YOUR OHANA COUNTS!
State encourages everyone to complete census questionnaire

Each year, the federal government allocates hundreds of billions of dollars for programs and projects nationwide based on the results of the census. In 2010 alone, Hawaii received $8.6 billion through just 28 large federal spending programs. Federal funding is used to improve public infrastructure such as schools, roads and public transportation, and for safety net programs such as Medicare and Medicaid. Funding for these programs likely help you and your loved ones during your retirement...

Because major programs use the results of the census to distribute funding, an undercount of Hawaii’s population means the loss of money needed in our communities. The best way to prevent an undercount is to make sure everyone responds to the census when they receive their invitation in the mail. In the 2010 Census, Hawaii’s response rate was 68 percent, which was lower than the national average of 74 percent. The Neighbor Island response rate was only 54 percent. Hawaii’s population may have been underestimated in the past centuries, because when you don’t respond to the census, you increase your chances of not being counted.

The census also determines each state’s political representation in the House of Representatives; an accurate population count will maintain Hawaii’s representation in Congress. State and local officials also use census counts to draw boundaries for congressional districts, state legislative districts, and school districts.

In March 2020, expect an invitation in the mail for your household to respond online to the 2020 Census questionnaire. You may also respond to the questionnaire by phone or mail. To fill out your 2020 Census questionnaire, you are helping the state gain more representation, more funding, and a greater understanding of our population’s demographics.
