREAS, it will serve as a useful guideline to the standing committees of the Constitutional Convention of 1978 to have a determination whether or not a bicameral form of legislature shall be retained for Hawaii by this Constitutional Convention; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that a bicameral form of legislature be retained; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a certified copy of this Resolution be transmitted to each of the chairpersons of the standing committees of the Constitutional Convention of 1978.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 29

Your Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing begs leave to report that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 30 and Com. P. No. 2 have been printed and distributed.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 30

Your Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions to which were referred proposals numbered 8, 211, 531, 594 and 661, relating to boundaries; 314, relating to plain language; 399, relating to the State flag; and 422, relating to the State motto, begs leave to report as follows:

This report covers Article XIII of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii.

All committee meetings were open to the public, and representatives of organizations and individual citizens interested in the above-mentioned proposals were invited to present their views on the subjects covered by the proposals at public hearings.

The following citizens presented their views: John P. Craven, State Marine Affairs Coordinator; Robert Schmitt, State Statistician, Department of Planning and Economic Development; Delegate Leon Sterling; Delegate Larry Uyehara; Lee Motteler, representing the Bernice Pauahi Bishop Museum; Bette Tatum; and Delegate Floyd Pulham.

Your Committee, after public hearings and due consideration of the subjects covered by the proposals, recommends the following amendments to Article XIII:

Amend Section 1 of Article XIII to read:

"BOUNDARIES

"Section 1. The State of Hawaii shall consist of all the islands, together with their appurtenant reefs and territorial and archipelagic waters, included in the Territory of Hawaii on the date of enactment of this Act; except the atoll known as Palmyra Island, together with its appurtenant reefs and territorial waters, but said State shall not be deemed to include the Midway Islands, Johnston Island, Sand Island (offshore from Johnston Island), or Kingman Reef, together with their appurtenant reefs and territorial waters."

Your Committee recognizes that the State cannot unilaterally change its boundaries by amending its Constitution. The intent of the proposed amendment to Article XIII, Section 1, is not to alter such boundaries but to set forth the State's understanding of its boundaries. Although the Admissions Act, a compact between the federal government and the State, purportedly defined the State's boundaries, your Committee understands that ambiguity and uncertainty exist with respect to such boundaries and, in particular, its waters.

The Kingdom of Hawaii regarded its waters as archipelagic. For example, the Second Act of Kamehameha III, issued in 1846, forbid foreign ships from entering the Kingdom's interisland channel waters. Such a declaration indicated that the Kingdom considered its channel waters inland rather than merely territorial waters. The Privy Council Resolution of 1850 was another instance where the Kingdom asserted jurisdiction over the interisland channel waters.

Your Committee agrees that the archipelagic concept applies to the State. Because of Hawaii's continuing need to protect and regulate its commerce and trade and to conserve and utilize its ocean resources, your Committee recommends that this Constitutional Convention affirm the State's archipelagic status by adopting the proposed amendment to Article XIII, Section 1.

Your Committee further recommends amending Article XIII by adding a new title and a new section to be numbered Section 4. The new title and Section 4 are to read:

"ARTICLE XIII

"STATE BOUNDARIES, CAPITAL, FLAG, MOTTO"

"MOTTO

"Section 4. The motto of the State shall be 'Ua mau ke ea o ka aina i ka pono'."

Your Committee recommends that the State's motto, "Ua mau ke ea o ka aina i ka pono" (The life of the land is preserved in righteousness), be included in the State Constitution. King Kamehameha III is said to have spoken those words when the Hawaiian monarchy was restored in 1843. Your Committee selected this motto for its beauty, simplicity and historical significance. Your Committee agrees that it is appropriate that the motto be expressed in the Hawaiian language, thus reflecting the State's special Hawaiian heritage and perspective.

Your Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions recommends (1) that the above-numbered proposals referred to your Committee be filed, (2) that Sections 2 and 3 of Article XIII be retained without amendment, and (3) that Committee Proposal No. 2* pass first reading in the form shown.

Signed by all members of the Committee.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 31

Your Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing begs leave to report that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 32 and Com. P. No. 3 have been printed and distributed.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 32

Your Committee on Executive was referred proposals numbered 41, 42, 104, 115, 119, 235, 238, 562 and 765, all relating to the number of terms a governor may serve; 42, 115, 238 and 562, all relating to the number of terms a lieutenant governor may serve; 54, 157, 249 and 419, all relating to the method of electing the lieutenant governor; 65, 241, 374, 419 and 468, all relating to the duties and powers of the lieutenant governor; 223, 319, 345, 533 and 563, all relating to abolishing the office of lieutenant governor; and 26, 56, 62, 114, 127, 154, 577, 596, 635 and 713, all relating to the method of selecting the attorney general. Your Committee on Executive begs leave to report as follows:

The proposals covered the several subject matters relating to Sections 1 and 2 of Article IV. Several proposals sought to include a new section within Article IV relating to selection of the attorney general. As a result of your Committee's deliberations, the terms of office of the governor and lieutenant governor have been limited to two consecutive full terms. In addition, Article XVI has been amended to provide for an effective date for these changes.

All committee meetings were open to the public. Individual citizens, government officials, groups and organizations were invited to present their views on the subjects covered by the proposals at public hearings conducted on Oahu and the islands of Kauai, Maui and Hawaii.

Among those presenting their views, were the following persons: Mr. Susumu Ono, Administrative Director, State of Hawaii; Delegate H. Jean Goodenow; Delegate Tom Okamura; Mr. Dennis Callan; Lt. Governor Nelson K. Doi; Delegate Alan Kimball; Delegate Joseph Souki; Mr. Kenneth Nisonger; Delegate Floyd W. Pulham; Attorney General Ronald Y. Amemiya; Mr. George Mason, Chamber of Commerce of Hawaii; Delegate Thomas H. Hamilton; Mr. Joe Wildman; Ms Susan Irvine, League of Women Voters; Hawaii County Councilman Muneo Sameshima; Mr. William Haines, Chamber of Commerce of Hawaii.

The committee, having conducted public hearings and deliberated upon the subjects covered by the proposals, presents for your consideration Sections 1 and 2 of Article IV of the Hawaii State Constitution, amended as follows.

Section 1, Article IV relating to establishment of the executive is amended to read as follows:

"ESTABLISHMENT OF THE EXECUTIVE

"Section 1. The executive power of the State shall be vested in a governor.

"The governor shall be elected by the qualified voters of this State at a general election. The person receiving the highest number of votes shall be the governor. In case of a tie vote, the selection of the governor shall be determined in accordance with law.

"The term of office of the governor shall begin at noon on the first Monday in December next following his election and end at noon on the first Monday in December, four years thereafter.

"No person shall be elected to the office of governor for more than two consecutive full terms.

"No person shall be eligible for the office of governor unless he shall be a qualified voter, have attained the age of thirty years, and have been a resident of this State for five years immediately preceding his election.

"The governor shall not hold any other office or employment of profit under the State or the United States during his term of office."

Your Committee recommends that there be a limit to the number of consecutive terms a governor can serve. Your Committee recognizes that Hawaii has a strong, highly centralized executive branch. Moreover, our chief executive has a leading role, not only within the executive branch but also within our whole government structure. Your Committee believes that Hawaii's present centralized system has produced an effective and responsible government and that, as a general principle, a strong executive office should be retained as part of our Constitution. However, members of your Committee expressed concern that, without a limitation on the number of terms, an incumbent would have the opportunity to build a political machine to perpetuate reelection. Since it is often difficult to defeat, regardless of qualifications, an incumbent governor who is seeking reelection, limiting the office to two terms would give new candidates a better chance of being elected.

Several proposals with variations to the two-term limit were received by your Committee. However, your Committee believes that the recommendation of a two-consecutive, full-term limit adequately protects against the perpetual reelection of a less qualified incumbent and yet does not preclude a qualified incumbent from running again after an intervening term. It is intended that anyone succeeding to the governor's office for the remainder of a term would still be eligible to be elected to an additional two consecutive full terms.

Section 2 of Article IV relating to the lieutenant governor is amended as follows:

"LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

"Section 2. There shall be a lieutenant governor, who shall have the same qualifications as the governor. He shall be elected at the same time, for the same term, and in the same manner, as the governor; provided that the votes cast in the general election for the nominee for governor shall be deemed cast for the nominee for lieutenant governor of the same political party. No person shall be elected to the office of lieutenant governor for more than two consecutive full terms. [He] The lieutenant governor shall perform such duties as may be prescribed by law."

Your Committee deliberated at length on the question of abolishing or retaining the office of lieutenant governor. It was argued that the relationship between the governor and lieutenant governor has often been an adversarial one. As a result the governor fails to delegate any meaningful responsibilities to the lieutenant governor and the position becomes relegated to the performance of mostly ministerial tasks.

Your Committee was concerned with the necessity of assuring the continuous exercise of the vital functions of the governor, if the governor had to be immediately replaced. Presently the primary role of the lieutenant governor is to replace the governor when and if the need arises. The disruption that could be caused by the absence of such a replacement is difficult to measure, but every state in the nation presently has a provision for immediate replacement of the governor. Opponents to the office of the lieutenant governor state that the office thus becomes a very expensive fifth wheel. However, your Committee has received testimony that the cost of a special election to replace a governor if the lieutenant governor's office was abolished would be approximately $1,000,000. Thus the annual salary for the lieutenant governor's office along with the confidence of knowing that there would be an automatic replacement for the governor, if necessary, does not amount to a significant monetary cost. Your Committee believes that the lieutenant governor's office is a necessity and recommends that the office be retained.

Members of your Committee argued that by abolishing the office of the lieutenant governor, the State would be saving considerable sums of money. However, although the tasks performed by the lieutenant governor may be absorbed by other departments, the staff of the lieutenant governor would have to be maintained to continue to assist in the performance of those functions. Therefore the monetary savings achieved by abolishing the office may amount to no more than the lieutenant governor's annual salary.

Your Committee also believes that the office of lieutenant governor is necessary because it provides a means by which a relative newcomer can be elected to a statewide office before seeking election to the chief executive's office. We presently have only two statewide elected offices, the governor and the lieutenant governor, and your Committee does not believe that this number should be reduced.

Your Committee considered the issue of expanding the office of lieutenant governor by constitutionally prescribing additional duties, including the supervision of the enforcement of laws regarding licensing, operation, conduct of trades, businesses, and professions and coordinating volunteer programs. Your Committee believes, however, that the duties of the lieutenant governor should not be constitutionally expanded, but should continue to be prescribed by statute. It was noted that this would continue to give flexibility to the legislature in prescribing duties to the lieutenant governor that take advantage of the individual lieutenant governor's area of expertise.

The method of selection of the lieutenant governor was considered. Alternatives to the present practice of electing the lieutenant governor from the same political party as the governor were suggested, including having the lieutenant governor elected independently from the governor with the possibility that the successful candidate for lieutenant governor would come from a different party than the governor. However, your Committee recognizes the need for a harmonious relationship between the governor and the lieutenant governor and believes that party unity can provide some of that harmony. Moreover, if it became necessary for the lieutenant governor to replace the governor, the people of the State would be assured the policies and programs of the governor would be continued by his successor.

Another alternative method of selection of the lieutenant governor came from the suggestion of having the governor appoint or select a running mate. The committee believes, however, that the election of a lieutenant governor is very important for purposes of succession. Our present system insures that the governor's replacement is also elected on a statewide basis. Such would not be the case if a legislative officer, such as the speaker of the house or the president of the senate, were to succeed to the office. Your Committee, therefore, recommends that the present system for the election of the lieutenant governor be retained.

Your Committee recommends that the term for lieutenant governor be limited to two consecutive full terms, based on the same reasoning that your Committee recommends the term limitation for governor.

Article XVI is amended to add a new section as follows:

"EFFECTIVE DATE FOR TERM LIMITATIONS FOR GOVERNOR AND LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

"Section . The amendments to Sections 1 and 2 of Article IV shall limit the term of any person elected to the office of governor or lieutenant governor in the 1978 general election to two consecutive full terms commencing from noon on the first Monday in December, 1978."

Your Committee intends that the effective date for the limitation of terms for the governor and lieutenant governor take effect immediately and that the change be implemented in Article XVI.

Your Committee received a number of proposals which would have changed the method of selecting the attorney general by adding a new section to Article IV providing for an elected attorney general. Other selection methods considered by your Committee included the establishment of a nomination commission to compile a list of qualified candidates from which the governor would be required to select an appointee, and the creation of a similar commission to draw up a list of names with final selection at random. After weighing the advantages and disadvantages of each alternative with the present system, your Committee recommends that gubernatorial appointment with advice and consent of the senate be retained as the method of selecting Hawaii's attorney general.

Your Committee believes that the power of selecting an attorney general properly lies with the executive. The executive acts from the broadest political base and his actions are subject to rigorous public scrutiny. Our present Constitution establishes a strong executive with administrative responsibility lodged in a single chief executive. In order to effectively perform his executive functions, the governor must be able to choose advisors and staff members in whom he has complete trust and confidence. Your Committee feels that this element of trust is particularly critical in the selection of an attorney general since the governor, being charged with the responsibility of faithfully executing the laws, must look to the attorney general to discharge that responsibility.

Although greater public accountability was often mentioned as a reason for changing the selection method, your Committee believes that our present appointive system insures both independence of action and public accountability. The executive is directly accountable to the electorate for appointment of the State's chief legal officer and poor judgment in selection will have adverse political effects on the executive. Further, the committee believes that the requirement of senate confirmation also provides assurance of public accountability. Your Committee notes that Section 6 of Article IV of our present Constitution requires senate approval for removal of the attorney general. This provision gives the attorney general the ability to act independently of the executive when need arises.

Although some members of your Committee advocated election of the attorney general, your Committee recommends against adoption of the elective method. It is the committee's belief that an elective system would lead to political conflict and hostility between the governor and the attorney general. Your Committee is aware that in those states in which the attorney general is an elected position, the office is often used as a stepping-stone to higher office. In testimony before this committee, Hawaii's present attorney general, Ronald Amemiya, noted that 17 attorneys general in the approximately 21 states which will be holding elections this year are seeking higher office. Of these, 14 are running for the office of governor and 3 are seeking seats in the United States Senate. Although the committee feels that there is nothing intrinsically wrong with an elected attorney general seeking higher office, it is concerned that an elected attorney general may use his office for political purposes disruptive to an incumbent administration's policies and activities. The committee also feels that an elected attorney general might be unduly influenced by those persons contributing to his campaign. Similarly, the committee believes that an elected attorney general would find it difficult to act in a controversial situation without considering how his actions would affect his chances of reelection. Your Committee feels that the attorney general's primary concern should be the administration of justice and that personal political ambition could cloud the judgment of an elected attorney general and distract him from the duties of his office.

Your Committee recommends against any of the various nominating commission plans proposed to your Committee for the selection of the attorney general. The committee notes that no testimony before your Committee indicated that any nominating commission plan exists in any other state. Your Committee believes that a nominating commission, especially without a requirement of senate confirmation, would remove the selection process from public scrutiny and place control of the attorney general selection process in the hands of a limited number of people. Your Committee believes that appointment of the attorney general by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate results in a productive working relationship and promotes harmony and efficiency in the executive branch as a whole.

Some members of your Committee argued that an appointed attorney general was unable to act as an independent watchdog on the executive. Your Committee notes, however, that in Hawaii the attorney general's traditional function has been that of a legal advisor to the executive department, legislature and state agencies as well as a representative of the State in civil suits. Your Committee believes that the people, having placed their faith in the executive, will hold him ultimately responsible for the functioning of government and any possible abuses in the executive office should be addressed by the people.

It is noted that this committee report covers only those proposals relating to Sections 1 and 2 of Article IV, and the subjects of the implementation date of the proposed amendments and the method of selection of the attorney general. Your Committee intends to submit a separate committee report to address other matters referred to this committee.

Therefore, your Committee recommends: (1) that the above-numbered proposals referred to your Committee be filed; and (2) that Committee Proposal No. 3* pass first reading in the form shown.

Signed by all members of the Committee. Delegates Barnes, Chu, Chun, DiBianco, Eastvold, Dennis Ihara, O'Toole, Takitani and Wurdeman did not concur and Delegates Funakoshi and Marumoto did not concur in part.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 34

Your Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions, to which were referred proposals numbered 6, 10, 29, 93, 102, 103, 112, 173, 174, 175, 185, 218, 225, 251, 269, 300, 322, 325, 330, 337, 349, 359, 362, 363, 383, 407, 423, 434, 438, 439, 444, 447, 456, 471, 481, 486, 487, 494, 521, 525, 553, 604, 607, 629, 634, 648, 702, 722, 736, 738, 759, 773, 774, 776, 778, 781, 802, 803, 815 and 817, begs leave to report as follows:

This report covers the Preamble, Article XIV, titled "General and Miscellaneous Provisions," and Article XV, titled "Revision and Amendment," of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii.

All committee meetings were open to the public, and representatives of organizations and individual citizens interested in the above-mentioned proposals were invited to present their views on the subjects covered by the proposals at public hearings.

The following citizens presented their views: Delegate Leon Sterling; Donald Botelho, State Director of Personnel Services; Delegate Helene Hale; Delegate Marion Lee; Sandi Ebesu, of the Hawaii Government Employees' Association; Delegate Ginger Wurdeman; Melvin Goto, of the United Public Workers; Joshua Aagsalud, State Director of Labor and Industrial Relations; Delegate Akira Sakima; Mary F. Gray, United Nations Association of Hawaii; Delegate Marcelliano Villaverde; Sister Grace Dorothy Lim, Kalihi-Palama Interagency Council for Immigrant Services; Gary Omori, Kalihi-Palama Immigrant Service Center; Major General Valentine A. Siefertmann, State Director of Civil Defense; Lee K. Toole, of Hawaiian Telephone Co.; Wallace Miyahara, Honolulu City and County Public Works Division; R. Higashionna, State Director of Transportation; Robert J. Speck; Richard Botti, Legislative Information Services of Hawaii; Ronald Amemiya, State Attorney General; Delegate Elayne Funakoshi; Delegate Franklin Hayashida; Delegate Thomas H. Hamilton; Delegate Alan Kimball; Delegate Anne Takemoto; Delegate Richard Sasaki; Dr. Norman Meller; and Jean Snodgrass.

Your Committee, after public hearings and due consideration of the subjects covered by the proposals, recommends the following amendments to Articles XIV and XV.

Amend Article XIV, Section 3, to read:

"DISQUALIFICATIONS FROM PUBLIC OFFICE OR EMPLOYMENT

"Section 3. No person shall hold any public office or employment who[, knowingly and intentionally, does] has been convicted of any act to overthrow, or [attempts] attempt to overthrow, or [conspires] conspiracy with any person to overthrow the government of this State or of the United States by force or violence."

The proposed amendment to Article XIV, Section 3, provides that a person cannot be disqualified from holding public office or employment unless he has been convicted of the subversive activities specified in Section 3. In its present form, Section 3 may not require a conviction or even an indictment to disqualify a person from holding any public office or employment. Such ambiguity raises the possibility that a person could be barred from holding public office or employment based on vague standards of determining loyalty, procedures which do not meet due process requirements, or inadequate evidence. In the past, both in the State and elsewhere, some procedures employed in disloyalty proceedings before nonjudicial or quasi-judicial bodies have been ruled constitutionally defective. This proposed amendment is intended to clarify this section and to assure that no person will be prevented from holding public office or employment unless he has been convicted of the disqualifying acts stated in Section 3.

Also, with regard to Article XIV, Section 2, your Committee reviewed testimony relating to the employees' retirement system and, in particular, disproportionate retirement benefits paid to certain classes of employees or officers. After due consideration of retirement benefits paid to general employees, police officers and firefighters, and elected officials and judges, your Committee agrees that retirement benefits should be considered one element of a total compensation plan. Your Committee further agrees that differential retirement benefits paid to different classes of employees and officers are a matter of genuine concern. Your Committee recommends that the next legislative salary commission or judicial salary commission carefully study the matter of retirement contributions and benefits in the context of basic compensation plans. Because of the complicated nature of the retirement system structure, your Committee further agrees that the legislature is the appropriate body to make any changes to such system.

Your Committee further recommends amending Article XV, Section 2, to read:

"CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION

"Section 2. The legislature may submit to the electorate at any general or special election the question, 'Shall there be a convention to propose a revision of or amendments to the Constitution?' If any ten-year period shall elapse, or if it would elapse if ten days were added to any period less than 10 years, during which the question shall not have been submitted, the lieutenant governor shall certify the question, to be voted on at the first general election following the expiration of or within 10 days of the expiration of such period.

"ELECTION OF DELEGATES

"If a majority of the ballots cast upon such question be in the affirmative, delegates to the convention shall be chosen at the next regular election unless the legislature shall provide for the election of delegates at a special election.

"Notwithstanding any provision in this constitution to the contrary, other than Section 3 of Article XIV, any qualified voter of the district concerned shall be eligible to membership in the convention.

"[Unless the] The legislature shall [otherwise] provide[, there shall be] the [same] number of delegates to the convention, [who shall be elected from] the [same] areas from which they shall be elected, and [the convention shall be convened in] the [same] manner [and] in which the convention shall convene. The legislature shall also provide for the necessary facilities and equipment for the convention. The convention shall have the same powers and privileges, as nearly as practicable, as provided for the convention of [1968] 1978.

"MEETING

"The constitutional convention shall convene not less than five months prior to the next regularly scheduled general election.

"ORGANIZATION; PROCEDURE

"The convention shall determine its own organization and rules of procedure. It shall be the sole judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its members and, by a two-thirds vote, may suspend or remove any member for cause. The governor shall fill any vacancy by appointment of a qualified voter from the district concerned.

"RATIFICATION; APPROPRIATIONS

"The convention shall provide for the time and manner in which the proposed constitutional revision or amendments shall be submitted to a vote of the electorate. The revision or amendments shall be effective only if approved at a general election by a majority of all the votes tallied upon the question, this majority constituting at least thirty-five percent of the total vote cast at the election, or at a special election by a majority of all the votes tallied upon the question, this majority constituting at least thirty percent of the total number of registered voters.

"The provisions of this section shall be self-executing, but the legislature shall make the necessary appropriations and may enact legislation to facilitate their operation."

This amendment to the first paragraph of Section 2, Article XV, is intended to assure that the question of whether a convention to propose revision of or amendments to the State Constitution should be held, will be submitted to the electorate every ten years, even if the period since the last submission is a few days short of ten years.

This proposed amendment is recommended as a response to a problem which arose with respect to the question of calling this constitutional convention. If any ten-year period shall elapse during which the question of whether there shall be a constitutional convention has not been submitted to the voters, the State Constitution charges the lieutenant governor with the responsibility of submitting the question to the electorate. In 1975, the lieutenant governor requested that the attorney general render an opinion with respect to whether such question should be placed on the ballot of the general election of November 2, 1976. The attorney general ruled that the question need not be placed on the ballot on that date because the date of November 2, 1976 fell a few days short of the requisite ten-year period. But the legislature, in accordance with its powers under the Constitution, submitted the question to the voters at the general election of November 2, 1976. Your Committee determined that under the terms of Article II, Section 5, of our State Constitution, the earliest date on which a general election could be held is November 2, and the latest date is November 8. Therefore, the additional ten days is more than adequate to avert the problem faced by the lieutenant governor in 1975.

The recommended amendment to the third paragraph of the subsection of Section 2 titled "Election of Delegates" would require that the legislature provide the number of delegates to the constitutional convention, the areas from which the delegates shall be elected, and the manner in which the convention shall convene.

Your Committee considered merely amending the date "1968" to "1978" in the third paragraph of the "Election of Delegates" subsection of Section 2. However, your Committee decided against such an amendment because of a problem encountered in the election of this Convention's delegates. Due to a bureaucratic oversight, Niihau was aligned with the voting district which included the north shore of Kauai. However, Niihau has closer geographic and economic ties with the west side of Kauai, which includes the town of Waimea. Your Committee did note that, due to its small population, Niihau is unlikely to disrupt Kauai's historical and natural political boundaries in the future.

Your Committee also agrees that conditions change significantly between the convening of constitutional conventions, and that previous conventions may not serve as good models with respect to election districts. Hence, your Committee believed that it was appropriate to allow the legislature to determine, among other items, election districts for constitutional conventions. Your Committee did, however, agree that the powers and privileges of conventions should remain substantially the same from convention to convention.

Your Committee also discussed the problems encountered and the time spent by this Convention in arranging for facilities and equipment. The proposed amendment requires the legislature to provide such necessities for the convention.

This Convention, as well as previous ones, has worked under difficult time constraints because of the short period between the convening of the convention and the next general election. To remedy such a problem, the new subsection to Section 2 of Article XV, titled "Meeting," would require that a constitutional convention convene not less than five months prior to the next regularly scheduled general election.

Your Committee also considered the difficulties faced by this Convention because of the uncertainty concerning who was to convene the delegates and disburse any moneys or incur any expenses for the Convention. Although your Committee discussed the possibility of specifying one public official, such as the state elections administrator, to fulfill such duties, it was agreed that such a matter should be resolved statutorily.

Your Committee heard testimony concerning, and considered establishing, an appointed constitutional revision commission. Alternatives included establishing a commission which would submit constitutional amendments directly to the electorate or would merely advise the legislature and subsequent constitutional conventions. Your Committee agreed that such an appointed body should not have the authority to submit proposals directly to the electorate. Therefore, such a commission need not have constitutional status but could be established by statute, as is done by states such as New Hampshire, South Dakota, Ohio and Texas. Your Committee urges the legislature to consider the establishment of such a commission to provide for continuous study of Hawaii's Constitution.

Your Committee on Revision, Amendment and Other Provisions recommends (1) that the above-numbered proposals referred to your Committee be filed, (2) that the Preamble, Sections 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15 of Article XIV, and Sections 1, 3, 4 and 5 of Article XV be retained without amendment, and (3) that Committee Proposal No. 4* pass first reading in the form shown.

Signed by all members of the Committee except Delegates Fernandes Salling and Ontai.

Section 1 of Article VIII relating to public health is amended to read as follows:

"Section 1. The State shall have power to provide for the protection and promotion of the public health."

Your Committee changed the language in Section 1 of Article VIII in order to grant the legislature full discretion in allocating the State's fiscal resources. The amended section will no longer mandate the legislature to fund public health.

All funding and programs for public health require legislative appropriations. Consequently, your Committee decided that the legislature will be best suited to determine what proportion of state revenues should go to public health. Your Committee determined that the legislature should be free of the threat of lawsuits while allocating the limited fiscal resources of the State. Presumably there could still be lawsuits, but the cause of action would have to be based on legislation and the language of the Constitution could not be used to sustain any legal argument for recovery against the State.

Finally, your Committee decided that the amended language of Section 1 of Article VIII will conform the intent and purpose of this section to the other existing sections of Article VIII.

Your Committee did consider adding language to Section 1 of Article VIII that would grant specific power to the State to act in the field of preventive health. Some members of the committee projected that someday the State may want to outlaw air pollution or smoking if it is conclusively shown to cause cancer, or encourage jogging and other physical activities as methods of preventing illness and disease. Your Committee concluded that such language would be redundant since these and similar subject matters are already being implemented and are included within the terminology "protection and promotion of the public health."

Section 2 of Article VIII relating to care of the handicapped is amended to read as follows:

"Section 2. The State shall have power to provide for treatment and rehabilitation[, as well as domiciliary care, of mentally or physically] of handicapped persons."

Your Committee decided that it was important to eliminate specific categories of handicaps so that the legislature would not be constrained in its actions. Your Committee did not intend to remove any type of handicapped persons from consideration under this section, but rather your Committee intended to broaden the philosophical statement of this section to include all categories of handicaps, such as emotionally or socially handicapped. Furthermore, your Committee decided to delete the phrase "domiciliary care" because the phrase was already included under the definition of treatment and rehabilitation. Finally, your Committee felt that these two changes would appropriately streamline Section 2 of Article VIII.

Section 3 of Article VIII relating to public assistance is amended to read as follows:

"Section 3. The State shall have power to provide financial assistance, [for persons unable to maintain a standard of living compatible with decency and health.] medical assistance, and social services for persons who are found to be in need of, and are eligible for such assistance and services as provided by law."

Your Committee added the following types of assistance that the State shall have the power to provide: financial assistance, medical assistance and social services. This language is modeled after the present breakdown followed by the Department of Social Services and Housing. All representatives of the department spoke in favor of it. At the time that Section 3 was originally adopted in 1950, assistance meant financial assistance. Thus your Committee determined that this change would update the Constitution. The committee anticipated that this new language would be more flexible and thus be amenable to including new programs and services found needed in the future.

Your Committee decided to change the language describing those who shall receive financial assistance, medical assistance and social services. The committee changed it to "who are found to be in need of, and are eligible for such assistance and services as provided by law." As a practical matter, the legislature or the federal government now sets the qualifications for all types of assistance. It was clear to the committee that this procedure was appropriate and should continue. The committee concluded that the present language qualifying persons who are "unable to maintain a standard of living compatible with decency and health" might someday be construed to permit lawsuits against the State. Moreover, the committee felt that this language was too vague and that the new language would permit the legislature to develop precise definitions of who shall qualify.

Your Committee also considered limiting the amount of welfare benefits to the taxed value of 40 hours a week of employment at minimum wage. Some members of the committee were in agreement with the sentiment of this proposal; however, the committee determined that it would be too difficult to administer, especially since some people work 32 rather than 40 hours. In addition, the committee relied on the testimony of the Department of Social Services and Housing, which was strongly against this concept.

Section 5 of Article VIII relating to public sightliness and good order is amended to read as follows:

"Section 5. The State shall have power to [conserve and develop its natural beauty, objects and places of historic or cultural interest,] provide for public sightliness and physical good order, and for that purpose private property shall be subject to reasonable regulation."

Your Committee changed the language of this section referring to "natural beauty" in order to prevent the overlap that now exists between Article VIII and Article X. Your Committee incorporated the language of this section referring to "objects and places of historic or cultural interest" in another proposal which is to be included in Article VIII as a new section, as reported below, and is entitled "Cultural Resources." Your Committee decided that these changes would make Section 5 a self-contained section and would eliminate surplusage in the Constitution.

Article VIII is amended to add a new section, relating to preservation of a healthful environment, to read as follows:

"PRESERVATION OF A HEALTHFUL ENVIRONMENT

"Section . The State shall have the power to promote and maintain a healthful environment and to prevent any excessive demands upon the environment and the State's resources."

The proposed new section to Article VIII provides the State with the power to promote and maintain a healthful environment and to prevent any excessive demands upon the State's resources. In its present form, Article VIII does not mention the promotion of a healthful environment. Thus, your Committee recommends the inclusion of this new section in Article VIII because a healthful environment is directly related to the public health and welfare.

Some members of your Committee argued that the term "public health" might include the concept of the proposed new section and that the concerns addressed are included in Article X. Moreover, the State is already addressing the concerns through the Land Use Commission and the various county zoning boards. Discussions were conducted with the chairman of the Committee on Environment, Agriculture, Conservation and Land, and after due consideration your Committee decided to act because the term "healthful environment" encompasses more than the concerns which are addressed by the Committee on Environment, Agriculture, Conservation and Land. Your Committee determined that although the preservation and maintenance of a healthful environment can be accomplished through existing State and county bodies, inclusion of this new section in Article VIII would give the State explicit power for the promotion and maintenance of a healthful environment and, as a matter of policy, would grant special and important recognition to the concepts encompassed within. It should be noted that inclusion of this new section in Article VIII is not intended to reduce, in any way, the present functions and powers of the State Land Use Commission and the various county zoning boards. Standing to sue was denied because the committee members wanted to allow the legislature discretion in formulating programs. Due to the limited resources and the need for fiscal restraints, your Committee felt that standing to sue should be denied so as to prevent the possible loss of State funds in litigation that could arise.

Article VIII is amended to add a new section, relating to management of State population growth, to read as follows:

"MANAGEMENT OF STATE POPULATION GROWTH

"Section . The State shall plan and manage the growth of its population to protect and preserve the public health and welfare."

Your Committee decided to add this new section to Article VIII in order to mandate the State to plan and manage the growth of its population. Your Committee is aware of the concern that all residents feel over the rapidly increasing population of the State. The committee determined that planning and managing this growth should be a top priority in the State's activities. Your Committee strongly recommends inclusion of this new section in Article VIII because the size of the population is directly related to the public health and welfare and the enjoyment thereof.

Members of your Committee expressed concern that the proposal might be subject to constitutional attack. Committee members were aware that some specific methods of implementing population control have been struck down by the courts as being unconstitutional under the U.S. Constitution. For instance, a residency bill recently enacted by the legislature, which was to serve as a mechanism for limiting the number of people moving to Hawaii by limiting access to public employment, was declared unconstitutional. However, other methods have been upheld. Regulations affecting the use of land and availability of housing and water meters have been upheld. Moreover, there are other indirect controls that can reduce the impact of population growth and deter growth by controlling expansion. Your Committee concluded that the legislature had many options available for implementation of this mandate.

Other members of the committee were concerned that such a broad mandate to the State might prohibit the counties from taking action through ordinances and zoning to control growth. But the committee decided that it was not necessary to amend the proposal to include the political subdivisions because they would actually be able to continue to act in this area in the absence of superseding State regulations.

Article VIII is further amended to add a new section relating to public safety, to read as follows:

"PUBLIC SAFETY

"Section . The Law of the Splintered Paddle, Kanawai Mamala-Hoe, decreed by Kamehameha I, 'Let every elderly person, woman and child, lie on the road in safety,' shall be a unique and living symbol of the State's concern for public safety."

"The State shall have power to provide for the safety of the people from crimes against persons and property."

This proposed new section is recommended as a policy statement addressing the growing concern of the citizenry that the crime rate is increasing at an alarming rate. It would be unique in its reference to the native Hawaiian heritage of this State, and unequalled in the United States. Such a policy statement would contribute to a better environment in our community. Some members argued that existing law enforcement statutes are adequate. Your Committee concluded that the existing statutes and enforcement bodies are ineffectual in coping with the growing crime rate. It was your Committee's intention to show this concern for public safety, on the constitutional level, to serve as a guide for the legislature.

Your Committee recommends inclusion of this new section in Article VIII because public safety is an integral part of the term "public health and welfare." It was singled out and placed in a new section to show that this is an area that deserves special and increased recognition. Standing to sue was denied because your Committee recognized the dilemma that the legislature is in. On the one hand, special areas are targeted to be acted upon. On the other hand, there has been an increased desire to limit spending. Thus, your Committee felt that standing to sue should be denied so as to allow the legislature discretion in formulating specific programs and preventing the loss of State funds in litigation that may arise.

Article VIII is further amended to add a new section relating to cultural resources, to read as follows:

"CULTURAL RESOURCES

"Section . The State shall have the power to preserve and develop the cultural and traditional arts, and historical places and objects of its various ethnic groups."

This proposed new section to Article VIII provides the State with the power to preserve and develop the cultural and traditional arts, and historical places and objects of its various ethnic groups. In its present form, Section 5 of Article VIII does include the power of the State to conserve and develop its objects and places of historic or cultural interest. Your Committee determined that this new section incorporating the cultural and traditional arts of the State's ethnic groups would be a more appropriate section in which to include the objects and places of historic or cultural interest. (See discussion of Section 5 of Article VIII, above.) Furthermore, this new section links all these attributes to the ethnic groups of the State, making explicit the committee's intent that all ethnic groups be given their due respect and consideration.

Article VIII is additionally amended to add a new section relating to the economic security of the elderly, to read as follows:

"ECONOMIC SECURITY OF THE ELDERLY

"Section . The State shall have the power to provide for the economic security of the elderly to assure retirement in health, honor and dignity."

This proposed new section to Article VIII provides the State with the power to provide for the economic security of the elderly to assure retirement in health, honor and dignity. Your Committee recommends passage of this proposal because such a policy statement will demonstrate the importance of this area and will encourage the legislature to grant a higher priority in the allocation of the State's fiscal resources to services to the elderly.

Your Committee feels that the elderly have almost been forgotten in our society. Everyone will become old someday, so the committee felt that it was incumbent on all members of society to grant the elderly special consideration. The committee recognized that the elderly have, as a group, contributed substantially to our State and society and that therefore these are people who deserve more than what they are presently receiving. Moreover, your Committee expressed concern over the high rate of inflation, which has for the past several years reached double-digit figures, and its effect on the elderly, who are usually on fixed incomes.

The committee reviewed certain testimony that revealed the fact that although the Department of Social Services and Housing now has some funding for the elderly, the great proportion of the funding comes from the federal government. At the present time, the elderly are not earmarked as a group for State funding. Instead they are merely included with all other appropriations for the Department of Social Services and Housing. Thus, absent a strong policy statement, the elderly may continue to receive a low priority for funding.

However, your Committee was concerned that the limited resources of the State might not provide sufficient revenue for everything that we might like to do for the elderly. Thus, your Committee found that it would be better to leave the final decision regarding allocation of money to the discretion of the legislature. Finally, your Committee did not intend by including this section to prohibit the State from spending money in other important areas, such as in the youth of the State.

Your Committee, after public hearings and due consideration of the subjects covered by the proposals, recommends that Article XII be left as it is presently worded. Since no delegate proposals seeking to amend Section 1 were received, discussion will be limited to those proposals that sought to amend Section 2 and to those proposals that sought to create a new section to Article XII. Discussion centered on three proposals: Proposal Nos. 131, 216 and 333.

Proposal 131 would have provided for open collective bargaining negotiations. Some members of your Committee argued that open collective bargaining negotiations between public employee unions and the State were necessary to ensure that public funds would be prudently spent. Furthermore, the same members argued that certain conditions in the private sector justify secrecy and that these conditions do not occur in the public sector. Your Committee, after due consideration to these arguments, concludes that closed negotiations are necessary to ensure the productivity of the negotiations and that legislative approval or disapproval of the final outcome of the bargaining process would prevent corruption from entering into the negotiation sessions. Your Committee agreed that there might be differences between the public and private sectors. However, these differences are negligible and do not in themselves justify open public collective bargaining negotiations.

Proposal 216 sought to give the legislature or county councils the primary responsibility for conducting collective bargaining negotiations, rather than the executive. It was argued that this change is necessary because it is the legislature and city council which have to balance the public employee's interests with the interests of the rest of the system. Your Committee, after due consideration to these arguments, concluded that the legislature does balance the interests involved because it ultimately approves or disapproves the final outcome of the negotiation sessions. Your Committee agrees that there is a partial delegation by the legislature. This delegation, however, is not total, since the legislature has the ultimate power to strike down the settlement if it is unsatisfactory. Your Committee further concluded that this partial delegation is wise because the particular legislators who might be chosen to do the negotiations may lack the needed expertise to conduct the actual negotiations.

Proposal 333 sought to create an inviolable right of the people to receive public services. It was contended that your Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry should not discuss this proposal because it specifically refers to Article I of the Constitution. Nevertheless, the committee did hear arguments from the members on this issue.

Your Committee concluded that the right to strike by public employees will be restricted, if needed in the future, in such manner as will be determined by the legislature. At the present time there is no reason to limit the right to strike by public employees and, if need should arise, the legislature could appropriately determine which bargaining units if any such a restriction should be placed on. Your Committee heard numerous testimonies on the success of the present system and agreed with that position.

Your Committee on Public Health and Welfare; Labor and Industry submits the related committee proposal and recommends (1) that the above-mentioned proposals referred to your Committee be filed; (2) that Section 4 of Article VIII and Sections 1 and 2 of Article XII be retained without amendment; and (3) that Sections 1, 2, 3 and 5 of Article VIII as amended and the five new sections to Article VIII as proposed in the form shown as Committee Proposal No. 5* pass first reading.

Signed by all members of the Committee. Delegate Cabral did not concur in part.

Many citizens, groups and organizations representing a cross section of the community presented their views on the subjects covered by the proposals. The following presented their views: State Representative Neil Abercrombie; Mr. Herman Adalist; the Reverend Darrow Aiona, Chairman, Board of Education; Ms Pauline Apuna; Dr. Charles Araki, Associate Professor, Department of Educational Administration, University of Hawaii; Ms Lorraine Borden, Library Assistant III, Hawaii State Library; Mr. Dante Carpenter; Mrs. Oi Yung Chow, Head, Hawaii State Library; Mr. Charles G. Clark, Superintendent, Department of Education; Dr. Floyd Commack, President, Hawaii Librarians Association; Ms Jan Dapitain; the Reverend Daniel Dever, Superintendent of Catholic Schools; Delegate Adelaide (Frenchy) De Soto; Mr. Barrett W. Francis, student body president, Chaminade University; Mr. Raymond Fujii, librarian; Ms Elizabeth Fujiwara; Ms Sue Gardner; Delegate H. Jean Goodenow; Ms Masae Gotanda, Legislative Chairman, Hawaii Librarians Association; Ms Claire Grossman; Ms Constance Hagiwara, Reference Librarian, Hawaii State Library; Delegate Helene Hale; Ms Donna Howard, Director of Institutional Relations, Hawaii Loa College; Ms Susan Irvine, President, League of Women Voters; Mrs. Caroline Ingersoll, Chairman of Schools Committee, League of Women Voters; Mrs. Patricia Kalima, staff of Delegate Helene Hale; Mr. Peter Kawahara; Dr. Dan Kinoshita, Vocational Education Program Specialist, Manpower Commission; Mr. Steve Kuna, aide to Delegate Adelaide De Soto; Delegate Masako Ledward; Mrs. Marsha Linville, librarian; Mr. Solomon Loo, University of Hawaii Professional Assembly; Dr. Fujio Matsuda, President, University of Hawaii; Mr. Ernest Mazey, Acting Executive Director, American Civil Liberties Union; Mrs. Ah Quon McElrath, ILWU; State Representative Norman Mizuguchi, Chairman, House Education Committee; Dr. Verlieann Malina-Wright, Chairperson, State Advisory Commission on Manpower and Full Employment; Ms Mary Maluyo; Mr. Charles Maxwell; Ms Shirley Mesher; Ms Barbara Nagaue, Hawaii State Teachers Association; Ms Christine Namau, Associated Students of the University of Hawaii and Representative of Community Colleges; Dr. Lawrence H. Nitz, Associate Professor, University of Hawaii; Mr. Dennis E. W. O'Connor, Chairman, Board of Trustees of St. Louis High School and Chaminade University; Ms Judy Parrish, Hawaii State Commission on the Status of Women; Mrs. Rose Pfund, President, Parent Teachers Association; Ms Natasha Poust; Mr. Alf Pratte; Mr. John Radcliffe, Executive Director, Hawaii State Teachers Association; Mr. Walter Ritte; Mr. Ambrose Rosehill, Chairman, Legislative Committee, Board of Regents, University of Hawaii; Mrs. Marion Saunders, member, Board of Education; Ms Gertrude Serata, Secretary, Hawaii Librarians Association; Dr. Sam Shigetomi, State Director Vocational Education; Mr. William Jarvis Sollver; Mr. Al Southard, President, Hawaii Federation of Teachers; Mr. Brian Suzuki, Chairman, Faculty Senate Con/Con Lobbying Committee, University of Hawaii at Manoa; Mr. David Thompson, Educational Director, ILWU; Mr. Donn Thompson, Legislative Chairman, Leeward Community College Faculty Senate; Dr. John Thompson, Chairman, Department of Educational Administration, University of Hawaii; Mrs. Ruth Tabrah, member, Board of Education; Ms Lorraine M. Teniya, Director of Student Financial Aid, Chaminade University; Mrs. Rita Miller Thorpe; Mr. Vincent Van Broklin, librarian, Hawaii State Library; Mrs. Marion Vaught, librarian; Mr. John C. White; Mr. Joe Wildman; Mr. Jim Wong; Delegate Ginger Wurdeman; Delegate Bruce Yamashita; Ms Barbara Yuen, member, Honolulu District School Advisory Council.

Your Committee conducted public hearings and deliberated upon the subjects covered by the proposals. It presents for your consideration recommendations affecting Article IX of the Hawaii Constitution as follows:

Amend Article IX, Section 1, to read as follows:

"PUBLIC EDUCATION

"Section 1. The State shall provide for the establishment, support and control of a statewide system of public schools free from sectarian control, a state university, public libraries and such other educational institutions as may be deemed desirable, including physical facilities therefor. There shall be no [segregation] discrimination in public educational institutions because of race, religion, sex or ancestry; nor shall public funds be appropriated for the support or benefit of any sectarian or private educational institution."

Your Committee believes that the use of the word "discrimination" rather than "segregation" in Section 1 of Article IX broadens the scope of the guarantees provided therein. It is not the intent of your Committee to diminish the protection against the classification of persons in public educational institutions on the basis of race, religion or ancestry conferred by the present provision in Article IX. Based on modern usage and recent court construction of the term "discrimination," your Committee understands that the prohibition against segregation is implicit in the ban against discrimination. This amendment will also conform the language of Section 1 of Article IX to its counterpart in Section 4 of Article I of the Hawaii Constitution.

Omission of the entire provision, "There shall be no segregation in public educational institutions because of race, religion or ancestry," was considered. Such a prohibition in the education article of the Hawaii Constitution is unnecessary because such protection is provided by the 14th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution as well as Section 4 of Article I of the Hawaii Constitution, which includes the equal protection clause and a prohibition against discrimination because of race, religion, sex or ancestry. Despite its redundancy, your Committee believes that the antidiscrimination provision should be retained in the education article as a reaffirmation of such guarantees in Hawaii's public school system.

The addition of the term "sex" to the list of suspect classifications in Section 1, Article IX, reflects your Committee's concern that public schools be barred from discriminating between persons on the basis of sex. Your Committee believes that this proposal is in harmony with the intent of the people of Hawaii as expressed in Article I, Section 21, "Equality of Rights," which provides that equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the State on account of sex. The language of Section 1, Article IX, would also correspond to that included in Section 4 of Article I of Hawaii's Constitution.

In addition to considering statewide educational policies, your Committee focused on the State's libraries, which constitute the Office of Libraries within the Department of Education. Your Committee heard testimony regarding the inequitable distribution of both funds and staff positions for the Office of Library Services, as well as the consistently low priority accorded to libraries by the Department of Education. Further testimony indicated that the problems faced by the libraries are internal. Proposals relating to a separate department for libraries were considered by your Committee, but it was concluded that a department of libraries should not be given constitutional status. Rather, your Committee urges the legislature to review and redress this problem.

In addition, your Committee considered several proposals to delete or weaken the provision in Article IX, Section 1, which prohibits the use of public funds for the support or benefit of any sectarian or private educational institution. The application of the federal constitution's prohibition against entanglement of the church and state to the issue was also discussed. Much of the debate focused on the merits of authorizing the use of State funds to match federal funds available for post-secondary student loan programs. It was argued that, if approved, such State funds would benefit students rather than private educational institutions. It was also noted that private educational institutions provide valuable competition and alternatives to State post-secondary educational institutions.

After much deliberation, your Committee decided against adopting any of the proposals. It was feared that sanctioning such State distributions would decrease the funds available to public schools and would set an undesirable precedent.

Your Committee also deliberated at length about the election, apportionment and tenure of members of the board of education. The following is your Committee's suggested amendment to Section 2 of Article IX:

"BOARD OF EDUCATION

"Section 2. There shall be a board of education composed of members who shall be elected in a nonpartisan manner by qualified voters in accordance with law from two at-large units. [At least part of the membership of the board shall represent geographic subdivisions of the State.] The first unit shall be comprised of the island of Oahu and all other islands not specifically enumerated. The second unit shall be comprised of the islands of Hawaii, Maui, Lanai, Molokai, Kahoolawe, Kauai and Niihau. Each at-large unit shall be divided into school districts, as may be provided by law. There shall be at least one member residing in each school district. No member shall serve more than two consecutive terms of four years each.

"Members elected in the 1978 general election shall serve for two-year terms."

The members of your Committee agree that members of the board of education should be elected on a nonpartisan basis. The maintenance of a quality educational system is so critical to the future of the State, and particularly its young people, that the system should not be subject to partisan politics. Rather, members of the board should be elected on the basis of their stances on educational issues.

One of the most important issues facing your Committee was the apportionment of the board. It was universally agreed that the present apportionment of the board with two members from the neighbor islands and seven from Oahu was unsatisfactory. Strong opposition to the present composition of the board, which has no member residing in the County of Maui or the County of Kauai, was heard from both members of the public and your Committee. The current language in Section 2 with respect to geographic subdivisions of the State would perpetuate the present situation and was accordingly rejected.

Your Committee desired to establish a framework for the board which would provide for the election of members who were aware of the local needs of particular school districts and accessible to their constituents. In addition, the need for a relatively small board which would be able to act quickly and decisively was cited.

It is the belief of your Committee that the proposed apportionment plan meets the concerns of your Committee. The two at-large units recognize geographical as well as traditional political boundaries in the State. The reference to the islands by name repeats the language of Article III, Section 4, which relates to legislative apportionment among the basic island units.

Under your Committee's proposal, the legislature is permitted to define school districts. It is anticipated, for example, that Oahu will continue to have a number of school districts. But the recommended provision allows the legislature some flexibility in responding to population shifts among the islands.

The requirement that there be at least one member residing in each school district reflects the serious concern of your Committee that members of the board be cognizant of and responsive to the needs of students within their respective school districts. On the other hand, it is hoped that at-large elections will result in members who will have a more comprehensive view of the educational needs of the students of Hawaii.

After much discussion and research on the question, your Committee decided to leave the precise number of board members to the legislature. However, there was discussion among the committee members that this board consist of between 13 and 19 members. A board which is any larger than 20 would be unwieldy and prevent the effective operation and management of the public school system. It is, however, the intent of your Committee that there be at least one member residing in the school districts of Hawaii, Maui and Kauai.

The purpose of the two-term limitation for board members is to guarantee that new perspectives and ideas will be periodically introduced to the board. Your Committee also believes that there are many qualified people in Hawaii who should be given the opportunity to serve on the board if they so desire. It was felt that four-year terms would allow board members to gain some expertise in the educational field but would not lead to complacency on the part of members.

Your Committee also was concerned that its apportionment plan be implemented as soon as possible. It, therefore, included a requirement that members elected in the 1978 general election be limited to two-year terms. The present apportionment plan is court-decreed, while the length of term of the board members is prescribed by statute. Your Committee believes that the members to be elected in the November 1978 elections are subject to constitutional amendments proposed by this Convention and ratified by the electorate.

As an alternative to the direct method of electing board members proposed above, your Committee considered a two-tiered school board system. Under such a system, local board members would be elected from school districts. Each school district board would then appoint one or more of its members to sit on a State board of education. While this system had some appealing features, your Committee prefers the direct and more visible method of election suggested above.

With respect to more substantive matters, it was agreed that the legislature and governor should continue to exercise general budgetary controls over the public school system. A number of methods of giving the board more effective control over the public school system were discussed. It is the intent of your Committee that the board of education be directly responsible and accountable to the people. Your Committee finds that, under the present situation, the governor can veto any rules or regulations promulgated by the board of education. The proposed amendment will allow the board, with a two-thirds vote, to override the veto power of the governor on educational rules and regulations, which will provide the board with some power to be more responsive to the wishes and needs of the electorate. Your Committee feels that the board, entrusted with the unique function of determining the course of education in the State and elected by the people, should have a certain degree of autonomy. However, it was felt that the requirement of a two-thirds vote of the board will avert the creation of capricious or ill-advised rules and regulations.

The following amendment to Article IX, Section 5, is proposed:

"BOARD OF REGENTS; POWERS

"Section 5. There shall be a board of regents of the University of Hawaii, the members of which shall be nominated and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appointed by the governor. At least part of the membership of the board shall represent geographic subdivisions of the State. The board shall have power, in accordance with law, to formulate policy, and to exercise control over the university through its executive officer, the president of the university, who shall be appointed by the board. Notwithstanding any law relating to the power to formulate policy and to exercise control over the university, the board shall have exclusive jurisdiction over the internal organization and management of the university."

Many people testified before your Committee concerning the governance problems of the University of Hawaii. Some of these problems apparently stem from the conflict between the University of Hawaii's position as a "body corporate," with a separate legal status, which is also subject to general budgetary and other controls of the governor and legislature. It is the intent of your Committee that the board of regents have flexibility in the internal organization and management of the university. The suggested proposal is an attempt to delineate the area within which the university, through its president, may operate.

The proposed amendment would not affect the governor's authority over the university in the major areas of policy formulation affecting the public in the budget-preparation process. In the budget-making process, the governor would continue to review the university's budget requests before submission to the legislature. Nor would the budget-making process of the legislature be altered. The university would continue to comply with laws passed by the legislature.

The import of the proposed amendment is to make clear that, with respect to matters of internal organization and management, the authority of the board of regents is complete. Its direction and control may be exercised through its president, exclusive of other agencies of the State government. Matters of internal organization and management refer essentially to those matters which directors of a corporation normally would consider to be internal corporate management matters. Such matters include those bearing on the mission of the enterprise, which is education in the case of the university, but which would have only minimal impact, if any, upon others outside the enterprise.

Among examples of matters which would fall under the exclusive purview of the board of regents, under the proposed amendment, would be the authority to establish or abolish an administrative or program unit, to establish or abolish subordinate offices or positions, and to transfer officers and employees between positions, subject only to the limitations of available appropriations and the provisions of such laws of general application as the civil service and collective bargaining laws.

Some members of your Committee expressed concern over the lack of articulation of the needs and adequate representation of community colleges in the present governance structure of the university system. Several proposals referred to your Committee call for a provision in Article IX which would allow the creation of separate governing boards for community colleges and other educational institutions. However, such a provision is unnecessary since the power to create such additional boards is implicit in Article IX. It was also noted that the addition of separate boards to govern community colleges and other educational institutions would add another layer of bureaucracy as well as create a possible need for a board to coordinate these separate boards.

Your Committee also considered including a provision in the Hawaii Constitution for student and faculty membership on the board of regents. However, your Committee believes that such a matter should not be given constitutional stature because present statutory language provides for such possible representation, and lauds the informal policy of the governor in appointing a student or young person to the board of regents. Your Committee urges the continuance of that practice.

Your Committee voted to add the following section to Article IX:

"HAWAIIAN STUDIES

"Section 6. The State shall promote the study of Hawaiian culture, history and language."

This proposal is indicative of your Committee's belief that the study of Hawaiian culture, history and language should be vigorously promoted and encouraged. After years of neglect, the Hawaiian culture has experienced a renaissance in the last few years. Hawaii enjoys a special status as the only state which was formerly a kingdom and which has its own Polynesian heritage and customs. The inclusion of this provision in the State Constitution will facilitate the preservation and growth of the Hawaiian culture.

Accordingly, your Committee on Education submits the attached committee proposal and recommends (1) that the above-numbered proposals referred to your Committee be filed; (2) that Section 4 of Article IX be retained without amendment; and (3) that Committee Proposal No. 6 pass first reading in the form attached hereto.

Signed by all members of the Committee except Delegate Wurdeman. Delegate Nozaki did not concur.

COMMITTEE PROPOSAL NO. 6

RELATING TO EDUCATION.

RESOLVED, that the following be agreed upon as amending Article IX of the State Constitution.

1. Article IX, Section 1, is amended to read:

PUBLIC EDUCATION

Section 1. The State shall provide for the establishment, support and control of a statewide system of public schools free from sectarian control, a state university, public libraries and such other educational institutions as may be deemed desirable, including physical facilities therefor. There shall be no [segregation] discrimination in public educational institutions because of race, religion, sex or ancestry; nor shall public funds be appropriated for the support or benefit of any sectarian or private educational institution.

2. Article IX, Section 2, is amended to read:

BOARD OF EDUCATION

Section 2. There shall be a board of education composed of members who shall be elected in a nonpartisan manner by qualified voters in accordance with law from two at-large units. [At least part of the membership of the board shall represent geographic subdivisions of the State.] The first unit shall be comprised of the island of Oahu and all other islands not specifically enumerated. The second unit shall be comprised of the islands of Hawaii, Maui, Lanai, Molokai, Kahoolawe, Kauai and Niihau. Each at-large unit shall be divided into school districts, as may be provided by law. There shall be at least one member residing in each school district. No member shall serve more than two consecutive terms of four years each.

Members elected in the 1978 general election shall serve for two-year terms.

3. Article IX, Section 3, is amended to read:

POWER OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION

Section 3. The board of education shall have power, in accordance with law, to formulate policy, and to exercise control over the public school system through its executive officer, the superintendent of education, who shall be appointed by the board [and shall serve as secretary to the board].

The board may adopt, amend or repeal rules as provided by law to implement its policy and to exercise control over the public school system. If the adoption, amendment or repeal of a rule promulgated by the board is prescribed by law to be subject to the approval of a designated authority who disapproves, the board may proceed to reconsider the adoption, amendment or repeal of the rule so disapproved. If after such reconsideration, the adoption, amendment or repeal of the rule shall be approved by a two-thirds vote of all the members of the board, the same shall be deemed approved by the designated authority.

4. Article IX, Section 5, is amended to read:

BOARD OF REGENTS; POWERS

Section 5. There shall be a board of regents of the University of Hawaii, the members of which shall be nominated and, by and with the advice and consent of the senate, appointed by the governor. At least part of the membership of the board shall represent geographic subdivisions of the State. The board shall have power, in accordance with law, to formulate policy, and to exercise control over the university through its executive officer, the president of the university, who shall be appointed by the board. Notwithstanding any law relating to the power to formulate policy and to exercise control over the university, the board shall have exclusive jurisdiction over the internal organization and management of the university.

5. Article IX is amended by adding a new section to read:

HAWAIIAN STUDIES

Section 6. The State shall promote the study of Hawaiian culture, history and language.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 42

Your Committee on Local Government was referred proposals numbered 1, 2, 17, 352, 366, 372, 475, 484, 485, 537, 578, 620, 653, 654, 692 and 727, all relating to local government; 42, 62, 115, 118, 124 and 176, all relating to local elected officials; 277, 307, 369, 457, 514, 655, 780 and 782, all relating to local government taxation and finance; 203, 215 and 246, all relating to local and special laws; and 194, 264, 293, 442, 606, 687 and 744, all relating to the designation of counties. Your Committee on Local Government begs leave to report as follows:

This report covers Article VII, titled "Local Government," of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii.

All committee meetings were open to the public, and State and county officials, representatives of organizations and individual citizens interested in the above-mentioned proposals were invited to present their views on the subjects covered by the proposals at public hearings.

The following citizens presented their views: Steve Yamashiro, Hawaii State Association of Counties; Richard Sharpless, of the City and County of Honolulu; Hiroshi Oshiro, Hawaii State Association of Counties; Gordon Wong, State Director of Taxation; Hiromu Suzawa, Deputy Attorney, Office of the State Attorney General; Delegate Barbara Marumoto; Delegate Floyd Pulham; Karen Bond; Dennis Callen; Eileen P. Anderson, State Director of Budget and Finance; Honolulu Councilman George Koga; Fred Bennion, Director of the Tax Foundation of Hawaii; Myron Thompson, Chairperson of the Commission on Organization of Government; Peter Leong, Office of Council Services, City and County of Honolulu; Jack Suwa; Robert Yotsuda, Hawaii State Association of Counties; Jensen Hee, Deputy Director, State Department of Budget and Finance; Richard Swanson, State Department of Taxation; Gordon Furutani, Land Use Commission; William Hoag, of the County of Kauai; Kazu Hayashida, Director of Transportation Services, City and County of Honolulu; Honolulu Councilman Dan Clement; Harold DeCosta, Hawaii Sightseeing Association; Delegate Lehua Fernandes Salling; Jack Schweigert; Bernard Punikaia; Francis Okita;

Jim Hall; James Davey, Honolulu Airlines Committee; Clement Judd, Hawaii Hotel Association; John Simpson, Hawaii Visitors Bureau; Delegate C. Randall Peterson; Delegate Helene Hale; Delegate Lawrence Kono; Ronald Amemiya, Attorney General of Hawaii; Albert Jeremiah, Jr., Office of Council Services, City and County of Honolulu; Robert Fukuda, Director, Department of Parks and Recreation, City and County of Honolulu; Dr. Ryokichi Higashionna, Director, State Department of Transportation; and Delegate Ginger Wurdeman.

Your Committee, having conducted public hearings and deliberated upon the subjects covered by the proposals, presents for your consideration Article VII of the Hawaii State Constitution as amended by the Committee on Local Government.

Your Committee recommends that Sections 1 and 2 of Article VII be retained in their present form.

Your Committee finds that many of the local government issues attempt to define the relationship between county and State and the division of powers between the two. Presently, the State Constitution vests the State legislature with complete authority to determine what powers counties may have and exercise. The heart of the question raised by proposals to grant counties more authority is whether the grant of powers to local government through the Constitution best promotes effective service to the people, which is the common goal of State and local governments. The four major counties expressed a desire for more powers and responsibility. They advocated the position that all powers not specifically granted to the State remain in the counties, as distinguished from the present practice whereby the legislature, through general laws, grants powers to the counties.

Your Committee examined Proposal No. 366, Sections 2 and 3, introduced at the request of the Hawaii State Association of Counties, which would accomplish the above goal by: (1) establishing the counties by Constitution; and (2) granting to counties, except Kalawao, all powers of government not denied by Constitution, law or charter.

Your Committee finds that the language provided for in Proposal No. 366, Section 2, is identical to that of the Hawaii Revised Statutes, Section 61-1. The Hawaii State Association of Counties acknowledges that the placement of the counties in the Constitution is no different from what is already offered by state law. As such, the committee felt that unless the benefits of including the statutory provisions regarding the counties in the Constitution were clearly established, Section 1 should remain the same. Thus, your Committee recommends retention of Section 1, which reads:

"POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS; CREATION, POWERS

"Section 1. The legislature shall create counties, and may create other political subdivisions within the State, and provide for the government thereof. Each political subdivision shall have and exercise such powers as shall be conferred under general laws."

Your Committee finds that Section 2 of the Constitution provides for the adoption of charters by each political subdivision and specifically provides that the charter provisions regarding structure and organization shall be superior to statutory provisions, subject to the allocation of powers and functions through the enactment of general laws.

Thus the Constitution permits local government powers by the allocation method, rather than by the shared residual powers method. Under the allocated powers method, powers are granted by the State to local governments. Under the residual powers method, all powers not granted to the State by Constitution, charter or other law belong to the local governments.

Representatives from the counties felt that powers allocated by the state legislature to local government usually have been narrowly construed by the courts, thus preventing the localities from assuming their proper responsibilities.

With shared residual powers, local government would have full legislative authority, subject to control by the state legislature through enactments which restrict local legislative actions or which deny power to act in certain areas. The local government would possess all power not denied by statute, charter or Constitution.

Your Committee finds that the existing allocation of powers method has not given rise to any major problems. Moreover, Hawaii's approach to the allocation of power to local governments appears to be in line with that of a majority of states. In addition, it is clear that charter provisions on governmental structure and organization are superior to conflicting statutory provisions.

By requiring the state legislature to distribute power among the different governmental levels, function can be shifted without invoking constitutional amendment procedures. Your Committee believes that the record demonstrates the legislature's responsiveness to the need of the counties. Although your Committee recognizes that there are some merits in providing "home rule" to the counties, this issue raises many complicated questions. The committee felt that proceeding without knowing all the facts and ramifications might adversely affect the public's welfare.

Your Committee finds that there is no necessity to revise the State Constitution to give residual powers to the counties, as opposed to the present method of granting powers to counties by general laws. Thus, your Committee recommends retention of Section 2:

"LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT; CHARTER

"Section 2. Each political subdivision shall have power to frame and adopt a charter for its own self-government within such limits and under such procedures as may be prescribed by general law. The prescribed procedures, however, shall not require the approval of a charter by a legislative body.

"Charter provisions with respect to a political subdivision's executive, legislative and administrative structure and organization shall be superior to statutory provisions, subject to the authority of the legislature to enact general laws allocating and reallocating powers and functions.

"A law may qualify as a general law even though it is inapplicable to one or more counties by reason of the provisions of this section."

Your Committee, after lengthy deliberation, presents for your consideration Section 3 of Article VII of the Hawaii State Constitution, amended as follows:

"TAXATION AND FINANCE

"Section 3. The taxing power shall be reserved to the State except so much thereof as may be delegated by the legislature to the political subdivisions, [and the] provided, that the power to levy a tax on real property shall be exercised exclusively by the counties. The legislature shall have the power to apportion state revenues among the several political subdivisions."

Your Committee finds that the question of a centralized real property tax program versus a decentralized system has been discussed many times over the past several years. Advocates of decentralization of the taxing power argue that it enhances the "home rule" concept, whereby the counties would be more directly involved in decisions affecting the real property tax, which is their major source of revenue.

Traditionally, much of the revenue for local government is derived from the real property tax. This is especially true in Hawaii, where the real property tax provides 85% of the City and County of Honolulu's local tax revenues, 87% of Hawaii county's, 85% of Maui county's and 82% of Kauai county's.

Presently, under the Hawaii Revised Statutes, the State is responsible for assessing all real property in the State that is subject to the payment of real property taxes, and for levying and collecting all such taxes, and adjudicating taxpayer appeals. Basic policies defining real property, setting the basis of assessment, determining the manner in which rates are set, setting exemptions and describing the appeals process are the responsibility of state lawmakers. The various county councils, on the other hand, establish the specific tax rate to be applied, expressed in terms of dollars per $1,000 of assessed value of property in each county. All revenues derived from the tax, less costs incurred by the State in administering property assessments and collections, are remitted by the State to the counties for their use.

In recent years, county officials have advocated the transfer of real property functions from the State to the counties. Such a move, it is felt, would permit counties to use the power to tax real property in a more effective manner. A general grant of taxing powers to the counties would include: a) assessments of property, b) adjudications of appeals, c) levying of tax rates, d) collections of taxes and e) formulation of basic policies.

Your Committee finds that the two major considerations against transferring real property functions are: (1) that the administrative function of real property taxing would create a duplication of services with resulting added costs to the taxpayer, and (2) that the State now may utilize the real property tax as an instrument of land use and economic policy. For instance, land more heavily taxed than buildings in certain classes of property encourages construction and full utilization of the land in these classes. The potency of the real property tax as a policy tool, although not directly measureable, is undeniable.

Your Committee concludes that the power to levy a tax on real property should be granted to the counties for the following reasons:

- (1) County governments are completely responsible and accountable for the administration of their local affairs. It is felt that in order to have complete authority over their county finances the real property tax function should be given to the counties.
- (2) By placing total responsibility for the real property tax program with the counties, public confusion as to who or which level of government is responsible for the real property tax bite would be eliminated.
- (3) County administration of the real property tax is consistent with home rule.
- (4) There are certain program elements which do not invoke issues of statewide concern and/or which do not lend themselves to single, statewide solutions. In other words, there are different economic bases and needs of the counties which cannot be addressed by statewide real property provisions.

Your Committee also considered granting to the counties the power to levy a general excise tax of up to 25% of that levied by the State. No county would be required to levy such an additional tax. But each county would be able to do so should that county council decide an additional tax source was needed. General excise taxes are a large source of revenue--the largest revenue source for the State. It appears that an increase in the general excise tax might be more acceptable to the taxpayers, although not necessarily fairer to them.

Your Committee acknowledges the desire of the counties for greater autonomy, self-reliance and financial independence. Although the general excise tax looks like an attractive way for the counties to raise revenues, your Committee finds that one should keep in mind the issue of fairness to taxpayers. Your Committee finds that if we continue to rely on the general excise tax, it should be not only as a means of generating revenues but as a partial or complete replacement of other burdensome taxes.

Your Committee is in accord with the conclusion reached by Mr. Fred Bennion of the Tax Foundation of Hawaii who states:

" . . . The counties, should they desire additional revenues, have the power to raise the added revenue through the real property tax by increasing the rates. While this avenue may be politically unappealing to local government officials, it does preserve the fiscal accountability of these elected officials. If increased spending is desired at the county level, which would necessitate an increase in the property tax rate, the added costs would have to be justified to the taxpayer."

Your Committee also considered various proposals providing for different formulas to determine the allocation to the counties of the state general excise and use taxes.

Your Committee finds that the magnitude of the loss of general revenue funds suggested in these proposals would work a severe hardship on the State and would result either in a drastic cutback or elimination of state government service from its present level, or in a move to increase the tax burden or to shift it to another tax source. These proposals assume that the counties are in need of additional sources of funds and conversely that the State government has under its control funds in excess of its requirements. Even if this were true at times, a formula set by the Constitution would not be responsive to changes in these circumstances. Moreover, strict formulas do not allow for differences in fiscal capabilities within the counties themselves over varying periods of time.

Your Committee recommends retention of Section 4 of Article VII of the State Constitution, which states:

"MANDATES; ACCRUED CLAIMS

"Section 4. No law shall be passed mandating any political subdivision to pay any previously accrued claim."

Your Committee finds that the delegates to the Constitutional Conventions of 1950 and 1968 included Section 4 in the Constitution "...to curb some legislative practices found obnoxious by local units. One of these practices is compelling county government to pay accrued claims. This form of legislation, it was urged, usurped the judgment of courts and interfered unnecessarily with local affairs and finances...." (Proceedings of the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1968, Vol. 1, pages 231-232). Your Committee finds no reason for a change and therefore recommends its retention.

Your Committee also recommends the retention of Section 5 of the State Constitution, which states:

"STATE-WIDE LAWS

"Section 5. This article shall not limit the power of the legislature to enact laws of state-wide concern."

Your Committee considered the matter of reimbursing the counties for any state-mandated programs and activities which involve local expenditures.

Presently a growing number of states are handling this issue legislatively. However, the Hawaii State Association of Counties believes that where there is strong legislative resistance or a lack of legislative initiative to embark upon such reimbursement programs, one alternative would be to approach the problem constitutionally.

In recommending retention of this section, your Committee recognizes the merits of this provision but believes that careful consideration should be given before including it in the State Constitution. There may be instances where initial costs of a program or activity may increase the expenditures of the county government but where the counties may, in the long run, realize a cost saving. In the same respect, there may be a change of responsibilities or activities which would no longer necessitate state funding.

Your Committee recommends a new section to Article VII governing land use, to read:

"LAND USE: STATE AND COUNTY

"Section . Reclassification of land to urban use shall be subject to approval by the county in which the land exists."

Some members of your Committee questioned whether or not other members expressed concern over the ramifications involved. However, your Committee found that the counties exercise land-use and zoning controls pursuant to a grant of authority from the State. The State exercises general control through the Land Use Commission. Increasingly, the State is becoming more involved in control of all types of land.

Your Committee finds that the counties have expressed concern over land-use planning, especially when it conflicts with county objectives. As a result of this county concern, your Committee considered a proposed amendment submitted by the Hawaii State Association of Counties which would require the State to designate all lands in Hawaii as urban or nonurban. However, once lands were so designated, the counties would have the exclusive power to control and regulate all land uses and development and further any law changing such land-use designations from urban to nonurban or vice versa would not become effective until approved by the affected county.

Your Committee also considered the question of limited terms of office for elected county officials. The committee felt that, rather than dealing with the issue on a constitutional level, the county charters should expressly provide for the terms for their elected county officials.

Finally, your Committee presents for your further consideration an amendment to Article XVI which adds a new section, as follows:

"EFFECTIVE DATE AND APPLICATION OF ARTICLE VII, SECTION 3

"Section . The amendments to Section 3 of Article VII shall take effect on the first day of January after three full calendar years have elapsed following such ratification. Upon the taking effect of the amendments Article VII as amended shall apply to all county charters irrespective of whether adopted before or after the admission of the State."

This transitional provision will defer the effective date of the amendment regarding the power to levy real property taxes for three years. The counties requested the three-year period as a compromise position among them in light of their different administrative problems in implementing the section.

Your Committee submits the related committee proposal and recommends (1) that the above-numbered proposals referred to your Committee be filed; (2) that Sections 1, 2, 4 and 5 of Article VII be retained without amendment; and (3) that Section 3 of Article VII be amended, that a new section relating to land use be added to Article VII, and that a new section relating to the effective date of the amendments to Article VII, Section 3, be added to Article XVI in the form shown as Committee Proposal No. 7* and pass first reading.

Signed by all members of the Committee except Delegates Cabral, Haunani Ching, Ellis, Hagino, Souki and Wurdeman.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 43

Your Committee on Style, to which was referred Committee Proposal No. 1, RD. 1, begs leave to report as follows:

The proposal, which the Convention has adopted on second reading, covers Article XIV, Section 5, of the State Constitution, Code of Ethics. The Convention has proposed amendments to Section 5.

Your Committee proposes several style changes which are indicated by brackets [for deletions] and underscoring for additions as shown in the committee report and in the committee proposal.

"[Section 5.] The people of Hawaii believe that public officers and employees must exhibit the highest standards of ethical conduct, and that [such] these standards [derive] come from the personal integrity of each individual in government. [In keeping] To keep faith with this belief, the legislature, each political subdivision, and the constitutional convention shall adopt a code of ethics, which shall apply to appointed and elected officers and employees of the State or the political subdivision, respectively, including members of boards, commissions and other bodies.

"Each code of ethics shall be administered by a separate ethics commission, except [that] the code of ethics adopted by the constitutional convention which shall be administered by the [State Ethics Commission.] state ethics commission. The members of ethics commissions shall be prohibited from taking an active part in political management or in political campaigns. Ethics commissioners shall be selected in a manner which assures their independence and impartiality.

"Each code of ethics shall include, but not be limited to, provisions on gifts, confidential information, [the] use of position, contracts with government agencies, post-employment, financial disclosure, and lobbyist registration and restriction. The financial disclosure [provision] provisions shall require all elected officers, all candidates for elective office, and such appointed officers and employees as [shall be] provided by law to make public financial [disclosure.] disclosures. Other public officials [with] having significant discretionary or fiscal powers as provided by law shall make confidential financial [disclosure.] disclosures. All financial disclosure statements shall include [at least the following areas:], but not be limited to, sources and amounts of income, [ownership and officership interests in businesses,] business ownership, officer and director positions, ownership of real property, debts, creditor interests in insolvent businesses and the names of persons represented before government agencies."

The changes recommended are merely for the purposes of style and clarification and have no further implications.

Changes of particular interest recommended by the committee:

1. Paragraph 2. Changing "the State Ethics Commission" to "the state ethics commission."

Legally, the Constitution itself does not establish or address an ethics commission.

From a stylistic point of view, designations of state and county government officers and agencies are not generally capitalized.

Therefore, the committee voted to remove the capitalization.

Some committee members expressed concern that the ethics committee's intent was that no additional commissions should be created to review ethics of constitutional convention members. This intent was confirmed by the ethics committee chairperson, Delegate Okamura. Thus an additional suggestion to change "the" before "state ethics commission" was defeated.

2. Paragraph 3. Financial disclosures.

A suggestion of style was made to move "as provided by law" (in the second sentence) to the end of the sentence. This was agreed to be a substantive change, as the clause does specifically relate to provisions which legally determine which appointed officials and employees file public or confidential financial disclosures.

3. Paragraph 3. Replacing "at least the following areas" with "but not be limited to" so as to be consistent with the rest of the paragraph.

4. Paragraph 3. "...officership..."

Even though possibly a word, this is not of common usage and familiarity to the public. Thus, with input from the director of the state ethics commission and the ethics committee chairperson, the committee further defined it as meaning "business ownership, officer and director positions."

Style Committee Recommendations

1. Your Committee on Style recommends that Section 5 entitled "Codes of Ethics" be deleted from Article XIV and that a new article entitled "Code of Ethics" be added.

The members of the Committee on Style debated at length the wisdom of including the first paragraph of this proposal, which obviously is a preamble. Should such a practice become universal, the Constitution would be substantially lengthened. However, the committee finally agreed with the chairperson of the ethics committee that the subject was sufficiently elevated to justify elevating language. However, the Committee on Style recommends, such being the case, that the section become a separate article.

2. Your Committee on Style recommends the adoption of Standing Committee Report No. 43 and consideration of the passage of Committee Proposal No. 1, RD. 1, S. 1* on third reading.

Signed by all members of the Committee except Delegates Odanaka, Stone, Burgess, Eastvold, Ellis, Teruo Ihara and Tamayori.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 44

Your Committee on Style, to which was referred Committee Proposal No. 2, begs leave to report as follows:

The proposal, which the Convention has adopted on second reading, covers Article XIII of the State Constitution, State Boundaries, Capital, Flag. The Convention has proposed amendments to the title and Section 1, as well as the addition of a new section, "MOTTO."

Your Committee proposes several style changes which are indicated by brackets [for deletions] and underscoring for additions, as shown in the committee proposal.

Title. Your Committee considered the new wording of the title and recommends the addition of the word "AND" before "MOTTO."

Section 1 ("BOUNDARIES"). Your Committee considered the wording of Section 1 but decided not to recommend any further changes.

Section 4 ("MOTTO"). Following is the version of Section 4 that the Convention adopted on second reading:

"MOTTO

"Section 4. The motto of the State shall be 'Ua mau ke ea o ka aina i ka pono'."

The change recommended by your Committee is as follows:

Moving the period inside the quotation marks at the end of the sentence.

Your Committee feels the change is in order, as all periods and commas are included inside quotation marks as a common rule.

The changes recommended are merely for the purpose of style improvement and have no further implications.

Your Committee submits the related proposal, Committee Proposal No. 2, S. 1* and recommends its passage on third reading.

Signed by all members of the Committee except Delegates Odanaka, Burgess, Ellis and Tamayori.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 45

Your Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing begs leave to report that Stand. Com. Rep. No. 46 and Minority Rep. No. 5 have been printed and distributed.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 46

Your Committee on Legislature, to which were referred proposals numbered 22, 25, 27, 28, 42, 60, 63, 68, 69, 70, 71, 79, 91, 115, 130, 136, 146, 147, 158, 161, 177, 181, 186, 190, 193, 195, 196, 206, 212, 223, 226, 236, 243, 252, 263, 266, 267, 271, 275, 280, 285, 288, 292, 297, 305, 306, 320, 321, 323, 340, 346, 350, 373, 382, 390, 395, 396, 406, 408, 412, 417, 419, 437, 445, 446, 455, 459, 472, 499, 503, 511, 513, 532, 533, 542, 558, 562, 565, 574, 591, 592, 619, 621, 622, 623, 624, 631, 643, 711, 715, 716, 720, 728, 730, 737, 760, 788, 792, 794, 796, 797, 801 and 830, relating to the legislature and concerning Article III of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii, begs leave to report as follows:

All hearings and meetings of your Committee were open to the public, and many citizens, groups and organizations representing the community and representatives of the government were invited to present their views on the subjects covered by the proposals at the public hearings.

The following citizens presented their views:

Sam Caldwell, of the Chamber of Commerce; Vance Cannon, Office Things; Norbert Cordeiro; Roy Crocker; Floyd Focht; Jerry Hess, League of Women Voters; Stephen Kealoha, ILWU Local 142; George Mason, Chamber of Commerce; Rhoda Miller, League of Women Voters; Reinhard Mohr, American Civil Liberties Union; Pearl Nishimura; Marie Riley, Common Cause; Edwin Taylor; Takeshi Uyesugi, AFL-CIO Hawaii (Building and Construction Trades Council); Joe Wildman; Lt. Governor Nelson Doi; State Representative Russell Blair; State Senator John Leopold; Frank Fasi, Mayor, City and County of Honolulu; Eileen Anderson, Director, State Department of Budget and Finance; Morris Takushi, State Elections Office; Delegate Naomi Campbell; Delegate Laura Ching; Delegate Helene Hale; Delegate Peter Lewis; Delegate Barbara Marumoto; Delegate Randall Peterson; Delegate Floyd Pulham; Delegate Richard Sasaki; Delegate John Stone; and Delegate Larry Uyehara.

Your Committee, having conducted public hearings and deliberated upon the subjects covered by the proposals, presents for your consideration recommendations affecting Article III of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii, as follows:

Section I of Article III, relating to legislative power, was not amended. This section vests the legislative power of the State in a legislature which shall consist of two houses, a senate and a house of representatives. By passing upon this section without amendment, your Committee recommends that the bicameral form of legislature be retained for the State of Hawaii.

The Legislative Reference Bureau manual, Hawaii Constitutional Convention Studies 1978, Article III, The Legislature, (Volume I, pages 28 to 42, inclusive), outlines and discusses the pros and cons of the unicameral-bicameral issue. Arguments presented by the witnesses testifying before your Committee on the matter generally raised the same arguments set forth in the Legislative Reference Bureau manual, with some variations in approach and application.

From the testimony presented by witnesses and after deliberations on this matter of unicameralism versus bicameralism, your Committee is not convinced that unicameralism is a more effective legislative structure than bicameralism in the context of today's political development in Hawaii.

The 1978 arguments for unicameralism heard by your Committee are no different from those advanced at the 1968 Constitutional Convention. The 1968 convention deliberated the matter of legislative structure at great length, particularly focusing upon the subjects of cost and efficiency, accountability and responsiveness of legislators, checks to assure proper deliberative function of the legislature and such other collateral matters, and concluded that the two-house legislature should be continued. Your Committee agrees with the reasoning of the 1968 convention on the matter and finds it to be as valid today as then.

There have been no dramatic changes of circumstances since 1968 that would now warrant aborting the long-standing tradition of the two-house legislature, which has worked well and even at an improved level since 1968. Indeed, an evaluation by the Conference of State Legislatures reported that Hawaii's legislature, among the 50 state legislatures, is the most openly accessible, the most comprehensible and least complex legislative system in our nation, and though not the smallest legislature in size, its 51-member house and 25-member senate make thoughtful deliberation and rational organization possible and operative. Overall, Hawaii was ranked seventh among the 50 states in the evaluation. It should be noted that Nebraska, a one-house legislative state, was ranked ninth.

It should be plain that matters of accountability and responsiveness by legislators and openness and accessibility of the legislature can be achieved in many ways. Hawaii has, since 1968, made great strides in this respect.

The 1968 convention amended the Constitution to provide that no bill shall pass third or final reading in either house unless printed copies of the bill in the form to be passed shall have been made available to the members of that house for at least twenty-four hours. This 24-hour rule provides both legislators and the public an opportunity to take informed action on bills facing imminent passage. The code of ethics which applies to legislators also helps to avoid conflicts of interest by requiring financial disclosures, and helps the public to assess the accountability of the legislators. In recent years, the rules of the house and senate have been structured so that there is more openness and accessibility. Conference committee deliberations which were closed for many years are now open to the public, and all legislative committee meetings for decision-making are also open to the public. Only organizational meetings, party caucuses and certain legislative committee hearings which might involve invasion of privacy if made public, are not open to the public.

For reasons aforesaid, your Committee feels that the proponents of unicameralism bear the burden of the proof--to show that bicameralism should not be retained--and that they have fallen short of that burden.

Sections 2 and 3 of Article III relating to the composition of the senate and the house were amended to read as follows:

"SENATE; COMPOSITION

"Section 2. The senate shall be composed of twenty-five members, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective senatorial districts. [Until the next reapportionment the] The senatorial districts and the number of senators to be elected from each shall be as set forth in the [Schedule] reapportionment plan as established by the reapportionment commission.

"HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES; COMPOSITION

"Section 3. The house of representatives shall be composed of fifty-one members, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective representative districts. [Until the next reapportionment, the] The representative districts and the number of representatives to be elected from each shall be as set forth in the [Schedule] reapportionment plan as established by the reapportionment commission."

The Schedule referred to in Sections 2 and 3 was deleted. This Schedule, which covered state senatorial and representative apportionment, is now obsolete, and your Committee has based the districting for the senatorial and representative districts on the apportionment plan as established by the reapportionment commission. The reapportionment commission of 1973 established a new apportionment scheme which is in effect until the next reapportionment. Thus, it is intended that until the next reapportionment by the reapportionment commission, the senatorial and representative districts shall be as set forth in the reapportionment plan established by the commission in 1973, and thereafter as set forth in the reapportionment plan established by the commission in reapportionment years.

Section 4 of Article III, relating to reapportionment and reapportionment years, the reapportionment commission and other related subjects, has been removed from Article III and placed within a new article.

Section 4 was removed from Article III because your Committee amended the section to empower the reapportionment commission to redraw congressional districts in addition to the reapportionment of the state legislature. The scope of Section 4 was thereby expanded to include the subject of congressional districting as well as the state legislature; thus your Committee believes that Section 4, as amended, is no longer appropriate within Article III.

Section 10 of Article III has been amended to read as follows:

"SALARY; ALLOWANCES; COMMISSION ON LEGISLATIVE SALARY

"Section [10] ____ . The members of the legislature shall receive allowances reasonably related to expenses [and a salary,] as prescribed by law, and a salary prescribed pursuant to this section. [Any change in salary shall not apply to the legislature that enacted the same.]

"There shall be a commission on legislative salary, which shall be appointed by the governor on or before [June 1, 1971, and every four years after the first commission is appointed. Within sixty days after its appointment,] November 30, 1978, and every eight years thereafter. Not later than the fortieth legislative day of the 1979 regular legislative session and every eight years thereafter, the commission shall submit to the legislature and the governor recommendations for a salary plan for members of the legislature, and then dissolve. The salary plan submitted shall become effective as provided in the plan unless the legislature disapproves the plan by adoption of a concurrent resolution prior to adjournment sine die of the legislative session in which the plan is submitted or the governor disapproves the plan by a message of the disapproval transmitted to the legislature prior to the said adjournment. Any change in salary which becomes effective shall not apply to the legislature to which the recommendation for the change in salary was submitted."

As it exists today, Section 10 of Article III empowers the legislature to prescribe the salary for its members. There is also a commission on legislative salary which submits recommendation to the legislature every four years. While this mechanism for salary changes appears reasonable and useful in theory, it has not been of value in practice. The purpose of the provision is obvious. The legislators are deserving of their due compensation and adjustments thereto. In 1968, the Constitutional Convention established a salary of $12,000 per year for a legislator and the mechanism for a periodic review for salary adjustment. There has been no change in salary since 1968, and in the context of inflationary times this means a continuing reduction in the worth of the salary of $12,000 per year. Under Section 10 experience has clearly demonstrated that legislators are reluctant to prescribe their own salaries, even though they may be based on the recommendations of an independent commission to insulate the legislators from color of self-interest. Taxpayers are often critical of pay increases for legislators, and legislators run the risk of voting themselves out of office when they approve their own pay raises. Where the context dictates that emotion rather than rational thought govern, it is unrealistic to expect the legislators to prescribe their own salaries.

Your Committee recognizes that if legislative salaries are too low for many people to afford to serve, it will deny the public the services of many competent people, and the legislature may not be representative of a good cross section of the community. It would tend to attract only the very rich who need not depend on the salary and the very poor who can fare no better otherwise. Your Committee also notes that the cost of living has risen markedly, and the time legislators must devote to their elected duties has increased in the state legislature.

For the reasons aforesaid, your Committee has amended Section 10 to remove the burden from the legislators to prescribe their salaries by an overt act. Your Committee has provided that the recommendations of the legislative salary commission will become effective unless the legislature or the governor shall disapprove the recommendations. Thus the legislature's tacit acquiescence is enough unless the legislators or the governor disapprove. The governor's disapproval power was injected to serve as a check over the legislature and the legislative salary commission. Any change in salary shall not apply to the legislature to which the salary plan is submitted. The term "legislature" as used herein shall mean the state legislature which exists from the date of one general election to the date of the next general election.

Your Committee has also amended the salary adjustment review by the legislative salary commission, to be conducted every 8 years instead of every 4 years.

While your Committee is concerned with providing due and adequate salary for legislators, it is also very concerned that the legislators do not unduly enrich themselves of the public treasure. Your Committee is well aware that the salary is only part of the total compensation to which a legislator is entitled. In this respect, your Committee urges and expects the legislative salary commission to hold public hearings in its deliberation on the salary plan and to consider the other benefits, direct or indirect, made to legislators by way of allowance, per diem, reimbursement, health benefits and retirement benefits in the evaluation of a legislator's basic salary.

Section 11 of Article III, relating to legislative sessions, has been amended to provide for a mandatory recess of not less than 5 days at some period between the 20th and 40th days of the regular session. Both houses shall agree on the dates of recess, which shall be excluded in computing the number of days in any session.

The purpose of this amendment is to provide both legislators and the public an opportunity to review during the recess all bills that have been introduced in both houses, and an opportunity for legislators and constituents to communicate on matters before the legislature at about the midpoint of the session. The practice of the legislature has been to impose a bill-introduction deadline at or about the 20th session day. Your Committee believes that the recess will also afford the public an opportunity to become acquainted with and follow the bills through the legislature more intelligently.

Section 13 of Article III has been amended by adding thereto the following:

"Every meeting of a committee in either house or of a committee comprised of member or members from both houses held for the purpose of making decision on matters referred to the committee shall be open to the public."

"Each house shall provide by rule of its proceedings for a date, applicable to both houses but no sooner than the twentieth day of the session, by which date all bills to be considered in a regular session shall be introduced; provided that such date shall precede the commencement of the mandatory recess of not less than five days under Section ."

The amendment to Section 13 requires that all decision-making meetings of a legislative committee shall be open to the public. While your Committee is informed that such is the current practice of both houses of the state legislature by their respective rules, it finds that the public's right to know what their legislators are deciding is deserving of constitutional protection. This amendment, however, is not intended to require that certain kinds of meetings, including organizational meetings, partisan caucuses and certain hearings involving the invasion of a person's right to privacy if made public, shall be open to the public.

The amendment to Section 13 also requires both houses of the legislature to establish by rules a cutoff date for introduction of bills, which shall precede the commencement of the mandatory recess by not less than 5 days. This is to allow the public the use of the mandatory 5-day recess to review every bill that will ever be introduced in that legislative session.

Section 16 of Article III relating to passage of bills has been amended in only one respect. The sentence containing the twenty-four hour rule has been amended to read:

"No bill shall pass third or final reading in either house unless printed copies of the bill in the form to be passed shall have been made available to the members of that house for at least [twenty-four] forty-eight hours."

In view of the increasing numbers of bills being introduced in the legislature and the public concern expressed on the difficulty of following the many bills through the legislature in the closing days of the session, your Committee believes that the enlargement of time from 24 hours to 48 hours, during which a legislator or a constituent could review a bill before third or final reading, would help both legislator and constituent to avoid hasty decisions and surprises regarding the bill.

Because of the removal of Section 4 from Article III, the sections numbered 5 to 20, inclusive, of Article III are renumbered to read sections 4 to 19 inclusive, respectively.

As stated earlier, your Committee has removed Section 4 of Article III relating to reapportionment from said Article III because the duties of the reapportionment commission were expanded to cover congressional districting in addition to apportionment of the state legislature. Your Committee recommends that the subject relating to reapportionment be contained in a separate article. The substance of Section 4 of Article III was retained in the new article except that the following amendments were made thereto:

1. The reapportionment commission was empowered to reapportion congressional districts in addition to its duty to reapportion the state legislature. Your Committee finds that the task of congressional districting is appropriately within the duties of the reapportionment commission and does not present an undue burden. Congressional districting involving only two districts is relatively easy compared with redistricting for the state legislature. Moreover, the short and recent history of congressional districting in Hawaii has already shown that the state legislature has attempted and failed to redistrict to conclusion. Your Committee feels that congressional districting by the state legislature would tend to be suspect as manipulation designed to serve personal or partisan goals. Congressional districting by a reapportionment commission, whose members are precluded from becoming candidates for election in either of the first two elections under the redistricting plan, will be received with public confidence.
2. The time within which the reapportionment commission must complete its work has been amended by increasing it from 120 days to 150 days. This was the recommendation of the 1973 reapportionment commission in its report to the governor. The lieutenant governor's office, which worked closely with the 1973 reapportionment commission, also recommended the increase. The added task of congressional districting also justifies an increase over the 120 days.
3. The provision in said Section 4 relating to minimum representation for a basic island unit of 2 senators and 3 representatives, even if that island unit was entitled to a lesser allocation, has been deleted because that provision was declared unconstitutional by the U.S. District Court (Hawaii), as it did not comport with the command of the equal protection clause of the U.S. Constitution.
4. Other nonsubstantive style changes were effected to accommodate the substantive changes.

In reviewing the redistricting criteria for apportionment within basic island units, your Committee focused on criterion number 7, which reads as follows: "Not more than four members shall be elected from any district." Under existing districting, four of the eight senatorial districts contain four senators each, and the remaining four districts each have three or less. While it is recognized that there is some purpose in having larger multimember senatorial districts to provide differing constituencies as compared with two-member representative districts, your Committee believes that a four-member senatorial district tends to be too large considering the 25-member size of the senate. Your Committee considered reducing the limit of multimember districts but realized that the reapportionment commission needs some flexibility to fashion an overall plan which may require the inclusion of a four-member district to accommodate an unusual situation. For this reason, criterion number 7 was not amended; however, your Committee urges the reapportionment commission to consider smaller multimember districts and to consider the four-member district only when it is impracticable to do otherwise.

Section 1 of Article XVI relating to districting and apportionment is now obsolete and superseded by the 1973 reapportionment plan, which is the current law on districting and apportionment for the state legislature. The amendment to Section 1 proposed by your Committee expressly acknowledges the 1973 reapportionment plan as effective until the next reapportionment.

Section 2 of Article XVI relating to the 1978 senatorial elections has been amended to read:

"[1968] 1978 SENATORIAL ELECTIONS

"Section 2. [Senators elected in the 1968 general election shall serve for two-year terms.] Article III, Section 5, to the contrary notwithstanding, the terms of office of the members of the senate elected in the 1978 general election shall be as follows: members of the senate shall be divided into two classes. The first class shall consist of the following number elected with the highest number of votes from their respective senatorial districts: first district, one; second district, one; third district, one; fourth district, two; fifth district, two; sixth district, two; seventh district, two; eighth district, one. Members of the first class shall hold office for a term of four years beginning with their election and ending on the day of the second general election held thereafter. The remaining members elected shall constitute the second class and shall hold office for a term of two years beginning with their election and ending on the day of the next general election held thereafter."

The effect of this amendment is to initiate the staggering of terms of members of the senate, by having the 12 senators with the highest number of votes from their respective districts serve 4-year terms commencing with the 1978 general election and the remaining 13 senators serve 2-year terms commencing with the 1978 general election. Presently all senators run concurrently for 4-year terms. The experience in the last 10 years has generated a feeling that such a system of concurrent terms for all senators enables the senate to wield an inordinate amount of power in dealing with the members of the house of representatives, who must run every 2 years and are under more election pressures to produce. All the senators can stand fast on certain issues in disputes between the senate and the house and do less compromising. With staggered terms, at least half the senate would be held accountable to the voters in every general election. Your Committee believes staggered terms would provide the public with a senate which will be more frequently accountable and thereby more responsive.

All other sections of Article III, not proposed for amendment by your Committee have been retained without amendment.

Your Committee recommends: (1) that the above-mentioned proposals referred to your Committee be filed; and (2) that Committee Proposal No. 8 pass first reading in the form attached hereto.

Signed by all members of the Committee except Delegates Cabral, Hanaike and Kaapu. Delegates Barr, Blean, Goodenow and Miller did not concur and Delegate Kimball did not concur in part.

COMMITTEE PROPOSAL NO. 8

RELATING TO THE LEGISLATURE.

RESOLVED, that the following be agreed upon as amending Articles III and XVI of the State Constitution.

1. Article III, Section 2, is amended to read:

SENATE; COMPOSITION

Section 2. The senate shall be composed of twenty-five members, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective senatorial districts. [Until the next reapportionment the] The senatorial districts and the number of senators to be elected from each shall be as set forth in the [Schedule] reapportionment plan as established by the reapportionment commission.

2. Article III, Section 3, is amended to read:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES; COMPOSITION

Section 3. The house of representatives shall be composed of fifty-one members, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the respective representative districts. [Until the next reapportionment, the] The representative districts and the number of representatives to be elected from each shall be as set forth in the [Schedule] reapportionment plan as established by the reapportionment commission.

3. Article III, Section 4, relating to reapportionment is deleted in its entirety.*

*The substance of Section 4 has been retained in a new article (see page 797 of this proposal); changes therein are indicated by brackets for deleted material, and underscoring for new.

4. Article III, Section 10, is amended to read:

SALARY; ALLOWANCES; COMMISSION ON LEGISLATIVE SALARY

Section [10] _____. The members of the legislature shall receive allowances reasonably related to expenses [and a salary,] as prescribed by law, and a salary prescribed pursuant to this section. [Any change in salary shall not apply to the legislature that enacted the same.]

There shall be a commission on legislative salary, which shall be appointed by the governor on or before [June 1, 1971, and every four years after the first commission is appointed. Within sixty days after its appointment,] November 30, 1978, and every eight years thereafter. Not later than the fortieth legislative day of the 1979 regular session and every eight years thereafter, the commission shall submit to the legislature and the governor recommendations for a salary plan for members of the legislature, and then dissolve. The salary plan submitted shall become effective as provided in the plan unless the legislature disapproves the plan by adoption of a concurrent resolution prior to adjournment sine die of the legislative session in which the plan is submitted or the governor disapproves the plan by a message of the disapproval transmitted to the legislature prior to the said adjournment. Any change in salary which becomes effective shall not apply to the legislature to which the recommendation for the change in salary was submitted.

5. Article III, Section 11, is amended to read:

SESSIONS

Section [11] _____. The legislature shall convene annually in regular session at 10:00 o'clock a.m. on the third Wednesday in January.

At the written request of two-thirds of the members to which each house is entitled, the presiding officers of both houses shall convene the legislature in special session. The governor may convene both houses or the senate alone in special session.

Regular sessions shall be limited to a period of sixty days, and special sessions shall be limited to a period of thirty days. Any session may be extended a total of not more than fifteen days. Such extension shall be granted by the presiding officers of both houses at the written request of two-thirds of the members to which each house is entitled or may be granted by the governor.

Each regular session shall be recessed for not less than five days at some period between the twentieth and fortieth days of the regular session. The legislature shall determine the dates of the mandatory recess by concurrent resolution. Any session may be recessed by concurrent resolution adopted by a majority of the members to which each house is entitled. Saturdays, Sundays, holidays, the days in mandatory recess and any days in recess pursuant to a concurrent resolution shall be excluded in computing the number of days of any session.

All sessions shall be held in the capital of the State. In case the capital shall be unsafe, the governor may direct that any session be held at some other place.

6. Article III, Section 13, is amended to read:

ORGANIZATION; DISCIPLINE; RULES; PROCEDURE

Section [13] _____. Each house shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members and shall have, for misconduct, disorderly behavior or neglect of duty of any member, power to punish such member by censure or, upon a two-thirds vote of all the members to which such house is entitled, by suspension or expulsion of such member. Each house shall choose its own officers, determine the rules of its proceedings and keep a journal. The ayes and noes of the members on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of the members present, be entered upon the journal.

Twenty days after a bill has been referred to a committee in either house, the same may be recalled from such committee by the affirmative vote of one-third of the members to which such house is entitled.

Every meeting of a committee in either house or of a committee comprised of member or members from both houses held for the purpose of making decision on matters referred to the committee shall be open to the public.

Each house shall provide by rule of its proceedings for a date, applicable to both houses but no sooner than the twentieth day of the session, by which date all bills to be considered in a regular session shall be introduced; provided that such date shall precede the commencement of the mandatory recess of not less than five days under Section _____.

7. Article III, Section 16, is amended to read:

PASSAGE OF BILLS

Section [16] _____. No bill shall become law unless it shall pass three readings in each house on separate days. No bill shall pass third or final reading in either house unless printed copies of the bill in the form to be passed shall have been made available to the members of that house for at least [twenty-four] forty-eight hours.

Every bill when passed by the house in which it originated, or in which amendments thereto shall have originated, shall immediately be certified by the presiding officer and clerk and sent to the other house for consideration.

Any bill pending at the final adjournment of a regular session in an odd-numbered year shall carry over with the same status to the next regular session. Before the carried-over bill is enacted, it shall pass at least one reading in the house in which the bill originated.

8. Sections numbered 5 to 20, inclusive, of Article III are renumbered to read sections 4 to 19 inclusive, respectively.

9. A new article*, to be appropriately numbered, is added to the State Constitution and shall read:

ARTICLE

REAPPORTIONMENT

REAPPORTIONMENT YEARS

Section [4] 1. The year 1973, the year 1981, and every [eighth] tenth year thereafter shall be reapportionment years.

REAPPORTIONMENT COMMISSION

A [legislative] reapportionment commission shall be constituted on or before March 1 of each reapportionment year and whenever reapportionment is required by court order. The commission shall consist of nine members. The president of the senate and the speaker of the house of representatives shall each select two members. Members of each house belonging to the party or parties different from that of the president or the speaker shall designate one of their number for each house and the two so designated shall each select two members of the commission. The eight members so selected shall, promptly after selection, be certified by the selecting authorities to the chief election officer and shall within thirty days thereafter select, by a vote of six members, and promptly certify to the chief election officer the ninth member who shall serve as chairman of the commission.

Each of the four officials designated above as selecting authorities for the eight members of the commission shall, at the time of the commission selections, also select one person from each basic island unit to an apportionment advisory council for that island unit. The councils shall remain in existence during the life of the commission and each shall serve in an advisory capacity to the commission for matters affecting its island unit.

*This reflects the substance of Section 4 of Article III; changes to Section 4 are indicated by brackets for deleted material, and underscoring for new.

A vacancy in the commission or a council shall be filled by the initial selecting authority within fifteen days after the vacancy occurs. Commission and council positions and vacancies not filled within the times specified shall be filled promptly thereafter by the supreme court.

The commission shall act by majority vote of its membership and shall establish its own procedures except as may be provided by law.

Not more than one hundred [twenty] fifty days from the date on which its members are certified the commission shall file with the chief election officer a reapportionment plan for the state legislature and a reapportionment plan for the United States congressional districts[,] which shall become law after publication as provided by law. Members of the commission shall hold office until [the] each reapportionment plan becomes effective or until such time as may be provided by law.

No member of the reapportionment commission or an apportionment advisory council shall be eligible to become a candidate for election to either house of the legislature or to the United States House of Representatives in either of the first two elections under any such reapportionment plan.

Commission and apportionment advisory council members shall be compensated and reimbursed for their necessary expenses as provided by law.

The chief election officer shall be secretary of the commission without vote and, under the direction of the commission, shall furnish all necessary technical services. The legislature shall appropriate funds to enable the commission to carry out its duties.

CHIEF ELECTION OFFICER

The legislature shall provide for a chief election officer of the State, whose responsibilities shall be as prescribed by law and shall include the supervision of state elections, the maximization of registration of eligible voters throughout the State and the maintenance of data concerning registered voters, elections, apportionment and districting.

APPORTIONMENT AMONG BASIC ISLAND UNITS

The commission shall allocate the total number of members of each house of the state legislature being reapportioned among the four basic island units, namely (1) the island of Hawaii, (2) the islands of Maui, Lanai, Molokai and Kahoolawe, (3) the island of Oahu and all other islands not specifically enumerated, and (4) the islands of Kauai and Niihau, on the basis of the number of voters registered in the last preceding general election in each of the basic island units and computed by the method known as the method of equal proportions, except that no basic island unit shall receive less than one member in each house.

APPORTIONMENT WITHIN BASIC ISLAND UNITS

Upon the determination of the total number of members of each house of the state legislature to which each basic island unit is entitled, the commission shall apportion the members among the districts therein and shall redraw district lines where necessary in such manner that for each house the average number of registered voters per member in each district is as nearly equal to the average for the basic island unit as practicable.

In effecting such redistricting, the commission shall be guided by the following criteria:

1. No district shall extend beyond the boundaries of any basic island unit.
2. No district shall be so drawn as to unduly favor a person or political faction.
3. Except in the case of districts encompassing more than one island, districts shall be contiguous.
4. Insofar as practicable, districts shall be compact.
5. Where possible, district lines shall follow permanent and easily recognized features, such as streets, streams and clear geographical features, and when practicable shall coincide with census tract boundaries.

6. Where practicable, representative districts shall be wholly included within senatorial districts.
7. Not more than four members shall be elected from any district.
8. Where practicable, submergence of an area in a larger district wherein substantially different socio-economic interests predominate shall be avoided.

CONGRESSIONAL REDISTRICTING FOR UNITED STATES HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The commission shall, at such times as may be required by this section and as may be required by law of the United States, redraw congressional district lines for the districts from which the members of the United States House of Representatives allocated to this State by Congress are elected.

MANDAMUS AND JUDICIAL REVIEW

Original jurisdiction is vested in the supreme court of the State to be exercised on the petition of any registered voter whereby it may compel, by mandamus or otherwise, the appropriate person or persons to perform their duty or to correct any error made in a reapportionment plan, or it may take such other action to effectuate the purposes of this section as it may deem appropriate. Any such petition must be filed within forty-five days of the date specified for any duty or within forty-five days after the filing of a reapportionment plan.

10. Article XVI, Section 1, relating to districting and apportionment, is deleted in its entirety and a new Section 1 is inserted in lieu thereof, to read:

DISTRICTING AND APPORTIONMENT

Section 1. Until the next reapportionment the senatorial districts and the number of senators to be elected from each shall be set forth in the 1973 reapportionment plan. Until the next reapportionment the representative districts and the number of representatives to be elected from each shall be as set forth in the 1973 reapportionment plan.

11. Article XVI, Section 2, is amended to read:

[1968] 1978 SENATORIAL ELECTIONS

Section 2. [Senators elected in the 1968 general election shall serve for two-year terms.] Article III, Section 5, to the contrary notwithstanding, the terms of office of the members of the senate elected in the 1978 general election shall be as follows: members of the senate shall be divided into two classes. The first class shall consist of the following number elected with the highest number of votes from their respective senatorial districts: first district, one; second district, one; third district, one; fourth district, two; fifth district, two; sixth district, two; seventh district, two; eighth district, one. Members of the first class shall hold office for a term of four years beginning with their election and ending on the day of the second general election held thereafter. The remaining members elected shall constitute the second class and shall hold office for a term of two years beginning with their election and ending on the day of the next general election held thereafter.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 47

Your Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing begs leave to report that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 48 and 49; Com. Whole Rep. No. 5; Com. P. Nos. 4, RD. 2, S. 1, and 5, RD. 1; and Res. No. 14 have been printed and distributed.

Signed by Delegates Ledward, Chairperson; Crozier, Vice-Chairperson; Hayashida, Vice-Chairperson; Hale and Lacy members.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 48

Your Committee on Style, to which was referred Committee Proposal No. 4, RD. 2, begs leave to report as follows:

The proposal which the Convention has adopted on second reading covers the Preamble and Articles XIV and XV.

The Convention proposed and adopted amendments to the Preamble and Section 3 of Article XIV, as well as the addition of a new Section 16. Amendments to Article XV, Section 2, were also proposed and adopted.

Your Committee proposes several style changes, which are indicated by brackets [for deletions] and underscoring for additions as shown in the committee report and in the committee proposal.

"PREAMBLE

"We, the people of Hawaii, grateful for Divine Guidance [,] and mindful of our Hawaiian heritage and uniqueness as an island State, dedicate our efforts to fulfill the philosophy decreed by the [Hawaiian] Hawaii State motto, 'Ua mau ke ea o ka aina i ka pono ['.]'

"We reserve the right to control our destiny [;], to nurture the integrity of our people and culture [;], and to preserve the quality of life that we desire.

"We reaffirm our belief in a government of the people, by the people and for the people, and with an understanding and compassionate heart toward all the peoples of the earth, do hereby ordain and establish this constitution for the State of Hawaii."

Article XIV, Section 3. DISQUALIFICATIONS FROM PUBLIC OFFICE OR EMPLOYMENT:

Your Committee discussed Section 3 and feels no changes are necessary.

Article XIV, Section 16. PLAIN LANGUAGE:

Your Committee discussed the new section and feels no changes are necessary.

Article XV, Section 2, paragraph 1. CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION:

Your Committee discussed paragraph 1 and feels no changes are necessary.

Article XV, Section 2, paragraphs 2-4:

"ELECTION OF DELEGATES

"If a majority of the ballots cast upon such a question be in the affirmative, delegates to the convention shall be chosen at the next regular election unless the legislature shall provide for the election of delegates at a special election.

"Notwithstanding any provision in this constitution to the contrary, other than Section 3 of Article XIV, any qualified voter of the district concerned shall be eligible to membership in the convention.

"The legislature shall provide for the number of delegates to the convention, the areas from which they shall be elected [,] and the manner in which the convention shall convene. The legislature shall also provide for the necessary facilities and equipment for the convention. The convention shall have the same powers and privileges, as nearly as practicable, as provided for the convention of 1978."

Article XV, Section 2, paragraphs 5-8:

MEETING
ORGANIZATION; PROCEDURE
RATIFICATION; APPROPRIATIONS

Your Committee discussed the abovementioned paragraphs, and feels no changes are necessary.

The changes recommended are merely for the purposes of style and clarification and have no further implications.

Changes of particular interest recommended by your Committee:

1. In order to be consistent with the rest of the Constitution, except where emphasis or clarity is deemed necessary, in a series of three or more items the comma before the conjunction and the final item is deleted.

2. Preamble. "'Hawaii State' motto" replaces "'Hawaiian' motto."

3. Preamble. Striking of semicolons in paragraph 2. This is a stylistic change, to improve the flow of the sentence and to conform to general usage throughout the Constitution.

4. Article XV, Section 2. ELECTION OF DELEGATES:

"...The legislature shall provide for the number of delegates to ..."

Without the addition of "for" the sentence as cast might be interpreted such that delegates would be provided directly from the members of the legislature.

Style Committee Recommendations

Your Committee on Style recommends the adoption of Standing Committee Report No. 48 and consideration of the passage of Committee Proposal No. 4, RD. 2, S. 1,* on third reading.

Signed by all members of the Committee.

*For the complete text of this proposal, see Committee Proposal No. 4, page 787.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 49

Your Standing Committee on Style, to which was referred Resolution No. 13, entitled "PROVIDING FOR THE USE OF NON-DISCRIMINATORY NOUNS, PRONOUNS AND ADJECTIVES IN THE STATE CONSTITUTION," begs leave to report as follows:

Resolution No. 13 recommends that the Committee on Style adopt a policy of using nondiscriminating nouns, pronouns and adjectives in the State Constitution and requests the Committee on Style to effectuate this policy during its review of all committee proposals.

If the Committee on Style performed its role in this manner, the 1978 version of the Constitution would emerge speckled, with part of it being nondiscriminatory and the balance as the Constitution now is, for under the present rules of the Convention it is not clear whether the Committee on Style is able to change parts of the Constitution not brought before it by the usual proposal route.

Furthermore, it is unclear whether the Committee on Style can bring forth a proposal of its own on those parts of the Constitution containing objectionable words not contained in the committee proposals of other standing committees.

In order to solve this problem and to carry out the wishes of the Convention, the Committee on Style has amended Resolution No. 13 to provide that, the rules of the Convention to the contrary notwithstanding, the Committee on Style is instructed to implement the constitutional convention policy of using nondiscriminatory nouns, pronouns and adjectives in the State Constitution not only in the proposals which come before it but in all of the present Constitution.

The problem concerning presentation to the voters of changes to the Constitution under this policy has also been raised. Your Committee notes that in 1968, Question 23 on the ballot presented to the voters read:

"23. TECHNICAL, TRANSITIONAL, STYLE AND OTHER CHANGES.

"Deletions and rewording of various sections of the Constitution where the subject matters have been found to be no longer necessary or unconstitutional under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States; Style changes; and all changes not specifically mentioned which are incidental to and reasonably connected to the main purposes of the amendments proposed by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Hawaii of 1968."

The Committee on Submission and Information could submit a similar question in 1978, it could amend the question to include mention that all pronouns of male gender in the Constitution have been deleted, or it could present this particular style change as a separate question.

Finally, a question was raised concerning the advisability of not amending Article XIV, Section 13, paragraph two, which states, "Whenever any personal pronoun appears in this constitution, it shall be construed to mean either sex."

Your Committee finds that if the policy changes regarding nondiscriminatory nouns, pronouns and adjectives are made to the Constitution, the above paragraph two becomes an unnecessary appendage to the Constitution and should be deleted. In order to clarify the ability of the Committee on Style to delete this material, Resolution No. 13 has been further amended to direct the Committee on Style to submit the committee proposal conforming the Constitution to this policy and deleting as no longer necessary the second paragraph of Article XIV, Section 13.

Your Committee on Style concurs with the resolution as amended and recommends that it be adopted in the form attached hereto as Resolution No. 13, RD. 1.

Signed by all members of the Committee except Delegates Penebacker, Pulham, Takehara and Yoshimura.

RESOLUTION NO. 13, RD. 1

PROVIDING FOR THE USE OF NON-DISCRIMINATORY NOUNS, PRONOUNS AND ADJECTIVES IN THE STATE CONSTITUTION.

WHEREAS, the State of Hawaii is firmly committed to a public policy of non-discrimination and equal opportunity for all of its citizens; and

WHEREAS, the written language in our laws can be used either to fight discrimination or to perpetuate it; and

WHEREAS, the use of masculine nouns, pronouns and adjectives throughout the Constitution, though grammatically correct, might give an impression that the responsibilities, rights, and elected as well as appointed government positions are open only to men; and

WHEREAS, the State of Hawaii should actively encourage and afford the opportunity for both men and women to participate in all levels of government; and

WHEREAS, a change in the language of the State Constitution would affirmatively indicate to all people of Hawaii that they are an important part of society and expected to participate in government, regardless of their gender; now, therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED by the Constitutional Convention of Hawaii of 1978, that this body hereby adopt a policy of using non-discriminatory nouns, pronouns and adjectives in the State Constitution and request the Committee on Style to effectuate this policy during its review of all committee proposals; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that, other rules of this Convention notwithstanding, the Committee on Style is instructed to implement this policy not only in the proposals which come before it but in all of the present Constitution; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that in carrying out the policy expressed in this Resolution the Constitutional Convention finds it necessary and directs the Committee on Style to submit a committee proposal conforming the Constitution to this policy where necessary and deleting as no longer necessary the second paragraph of Article XIV, Section 13, which reads: "Whenever any personal pronoun appears in this constitution, it shall be construed to mean either sex"; and

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that duly authenticated copies of this Resolution be transmitted to the Committee on Style.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 50

Your Committee on Budget, Accounts and Printing begs leave to report that Stand. Com. Rep. Nos. 51 and 52 and Com. P. Nos. 9 and 10 have been printed and distributed.

Signed by Delegates Ledward, Chairperson; Crozier, Vice-Chairperson; Hayashida, Vice-Chairperson; Hale and Lacy, members.

STANDING COMMITTEE REPORT NO. 51

Your Committee on Executive, to which were referred proposals numbered 617 and 683, relating to qualifications of the governor; 389, 575 and 659, relating to reducing the number of executive departments; 575 and 659, relating to the division of duties and powers among executive departments; 428 and 495, relating to residency requirements for gubernatorial appointees; 165, relating to gubernatorial appointees as representative of the population; 710, relating to selection procedures for gubernatorial appointees to boards and commissions; 467, relating to a merit nomination commission for gubernatorial appointees to boards and commissions dealing with natural resources; 473, relating to termination of the terms of gubernatorial appointees; 192, relating to the establishment of a department of human rights; 317, relating to publications by the chief legal officer of the State; 338, relating to the establishment of a public contracts review board; 510, relating to the election of a state fiscal officer; 703, relating to substantive changes in existing laws by administrative offices and departments; 708, relating to the office of the ombudsman; 727, relating to the establishment of a government organization and operations commission; 728, relating to the establishment of a government salaries and benefits commission; 737, relating to the legislature's power to establish special public authorities; 766, relating to establishment of the governor's cabinet; 830, relating to the unification of executive and legislative functions; 84, 224 and 394, all relating to a council on revenues estimates; 789, relating to revenue estimates; 316 and 751, both relating to expenditure controls; 393, relating to federal funds; 353, relating to a fiscal impact statement; 750, relating to legislative appropriations procedures; 791, relating to restriction of funds; 67 and 567, relating to the governor's item veto power. Your Committee begs leave to report as follows:

The proposals covered the several subject matters relating to Sections 1, 2, 3 and 6 of Article IV. Your Committee also received proposals relating to the governor's item veto power and the executive's fiscal authority. As a result of your Committee's deliberations, Sections 3, 4 and 5 of Article IV have been retained without amendment. Section 6 of Article IV has been amended to clarify the fact that principal departments of the executive branch should be organized according to common purposes and related functions. In addition, your Committee considered a proposal relating to the creation of a council on revenues and recommends the creation of such a council to the Committee on Taxation and Finance as hereinafter set forth. However, your Committee reserves the right to introduce such a proposal should the Committee on Taxation and Finance fail to act favorably on the recommendation.

All committee meetings were open to the public. Individual citizens, government officials, groups and organizations were invited to present their views on the subjects covered by the proposals at public hearings held on Oahu and the Islands of Kauai, Maui and Hawaii.

Among those presenting their views were the following persons: Mr. Myron B. Thompson, former chairperson of the Commission on Organization of Government; State Representative Kathleen Stanley; Delegate James Shon; Mr. Sheridan Ing; Delegate Mary Ann Barnard; Delegate H. Jean Goodenow; Delegate Ginger Wurdeman; the University of Hawaii Board of Regents; Ms Virginia Teipel; Ms Eileen Anderson, Director of Budget and Finance, State of Hawaii; Delegate Steve O'Toole; Mr. Dennis Callan; State Representative Jack Suwa; Ms Jan Geiger; and Mr. Dante Carpenter.

After receiving testimony from the public and after considerable thought and discussion, your Committee recommends the following amendment to the first paragraph of Article IV, Section 6:

"EXECUTIVE AND ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICES AND DEPARTMENTS

"Section 6. All executive and administrative offices, departments and instrumentalities of the state government and their respective [functions,] powers and duties shall be allocated by law among and within not more than twenty principal departments in such manner as to group the same according to [major purposes so far as practicable.] common purposes and related functions. Temporary commissions or agencies for special purposes may be established by law and need not be allocated within a principal department."

Your Committee recognizes the need for clarification of the basis upon which principal departments of the executive branch are organized. Your Committee is aware that an extensive study of the organizational structure of the executive branch was done by the Commission on Organization of Government. Your Committee agrees with the commission that a realignment of the executive branch should be considered to address the problem of duplication of functions and purposes between departments. However, your Committee believes that the proper role of the Constitution is to establish the parameters of the organization of the executive branch, while leaving the details of implementation to the legislature and the executive. The legislature and the executive both set policy and should share in the responsibility for executive departmental organization. Accordingly, your Committee believes that the recommended change in language will mandate the executive and the legislature to examine and reassess existing departmental structure. The purpose of your Committee's proposal is to provide constitutional impetus for a functional approach in making such examination and assessment.

Your Committee's intent in requiring that offices, departments and instrumentalities of the state government and their respective powers and duties be grouped according to common purposes and related functions is to indicate that function, along with purpose, should form a basis for departmental organization. The two prerequisites should be read together.

Your Committee expressed concern that the present language of the Constitution had allowed for assignment of some offices and agencies to principal departments without sufficient consideration of commonality of purpose and/or function. Additionally, departments or their subgroupings possessing both "common purposes" and "related functions" have not been grouped together. Accordingly, your Committee also decided to delete the qualifying phrase "so far as practicable." Your Committee feels that deletion of the phrase will require a closer examination of the basis upon which various departmental groupings are made. Your Committee believes that using both purpose and function as a basis for departmental organization and deleting the phrase "so far as practicable" will lead to more efficient executive management without sacrificing comprehensive delivery of services.

The Constitution presently sets the maximum number of principal departments at twenty. Your Committee considered proposals which would have reduced that maximum, noting that currently only 17 principal executive departments exist. However, your Committee decided to retain the twenty department maximum because it feels such a maximum provides sufficient flexibility to either expand or contract the existing number of principal departments as the needs of the State change.

With regard to the executive's fiscal authority, your Committee deliberated upon the establishment of a council on revenues. Your Committee is informed that the matter of a council on revenues has also been referred to the Committee on Taxation and Finance. In the spirit of comity between committees, your Committee on Executive has deferred the introduction of a committee proposal creating the council until the Committee on Taxation and Finance shall have had an opportunity to complete its deliberations. To this end, your Committee recommends to the Committee on Taxation and Finance that a council on revenues be established by adding a new section to Article VI, to read:

"COUNCIL ON REVENUES

"There shall be established by law a council on revenues which shall prepare revenue estimates of the State government and shall report the estimates to the governor and the legislature at times prescribed by law. The estimates shall be considered by the governor in preparing the budget, recommending appropriations and revenues and controlling expenditures and by the legislature in appropriating funds and enacting revenue measures. All revenue estimates submitted by the council and the reasons for any deviation in the application of the estimate shall be made public."

Hawaii's present Constitution assigns to the governor the responsibility for submitting to the legislature a complete plan of proposed expenditures and anticipated receipts. Thus, the governor currently has the sole responsibility for making revenue estimates. However, nothing in the Constitution requires that the legislature be bound by those estimates. Much conflict has arisen between the governor's budget, based on revenue estimates made at one period in the budgetary cycle, and the legislature's appropriations, based on revenue estimates made at a later period. Your Committee favors the establishment of a council on revenues to resolve these legislative and administrative differences on estimated revenues for budget-planning purposes. Your Committee believes that a council on revenues would improve the state budgetary process since both the executive and the legislative branches would work from a common revenue estimate base which could be revised from time to time.
